Introduction

The Complete Works of Oswald Chambers

Contents

For the first time, all the published books of Oswald Chambers have been collected in one volume. Also included are notes on Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel previously unpublished in book form.

Each book is prefaced by a brief introduction, noting the time and place when the lectures were given and a history of their publication.

The text of the books in this volume is taken from the editions published in the United Kingdom by the Oswald Chambers Publications Association. British spelling has been retained throughout.

Footnotes

Oswald Chambers urged his students at the Bible Training College to read and study with a dictionary at hand. "Never intend to look up a word," he said. "Do it now."

In the spirit of Chambers and his philosophy of education, we have not robbed the reader of the opportunity to learn by personal effort.

If a name, word, or term appears in Merriam Webster's Collegiate Dictionary, Tenth Edition, it is not footnoted. In some cases, a person not fully identified in the text has been footnoted.

Scripture Index

The publisher has made a PDF of the Complete Works available for download. Using this resource, readers may trace any verse or passage of Scripture throughout the teaching of Chambers. See the final page of this book for downloading instructions.

Poetry and Other Quotations

Many of the quotations from poetry and other writings were not identified in the original text. The editors have provided some identification of sources that did not appear in the books as originally published by Mrs. Chambers.

General Index

A general index of people, places, and terms is provided for those wishing to locate specific information contained in this volume.

The editors have not attempted to reference every appearance of words such as Holy Spirit, obedience, prayer, sanctification, and so on. That would require a concordance almost as large as the book itself! Those readers possessing the PDF version of this volume can easily locate all occurrences of words in Chambers' books by using their computer's search function.

Bibliography

This complete list of the books in this volume, with a brief summary of content, will aid readers in searching for Chambers' teaching on various themes such as prayer, sanctification, ethics, and others.

Publication Information

In the years before tape recording, it was common for sermons and speeches to be taken down in shorthand by stenographers, then published in newspapers and magazines. Chambers' early messages in Britain and the U.S. would have been recorded in this way. After his marriage in 1910, virtually all of his lectures and sermons were recorded in shorthand and transcribed for publication by his wife, Biddy.

The following periodicals are mentioned throughout this volume:

 God's Revivalist and Bible Advocate, published by God's Bible School, Cincinnati, Ohio, USA (1900–present). This publication was originally called The Revivalist and published by Martin Wells Knapp prior to his founding of God's Bible School in 1900.

For information on this publication, contact God's Bible School, 1810 Young Street, Cincinnati, OH 45210, USA.

 Tongues of Fire, published by the Pentecostal League of Prayer. In 1916, the magazine changed its name to Spiritual Life.

Tongues of Fire, numbers 1–300, January 1891–December 1915

Spiritual Life, numbers 301–692, January 1916–December 1950

A complete set of this publication is held in the British Newspaper Library, Colindale, London.

 The Bible Training Course (B.T.C.) Monthly Journal (April 1932–March 1952)

Published by Mrs. Chambers as "A Journal for the continuance of the teaching given by Oswald Chambers, as Principal of the Bible Training College, Clapham, London, 1911–1915; and in the Y.M.C.A. Huts Zeitoun, etc., Egypt, 1915– 1917." Mrs. Chambers saw this publication primarily as a means of keeping in touch with the hundreds of people whose lives had been touched during their ministry, many of whom were serving as missionaries overseas. It began as a monthly publication, but wartime restrictions and paper shortages caused the change to a bimonthly and finally quarterly journal. Although subscriptions were sold, Mrs. Chambers generously provided scores of complimentary copies.

Throughout the 1930s and 1940s, many of the Oswald Chambers works first appeared in article form and upon completion of the series were published as books. Since the Bible Training College ceased to exist in 1916, Mrs. Chambers used the familiar initials B.T.C., simply changing the last word to reflect the new phase of continuing her husband's teaching in this way.

A complete set of this publication is held in the British Library, St. Pancras, London.

A WORD ABOUT OSWALD CHAMBERS

Oswald Chambers was not famous during his lifetime. At the time of his death in 1917 at the age of forty-three, only three books bearing his name had been published. Among a relatively small circle of Christians in Britain and the U.S., Chambers was much appreciated as a teacher of rare insight and expression, but he was not widely known.

Chambers was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1874, the youngest son of a Baptist minister. He spent his boyhood years in Perth, then his family moved to London when Oswald was fifteen. Shortly after the move to London, Oswald made his public profession of faith in Christ and became a member of Rye Lane Baptist Church. This marked a period of rapid spiritual growth, along with an intense struggle to find God's will and way for his life.

A gifted artist and musician, Chambers trained at London's Royal Academy of Art, sensing God's direction to be an ambassador for Christ in the world of art and aesthetics. While studying at the University of Edinburgh (1895–96), he decided, after an agonizing internal battle, to study for the ministry. He left the university and entered Dunoon College, near Glasgow, where he remained as a student, then a tutor for nine years.

In 1906, he traveled to the United States, spending six months teaching at God's Bible School in Cincinnati, Ohio. From there, he went to Japan, visiting the Tokyo Bible School, founded by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cowman. This journey around the world in 1906–7 marked his transition from Dunoon College to full-time work with the Pentecostal League of Prayer.

During the last decade of his life, Chambers served as:

- Traveling speaker and representative of the League of Prayer, 1907–10
- Principal and main teacher of the Bible Training College, London, 1911–15

Y.M.C.A. chaplain to British Commonwealth soldiers in Egypt, 1915–17

He died in Cairo on November 15, 1917, of complications following an emergency appendectomy. The complete story of his life is told in Oswald Chambers: Abandoned to God (1993), available from Discovery House Publishers.

During the seven years of their marriage, his wife, Gertrude (Biddy) Hobbs, took verbatim shorthand notes of nearly all his lectures and sermons. After his death, she spent the rest of her life publishing her husband's spoken words. His best-known book, My Utmost for His Highest, has been continuously in print since it was first published in 1927.

From the earliest days of publication following World War I, Mrs. Chambers was advised and assisted by a small group of personal friends. In later years, this group became known as the Oswald Chambers Publications Association, which was incorporated in 1942, and exists today as a Registered British Charity. It oversees the publication and distribution of Oswald Chambers' material around the world.

Through the years, one of the Association's goals has been to keep all of Oswald Chambers' books in print. This has often meant the amalgamation of smaller books and booklets into single volumes for greater cost efficiency. The publication of this volume fulfills a goal held by Mrs. Chambers and the Association. By presenting the Complete Works in a single volume, it is hoped to preserve Chambers' words for future generations.

We commend this work to the reader with the prayer that you will be spiritually strengthened and encouraged as you encounter the person of Jesus Christ through the words of His servant, Oswald Chambers.

Source

These lectures were given to students in the sermon class at the Bible Training College, London, from 1911 to 1915.

Publication History

- As articles: These lectures were published in the BTC Monthly Journal, May 1932–March 1934.²
- As a book: The material was first published in 1936.
- Facing Reality (© 1939) was incorporated in the 1946 and later editions.

Chambers limited the BTC³ sermon classes to enrolled students only and allowed no visitors. Since sermon preparation and delivery were course requirements, he wanted all class members on an equal footing as participants, with no idle observers and critics. Much more than a course on how to prepare and deliver sermons, these lectures reveal Chambers' heart concerning being a worker for God.

To these students Chambers said: "Here in this College, God can break or bend or mould, just as He chooses. You do not know why He is doing it; He is doing it for one purpose only, that He may be able to say, 'This is My man, My woman."

FOREWORD

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed" (2 Timothy 2:15), makes a big demand upon a worker for God, and these God-given messages, spoken to the students at the Bible Training College, London, by the Principal, the late Oswald Chambers, help us to meet that Divine requirement. One clear note in them is "that the servant of God has to go through the experience of things before he is allowed to go through a study of them." So the worker is required to enter voluntarily into that discipline of his life that will bring him into line with God's way for him. Here there is as much insistence upon spiritual fitness as right mentality, and upon intellectual discipline as upon spiritual well-being. The worker for God is a unity, spirit, soul and body, and needs to be brought by God's grace and by personal choice and concentration into a harmoniously working whole. Mere intellectualism can be a great snare and mere pietism is not enough. The man of God to be thoroughly furnished unto every good work must accept the spiritual discipline of reproof and correction and training in righteousness that the Scriptures convey, and also the mental discipline which a right understanding of the Scripture demands. These Talks in a striking manner put us in the way of becoming competent servants of Jesus Christ, spiritually fit, and mentally fitted, for the great task entrusted to us. Do not read this book unless you mean business, but if you do you will find wisdom and understanding on every page.

THE WORKER

1 Corinthians 9:11-27

The Matter

Plant every man on the Rock, and plant the whole man there.

(a) Amid a Crowd of Paltry Things (1 Corinthians 9:11-15)

The first thing a worker has to learn is how to be God's noble man or woman amid a crowd of paltry things. A Christian worker must never make this plea—"If only I were somewhere else!" The only test that a worker is Christ's witness is that he never becomes mean⁵ from contact with mean people any more than he becomes sinful from contact with sinful people.

We are not workers for God by our own choice (see John 15:16). Many deliberately choose to be workers for God, but they have no matter of God's mighty grace in them, no matter from God's mighty word. The pattern for God's worker is that he is entrusted with a mission—for example, Moses and the Apostle Paul. We have to be in God's hand so that He can plant men on the Rock as He has planted us, not by our testimony only, but because we are being made co-workers with God.

(b) Amid a Creed of Powerful Things (1 Corinthians 9:16-17)

Unless we have the right matter in our minds intellectually and in our hearts affectionately, we will be hustled out of usefulness to God. Keep the note of greatness in your creed: Whom do I believe Jesus Christ is? What do I believe sin is? What do I believe God can do with sin? What do I believe is God's purpose for the human race? Face yourself with one central Fact only, the Lord Jesus Christ, His Life and Death and Resurrection.

Every Christian must testify, testimony is the nature of the life; but for preaching there must be the agonising grip of God's hand, something akin to verse 16. The whole of my life, says Paul, is in the grip of God for this one thing, I cannot turn to the right hand or to the left, I am here for one purpose, to preach the gospel. How many of us are held like that? The note of the majority is verse 17, that is why there is so much mediocrity, so much lazy work for God. "I have chosen you"—that is where the note of greatness is struck out of your creed.

The Manner

However things move, they do not change us.

(a) The External Crush of Things (1 Corinthians 9:18-19)

God buries His men in the midst of paltry things, no monuments are erected to them, they are ignored, not because they are unworthy but because they are in the place where they cannot be seen. Who could see Paul in Corinth? Paul only became marvellous after he had gone. All God's men are ordinary men made extraordinary by the matter He has given them. God puts His workers where He puts His Son. This is the age of the humiliation of the saints.

Manner is the outcome of matter. Paul's whole soul and mind and heart were taken up with the great matter of what Jesus Christ came to do, he never lost sight of that one thing (see 1 Corinthians 2:2).

(b) The Ethical Character of Things (1 Corinthians 9:20-27)

"I am become all things to all men, that I may by all means save some" (1 Corinthians 9:22 RV). The worker who is not chosen by God says, "I am all things to all men, and nothing in particular to any man." The stamp of the worker gripped by God is that, slowly and surely, one here and another there is being won for God.

The worker chosen by God has to believe what God wishes him to believe, though it cost agony in the process; the worker who chooses to work for God may believe what he likes. It is the latter class who exploit the Bible.

Here, in this College, God can break or bend or mould, just as He chooses. You do not know why He is doing it; He is doing it for One purpose only, that He may be able to say, "This is My man, My woman." Never choose to be a worker, but when once God has put His call on you, woe be to you if you turn to the right hand or to the left. God will do with you what He never did with you before the call came; He will do with you what He is not doing with other people. Let Him have His way.

^{5.} mean: ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

THE BASE 1 Timothy 1:12

The Real Thanks of the Worker

And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord . . .

Everything that God has created is like an orchestra praising Him. "All Thy works shall praise Thee." In the ear of God everything He created makes exquisite music, and man joined in the paean of praise until he fell, then there came in the frantic discord of sin. The realisation of Redemption brings man by way of the minor note of repentance back into tune with praise again. The angels are only too glad to hear that note, because it blends man into harmony again (see Luke 15:10).

Praising God is the ultimate end and aim of all we go through. "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth Me." What does it matter whether you are well or ill! whether you have money or none! It is all a matter of indifference, but one thing is not a matter of indifference, and that is that we are pleasing to the ears of God.

Paul had got back again by way of repentance into tune with God (cf. 1 Timothy 1:13), and now he has his base as a worker in thanksgiving to Christ Jesus; his whole life has been brought into perfect relation to God.

The Realised Test of the Worker who hath enabled me . . .

The test of the worker is that he knows he has been enabled by the Lord Jesus, therefore he works and learns to do it better all the time. The realisation that my Lord has enabled me to be a worker keeps me strong enough never to be weak. Conscious obtrusive weakness is natural unthankful strength; it means I refuse to be made strong by Him. When I say I am too weak it means I am too strong; and when ever I say "I can't" it means "I won't." When Jesus Christ enables me, I am omnipotently strong all the time. Paul talks in paradoxes, "for when I am weak, then am I strong."

The Recognised Truth by the Worker for that He counted me faithful . . .

To recognise that my Lord counts us faithful removes the last snare of idealising natural pluck. If we have the idea that we must face the difficulties with pluck, we have never recognised the truth that He has counted us faithful; it is His work in me He is counting worthy, not my work for Him. The truth is we have nothing to fear and nothing to overcome because He is all in all and we are more than conquerors through Him. The recognition of this truth is not flattering to the worker's sense of heroics, but it is amazingly glorifying to the work of Christ. He counts us worthy because He has done everything for us. It is a shameful thing for Christians to talk about "getting the victory"; by this time the Victor ought to have got us so completely that it is His victory all the time, not ours. The overcoming referred to in the Book of the Revelation is not the personal overcoming of difficulties but the overcoming of the very life of God in us while we stand resolutely true to Him.

The Responsible Trust of the Worker

... putting me into the ministry.

The ministry is, the "glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust." If I am going to be loyal to that trust, it will mean I must never allow any impertinent sensitiveness to hinder my keeping the trust. My trust is the glorious gospel for myself and through me to others, and it is realised in two ways: in the perfect certainty that God has redeemed the world, and in the imperative necessity of working on that basis with everyone with whom I come in contact (cf. Colossians 1:28–29).

THE WORKER'S SPIRITUAL LIFE

Communication of the Life of God (Galatians 2:20)

As a worker, watch the "sea-worthiness" of your spiritual life; never allow a spiritual leakage. Spiritual leakage arises either by refusing to treat God seriously, or by refusing to do anything for Him seriously.

ously. Bear in mind two things: the pressure of God on your thought from without, and the pressure of God on your attention from within.

There are three ways in which we can responsibly receive communications from God: by giving deliberate thoughtful attention to the Incarnation;

by identifying ourselves with the Church, and by means of Bible revelation. God gave Himself in the Incarnation; He gives Himself to the Church; and He gives Himself in His Word; and these are the ways He has ordained for conveying His life to us. The mere reading of the Word of God has power to communicate the life of God to us mentally, morally and spiritually. God makes the words of the Bible a sacrament, i.e., the means whereby we partake of His life, it is one of His secret doors for the communication of His life to us.

Co-Ordination of Our Capacities for God (Ephesians 3:16–19)

Our whole being, not one aspect of it, has to be brought to comprehend the love of God. We are apt to co-ordinate our spiritual faculties only; our lack of co-ordination is detected if we cannot pass easily from what we call the secular to the sacred. Our Lord passed from the one to the other without any break; the reason we cannot is that we are not pressed on to the life of God. We have made "a world within the world" of our own which we have to guard jealousy: "I must not do this and that"; "I must keep myself entirely here." That is not the life of God at all, it is not genuine enough; it is artificial and cannot stand the strain of actual life. There is no room in the New Testament for sickly piety, but room only for the robust, vigorous, open-air life that Jesus lived—in the world but not of it, the whole life guided and transfigured by God. Beware of the piety that is not stamped by the life of God, but by the type of a religious experience. Be absolutely and fiercely godly in your life, but never be pious. A "pi" person does not take God seriously, he only takes himself seriously, the one tremendous worship of his life is his experience.

Concentrated Centring on God (Romans 8:3)

If we would concentrate on God we must mortify our religious self-will. Our Lord refused to be self-willed religiously, and it was this that staggered the Pharisees. We are self-willed religiously, consequently we tell God we do not intend to concentrate on Him, we only intend to concentrate on our idea of what the saintly life should be, and before long we find that the pressing in of the life of God ceases and we begin to wilt. We are living a religiously self-centred life and the communication of life from God comes no longer. We must beware of turning away from God by grubbing amongst our own experiences.

God does not expect us to imitate Jesus Christ: He expects us to allow the life of Jesus to be manifested in our mortal flesh. God engineers circumstances and brings us into difficult places where no one can help us, and we can either manifest the life of Jesus in those conditions, or else be cowards and say, "I cannot exhibit the life of God there." Then we deprive God of glory. If you will let the life of God be manifested in your particular human edition—where God cannot manifest it, that is why He called you, you will bring glory to God.

The spiritual life of a worker is literally, God manifest in the flesh.

THE WORKER AND THE WORD

Aspect of Sacred Authority (Matthew 21:23)

Authority means a rule to which the worker is bound in loyalty. It is not sufficient to say, "Because Jesus Christ says so, therefore you must obey," unless we are talking to people who know Who Jesus Christ is. Authority must be of a moral, not a superstitious character. In the old days it was the authority of the Church, or the authority of the Bible; both these were external authorities, not indigenous to man. Nowadays people are saying, "Bother external authority; why should I accept external authority?" Immediately a man becomes spiritual by being born from above (RV mg), the Bible becomes his authority, because he discerns a law in his conscience that has no objective resting place save in the Bible; and when the Bible is quoted, instantly his intuition says, "Yes, that must be the truth"; not because the Bible says so, but because he discerns what the Bible says to be the word of God for him. When a man is born from above (RV mg) he has a new internal standard, and the only objective standard that agrees with it is the word of God as expressed in the Bible.

What is needed to-day is not a new gospel, but live men and women who can re-state the Gospel of the Son of God in terms that will reach the very heart of our problems. To-day men are flinging the truth overboard as well as the terms. Why should we not become workmen who need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth to our own people? The majority of orthodox ministers are hopelessly useless, and the unorthodox seem to be the only ones who are used. We need men and women saturated with the truth of God who can re-state the old truth in terms that appeal to our day.

Aspect of Social Authority (John 18:36)

Christianity is in its essence social. When once we begin to live from the otherworldly standpoint, as Jesus Christ wants us to live, we shall need all the fellowship with other Christians we can get. Some of us can do without Church fellowship because we are not Christians of the otherworldly order. Immediately a man dares to live on Jesus Christ's line, the world, the flesh and the devil are dead against him in every particular. "The only virtue you will have in the eyes of the world as My disciples," says Jesus, "is that you will be hated." That is why we need to be knit together with those of like faith; and that is the meaning of the Christian Church.

In the old days the ecclesiastics used to dictate, now they are ignored, and instead we have a society of men as they are. In the present day we have to face a brotherhood of men apart from Jesus Christ. If a man stands on the present system of civilisation as one of the general brotherhood of men, and yet proclaims a different brotherhood, that of the disciples of Jesus Christ, John 16:2 will be the result, "they shall put you out of the synagogues." According to Jesus Christ, Christianity is a society based on the brotherhood of men who have been lifted into a right relationship with God by regeneration. "My kingdom is not of this world," said Jesus, and yet we are more inclined to take our orders from the world than from Jesus Christ.

The conception which Jesus Christ had of society was that men might be one with Him as He was one with the Father. The full-orbed meaning of the term "personality" in its fundamental aspect is a being created by God who has lived on this earth and formed his character. The majority of us are not personalities as yet, we are beginning to be, and our value to God in His Kingdom depends on the development and growth of our personality. There is a difference between being saved and sanctified by the sheer sovereign grace of God and choosing to be the choice ones, not for heaven, but down here. The average view of Christianity, that we only need to have faith and we are saved, is a stumbling-block. How many of us care anything about being witnesses to Jesus Christ? How many of us are willing to spend every ounce of energy we have, every bit of mental, moral and spiritual life for Jesus Christ? That is the meaning of a worker in God's sense. God has left us on earth, what for? To be saved and sanctified? No, to be at it for Him. If we are "footing it" bit by bit, and living in the otherworldly spirit while in the world, we are developing our personality, and are of far more worth to Jesus Christ than those who have entered into the experience of sanctification but have never gone on any farther.

Are we willing to be broken bread and pouredout wine in Jesus Christ's hands for others? to be spoilt for this age, for this life, this time, spoilt from every standpoint saving as we can disciple men and women to Him? My life as a worker is the way I say "Thank you" to God for His unspeakable salvation. The hatred and the indignation of the world does not come when we are sanctified; it comes when we try to live our daily life according to the rule of sanctification. It is not preaching sanctification that awakens resentment, but living the life to which sanctification introduces us, the life of oneness with Jesus Christ, and insisting that that oneness be manifested in our practical life. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man. . . . From that time many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him." It is quite possible for anyone to be cast out as reprobate silver, "lest that by any means, . . . I myself should be a castaway."

What to Concentrate On (2 Timothy 1:13–14) To concentrate is not to be absorbed or carried away with a subject; concentration is the sternest physical effort. There is nothing spiritual about the brain. Control over associated ideas must be acquired, it is not a natural gift. Never garrison an infirmity with indifference—"Oh, I can't." DO IT!

Paul gives Timothy indications of the right lines of work: he is to concentrate on the deposit of truth conveyed by the words of Scripture. As a preacher never have as your ideal the desire to be an orator or a beautiful speaker; if you do, you will not be of the slightest use. Read Matthew 23, and Mark 7, and see the rugged, taste-shattering language of Our Lord. An orator moves men to do what they are indifferent about; a preacher of the Gospel has to move men to do what they are dead-set against doing, viz., giving up the right to themselves. The one calling of a New Testament preacher is to uncover sin and reveal Jesus Christ as Saviour, consequently he cannot be poetical, he has to be surgical. We are not sent to give beautiful discourses which make people say, "What a lovely conception that is," but to unearth the devil and his works in human souls. We have to probe straight down where God has probed us, and the measure of the probing is the way God has probed us.

Be keen in sensing those Scriptures that contain the truth which comes straight home, and apply them fearlessly. The tendency nowadays is to get a truth of God and gloss it over. Always keep the sense of the passage you expound. For example, in Malachi 2:13 the prophet tells the people that God will not regard their offerings, though they cover "the altar of the LORD with tears, with weeping, and with crying out." The context gives the reason: there is a wrong temper of mind and secret immorality. Never sympathise with a soul whose case makes you come to the conclusion that God is hard. God is tenderer than anyone we can conceive of, and if a man cannot get through to Him it is because there is a secret thing he does not intend to give up. It is impossible to deal poetically with a case like that, you have to go right down to the root of the trouble until there is antagonism and pain and resentment against the message. The Gospel of Jesus awakens a tremendous craving but also a tremendous resentment. People want the blessing of God, but they will not stand the probing and the humiliation. As workers, our one method is merciless insistence on the one line, cutting down to the very root, otherwise there will be no healing.

Always carry out the significance of your text with as many details as possible. To the majority of men, holiness is all in the clouds, but take this message, "Holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord," and drive it home on every line until there is no refuge from the terrific application. Holy not only in my religious aspirations, but holy in my soul life, in my imagination and thinking; holy in every detail of my bodily life. Let your text get such hold of you that you never depart from its application. Never use your text as a title for a speculation of your own, that is being an impertinent exploiter of the word of God.

What to Concentrate For (2 Timothy 2:23-26)

Remember that the underlying principles upon which God has built human nature and the underlying principles of the Bible go together, and learn to bring the meaning of your text to bear on those principles. Leave your text alone apparently until you get men to realise in the sphere of their own lives where they lack. Then erect the standard of Jesus Christ for their lives and say for them—"But we never can be that!" Then drive it home—"But God says you must be." "How can we be?" "You cannot, unless you have a new spirit, and Jesus says that God will give you the Holy Spirit if you ask Him" (see Luke 11:13).

There must be a sense of need before your message is of any use. For example, if you present John 3:16 to a crowd of moral upright men and women, it has no application to them, the subject is not alive to them, they are in a different domain. Men are "dead in trespasses and sins," not necessarily blackguards, but their minds are blinded by the god of this world. That is the crowd we have to get in amongst, and it can only be done by relying on the Holy Spirit to awaken conviction where as yet there is none. Behind the preaching of the Gospel the creative Redemption of God is at work in the souls of men, and when the Spirit of God begins to work on their hearts they see a standard they never saw before. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." Once let Jesus Christ be lifted up, and the Spirit of God creates the need for Him.

THE STUDENT 2 Timothy 2:15

Practical Sphere of Work (2 Corinthians 11:9; 1 Timothy 4:13; 1 Thessalonians 2:9)

The difficulty in Christian work to-day is that we put it into a sphere that upsets the reasoning of things—this sphere for sacred and that for secular; this time for activity and that for study. God will never allow us to divide our lives into sacred and secular, into study and activity. We generally think of a student as one who shuts himself up and studies in a reflective way, but that is never revealed in God's book. A Christian's thinking ought to be done in activities, not in reflection, because we only come to right discernment in activities. Some incline to study naturally in the reflective sense, others incline more to steady active work; the Bible combines both in one life. We are apt to look on workers for God as a special class, but that is foreign to the New Testament. Our Lord was a carpenter; Paul was a weaver. If you try and live in compartments, God will tumble up the time. Acknowledge Him in all your ways, and He will bring you into the circumstances that will develop the particular side of your life that He wants developed, and be careful that you do not upset His plans by bringing in your own ideas.

Another danger in work for God is to make natural temperament the line of service. The gifts of the Spirit are built on God's sovereignty, not on our temperament. We are apt to limit God by saying, "Oh, I'm not built like that"; or, "I have not been well educated." Never limit God by those paralysing thoughts, it is the outcome of unbelief. What does it matter to the Lord Almighty of heaven and earth what your early training was like! What does matter to Him is that you don't lean to your own understanding, but acknowledge Him in all your ways. So crush on the threshold of your mind any of those lame, limping "I can'ts,"—"you see I am not gifted." The great stumbling-block that prevents some people being simple disciples of Jesus is that they are gifted—so gifted that they won't trust in the Lord with all their hearts. You have to learn to break by the power of the Holy Spirit the fuss and the lethargy which alternate in your life, and remember that it is a crime to be weak in His strength.

Poverty and Work (2 Corinthians 8:9)

Our Lord Jesus Christ became poor for our sakes not as an example, but to give us the unerring secret of His religion. Professional Christianity is a religion of possessions that are devoted to God; the religion of Jesus Christ is a religion of personal relationship to God, and has nothing whatever to do with possessions. The disciple is rich not in possessions, but in personal identity. Voluntary poverty was the marked condition of Jesus (see Luke 9:58), and the poverty of God's children in all ages is a significant thing. To-day we are ashamed and afraid to be poor. The reason we hear so little about the inner spiritual side of external poverty is that few of us are in the place of Jesus, or of Paul. The scare of poverty will knock the spiritual backbone out of us unless we have the relationship that holds. The attitude of Our Lord's life was that He was disconnected with everything to do with things that chain people down to this world, consequently He could go wherever His Father wanted Him to.

Providential Will of God (Proverbs 3:5-6)

Remember you are accountable to no one but God; keep yourself for His service along the line of His providential leading for you, not on the line of your temperament. The servant of God has to go through the experience of things before he is allowed to go through the study of them. When you have had the experience God will give you the line for study; the experience first, and then the explanation of the experience by the Spirit of God. Each one of us is an isolated person with God, and He will put us through experiences that are not meant for us at all, but meant to make us fit stuff to feed others.

How much time have you given to wondering what God is doing with you? It is not your business. Your part is to acknowledge God in all your ways, and He will blend the active and the spiritual until they are inseparable, and you learn to live in activities knowing that your life is hid with Christ in God.

WHERE AM I? A Spiritual Stock-Taking

Why Do I Want to Work? (Romans 10:15)

The Christian worker must be sent; he must not elect to go. Nowadays that is the last thing thought of; it is a determination on the part of the individual—"This is something I can do, and I am going to do it." Beware of demanding that people go into work, it is a craze; the majority of saved souls are not fit to feed themselves yet. How am I to know I have been sent of God? Firstly, by the realisation that I am utterly weak and powerless and if I am to be of any use to God, God must do it all the time. Is this the humiliating certainty of my soul, or merely a sentimental phrase? Secondly, because I know I have to point men to Jesus Christ, not to get them to think what a holy man I am. The only way to be sent is to let God lift us right out of any sense of fitness in ourselves and place us where He will. The man whose work tells for God is the one who not only realises what God has done for him but who realises his own utter unfitness and overwhelming unsuitability—the impossibility of God ever calling me. God allows us to scrutinise ourselves in order to understand what Paul said: "We also are weak in him."

Occasionally it may happen in your life as a worker that all you have been trying honestly and eagerly to do for God falls about your ears in ruins, and in your utterly crushed and discouraged condition God brings slowly to your mind this truth—"I have been using your work as scaffolding to perfect you to be a worker for Myself; now arise, shake off the dust, and it shall be told you what you must do." Before ever God can use us as workers He has to bring us to a place of entire poverty, where we shall have no doubt as to where we are, "Here I am, absolutely no good!" Then God can send us, but not until then. We put hindrances in the way of God's working by trying to do things for Him. The impatience of modern life has so crept into Christian work that we will not settle down before God and find out what He wants us to do.

Where Do I Live? (Psalm 91:1)

No one can tell you where the shadow of the Almighty is, you must find that out for yourself. When you have found out where it is, stay there; under that shadow no evil can ever befall you. The intensity of the moments spent under the shadow of the Almighty is the measure of your usefulness as a worker. Intensity of communion is not in feelings or emotions or in special places, but in quiet, fixed, confident centring on God. Never allow anything to hinder you from being in the place where your spiritual life is maintained. The expression of our lips must correspond with our communion with God. It is easy to say good and true things without troubling to live up to them; consequently the Christian talker is more likely to be a hypocrite than any other kind of worker. In all probability you will find you could express things better a few months or years ago than you can now, because the Spirit of God has been making you realise since then what you are talking about, and through the consequent distress that laid hold of mind and heart you have been driven to find out the secret place of the Most High. The strange thing is that a worker will more often exhibit ugly characteristics than one who is not a worker. There is an irritability and an impatience and a dogmatism about the average Christian worker that is never seen in those who are not engaged in that kind of work.

What Do I Know about Judgement? (1 Peter 4:17)

Peter is talking about suffering, and he says "the time is come that judgement must begin at the house of God." Where is the house of God? My body. As a child of God I have no right to go through a dispensation of suffering without asking my Father the reason for it. It may be suffering because of a purpose of God which He cannot explain to you, but He makes you know in your inmost heart that all is well (see verse 19). Or it may be suffering for chastisement and discipline. An undisciplined saint is inclined either to despise the chastening and say it is of the devil, or else to faint when he is rebuked, and cave in. The writer to the Hebrews says: "If you are a saint you will be chastened, be careful, see that you don't despise it." Or it may be suffering as Jesus suffered (see Hebrews 5:8; 2 Corinthians 1:5). In all these ways we have to learn how to let judgement begin at "the house of God." We escape judgement in a hundred and one ways, consequently we do not develop.

If you are a worker whom God has sent, and have learned to live under His Shadow, you will find that scarcely a day goes by without your Father revealing the need of further chastening. If any child of God is free from the goads of God, he is not in the line of the succession of Jesus Christ. If we suffer as He suffered, we are in the right line (see 1 Peter 4:13). We have to learn to bring the scrutiny of God's judgement upon ourselves. When we talk about suffering we are apt to think only of bodily pain, or of suffering because we have given up something for God, which is paltry nonsense. Joy and peace and delight all come into the life of the saint but they are so on the surface that he never heeds them; they are simply complements. The one central point for the saint is being absolutely right with God, and the only way he gets there is by this personal experience of judgement.

THE MASTERING MISSION 2 Corinthians 5:11, 14

The Obligation of Master Persuasion (2 Corinthians 5:11)

Whenever Paul talks about his call to preach the gospel, it is a "woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" It is not a calm, quiet choice, but a necessity laid upon him, an overmastering sense of call. The great note of Paul's life is that he is mastered by his mission, he cannot get away from it.

First Corinthians 9:22–23 is the exposition of Paul's sense of unrelieved obligation—"To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. And this I do for the gospel's sake." Paul's persuading was by no means always successful (see Acts 17:32) but he never allowed that to deter him (see Acts 28:23–24). Paul's very earnestness for Jesus was made the subtle ground of accusing him of madness, and the strange thing is that among a section of the more fanatical they called him too sober (see 2 Corinthians 5:13).

A worker for God must be prepared to endure hardness; he must learn how to "sop up" all the bad and turn it into good, and nothing but the supernatural grace of God and his sense of obligation will enable him to do it. As workers we will be brought into relationship with people for whom we have no affinity; we have to stand for one thing only, "that I might by all means save some." The one mastering obligation of our life as a worker is to persuade men for Jesus Christ, and to do that we have to learn to live amongst facts: the fact of human stuff as it is, not as it ought to be; and the fact of Bible revelation, whether it agrees with our doctrines or not.

The Overruling Majesty of Personal Power (2 Corinthians 5:14)

Paul says he is overruled, overmastered, held as in a vice, by the love of Christ. The majority of us are held only by the constraint of our experience. Very few of us know what it is to be held as in a grip by the sense of the love of God. "For the love of Christ constraineth us." Once that note is heard, you can never mistake it; you know that the Holy Spirit is having unhindered way in that man or woman's life. Abandon to the love of Christ is the one thing that bears fruit. Personal holiness may easily step over into sanctified Pharisaism, but abandon to the love of God will always leave the impression of the holiness and the power of God.

When we are born again of the Spirit the note of our testimony is what God has done for us, and rightly so; but the baptism of the Holy Ghost obliterates that for ever. God will never answer our prayer to be baptised by the Holy Ghost for any other reason than to be a witness for Jesus. "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto Me" (RV). Not witnesses of what Iesus can do, that is an elementary witness, but "witnesses unto Me; you will be instead of Me, you will take everything that happens, praise or blame, persecution or commendation, as happening to Me. No one can stand that unless he is constrained by the majesty of the personal power of Jesus. Paul says, "I am constrained by the love of Christ, held as in a fever, gripped as by a disease, that is why I act as I do; you may call me mad or sober, I do not care; I am after only one thing—to persuade men of the judgement seat of Christ and of the love of God."

The great passion in much of the preaching of today is to secure an audience. As workers for God our object is never to secure our audience, but to secure that the Gospel is presented to men. Never presume to preach unless you are mastered by the motive born of the Holy Ghost: "For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified."

THE COMPLETE CHRISTIAN

Conformed to the Master's Standard (Luke 6:40)

Jesus Christ's standard for the worker is Himself. Am I allowing His standard to obsess me? Am I measuring my life by His all the time? The one standard put before us is Our Lord Himself; we have to be saturated in this ideal in thinking and in praying, and allow nothing to blur the standard. We must lift up Jesus Christ not only in the preaching of the Gospel but to our own souls. If my mind and heart and spirit are getting fixed with one Figure only, the Lord Jesus Christ, and other people and other ideas are fading, then I am growing in grace. The one dominant characteristic in the life of the worker is that Jesus Christ is coming more into the ascendant. The motive is not a sentiment but a passion, the blazing passion of the Holy Ghost in the soul of the worker; not—"because Jesus has done so much for me," that is a sickening, unscriptural statement. The one attitude of the life is Jesus Christ first, second, and third, and nothing apart from Him. The thing that hinders God's work is not sin, but other claims which are right, but which at a certain point of their rightness conflict with the claims of Jesus Christ. If the conflict should come, remember it is to be Jesus first (see Luke 14:26).

Consecrated to the Master's Sovereignty (2 Timothy 2:21)

The vessels in a household have their honour from the use made of them by the head of the house. As a worker I have to separate myself for one purpose—for Jesus Christ to use me for what He likes. Imitation, doing what other people do, is an unmitigated curse. Am I allowing anyone to mould my ideas of Christian service? Am I taking my ideas from some servant of God or from God Himself? We are here for one thing only—to be vessels "meet for the Master's use." We are not here to work for God because we have chosen to do so, but because God has apprehended us. Natural ability has nothing to do with service; consequently there is never any thought of, "Oh, well, I am not fitted for this."

One student a year who hears God's call would be sufficient for God to have called this College into existence. This College as an organisation is not worth anything, it is not academic; it is for nothing else but for God to help Himself to lives. Is He going to help Himself to your life, or are you taken up with your conception of what you are going to do? God is responsible for our lives, and the one great keynote is reckless reliance upon Him.

Complete for the Master's Service (2 Timothy 3:14, 17)

Am I learning how to use my Bible? The way to become complete for the Master's service is to be well soaked in the Bible, some of us only exploit certain passages. Our Lord wants to give us continuous instruction out of His word; continuous instruction turns hearers into disciples. Beware of "spooned meat" spirituality, of using the Bible for the sake of getting messages; use it to nourish your own soul. Be a continuous learner, don't stop short, and the truth will open to you on the right hand and on the left until you find there is no problem in human life with which the Bible does not deal. But remember that there are certain points of truth Our Lord cannot reveal to us until our character is in a fit state to bear it. The discernment of God's truth and the development of character go together.

The life God places in the Christian worker is the life of Jesus Christ, which is continually changing spiritual innocence into glorious practical character.

KEEP BRIGHT BY USE

General Maxims—

- (a) If you lack education, first realise it; then cure it.
- (b) Beware of knowing what you don't practise.

Cultivate Mental Habits

Give attendance to reading. (1 Timothy 4:13)

If we wish to excel in secular things, we concentrate; why should we be less careful in work for God? Don't get dissipated; determine to develop your intellect for one purpose only—to make yourself of more use to God. Have a perfect machine ready for God to use. It is impossible to read too much, but always keep before you why you read. Remember that "the need to receive, recognise, and rely on the Holy Spirit" is before all else.

Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine. (1 Timothy 4:16)

Remember that preaching is God's ordained method of saving the world (see 1 Corinthians 1:21). Take time before God and find out the highest ideal for an address. Never mind if you do not reach the ideal, but work at it, and never say fail. By work and steady application you will acquire the power to do with ease what at first seemed so difficult. Avoid the temptation to be slovenly in your mind and be deluded into calling it "depending on the Spirit." Don't misapply Matthew 10:19–20. Carelessness in spiritual matters is a crime.

Neglect not the gift that is in thee. (1 Timothy 4:14)

In immediate preparation don't call in the aid of other minds; rely on the Holy Spirit and on your own resources, and He will select for you. Discipline your mind by reading and by building in stuff in private, then all that you have assimilated will come back. Keep yourself full to the brim in reading; but remember that the first great Resource is the Holy Ghost Who lays at your disposal the Word of God. The thing to prepare is not the sermon, but the preacher.

Constrain Yourself to Be Spiritually Minded Follow after righteousness. (1 Timothy 6:11)

It is possible to have a saved and sanctified experience and a stagnant mind. Learn how to make your mind awake and fervid, and when once your mind is awake never let it go to sleep. The brain does not need rest, it only needs change of work. The intellect works with the greatest intensity when it works continuously; the more you do, the more you can do. We must work hard to keep in trim for God. Clean off the rust and keep bright by use.

Be instant in season, out of season. (2 Timothy 4:2)

You cannot always be in conscious glowing touch with God, but don't wait for ecstasy. See that you make all else secondary to the one purpose of your life. "My one aim is to preach Jesus by lip and life, and I will allow no other interest to dominate," then every other thing will be related to that purpose. "Instant in season, out of season"; never give way to discouragement.

^{8.} spooned meat: liquefied food that requires no chewing or effort—baby food.

THE PREACHER'S OBLIGATIONS

1 Corinthians 1:26

In other callings you have to work with men, but in this calling you work upon men; you come with the authority men crave for and yet resent.

A preacher must remember that his calling is different from every other calling in life; his personality has to be submerged in his message (cf. John 3:30). An orator has to work with men and enthuse them; a New Testament preacher has to come upon men with a message they resent and will not listen to at first. The Gospel comes in with a backing of Divine authority and an arrestment which men resent. There is something in every man that resents the interference of God. Before a man can be saved, the central citadel of his being has to be stormed and taken possession of by the Holy Spirit. It is easy to tell men they must be saved and filled with the Holy Ghost; but we have to live amongst men and show them what a life filled with the Holy Ghost ought to be. A preacher has to come upon men with a message and a testimony that go together. The great pattern for every witness is the abiding Witness, the Lord Jesus Christ. He came down on men from above; He stood on our level, with what men never had, in order to save men.

To the Gospel (1 Peter 1:25)

The Gospel is too profound for the lazy public; too positive for discursive thinkers.

We have no right to preach unless we present the Gospel; we have not to advocate a cause or a creed or an experience, but to present the Gospel, and we cannot do that unless we have a personal testimony based on the Gospel. That is why so many preach what is merely the outcome of a higher form of culture. Until men get into a right relationship with God the Gospel is always in bad taste. There is a feeling of silent resentment, "Don't talk about being born again and being sanctified; be vague." "Do remember the people you are talking to." "Preach the simple Gospel, the thing that keeps us sound asleep." If you take the people as a standard, you will never preach the Gospel, it is too positive. Our obligation to the Gospel is to preach it.

To the Church (Ephesians 5:27)

The Church does not lead the world nor echo it; she confronts it. Her note is the supernatural note.

The Church confronts the world with a message the world craves for but resents because it comes through the Cross of Christ. The central keystone for all Time and Eternity on which the whole purpose of God depends is the Cross (see Galatians 6:14). When the world gets in a bad way, she refers to the Church; when she is prosperous, she hates it. If men could blot out the standard of the Christian Church they would do so; but in a crisis they find a need in their own heart. As preachers we are privileged by God to stand steadfast against any element that lowers His standard. We are called upon to confront the world with the Gospel of Christ, not to start off on side tracks of our own.

The Church owns a mastery the world can neither ignore nor do without, the mastery of the Lord Jesus Christ.

To the Community (1 John 5:19)

You must tell men they cannot be right with each other except as they are right with God in Christ and in the atoning work of Christ.

Our Lord taught that men could only be right with each other as they are right with Him, and Jesus Christ can take any man and place him in right relationship with God.

Never water down or minimise the mighty Gospel of God by considering that people may be misled by certain statements. Present the Gospel in all its fullness and God will guard His own truth.

^{9.} positive: independent; unrelated to anything else.

DON'TS AND DO'S ABOUT TEXTS

Don't be Clever.
Don't be Controversial.
Don't be Conceited.
Do be Careful.
Do be Consecrated.
Do be Concentrated.

Don't Be Clever

Never choose a text, let the text choose you. Cleverness is the ability to do things better than anyone else. Always hide that light under a bushel. The Holy Ghost is never clever. In a child of God the Holy Spirit works as naturally as breathing, and the most unostentatious choices are His choices. Unless your personal life is hid with Christ in God, natural ability will continually lead you into chastisement from God. When a text has chosen you, the Holy Spirit will impress you with its inner meaning and cause you to labour to lead out that meaning for your congregation.

Do Be Careful

Nothing that has been discovered by anyone else is of any use to you until you re-discover it. Be careful to use your own mental eyes, and the eyes of those who can help you to see what you are looking at. Drummond¹⁰ said that Ruskin taught him to see. Be careful to develop the power of perceiving what you look at, and never take an explanation from another mind unless you see it for yourself.

Don't Be Controversial

Never choose disputed texts; if you do, you are sure to cut yourself. The spirit that chooses disputed texts is the boldness born of impudence, not the fearlessness born of morality. Remember, God calls us to proclaim the Gospel. A man may increase his intellectual vim by controversy, but only one in a thousand can maintain his spiritual life and controvert. Never denounce a thing about which you know nothing.

Do Be Consecrated

Never forget who you are, what you have been, and what you may be by the grace of God. When you try and re-state to yourself what you implicitly feel to be God's truth, you give God a chance to pass that truth on to someone else through you.

Don't Be Conceited

Conceit means my own point of view and I don't care what anyone else says. "Be not wise in your own conceits," says Paul. Conceit makes the way God deals with me personally the binding standard for others. We are called to preach the Truth, Our Lord Jesus Christ, and we get decentralised from Him if we become specialists.

Do Be Concentrated

Strenuous mental effort to interpret the word of God will fag us out physically, whereas strenuous mental effort that lets the word of God talk to us will re-create us. We prefer the spiritual interpretation to the exegetical because it does not need any work. We are to be "workmen" for God, not take God's word to feed ourselves. The preacher has to concentrate on what God's word says; he is dealing with a written revelation, not an unwritten one. The reason we have no "open vision" is that in some domain we have disobeyed God. Immediately we obey, the word is opened up. The atmosphere of the Christian is God Himself, and in ordinary times as well as exceptional times He brings words to us. When He does not, never deceive yourself, something is wrong and needs curing, just as there would be something wrong if you could not get your breath. Supernatural manifestations of guidance are exceptional. The normal way of the Spirit of God is the way He worked in the life of Jesus Christ. Maintain your personal relationship with God at all costs. Never allow anything to come between your soul and God, and welcome anyone or anything that leads you to know Him better.

FIRST THINGS FIRST

The Absoluteness of Christ (Philippians 2:8)

As a preacher, allow no quarter to anyone who pretends he can give any other explanation of Jesus Christ than He gives of Himself. Jesus Christ calls Himself "the Son of Man," i.e., Representative Man. Never make the Absoluteness of Christ mean the Absoluteness of God; they are not the same. The holiness of God Almighty is Absolute, it knows no development by antagonism; the holiness exhibited by the Son of Man expresses itself by means of antagonism. The words Our Lord uses of Himself show that His obedience was of a moral nature, it was not a mechanical obedience.

We must look upon Christ as a real historic figure, a real man, not a magical prodigy. He shared in the life of limited man, the life of His age and the life of His land. The limitation of His consciousness was no limitation of His moral power but its exercise.

In presenting Jesus Christ never present Him as a miraculous Being Who came down from heaven and worked miracles and Who was not related to life as we are; that is not the Gospel Christ. The Gospel Christ is the Being Who came down to earth and lived our life and was possessed of a frame like ours. He became Man in order to show the relationship man was to hold to God, and by His death and resurrection He can put any man into that relationship. Jesus Christ is the last word in human nature.

The doctrines of the New Testament as applied to personal life are moral doctrines, that is, they are understood by a pure heart, not by the intellect. "I want to know God's will in this matter," you say, and your next step is into a fog! because the only way to understand the will of God is to obey from the heart, it is a moral discernment (see Romans 12:2). My spiritual character determines the revelation of God to me.

In the New Testament we deal not with the shrewd guesses of able men, but with a supernatural revelation, and only as we transact business on that revelation do the moral consequences result in us. The danger is to preach a subjective theology, i.e. that something wells up on the inside. The Gospel of the New Testament is based on the absoluteness of revelation, we cannot get at it by our common sense. If a man is to be saved it must be from outside, God never pumps up anything from within. As a preacher, base on nothing less than revelation, and the authenticity of the revelation depends on the character of the one who brings it. Our Lord Jesus Christ put His impress on every revelation from Genesis to Revelation.

The Absoluteness of Immorality and Holiness (Revelation 21:7–8)

Immorality and holiness are absolute, you cannot get behind them. When Our Lord talks about the radical evil of the human heart (e.g. Mark 7:21-22), it is a revelation we know nothing of; it comes to the shores of our lives in immorality and holiness. Immorality has its seat in every one of us, not in some of us. If a man is not holy, he is immoral, no matter how good he may seem. Immorality is at the basis of the whole thing; if it does not show itself outwardly, it will show itself before God. The New Testament teaches that no man or woman is safe apart from Jesus Christ because there is treachery on the inside. "Out of the heart of men, proceed. . . . "The majority of us are grossly ignorant about the possibilities of evil in the heart. Never trust your common sense when the statements of Jesus contradict it, and when you preach see that you base your preaching on the revelation of Jesus Christ, not on the sweet innocence of human nature. When you hear a man cry out, like the publican of old, "God be merciful to me a sinner," you have the problem of the whole universe. That man has reached the realisation of himself at last, he knows that he is a guilty, immoral type of man and needs saving. Never take anyone to be good, and above all never take yourself to be good. Natural goodness will always break, always disappoint, why? Because the Bible tells us that "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?" Never trust anything in yourself that God has not placed there through the regeneration of Our Lord Jesus Christ; and never trust anything saving that in anyone else.

That is the stern platform you have to stand on when you present the truth of God, and it will resolve you on to a lonely platform, because your message will be craved for but its way of being presented will be resented. The Gospel of Jesus Christ awakens an intense craving and an equally intense resentment. Base on personal love for the Lord, not on personal love for men. Personal love for men will make you call immorality a weakness, and holiness a mere aspiration; personal love for the Lord will make you call immorality devilish, and holiness the only thing that can stand in the light of God. The only safety for the preacher is to face his soul not with his people, or even with his message, but to face his soul with his Saviour all the time.

THE ORIGIN OF OUR SALVATION 2 Peter 1:16

Revelation is not primarily in my soul, but in a fact which is in the chain of history.

In preaching the Gospel remember that salvation is the great thought of God, not an experience. Experience is the gateway through which salvation comes into our conscious life, the evidence of a right relationship to Jesus Christ. Never preach experience, preach the great thought of God that lies behind. People stagnate because they never get beyond the image of their experiences into the life of God which transcends all experience. Jesus Christ Himself is the Revelation, and all our experiences must be traced back to Him and kept there.

The Supernaturalness of Our Salvation (Ephesians 1:7; John 3:7-8)

The Gospel is a gift to our poverty, not a triumph of our resource.

Beware of a false spirituality that is not based on the rugged facts of our religion. One rugged fact is the forgiveness of sins—"we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins." Forgiveness is the Divine miracle of grace. Have we ever contemplated the amazing fact that God through the Death of Jesus Christ forgives us for every wrong we have ever done, not because we are sorry, but out of His sheer mercy? God's forgiveness is only natural in the supernatural domain. Another rugged fact is the need for new birth—"Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again," that is, you must be invaded by the Spirit of God by means of a supernatural recreation. Being born again of the Spirit is an unmistakable work of God, as mysterious as the wind. Beware of the tendency to water down the supernatural in religion.

The Essence of Our Salvation (Ephesians 4:13–16)

Man's extremity elicits the central resources of God the Saviour.

Personality sometimes hinders the Gospel, people are swept off their feet not by the truth presented but by the tremendous force of the personality that presents it. Personality is used by God to emphasise a neglected truth, but the Toms, Dicks and Harrys are the ones used to spread a knowledge of salvation amongst men. "He must increase, but I must decrease." That is the only standard for the preacher of the Gospel. John the Baptist is stating the truth that we have no right as preachers on the ground of our personality, but only because of the message we proclaim.

We have to bring an Absolute Christ to the needs of men, not to their conditions.

So many preach the human aspect of Christ, His sympathy for the bereaved and the suffering and sin-stained, and men listen whilst Christ is brought down to their conditions; but a preacher has to bring the Gospel of God to men's needs, and to do this he has to uncover their need and men resent this—"I don't want to accept the verdict on myself that Jesus Christ brings; I don't believe I am so sinful as He reveals." A man never believes what Jesus Christ says about the human heart until the Holy Ghost gives him the startling revelation of the truth of His diagnosis (see Mark 7:20–23).

Paul was never appealed to fundamentally by the distresses of men, he was appealed to only by the Cross of Christ (see 1 Corinthians 2:2). There are any number of people who awaken sympathy for the conditions of men and speak of the tragedy of human life to the one who presents the tragedy of Redemption, a brokenhearted God.

As a preacher, never remember the conditions of men, remember only the rugged facts of our salvation, and never attempt to guard them.

THE CROSS IN DISCIPLESHIP

The Cross in Discipleship That Affronts (Matthew 8:20; Luke 9:60–61)

There is a method of making disciples which is not sanctioned by Our Lord. It is an excessive pressing of people to be reconciled to God in a way that is unworthy of the dignity of the Gospel. The pleading is on the line of: Jesus has done so much for us, cannot we do something out of gratitude to Him? This method of getting people into relationship to God out of pity for Jesus is never recognised by Our Lord. It does not put sin in its right place, nor does it put the more serious aspect of the Gospel in its right place. Our Lord never pressed anyone to follow Him unconditionally; nor did He wish to be followed merely out of an impulse of enthusiasm. He never pleaded, He never entrapped; He made discipleship intensely narrow, and pointed out certain things which could never be in those who followed Him. To-day there is a tendency to take the harshness out of Our Lord's statements. What Jesus says is hard; it is only easy when it comes to those who are His disciples. Whenever Our Lord talked about discipleship He prefaced it with an "IF," never with an emphatic assertion, "You must." Discipleship carries an option with it.

The aspect of the cross in discipleship is lost altogether in the present-day view of following Jesus. The cross is looked upon as something beautiful and simple instead of a stern heroism. Our Lord never said it was easy to be a Christian; He warned men that they would have to face a variety of hardships, which He termed bearing the cross.

The time when Jesus comes to us is not so much in a revival issue, a time when He is in the ascendant, but rather at a time when we are in the ascendant, when our wills are perfectly free, when the fascination and beauty of the world on the one hand and the repelling aspect of Jesus Christ on the other is there. Our Lord never allows an allegiance which is the outcome of an impulse of enthusiasm that sweeps us off our feet, not knowing what we are doing. We must be at the balance of our wills when we choose. That is why the call of Jesus Christ awakens an immense craving and an intense resentment, and that is why as New Testament preachers we must always push an issue of will.

The next time you read those words, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me," strip them of all their poetry. It is an effort to us to think of the cross as Our Lord thought of it. When Jesus said "let him deny himself, and take up his cross," He had in mind not a thing of beautiful sentiment to arouse heroism, but an ugly cruel thing, with awful nails that tore the flesh. For twenty centuries people have covered up the Cross with sentiment, and we can sit and listen to the preaching of the crucifixion of Jesus and be dissolved in tears, but very few of us have any appreciation of what our Lord conveyed when He said, "let him deny himself, and take his cross, and follow Me."

The Cross of Christ stands unique and alone; we are never called upon to carry His Cross. Our cross is something that comes only with the peculiar relationship of a disciple to Jesus Christ, it is the evidence that we have denied the right to ourselves. Our Lord was not talking about suffering for conscience' sake or conviction's sake; men suffer for conscience' sake who know nothing about Jesus Christ and owe Him no allegiance; men suffer for conviction's sake, if they are worth their salt, whether they are Christians or not. The Cross of Jesus Christ is a revelation; our cross is an experience.

What the Cross was to Our Lord such also in measure was it to be to those who followed Him. The cross is the pain involved in doing the will of God. That aspect is being lost sight of, we say that after sanctification all is a delight. Was Paul's life all delight? Was Our Lord's life all delight? Discipleship means we are identified with His interests, and we have to fill up "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ." Only when we have been identified with Our Lord in sanctification can we begin to understand what our cross means.

The Cross in Discipleship in Aggression (Matthew 10:16-39)

These verses need to be re-read because we are apt to think that Jesus Christ took all the bitterness and we get all the blessing. It is true that we get the blessing, but we must never forget that the wine of life is made out of crushed grapes; to follow Jesus will involve bruising in the lives of the disciples as the purpose of God did in His own life. The thing that makes us whimper is that we will look for justice. If you look for justice in your Christian work you will soon put yourself in a bandage and give way to selfpity and discouragement. Never look for justice, but never cease to give it; and never allow anything you meet with to sour your relationship to men through Jesus Christ. "Love . . . as I have loved you."

In Matthew 10:34 Jesus told the disciples that they would be opposed not only in private life, but that the powers of state would oppose them and they would have to suffer persecution, and some even crucifixion. Don't say, "But that was simply meant for those days." If you stand true to Jesus Christ you will find that the world will react against you with a butt, not with a caress, annoyed and antagonistic (see John 15:18–20).

When Our Lord spoke of the cross His disciples were to bear, He did not say that if they bore it they would become holy; He said the cross was to be borne for His sake, not for theirs. He also said that they would suffer in the same way as the prophets suffered, because of the messages they spoke from God (see Matthew 5:11–12). The tendency to-day is to say, "Live a holy life, but don't talk about it; don't give your testimony; don't confess your allegiance to Jesus, and you will be left alone."

The Cross in Discipleship in Antagonism (Matthew 5:16; 10:32)

"Whosoever therefore shall confess Me . . . ," i.e., confess Me by lip and by life. People are not persecuted for living a holy life, it is the confession of Jesus that brings the persecution. There is a great deal of social work done to-day that does not confess Jesus, although people may praise Him to further orders;¹¹ and if you confess Him there, you will find the ostracism He mentions: "Keep your religion out; don't bring your jargon of sanctification here." You must take it there, and when you do, the opposition will be tremendous. The reason for the opposition is that men have vested interests which philanthropy and kindness to humanity do not touch, but which the Spirit of Jesus testified to by human lips does touch, and indignation is awakened against the one who dares to carry the cross for his Lord there.

Self-denial and self-sacrifice are continually spoken of as being good in themselves; Our Lord never used any such affectation. He aimed a blow at the mistake that self-denial is an end in itself. He spoke of self-denial and self-sacrifice as painful things that cost and hurt (see Matthew 10:38-39). The term self-denial has come to mean giving up things; the denial Jesus speaks of is a denial right out to my right to myself, a clean sweep of all the decks to the mastership of Jesus. Some folks are so mixed up nervously that they cannot help sacrificing themselves, but unless Jesus Christ is the lodestar there is no benefit in the sacrifice. Self-denial must have its spring in personal outflowing love to Our Lord; we are no longer our own, we are spoilt for every other interest in life saving as we can win men to Jesus Christ. The one great spring of sacrifice is devotion to Jesus, "For My sake."

THE REASON WHY

The reason why the apostle Paul was a preacher was because of his understanding of the Cross of Christ. The majority of present-day preachers understand only the blessings that come to us from the Cross, they are apt to be devoted to certain doctrines which flow from the Cross. Paul preached one thing only, the crucified Christ, "who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."

The Cross of Christ for Doctrine (1 Corinthians 1:23)

Never confuse the Cross of Christ with the benefits that flow from it. For all Paul's doctrine, his one great passion was the Cross of Christ, not salvation, nor sanctification, but the great truth that God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son; consequently you never find him artificial, or making a feeble statement. Every doctrine Paul taught had the blood and the power of God in it. There is an amazing force of spirit in all he said because the great passion behind was not that he wanted men to be holy, that was secondary, but that he had come to understand what God meant by the Cross of Christ. If we have only the idea of personal holiness, of being put in God's show room, we shall never come anywhere near seeing what God wants; but when once we have come where Paul is and God is enabling us to understand what the Cross of Christ means, then nothing can ever turn us (see Romans 8:35–39). If Paul had been set on his own holiness, he never would have said, "For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren." He cared about nothing on earth, saving one thing—the Cross of Christ. That was the great passion of his preaching, he paid no attention to what it cost him. "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" Paul's preaching was a necessity laid upon him.

The Cross of Christ for Direction (1 Corinthians 2:2)

The direction of Paul's sentiment, amongst saints or sinners, was never pathetic and pious, but passionately taken up with Christ crucified. What direction does my preaching take? What direction do my letters take, my dreams? What direction does the whole trend of my life take? Paul says he is determined that his life shall take no other direction than this: the emphasis on and exposition of the Cross of Christ. That is the note that is being lost sight of in our preaching to-day. We hear any amount about our cross, about what it costs us to follow Christ; but who amongst us has any inkling of what the apostle Paul saw? He had caught an understanding of the mind of God in the Cross of Christ and grasped it, consequently he could never be exhausted or turned aside.

^{11.} to further orders: ad infinitum; endlessly; the phrase, military origin, continuing present action until one receives different orders.

You cannot be profoundly moved by a sentiment or by an idea of holiness, but you can be moved by a passion; and the old writers used to speak of the Cross as the Passion of Our Lord. The Cross is the great opening through which all the blood of Christian service runs. Do we bear the marks of the Lord Jesus in our preaching, or do we leave our congregations with the impression of how sweet and winsome we are? Whether Paul's words were stinging or comforting, for praise or for condemnation, the one impression left was Jesus Christ and Him crucified, not Jesus Christ risen and exalted, but crucified. The reason some of us have no power in our preaching, no sense of awe, is that we have no passion for God, but only a passion for Humanity. The one thing we have to do is to exhibit Jesus Christ crucified, to lift Him up all the time. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." Paul had one passion only, he had seen the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Who is Jesus Christ? God exalted in Christ crucified.

The Cross of Christ for Disposition (Galatians 6:14)

Paul disposed his whole life and all his interests in the light of his understanding of the Cross of Christ. Never take these words to mean Paul's identification with the death of Christ only. ". . . by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world" because of my identification with the death of Jesus? No, because Jesus Christ was crucified to the world. If we deal only with our identification, we lose sight of the objective fact of Our Lord's death. The profoundest truth to us is shallow compared with the revelation given here. Most of our emphasis to-day is on what our Lord's death means to us: the thing that is of importance is that we understand what God means in the Cross. Paul did not understand the Cross in order that he might receive the life of God; but by understanding the Cross, he received the life. Study the Cross for no other sake than God's sake, and you will be holy without knowing it. The danger is to fix our eyes on our own whiteness. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." Are we lifting up what Jesus Christ can do in the place of His Cross? That snare besets us until we learn the passion of Paul's life.

The call to preach is not because I have a special gift, or because Jesus has sanctified me, but that I have had a glimpse of God's meaning in the Cross, and life can never be the same again. The passion of Paul's preaching is the suffering of God Almighty exhibited in the Cross of Christ. Many who are working for God ought to be learning in the School of Calvary. Paul says—"I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified"—not myself crucified with Christ, that is a mere et cetera; the one Figure left is Jesus Christ, and His Cross.

The Cross of Christ and Discipline (Galatians 2:20)

This is not a theological statement, it is a statement of Christian experience wrought by the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost is the one Who regenerates us into the family to which Jesus Christ belongs; through the eternal efficacy of the Cross we are made partakers of the Divine nature. "I have been crucified with Christ" (RV). Paul's personal identification with the death of Christ is simply the presentation of how that death will work out in the life of anyone. The Cross of Christ is the Self-revelation of God, the exhibition of the essential nature of the Godhead.

Nowadays the great passion is the passion for souls, but you never find that passion mentioned in the New Testament, it is the passion for Christ that the New Testament mentions. It is not a passion for men that saves men; a passion for men breaks human hearts. The passion for Christ inwrought by the Holy Ghost goes deeper down than the deepest agony the world, the flesh and the devil can produce. It goes straight down to where Our Lord went, and the Holy Ghost works out, not in thinking, but in living, this passion for Christ. Whenever the passion for souls obscures the passion for Christ, Satan has come in as an angel of light.

BE SURE OF THE ABYSSES OF GOD

As Christian workers we must never forget that salvation is God's thought, not man's; therefore it is an unfathomable abyss. Salvation is not an experience; experience is only a gateway by which salvation comes into our conscious lives. We have to preach the great thought of God behind the experience.

Judgement on the Abyss of Love (1 Peter 4:17)

Never sympathise with a soul who finds it difficult to get to God; God is never to blame. We have to so present the truth that the Spirit of God will show what is wrong. The element of judgement must always come out; it is the sign of God's love. The great sterling test in preaching is that it brings everyone to judgement; the Spirit of God locates each one. Never allow in yourself or in others the phrase "I can't"; it is unconscious blasphemy. If I put my inability as a barrier, I am telling God there is something He has not taken into account. Every element of self-reliance must be slain by the power of God. The people who say "I can't" are those who have a remnant of self-reliance left; a true saint never says "I can't," because it never occurs to him that he can! Complete weakness is always the occasion of the Spirit of God manifesting His power. Never allow anything to be in you that the Cross of Christ condemns.

Conscience on the Abyss of the Cross (2 Corinthians 5:10-12)

The most universal thing among men is conscience, and the Cross is God's conscience in supreme energy.

Conscience must be educated at the Cross. As a worker always bring the conscience of others to face the Cross of Christ. Is my life worthy of what Jesus Christ did on the Cross? Are there the elements of ability and power and peace stamped with the almightiness that comes through the Cross? If not, I am not where I should be. The Cross of Christ means that the Spirit of God can empower me almightily until Every virtue we possess, And every victory won, And every thought of holiness, Are His alone.

We imagine we have to do these things for ourselves; we have not, we have to keep steadily in the light of the Cross, relying on the Spirit of God, then we will live out the life He wants us to live. Whenever we get our eyes off Christ and His Cross and build up on our own experience, "Now God has sanctified me, I am all right," we become betrayers of the very power that saved us. When we walk in the light, with the whole of our attention taken up with Jesus Christ, there is manifested in us a holiness that glorifies God in every particular. Never get off on the intellectual line, "Think proper thoughts." Live proper lives! and you will think proper thoughts.

The Cross of Christ is the Self-revelation of God, the way God has given Himself. In the preaching and writing of to-day there is much brilliant stuff that passes into thin air because it is not related to this tremendous fact of the Self-bestowal of God that lifts up humanity to be in accordance with Himself.

Morality on the Abyss of the Atonement (2 Corinthians 5:20–21)

The mind of the worker must brood much on the Atonement because every bit of our life, physical, moral and spiritual, must be judged by the standard of the Atonement, viz., holiness. Never say God's holiness does not mean what it does mean. It means every part of the life under the scrutiny of God, knowing that the grace of God is sufficient for every detail. The temptation comes along the line of compromise, "Don't be so unbendingly holy; so fiercely pure and uprightly chaste." Never tolerate by sympathy with yourself or with others any practice that is not in keeping with a holy God.

Liberty on the Abyss of the Gospel (Galatians 5:1)

We have to present the liberty of Christ, and we cannot do it if we are not free ourselves. There is only one liberty, the liberty of Jesus Christ at work in my conscience enabling me to do what is right. If we are free with the liberty wherewith Christ makes us free, slowly and surely those whom we influence will begin to be free with the same freedom. Always keep your own life measured by the standard of Jesus Christ; bow your neck to His yoke alone and to no other yoke whatever; and see that you never bind any yoke on others that Jesus Christ Himself does not place. It takes a long time to get us out of imagining that unless people see as we do they must be wrong. That is never Jesus Christ's view. Our true sympathy lies with the One Who is absolute tenderness, and every now and again God gives us the chance of being the rugged stuff that He might be the tender One. We have to be sacramental elements in the Lord's hands.

WHAT IS FOLLOWING JESUS CHRIST?

The Still Small Voice (Matthew 4:19)

In the days of His flesh the invitation to follow Jesus Christ was a definite one. It meant doing as Peter said, "Lo, we have left all, and have followed Thee" (Mark 10:28). This literal following of Jesus is no longer necessary; what men are called on to forsake to-day is sin and worldliness. Never say you do not know where these things take up their abode. Get down before God and say, "Lord, why cannot I follow Thee now?" and He will show you why not in a flash. "But," you say, "it cannot be that, it is far too small a thing." It is just that and nothing else. Never believe any being on earth if he contradicts the Holy Ghost. Whatever the Holy Ghost detects in you, trace it down, and you will find the whole disposition of sin, i.e., my claim to my right to myself, is at the basis of that infinitesimal thing of which our mind says, "But it cannot be that."

The Silent Sure Vision (Mark 4:34; cf. Luke 10:39)

Have you ever been alone with Jesus? The disciples enjoyed the inestimable privilege not only of hearing the truth from Our Lord's own lips, but of questioning Him in secret about everything He said. We go to John Wesley, or to Adam Clarke, 12 or some other commentator instead of going to Jesus Himself. How can we go to Him? The Holy Spirit is the Exponent of Jesus Christ's statements, and He will test whether the expositions are of God or not. Jesus Christ's teaching is involved in such a manner that only the Holy Spirit can extricate its meaning for us. "He will guide you into all truth." The Holy Spirit never witnesses to a clever interpretation; the exposition the Holy Spirit will witness to is always amazingly and profoundly simple; you feel, "That certainly is God's truth." Whenever you are without that feeling about an interpretation, hesitate, keep your judgement in abeyance. Don't force your head to argue, but get alone with Jesus and ask Him. If He keeps you waiting, He knows why He does so. Discernment of God's truth and development in spiritual character go together.

In the Sermon on the Mount Our Lord emphasises the principle that continuous instruction turns hearers into disciples (see Matthew 7:24). Irregular listeners are turned into lop-sided fanatics. Many to-day are not following Jesus Christ, they have one glowing bit of light about salvation or sanctification or healing and they say, "Follow me, I am right." Jesus says, "Lift Me up." We have to learn to sit at the feet of Jesus in our disposition. The one thing needful is continuous instruction in His word. Listen to the words Jesus spoke, and let the Holy Spirit instruct you. Be at it steadily. Don't be a hearer only, but become a disciple. Experience is never your guide; experience is the doorway for you to know the Author of the experience. Get at the knowledge of God for yourself, be a continuous learner, and the truth will open on the right hand and on the left until you find there is not a problem in human life that Jesus Christ cannot deal with.

The Slow Steps in the Valley (Luke 14:33)

To follow Jesus Christ to-day is to follow a madman according to the ideals of present-day civilisation. We have the idea that our civilisation is God-ordained, whereas it has been built up by ourselves. We have made a thousand and one necessities until our system of civilised life is as cast iron, and then we apologise to the Lord for not following Him. "God can never mean that I have to follow Him at the cost of all I have?" But He does mean it. Instantly the clash is between our civilisation and the call of Jesus Christ. Read the Sermon on the Mount—"Seek ye first the kingdom of God"—and apply it to modern life and you will find its statements are either those of a madman or of God Incarnate.

The book entitled Imitation of Christ by Thomas à Kempis is exquisitely beautiful, but fundamentally twisted, because Our Lord's own message of regeneration is ignored. Many a one who has started the imitation of Christ has had to abandon it as hopeless because a strain is put on human nature that human nature cannot begin to live up to. To have attitudes of life without the life itself is a fraud; to have the life itself imitating the best Pattern of that life is normal and right (see 1 Peter 2:21–23). The teaching of Jesus Christ applies only to the life He puts in, and the marvel of His Redemption is that He gives the power of His own disposition to carry any man through who is willing to obey Him.

GOD'S

The vows of God are on me, and I may not stay To play with shadows, or pluck earthly flower, Till I my work have done. And rendered up account.

The Disciplined Life (2 Timothy 2:3)

The first requirement of the worker is discipline voluntarily entered into. It is easy to be passionate, easy to be thrilled by spiritual influences, but it takes a heart in love with Jesus Christ to put the feet in His footprints, and to square the life to a steady going "up to Ierusalem" with Him. Discipline is the one thing the modern Christian knows nothing of, we won't stand discipline nowadays. God has given me an experience of His life and grace, therefore I am a law unto myself. The discipline of a worker is not in order to develop his own life, but for the purposes of his Commander. The reason there is so much failure is because we forget that we are here for that one thing, lovalty to Iesus Christ; otherwise we have no business to have taken the vows of God upon us. If a soldier is not prepared to be killed, he has no business to have enlisted as a soldier. The only way to keep true to God is by a steady persistent refusal to be interested in Christian work and to be interested alone in Jesus Christ.

A disciplined life means three things—a supreme aim incorporated into the life itself; an external law binding on the life from its Commander; and absolute loyalty to God and His word as the ingrained attitude of heart and mind. There must be no insubordination; every impulse, every emotion, every illumination must be rigorously handled and checked if it is not in accordance with God and His word.

Our Lord Himself is the example of a disciplined life. He lived a holy life by sacrificing Himself to His Father; His words and His thinking were holy because He submitted His intelligence to His Father's word, and He worked the works of God because He steadily submitted His will to His Father's will; and as is the Master, so is the disciple.

The Disentangled Life (2 Timothy 2:4; Numbers 6:2-3)

A disciple of Jesus must know from what he is to be disentangled. The disentanglement is from things which would be right for us but for the fact that we have taken upon us the vows of God. There is a difference between disentanglement for our own soul's sake and disentanglement for God's sake. We are apt to think only about being disentangled from the things which would ensnare us—we give up this and that, not for Jesus Christ's sake, but for our own development. A worker has to disentangle himself from many things that would advantage and develop him but which would turn him aside from being broken bread and poured out wine in his Lord's hands. We are not here to develop our own spiritual life, but to be broken for Jesus Christ's sake. There is much that would advantage and develop us and make us more desirable than we are, but if we have taken the vows of God upon ourselves, those considerations must never enter in. Paul argues in this way: If anything in me, right or wrong, is hindering God's work and causing another to stumble, I will give it up, even if it is the most legitimate thing on earth (see 1 Corinthians 8:13). People say, "Why cannot I do this?" For pity's sake do it! There is no reason why you shouldn't, there is neither right nor wrong about it; but if your love for Jesus Christ is not sufficient to disentangle you from a thousand and one things that would develop you, you know nothing about being His servant.

The appeal made in Christian work nowadays is that we must keep ourselves fit for our work, we must not; we must be in the hands of God for God to do exactly what He likes with us, and that means disentanglement from everything that would hinder His purpose. If you want to remain a full-orbed grape you must keep out of God's hands for He will crush you, wine cannot be had in any other way. The curse in Christian work is that we want to preserve ourselves in God's museum; what God wants is to see where Jesus Christ's men and women are. The saints are always amongst the unofficial crowd, the crowd that is not noticed, and their one dominant note is Jesus Christ.

The Detached Life (2 Timothy 2:4; Leviticus 21:12)

The worker must live a life detached to God, and the illustration of the detached life is that of a priest who intercedes. The reason so few of us intercede is because we do not understand that intercession is a vicarious work. It is not meant to develop us; it is vicarious from beginning to end.

The detached life is the result of an intensely narrow moral purity, not of a narrow mind. The mental view of Jesus Christ was as big as God's view, consequently He went anywhere—to marriage feasts, into the social life of His time, because His morality was absolutely pure; and that is what God wants of us. In the beginning we are fanatical and we cut ourselves off from external things, until we learn that detachment is the outcome of an inner moral purity, inwrought by God and maintained by walking in the light. Then God can put us where He likes, in the foreign field or anywhere, and we will never be entangled—placed there, but detached. Whenever we make our personal convictions the standard for a society or a class, we take them the first step away from Christ, and that will happen every time the light we are walking in is not the light of God. It is enough to make the heart of a stone bleed to see royal souls turning away from God in their very eagerness to serve Him, and entering into worldliness instead of standing absolutely detached.

The Discerning Life (2 Timothy 2:6; Isaiah 28:23–28)

The worker has to have discernment like that of a farmer, that is, he must know how to watch, how to wait, and how to work with wonder. The farmer does not wait with folded arms but with intense activity, he keeps at it industriously until the harvest.

When someone comes to you with a question which makes you feel at your wits' end, never say, "I can't make head or tail of it." Of course you cannot. Always take the case that is too hard for you to God, and to no one else, and He will give you the right thing to say. When you are being taught by God to discern, you will deal with the case in the way that God has prompted you to and you will speak with discernment. When you are used of God it is not because you discern what is wrong, but because the Holy Spirit gives you discernment, and as you speak you realise in what an amazing way the words meet the case, and you say, "I wonder why I said that?" Don't wonder any more, it was the Spirit of God inspiring you. When we are used, we never know we are used, and the times we expect to be used, we are not. We have to keep our heads out of the rush of things in order that the Spirit of God may discern through us.

The discernment for the worker himself is I am God's, therefore I am good for no one else; not good for nothing, but good for no other calling in life. "No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." If you have taken on you the vows of God, never be surprised at the misery and turmoil that come every time you turn aside. Other people may do a certain thing and prosper, but you cannot, and God will take care you do not. There is always one fact more known only to God.

The one word to be written indelibly on each one of us is "God's." There is no responsibility in the life that is there, it is full of speechless child-like delight in God. Whenever a worker breaks down it is because he has taken responsibility upon himself which was never God's will for him to take. "Think of the responsibility it will be for you!" There is no responsibility whatever, saving that of refusing to take the responsibility. The responsibility that would rest on you if you took it would crush you to the dust; but when you know God you take no responsibility upon yourself, you are as free as a child, and the life is one of concentration on God. "Cast that He hath given thee upon the Lord" (Psalm 55:22 RV mg). The thing that interferes with the life with God is our abominable seriousness which chokes the freedom and simplicity which ought to mark the life. The freedom and simplicity spring from one point only, a heart at rest with God and at leisure from itself.

None of this is experience, it is a life; experience is the door that opens into the life. When we have had an experience the snare is that we want to go back to it. Leave experiences alone, let them come or go. God wants our lives to be absolutely centred in Himself. "We cannot kindle when we will the fire which in the heart resides," God gives us marvellous hours of insight, then He withdraws them, and we have to begin to work out "with aching hands and bleeding feet" what we saw in vision, and few understand this.

IDENTIFICATION

Identification is not experienceable; it is infinitely more fundamental than experience. Identification is a revelation, the exposition of the experience. We must get out of the way of bringing everything to the bar of personal experience. Remember two things: first, experience is not its own cause; and second, there must be a standard revelation whereby to account for our experiences. The standard revelation with regard to identification is Our Lord Jesus Christ, and the phases of our experience must always be traced back to this revelation. Jesus Christ must always be infinitely greater than any experience of Him.

Incarnation. The Word Made Weak. God-Man (John 1:14)

Jesus Christ was not a Being Who became Divine, He was the Godhead Incarnated; He emptied Himself of His glory in becoming Incarnate. Never separate the Incarnation from the Atonement. The Incarnation was not meant to enable God to realise Himself, but that man might realise God and gain readjustment to Him. Jesus Christ became Man for one purpose, that He might put away sin and bring the whole human race back into the oneness of identification. Jesus Christ is not an individual iota of a man; He is the whole of the human race centred before God in one Person: He is God and Man in one. Man is lifted up to God in Christ, and God is brought down to man in Christ. Jesus Christ nowhere said, "He that hath seen man hath seen the Father"; but He did say that God was manifest in human flesh in His own Person (John 14:9) that He might become the generating centre for the same manifestation in every human being, and the place of His travail pangs is the Incarnation, Calvary, and the Resurrection.

Identification. The Son Made Sin. God and Man (2 Corinthians 5:21)

What these verses express is beyond the possibility of human experience; they refer only to the experience of Our Lord. The revelation is not that Jesus Christ was punished for our sins, but that, "He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin," that by His identification with it and removal of it, "we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." God made His own Son to be sin that He might make the sinner a saint. The Bible reveals all through that Jesus Christ bore the sin of the world by identification, not by sympathy. He deliberately took upon Himself and bore in His own Person the whole massed sin of the human race, and by so doing He rehabilitated the human race, that is, put it back to where God designed it to be, and anyone can enter into union with God on the ground of what Our Lord did on the Cross.

Invasion. The Sinner Made Saint. God in Man (Galatians 2:20)

Galatians 2:20 is the scriptural expression of identification with Jesus Christ in such a way that the whole life is changed. Paul says that his destiny is no longer self-realisation, but Christ-identity, "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

The revelation of identification means that we are one with God in His Son, not by obedience, obedience is nothing more than the human approach to this mightiest of revelations. We enter into identification by the door of obedience and faith, but the oneness is a revelation. When we do touch God we lose all consciousness of being in conscious touch with Him, we are so absorbed with His peace and power that language cannot convey the assurance of the oneness. The experience of sanctification is simply the entrance into this relationship.

The Self-realisation of Jesus Christ—an entrancing subject to every Christian—is our Redemption; and the way in which we are to be identified experimentally with Jesus Christ is revealed in His Self-realisation. "Partakers of Christ's sufferings"; "as He is, so are we in this world"; "... and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ." The one absorbing passion of the life is for Him.

"Oh, but I don't feel worthy." Of course you are not worthy! Not all your praying or obedience can ever make you worthy. Leave yourself absolutely in His hands, and see that you plunge yourself deep down in faith on the revelation that you are made one with God through the Redemption of Jesus Christ.

WHAT MUST I BELIEVE?

"What Must I Believe to Be a Christian," December 6, 1916, to British Commonwealth troops at Sidi Gaber Camp, Near Alexandria, Egypt

Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His. (Romans 8:9)

There are two domains of Fact: common-sense facts and revelation facts. It is impossible to prove a fact; a fact must be accepted. We accept common-sense facts on the ground of our senses, and we accept revelation facts on the ground of our faith in God.

A Theory is the way we explain facts, an intellectual explanation of the facts we have got, and the explanation is right if there are only those facts. Your theoretical explanation won't work if you have an end to serve. The Christian Science theory says there are no such facts as pain or suffering or death, they are all imaginations; it has forgotten that there are bad facts as well as good. An hypothesis takes only those facts that agree with your theory, it works like a searchlight and life becomes amazingly simple. It is always easier to read a man's book about "life" than to live your life, because he only takes facts that agree with his view, but when you get pitchforked into the confusion of circumstances, where is your fine theory of explanation? You have come in contact with a hundred and one facts that the hypothesis had not taken into account. For the same reason, if you are religious, it is easier to read some pious book than the Bible. The Bible treats you like human life does—roughly. There are two ways of dealing with facts—one is to shut your eyes and say that they are not there, the other is to open your eyes and look at them and let them mould you.

We begin our religious life by believing our beliefs, we accept what we are taught without questioning; but when we come up against things we begin to be critical, and find out that the beliefs, however right, are not right for us because we have not bought them by suffering. What we take for granted is never ours until we have bought it by pain. A thing is worth just what it costs. When we go through the suffering of experience we seem to lose everything, but bit by bit we get it back.

It is absurd to tell a man he must believe this and that; in the meantime he can't! Scepticism is produced by telling men what to believe. We are in danger of putting the cart before the horse and saying a man must believe certain things before he can be a Christian; his beliefs are the effect of his being a Christian, not the cause of it. Our Lord's word "believe" does not refer to an intellectual act, but to a moral act. With Him "to believe" means "to commit." "Commit yourself to Me," He says, and it takes a man all he is worth to believe in Jesus Christ. The man who has been through a crisis is more likely to commit himself to a Person, he sees more clearly; before the crisis comes we are certain, because we are shallow.

According to the Apostle Paul the essential ingredient in being a Christian is that a man has the Spirit of Christ, no matter what his "tag" may be. Human strength and earnestness cannot make a man a Christian any more than they can make him an angel; he must receive something from God, and that is what Jesus Christ calls being born from above (John 3:3 RV mg; see Luke 11:13). The supreme test of a Christian is that he has the Spirit of Jesus Christ in his actual life.

The Fact of the Bible and the Theory of Inspiration

The Bible is a world of revelation facts, and when you explain the Bible, take into account all the record of it. The Bible nowhere says we have to believe it is the Word of God before we can be Christians. The Bible is not the Word of God to me unless I come at it through what Jesus Christ says, it is of no use to me unless I know Him. The key to my understanding of the Bible is not my intelligence, but personal relationship to Jesus Christ. I begin my theories after I have got on the inside. You may believe the Bible is the Word of God from Genesis to Revelation and not be a Christian at all.

(a) The Mystery of the Bible

Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (2 Peter 1:21)

What does the Bible say about itself? That it is inspired of the Holy Ghost, but through men, not through mechanisms. It is not that the Holy Ghost took up men in a miraculous way and used them as channels; the chief item is the man, and each Book bears the stamp of the man. The mystery of the Bible is that its inspiration was direct from God, not verbally inspired, but the inspired Word of God—the Final Word of God; not that God is not saying anything now, but He is not saying anything different from the Final Word, Jesus Christ. All God says is expounding that Word. The Final Word and the only Word are very different. Be reverent with the Bible explanation of itself.

(b) The Message of the Bible

And they are they which testify of Me. (John 5:39)

Jesus Christ says the message of the Bible is about Himself—"we cannot interpret it according to any other key..." "... no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation." We can prove anything we choose from the Bible once we forget the message Jesus says it contains. "The test that you know the Bible is that you understand what it is driving at, it is expounding Me, giving the exposition of what I am after."

(c) The Meaning of the Bible

All scripture is given by inspiration of God. (2 Timothy 3:16)

The Bible instructs us in righteousness, in the rightness of practical living; its meaning is to keep us living right. Most people like to use the Bible for anything other than that, for a kind of jugglery to prove special doctrines.

The Fact of Christ and the Dogma of the Trinity Dogma means the things we say in the creed, systematised theology. There is no dogma of the Trinity in the Bible. I am not asked to believe this and that about Jesus Christ, His birth and resurrection, before I am a Christian, but when I am a Christian I begin to try and expound to myself Who Jesus Christ is, and to do that I must take into consideration the New Testament explanation of Him. The Deity of Jesus Christ does not come to a man's intellect first, but to his heart and life. Nowhere in the New Testament are you asked to believe these facts before you are a Christian. They are Christian doctrines, and the Bible is the illustration of the Christian faith. The New Testament is not written to prove that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, but written for those who believe He is. There are no problems in the New Testament.

(a) His Condition

And all bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth. (Luke 4:22)

The condition in which Jesus Christ lived was a remarkably ordinary one, and every time people got startled in listening to Him, they came back to practical realities—He is extraordinary, but "Is not this Joseph's son? Don't we know all about Him?" Our Lord's first public sermon is an instance of how it is possible to choke the witness of the heart by the prejudice of the head.

(b) His Character

A man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs. (Acts 2:22; see John 18:20; Acts 10:38)

The character of Jesus Christ is exhibited in the New Testament, and it appeals to us all. He lived His life straight down in the ordinary amalgam of human life, and He claims that the character He manifested is possible for any man if he will come in by the door He provides (see Luke 11:13).

(c) His Claims

He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father. (John 14:9)

Is the philosophic explanation I have been given of Jesus Christ the right one? Is the essential nature of Deity omniscience, omnipotence and omnipresence? The essential nature of Deity is holiness, and the power of God is proved in His becoming a Baby. That is the staggering proposition the Bible gives— God became the weakest thing we know. What does Jesus Christ say about Himself? He claims to be equal with God—"He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." The Christian revelation is not that Jesus Christ represents God to me, but that He is God. If Jesus Christ is not God, then we have no God. I am an agnostic; that is why I am a Christian. I could not find out anything about God, all I know about Him I accepted in the revelation given by Jesus Christ. I know no other God than Jesus Christ.

Jesus Christ is a Fact; He is the most honourable and the holiest Man, and two things necessarily follow—first, He is the least likely to be deceived about Himself, second, He is least likely to deceive anyone else. He said, "God will give the very disposition that is Mine to you, if you ask Him." Had He any right to say it—to say God would give me the disposition that ruled Him if I asked? If I say I have nothing in me to prove that Jesus Christ is real, am I willing to ask for the Holy Spirit? If I refuse to try a line Jesus Christ points out because I do not like it, my mouth is shut as an honest doubter. Let me try it and see if it works. An intellectualist never pushes an issue of will. God comes to any man instanter when he is willing to ask, and he will notice a difference in his actual experience, in his attitude to things, and he will be amazed at the change that has been wrought.

If you feel yourself being riddled and say "I don't know what to believe," go to God on the authority of Jesus Christ and ask Him to give you the Holy Spirit, and experience what the New Testament means by regeneration. It means receiving a new heredity. Jesus Christ never asks anyone to define his position or to understand a creed, but—"Who am I to you?" Has Jesus Christ made any difference at all to me in my actual life? Jesus Christ makes the whole of human destiny depend on a man's relationship to Himself.

The Fact of the Creed and the Doctrines of the Church

A creed means the ordered exposition of the Christian faith, an attempt to explain the faith you have, not the thing that gives you the Christian faith. It is the most mature effort of the human intellect on the inside, not on the outside. The churches make the blunder when they put the creed as the test on the outside, and they produce parrots who mimic the thing.

"You must believe a creed!" A man says, "I cannot, and if it is essential, then I cannot be a Christian." A creed is necessary, but it is not essential. If I am a devotee of a creed, I cannot see God unless He comes along that line.

(a) The Gift of Instructors

And He gave some, apostles; . . . and some, pastors and teachers. (Ephesians 4:11)

The test of an instructor in the Christian Church is that he is able to build me up in my intimacy with Jesus Christ, not that he gives me new ideas, but I come away feeling I know a bit more about Jesus Christ. To-day the preacher is tested, not by the building up of saints but on the ground of his personality.

(b) The Growth of Institutions (Acts 6:1-4)

The institutions of Churchianity are not Christianity. An institution is a good thing if it is second; immediately an institution recognises itself it becomes the dominating factor. When the war¹⁴ struck us in civilised Britain we were members of certain churches and institutions, and were called Christians because we held certain doctrines and creeds. The bedrock of membership of the Christian Church is that we know Who Jesus Christ is by a personal revelation of Him by the Spirit of God. The essence of Christianity is not a creed or a doctrine, but an illumination that emancipates me—"I see who Jesus Christ is." It is always a surprise, never an intellectual conception.

(c) The Grasp of Intellect

Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear. (1 Peter 3:15)

Peter does not say "give an explanation," but "a reason of the hope that is in you"—be ready to say what you base your hope on. Faith is deliberate confidence in the character of God Whose ways you cannot understand at the time. "I don't know why God allows what He does, but I will stick to my faith in His character no matter how contradictory things look." Faith is not a conscious thing, it springs from a personal relationship and is the unconscious result of believing someone. My faith is manifested in what I do, and I am able to explain slowly where I put my confidence. The faith that swallows is not faith, but credulity or fatalism. I have to get a grasp of the thing in my intellect, but that is second, not first.

Paul puts everything down to the words of Jesus Christ; if He is not what He claims, there is nothing in religion, it is pure fiction. If, however, Jesus Christ is not a humbug, and not a dreamer, but what He claims to be, then Christianity is the grandest fact that ever was introduced to any man.

VESTED INTERESTS OF THE FLESH

But ye are not . . . , if so be . . . (Romans 8:9)

When we are born from above (RV mg) the dominating spirit in us is the Spirit of God; the mind of the flesh is self-realisation, and the first thing that happens in a man's conscious spiritual life is a divorce between the two. The initial experience is a conflict on the inside. "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would" (Galatians 5:17).

Dominant Interest versus Interesting Details

For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. (Romans 8:2)

We can estimate our life on the spiritual line by our dominant interest. How do we know what is our dominant interest? It is not the thing that occupies most time. The dominating interest is a peculiarly personal one, viz., the thing that is really fundamentally ours in a crisis. In sorrow or joy we reveal our dominating interest. We are taken up with interesting details; Jesus Christ was not. His insulation was on the inside, not the outside; His dominating interest was hid with God. His kingdom was on the inside, consequently He took the ordinary social life of His time in a most unobtrusive way. His life externally was oblivious of details, He spent His time with publicans and sinners and did the things that were apparently unreligious. But one thing He never did—He never contaminated His inner kingdom.

God may be dealing with you on the line of considering the lilies, He is causing you to take deeper root and meanwhile you do not bear flowers. For a time your experience is—"What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light." The only ones who knew who Jesus was and what He came to do, were a handful of fishermen. After He had died and risen again, He distinctly told them to wait in Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high. According to ordinary reason they would have said, "That is absurd, this is not the time to wait; we are the only ones who know these things, we ought to be proclaiming the truth." Jesus said: "Tarry... until..."

Don't get impatient with yourself; your dominating interest is taking deeper root. In all probability in your time of active service you were living from hand to mouth on spooned meat, you nourished your life by the interesting details of religious life, you had no nutritious root, and your work proved to be an elaborate way of evading concentration on God. There are far more people interested in consecration than concentration. It is easier to fuss around at work than to worship; easier to pay attention to details, to say our prayers or conduct a meeting, than to concentrate on God. Has God put you on the shelf deliberately? Why cannot He be glorified by a man in the dust as well as in the sunshine? We are not here to tell God what to do with us, but to let Him use us as He chooses. Remember, God's main concern is that we are more interested in Him than in work for Him. Once you are rooted and grounded in Christ the greatest thing you can do is to be. Don't try and be useful; be yourself and God will use you to further His ends.

Denominating Inspiration versus Individual Desire

For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit. (Romans 8:5)

A denominating inspiration is a distinct expression of the character. There are all sorts and conditions of inspirations which come to a man's life. For instance, in St. Matthew 16:16–25 it is recorded that Peter had two inspirations, one was from God and the other from Satan, but he did not know where either came from until they denominated themselves. Jesus said of one: "This is the voice of God"; of the other: "This is the voice of Satan." The denominating inspiration that is Christian has the characteristics of the Holy Spirit. Jesus said the Holy Spirit would glorify Him, "and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." The Holy Spirit does not talk from or about Himself. When a person does extraordinary things and says, "God told me to do them," it may have been an inspiration, but its denomination had not the characteristic of Jesus Christ. The character of Jesus Christ is the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and holiness is transfigured morality. People are inspired to do the wildest things and have no control over the inspiration. The inspiration of the Spirit of God denominates itself at once. If you are impulsively led to do a thing, examine it and see what it means. Has it the characteristics of Jesus Christ? "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."

Pure Worship versus Power of Will

Which things have indeed a shew of wisdom in will worship . . . (Colossians 2:23)

If we desire self-glorification we can have inspirations which have not the denomination of Jesus Christ. Worship is giving to God the best He has given us, and He makes it His and ours for ever. What is the best God has given you? Your right to yourself. "Now," He says, "sacrifice that to Me." If you do, He will make it yours and His for ever. If you do not, it will spell death to you. That is the meaning of Abraham's offering of Isaac. Isaac was the gift of God to Abraham, but God said, "Offer him . . . for a burnt offering." Abraham obeyed, and in the end received the illumination of true sacrifice and true worship of God. The best I have is my claim to my right to myself, my body. If I am born again of the Spirit of God, I will give up that body to Jesus Christ. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service" (Romans 12:1).

The power of will is a different thing entirely. It says, "I see that on the line of honesty being the best policy, being a Christian is rather a good thing"—a dastardly thing to believe or say. Individual desires may smatter of the right thing, but if they have not the dominating inspiration of the Spirit of God they are dead. That is why Jesus said to the Scribes and Pharisees, "Woe unto you, . . . for ye are like unto whited sepulchres"; and to His disciples, "Do not ye after their works: for they say, and do not." There is always a twist about everyone of us until we get the dominating inspiration of the Spirit of God. It makes us condemn the sins we are not inclined to while we make any amount of excuses for those we have a mind to, and they may be ten times worse. If we are inspired by the Spirit of God our lives are lived unobtrusively; we do not take the attitude of ascetics, but live perfectly natural lives in which the dominating interest is God.

Dwelling Identification versus Inevitable Death

But ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His. (Romans 8:9)

Our true life is not intellect or morality or bodily eating and drinking; our true life is our relationship to Jesus Christ. If once we recognise that and take care to be identified with Him in the crises of life, God will look after all the rest. If we try to draw our inspiration from elsewhere we will die in the attempt.

New Creation versus Consecrating Nature

Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. (2 Corinthians 5:17)

When we are indwelt by the Spirit of Christ we are in a new creation (RV mg). A man in love and a man convicted of sin are in the same external world, but in totally different creations. Both may be in the desert, but one has a disposition which makes him interpret the desert as a desolating piece of God's territory, while to the other the desert literally blossoms as the rose. The disposition of the one is mad, he sees no light in the sun, no sweetness in anything; his ruling disposition is one of misery, while to the other—

Consecrating natural gifts is popular but a snare. "I have the gift of a voice and I will consecrate it to God and sing 'Always, only, for my King." If a man or woman is devoted to God, they can sing anything with the blessing of God; but if they are not right they may sing "Take my life," and serve the devil in doing it. It is not the external things that tell, but the ruling disposition. There is no indication in God's Word that we should consecrate natural gifts, although we find many such indications in hymns. The only thing we can consecrate is our bodies. If we consecrate them to God, He takes them.

Immediately consecration is taken on the other line, the indwelling identification is not with Jesus Christ but with ourselves, which spells death. If we have the dwelling identification with Jesus Christ, then we are alive, and more and more alive. In the Christian life the saint is ever young; amazingly and boisterously young, certain that everything is all right. A young Christian is remarkably full of impulse and delight, because he realises the salvation of God; but this is the real gaiety of knowing that we may cast all our cares on Him and that He careth for us. This is the greatest indication of our identification with Jesus Christ.

INTEREST AND IDENTIFICATION

We did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted. But He was wounded for our transgressions ... and the Lord hath made to light on Him the iniquity of us all. (Isaiah 53:4–6 RV mg)

Immediately we face Jesus Christ two issues reveal themselves: first, the issue of interest, second, the issue of identification. Which issue are we caught up with? "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God" (Hebrews 6:1).

Interest

"And sitting down they watched Him there" (Matthew 27:36). The name of those interested is legion.

Thank God for interest; the fascination of our Lord Jesus Christ is on the interested, and by pious performances and personal penances, and seasons of waiting on God, they sit and watch Him there, dissolved in mists of sentiment and self-depreciating conventions. It is a gracious state to be in, as an introductory stage, but a place of imminent peril to remain in.

From positions of sitting in solemn silence, this stage of interest may reach a development like that indicated in Mark 15:39—"The centurion, which stood . . . , saw . . . , said, Truly this man was the Son of God." The attitude has changed to a standing, and speculative statements are the result. Our Lord is inferred to be a sublime martyr, good beyond any goodness of man or woman yet witnessed on this earth. His life and ideals were so far beyond His time and age that all the reward they gave Him was to crucify Him. "Truly this man was the Son of God." He is stated to be from this stage of standing interest, the very first of all martyrs, of all prophets, of all priests.

There is still another development of the issue of interest and that is indicated in John 1:38–39—"Rabbi, . . . where dwellest Thou? He saith unto them, Come and see. They came and saw . . . , and abode with Him that day." This may represent the sympathetic souls who follow our Lord Jesus Christ out of the natural affinity of their natural hearts. They "follow His steps" just as the disciples did in the days of His flesh, growing more and more perplexed at His teaching, more and more strained in their comprehension; becoming overwhelmed with their own sorrow in Gethsemane till they all forsook Him, and fled, and He went alone to His place for us—the Cross.

So many abide with Him "that day"—the day of natural devotion and interest; honest, earnest souls whose sense of the heroic, like Peter, or of the holy, like John, and the honest, like Thomas, has made them leave all and follow Him, but only to heartbreak and faltering; slowly but surely they break for retreat and return to their own (see John 16:32). All around us are these sad, spirituelle people wandering and wondering, too fascinated by our Lord Jesus Christ to turn again willingly to the "beggarly elements" of the world; all the pleasures of sin are not possible because of their interest in Him.

This inward disaster and unsatisfactoriness they scarcely dare confess to themselves, let alone to others. Where have they failed? Are you there, reader? Then you are on the way of the Cross. You must go to the Cross. Read John 20:22 and couple it with Luke 11:13, and then as a destitute soul receive the gift of the Holy Spirit on the ground of what Jesus did on the Cross, and He will identify His life with yours. "I will not leave you desolate: I come unto you" (John 14:18 RV).

Intermediate

And they stood still, looking sad. . . . And they said unto Him, . . . But we hoped. . . . Yea and beside all this, . . . Moreover certain women of our company amazed us. . . . But Him they saw not. (Luke 24:17–24 RV)

The literature produced by the interested is most prolific and enervating. This literature may deal with the statements of Jesus Christ before His Cross, and strange and fantastic are the doctrines that are woven, and no wonder, as the only exegete of our Lord's Word and doctrines is the Holy Spirit, and He is not given to any man who is blind to the Atonement of the Cross. The Holy Spirit is a gift, remission of sins is a gift, eternal life is a gift, on the ground of the Cross of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Ignore that, and life is a wayless wilderness, where all our ideals fade and falter, leaving us only a grey, uncertain outlook, gathering to an eternal night.

The literature of the unregenerated intellect in a final analysis ends where Matthew Arnold's¹⁵ words place it.

Thou waitest for the spark from heaven! and we, Light half-believers of our casual creeds, Who never deeply felt, nor clearly willed, Whose insight never has borne fruit in deeds, Whose vague resolves never have been fulfilled; For whom each year we see Breeds new beginnings, disappointments new; Who hesitate and falter life away, And lose to-morrow the ground won today—Ah! do not we, wanderer, await it too?

How one's whole being yearns to get such men and women to see that our Lord Jesus Christ by the gift of His Spirit in mighty regeneration, ends this night of sorrow. Reader, if your counterpart is in any of the sentiments already expressed, seek God now on the merits of the Cross, and ask Him for the gift of the Holy Spirit, and receive Him in faith.

Identification

I have been crucified with Christ, . . . and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, Who loved me, and gave Himself up for me. (Galatians 2:20 RV)

What is imperatively needed is that emotional impressionisms and intellectual and moral interest be violently made by each individual into a moral verdict against our self-interest, our right to ourselves, determinedly letting go of all and signing the death warrant of the disposition of sin in us.

Paul says, "I have been crucified with Christ"; not "I have determined to imitate Him," or "I endeavour to follow Him," but, "I have been identified with Him." This is the point of vital godliness—the individual deciding, something after this manner: "My God, I should be there on that bitter cross."

My sin, my sins, my Saviour, How sad on Thee they fall.

All that Jesus Christ wrought for us is worked in us whenever we come to such a violent moral decision and act on it, for this is the free committing that gives the Spirit of God His chance to impart the mighty substituted holiness of God to us.

"I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me." The individual remains, but the mainspring, the ruling disposition, is radically different; the same human body remains, but the old Satanic right to myself is gone. A lamp takes up very little room, but its burning and shining light streams far and penetrates wide, consumed in a glorious effulgence by the indwelling light. No wonder the Scriptures exclaim: "our God is a consuming fire." "Wherefore, if any man is in Christ, there is a new creation" (RV mg), and, "we have this treasure in earthen vessels."

"The life which I now live"—not the life which I long to live or pray to live, but which I live, the life which is seen in my mortal flesh, "I live by the faith of the Son of God."

This is not Paul's faith in the Son of God, but the faith that the Son of God has imparted to him. This is no longer faith in faith, but faith that has overleapt all self-conscious bounds and is the identical faith of the Son of God (see 1 Peter 1:8).

SELF-REALISATION V. CHRIST-REALISATION

Matthew 16:24

Self-realisation is a modern phrase—"Be moral, be religious, be upright in order that you may realise yourself." Nothing blinds the mind to the claims of Jesus Christ more effectually than a good, cleanliving, upright life based on self-realisation (see 2 Corinthians 4:3–4). The issue with us to-day is not with external sins, but with the ideal of self-realisation, because Jesus Christ reveals that that ideal will divide clean asunder from Him. If we are going to be His disciples our ideal must be Christ-realisation.

The Desire

If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself. . .

There is no man awake to life but feels the attraction of Jesus Christ. There He stands, and all men are attracted to Him, whether or not they accept statements about His Deity or theories about the Atonement. What is your desire? Is it to be a fine, sterling, moral, upright character? A grand and noble desire; but watch how Jesus Christ sifts it. Two of the early disciples had the desire to follow Jesus, it was the consuming passion of their lives to come after Jesus, and when He asked them if they were able to drink of His cup and be baptised with His baptism, they said, "We are able." They were not conceited or proud, they were devout, humble-minded men, but they were perfectly ignorant about themselves. There are many people today who say, "Yes, Lord, I'll go with Thee all the way." But there are conditions: "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself." What is the meaning of these words from the lips of Jesus? He is not teaching us to deny one part of ourselves in order to benefit another part of ourselves, which is what self-denial has come to mean. The full force of our Lord's words is-"let him deny his right to himself; let him give up his right to himself to Me." Jesus laid down that condition to a clean-living, sterling young man of His day, with what result? His countenance was sad, and he went away grieved; for he had great possessions. "If any man will come after Me," said Jesus, "the condition is that he must leave something behind," viz. his right to himself. Is Jesus Christ worth it, or am I one of those who accept His salvation but thoroughly object to giving up my right to myself to Him?

The Devotion

and take up his cross . . .

There is a difference between devotion to principles and devotion to a person. Hundreds of people to-day are devoting themselves to phases of truth, to causes. Jesus Christ never asks us to devote ourselves to a cause or a creed; He asks us to devote ourselves to Him, to sign away the right to ourselves and yield to Him absolutely, and take up that cross daily. The cross Jesus asks us to take up cannot be suffering for conviction's sake, because a man will suffer for conviction's sake whether he is a Christian or not. Neither can it be suffering for conscience' sake, because a man will go to martyrdom for his principles without having one spark of the grace of God in his heart. Paul says, "Though I give my body to be burned, and have not [love], it profiteth me nothing." What then is our cross? Our cross is something that comes only with the peculiar relationship of a disciple to Jesus. It is the sign that we have denied our right to ourselves and are determined to manifest that we are no longer our own, we have given away for ever our right to ourselves to Jesus Christ.

The characteristic of the cross we carry daily is that we have been "crucified with Christ." Galatians 2:20 does not refer merely to the fact that our "old man" has been crucified with Christ; it refers to the glorious liberty we have of sacrificing ourselves for Jesus Christ every day we live. What is sacrifice? Giving back to God the best I have in order that He may make it an eternal possession of His and mine for ever.

But something must happen first. The meaning of salvation and sanctification is not only the removal of the wrong disposition, but the radical alteration of identity. Paul says that his destiny is no longer selfrealisation, but Christ-identity: I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me. We need to remember that we cannot train ourselves to be Christians; we cannot discipline ourselves to be saints; we cannot bend ourselves to the will of God: we have to be broken to the will of God. There must be a break with the dominant ruler. We may be clean and upright and religious, we may be Christian workers and have been mightily used of God; but if the bedrock of self-realisation has not been blasted out by our own free choice at the Cross of Christ, shipwreck is the only thing in the end. We enter into the Kingdom of God through the Cross of Jesus Christ, and self-realisation cannot get through with us, it must be left outside. We must be broken from selfrealisation, immediately that point is reached the reality of the supernatural identification with the death of Jesus Christ takes place, and the witness of the Spirit is unmistakable—"I have been crucified with Christ" (RV).

Jesus Christ can take the man who has been broken by sin and twisted with wrongdoing and can reinstate him, not as an angel, thank God, but as a man, and present him before the throne of God without blemish, through the sheer omnipotence of His Atonement.

The Direction

... and follow Me.

We must not dictate to Jesus as to where we are going to serve Him. There is a theory abroad to-day that we have to consecrate our gifts to God. We cannot, they are not ours to consecrate; every gift we have has been given to us. Jesus Christ does not take my gifts and use them; He takes me and turns me right about face, and realises Himself in me for His glory. The one dominant note in the life of a disciple is—

Jesus only, Jesus ever, Jesus all in all I see.

There is no devotion to principles or to a cause there; nothing but overwhelming, absorbing love to the Person of Jesus Christ.

"If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me."

God grant we may answer—
I have made my choice for ever,
I will walk with Christ my Lord;
Naught from Him my soul shall sever
While I'm trusting in His word.
I the lonely way have taken,
Rough and toilsome though it be,
And although despised, forsaken,
Jesus, I'll go through with Thee.

WHICH?

Address given at the annual Autumnal Gathering of the League of Prayer in Caxton Hall, London, November 5, 1913

But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. (Galatians 6:14)

God or Sin

God or sin must die in me. The one elementary Bible truth we are in danger of forgetting is that the Gospel of God is addressed to men as sinners, and nothing else. In tracing the experimental line of Church history one notices a significant thing—whenever a voice has been raised, like John Wesley's, on behalf of God's great power to deliver from sin, instantly a reacting wave of piety occurs, which takes the form of devotion and sentimental religious activity while the real message of the Gospel is lost by obliteration. After John Wesley's teaching a protest was lodged strongly against his emphasis on a second definite work of grace, and the consequence was a revival of that wave of sentimental higher life not rooted and grounded in a changed life by God's grace.

Christ or Barabbas

And they crucified Him. (Matthew 27:35)

Christ versus Barabbas—we have to choose. For a long while we can ignore sin and dwell on the fact that God is our Father, but if we mean by that that He forgives sin because He is loving, we make the Atonement a huge blunder and Calvary a mistake. What does Barabbas represent? The expedient to Jesus Christ, something less radical, less emphatic, less against what we want. What is the "Barabbas" in your life and mine? Shall we give our vote for Christ or Barabbas to be crucified? Most of us have voted at one time in our history with God against Christ. The choice is always put when we are in the ascendant, when we are not being over-swayed either by Christ or Barabbas, but when we are in full possession of our powers; then God's providence puts the choice suddenly in front of us—Christ or Barabbas?

Christ or the Old Man

Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him. . . . (Romans 6:6)

What is our "old man"? The disposition of sin in us discovered by the incoming Spirit of God when we are born from above (RV mg). A Christian experiencing the first work of God's regenerating grace begins to discern this disposition, and the issue is clear that that old disposition must be crucified or the Spirit of Christ must be crucified, the two cannot remain long together. Paul states triumphantly, "knowing this, that our old man was crucified with Him . . . (RV). It was not a divine anticipation on the part of the Apostle Paul, it was a very radical, definite experience. Are those of us who have experienced God's regenerating grace prepared to go the whole length with Jesus Christ? Are we prepared to let the Holy Spirit search us until we know what the disposition of sin is, the thing that rules and works its own way, that lusts against the Spirit of God that is in us? Will we agree with God's verdict that that disposition should be identified with the death of Jesus? If so, then thank God, it will be as dead in us as the dead Christ was as a crucified body. Beware of going on the line of—I am reckoning myself to be "dead indeed unto sin"—unless you have been through the radical issue of will with God. Are we willing to be so identified with the death of Jesus Christ that we know with no apology that our old man was crucified with Him?

Christ or I

I have been crucified with Christ; yet I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me. (Galatians 2:20 RV)

Christ or "I"? I mean the religious "I," the spiritual "I," the pride of spiritual possession. Have we learned the glorious, unmistakable privilege of being crucified with Christ until all that is left is Christ's flesh and Christ's blood in our flesh and in our blood where once the world, the flesh and the devil had their way? These are tremendous things to say in the light of the way the modern mind looks at things, but not too tremendous in the light of the Gospel.

Christ or the World

... by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. (Galatians 6:14)

What is the world? The set of people with the ambitions, religious or otherwise, that are not identified with the Lord Jesus Christ. Paul says, "I am crucified to that world, and that world is crucified to me." When the world comes before us with its fascination and its power, it finds us dead to it, if we have agreed with God on His judgement about sin and the world.

These are not only statements made in God's Book, they are meant to be real, definite experiences in our lives. If the issue is put before you in your own life just now—Barabbas or Christ? you can no longer debate the question, you must decide; but let me plead with you to decide for Christ and have "Barabbas" crucified.

If you have been born from above and the Spirit of God is discerning in you the "old man," the disposition of sin, then make it an issue of will with Him, tell Him that you want to be identified with the death of Christ until you know that your "old man" is crucified with Christ. If you have gone through that issue of will, then stand clear for Christ and Christ only, until "I have been crucified with Christ" is not a sentiment, but a sensible fact in daily living, walk and conversation, stamped with the otherworldliness of the life hid with Christ in God.

THE ONE RIGHT THING TO BE

Believe also in Me. (John 14:1)

We do not now use the old evangelical phrase "a believer," we are apt to think we have something better, but we cannot have. "A believer in Jesus Christ" is a phrase that embraces the whole of Christianity. The history of the word is interesting, but what will hold our attention now by the aid of the Holy Spirit is the vital experimental meaning of the phrase "a believer in Jesus Christ."

To believe in Jesus means much more than the experience of salvation in any form, it entails a mental and moral commitment to our Lord Jesus Christ's view of God and man, of sin and the devil, and of the Scriptures.

Belief and the Scriptures

And they are they which testify of Me. (John 5:39)

For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed Me: for he wrote of Me. (John 5:46)

How much intellectual impertinence there is to-day among many Christians relative to the Scriptures, because they forget that to "believe also" in Jesus means that they are committed beforehand to His attitude to the Bible. He said that He was the context of the Scriptures, "... they are they which testify of Me." We hear much about "key words" to the Scriptures, but there is only one "key word" to the Scriptures for a believer, and that is our Lord Jesus Christ Himself. All the intellectual arrogance about the Bible is a clear proof of disbelief in Jesus. How many Sunday school teachers to-day believe as Jesus believed in the Old Testament? How many have succumbed to the insolence of intellectual partisanship about the Person of our Lord and His limitations, and say airily, "Of course, there is no such thing as demon possession or hell, and no such being as the devil." To "believe also" in Jesus means that we submit our intelligence to Him as He submitted His intelligence to His Father. This does not mean that we do not exercise our reason, but it does mean that we exercise it in submission to Reason Incarnate. Beware of interpreters of the Scriptures who take any other context than our Lord Jesus Christ.

Belief and the Saviour

Dost thou believe on the Son of God? (John 9:35)

The number of insidious and beautiful writers and speakers to-day whose final net result will be found to be anti-Christ, is truly alarming. The writers I mean are those who examine psychologically the Person of our Lord on the ground of facts discoverable in unregenerate human consciousness, and effectually dissolve away the Person of Jesus Christ so marvellously revealed in the New Testament. John writes of this very spirit of mind and emphasises it as anti-Christ-"Every spirit which confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: and every spirit which annulleth Jesus [RV mg] is not of God" (1 John 4:2–3). To believe our Lord's consciousness about Himself commits us to accept Him as God's last endless Word. That does not mean that God is not still speaking, but it does mean that He is not saying anything different from "This is My beloved Son: hear Him.

To be a believer in Jesus Christ means that we realise that what Jesus said to Thomas is true—"I am the way, the truth, and the life," not the road we leave behind as we travel, but the Way itself. By believing, we enter into that rest of peace, holiness and eternal life. Let us maintain ourselves abiding in Him.

Belief and the Spirit

And when He is come, He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgement: of sin, because they believe not on Me. (John 16:8–9)

Sin is not measured by a creed or a constitution or a society, but by a Person. The Gospels were not written to prove anything, they were written to confirm in belief those who were already Christians by means of the death and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, and their theological meaning. The Holy Spirit in the mighty phases of initial quickening in spiritual regeneration (see John 20:22; Luke 11:13) and of the baptism (see Acts 1:8), does one thing only, viz. glorify Jesus. A great and glorious fact—to believe in Jesus Christ is to receive God, Who is described to the believer as "eternal life." Eternal life is not a gift from God, but the gift of God, that is, God Himself (see John 6:47; 17:2–3; Romans 6:23).

Belief in Service

He that believeth on Me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. (John 7:38)

How anxious we are to serve God and our fellow men to-day! Jesus Our Lord says we must pay attention to the Source—belief in Him, and He will look after the outflow. He has promised that there shall be "rivers of living water," but we must not look at the outflow, nor rejoice in successful service. "Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven" (Luke 10:20). The source, belief in Jesus, is the thing to heed; and through that famous, for-ever binding commission, believers in Jesus are to make disciples—"Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations." Are we doing it?

The great Pentecostal phrase, "witnesses unto Me" is the same thing stated for all believers in unforgettable words, witnesses not so much of what Jesus can do, but witnesses unto Him, a delight to His own heart, "... when He shall come to be glorified in His saints."

May God save us from Christian service which is nothing more than the reaction of a disappointed, crushed heart, seeking surcease from sorrow in social service. Christian service is the vital, unconscious result of the life of a believer in Jesus. We have much need to bear in mind Paul's warning, "But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ" (2 Corinthians 11:3).

Pentecost makes bondslaves for Jesus Christ our Lord, not supernatural manifestations that glorify men. The Christian Church should not be a secret society of specialists, but a public manifestation of believers in Jesus.

The one right thing to be is a believer in Jesus.

ARE YOU INDEPENDENT OR IDENTIFIED?

John 21:18

Devotional Following

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdest thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest...

Jesus is not rebuking Peter, He is revealing a characteristic of us all. Peter had given up everything for the Lord, and the Lord was everything to Peter, but he knew nothing whatever about the following that Jesus is referring to. Three years before, Jesus had said "Follow Me," and Peter followed easily, the fascination of Jesus was upon him; then he came to the place where he denied Jesus and his heart broke. Now Jesus says again "Follow thou Me." Peter follows now in the submission of his intelligence, his will, and his whole being. There is no Figure in front save the Lord Jesus Christ.

When we are young in grace we go where we want to go, but a time comes when Jesus says "another shall gird thee," our will and wish is not asked for. This stage of spiritual experience brings us into fellowship with the Spirit of Jesus, for it is written large over His life that "even Christ pleased not Himself." There is a distinct period in our experience when we cease to say—"Lord, show me Thy will," and the realisation begins to dawn that we are God's will, and He can do with us what He likes. We wake up to the knowledge that we have the privilege of giving ourselves over to God's will. It is a question of being yielded to God.

Death Following

... but when thou shalt be old, ... another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not.

When we are young in grace there is a note of independence about our spiritual life-"I don't intend anyone to tell me what to do, I intend to serve God as I choose." It is an independence based on inexperience, an immature fellowship; it lacks the essential of devotion. Some of us remain true to the independent following and never get beyond it; but we are built for God, Himself, not for service for God, and that explains the submissions of life. We can easily escape the submissions if we like to rebel against them, but the Spirit of God will produce the most ghastly humiliation if we do not submit. Since we became disciples of Jesus we cannot be as independent as we used to be. "I do wish Jesus did not expect so much of me." He expects nothing less than absolute oneness with Himself as He was one with the Father. "That they may be one, even as We are one." That is the "hope of His calling" and it is the great light on every problem. "And for their sakes I sanctify Myself" said Jesus. Jesus makes us saints in order that we may sacrifice our saintship to Him, and it is this sacrifice which keeps us one with our Lord.

In the natural world it is a real delight to be faced with risk and danger, and in the spiritual world God gives us the "sporting chance." He will plant us down amongst all kinds of people and give us the amazing joy of proving ourselves "a living sacrifice" in those circumstances. "Thou art My beloved Son; in Thee I am well pleased"; the Father's heart was thrilled with delight at the loyalty of His Son. Is Jesus Christ thrilled with delight at the way we are living a sacrificial life of holiness? The disciple has no programme, only a distinguished passion of devotion to his Lord.

PROCESS OF BELIEF

AFTERNOON ADDRESS GIVEN AT THE ANNUAL AUTUMNAL GATHERING OF THE LEAGUE OF PRAYER IN LONDON, NOVEMBER 1911

But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name. (John 1:12)

According to the New Testament, belief arises from intellectual conviction and goes through moral self-surrender to identification with the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mind Reception

But as many as received Him . . .

What place has the Lord Jesus Christ in your intellectual outlook? Until the Lord Jesus Christ has been received as the highest and only Authority, Bible explanations are beside the mark because they lack the one efficient seal of the Holy Spirit Who is the only interpreter of the Bible revelation, and the Holy Spirit does not seal Bible interpretation to any man who has not accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as the final Authority for his life, for his mind, and for his whole outlook. John 1:12 represents the whole work of an individual soul in relationship to Jesus Christ.

Have I accepted Jesus Christ for my head as well as for my heart? Jesus Christ must be realised and accepted as the Authority as far as man is concerned.

Whether or not we are inside the pale of Christian experience, have we solved the problem of who is the final authority for our intellect? Is Jesus Christ? Is He the finest, the holiest Man that ever lived? If so, then our attitude of mind leads us to the position where we have the privilege of becoming sons of God.

If I have the right mental attitude to Jesus Christ the next step is easy: I will necessarily be led to accept what He says, and when He says, "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" then I will ask and receive.

Will I give a moral surrender to Jesus Christ's authority? If so, the privilege of becoming a child of God will be a moral fact for me because the Holy Spirit will teach me how to apply the Atonement of Jesus Christ to my own life, and how to be identified in obedience to Him with the life of Jesus Christ in the experience of entire sanctification.

Moral Reception

to them gave He power to become the sons of God...

But there is another class of people to whom the practical comes first. It is not the intellectual problem that bothers them but the personal one: conviction of sin, perplexity arising from a wrong disposition. Will you in that condition receive the Lord Jesus Christ as the Way, the Truth, and the Life? If once Jesus Christ is clear to the vision of the heart, everything else is simple. To as many as received Him, to them gave He the privilege (or the right) to become the sons of God.

I accept Him not only as my Authority, I accept Him as my Saviour. I pin my faith implicitly to what He says; and looking to Him in implicit confidence, I ask God to give me the Holy Spirit according to the word of Jesus and receive Him in faith.

Faith means implicit confidence in Jesus, and that requires not intellect only but a moral giving over of myself to Him. How many of us have really received from God the Spirit that ruled Jesus Christ and kept His spirit, soul and body in harmony with God? The Holy Spirit will bring conviction of sin, He will reveal Jesus Christ, and He will bring in the power verse 13 describes—"which were born . . . of God," begotten of God. He will do all that on one condition—that we surrender morally to Jesus Christ.

It is this point of moral surrender that nearly every man "shies off." We sentimentally believe, and believe, and believe, and nothing happens. We pray "Lord, increase our faith," and we try to pump up the faith, but it does not come. What is wrong? The moral surrender has not taken place. Will I surrender from the real centre of my life, and deliberately and wilfully stake my confidence on what Jesus Christ tells me?

Mystic Reception

... even to them that believe on His name.

From intellectual conviction and moral surrender to identification with the very life and joy of Jesus. A great thinker has said, "The seal and end of true conscious life is joy," not pleasure, nor happiness. Jesus Christ said to His disciples, "These things have I spoken unto you, that My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full"—identity with Jesus Christ and with His joy.

What was the joy of the Lord Jesus Christ? His joy was in having completely finished the work His Father gave Him to do; and the same type of joy will be granted to every man and woman who is born of God the Holy Ghost and sanctified, when they fulfil the work God has given them to do. What is that work? To be a saint, a walking, talking, living, practical epistle of what God Almighty can do through the Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ—one in identity with the faith of Jesus, one in identity with the love of Jesus, one in identity with the Spirit of Jesus until we are so one in Him that the high-priestly prayer not only begins to be answered, but is clearly manifest in its answering—"that they may be one, even as We are."

God grant that from intellectual insubordination and moral insubordination and spiritual insubordination we may prove that we are made one with the Lord Jesus Christ by the marvellous gift of the Holy Spirit through the Atonement of Jesus Christ, so that, as Paul says, when our Lord comes He may be "marvelled at in all them that believed."

THE GREAT LIFE

SPOKEN TO BRITISH COMMONWEALTH TROOPS AT ZEITOUN¹⁶ YMCA CAMP NEAR CAIRO, EGYPT. SUNDAY MORNING SERVICE, MAY 13, 1917

... believeth all things. (1 Corinthians 13:7)

It is a great thing to be a believer, but easy to misunderstand what the New Testament means by it. It is not that we believe Jesus Christ can do things, or that we believe in a plan of salvation; it is that we believe Him; whatever happens we will hang in to the fact that He is true. If we say, "I am going to believe He will put things right," we shall lose our confidence when we see things go wrong. We are in danger of putting the cart before the horse and saying a man must believe certain things before he can be a Christian; whereas his beliefs are the result of his being a Christian, not the cause. Our Lord's word "believe" does not refer to an intellectual act, but to a moral act; with our Lord to believe means to commit. "Commit yourself to Me," and it takes a man all he is worth to believe in Jesus Christ.

The Great Life is to believe that Jesus Christ is not a fraud. The biggest fear a man has is never fear for himself but fear that his Hero won't get through; that He won't be able to explain things satisfactorily; for instance, why there should be war and disease. The problems of life get hold of a man and make it difficult for him to know whether in the face of these things he really is confident in Jesus Christ. The attitude of a believer must be, "Things do look black, but I believe Him; and when the whole thing is told I am confident my belief will be justified and God will be revealed as a God of love and justice." It does not mean that we won't have problems, but it does mean that our problems will never come in between us and our faith in Him. "Lord, I don't understand this, but I am certain that there will be an explanation, and in the meantime I put it on one side." Our faith is in a Person Who is not deceived in anything He says or in the way He looks at things. Christianity is personal, passionate devotion to Jesus Christ as God manifest in the flesh.

The Genesis of the Great Life

Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent. (John 6:29)

The Great Life is begun when we believe, belief cannot be pumped up. If we in our hearts believe in Jesus Christ, not about Him, but in Him, "He is all right anyway," it is an evidence that God is at work in our souls. "Abraham believed God" (Galatians 3:6). "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him" (Job 13:15). Every abortion and wrongdoing in spiritual life begins when we cease believing in Jesus Christ. If we believe in a state of mind He produces in us, we will be disappointed, because circumstances will come in our lives when these works of Jesus Christ are shadowed over; but if we believe in Him, no matter how dark the passage is we shall be carried right through, and when the crisis is passed our souls will have been built up into a stronger attitude towards Him.

What counts in a man's life is the disposition that rules him. When God begins His work in us He does not make a mighty difference in our external lives, but He shifts the centre of our confidence; instead of relying on ourselves and other people, we rely on God, and are kept in perfect peace. We all know the difference it makes if we have someone who believes in us and in whom we believe, there is no possibility of being crushed. The Great Life is not that we believe for something, but that when we are up against things in circumstances or in our own disposition, we stake our all on Jesus Christ's honour. If we have faith only in what we experience of salvation, we will get depressed and morbid; but to be a believer in Jesus Christ is to have an irrepressible belief and a life of uncrushable gaiety.

The Growth of the Great Life

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in Me. (John 14:1)

Jesus Christ is talking here about what no man knows but Himself viz. the day after death, and He says, "Don't be troubled about it." We grow in this Great Life by making room for Jesus Christ in our outlook on everything. Before you seal your opinion on any matter, find out what He has said about it—about God, about life, about death. Men discuss matters of heaven and hell, of life and death, and leave Jesus Christ out altogether; He says, "Before you finally seal your mind, Believe also in Me." If the bit we do know about Jesus Christ is so full of light, why cannot we leave the matters of heaven and hell, of life and death, in His hand and stake our confidence in Him? "God is light," and one day everything will be seen in that light. "I am the light of the world: he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." To be a believer in Jesus Christ means we are committed to His way of looking at everything, not that we are open to discuss what people say He taught; that is the way difficulties have arisen with regard to Christian faith. Theology ought to be discussed; it does not follow, however, that our faith is assailed, but that in the meantime we stake our all in Jesus Christ. The great lodestar of our life is—"I believe in Jesus Christ, and in everything on which I form an opinion I make room for Him and find out His attitude."

The Grandeur of the Great Life

Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on Me hath everlasting life. (John 6:47)

We often hear it put as if God gave us a present called "eternal life." What Jesus Christ says is, "he that committeth himself to Me hath eternal life," i.e., the life that was characteristic of Himself (see John 17:3; Romans 6:23; 1 John 5:11). If we commit ourselves to Jesus He says, "Stake your all on Me and I will see you through, don't worry about anything but your relationship to Me." "The Best is yet to be." We shall yet see everything brought into subjection to the one in Whom we believe.

Watch carefully how you begin to get away from believing in Jesus. When we mistake darkness for sin, or when we get into moods and hang fire, we choke the work of God in us. "This is the work of God," not that you believe you are turned into a child of God, but "that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent." What does it matter what happens to us? The thought of ourselves ought never to come in at all! The one thing that tells is the great fundamental rock: "Believe also in Me." Many know a good deal about salvation, but not much about this intense patience of "hanging in" in perfect certainty to the fact that what Jesus Christ says is true.

". . . believeth all things." That is the greatest courtesy in the whole of human life. If we believe in Jesus Christ we will determine to make our relationship to men what Jesus Christ's was to us. He believed that He could save every man irrespective of his condition. Do we believe He can? or do we get small and sceptical and cynical about some men? If we do, we are hindering them from being right. There are some people we feel the better for meeting, their ruling disposition is a generous one, they are not frost-bitten and mean; they are not necessarily good, but they have hold of the right relationship to things. That is true in the spiritual world; when we meet a man or woman who believes in Jesus Christ, we feel we can tell them anything. The thing for us to examine is: Are we really living the Great Life, or are we living in a bandbox¹⁷ with a priggish notion that Jesus Christ is tied up in some formula? Jesus Christ is God manifest in the flesh, and He says, "This is the work of God that you believe in Me." The full growth in the Great Life is to "Believe also in Me" about everything. "Make room for Me, especially in matters where you cannot go; bring the child's mind to what I have said about them." We want to be our own Lord and master, to get everything solved for ourselves, Jesus says, "Look unto Me, and be ye saved." To commit his life and reasoning to Jesus Christ's attitude takes a man right out of himself and into Jesus Christ. This is not rational, it is redemptive. How many saw Jesus Christ as the Son of God? He was nothing more than a Carpenter to the majority. It comes with a rush of revelation, "I see Who He is!" and He gives us the life which is inherent in Himself.

Many Christians get depressed over mean, ¹⁸ despicable things they find in themselves; I feel glad, because it is a justification of what Jesus said, "Without Me ye can do nothing." If we stake our all in Him, He will see us through as Saviour or as Deliverer just where we need Him. It is a great thing to have a God big enough to believe in. To believe in a God whom "to be God is not fit" makes a man immoral. The God revealed in Jesus Christ is grand enough for every problem of life. "I am the way, the truth, and the life." Let us carry away the Great Life of joy and simplicity.

IRRESISTIBLE DISCIPLESHIP

TALK GIVEN AT SUNDAY WORSHIP SERVICE, FAMILY AND YMCA WORKERS, ZEITOUN CAMP NEAR CAIRO, EGYPT. JUNE 18, 1916

Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong. (1 Corinthians 16:13)

By a "disciple" we mean one who continues to be concentrated on our Lord. Concentration is of much more value than consecration, because consecration is apt to end in mere religious sentiment. Concentration is the gist of the Sermon on the Mount—"Be carefully careless about everything saving your relationship to Me," our Lord says.

"Irresistible," not in the sense of being exquisitely charming, or of being irresistible in war, but irresistible in the sense of not being deflected.

The Practice of Alert Detachment Watch ye . . .

There is a detachment that is fanatical. Detachment without discretion is delusive, so when the New Testament uses the term "watch" (and the New Testament has a great deal to say about watching), it means an alert detachment which comes from a discreet understanding of the Lord's will (see Romans 12:1–2).

One continually finds an encroachment of beliefs and of attachment to things which is so much spiritual overloading. Every now and again the Spirit of God calls on us to take a spiritual stock-taking in order to see what beliefs we can do without. The things our Lord asks us to believe are remarkably few, and John 14:1 seems to sum them up—"Ye believe in God, believe also in Me." We have to keep ourselves alertly detached from everything that would encroach on that belief; we all have intellectual and affectionate affinities that keep us detached from Jesus Christ instead of attached to Him. We have to maintain an alert spiritual fighting trim.

"Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us" (Hebrews 12:1). This does not refer to indwelling sin, but to the spirit of the age, literally—the sin "which doth closely cling to us," or "which is admired of many," the thing that hinders us in running and keeps us attached. We have to see that we run alertly and run watching, run with patience, continually readjusting ourselves and determinedly holding loosely to all other things. Detachment without discretion leads us astray, but detachment with the discretion that is able to discern the Lord's will in daily occurrences will make us irresistible disciples. Our Lord said to His disciples, "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem." There are a great many things that are quite legitimate, but if they are not on our way to Jerusalem, we do not do them.

We hear a great deal about decision of character; in irresistible discipleship we have to learn an attentive decisiveness. There is a decisiveness that is destructive, a pig-headed decisiveness that decides without deliberation. "Stand fast in the faith" gives the idea of deliberate attentive decisiveness—"I will take the time to go through the drill in order to understand what it means to stand fast" (cf. Ephesians 6:13). It is a great deal easier to fight than to stand, but Paul says our conflict is not so much a fight as a standing on guard. Our Lord requires us to believe very few things, because the nature of belief is not mathematical, but something that must be tested, and there are a number of insidious things that work against our faith. A famous preacher once said he found in his actual circumstances he did not believe half so much as he did when he was preaching. He meant he found it difficult to "stand fast in the faith" in daily circumstances.

It is possible to preach and to encourage our own souls and to appear to have a very strong faith, while in actual circumstances we do not stand fast at all, but rather prove what Herbert Spencer said to be true. Herbert Spencer said people were trained to think like pagans six days a week and like Christians the remaining day; consequently in the actual things of life we decide as pagans, not as Christians at all. The way of irresistible discipleship is to practise not only alert detachment, but also attentive decisiveness; after having deliberated on the relationship of our faith to certain things, we decide. Jesus said that the Holy Spirit would "bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." We hear some word of our Lord's and it sinks into the unconscious mind; then we come into certain circumstances and the Holy Spirit suddenly brings back that word to our conscious minds. Are we going to obey our Lord in that particular, or take the ordinary common-sense way of moral decisiveness? Are we going to stand fast in the faith, or take the easier way of decision without deliberation? To think along this line will give the death blow to the dangerous method of making principles out of our Lord's statements. To do that we do not need to maintain a detached life with Him; all we need is, to gain an intellectual grasp of His principles and endeavour to live our life in accordance with them.

We can never tell how we shall have to decide in certain circumstances, but we have to see that we stand fast in the faith. We know what "the faith" is when we have gone through with God in any particular. "The faith" is faith in the Redemption and in the indwelling Spirit of God; faith that God is love, and that He will see after us if we stand steadfast to our confidence in Him. It is easy to stand fast in the big things, but very difficult in the small things. If we do stand fast in faith in Him we shall become irresistible disciples.

quit you like men . . .

When we are children we are impulsive. Impulsiveness grows up with us from childhood's state; we do not quit ourselves like men. If we have been in the habit of discerning the Lord's will and love and have to decide on the spur of the moment, our determination will be comprehending, that is, we shall decide not from the point of view of self-interest, or because of the good of a cause, but entirely from our Lord's point of view.

One of the finest characteristics of a noble humanity is that of mature patience, not that of impulsive action. It is easy to be determined, and the curious thing is that the more small-minded a man is the more easily he makes up his mind. If he cannot see the various sides of a question, he decides by the ox-like quality of obstinacy. Obstinacy simply means—"I will not allow any discernment in this matter; I refuse to be enlightened." We wrongly call this strong-mindedness. Strength of mind is the whole man active, not discernment merely from an individual standpoint. The determination in a disciple is a comprehending one. "For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," says Paul.

The Practice of Actual Dependability

. . . be strong.

We can depend on the man or woman who has been disciplined in character, and we become strong in their strength. When we depend on someone who has had no discipline, we both degenerate. We are always in danger of depending on people who are undisciplined, and the consequence is that in the actual strain of life they break down and we do too. We have to be actually dependable.

When we are young a hurricane or thunderstorm impresses us as being very powerful, yet the strength of a rock is infinitely greater than that of a hurricane. The same is true with regard to discipleship. The strength there is not the strength of activity but the strength of being. Activity may be a disease of weariness, or of degeneration; to be dependable means to be strong in the sense of disciplined reliability. To convey "stayability" is the work of the Spirit of God, not the product of convincing controversy.

These considerations convey the characteristics that the Apostle wanted the Corinthian Christians to develop in themselves. If we keep practising, what we practise becomes our second nature, then in a crisis and in the details of life we shall find that not only will the grace of God stand by us, but also our own nature. Whereas if we refuse to practise, it is not God's grace but our own nature that fails when the crisis comes, because we have not been practising in actual life. We may ask God to help us but He cannot, unless we have made our nature our ally. The practising is ours, not God's. He puts the Holy Spirit into us, He regenerates us, and puts us in contact with all His Divine resources, but He cannot make us walk and decide in the way He wants; we must do that ourselves. Paul says "I do not frustrate [i.e., make void, RV] the grace of God."

ALWAYS NOW

2 Corinthians 6:1–10

Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation. (2 Corinthians 6:2)

"We . . . intreat also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain" (RV). The grace we had yesterday won't do for to-day. "The grace of God"—the overflowing favour of God; we can always reckon it is there to draw on if we don't trust our own merits (see 2 Corinthians 5:18–21).

Conditions of Saintliness in Private Trials

But in everything commending ourselves as ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, . . . (2 Corinthians 6:4 RV)

Our private life is disciplined by the interference of people in our own matters; the people who do not mean to be a trial are a trial; that is where the test for patience comes. Have we failed the grace of God there? Are we saying, "Oh, well, I won't count this time"? It is not feeling the grace of God, it is drawing on it now. Whatever is our particular condition we are sure to have one of these things Paul mentions—afflictions, necessities, distresses. It is not praying to God and asking Him to help us in these things, it is taking the grace of God now. Many of us make prayer the preparation for work, it is never that in the Bible. Christianity is drawing on the overflowing favour of God in the second of trial.

Conditions of Saintliness in Public Tribulations

In stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings. (2 Corinthians 6:5)

These verses are Paul's spiritual diary, they describe the outward hardships which proved the hotbed for the graces of the Spirit—the working together of outward hardships and inward grace. Imprisonments, tumults, labours—these are all things in the external life. "In tumults"—watch a porridge pot boiling and you will know what tumult means; in that condition draw on the grace of God now. Don't say "I will endure it till I can get away and pray"; draw now, it is the most practical thing on earth. Whenever you are going through any tribulation that tears, don't pray about it, but draw on the grace of God now. The exercise of prayer is the work of drawing now.

Conditions of Saintliness in Pure Temperance

In pureness, in knowledge, in long-suffering, in kindness, in the Holy Ghost, in love unfeigned. (2 Corinthians 6:6 RV)

These are the inner characteristics of the temperate life—pureness, knowledge, long-suffering, kindness, love unfeigned. There is no room for extravagant impulse there; you cannot be pure and impulsive, you can be innocent and impulsive, because that is the nature of a child. Purity is something that has been tried and found unspotted. We are always inclined to be intemperate about our religion, it is the last thing for which we learn to draw on the grace of God. In our praying we draw on our memories, on our past experiences, on our present desires. We only learn to draw on the grace of God by pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering. How many of us have to learn that temperance is knowledge? We want to get short cuts to knowledge and because we cannot take them we rush off into intemperate work. Notice the disproportion between the modern disease called Christian work and the one characteristic of the fruit of the Spirit. The craze in everyone's blood nowadays is a disease of intemperate work, external activities.

"In long-suffering"—long-suffering is being drawn out until you can be drawn out no more, and not snapping. God puts His saints into places where they have to exhibit long-suffering. Let circumstances pull and don't give way to any intemperance whatever, but in all these things manifest a drawing on the grace of God that will make you a marvel to yourself and to others.

"In kindness"—be perfectly clear and emphatic with regard to your preaching of God's truth, but amazingly kind in your treatment of people. Some of us have a hard, metallic way of dealing with people which never has the stamp of the Holy Ghost on it. The word of God is "sharper than any two-edged sword" but when you deal with people, deal with them in kindness; remember yourself that you are where you are by the grace of God. Don't make God's word what it is not.

"In the Holy Ghost"—it is not the tones of a man's speech or the passion of a man's personality, it is the pleading power of the Holy Ghost coming through him. "... as though God were intreating by us" (RV): this is the entreaty that is learned at Calvary and made real in the worker by the Holy Ghost.

"In love unfeigned." Love feigned is this: "I love you very much, but . . ." Love unfeigned never thinks or looks at things like that. If love has to give stern rebuke it never prefaces it with remarks like that; the one great thing that moves us is the love of God which has been shed abroad in our hearts, and that love is described in 1 Corinthians 13.

Proclaiming Testimony

In the word of truth, in the power of God, by the armour of righteousness on the right hand and on the left. (2 Corinthians 6:7 RV)

"In the word of truth"—draw on the grace of God for testimony. Not, "Oh, Lord, I am going to give testimony, please help me": draw on the grace of God while you testify, proclaiming the truth in the presence of God. The first motive of testimony is not for the sake of other people but for our own sake; we realise that we have no one but God to stand by us. Always give your testimony in the presence of God, and ever remember God's honour is at stake. "In the word of truth" in our testimony; "in the power of God" working in us, and "by the armour of inthe-rightness" of our public and private life shielding us. You cannot draw on the grace of God for testimony if these three things are not there—the word of God, the power of God, and the consciousness that you are walking in the integrity of that testimony in private, if they are there, then there is an unfaltering certainty. Am I "in the rightness" all round? Testimony frequently stops short because the armour of righteousness is not on the right hand and on the left. Keep drawing on the grace of God, then there will be the power of the proclaimed testimony.

Personal Temperament

By glory and dishonour, by evil report and good report; as deceivers, and yet true. (2 Corinthians 6:8 RV)

Each of these contrasts puts our natural temperament "out of it." Let circumstances bring you where they will, keep drawing on the grace of God. Our temperament is not our disposition, temperament is the tone our nature has taken from the ruling disposition. When we had the disposition of sin our temperament took its tone from that disposition; when God alters the disposition the temperament begins to take its tone from the disposition He puts in, and that disposition is like Jesus Christ's.

Perfect Trustfulness

As unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed. (2 Corinthians 6:9)

"I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound: every where and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need" (Philippians 4:12)—drawing on the grace of God in every conceivable condition. One of the greatest proofs that we are drawing on the grace of God is that we can be humiliated without the slightest trace of anything but the grace of God in us. Draw on the grace of God now, not presently. The one word in the spiritual vocabulary is "NOW."

Poverty Triumphant

As sorrowful, yet alway rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things. (2 Corinthians 6:10)

As we draw on the grace of God He increases voluntary poverty all along the line. Always give the best you have got every time; never think about who you are giving it to, let other people take it or leave it as they choose. Pour out the best you have, and always be poor. Never reserve anything, never be diplomatic and careful about the treasure God gives.

Always now is the secret of the Christian life.

Baffled to Fight Better

Job and the Problem of Suffering Oswald Chambers

INTRODUCTION

Source

These were talks given by Oswald Chambers to soldiers during the evening classes at Zeitoun, March 10–April 4, 1917.

Publication History

- This material was first published as a book in December 1917. It was printed by the Nile Mission Press² in Cairo, and shortly thereafter was published in England.
- Subsequent editions were published in Britain and the US.

In the autumn of 1916, Chambers had just begun his second year as YMCA secretary to British Commonwealth troops at Zeitoun Camp, near Cairo.

For several weeks during the months of October and November, Chambers' personal Bible reading each morning centered in the book of Job. Excerpts from Oswald's personal diary best express the impact of Job on him and his vision of what Job would mean to people after the war.

October 7, 1916: How profoundly in harmony with fundamental life the third chapter of Job is in its actually apparent discord. How many a man and woman could say in deepest anguish—"Wherefore is light given to him that is in [deep] misery, and life unto the bitter in soul?" Deeper and deeper grows the conviction that Tragedy is the basis of things and Redemption the way out.

- October 8, 1916: The fourth and fifth chapters of Job make most stately reading. The searching of vv. 3–6, chap. 4, read with Romans 2:21–24, is a most beneficial thing for those of us who are always talking to others. It is easy to become an intolerable prig, a dogmatic superior person, without knowing it.
- October 10, 1916: Job 6 is a fine full expression to multitudes in the valley of agony and sorrow just now. I believe of all the books of consolation none will be so great or grand as the Book of Job because an expression to sorrow, as to joy, means a great rising to face life again as its master.
- October 14, 1916: Job . . . as I read him this morning . . . is not affected or sentimental, but gripped by the real and appalling agony of mystery and pain, free from spite, and yet so honest in expression of pain and distress.
- October 28, 1916: Job 23 is surely the classic of deep woe rolling out across the very universe: "Oh that I knew where I might find Him!" All through the Book of Job there is a heartbreaking devotion to God in the midst of inexplicable complexity of sorrow. I feel growingly sure that Job is the Book of consolation for the sorrowtossed and bereaved and broken by the war, for not only is the voice of human suffering expressed here better than anywhere, but the very breath is drawn in the fear of the Lord, and the heart is strong in the hope that grades higher than faith.

October 30, 1916: Job 24 reminds me of Ibsen's plays more than of any recent thing. Ibsen's clear-sightedness and his sense of the inexorable results of sin without any sense of forgiveness, seem to me most massively expressed in this chapter.

November 1, 1916: There was nothing of the Pharisee about Job, he sticks to it that he is not a sinner, and he also sticks to it that God is just, knowing implicitly that a lie could never justify God, even if it apparently justified "Bildad & Co." And of chapters 29–31, what can one say—it is a never-to-be-equalled expression of vast personal sorrow and agony. Chapter 31:35–37 is Job's autobiography, written in tears and blood. And now "the words of Job are ended," and still no light and no "way" yet.

November 3, 1916: The remaining chapters of Job keep my mind and heart in a glow of lifted wonder and worship.

Oswald gave these talks to British troops in the spring of 1917. Because the men were always in training and transition, few could attend all the classes. This, along with their heartfelt response to the messages, undoubtedly caused Oswald and Biddy to consider publishing all of the talks in this series. Almost as soon as the talks on Job were ended, Biddy was working to transcribe her shorthand notes and prepare them for publication. On April 5, 1917, OC wrote to a friend in England, "Hope to send you a book on Job soon (at least Biddy does, I take no more responsibility after having spoken my mind)."

In a diary entry for August 13, 1917, OC noted: "I am at present, with Biddy's help, getting the last sheets of my talks on Job read for the printer, the book is to be entitled Baffled to Fight Better."

When Chambers died suddenly and unexpectedly in November 1917, Baffled had already been sent to press in Egypt.

Baffled to Fight Better is one of only three books compiled and printed before Chambers' death. The other two are Biblical Psychology (1912) and Studies in the Sermon on the Mount (1915).

The title comes from Robert Browning's "Asolando":

One who never turned his back but marched breast forward,
Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed though right were worsted, wrong would triumph,
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better
Sleep to wake.

FOREWORD TO THE FIRST EDITION (1917)

This book is comprised of talks given nightly by Reverend Oswald Chambers to the men at the Imperial School of Instruction,³ Zeitoun, Egypt, during the Spring of 1917.

The one who spoke the words is now in the presence of the King, "serving Him day and night in His temple," and our prayer is that this book may serve to quicken in us all "a personal passionate devotion to Jesus Christ." Our Lord Himself was the one Lodestar in the life of my husband, and every recalling of him is an incentive to "follow his ways in Christ."

For himself

So shadowed forth in every look and act Our Lord, without Whose name he seldom spoke, One could not live beside him and forget.

B.C.⁴ Egypt, 1917

CENTRAL HALL, WESTMINSTER, LONDON, S.W.

It is with sincere pleasure that I write a few prefatory words to this last message from Reverend Oswald Chambers.

The Church of Christ has sustained a great loss in the Passing of our dear gifted Friend.

Reverend Oswald Chambers was a scholar, a burning Evangelist, a teacher of the Word of God, who taught in faith and verity.

He was full of the Holy Ghost, and turned many to the Lord. There is pathetic interest in these musings on the great drama of sorrow, which was also a true history.

Many will read them with tearful eyes as they recall their departed Author.

All, I am sure, will read with profit: may our Friend's lessons be messages of God to us all.

May we live in full consecration as he did, and whether we "fall asleep in Jesus," or remain till the Lord's return, may we be absolutely faithful!

Dinsdale T. Young⁵

FOREWORD TO THE THIRD EDITION (1924)

These talks were given in the Y.M.C.A. Huts, Zeitoun, Egypt, to the men in the Egyptian Expeditionary Force during the early part of 1917. They were not given with the thought of publication, and the book is compiled from my own verbatim notes.

In November, 1917, God's call came to my husband for other service in His presence, and the idea came to me that to publish the talks he had been giving to the men in Egypt (and previously at the Bible Training College, London), would serve some purpose of God's, and the work was started with the prayer that the written messages might bring a knowledge of His truth to many as the spoken messages had ever done. This book was the first one to be published and was widely circulated amongst the men in Egypt and Palestine, many of whom had heard the talks given, an edition being also published in England at the same time.

I have a practically inexhaustible supply of notes, and other books will be published from time to time. By his faith, he is speaking to us still. (Hebrews 11:4, MOFFATT).

THE UNSEEN UNIVERSE Job 1:1–12

Man is not God but hath God's end to serve, A master to obey, a course to take, Somewhat to cast off, somewhat to become. Grant this, then man must pass from old to new, From vain to real, from mistake to fact, From what once seemed good, to what now proves best.

It is in such a book as Job that many suffering souls will find consolation and sustaining, and this because no attempt is made to explain the why of suffering, but rather an expression is given to suffering which leaves one with the inspiration of an explanation in the final issue. The problem in connection with suffering arises from the fact that there is seemingly no explanation of it.

To say that Job was perfected by means of his sufferings is begging the question, for Job was perfect in moral and religious equipment before suffering touched his life. "Hast thou considered My servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and upright man, one that . . . escheweth evil?" (Job 1:8). Job suffered "according to the will of God"; he never knew the preface to his story.

Verses 6–12 are a record of the supernatural; there is nothing familiar to our minds in them. The Bible deals with what no ordinary mind sees—the scenery behind the things that are seen. We have means of inferring the existence of a supernatural world only when it interferes with us. These verses refer to something that happened in the supernatural world, and it is what happened there that accounts for Job's sufferings; therefore the upset which came into the life of this great and good man is not to be laid to his account.

There is a difference between Satan and the devil which the Bible student should note. According to the Bible, man is responsible for the introduction of Satan: Satan is the result of a communication set up between man and the devil (see Genesis 3:1–5).

When Jesus Christ came face to face with Satan He dealt with him as representing the attitude man takes up in organising his life apart from any consideration of God. In the Temptation the devil is seen in his undisguised character; only once did Our Lord address the devil as "Satan"—"Then said Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan . . ." (Matthew 4:10). On another occasion Jesus said that self-pity was satanic—"But He turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind Me, Satan . . ." (Matthew 16:23).

The devil is the adversary of God in the rule of man and Satan is his representative. Because a thing is satanic does not mean that it is abominable and immoral; Our Lord said that "that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God" (Luke 16:15). Satan rules this world under the inspiration of the devil and men are peaceful—"when a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace"—there is no breaking out into sin and wrongdoing. One of the most cunning travesties is to represent Satan as the instigator of external sins. The satanically-managed man is moral, upright, proud and individual; he is absolutely self-governed and has no need of God.

Satan counterfeits the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit represents the working of God in a human life when it is at one with God through the Redemption; in other words, "Holy Spirit" is the heredity brought into human nature at regeneration. When a man is born from above he has granted to him the disposition of Jesus, Holy Spirit, and if he obeys that disposition he will develop into the new manhood in Christ Jesus. If by deliberate refusal a man is not born again he is liable to find himself developing more and more into the satanic, which will ultimately head up into the devil.

"Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, Doth Job fear God for nought?" Job 1:9–12 might be paraphrased in this way: Satan is represented as saying to God, "You are infatuated with the idea that man loves You for Your own sake; he never has and never will. Job, for instance, simply loves you because You bless and prosper him, but touch any one of his blessings and he will curse You to Your face and prove that no man on earth loves You for Your own sake."

It must be remembered what Job's creed was. Job believed that God prospered and blessed the upright man who trusted in Him, and that the man who was not upright was not prospered. Then came calamity after calamity, everything Job believed about God was contradicted and his creed went to the winds. Satan's sneer is the counterpart of the devil's sneer in Genesis 3; there, the devil's object is to sneer about God to man; here, Satan's object is to sneer about man to God, he is "the accuser of our brethren."

To-day there is in our midst a crop of juvenile sceptics, men who up to the time of the war had had no tension in their lives, and as soon as turmoil embroiled them they flung over their faith and became cheap and easy sceptics. The man who knows that there are problems and difficulties in life is not so easily moved. Most of us get touchy with God and desert Him when He does not back up our creed (cf. John 6:60, 66). Many a man through this war⁶ has lost his form of belief in God and imagines that he has thereby lost God, whereas he is in the throes of a conflict which ought to give birth to a realisation of God more fundamental than any statement of belief.

There are things in our heavenly Father's dealings with us which have no immediate explanation. There are inexplicable providences which test us to the limit, and prove that rationalism is a mere mental pose. The Bible and our common sense agree that the basis of human life is tragic, not rational, and the whole problem is focused for us in this Book of Job. Chapter 13:15 is the utterance of a man who has lost his explicit hold on God, but not his implicit hold—"Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him" (RV, "wait for Him"). That is the last reach of the faith of a man. Job's creed is gone; all he believed about God has been disproved by his own experiences, and his friends when they come say, in effect, "You are a hypocrite, Job, we can prove it from your own creed." But Job sticks to it—"I am not a hypocrite, I do not know what accounts for all that has happened, but I will hold to it that God is just and that I shall yet see Him vindicated in it all."

God never once makes His way clear to Job. Job struggles with problem after problem, and Providence brings more problems all the time, and in the end Job says, "... now mine eye seeth Thee." He saw that all he had hung in to in the darkness was true, and that God was all he had believed Him to be, loving and just and honourable. The explanation of the whole thing lies in the fact that God and Satan had made a battleground of Job's soul without Job's permission. Without any warning, Job's life is suddenly turned into desperate havoc and God keeps out of sight and never gives any sign whatever to Job that He is. The odds are desperately against God and it looks as if the sneer of Satan will prove to be true; but God wins in the end, Job comes out triumphant in his faith in God, and Satan is completely vanquished.

Will I trust the revelation given of God by Jesus Christ when everything in my personal experience flatly contradicts it?

DAZED AND AMAZED Job 1:13–2:13

Jesus, Whose lot with us was cast, Who saw it out, from first to last: . . . Would I could win and keep and feel That heart of love, that spirit of steel.

I would not to Thy bosom fly
To slink off till the storms go by,
If you are like the man you were You'd turn with scorn from such a prayer.

1. In the Whirlwind of Disaster (a) The Onslaught of Destruction (Job 1:13-19)

God gave Satan authority to interfere with all that Job possessed—"Behold, all that he hath is in thy power." All that a man possesses is at times not in the hand of God, but in the hand of the adversary, because God has never withdrawn that authority from Satan. The disasters that attend a man's possessions are satanic in their origin and not of the haphazard order they seem to be. When Jesus Christ talked about discipleship He indicated that a disciple must be detached from property and possessions, for if a man's life is in what he possesses, when disaster comes to his possessions, his life goes too (cf. Luke 12:15).

Satan had been allowed to attack Job's possessions; now his power is increased, and he is free to attack Job's personal inheritance direct. When a man is hit by undeserved destruction, the immediate result is a slander against God—"Why should God allow this thing to happen?"

There are people to-day who are going through an onslaught of destruction that paralyses all our platitudes and preaching; the only thing that will bring relief is the consolations of Christ. It is a good thing to feel our own powerlessness in the face of destruction, it makes us know how much we depend upon God. In these days the outstanding marvel is the way mothers and wives have gone through sorrow, not callously, but with an extraordinary sense of hopefulness. One thing the war has done is to knock on the head all such shallow optimism as telling people to "look on the bright side of things"; or that "every cloud has a silver lining": there are some clouds that are black all through.

(b) The Ordeal of Despair (Job 1:20-21)

Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither: the LORD gave, and the LORD hath taken away; blessed be the name of the LORD. (Job 1:21)

Facing facts as they are produces despair, not frenzy, but real downright despair, and God never blames a man for despair. The man who thinks must be pessimistic; thinking can never produce optimism. The wisest man that ever lived said that "he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow." The basis of things is not reasonable, but wild and tragic, and to face things as they are brings a man to the ordeal of despair. Ibsen presents this ordeal, there is no defiance in his presentation, he knows that there is no such thing as forgiveness in Nature, and that every sin has a Nemesis following it. His summing up of life is that of quiet despair because he knows nothing of the revelation given of God by Jesus Christ.

"Blessed are they that mourn." Our Lord always speaks from that basis, never from the basis of the "gospel of temperament." When a man gets to despair he knows that all his thinking will never get him out, he will only get out by the sheer creative effort of God, consequently he is in the right attitude to receive from God that which he cannot gain for himself.

(c) The Ordination of Discretion (Job 1:22)

"In all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly." The apostle James talks about "the patience of Job," but "patience" is surely the last word we would have applied to Job! He "skins" his friends with his terrific criticisms. Yet Job was never fundamentally impatient with God; he could not understand what God was doing, but he did not charge God with foolishness; he hung in to the certainty that God would yet be cleared, and so would he. Our Lord said that He was "meek and lowly in heart," yet meekness is not the striking feature in the Temple when He drove out those that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers. Our Lord was meek towards His Father's dispensations for Him, but not necessarily meek towards men when His Father's honour was at stake.

2. In the Wickedness of Desolation (a) The Sieve of Satan (Job 2:1-6)

In chapter 2 the veil is lifted from behind the seen and the tragedy is explained. Job's possessions have gone, but he still holds to his integrity; now Satan conducts his sneer one bit nearer. The first sneer was to God-"Man only loves You because You bless him"; now Satan obtains permission to interfere with Job's intimate possessions, his sense of integrity and his health—"Behold, he is in thine hand; but save his life." The last stake of Satan is in a man's flesh. There are times when a man's intimate personal possessions are under Satan's domination. The apostle Paul calls Satan "an angel of light," he comes to a man whose personal possessions are being attacked and says—"You have lost the sense of the presence of God, therefore you must have backslidden." There is a wicked inspiration in it; the thing underneath is the wickedness of desolation. Desolation is never a right thing; wrong things happen actually because things are wrong really. One of the dangers of fanaticism is to accept disaster as God's appointment, as part of His design. It is not God's design, but His permissive will. There is a vital moral difference between God's order and His permissive will. God's order is—no sin, no Satan, no sickness, no limitations. The unaided intellect of man recognises this and says, "I will cut out sin and the Redemption and Jesus Christ, and conduct my life on rational lines." Then comes the permissive will of God-sin, Satan, difficulty, wrong and evil, and when desolation and disaster strike a man there is a wicked sting at the heart of it, and if he does not allow for the real thing behind it all he is a fool. We have to grasp God's order through His permissive will. A Christian must not lurk in the bosom of Christ because his thinking gives him a headache. It is moral and spiritual cowardice to refuse to face the thing and to give in and succumb. The greatest fear a Christian has is not a personal fear, but the fear that his Hero won't get through, that God will not be able to clear His character. God's purpose is to bring "many sons unto glory." Right through all the turmoil that is produced, and in spite of all Satan can do, this Book of Job proves that a man can get through to God every time.

(b) The Scourge of Suffering (Job 2:7–10)

The first outer court of a man's life is his flesh, and Job was smitten "with sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown." Then the wife of his bosom counselled him to "renounce God, and die. But he said unto her, Thou speakest as one of the foolish [impious, RV mg] speaketh. What? shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? In all this did not Job sin with his lips." That is where the scourge of suffering lies. When I suffer and feel I am to blame for it, I can explain it to myself; when I suffer and know I am not to blame, it is a harder matter; but when I suffer and realise that my most intimate relations think I am to blame, that is the limit of suffering. That is where the scourge of suffering lashed Job, the power of the sneer of Satan has come now into his most intimate relationships.

(c) The Solitariness of Sorrow (Job 2:11-13)

Now when Job's three friends heard of all this evil that was come upon him, they came every one from his own place. . . . And when they lifted up their eyes afar off, and knew him not, they lifted up their voice, and wept. . . . So they sat down with him upon the ground seven days and seven nights, and none spake a word unto him: for they saw that his grief was very great.

Job's friends were hit desperately by the calamities that had overtaken Job because their creed was the same as his had been, and now if Job was a good man, as their own hearts told them he was, where was their creed? They were dumbfounded with agony, and Job was left without a consoling friend. The friends came slowly to the conclusion that their view of God was right, therefore Job must be wrong. They had the ban of finality⁷ about their views, which is always the result of theology being put before God. The friends suffered as well as Job, and the suffering which comes from having outgrown one's theological suit is of an acute order. Job's attitude is—"I cannot understand why God has allowed these things to happen; what He is doing hurts desperately, but I believe that He is honourable, a God of integrity, and I will stick to it that in the end it will be made absolutely clear that He is a God of love and justice and truth."

Nothing is taught in the Book of Job, but there is a deep, measured sense of Someone understanding. This man was buffeted and stripped of all he held dear, but in the whirlwind of disaster he remained unblameable, that is, undeserving of censure by God.

THE PASSION OF PESSIMISM Job 3

The world sits at the feet of Christ Unknowing, blind, and unconsoled; It yet shall touch His garment's fold, And feel the heavenly Alchemist Transform its very dust to gold.

Whittier

Optimism is either a matter of accepted revelation or of temperament; to think unimpeded and remain optimistic is not possible. Let a man face facts as they really are, and pessimism is the only possible conclusion. If there is no tragedy at the back of human life, no gap between God and man, then the Redemption of Jesus Christ is "much ado about nothing." Job is seeing things exactly as they are. A healthy-minded man bases his life on actual conditions, but let him be hit by bereavement, and when he has got beyond the noisy bit and the blasphemous bit, he will find, as Job found, that despair is the basis of human life unless a man accepts a revelation from God and enters into the Kingdom of Jesus Christ.

1. The Irreparable Birth (Job 3:1-7)

After this opened Job his mouth, and cursed his day. . . . Let the day perish wherein I was born. (Job 3:1, 3)

It is a sad thing that Job is facing, and it seems that the only reasonable thing he can do is to mourn the day of his birth. With some people suffering is imaginary, but with Job it has actually happened, and his curse is the real deep conviction of his spirit—"Would to God I had never been born!" The sense of the irreparable is one of the greatest agonies in human life. Adam and Eve entered into the sense of the irreparable when the gates of Paradise clanged behind them. Cain cried out—"My punishment is greater than I can bear." Esau "found no place of repentance, though he sought it diligently with tears." There are things in life which are irreparable; there is no road back to yesterday.

Job's sense of the irreparable brought him face to face with the thing God was face to face with, and when a man gets there he begins to see the meaning of the Redemption. The basis of things is not rational, common sense tells him it is not; the basis of things is tragic, and the Bible reveals that the only way out is through the Redemption. In Job's case it was not a question of his being over-satiated with the pleasures of life, he was suddenly hit without any explanation; his days of prosperity and conscious integrity came to an abrupt end, and, worst of all, his belief in God was assailed.

Real suffering comes when a man's statement of his belief in God is divorced from his personal relationship to God. The statement of belief is secondary, it is never the fundamental thing. It is always well to note the things in life that your explanations do not cover. Job is facing a thing too difficult for him to solve or master; he realises that there is no way out.

2. The Irresponsible Blunder (Job 3:8–13)

If you read a book about life by a philosopher and then go out and face the facts of life, you will find the facts do not come within the simple lines laid down in the book. The philosopher's line works like a searchlight does, lighting up what it does and nothing more, daylight reveals a hundred and one facts which the searchlight had not taken into account. There is nothing simple under heaven saving a man's relationship to God on the ground of the Redemption; that is why the apostle Paul says, "I fear, lest by any means, . . . your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ" (2 Corinthians 11:3).

Reason is our guide among the facts of life, but it does not give us the explanation of them. Sin, suffering, and the Book of God all bring a man to the realisation that there is something wrong at the basis of life, and it cannot be put right by his reason. Our Lord always dealt with the "basement" of life, i.e., with the real problem; if we only deal with "the upper storey" we do not realise the need of the Redemption; but once we are hit on the elemental line, as this war has hit men, everything becomes different. There are many men today who for the first time in their lives find themselves in the midst of the elemental with no civilised protection, and they go through appalling agony.

The war has put an end to a great deal of belief in our beliefs. Coleridge's criticism of many so-called Christians was that they did not believe in God, but only believed their beliefs about Him. A man up against things as they are feels that he has lost God, while in reality he has come face to face with Him. It is not platitudes that tell here, but great books, like the Book of Job, which work away down on the implicit line. There are many things in life that look like irresponsible blunders, but the Bible reveals that God has taken the responsibility for these things, and that Jesus Christ has bridged the gap which sin made between God and man; the proof that He has done so is the Cross. God accepts the responsibility for sin, and on the basis of the Redemption men find their personal way out and an explanation.

3. The Invincible Blackness (Job 3:13-22)

These verses are not an indication of pain and suffering, but simply of blackness and a desire for quietness.

Wherefore is light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul; which long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than for hid treasures; which rejoice exceedingly, and are glad, when they can find the grave? (Job 3:20–22)

In the invincible blackness caused by Job's condition death seems the only way out. In every age which has seen a great upheaval the initial stage has always been marked by the advocacy of suicide, which is an indication of the agony produced by facing things as they are. The basis of things is wild. The only way you can live your life pleasantly is by being either a pagan or a saint; only by refusing to think about things as they are can we remain indifferent.

4. The Inherited Baffling (Job 3:23-26)

The sense of being baffled is common, and Job is feeling completely baffled by God's dealings with him.

Why is light given to a man whose way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in? [RV] . . . I was not in safety, neither had I rest, neither was I quiet; yet trouble came. (Job 3:23, 26)

We may not experience the sense of being baffled by reason of any terrific sorrow, but if we really face the teachings of Jesus Christ in the Sermon on the Mount honestly and drastically, we shall know something of what Job was going through. The teachings of Jesus Christ must produce despair, because if He means what He says, where are we in regard to it? "Blessed are the pure in heart"—blessed is the man who has nothing in him for God to censure. Can I come up to that standard? Yet Jesus says only the pure in heart can stand before God. The New Testament never says that Jesus Christ came primarily to teach men: it says that He came to reveal that He has put the basis of human life on Redemption, that is, He has made it possible for any and every man to be born into the Kingdom where He lives (see John 3:3). Then when we are born again His teaching becomes a description of what God has undertaken to make a man if he will let His power work through him. So long as a man has his morality well within his own grasp he does not need Jesus Christ— "For I came not to call the righteous, but sinners," said Jesus. When a man has been hard hit and realises his own helplessness he finds that it is not a cowardly thing to turn to Jesus Christ, but the way out which God has made for him.

There is a passion of pessimism at the heart of human life and there is no "plaster" for it; you cannot say, "Cheer up, look on the bright side"; there is no bright side to look on. There is only one cure and that is God Himself, and God comes to a man in the form of Jesus Christ. Through Jesus Christ's Redemption the way is opened back to yesterday, out of the blunders and blackness and baffling into a perfect simplicity of relationship to God. Jesus Christ undertakes to enable a man to withstand every one of the charges made by Satan. Satan's aim is to make a man believe that God is cruel and that things are all wrong; but when a man strikes deepest in agony and turns deliberately to the God manifested in Jesus Christ, he will find Him to be the answer to all his problems.

THE LIGHT THAT FAILED Job 4–5

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;

In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs. He most

Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best. Life is but a means unto an end—that end, Beginning, mean, and end to all things—God.

Philip James Bailey⁸

It is not what a man does that is of final importance, but what he is in what he does. The atmosphere produced by a man, much more than his activities, has the lasting influence.

1. The Premise of Precedent (Job 4:1-6)

Eliphaz is the first of the friends to emerge from their dumbfounded silence, and he starts out with the premise that God will never act any differently from the way He has always acted, and that man must not expect He will. The opening verses are a stately introduction to his theme—

Behold, thou hast instructed many, and thou hast strengthened the weak hands. Thy words have upholden him that was falling, and thou hast strengthened the feeble knees. But now it is come upon thee, and thou faintest; it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled. (Job 4:3–5)

The precedent from which Eliphaz argues is that although Job has instructed many and been an upholder of the weak, now that he himself is going through such terrific suffering he must be wrong somewhere. Eliphaz reasons on the ground that Job is experiencing the same kind of trouble as those whom he had previously comforted. This is not true. Job is suffering because God and Satan have made a battleground of his soul, without giving him any warning or any explanation. It is an easy thing to argue from precedent because it makes everything simple, but it is a risky thing to do. Give God "elbow room"; let Him come into His universe as He pleases. If we confine God in His working to religious people or to certain ways, we place ourselves on an equality with God. Job's suffering is not according to precedent; the thing that has struck Job had struck none of those whom he had instructed and comforted. It is a good thing to be careful in our judgement of other men. A man may utter apparently blasphemous things against God and we say, "How appalling"; but if we look further we find that the man is in pain, he is maddened and hurt by something. The mood he is talking in is a passing one and out of his suffering will come a totally different relationship to things. Remember, that in the end God said that the friends had not spoken the truth about Him, whilst Job had.

We are in danger of doing the same thing as Eliphaz; we say that a man is not right with God unless he acts on the line of the precedent we have established. We must drop our measuring-rods for God and for our fellow men. All we can know about God is that His character is what Jesus Christ has manifested; and all we know about our fellow men presents an enigma which precludes the possibility of the final judgement being with us.

2. The Presentation of Preconception (Job 4:7-21)

Eliphaz goes on to reason on a preconception, viz. that God blesses the good man, but does not bless the bad man.

Remember, I pray thee, who ever perished, being innocent? or where were the righteous cut off? Even as I have seen, they that plow iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same. (Job 4:7–8)

Eliphaz takes his argument from Nature: "For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap"—that God does not punish the upright, and that the innocent do not perish. That simply is not true, and it is this preconception which distorted Eliphaz' point of view. Preconceptions exist in our own head; if we start out with the preconception that God will never allow the innocent to perish and then we see a righteous man perishing, we will have to say, "You cannot be a righteous man, because my preconception tells me that if you were, God would never allow you to suffer; therefore you are proved to be a bad man." When Jesus Christ came on the scene the preconception of the historic people of God was this-"We are the constitution of God, Judaism is God's ordination, therefore You cannot be," and they crucified Him. Our Lord said that His Church would be so completely taken up with its precedents and preconceptions that when He came it would be "as a thief in the night"; they would not see Him because they were taken up with another point of view.

There are people who can silence you with their logic while all the time you know, although you cannot prove it, that they are wrong. This is because the basis of things is not logical, but tragic. Logic and reasoning are only methods of dealing with things as they are; they give no explanation of things as they are.

3. The Preaching from Prejudice (Job 5:1–16)

Prejudice means a judgement passed without sufficiently weighing the evidence. We are all prejudiced, and we can only see along the line of our prejudices. The way a prejudice works is seen clearly in Eliphaz: he knows God, and he knows how He will work—God will never allow the righteous to suffer, consequently when he sees the disasters in Job's life he passes judgement right off on Job and says he is not righteous. There is a saying of Bacon's to the effect that if prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament, adversity is the blessing of the New; and the apostle Paul says that "all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (2 Timothy 3:12).

In every life there is one place where God must have "elbow room." We must not pass judgement on others, nor must we make a principle of judging out of our own experience. It is impossible for a man to know the views of Almighty God. Preaching from prejudice is dangerous, it makes a man dogmatic and certain that he is right. The question for each of us to ask ourselves is this: Would I recognise God if He came in a way I was not prepared for—if He came in the bustle of a marriage feast, or as a Carpenter? That is how Jesus Christ appeared to the prejudices of the Pharisees, and they said He was mad. To-day we are trying to work up a religious revival while God has visited the world in a moral revival, and the majority of us have not begun to recognise it. The characteristics that are manifested when God is at work are self-effacement, self-suppression, abandonment to something or someone other than myself, and surely there has never been more evidence of these characteristics than on the part of the men engaged in this war.

4. The Pedagogue of Priggishness (Job 5:17-27)

Eliphaz is not only certain what God will do, but he asserts that what Job is going through is chastisement at the hand of God—

Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth: therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty: for He maketh sore, and bindeth up: He woundeth, and His hands make whole.

—whereas chastisement is a much slighter thing than the real problem of Job's life. The chief ingredient in chastening is that it is meant to develop us, and is a means of expression. The greatest element in the suffering of Job was not chastisement, but the supernatural preface to his story of which he knew nothing. If Eliphaz is right his evidence would prove that Job was a hypocrite; his attitude is that of a pedagogue of priggishness. Beware of priggishness as you would of poison. The danger of pseudo-evangelism is that it makes the preacher a "superior person," not that he is necessarily a prig, but the attitude is produced by the way he has been taught. When Our Lord said to the disciples, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men," His reference was not to the skilled angler, but to those who use the drag-net-something which requires practically no skill; the point being that you have not to watch your "fish," but to do the simple thing and God will do the rest. The pseudo-evangelical line is that you must be on the watch all the time and lose no opportunity of speaking to people, and this attitude is apt to produce the superior person. It may be a noble enough point of view, but it produces the wrong kind of character. It does not produce a disciple of Jesus, but too often the kind of person who smells of gunpowder and people are afraid of meeting him. According to Jesus Christ, what we have to do is to watch the Source and He will look after the outflow: "He that believeth on Me, . . . out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water" (John 7:38). Who are the people who have really benefited you? They are never the ones who think they do, but those who are like the stars or the lilies, no notion of the prig about them. It was this form of pseudo-evangelism, so unlike the New Testament evangelism, that made Huxley¹⁰ say—"I object to Christians: they know too much about God." Eliphaz can tell Job everything about God, but when we come to the facts of the case we find that the man who is criticising Job is not fit to sit down beside him. Eliphaz was in a much better condition at the beginning when he did not open his mouth, then he was not a prig, but a man facing facts which had no explanation as yet.

If the study of the Book of Job is making us reverent with what we don't understand, we are gaining insight. There is suffering before which you cannot say a word; you cannot preach "the gospel of temperament"; all you can do is to remain dumb and leave room for God to come in as He likes. The point for us is—Do I believe in God apart from my reasoning about Him? Theology is a great thing, so is a man's creed; but God is greater than either, and the next greatest thing is my relationship to Him.

DE PROFUNDIS Job 6-7

Oh the regret, the struggle and the failing! Oh the days desolate and useless years! Vows in the night, so fierce and unavailing! Stings of my shame and passion of my tears!

How have I knelt with arms of my aspiring Lifted all night in irresponsive air, Dazed and amazed with overmuch desiring, Blank with the utter agony of prayer!

F. W. H. Myers¹¹

At this stage of his suffering Job portrays the terrific despair that can lay hold of a man; yet Job is not interested in himself, his is not the art of expressing the consciousness of every symptom of mind and heart characteristic of so many introspectionists to-day.

1. The Anatomy of Melancholy (Job 6:1-14)

Oh that my grief were throughly weighed, and my calamity laid in the balances together! (Job 6:2)

As previously stated, no sane man who thinks and who is not a Christian can be optimistic. Optimism, apart from a man's belief and his acceptance of Christianity, may be healthy-minded, but it is blinded; when he faces the facts of life as they are, uncoloured by his temperament, despair is the only possible ending for him. There is a melancholy that is insane, it comes from having a fixed idea about things and is the result of a diseased brain; but Job's melancholy is the result of an intense facing of the things that have happened to him, and of his refusal to allow his religious beliefs to blind him to what he sees. Job refuses to tell a lie either for the honour of God or for his own comfort. When a man gets within the outskirts of the experience of Job's suffering and perplexity and is in touch with the problems at the heart of life, he will probably do one of two things either tell a lie for the honour of God and say, "I must be much worse than I thought I was," or else accept a form of belief which does away with thinking. Most of us take our salvation much too cheaply. There is no hope for Job, and no hope for anyone on the face of the earth, unless God does something for him. One result of the war will be just this, that when a man faces things he knows despair is inevitable unless there is room for God to perform His almighty acts. This line of things may sound foreign to us because we do not think, we are too contented with what we are; we have not been desperately hit. Job's melancholy is occasioned by his acceptance of the worst point of view, not a temperamental point of view.

2. The Anger against Misunderstanding (Job 6:15-30)

My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, and as the stream of brooks they pass away. (Job 6:15)

Job complains that his friends have "dealt deceitfully as a brook," i.e., they have answered his words and not his meaning (cf.—"wilt Thou indeed be unto me as a deceitful brook, as waters that are not sure?" RV mg.) A Quaker friend of mine referring to a certain man said he did not like him because he did not hate properly. Job's anger seems to be of the order the apostle Paul mentions—"Be ye angry, and sin not" (Ephesians 4:26); his anger was against the misunderstanding of his friends, he had a right to expect that they would not misunderstand. The reason they misunderstood was that they took Job's words and deliberately denied the meaning which they knew must be behind them, and that is a misunderstanding not to be easily excused. It is possible to convey a wrong impression by repeating the exact words of someone else, to convey a lie by speaking the truth, and this is the kind of misunderstanding Job indicates his friends are guilty of. They have stuck steadfastly to his literal words and taken their standpoint not from God, but from the creed they have accepted; consequently they not only criticise Job and call him bad, but they totally misrepresent God. Job's complaint is not the shallow expression often heard—"No one understands me"; he is complaining of misunderstanding based on a misconstruction. He says in effect, "You have given me counsel when I did not ask for it; I am too greatly baffled and can only hold to what I am persuaded of, viz., that I have not done wrong; but I am indignant with you for not understanding.

In a crisis people quote the advice of Gamaliel—"For if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot over-throw it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God" (Acts 5:38–39), that is, there is no use fighting against it; whereas the Christian standpoint should be one of positive anger when anyone is made to stumble. To remain indifferent when there is injustice abroad is to come under the curse of Meroz, who "came not to the help of the LORD . . . against the mighty" (Judges 5:23). A conscientious objector is not necessarily a Christian. Conscience is a constituent in a natural man, but a Christian is judged by his personal relationship to God, not by his conscience.

3. The Anguish of Misery (Job 7:1-11)

My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope.... Therefore I will not refrain my mouth; I will speak in the anguish of my spirit; I will complain in the bitterness of my soul. (Job 7:6, 11)

Misery is an exquisite degree of torture from which there seems no relief; it is very rare. Job suffered in this way, and many people are doing so to-day on account of the war. We all experience these things in a passing mood, but with Job it is no mood, he is facing the real basis of life. That is why the Book of Job is included in the Bible. His words are not the expression of ordinary misery and melancholy, they are the expression of a man face to face with the foundation of human life, which is tragic. Every time Job opens his mouth he proves that the "bottom board" of rationalism is gone, there is nothing reasonable about what he is going through.

The war has proved that the basis of things is what Job discovered it to be—tragic, and men are being driven to realise the need for the Redemption. Facing things as they are will reveal the justification of God in the Redemption. No amount of sacrifice on the part of man can put the basis of human life right: God has undertaken the responsibility for this, and He does it on redemptive lines. Job's suffering comes from seeing the basis of things as they are; and, diseased and wild as Nietzsche was, his madness was probably from the same source. Imagine a man seeing hell without at the same time perceiving salvation through Jesus Christ—his reason must totter. Pseudo-evangelism makes an enormous blunder when it insists on conviction of sin as the first step to Jesus Christ. When we have come to the place of seeing Jesus Christ, then He can trust us with the facing of sin.

In dealing with men like Job or the apostle Paul we must remember that we are dealing with men whom God uses to give us an estimate of things which we have never experienced. We cannot interpret Job in the light of our own moods; the problem of the whole world is mirrored for us in Job's experiences.

4. The Appeal For Mercy (Job 7:12-21)

Job gives utterance to a mood which is not foreign to us when he says, "Am I a sea, or a whale, that Thou settest a watch over me?" In certain moods of anguish the human heart says to God, "I wish You would let me alone, why should I be used for things which have no appeal to me?" In the Christian life we are not being used for our own designs at all, but for the fulfilment of the prayer of Jesus Christ. He has prayed that we might be one with Him as He is one with the Father, consequently God is concerned only about that one thing, and He never says "By your leave." Whether we like it or not, God will burn us in His fire until we are as pure as He is, and it is during the process that we cry, as Job did, "I wish You would leave me alone." God is the only Being who can afford to be misunderstood; we cannot, Job could not, but God can. If we are misunderstood we "get about" the man as soon as we can. St. Augustine prayed, "O Lord, deliver me from this lust of always vindicating myself." God never vindicates Himself, He deliberately stands aside and lets all sorts of slanders heap on Him, yet He is not in any hurry.

We have the idea that prosperity, or happiness, or morality, is the end of a man's existence; according to the Bible it is something other, viz., "to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever." When a man is right with God, God puts His honour in that man's keeping. Job was one of those in whom God staked His honour, and it was during the process of His inexplicable ways that Job makes his appeal for mercy, and yet all through there comes out his implicit confidence in God. "And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Me," said Our Lord.

THE INTERROGATIVE PLASTER Job 8

If thou couldst empty all thyself of self.
Like to a shell dishabited,
Then might He find thee on the Ocean shelf,
And say—"This is not dead,"—
And fill thee with Himself instead.
But thou art all replete with very thou,
And hast such shrewd activity,
That, when He comes, He says:—"This is enow Unto itself—'Twere better let it be:
It is so small and full, there is no room for Me."
T. E. Brown¹²

Bildad differs from Eliphaz in his condemnation of Job: Eliphaz declares straight off that Job is wrong, while Bildad takes another line—that of asking questions; neither of them come anywhere near the reason for Job's suffering. There is an element of "Yes—but" in us all, and for most of us the problems that are nearly strangling a man have no meaning, they seem extravagant and wild. Bildad did not begin to detect where the real problem of Job's suffering lay, and we must beware in our attitude toward people who are suffering that we do not blunder by imagining our point of view to be the only one. Bildad tries the application of the interrogative plaster, he puts Job off by asking questions. That is generally the way of the man who refuses to face problems.

1. The Plaint of "How" (Job 8:1-2)

Then answered Bildad the Shuhite and said, How long wilt thou speak these things? and how long shall the words of thy mouth be like a strong wind?

Bildad turns attention away from what is making Job speak to his actual words—"Why do you talk so much?"—but he does not take the trouble to find out the reason. When we come across a foul-mouthed, blasphemous man any number of us are ready to reprove him for the one who will try to discover why he speaks thus. Job is looking for someone who will understand what lies behind his talk, but he finds only those who are far removed from his problem.

To say that because Job lived in another dispensation therefore what he went through does not apply to us, is an easy, artificial shifting of the ground. There are characteristics which are different, but the problems manifested in the Book of Job remain the same to this day. According to consistent argument, the New Testament saint should be leagues ahead of the Old Testament saint, but in reality no character in the New Testament is superior to those in the Old Testament. The revelation of Redemption given through our Lord Jesus Christ is retrospective in our day; in the Old Testament it is prospective. Job goes down to the heart of the problems that make the Redemption necessary, while Bildad, with his interrogative plaster and pious dealing with the problems, is really shirking the whole thing.

2. The Place of "Doth" (Job 8:3)

Doth God pervert judgement? or doth the Almighty pervert justice?

The trick of the sincere shirker is indicated in Bildad, which is always the result of being hit unexpectedly. We are all sincere shirkers, more or less; when we find ourselves suddenly discerned we turn the discernment off to something else for the time being (cf. John 4:16–20). In putting these abstractions before Job, Bildad is implying that Job's problem is not so difficult to understand: his suffering is caused by his own wrongdoing, and God's judgement is perfectly right. It is a trying thing to continue with a man who persists in giving an abstract supposition as a concrete fact.

3. The Philosophy of "If" (Job 8:4-6)

If thy children have sinned against him, . . . if thou wouldest seek unto God betimes, . . . if thou wert pure and upright. . . .

The implication behind all these suppositions is: "Even if you are as wrong as Eliphaz has made out, you are not suffering so much as you imagine, and there is no big problem at the heart of things. God is not unjust, but you are, and that is the reason for it all." When problems are pressing very hard there is always someone who brings a suggestion of "if," or "but," or "how," to take us off the track. If our problems can be solved by other men, they are not problems but simply muddles. When we come to the real downright problems of life, which have no explicit answer saving by the Designer of life, we are exactly where Job was, and we can understand his petulance with those who tried to answer him. If Job's friends had remained dumb and reverent with what they did not understand, as they did during the first seven days, they would have been a great sustaining to him, and they too would have approached the place Job ultimately reached and would not have been rebuked by God.

The "gospel of temperament" works very well if you are suffering only from psychical neuralgia, so to speak, and all you need is a cup of tea; but if you have a real deep complaint, the injunction to "Cheer up" is an insult. What is the use of telling a woman who has lost her husband and sons in the war to "Cheer up and look on the bright side"? There is no bright side, it is absolute blackness, and if God cannot come to her help, truly she is in a pitiable condition. It is part of the role of a man to be honest enough to know when he is up against cases like this. A gospel based on preconceived notions is merely an irritant. Bildad had his creed and his notion of God: Job does not fit into these, therefore it is a bad look out for Job—"My point of view of God cannot be wrong, therefore you must be."

4. The Pose of Platitude (Job 8:7-10)

For enquire, I pray thee, of the former age, and prepare thyself to the search of their fathers: . . . shall not they teach thee, and tell thee, and utter words out of their heart?

The line Bildad takes up in these verses is like a man telling the inmates of an asylum that it is better being sane than mad—but meantime they are mad! Bildad denies that Job is facing a problem never faced by his fathers. We are apt to forget that there is always an element in human suffering never there before. Tennyson puts this finely in "In Memoriam":

One writes that, "Other friends remain"
That "Loss is common to the race"—
And common is the commonplace,
And vacant chaff well meant for grain
That loss is common would not make
My own less bitter, rather more:
Too common! Never morning wore
To evening, but some heart did break.

There is a great deal in both joy and sorrow that is similar in everyone's case, but always one element entirely different; the platitudinarian evades this. On the human side the only thing to do for a man who is up against these deeper problems is to remain kindly agnostic. The biggest benediction one man can find in another is not in his words, but that he implies: "I do not know the answer to your problem, all I can say is that God alone must know; let us go to Him."

It would have been much more to the point if the friends had begun to intercede for Job; if they had said, "This is a matter for God, not for us; our creed cannot begin to touch it"; but all they did was to take to "chattermagging" and telling Job that he was wrong. When God emerged, He put His imprint on what Job had said of Him, and His disapproval on what the friends had said.

If Redemption is not the basis of human life, and prayer man's only resource, then we have "followed cunningly devised fables." Over and over again during this war men have turned to prayer, not in the extreme of weakness, but of limitation; whenever a man gets beyond the limit he unconsciously turns to God. Eliphaz claimed to know exactly where Job was, and Bildad claims the same thing. Job was hurt, and these men tried to heal him with platitudes. The place for the comforter is not that of one who preaches, but of the comrade who says nothing, but prays to God about the matter. The biggest thing you can do for those who are suffering is not to talk platitudes, not to ask questions, but to get into contact with God, and the "greater works" will be done by prayer (see John 14:12–13). Job's friends never once prayed for him; all they did was to try and make coin for the enrichment of their own creed out of his sufferings. We are not intended to understand Life. Life makes us what we are, but Life belongs to God. If I can understand a thing and can define it, I am its master. I cannot understand or define Life; I cannot understand or define God; consequently I am master of neither. Logic and reason are always on the hunt for definition, and anything that cannot be defined is apt to be defied, Rationalism usually defies God and defies life; it will not have anything that cannot be defined on a rational basis, forgetting that the things that make up elemental human life cannot be defined. There are teachers to-day who play the fool on these elemental lines; they declare that they can give guidance, but they only succeed in doing a fathomless amount of harm. A man is a criminal for knowing some things, he has no right to know them. The primal curse of God was on Adam when he ate the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Adam was intended to know good and evil, but not by eating of the fruit of the tree; God wanted him to know good and evil in the way Jesus Christ knew it, viz., by simple obedience to His Father. None of us by nature knows good and evil in this way, and when we are born from above we have to take care that we deal with reverence with the elemental things underlying life.

5. The Point of "Can" (Job 8:11)

Can the rush grow up without mire? can the flag grow without water?

Bildad uses an argument from Nature and he tries to make his argument consistent with his illustration. We are apt to run an illustration to death in logical sequence; the Bible never does. An illustration should simply be a window which does not call attention to itself. If you take an illustration from Nature and apply it to a man's moral life or spiritual life, you will not be true to facts because the natural law does not work in the spiritual world. In the first place, a law is not a concrete thing, but a constructive mental abstraction whereby the human mind explains what it sees. God says, "And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten . . . "; that is not a natural law, and yet it is what happens in the spiritual world. In the natural world it is impossible to be made all over again, but in the spiritual world it is exactly what Jesus Christ makes possible. "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:3). What is true is that as there is a law in the natural world so there is a law in the spiritual world, i.e., a way of explaining things, but the law is not the same in both worlds. Bildad takes his illustration from the rush and the flag and applies it to Job, but he is more concerned about being consistent with his illustration than with the facts of Job's experience. If you are a logician you may often gain your point in a debate and yet feel yourself in the wrong. You get the best of it in disputing with some people because their minds are not clever, but when you get away from your flush of triumph you feel you have missed the point altogether; you have won on debate, but not on fact. You cannot get at the basis of things by disputing. Our Lord Himself comes off second best every time in a logical argument, and yet you know that He has in reality come off "more than conqueror." Jesus Christ lived in the moral domain and, in a sense, the intellect is of no use there. Intellect is not a guide, but an instrument.

6. The Practice of Piousness (Job 8:12-22)

Behold, God will not cast away a perfect man, neither will He help the evil doers. (Job 8:20)

Bildad is cultivating the margin of his eyesight, so to speak. This is a trick of the piousness not based on a personal relationship to God. Bildad is apparently speaking of an abstraction while all the time he is criticising Job—it is Job who is the hypocrite and the fraud. It is not meanness in Bildad that makes him do this, but "limitedness"—he is "all replete with very thou." Bildad has never seen God, while Job is getting near the place where he will see Him. All the god Bildad has is his creed; if he had known the real God he would have prayed to Him, and would have recognised the facts that were too big for him. Whenever we put belief in a creed in place of belief in God, we become this particular kind of humbug. To "imply wrong by my right" is the trick of every man who puts his creed before his relationship to God.

During this war many a man has come to find the difference between his creed and God. At first a man imagines he has backslidden because he has lost belief in his beliefs, but later on he finds he has gained God, i.e., he has come across Reality. If Reality is not to be found in God, then God is not found anywhere. If God is only a creed or a statement of religious belief, then He is not real; but if God is, as the Book of Job brings to light, One with whom a man gets into personal contact in other ways than by his intellect, then any man who touches the reality of things, touches God.

AGNOSTICISM Job 9–10

Pour forth and bravely do your part, O knights of the unshielded heart!
Forth and forever forward!—out
From prudent turret and redoubt,
And in the mellay charge amain,
To fall but yet to rise again.

R. L. Stevenson

Agnosticism is not always the deplorable thing it is imagined to be. An acknowledged intellectual agnosticism is a healthy thing; the difficulty arises when agnosticism is not acknowledged. To be an agnostic means I recognise that there is more than I know, and that if I am ever to know more, it must be by revelation.

1. The Cosmic Refraction of God (Job 9:1-12)

If you accept Jesus Christ's presentation of God and then look at the present order of the material universe you will find what is meant by the phrase, "the cosmic refraction of God." Whenever God presents Himself in the present order of things, He appears refracted, that is, distorted to our reason; we cannot understand Him. When a man comes face to face with Nature, God seems to be almighty against all his conceptions. God allows things in the cosmic world which are a refraction, they do not continue in the straight, simple line my mind tells me they ought to take. Job says, in effect, "If God chooses to be almighty against me, where am I? If he will contend with Him, he cannot answer Him one of a thousand." The eccentric old poet, George Herbert, has a poem in which this phrase recurs—

Be not Almightie, let me say Against, but for me.

The reason for Job's agony and distress is not a temperamental one; he has been brought to the heart of things and finds tragedy there, and a gap. The only way out is by means of the Redemption; in the meantime Job is stating the perplexity as it appears to a man who is really beginning to think. Every one of us in our day and generation whether we have ever thought deeply or not, has faced this problem: If God is love, why does He allow the hawk to kill the sparrow? As Tennyson puts it—"... Nature, red in tooth and claw." Why does He allow one animal to feed on another? Why are nations allowed to fight each other? These are not passing perplexities but real puzzles, and the only thing to do is either to deny the facts or to confess we are agnostic. Job is up against the problem that things do not look as they should if God is the kind of God his implicit belief constrains him to declare He ought to be. Job's friends deny the facts; they won't have it that there is any perplexity, and they say to Job, "The reason God appears refracted is because you yourself are refracted."

The cosmic force makes God appear indifferent and cruel and remote, and if you become a special pleader of any particular creed you have to shut your eyes to facts. The only revelation which gives a line of explanation is that there is something wrong at the basis of things, hence the refraction. The apostle Paul says that creation is all out of gear and twisted; it is waiting "for the manifestation of the sons of God." In the meantime, the problem remains.

Look at the world through either a microscope or a telescope and you will be dwarfed into terror by the infinitely minute or the infinitely great; both are appalling. When you touch the cosmic force, apart from the blinkers of intellect, there is a wild problem in it. Nature is wild, not tame. No man is capable of solving the riddle of the universe because the universe is mad, and the only thing that will put it right is not man's reason, but the sagacity of God which is manifested in the Redemption of Jesus Christ. A Christian is an avowed agnostic intellectually; his attitude is, "I have reached the limit of my knowledge, and I humbly accept the revelation of God given by Jesus Christ."

2. The Conscious Resurgence of Goodness (Job 9:13-20)

How much less shall I answer Him, and choose out my words to reason with Him? Whom though I were righteous, yet would I not answer, but I would make supplication to my judge. (Job 9:14–15)

"Resurgence" is used here to mean the re-consideration of a former judgement. The majority of us start out with the belief that God is good and kind, and that He prospers those who trust in Him. Job believed this, but he has a conscious resurgence against that belief now, and it is Job's goodness, not his badness, which makes him reconsider things. There are things in the experience of us all which call for a revision of our credal findings about God; there are other elements that will not come into our declaration as to the kind of Being He is.

Eliphaz and Bildad have no problem along this line; their one aim is to convict Job of being a blackguard. The sign of dishonesty in a man's creed is that he finds out defects in everyone save himself—"It is not possible for me to be mistaken in my view of God." Bildad and Eliphaz would not admit that they could be wrong; they had the ban of finality¹⁴ about their views. Trouble always arises when men will not revise their views of God. Bildad tells Job that if he was upright he would not suffer as he did. Job maintains—"I am upright, and yet everything has gone wrong with me." Job stuck steadily to facts, not to consistency to his creed. Over and over again a man is said to be a disbeliever when he is simply outgrowing his creed. It is a most painful thing for a man to find that his stated views of God are not adequate. Never tell a lie for the honour of God; it is an easy thing to do. Job refuses a presentation of God which does not face the facts; he has no scepticism about God, no hesitation about His existence, but he does tirade all the time against the way in which He is being presented.

3. The Concentrated Reaction of Grief (Job 9:21-35)

For He is not a man, as I am, that I should answer Him, and we should come together in judgement. Neither is there any daysman betwixt us, that might lay his hand upon us both. (Job 9:32–33)

Job is giving expression to a new conception of God; his hope is that an umpire, a daysman, will arise who will not only justify God, but also justify him. "My creed does not do this," he says, "neither does my experience, or my way of looking at things." It was grief that brought Job to this place, and grief is the only thing that will; joy does not, neither does prosperity, but grief does. The great factor in the life of Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of the world, is this very thing—"... Yet it pleased the LORD to bruise Him" (Isaiah 53:10). Once grief touches a man he is full of reaction, he says spiteful things because he is hurt, but in the end grief leads a man to the right point of view, viz. that the basis of things is tragic. As long as I am happy and things go well, I say what a famous philosopher said—"This is the best of all possible worlds." It plainly is not, and the Bible reveals why it is not. The world as God originally designed it, was the best of all possible worlds, but it has now become the worst of all possible worlds; in fact, the Bible reveals that it could not be any worse than it is. Individual men who take the wrong line get worse, but the world itself cannot get worse. Grief brings a man to see this more quickly than anything else, and he longs for an umpire who will hold the scales.

There is no use telling Job that there is no God or that he has not suffered: he has had too much experience of God and of suffering. It is useless to tell him that his creed is the umpire that arbitrates between himself and God: it leaves too much unsolved. Job is the type of man who could never rest in the Church, or in the Scriptures; he needs living Reality. The man who rests in a creed is apt to be a coward and refuse to come into a personal relationship with God. The whole point of vital Christianity is not the refusal to face things, but a matter of personal relationship, and it is the kind of thing that Job went through which brings a man to this issue.

4. The Conceptions for Rejection (Job 10:1-17)

Job's utterances are the last word in the expression of certain forms of grief. These particular verses are stately and terrific; Job is trying to state to his own mind why God seems to have rejected him, and also why he should reject the way God is being presented to him—

Thou knowest that I am not wicked; and there is none that can deliver out of Thine hand. Thine hands have made me and fashioned me together round about; yet Thou dost destroy me. (Job 10:7–8)

All along Job bases his conceptions on the facts which he knows, and this is the only thing to do, although many of us would rather tell a lie for the honour of God than face the facts. A fanatic is one who entrenches himself in invincible ignorance. Job will not accept anything that contradicts the facts he knows; he is not splenetic, he does not say God is cruel, he simply states the facts—"It looks as though God is rejecting me without any reason, all the facts go to prove this and I am not going to blink them." Job will not lay a flattering unction to his soul on the line of expediency. No man ever puts a stumblingblock in the way of others by telling the truth; to tell the truth is more honouring to God than to tell a lie. If God has done something for you, you will know it unmistakably, but if He has not, never say He has for the sake of other people. Job sticks to facts, that is what confuses his friends; but in the end Job is brought face to face with God.

5. The Case for Refuge (Job 10:18-22)

Are not my days few? Cease then, and let me alone, that I may take comfort a little, before I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death. (Job 10:20–21)

"I see no way out," says Job. He lies down, not in weakness, but in absolute exhaustion. Job is not talking in a petted mood, but saying that unless God will be a Refuge for him, there is no way out, death is the only thing. In every crisis of life, as represented in the Old Testament as well as in the teaching of Our Lord, this aspect of God is emphasised—"God is our Refuge"; yet until we are hit by sorrow, it is the last thing we seek for God to be. There is a difference between the weakness of refusing to think and the weakness that comes from facing facts as they really are. Job is seeing for the first time that God is the only Refuge, the only way out for him; yet he cannot get at Him through his creed, it is all confusion; the only thing to do is to fling himself on God.

It is this aspect of God which is at the basis of the Redemption. When a man gets convicted of sin (which is the most direct way of knowing that there is a problem at the basis of life), he knows that he cannot carry the burden of it; he also knows that God dare not forgive him; if He did, it would mean that man's sense of justice is bigger than God's. If I am forgiven without being altered, forgiveness is not only damaging to me, but a sign of unmitigated weakness in God. Unless it is possible for God's forgiveness to establish an order of holiness and rectitude, forgiveness is a mean¹⁵ and abominable thing.

The human problem is too big for a man to solve, but if he will fling himself unperplexed on God he will find Him to be the kind of Refuge Job is referring to. We know nothing about the Redemption or about forgiveness until we are enmeshed by the personal problem; then we begin to understand why we need to turn to God, and when we do turn to Him He becomes a Refuge and a Shelter and a complete Rest. Up to the present Job has had no refuge anywhere; now he craves for it. When a man receives the Holy Spirit, his problems are not altered, but he has a Refuge from which he can deal with them; before, he was out in the world being battered, now the centre of his life is at rest and he can begin, bit by bit, to get things uncovered and rightly related.

BOMBAST Job 11

I have not knowledge, wisdom, insight, thought. Or understanding, fit to justify Thee in thy work, O Perfect. Thou hast brought Me up to this—and, lo! what thou hast wrought,
I cannot call it good. But I can cry—
"O enemy, the maker hath not done:
One day thou shalt behold, and from the sight wilt run."

1. Stirring of Self-Respecting Indignation (Job 11:1-4)

Then answered Zophar the Naamathite and said, Should not the multitude of words be answered? And should a man full of talk be justified? (Job 11:1–2)

Zophar is manifesting the linguistic characteristic of Job. He begins by accusing Job of using a "multitude of words," thus blinding his mind to the point at stake. If you are annoyed with someone, notice how uncomfortably conscious you are that there is an element in him you cannot reach, and rather than allow the recognition of that element you work yourself up into self-respecting indignation. Zophar has come to the conclusion that Job is wrong, his creed is wrong, and "I alone am justified." This trick of stirring up self-respecting indignation is a very common subterfuge when we are embarrassed by a problem involving our self-respect. The temptation comes to yield to the bombastic mood, and we use terms of righteous indignation to condemn the thing we are not guilty of, while all the time we may be guilty of tenfold worse.

2. Schemes of Spurious Invocation (Job 11:5–10)

But oh that God would speak, and open His lips against thee; and that He would show thee the secrets of wisdom.... Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? (Job 11:5-7)

Another trick of bombastic religion is to appeal to God in order to back up a position which is obviously questionable. Here, Zophar calls God in as his ally in his attack on Job. We do it in our way of praying; our invocations and iterations often spring from false emotions; they are not spontaneous. Most of us mouth diction before God; we do not pray; we say in prayer what we ought to say, not what is actually natural to us to say. It may sound very interesting and noble, but it is not our own, it is mere sounding brass and clanging cymbals, there is no reality in it.

Another form of spurious invocation affects the idea that God is punishing our nation for certain wrongs, instead of feeling the presence of something more profound. When we are facing problems we must see to it that we are reverent and silent, for the most part, with what we do not understand. The invocation of God is an exercise of the finest spiritual mood, and we are rarely in a sufficiently exalted state of mind for it. To invocate on the assumption that we know God, comes near to blasphemy.

3. Self-Consciousness of Serious Instruction (Job 11:11–15)

If iniquity be in thine hand, put it far away, and let not wickedness dwell in thy tabernacles. For then shalt thou lift up thy face without spot; yea, thou shalt be steadfast, and shalt not fear. (Job 11:14–15)

Zophar tries to instruct Job on an entirely false basis; he declares that Job will never get wisdom. "For vain man would be wise, though man be born like a wild ass's colt." This is all the length Zophar gets in dealing with a man who towers leagues above him! First, he stirs up self-respecting indignation, then he takes a religious turn, then an instructive turn, which puts the wrong self on top at once. The characteristic of this kind of instruction is that it is self-conscious. The most valuable instruction in moral life never comes from people who consciously instruct us, for we are not taught morally as we are intellectually. Confusion always results if we take the method of instruction used in intellectual life and apply it to moral life, and make certain people moral instructors. It is an abortion for any human being to dare to put himself in the position of a moral superior to another man, and this is what Zophar did with Job. No man is consciously a moral superior to another man; if he is superior intellectually that is largely a matter of upbringing. The real basis of moral instruction lies much deeper down, viz. in God, and God instructs us along the line symbolised by the Christian sacrament, which means the real presence of God being conveyed to us through the common elements. God uses children, and books, and flowers in the spiritual instruction of a man, but He seldom uses the self-conscious prig who consciously instructs. The "Zophar" type has recurred all through the Christian centuries—the man who assumes he knows, and frequently the average man is led to say, "If experts in spiritual matters do not know these things, who am I that I should?" There are no experts in spiritual matters as there are in scientific matters. The spiritual expert is never so consciously because the very nature of spiritual instruction is that it is unconscious of itself; it is the life of a child, manifesting obedience, not ostentation. Our Lord describes the spiritual expert in Matthew 18:4—"Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven."

4. Self-Complacency of Sentimental Integrity (Job 11:16-20)

... because thou shalt forget thy misery, and remember it as waters that pass away: and thine age shall be clearer than the noonday; thou shalt shine forth, thou shalt be as the morning. (Job 11:16–17)

Zophar is the type of a demagogue, the man who rules with his tongue. Any kind of absolute creed ends where Zophar ended—on the sentimental line, where things reach a pitch of enthusiastic presentation not based on facts. The sentimental line blinds man's thinking by an ecstasy of thought; it enables an orator to awaken human sentiment and sympathy, but in dealing with trouble it proves a false line; it gives impertinent advice to a man who is brokenhearted. Zophar implies that he knows exactly the kind of integrity that will stand before God and before man.

Self-respecting indignation nowadays is not on the "Zophar" line, but on the anti-Zophar, i.e., the anti-religious. Before the war it was not religious but irreligious humbug that was prevalent. Men pretended they were not religious while secretly they were.

If you are a religious person of the "Zophar" type and can work up sufficient religious indignation, you will come to the conclusion that you and God must go together, it is quite impossible for you to be mistaken; then you will begin to instruct others on the same line, and will inevitably end by placing things in a totally false light.

ON THE TRAIL Job 12–14

True religion is betting one's life there is a God.

Donald Hankey

1. The Charge of Inveterate Intolerance (Job 12:1-5)

And Job answered and said, No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you. But I have understanding as well as you; I am not inferior to you; yea, who knoweth not such things as these. (Job 12:1–3)

Job is speaking in a mood of annoyance, he rebels against the intolerance of his friends who do not give him credit for having any common-sense. If we talk with a man who is dealing with the fundamentals, he may appear to pay no attention to any common-sense explanation we offer because his deep is beyond our deep, so we instantly credit him with having no common-sense and get back to our own shallows.

The friends charge Job with a lack of seeing the obvious, and Job replies, "I am facing things you have not begun to dream about; why don't you either plunge into the deeps with me, or else keep silent, if you cannot tell me what to do?" A religious view which causes a man to deal only with the shallow side has the ban of finality about it.

2. Common Sense of Irrefutable Inference (Job 12:6–25)

Who knoweth not in all these that the hand of the LORD hath wrought this? In whose hand is the soul of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind. (Job 12:9–10)

Job accuses the friends of telling lies for the honour of God. That is the danger of putting theology first; it leads a man to tell a lie in order to be consistent with his point of view. Job is speaking not with the view of disproving God, but of proving that the religious conceptions of these men are not right. The things Job states are commonsense, obvious things, and they flatly contradict the creed he had believed, and which his friends are pushing down his throat. Are we going to remain true to our religious convictions or to the God who lives behind them?—true to our denominational view of God or to the God who gave the denomination its initial inspiration? Are we going to be mere sticklers for the theological statement? In the ecclesiastical history of Scotland many a man has gone to martyrdom rather than let his theology go. The organised Church is up against these things to-day.

Theology is tested by history and logic; religion must be tested by experience.

Job's creed has crumbled into ruins, "therefore," he says, "I leave my creed, but I deny that I have left God." In a theological dispute the theologian is apt to put his point of view in the place of God. "But if any man seem to be contentious, we have no such custom," says St. Paul. Only one man in a thousand can maintain his spiritual life and controvert; he may increase his intellectual vim, but he does not increase his spiritual grasp of things. Dr. Alexander Whyte¹⁶ put this better than any other when he said:

Oh, the unmitigated curse of controversy! Oh, the detestable passions that corrections and contradictions kindle up to fury in the proud heart of man! Eschew controversy, my brethren, as you would eschew the entrance to hell itself. Let them have it their way; let them talk; let them write; let them correct you; let them traduce you; let them judge and condemn you; let them slay you. Rather let the truth of God suffer itself, than that love suffer. You have not enough of the divine nature in you to be a controversialist. "He was oppressed and He was afflicted yet He opened not His mouth; He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before its shearers is dumb, so He openeth not His mouth." "Who when He was reviled, reviled not again when He suffered, He threatened not; . . . by whose stripes ye were healed." "Heal me," prays Augustine, again and again, "of this lust of mine of always vindicating myself."

We start out with the notion that God is an almighty piece of ourselves, but God can never be on the side of any individual; the question to ask is—"Am I on God's side?" In 2 Thessalonians 2, Paul talks about the invincible ignorance of fanaticism and he says that if a man is deluded, he is to blame. On the other hand Job says, "I am not going to say that my former definition of God is true; God must be true. but I find that the way I have expounded Him is not true." This put Job on the right track to find God. Are we on the trail of God, or on the obstinate, intolerant line, where we argue for our statements instead of for the truth? Does our religion put us on the line of understanding the revelation of God, or is it merely a blind authority? It is a good thing to take stock of the things which commonsense inferences and religion cannot explain.

3. The Conception of Invincible Ignorance (Job 13:1-12)

What ye know, the same do I know also. (Job 13:2)

This verse is a description of the fanaticism which builds on one point of view only and is determinedly ignorant of everything else. This is the thing Job rages against all the time—"God must be other than you have stated because of what I have experienced," and Job is right. It is possible to build logical edifices on a theological position and at the same time to prove in practical life that the position is wrong. For example, on the metaphysical line the predestinations of God seem clear, but our conception of those predestinations may prove dangerously false when we come to the actual facts of life.

The theological view ought to be constantly examined; If we put it in the place of God we become invincibly ignorant, that is, we won't accept any other point of view, and the invincible ignorance of fanaticism leads to delusions for which we alone are to blame. The fundamental things are not the things which can be proved logically in practical life.

Watch where you are inclined to be invincibly ignorant, and you will find your point of view causes you to break down in the most vital thing. An accepted view of God has caused many a man to fail at the critical moment, it has kept him from being the kind of man he ought to be, and only when he abandons his view of God for God Himself, does he become the right kind of man.

4. The Consecration of Instinctive Integrity (Job 13:13–28)

Hold your peace, let me alone, that I may speak, and let come on me what will. Wherefore do I take my flesh in my teeth, and put my life in mine hand! Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him. (Job 13:13–15)

Job feels that in spite of all that is happening, God's integrity remains, and his own integrity. He cannot explain his sufferings by saying, "I am being punished because I have done wrong," or, "I am suffering because I needed to be perfected." The friends have accused Job of being a hypocrite and imply that he is also an atheist, but just at this very time Job gives expression to the most sublime utterance of faith in the whole of the Old Testament—"Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." "Though He, whom you are misrepresenting, and whom I cannot state in words—though He slay me, I will trust in the fact that He is full of the integrity I believe Him to be, and I will wait for Him. I will face my own commonsense integrity, and dedicate my instinctive sense of God's integrity, and in the end I know that both will work out into one."

Always remain true to facts and to the intuitive certainty that God must be just, and do not try to justify Him too quickly. The juggling trick tries to justify God for allowing sin and war. Sin and war are absolutely unjustifiable, and yet the instinct of every Christian is—"I know that in the end God will justify Himself." Meantime you can only justify Him by a venture of faith which cannot be logically demonstrated.

5. The Consciousness of Implicit Infirmity (Job 14)

O that Thou wouldest hide me in the grave, that Thou wouldest keep me secret, until Thy wrath be past, that Thou wouldest appoint me a set time, and remember me! If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. (Job 14:13–14)

Job has discovered that the basis of things is tragic, not logical. "I know I am weak and there are facts in my life and in human history which I cannot explain, but because of my conscious infirmity I know that God will see me through it all and out the other side; meanwhile I refuse to accept a creed which misrepresents God, and also misrepresents me." To get there means a man is on the right trail.

Job's integrity remains as well as his conscious infirmity, and also the sense that he is not entirely to blame for his sinfulness. No man is held responsible by God for having an heredity of sin: what God holds a man responsible for is refusing to let Jesus Christ deliver him from it when he sees that that is what He came to do (see John 3:19).

Judged by average theology, many of Job's utterances sound far from right, yet in reality they are full of reverence. He is saying that in any statement about God there must be some indication that will justify Him in allowing human beings to be infirm—"Your statement of God is not only untrue to man, but blasphemously untrue to God." Job states the facts of human experience, and that there seems to be an unsatisfactory end to life—"Just when I was going to grasp the thing and find the fulfilment of all my desires, I am cut off." There are countless men like that to-day; just when life was at its best and highest, suddenly they are swept clean off.

We get an expression of Job's meaning in verses 13–22 when we say of a man—"Well, he is dead now, and although he did not come up to the standard of our orthodox religion. we will leave him in the hands of a merciful God!" That is a subterfuge. Job states the facts and he is strong on the point that he will get to the place where he will see God justified in what He has allowed to happen. Never take a suspended judgement as final, but watch for the chance of getting fresh light on the matter. It is never sufficient to take a mental safety valve as the end of the matter. Many problems which arise from a man's instinctive integrity have not been answered; no theological statement can make answer to them, and we have to watch that we do not accept any statement which our instinctive nature tells us is a lie. We have our guide in Jesus Christ; we must never accept a view of God which contradicts what He manifested—"I am the Way, the Truth and the Life." The vital thing is to get on the trail of a personal relationship to God, and then use the facts of experience and of revelation to bring us to a consideration of things which satisfies our nature, and until it is satisfied, don't say it is. "I will stick to it that God is a God of love and justice, and I look forward to the time when I shall see it manifestly." We have no business to say piously, "Oh, I leave it with God." God will have us discern what He is doing, but it takes time because we are so slow to obey, and only as we obey do we perceive morally and spiritually.

PONDEROSITY Job 15

A pill to cure an earthquake. . .

G. K. Chesterton

There is nothing more ludicrous than the way in which some folk try to soothe sorrow and deal with trouble in other lives. Eliphaz makes out that Job's problems are not what he thinks they are; he tries to wear down Job's opposition by sheer ponderosity, i.e., saying nothing with terrific emphasis. One can almost hear him choking with indignation: "What knowest thou, that we know not? . . ." (Job 15:9). Then follows the revealing of the unconscious egotism of the orthodox credist, dictatorially asserting the character of God (Job 15:14-16). Then, like a theological buzzard, he sits on the perch of massive tradition and preens his ruffled feathers and croaks his eloquent platitudes. There is no trace of the fraud in Eliphaz, he vigorously believes his beliefs, but he is at a total loss to know God. Eliphaz represents the kind of humbug that results from remaining true to conviction instead of to facts which dispute the conviction. The difference between an obstinate man and a strong-minded man lies just here: an obstinate man refuses to use his intelligence when a matter is in dispute, while a strong-minded man makes his decision after having deliberately looked at it from all standpoints, and when opposed, he is willing to give reasons for his decision.

1. The Weapons of the Temporising Mind $(Job\ 15:1-6)$

Then answered Eliphaz the Temanite and said, Should a wise man suffer vain knowledge, and fill his belly with the east wind? Should he reason with unprofitable talk? or with speeches wherewith he can do no good? (Job 15:1-3)

A temporising mind is one that takes its position from immediate circumstances and never alters that position. Eliphaz says that Job is simply bombastic; he sees in Job what he is himself. The weapon of a temporising mind is sarcasm. There is a difference between sarcasm and irony (cf. Job 12:1-3). Sarcasm is the weapon of the weak man; the word literally means to tear flesh from the bone. Both Isaiah and the apostle Paul make free use of irony, but they never use sarcasm. If a weak man is presented with facts he cannot understand, he invariably turns to sarcasm.

Eliphaz addresses a "man of straw," but all the time he purports to be talking to Job. First, he takes the scolding turn—"All you say about the suffering you are going through is much ado about nothing." Scolding is characteristic of the mind which is in a corner and does not see the way out; it falls back therefore to its own entrenched position. No one damns like an theologian, nor is any quarrel so bitter as a religious quarrel. If God can be summed up in a phrase—and Eliphaz and every man with a creed holds that He can be-then there is the ban of finality about the view: "What I say is God"; and this is the essential nature of religious tyranny. Up to the time of the war, God, to many a man, was merely his own theological statement of Him; but now his religious forms of belief have been swept away and for a while he says—"I have lost my faith in God." What has happened is that though he has lost his faith in his statement of God, he is on the way to finding God Himself. Never be afraid if your circumstances dispute what you have been taught about God; be willing to examine what you have been taught, and never take the conception of an theologian as infallible; it is simply an attempt to state things.

2. The Weight of the Traditional Manner $(Job\ 15:7-13)$

Art thou the first man that was born? Or wast thou made before the hills? Hast thou heard the secret of God? and dost thou restrain wisdom to thyself? What knowest thou, that we know not? What understandest thou, which is not in us? (Job 15:7-9)

When once the sledge-hammer of tradition is brought to bear there is nothing more to say—"With us are both the grey-headed and the very aged men, much elder than thy father." Eliphaz says to Job-"Do you imagine that you have a setting of the problem which has never been dealt with before?" The Pharisees adopted this method with Jesus. Our Lord claimed that the law and the prophets were until Himself. "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, . . . but I say unto you . . . " The Pharisees said, "We have all the weight of history behind us and the lore of tradition, consequently the constitution of God is with us and not with You; You are devil-possessed and a sinner," and they put Him to death. That is the traditional manner at its worst.

The "Eliphaz" method has hindered more souls in developing the life with God than almost any other thing, because very few men are willing to say: "Yes, I have a re-statement of the problem which has never been dealt with traditionally." When once the weight of what was known in the past is brought to bear, it crushes the life out of what is going on in the present. If the traditional manner has any weight at all, it should make men courteous with the problems which are recent. Paul's advice to Timothy was—"Let no man despise thy youth." "Don't try to make up for your youth by dogmatism and talk, but see that you walk in such a manner that you are an example to the believers." No really wise, liberal-minded person ever needs to say, "Remember how old I am."

Traditional belief has the root of the matter in it, but its form is often archaic. We begin our religious life by believing our beliefs, we accept what we are taught without questioning; then when we come up against things we begin to be critical and we find that however right those beliefs are, they are not right for us because we have not bought them by suffering. Job's experiences and his suffering made him re-state his beliefs. It is absurd to tell a man he must believe this and that; in the meantime he cannot. The traditional manner sits on the safety valve of every new type of experience. After the war, the Redemption will need to be re-stated theologically. Redemption must be seen to be God's "bit," not man's. A man cannot redeem himself. At present "Redemption" is not in the vocabulary of the average earnest Christian man. When the traditional believer hears men talk as they are doing, he is apt to get scared and to squash the life out of what, behind its insufficient expression, is going to be a re-illumination of traditional truth. If Eliphaz had been wise he would have seen what Job was getting at—"Job is facing something I do not see; I don't understand his problem, but I will treat him with respect." Instead of that he said, "According to my traditional belief, you are a hypocrite, Job."

3. The Ways of the Theological Method (Job 15:14–16)

Behold, He putteth no trust in His saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in His sight. How much more abominable and filthy is man, which drinketh iniquity like water? (Job 15:15–16)

Theology is the science of religion, an intellectual attempt to systematise the consciousness of God. If we take the doctrine of the Trinity (which is a noble attempt of the mind of man to put into an theological formula the Godhead as revealed in the Bible) and say—"That is God," every other attempt at a statement of the Godhead is met by a sledge-hammer blow of finality. My theology has taken the place of God and I have to say—"That is blasphemy." Theology is second, not first; in its place it is a hand-maid of religion, but it becomes a tyrant if put in the first place. The great doctrines of predestination and election are secondary matters, they are attempts at definition, but if we take sides with the theological method we will damn men who differ from us without a minute's hesitation. Is there any form of belief which has taken the place of God with me? We only believe along the line of what we conceive of God, and when things happen contrary to that line, we deny the experience and remain true to our theological method. Job is on the right trail.

4. The Words of the Tragedy-Monger (Job 15:17-35)

I will shew thee, hear me; and that which I have seen I will declare. (Job 15:17)

Eliphaz empties all the vials of his wrath on Job, he takes the facts of Job's life and colours them, then states them again as "a man of straw." He pictures the terrific tragedy which is likely to happen to his "man of straw," and drives it home with—"Thou art the man." If Job is right, Eliphaz must be wrong, so he has to come to the conclusion that Job is a hypocrite, the worst of bad men, because what his creed declares to be the portion of a bad man, has come to Job. This accounts for the tirade of Eliphaz.

As a product of shallow evangelical teaching, people are led to "cod" themselves into believing that they are what they know perfectly well they are not; whereas the New Testament says if a man has the Holy Spirit it will show itself in fruit—"Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." There are any number of men who suddenly realise the shallowness of persuading themselves that they are what they are not, and they long for Reality.

The standard for God cannot be experience; the standard is what Jesus Christ has revealed about God. If anything we may be told about God contradicts the manifestation given by Jesus Christ, we are at liberty to say, "No, I cannot believe that." Things have been taught about God which are seen to be diabolical when viewed in the light of Our Lord's revelation of Him. Remain steadfastly true to what you have learned, and when you have to suspend your judgement, say it is suspended. This was Job's attitude all through. "Your creed distorts the character of God, but I know in the end He will prove to be all that I trust Him to be, a God of love and justice, and absolutely honourable."

THE FRONTIERS OF DESPAIR Job 16–17

Then as I weary me and long and languish, Nowise availing from that pain to part
Desperate tides of the whole great world's anguish
Forced thro' the channels of a single heart,
Straight to thy presence get me and reveal it,
Nothing ashamed of tears upon thy feet,
Show the sore wound and beg thine hand to heal it,
Pour thee the bitter, pray thee for the sweet.
F. W. H. Myers

Up till now we have seen Job as a sane pessimist, but now we find him on the frontiers of despair. A man may get to the point of despair in a hundred and one different ways, but when he does get there, there is no horizon. In everything else there is hope that a dawn may come, but in despair there is no hope of anything brighter, it is the most hopeless frontier a human mind can enter without becoming insane. An insane person is never despairing, he is either immensely melancholy or immensely exalted. Despair is the hopelessness that overtakes a sane mind when it is pushed to the extreme in grief.

1. The Revolt against Pose (Job 16:1-5)

Then Job answered and said, I have heard many such things: miserable comforters are ye all. (Job 16:1–2)

Job ironically takes on the pose which Eliphaz adopted, the pose of the superior person. Eliphaz has scolded Job and said that he is suffering because he is a bad man and a hypocrite. Job recognises that Eliphaz does not begin to understand his problem, and he revolts against pose. It is difficult to evade pose in religious life because it is of the nature of unconscious priggishness. If you have the idea that your duty is to catch other people, it puts you on a superior platform at once and your whole attitude takes on the guise of a prig. This too often is the pose of the earnest religious person of to-day. Of all the different kind of men one meets the preacher takes the longest to get at, for this very reason; you can get at a doctor or any professional man much more quickly than you can a professionally religious man.

The religious pose is based, not on a personal relationship to God, but on adherence to a creed. Immediately we mistake God for a creed, or Jesus Christ for a form of belief, we begin to patronise what we do not understand. When anyone is in pain the thing that hurts more than anything else is pose, and that is what Job is fighting against here. No one revolts against a thing without a reason for doing so, not necessarily a wrong reason, because revolt is of a moral order. If we come across a counterfeit, reality is sure to be found somewhere. Job is up against the religious pose of men who do not begin to understand where his sorrow lies.

2. The Recapitulation of Pain (Job 16:6-22)

Job's honesty and his freedom from cowardice come out very clearly; he would not say he was guilty of what he knew he was not guilty. He says, "I am not suffering because I have committed sin; I do not know why I am suffering, but I know that is not the reason." The majority of us would have caved in and said, "Oh, well, I suppose I am worse than I thought I was." What looks like revolt against God may really be not against God at all, but against the presentation being given of Him.

(a) The Psychology of It (Job 16:6–8)

Though I speak, my grief is not assuaged: and though I forbear, what am I eased? But now He hath made me weary: Thou hast made desolate all my company. (Job 16:6–7)

Many forms of grief find relief in expression—"the garment of words expressing the thing," but Job says that he cannot get any assuagement of his grief through expressing it. Not one of his friends can endure him; they believe he is desolate because God has left him. Every line of Job's experience seems psychologically to justify their judgement of him, and yet Job knows that what they say is not the explanation.

(b) The Providence of It (Job 16:9–15)

God hath delivered me to the ungodly, and turned me over into the hands of the wicked. I was at ease, but He hath broken me asunder. (Job 16:11–12)

These verses describe in Oriental terms the providence of Job's pain; everything has come out against him. "God seems to have engineered everything dead against me; the inner circumstances and the outer are all the same—God has beset me behind and before like a wild beast; everything in my providential setting and my human life goes to prove that my pain is the outcome of my sin."

(c) The Pathos of It (Job 16:16-22)

O earth, cover thou not my blood, and let my cry have no place... My friends scorn me: but mine eye poureth out tears unto God. O that one might plead for a man with God, as a man pleadeth for his neighbour! When a few years are come, I shall go the way whence I shall not return. (Job 16:18, 20–22)

This is not the pathos of a whining beggar who "puts it on" in order to awaken sympathy. Job's recounting of his suffering is not the expression of self-conscious pathos; he is stating for his own sake that he is sane, that he is in despair, and, so far as he can see, he is perfectly justified in being pessimistic.

There are many things like this as the outcome of this war, and we have to be careful lest we take on the religious pose, or the evangelical pose, or the denominational pose, or any pose that is not real, when we come across suffering in which there is no deliverance and no illumination. The only thing to do is to be reverent with what we do not understand. The basis of things is tragic; therefore God must find the way out, or there is no way out. Human reasoning and a human diagnosis of things will do exactly what Job's friends did, viz., belittle the grief.

3. The Recognition of Pre-Destiny (Job 17)

If we look for understanding from a person and do not get it, the first feeling is one of revolt and indignation against him; but when we begin to examine things, we may find that after all he is not to blame for his density. It is this element that increases the suffering of Job, while at the same time it clears him from condemnation. Everything at the back of his life and of his creed, goes to justify the conclusion he has come to.

(a) In the Density of Men (Job 17:1-4)

For Thou hast hid their heart from understanding. (Ioh 17:4)

When we look for our friends to understand, and find they do not, we accuse them of being dense. In grief the sufferer frequently declares that no one on earth can assist him. This is sometimes a pose, but Job is seeing that his friends' density does not lie with them, but with the fact of predestination. There are some kinds of suffering and temptation and sorrow no one can sympathise with, and by means of them a man gets on to the solitary way of life. It is not the suffering of a man who has done wrong and knows it; it is an isolation in which no one can sympathise, God alone can come near.

The suffering of Job is accounted for by the fact that God and Satan had made a battleground of his life, and he is beginning to discover that it is God who has closed up the understanding of his friends. Satan has declared that Job does not love God for Himself, but only for His blessings, and now everything in the way of shelter and comradeship and sympathy has been completely stripped from Job, and he sees that God must have allowed it. This is the deepest line Job has come to as yet, but he still clings to it that God is honourable. "I have lost my family, my wealth, my friends, the consolation of my creed—I have lost everything to which a man can at all look for comfort; yet, though He slay me, I will trust in Him." This is supreme despair, along with extraordinary confidence in God who meantime looks like a moloch. ¹⁷

(b) In the Discretion of Men (Job 17:5-10)

Upright men shall be astonied at this, and the innocent shall stir up himself against the hypocrite. . . . But as for you all, do ye return, and come now; for I cannot find one wise man among you. (Job 17:8, 10)

Job is recounting the fact that his experiences of sorrow and difficulty have so come about that the wise element of discretion in men must make them pass judgement against him. Everything seems against him: not only his creed, but the ordinary sagacity of men. There is nothing more agonising to a man who knows his own integrity than to find that the best people leave him alone, not because they do not know why he suffers, but because they are sure he is more in the wrong than he says, and their view is backed by their own discretion and knowledge. As in the case of the density of men, this discretion must not be laid at the door of men, but at the predestiny of the way human wisdom is fixed. The predestiny of human wisdom is rationalism. Any number of things happen which are not reasonable, and human discretion is apt to say that the man who suffers unreasonably is to blame; and when it is pointed out that the basis of things is without reason, men say that is only a passing difference. The Bible reveals that the basis of things is not reasonable, but tragic. When a man is driven to the bottom board, he gets to the tragedy, not to the reason; he is alone with God, and if God does not see him through, despair is the only place for him. The more deeply and earnestly and directly a man thinks, the more he finds what Solomon says is true—"He that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow." It is not Job's humour 18 that brings him to a pessimist's point of view, but his plain sanity; he refuses to say that his pessimism is a mood; optimism is a mood. If God does not see Job through, Satan has won his wager; if God does not come on the scene somewhere, it is a forlorn hope, and Satan will have proved that no one loves God for His own sake.

^{18.} humour: mood, temperament, or disposition.

Everything a man can rely upon has disappeared, and yet Job does not curse God; he admits that his former creed is not right, neither are his friends right, yet he declares steadily that in the end God will be justified.

(c) In the Despair before Men (Job 17:11-16)

Job cannot hide his despair. For unfathomable pathos, verse 11 is unequalled in any language under heaven:

My days are past, my purposes are broken off, even the possessions of my heart. (Job 17:11 RV mg)

A certain type of religious hypocrisy makes men hide what they feel, but Job has come to the place where he cannot hide it—"I cannot pretend that I am comforted of God," he says. If only Job could have taken on the pose that he had the comfort of God, his friends would not have challenged him, but he says, "I have no comfort; I do not see God, neither can I talk to Him; all I know is that my creed and former belief must be wrong. I do not know what to accept, but I am certain God will prove that He is just and true and right, and I refuse to tell a lie in order to help Him out."

This attitude of religious faith is finely expressed by the Psalmist—"Then will I go unto the altar of God, unto God my exceeding joy"(Psalm 43:4). This is sublime faith, the faith that Jesus demanded of John the Baptist. ". . . And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Me." Will I stick to it, without any pretence or humbug, that God is righteous, although everything in my actual experience seems to prove that He is cruel? Most of us are hypocrites, we are too afraid to state the thing as Job did. We say right out, "God is cruel to allow me to go through this, and I refuse to believe in Him any more." Job stuck to his point that when everything was known it would not be to God's dishonour, but to His honour.

Because of this war, a great number of men in lesser degree have arrived at the place Job has got to, their creeds about God have gone, and it would be the height of absurdity to pretend that their former beliefs of God are true as they see Him now. It does not follow because a man has lost belief in his beliefs that therefore he has lost faith in God. Many a man has been led to the frontiers of despair by being told he has backslidden, whereas what he has gone through has revealed that his belief in his beliefs is not God. Men have found God by going through hell, and it is the men who have been face to face with these things who can understand what Job went through. All the impatience and irritation against the religious life, so called, is accounted for on the same line as Job's revolt against religious pose—"If they would only stop their pose and face facts as they are; be reverent with what they don't understand, and assist me in my faith in God." Job's friends were in the right place when they sat with him dumbfounded for seven days; they were much nearer God then than afterwards. Immediately they took up the cudgels for God, ¹⁹ they took on a religious pose, lost touch with the reality of actual experience, and ended in being bombastic.

THE BITTEREST HURT IN LIFE Job 18–20

Nay but much rather let me late returning Bruised of my brethren, wounded from within.
Stoop with sad countenance and blushes burning.
Bitter with weariness and sick with sin,—

Safe to the hidden house of thine abiding Carry the weak knees and the heart that faints, Shield from the scorn and cover from the chiding, Give the world joy, but patience to the saints. F. W. H. Myers

The bitterest hurt in life is to be wounded in the house of your friends; to be wounded by an enemy is bad enough, but it does not take you unawares, you expect it in a measure. "My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends have forgotten me. . . . All my inward friends abhorred me: and they whom I loved are turned against me" (Job 19:14, 19).

1. The Removal of the Atmosphere of Comradeship (Job 18)

There is always an intangible something which makes a friend, it is not what he does, but what he is. You feel the better for being in the presence of some men. Job is suffering because his friends have turned against him; he has lost the atmosphere of comradeship. He has no explanation for what he is going through, no line of exonerating God.

^{19.} took up the cudgels for: came to the defence of.

(a) The Dignity of Withdrawal (Job 18:1-4)

Then answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said, How long will it be ere ye make an end of words? Mark, and afterwards we will speak. (Job 18:1–2)

In this withdrawal of comradeship there is an acuteness of suffering which is difficult to state. Job is hurt, and his friends not only tackle his belief, but they have withdrawn all support from him. The sympathy which is reverent with what it cannot understand is worth its weight in gold. The friends have stopped giving this kind of sympathy to Job, instead they say, "We know why it is you suffer." By sticking to his creed a man is able to withdraw with dignity simply because there is so much he does not see.

Bildad is certain that Job is wrong and he is right, and the puzzling thing is that Bildad can prove his statements, while Job has to remain silent. This is one of the biggest stings in life. When a man gets to Reality he has to get there alone, there is no comradeship. He may have had comradeship up to a certain point, then he is told, "Now we have to leave you, you are outside the pale." The men who act like this have the logic of it on their side, but the man who is face to face with facts knows that logic is only an attempt to explain facts, it does not give us the facts. The man who does not believe that the basis of things is tragic may get the best of it in argument, but the man who gets the best of it in fact is the one who believes in God yet has to remain inarticulate.

Bildad describes the worst man he can think of, and Job says, "All this has happened to me, and you say therefore I must be a bad man, but I say I am not. You have the logic of your creed, while I have the reality of my experience. The God of your creed is One who would make me an atheist. The God who will explain my experience I have not yet found, but I am confident there is such a God, and meantime I refuse to accept your counterfeit of Him."

There are countless experiences like Job's to-day; men are being called atheists who are not atheists at all but are simply rebelling against the presentation of God which is being thrust upon them. If to accept a presentation of God means the denial of things he knows to be facts, a man is in a better case who says with Job, "I will not accept an explanation of God which makes me call a fact not a fact."

(b) The Discourse in the Withdrawal (Job 18:5–21)

Yea, the light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine.... Surely such are the dwellings of the wicked, and this is the place of him that knoweth not God. (Job 18:5, 21)

A man has to cover his retreat somehow, and Bildad withdraws in a cloud of rhetoric; his description of the wicked man is a covert description of Job in his present condition. He recounts what Job has gone through and makes it the experience of a thorough-paced hypocrite—"I have satisfied my mind that you are a hypocrite; you are suffering because you are bad." Bildad airs his complete knowledge of the psychology of wickedness as God must deal with it, but evidently with as complete an ignorance of God as of man. His indignation with Job is petty, you can almost hear him puffing with righteous annoyance. The friends' speeches prove that when Providence or suffering contradicts any form of credal belief, the holder of the creed becomes vindictive in trying to justify what is threatened, and no longer discerns the truth.

2. The Reaction of the Affection of Courage (Job 19)

(a) The Appeal of Discouragement (Job 19:1-5)

Then Job answered and said, How long will ye vex my soul, and break me in pieces with words? (Job 19:1–2)

"Discouragement is disenchanted egotism" (Mazzini), i.e., the heart knocked out of self-love. Job had been in love with his creed, now belief in his creed is gone and he is completely at his wits' end, and from the centre of his discouragement he makes his appeal to the men whom he had a right to expect would stand by him. "You take the side of the Providence of God," he says, "which undoubtedly seems my enemy." This chapter is not only an expression of real agony and sorrow, but also of the stout integrity which will not allow itself to tell a lie for the honour of God. "God seems to be my enemy providentially," says Job, "and you say it is because I am bad; but I say that that is not the reason."

(b) The Account of Desolateness (Job 19:6–20)

Know now that God hath overthrown me, and hath compassed me with His net. Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard: I cry aloud, and there is no judgement. (Job 19:6–7)

Job's statements are not coloured, he simply states what has happened to him—everything has gone and no explanation has been given him. There is no bright side to some troubles. There is no reasonable hope for countless lives on account of this war, and it is shallow nonsense to tell them to "cheer up"; life to them is a hell of darkness of the most appalling order. The one who preaches at such a time is an impertinence, but the one who says "I don't know why you are going through this, it is black and desperate, but I will wait with you," is an unspeakable benediction and sustaining. Job has no one to do this for him, his one-time friends simply add to his bitterness; they too have been hit along the line of their creed, and they are indignant and talk only on the religious line.

(c) The Agony of Dereliction (Job 19:21-29)

Have pity on me, have pity on me, O ye my friends; for the hand of God hath touched me. . . . For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. (Job 19:21, 25)

The question of immortality is not necessarily implied in Job's words; he is stating that he believes a time will come when an umpire will arise who will expound to him what he is going through—to the justification of God as well as of himself. It is heroism almost unequalled to say, as Job did, "Though He slay me, I will stick to it that God is a God of love and justice and truth. I see no way out at all, but I will remain true to my belief that when the whole thing is known God will not be condemned." All through Job refuses to take the easy way out along the line of his former creed.

3. The Recession of the Apprehension of Communion (Job 20)

The withdrawal of your most intimate friend with the conviction that you are wrong, means the loss of the atmosphere of comradeship and all that is represented by the closer intimacies of communion.

(a) The Disdain of the Offended (Job 20:1-3)

Then answered Zophar the Naamathite, and said, . . . I have heard the check of my reproach, and the spirit of my understanding causeth me to answer. (Job 20:1, 3)

Zophar speaks with dignity, but dignity is not an indication of discernment. Zophar has listened to Job's words but not to the spirit of them; he is ashamed of the attitude his former friend has taken. A retreat from comradeship is nearly always covered by a terrific amount of utterance either in writing or speech. Bildad withdraws with descriptions; Zophar gives a disquisition as to why he turns on Job with disdain.

(b) The Disquisition of the Offensive (Job 20:4–29)

Knowest thou not this of old, since man was placed upon earth, that the triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment? (Job 20:4–5)

One point of mercy is that the friends do not put the curse on Job directly. Cursing with us is only profane language, an expression and no more, but in the case of the curse of an Arab or a Hebrew the curse lies in the words themselves: if the curse is uttered it is impossible, according to their conviction, but that it shall fall. Zophar is uttering this kind of curse, only indirectly, and it gives his words tremendous power. The power of the spoken word accounts for the prominent place given in the Bible to prophesying and preaching.

Job's strong utterances are not against God, but against the statements of his former creed. The man who will stand true to God behind the expression of his creed is true to his belief in God, instead of to the presentation of Him which is in dispute. If you listen to a man who has been sorely hit, he may utter what, to you who have not been hit, sounds blasphemous. Job's claim is that his friends ought to have known that it was not imagination made him speak as he did, but the fact that he had been desperately hard hit. The only way out for Job is not on the line of reason, but on the line of implicit confidence, such as he expresses in chapter 13—"Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him."

THE PRIMAL CLASH Job 21–25

If we are going to understand the ordinary run of human life we must take into account the extraordinary experiences and tragedies. One reason for the futility of pseudo-evangelism is that we have taken the mediocre man, the average man, as the one best able to expound Christian experience. Christianity does embrace the weakest and the feeblest, but it is the men of exceptional experiences, such as Job or the apostle Paul, who make clear the basis of things. The "Primal Clash" means that we are down to the foundation of things.

1. The Realising Sense of Perverseness (Job 21)

What is the Almighty that we should serve Him? and what profit should we have, if we pray unto Him?... God layeth up His iniquity for His children: He rewardeth him, and he shall know it... Behold, I know your thoughts and the devices which ye wrongfully imagine against me... How then comfort ye me in vain, seeing in your answers there remaineth falsehood? (Job 21:15, 19, 27, 34)

It is soul certainty that the world needs, even more than sound principles—not soul facility, but soul certainty, not ready religion, but sure.

Dr. Forsyth²⁰

Job persists in stating that the basis of things is not clear or easy to understand. "It is absurd to say, as you are doing," he says, "that God punishes the evil man and looks after the good, there is so much perversity at the basis of things that that explanation won't do." The friends give this explanation because they are true to their creed, and Job says, "I held the same creed as you do until I came to my great trouble." Their creed was based on sound principles, but what is needed is a sound relationship at the basis of things. When things are suddenly altered by bereavement or by some tension in personal experience, we find ourselves wonderfully at home with what Job says. There is a wildness about things, and we revolt against the people who explain everything on the basis of sound principles. They have everything ready to hand, and can tell you just where everyone goes wrong; but Job's contention is that when a man is face to face with things as they are, easy explanations won't do, for things are not easy; there is a perverseness all through. If Job is not right in his contention, then the Redemption is "much ado about nothing."

2. The Reasoning Severity of Pharisaism (Job 22)

Then Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said, Can a man be profitable unto God, as he that is wise may be profitable unto himself? . . . Acquaint now thyself with Him, and be at peace: thereby good shall come unto thee. (Job 22:1–2, 21)

Many a gross Pharisee is a mighty moralist and he believes himself sincere with it. The deadliest Pharisaism is not hypocrisy, it is the unconscious Pharisaism of unreality.

Dr. Forsyth

The nature of Pharisaism is that it must stand on tiptoe and be superior. The man who does not want to face the foundation of things becomes tremendously stern and keen on principles and on moral reforms. A man who is hyperconscientious is nearly always one who has done something irregular or who is morbid; either he is close on the verge of lunacy, or he is covering up something wrong by tremendous moral earnestness along certain lines of reform. A Pharisee shuts you up, not by loud shouting, but by the unanswerable logic he presents; he is bound to principles, not to a relationship. There is a great amount of Pharisaism abroad to-day, and it is based on "devotee-ness" to principles. Devotion to a cause is the great mark of our day, and in religion it means being devoted to the application of religious principles. A disciple of Jesus Christ is devoted to a Person, not to principles.

Job's experience flatly contradicts the creed of this particular Pharisee, Eliphaz, so he jumps on Job. His words are eloquent and his charges terrific; he sums up all the facts and informs Job that he has maltreated the innocent, wronged the widow, and starved the orphan—

Is not thy wickedness great? And thine iniquities infinite? For thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, and stripped the naked of their clothing. Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink, and thou hast withholden bread from the hungry. (Job 22:5–7)

This is always the dodge of a Pharisee, whether he is a demagogue or a religious man, he must make a moral issue somewhere. If he can rouse up a passion for a neglected principle, it is exactly what he wants, but there is no reality in it. The Pharisaism of Our Lord's day was based on the principles of Judaism, and when Jesus Christ came the Pharisees did not recognise Him but said, "You are a hypocrite, we can prove it." Many of the religious phases of to-day do not touch reality, but only the Pharisaic insistence on a certain form of sound doctrine, and the man who is up against things finds nothing but chaff. Every denominationalist is certain that the crowd who does not agree with what "we" call our sound principles must be wrong; he never imagines that the "Job" type of man can be right with God. When God spoke to Eliphaz, as He did at the close, it would be the last humiliation for Eliphaz to find that after all from God's standpoint Job was the only one among them who was right. In the meantime it is far easier to stand by the utterances of Eliphaz than by the utterances of Job.

The Pharisee is an intense moralist (see John 16:2; Hebrews 13:13). When Jesus Christ came He was found to be unresolvable by every set of religious principles, that was His "reproach." To "go forth therefore unto Him without the camp, bearing His reproach," does not mean going outside the worldly crowd; it means being put outside the religious crowd you belong to. One of the most poignant bits of suffering for a disciple comes along that line. If you remain true to Jesus Christ there are times when you will have to go through your convictions and out the other side, and most of us shrink from such a step because it means going alone. The "camp" means the religious set you belong to; the set you do not belong to does not matter to you.

Eliphaz is certain that Job is so bad that he wonders at the patience of God with him. If Eliphaz had been in the position of God, he would have excommunicated Job right away; and yet Job is the one who is face to face with Reality. To-day men are not asking, "Is the thing true?" but "Is it real?" It is a matter of indifference whether a thing is true; any number of things can be demonstrated to be true which do not matter to us. Have I a real God, or am I trying to produce a Pharisaic cloak for myself? Job would not accept a Pharisaic cloak; he would not grant that he was wrong, neither would he say that the friends' creed was right. He was in a quandary, but he knew that God was real, and therefore he would wait until He appeared.

3. The Revolutionary Struggle of Prayer (Job 23–24)

Oh that I knew where I might find Him! that I might come even to His seat! I would order my cause before Him, and fill my mouth with arguments. (Job 23:3–4)

There is no reality without struggling. If you are not called to wrestle, it is only because the wrestling is being done for you.

Dr. Forsyth

The reason the experience of Redemption is so easy is because it cost God so much. If my religion slips easily into my life it is because someone else has paid the price for it. If, however, the simple experience is taken as true to the whole of life, we will be misled; only if we take the experience of those who have paid the price for us, do we get to Reality. It is men like Job and the apostle Paul who bring us to the basis of things, not the average Christian among us, who knows no more why the basis of his salvation is Redemption than the average common-sense man knows the basis of ordinary human life. We must get hold of the great souls, the men who have been hard hit and have gone to the basis of things, and whose experiences have been preserved for us by God, that we may know where we stand. One of the reasons for the futility of pseudo-evangelism is that it bases its doctrine on the shallow weak things it has saved. Thank God, Christianity does save the shallow weak things, but they are not the ones to diagnose Christianity, they are the expression of the last reach of Christianity. Paul said—"... not many mighty, not many noble, are called"—he did not say "not any mighty, not any noble." It is Our Lord Himself, and men like Job in the Old Testament and Paul in the New who give us the indication of where we are to look for the foundation of our faith when it is being shaken.

Job's cry, "Oh that I knew where I might find Him!" is the birth of evangelical prayer on the basis of Redemption. The "finding" cannot be by reasoning or by religious faith; the only way to find God is through prayer. In the religious life of the Pharisee, prayer becomes a rite, a ceremony. In all religion based on sound principles prayer is an exercise, a ceremony, it is not blood or passion, not actual from the whole manhood. In such prayers there is magnificently beautiful diction which one needs to be in a calm, quiet state of mind to appreciate. The most beautiful prayers are prayers that are rites, but they are apt to be mere repetition, and not of the nature of Reality. There is no sting in them, no tremendous grip of a man face to face with things. There is no way out by rites or by religious beliefs, but only, as Jesus Christ indicates, by prayer.

It takes a tremendous amount of reiteration on God's part before we understand what prayer is. We do not pray at all until we are at our wits' end. "... their soul fainted in them. Then they cried unto the LORD in their trouble" (Psalm 107:5–6). During this war many a man has prayed for the first time in his life. When a man is at his wits' end it is not a cowardly thing to pray, it is the only way he can get in touch with Reality. "Oh that I knew where I could get into touch with the Reality that explains things!" There is only one way, and that is the way of prayer (see 1 John 5:14–15).

There are undoubtedly things which present a puzzle, e.g., the presentation of the basis of Redemption; how am I going to understand whether the Redemption covers everything, or only partially covers? Never by reasoning, only by prayer; and as sure as God is God you will get the answer and know of a certainty. If we take the line of disputing and spitting fire like Eliphaz did, we will get at nothing. We do not get insight by struggling, but by going to God in prayer. Most of us are wise in our own conceits, we have notions of our own which we want to see through. There is nothing to be valued more highly than to have people praying for us; God links up His power in answer to their prayers.

Redemption is easy to experience because it cost God everything, and if I am going to be regenerated it is going to cost me something. I have to give up my right to myself. I have deliberately to accept into myself something that will fight for all it is worth, something that will war against the desires of the flesh, and that will ask me to go into identification with the death of Jesus Christ, and these things produce a struggle in me. The majority of us prefer to get up and ride rather than to "get out and shove." It is only the people who "get out and shove" who really make things go. The men who are up against things just now and who are determined to get at Reality at all costs, and will not accept a thing on the religious line unless that line states Reality—these are the men who are paying the price for the next generation. The reason we are here in the natural world is because our mothers struggled for our existence, and the more unhindered the birth pangs the stronger and healthier the child. A thing is worth just what it costs.

4. The Redundant Sonorousness of Position (Job 25)

Then answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said, Dominion and fear are with Him, He maketh peace in His high places. Is there any number of His armies? And upon whom doth not His light arise? (Job 25:1–3).

We have the modern and insidious type of Pharisaism, the unconscious hypocrite, the man or woman not of fraud, but of pose, not of deep and dark design, but of subtle egotism, prompt certainty and facile religiosity.

Dr. Forsyth

Bildad's utterances here are inadvertent and wildly away from the theme. The modern Pharisee of the "Bildad" type is the man who has a pose to keep up; he is not touched by any problem himself, and when there is trouble on he comes out with these redundant phrases. Job does not get annoyed with Bildad, he is full rather of pity for him. Eliphaz stings Job because he takes up a superior position; he knows why Job suffers; he stands strong for his set of principles, but he is not in touch with Reality. Bildad is in touch with nothing, he is courageously heartless; he never thinks when he talks, but simply pours it out. The "Bildad" type is often met with in the pulpit; men roll out phrases and talk the most ponderous stuff with nothing in it. It is like a roll of thunder over your head when what you want is real nourishment. These men continually brought things to the surface and said to Job, "This is what you want." What a man wants is somewhere to rest his mind and heart, and the only place to rest in is God, and the only way to come to God is by prayer. Much of our praying has nothing in it; it is not the talk of a child to his Father when he has come up against things or is hurt. "Ask, and it shall be given you," Jesus says. We do not ask, we worry, whereas one minute in prayer will put God's decree at work, viz., that He answers prayer on the ground of Redemption. Jesus Christ did not say, "Ask what you like, and it shall be done unto you," but "ask what you will, ask when your will is in the thing that is a real problem to you," and God has pledged His honour that you will get the answer every time.

PARABLES Job 26-31

Be near me when my light is low, When the blood creeps, and the nerves prick And tingle; and the heart is sick, And all the wheels of Being slow.

Be near me when the sensuous frame Is rack'd with pangs that conquer trust; And Time, a maniac scattering dust, And Life, a Fury slinging flame.

Be near me when my faith is dry, And men the flies of latter spring, That lay their eggs, and sting and sing And weave their petty cells and die.

Be near me when I fade away, To point the term of human strife. And on the low dark verge of life The twilight of eternal day.

Tennyson

A parable is an earthly story which does not explain itself. Every one of us has an earthly story and the explanation of it is not to be found in its own expression, but only in the domain of the Designer of life. Job says that the explanation his friends give of his earthly story is hopeless, they are nowhere near understanding it; God alone is the Source from whence will come the explanation of all he is going through.

1. God and the Sublimities (Job 26)

Lo, these are parts of His ways: but how little a portion is heard of Him? But the thunder of His power who can understand? (Job 26:14)

The sublime things in Nature swamp our intelligent understanding of them; rugged mountain scenery, for instance, will awaken a sense of the sublime. The man who has never had the sense of the sublime awakened in him is scarcely born. The story of the earth itself is so full of sublimities that it requires God, not man, to expound it. If a man cannot expound the sublimities of Nature, he need not expect to be able to expound the sublimity of the human soul. The sublimities of Nature cannot be explained on the line of reason, but only on the line of the a-logical, that which goes beyond and underneath the logical. Job recognises this, and he implies, "If you imagine you can explain the deeper sublimities of a man's soul, you have not pondered human life enough." The Psalmist puts it in this way—"My God, Thou art the God of the mountains and of the fathomless deep, the God of the early mornings and late at nights; but there are deeper depths than these in me, my God; more mysterious things in my soul, and I cannot fathom my own way, therefore search me, O God" (see Psalm 139). Job is on the same line.

"Lo, these are but the outskirts of His ways: and how small a whisper do we hear of Him!" (Job 26:14 RV). In the Book of Job Nature is always referred to as being wild; this is a point of view we have forgotten nowadays. We talk about laws and findings, we give scientific explanations of thunder and of a sunset, and come to the conclusion that there is no unexplained sublimity in Nature at all. The wildness of Nature has to be recognised, there are forces in the earth and air and sea which baffle attempts at explanation or of control; all we can do is to give a direction for thought along certain lines.

Neither logic nor science can explain the sublimities of Nature. Supposing a scientist with a diseased olfactory nerve says that there is no perfume in a rose, and to prove his statement he dissects the rose and tabulates every part, and then says, "Where is the perfume? It is a fiction; I have demonstrated that there is none." There is always one fact more that science cannot explain, and the best thing to do is not to deny it in order to preserve your sanity, but to say, as Job did, "No, the one fact more which you cannot explain means that God must step in just there, or there is no explanation to be had."

2. God and the Subtleties (Job 27)

Moreover Job continued his parable, and said, . . . God forbid that I should justify you: till I die I will not remove mine integrity from me. My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go: my heart shall not reproach me so long as I live. (Job 27:1, 5–6)

God is never subtle in His revelations, but always elemental and simple. The "simple Gospel" does not mean simple to understand, but simple in the way God Himself is simple. Job says, "I have no explanation as yet of what I am going through; your explanation on the line of your creed is irritating nonsense, because it makes you leave out the facts which I know, while you try to explain the One none of us can get at, viz., God." Job is not speaking in spite, but in honesty—"If I were to justify you in your explanation I should sin against my conscience, and say that you have told the truth whereas in reality you have told a lie."

There is a difference between the subtlety of Eliphaz and the subtlety of Job. Eliphaz sums up the history of the wicked man and says that God does all these things to punish him, whereas Job recognises that the history of any man cannot be accounted for on the surface, and that God alone can explain His own dealings. The description Eliphaz gives of the wicked man is a covert condemnation of Job; he takes the facts of Job's present condition and puts them as the picture of a wicked man, while all the time he implies, "Thou art the man." "That is not the way to comfort me, or bring me any help," says Job. He does not brag and say he is a good man, but he does maintain that the reason he suffers is not because he is bad. "You pretend to know the attitude of God to things, but all that you describe as the experience of a wicked man I can give as my experience of being a good man."

The explanation of Job's suffering is the fact that God and Satan had made a battleground of his soul. It was not for Job's chastening or his perfecting, but for an ulterior purpose which he did not know, but his intuition made him stick to the fact that the only One who could explain the sublimities of Nature was the One who could explain what he was going through. "Though He slay me, though my creed goes and everything is destroyed, "yet I will trust in Him"—not trust Him to deliver me, but trust that He is honourable and just and true, and that I shall yet be justified in sticking to my faith in His honour, though meantime it looks as if He is deliberately destroying me.

There is a lot of cheap-jack talk just now regarding the British Empire, viz., that God is punishing us for our sins—a hopeless misrepresentation. The Cross of Calvary and the Redemption have to do with the sins of the world. If God began to punish the nations for their sins there would be no nation left on the face of the earth. Job takes the right line, that the difficulties are produced by a conflict of wills.

Beware of the subtleties which twist facts. It is possible to torture a man with a delicate type of mind, as in the case of Ugo Bassi,²¹ torture him not physically, but by suggesting that he has been guilty of base motives and deeds. The sensitiveness of Ugo Bassi's mind was such that after a while he began to believe he had been guilty unconsciously of the things he was accused of. Job's friends said to him, "We have all these facts about you, and they are only explainable along the line that you are a bad man; you may not be conscious of your badness, nevertheless you are a hypocrite, because our creed says that if a man trusts God, God will bless him; and instead of being blessed, you have been cursed in every way and have lost everything: therefore you must be a bad man." If Job had been of the Ugo Bassi stamp with a hypersensitive mind and not the robust spirit he was, he would have said, "Oh, well, I must be much worse than I imagined; and I must be guilty." But he stuck to it, "No, I have not been dishonourable and bad, you may say of me what you like, but that is not the reason why I suffer."

3. God and the Sublunary (Job 28)

Surely there is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold where they fine it. Iron is taken out of the earth, and brass is molten out of the stone. (Job 28:1–2)

Careful examination of every reference Job makes to geology or meteorology reveals that there is no significant or insignificant blunder in all he says; every reference is a piece of consummate accuracy. This in passing.

Every common-sense fact requires something for its explanation which common-sense cannot give. The facts of every day and night reveal things our own minds cannot explain. When a scientific man comes across a gap in his explanations, instead of saying, "There is no gap here," let him recognise that there is a gap he cannot bridge, and that he must be reverent with what he cannot understand. The tendency is to deny that a fact has any existence because it cannot be fitted into any explanation as yet. That "the exception proves the rule" is not true: the exception proves that the rule won't do; the rule is only useful in the greatest number of cases. When scientists treat a thesis as a fact they mean that it is based on the highest degree of probability. There are no "infallible" findings, and the man who bows down to scientific findings may be as big a fool as the man who refuses to do so. The man who prays ceases to be a fool, while the man who refuses to pray nourishes a blind life within his own brain and he will find no way out that road. Job cries out that prayer is the only way out in all these matters—

Whence then cometh wisdom? and where is the place of understanding?... Behold, the fear of the LORD, that is wisdom: and to depart from evil is understanding. (Job 28:20, 28)

4. God and the Shadows (Job 29)

Oh that I were as in months past, as in the days when God preserved me; when His candle shined upon my head, and when by His light I walked through darkness. (Job 29:2–3)

Truth for ever on the scaffold, Wrong for ever on the throne,—Yet that scaffold sways the Future, and, behind the dim unknown. Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.

James Russell Lowell

The "shadows" depict what Job is describing, viz., the things in human history and in personal experience that are shadowed by mystery and cannot be explained by reason or religious creeds, but only by belief in God who will make all plain in His own way. Job is saying that there is nothing in life you can reckon on with any certainty. We may say that if a man has been well brought up and has developed his own integrity and lived rightly, success will be sure to attend him, but you cannot calculate along that line. Never ignore the things that cannot be explained, put them on one side, but remember they are there and have to be reckoned with. There is a gap and a wildness in things and if God does not step in and adjust it, there is no hope; but God has stepped in by the Redemption, and our part is to trust confidently in Him. Either the pessimist is right when he says we are autumn leaves driven by the blast of some ultimate power without mind, or else the way out is by the Redemption of Jesus Christ.

5. God and the Scurrilous (Job 30)

And now I am their song, yea, I am their byword. . . . They flee far from me, and spare not to spit in my face. (Job 30:9–10)

Jesus Christ was in the case Job is describing, He was placed alongside the most scurrilous immorality of His day—"Behold, a gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!" And He was put to death between two malefactors. It is impossible to calculate on the line that virtue will bring a man to honour, and that uprightness will escape the punishment which falls on men who are not upright. Any explanation at all leaves a gap which cannot be bridged as yet.

6. God and the Scrupulous (Job 31)

If I have walked with vanity, or if my foot hath hasted to deceit; let me be weighed in an even balance that God may know mine integrity. (Job 31:5-6)

Job examines the statements of the creed and its moral findings, and then disputes it from his own experience—"Do you think I am trying to make out before God that I am what I have not been? would I talk to God with what would be blatant insolence if I had not the facts to back me up? The inference from the facts of my life is that I have been beyond reproach, and in my approach to God I will not say I have been guilty of what I know I have not been. I stand clear before God on every one of these lines, and though I do not see Him or know Him, I will stick to it that He is other than you say, and that when I do see Him He will not say that I deceived myself when I spoke the truth."

It is foolish to say that this chapter refers to a past dispensation and that we are in advance of it. We are in another dispensation, but not necessarily a better one. What man among us can come anywhere near the standard of integrity of Job? That kind of statement comes from accepting principles for guidance instead of a personal relationship. If I worship God from fear or superstition, then I am wrong, my heart has been "secretly enticed." Job's point of view is that if I do anything in order to appease God, I am committing iniquity. The only reason for my approach to God must be that He is what I believe Him to be, a God of honour and justice, not a God of coercive necromancy who demands that we do things without any reason. To-day we are dealing with the very thing for which the friends have pulled Job to pieces. There are people who say, "I will not, I dare not, accept the God you are presenting because He is not a moral God; there is something wrong in such a presentation, my whole being cries out against it, I cannot go to such a God as a Deliverer."

In these chapters Job is insisting that God must be other than his former creed said He was, and that it must be acknowledged that there are facts which the creed had not taken into account. Thank God for theology, but theology is second, not first; if we put it first, we will do what the friends did, refuse to look at facts and remain consistent to certain ideas which pervert the character of God. In the final run God will not have us say an untrue thing for the sake of His honour.

THE PASSION FOR AUTHORITY Job 32–37

In Elihu the passion for authority is represented. The average man in Job's condition is apt to break away from all authority. A lesser man than Job would have become a sophist and said that every man is a law unto himself, i.e., his own inner consciousness is sufficient law. Job was not of this order, neither was Elihu. The passion for authority is a noble one, but Elihu missed out the fact that authority to be worthy arises out of the nature of a superior moral integrity, and not simply from one who happens to be higher up in the scale than ourselves. Elihu comes with the idea that because God has said a thing, therefore it is authoritative: Job wants to know what kind of God it was who said it, is He a being whose character does not contradict the moral basis of life? Authority must be of a moral, not a superstitious character. Elihu's contention is, "Because God has said so," that is sufficient; or, "Because the creed says so," therefore it must be blindly accepted. To be without any authority is to be lawless, but to have only an internal authority is as bad as having a blind external authority; the two must meet together somehow.

1. The Inspiration of Autocratic Authority (Job 32)

Autocratic authority means to rule by right of insistence, not necessarily by right of personal integrity. Napoleon said of Jesus Christ that He had succeeded in making every human soul an appendage of His own because He had the genius of holiness. Other men exercised authority by coercive means, Jesus Christ never did, His authority was worthy. He proved Himself worthy not only in the domain of God, which we do not know, but in the domain of man, which we do know; He is worthy there, consequently He prevails to open the Book (see Revelation 5). Authority to be lasting must be of the same order as that of Jesus Christ, not the authority of autocracy or coercion, but the authority of worth, to which all that is worthy in a man bows down. It is only the unworthy in a man that does not bow down to worthy authority.

The Superior Conceit of Shyness (Job 32:1–22)

And Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite answered and said, I am young, and ye are very old; wherefore I was afraid, and durst not shew you mine opinion.
... Behold, I waited for your words; I gave ear to your reasons, while ye searched out what to say. Yea, I attended unto you, and behold, there was none of you that convinced Job, or that answered his words. (Job 32:6, 11–12)

There is a fine apparent modesty about Elihu. He says, "I waited for you to speak, but all I have listened to has made me angry, because Job has justified himself at the expense of God, and you have stopped short without challenging him in the right way, and now I will speak."

Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu . . . against Job was his wrath kindled, because he justified himself rather than God. (Job 32:2)

Elihu exhibits the superior conceit of shyness. There is quite possibly a superior conceit in a shy or quiet man. A man may keep silent not because he is really modest, but he does not intend to speak until he gets a proper audience—"I do not intend to bring out my notion of things until people are prepared to listen; I do not wish what I say to go into the mere rush of ordinary conversation, so I shall wait for a suitable opportunity." This does not altogether diagnose Elihu, but he certainly exhibits this characteristic.

Elihu says that the inspiration of authority comes from God simply because He is God, and not from any sense of right in Himself. Job stands up against this; he says, in effect, "I will not accept any authority on the ground of superstition; I must know the moral ingredient in the authority." This is the element Elihu loses sight of altogether.

2. The Insistence of Autocratic Authority (Job 33)

The Spiritual Consciousness of Submission

Behold, in this thou art not just: I will answer thee, that God is greater than man. Why dost thou strive against Him? For He giveth not account of any of His matters. (Job 33:12–13)

The antagonism of the friends in battling for their creed was an indication that they were getting shaky regarding it. But Elihu is not shaky, he does not accept the creed of the other three, he has a notion of his own based on the conception of autocratic authority, viz., that no man has any right to enquire whether God is good; it is a question of His supreme authority, and submission is the only line to take. It is dangerous to be conscious of submission to a spiritual power. The difference between fatalism and faith lies just here. Fatalism means, "My number's up; I have to bow to the power whether I like it or not; I do not know the character of the power, but it is greater than I am, and I must submit." The submission of faith is that I do know the character of the Power, and this was the line Job took-"Though He slay me, yet I will trust the fact that His character is worthy." This is the attitude of faith all through—I submit to One whose character I know but whose ways are obscured in mystery just now." We do know the character of God, if we are Christians, because we have it revealed to us in Jesus Christ—"He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Anything that contradicts the manifestation given in and through the Lord Jesus Christ cannot be true of God. Therefore we know that the character of God is noble and true and right, and any authority from God is based, not on autocracy or mere blind power, but on worthiness which everything in me recognises as worthy, therefore I submit. Elihu was moved with indignation because Job said, "I cannot submit to the fact that God has decreed such things as you say; you must give me room to say that your credal exposition of God is wrong. By your creed you prove me to be wrong where I know I am right; therefore if the facts I do know are disproved by you, how can I accept your explanation of the facts I do not know?" Elihu says God does not explain Himself, and you have no right to try and find Him out, it is sufficient to know that the autocratic authority of the Omnipotent has spoken, therefore you must submit. Job's sufferings have produced in him this attitude—"I want to know where what you call the supreme authority of the Almighty gets hold on the moral line of things, where it agrees, in part at least, with what I understand as worthy."

The same thing occurs in matters of religious controversy. Am I going to submit to the authority of a Church, or a Book or to the authority of a Person? If I submit to the authority of a Person it must be demonstrated that that Person is greater than I am on the "worthy" line, the line which is recognised as worthy by the majority of sane humanity; if He is greater there, then I will bow down to His authority at once.

3. The Indictment of Autobiographic Antagonism (Job 34–35)

(a) The Suffering Chastisement of Sinfulness (Job 34:35–37)

Job hath spoken without knowledge, and his words were without wisdom. My desire is that Job may be tried unto the end because of his answers for wicked men. For he addeth rebellion unto his sin, he clappeth his hands among us, and multiplieth his words against God.

Elihu sums up the autobiographic side, the subjective side. The great phase at present is the sophistic conception that a man is a law unto himself. Elihu is in advance of that: he says there is an authority other than myself. Job is looking for an authority, and he gives his own subjective experiences as the reason for disbelieving the presentation of God which has been given. On the ground of what he was going through, he was indignant at this presentation. Elihu says, "Your experiences are explainable on the line that you are a sinful man, not a hypocrite, as the others have said, but sinful, and God is chastising you. You have spoken rashly and wildly, and this is the way God is answering." This kind of view presents a conception not really based on facts, but which easily melts down any opposition by its sentimental presentation.

(b) The Sentimental Conception of the Supreme (Job 35:10-11)

But none saith, Where is God my maker, who giveth songs in the night; who teacheth us more than the beasts of the earth, and maketh us wiser than the fowls of the heaven? There is no pretence about Elihu; he says some sublime things, but in his tirade against experience he introduces a line that stirs up human sympathies without the basis of facts underneath. The sentimental line stirs up a conception of things which overlooks both the actual and the real facts and sweeps a man off his feet. It is all very well to have experiences, but there must be a standard for measuring them, and a standard more worthy than my own on the line on which I know I am worthy. The standard for Christian experience is not the experience of another Christian, but God Himself. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." "If you are My disciple," says Jesus, "the standard by which you are to measure your experiences as a regenerated saint is the character of God." "They took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus." The apostles bore a strong family likeness to Jesus Christ, their experience and their character were being brought up to God's standard.

There must be an authority which is internal as well as external. The tendency nowadays is to have no authority at all. A man says, "I will have no Church, no Bible, no God, nothing but my own self-realisation." This is the modern phase of sophistic religion. Every bit of morality a man has demands that there should be, not a coercive or autocratic authority, but a worthy authority. Elihu is speaking to Job on the subjective line as though Job were saying that there was no authority whatever binding upon him; whereas Job is getting at the right relationship to the real standard, and his protest is against a presentation of the standard which is not worthy.

4. The Interpretation of Absolute Authority (Job 36–37)

Elihu also proceeded, and said, Suffer me a little, and I will shew thee that I have yet to speak on God's behalf. (Iob 36:1–2)

If one may say it reverently, Almighty God is nothing but a mental abstraction unless He becomes concrete and actual, because an ideal has no power unless it can be realised. The doctrine of the Incarnation is that God did become actual, He manifested Himself on the plane of human flesh, and "Jesus Christ" is the name not only for God and Man in one, but the name of the personal Saviour who makes the way back for every man to get into a personal relationship with God. Jesus Christ declares that He is the exclusive way to the Father-"... neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him." Any theology which ignores Jesus Christ as the supreme Authority ceases to be Christian theology. "I am the Way," said Jesus, not the road we leave behind us, but the Way we stay in: "no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me." On the ground of His absolute, not coercive, authority, every man recognises sooner or later that Jesus Christ stands easily first.

(a) The Supreme Character of the Sublime (Job 36:22–26)

Behold, God exalteth by His power: who teacheth like Him? (Job 36:22)

Job's contention is that he has proved by experience that what he has been told about God cannot be true, "because," he says, "when you try to explain the facts I know in the light of the One whom you call God, you have to deny those facts; therefore I must conclude that your exposition of God is wrong." Elihu goes back to the position that it is no use trying to find out whether God is worthy; it is sufficient to know that He is supreme, a Being who issues His orders without the remotest regard to moral right; and the man who dares to try and discover whether the authority of God is morally right is a blasphemer and a dangerous man. Voltaire's scurrilous talk about God was mainly tremendous indignation at the presentation of God then prevailing.

There is always a tendency to produce an absolute authority; we accept the authority of the Church, or of the Bible, or of a creed, and often refuse to do any more thinking on the matter; and in so doing we ignore the essential nature of Christianity which is based on a personal relationship to Jesus Christ, and works on the basis of our responsibility. On the ground of the Redemption I am saved and God puts His Holy Spirit into me, then He expects me to react on the basis of that relationship. I can evade it by dumping my responsibility on to a Church, or a Book or a creed, forgetting what Jesus said—"Ye search the Scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have eternal life; and these are they which bear witness of Me; and ye will not come to Me, that ye may have life" (John 5:39–40, RV). The only way to understand the Scriptures is not to accept them blindly, but to read them in the light of a personal relationship to Jesus Christ. If we insist that a man must believe the doctrine of the Trinity and the inspiration of the Scriptures before he can be saved, we are putting the cart before the horse. All that is the effect of being a Christian, not the cause of it; and if we put the effect first we produce difficulties because we are putting thinking before life. Jesus says, "Come unto Me, and if you want to know whether My teaching is of God, do His will." A scientist can explain the universe in which common-sense men live, but the scientific explanation is not first; life is first. The same with theology; theology is the systematising of the intellectual expression of life from God; it is a mighty thing, but it is second, not first.

(b) The Sorrowful Condemnation of Sanity (Job 37:23–24)

Touching the Almighty, we cannot find Him out: He is excellent in power, and in judgement, and in plenty of justice; He will not afflict. Men do therefore fear Him: He respecteth not any that are wise of heart.

Elihu condemns Job sorrowfully, but absolutely; he declares that not only has Job made shipwreck of his faith, but he has become defiant in silencing the friends.

Job will not accept anything blindly, he says, "I must see that it does not contradict what I know." The apostle Paul speaks of "the foolishness of God" as pitted against the wisdom of men, and the wisdom of men when it saw Jesus Christ said, "That cannot be God." When the Judaic ritualists saw Jesus Christ, they said, "You are a blasphemer; You do not express God at all." Anna and Simeon were the only two of the descendants of Abraham who recognised who Jesus was, hence the condemnation of the other crowd. If two who had lived a life of communion with God could detect Jehovah as the Babe of Bethlehem within the symbolism, the others who did not recognise Him are to be condemned. They did not see Him because they had become blinded on the line of absolute authority, the line of symbolism or creed, and when that which was symbolised appeared, they could not see Him.

Every phase of this Book, with the exception of Job's own utterances, takes up the challenge of Satan—"No man, no matter how good he is, loves You for Your own sake. You call Job perfect, but touch the things You have given him, destroy his blessings, and he will curse You to Your face." Job's blessings were destroyed, and yet he clings to it, "I don't know the reason why I suffer; the reason you give is not the one, God alone can explain it to me, and I will wait for Him." Part of the gamble was that God must keep out of sight, and that Job must not be aided, and he was not. The exposition of Job's sufferings must be given in the light of this preface, which was never made known to him. Job never knew that Satan and Jehovah had made a battleground of his soul.

The problem in the Book of Job represents the problem of the whole world. No matter what a man's experiences may be, whether slight or terrific, there is something in this Book which gives him an indication as to why the Redemption was necessary, and also a line of explaining the otherwise inexplicable things of human experience.

THE PASSION FOR REALITY Job 38–41

We cannot kindle when we will
The fire which in the heart resides;
The spirit bloweth and is still,
In mystery our soul abides.
But tasks in hours of insight will'd
Can be through hours of gloom fulfill'd
With aching hands and bleeding feet
We dig and heap, lay stone on stone;
We bear the burden and the heat
Of the long day, and wish 'twere done,
Not till the hours of light return.
All we have built do we discern.

Matthew Arnold²²

The word "Reality" is used to represent the realm of God and the whole of mankind in correspondence. The creeds give us a theological statement of God, but Job's experience proves that a statement of belief does not give us God. The only way we get at God is through conscience, because through conscience we get at the moral relation to things. We have seen that Job would not bow down to an authority which had not its basis in what was right in actual life. God has to clear Himself from the wrong presentation given of Him by the friends, and although Job is right in repudiating their presentation, God rebukes him for remaining too much of an agnostic, and He leads him out along the line indicated when he said, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him," i.e., "I will trust that God is what my innate manhood tells me He must be." The authority we blindly grope after is God Himself, not a tendency making for righteousness, not a set of principles. Behind Reality is God Himself, and the final authority is a personal relationship. Christianity is a personal relationship to a personal God on the ground of the Redemption. The reason Jesus Christ is our Lord and Master is not first because He is God Incarnate, but because He is easily first in the human domain.

1. The Still Small Voice of God (Job 38:1-4a)

Then the LORD answered Job out of the whirlwind, and said, Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Gird up now thy loins like a man; for I will demand of thee, and answer thou Me. Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? . . . (see also Job 40:6–7)

God arraigns both Elihu and Job, He appeals to them to come before Him on the basis of their actual knowledge, and while being true to the facts they know, to leave room for facts they do not know. The still small voice is an appeal not to a superstitious belief in God, but to the actuality of God to man. God disposes altogether of a relationship to Himself born of superstitious dread—"No, stand like a man, and listen to facts as they are." God counsels Job-"Don't come to too hasty a conclusion, but gird up your loins like a man and wait. You have done right so far in that you would not have Me misrepresented, but you must recognise that there are facts you do not know, and wait for Me to give the revelation of them on the ground of your moral obedience." Job would not bow before God on the basis of superstition; he could not conceive such a God to be worthy. The ground of appeal is not that God says I must do a certain thing, but that the manhood in me recognises that what God says is likely to be right. Jesus Christ never coerced anyone; He never used the apparatus of sacerdotalism or of supernatural powers, or what we understand by revivals; He faced men on the ground on which all men stood, and refused to stagger human wits into submission to Himself.

2. The Sub-Scientific Value of Immanence (Job 38:4b-41)

"Immanence" means the notion of the immediate presence of God pervading everything, and the pantheist says that this view explains everything. Elihu is stating with enormous airs that "Humanity" is another name for God; whereas one of the big Bible doctrines is that Humanity is not God, and was created to be distinctly not God. There is evidence that God is in the facts of Nature, but also evidence that He is other than Nature. We may make a working definition of the laws of Nature, "but, remember," says God, "behind those laws I come."

Scientific dogmatism is as dangerous as religious dogmatism. Religious dogmatism takes a man's experience and tells him why everything has happened; but every now and again things happen outside human experience which cannot be explained. It is well to note what can be known, but no one has any right to be dogmatic about the things which cannot be known saving by revelation. We can state scientific laws so far as we have been able to discover them, but we are outside our domain if we say that those laws govern regions we know nothing about. Inferences based on the facts I know will never enable me to find God. I may study all the facts of geology and natural history, but where does the note of authority come in it all? The note of authority comes only through conscience. Laws are effects, not causes. If we can know God by means of our intellect, then Jesus Christ's claim to reveal God is a farce, and the Redemption nonsense.

Job declared that he could not know God—"I do not know God," he says, "but I do know that the God you describe in your creed cannot be God, because in order to make Him God you have to deny facts which I know." The friends said that the way out was to accept the agnostic position and become a fatalist—"Don't try to find out whether God's character is noble and right," and they ended in telling an untruth about God. God says, "When I reveal Myself it will be as the God of the morality you know," and yet we must never tie God up along the line of subjective experience.

The only reality in life is moral reality, not intellectual or aesthetic. Religion based on intellectualism becomes purely credal, Jesus Christ is not needed in it. The intellect does not get us at Reality, neither do the emotions alone, but conscience does, as soon as it relates itself to these two. The basis of things is not rational. Reason and intellect are our guides among things as they are, but they cannot explain things as they are. For instance, it is not rational that Christian nations should be at war. The basis of things is tragic, and intellect makes a man shut his eyes to this fact and become a superior person. One of the great crimes of intellectual philosophy is that it destroys a man as a human being and turns him into a supercilious spectator; he cuts himself off from relationship with human stuff as it is and becomes a statue.

A moral man, i.e., the man who will do the right and be the right thing in actual life, is more likely than any other kind of man to recognise God when He manifests Himself. If I become a devotee of a creed I cannot see God unless He comes along my line. It takes the whole man—conscience, intellect, will and emotions, to discover God as Reality. The man who is standing well within his own right, whose conscience is not yet awakened, feels no need of God. "I did not come to call him," said Jesus. But let a man come up against things, and he will find not a creed or a doctrine, but the Reality of God. The elemental facts a man comes up against transform his stubbornness into amenableness to Reality.

3. The Supernormal Vindication of Morality (Job 39-41)

Wilt thou also disannul My judgement? Wilt thou condemn Me that thou mayest be righteous? (Job 40:8)

In these chapters the whole of the universe is symbolised, and whatever the universe is, it is not tame. A certain type of modern science would have us believe it is, that we can harness the sea and air and earth. Quite true, you can, if you only read scientific manuals and deal with successful experiments; but before long you discover elements which knock all your calculations on the head and prove that the universe is wild and unmanageable. And yet in the beginning God intended man to control it; the reason he cannot is because he twisted God's order; instead of recognising God's dominion over himself, man became his own god, and by so doing lost control of everything else (see Genesis 3).

When Jesus Christ came He was easily Master of the life in the air and earth and sky, and in Him we see the order God originally intended for man. If you want to know what the human race is to be like on the basis of the Redemption, you will find it mirrored in Jesus Christ—a perfect oneness between God and man, no gap; in the meantime there is a gap, and the universe is wild, not tame. Every type of superstition pretends it can rule the universe, the scientific quack proclaims he can control the weather, that he has occult powers and can take the untameable universe and tame it. God says it cannot be done.

4. The Strangely Stirred Valley of Job (Job 40)

Then Job answered the LORD, and said, Behold I am vile; what shall I answer Thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth. Once have I spoken; but I will not answer: yea, twice; but I will proceed no further. (Job 40:3–5)

There is nothing cringing in Job's attitude, it is the bowing down of a man strangely stirred in humiliation by the realisation that he is face to face with that which is superior to himself.

The revelation given by Jesus Christ of God is not the revelation of Almighty God, but of the essential nature of Deity—unutterable humility and moral purity, utterly worthy in every detail of actual life. In the Incarnation God proves Himself worthy in the sphere in which we live, and this is the sphere of the revelation of the Self-giving of God. Job recognises this; he knows it is no superstition-monger, or creed-monger, or theology-monger, speaking to him, but the voice of God, because this Voice does not contradict what he knows, but leads him straight out to what he could never discover for himself. And so Job bows his head in true humility before God and listens—"I am on the right track at last."

LOCKS V. KEYS Job 42:1-6

You tell me, doubt is Devil-born I know not: one indeed I knew In many a subtle question versed, Who touch'd a jarring lyre first, But ever strove to make it true:

Perplext in faith, but pure in deeds, At last he beat his music out. There lives more faith in honest doubt. Believe me, than in half the creeds.

He fought his doubts and gather'd strength He would not make his judgement blind. He faced the spectres of the mind And laid them: thus he came at length

To find a stronger faith his own; And Power was with him in the night, Which makes the darkness and the light, And dwells not in the light alone, But in the darkness and the cloud, As over Sinai's peaks of old, While Israel made their gods of gold, Altho' the trumpet blew so loud.

Tennyson

Everything a man takes to be the key to a problem is apt to turn out another lock. For instance, the theory of evolution was supposed to be the key to the problem of the universe, but instead it has turned out a lock. Again, the atomic theory was thought to be the key; then it was discovered that the atom itself was composed of electrons, and each electron was found to be a universe of its own, and that theory too becomes a lock and not a key. Everything that man attempts as a simplification of life, other than a personal relationship to God, turns out to be a lock, and we should be alert to recognise when a thing turns from a key to a lock. The creed Job held, which pretended to be a key to the character of God, turned out to be a lock, and Job is realising that the only key to life is not a statement of faith in God, nor an intellectual conception of God, but a personal relationship to Him. God Himself is the key to the riddle of the universe, and the basis of things is to be found only in Him. If a man leaves out God and takes any scientific explanation as the key, he only succeeds in finding another lock.

1. The Rehabilitation of Faith in God As the Source and Support of All Existence

Then Job answered the LORD, and said, I know that Thou canst do every thing, and that no thought can be withholden from Thee. (Job 42:1–2)

To rehabilitate means to reinstate, to restore to former rank. The problem all through the Book of Job is that the teaching of the creed and Job's implicit faith in God do not agree, and it looks as if he is a fool to hang in to his belief in God. In this last chapter we see everything rehabilitated, put back into rank, by means of Job's personal relationship to God. That is what will happen as the result of this war—many a man's faith in God will be rehabilitated. The basis of things must always be found in a personal relationship to a personal God, never in thinking or feeling.

Job says, "I cannot find any rest in your reasonings or in my own, and I refuse to blink the facts in order to make a rational statement." Job had perfect confidence in the character of God though he did not understand the way He was taking. "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." We sometimes wrongly illustrate faith in God by the faith of a business man in a cheque. Faith commercially is based on calculation, but religious faith cannot be illustrated by the kind of faith we exhibit in life. Faith in God is a terrific venture in the dark; I have to believe that God is good in spite of all that contradicts it in my experience. It is not easy to say that God is love when everything that happens actually gives the lie to it. Everyone's soul represents some kind of battlefield. The point for each one is whether we will hang in, as Job did, and say "Though things look black, I will trust in God."

"Then Job answered the LORD. . . ." This does not mean that Job saw the Lord standing before him as a man; but that he had a trained ear as the result of his faith in God. The basis of a man's faith in God is that God is the Source and Support of all existence, not that He is all existence. Job recognises this, and maintains that in the end everything will be explained and made clear. Have I this kind of faith—not faith in a principle, but faith in God, that He is just and true and right? Many of us have no faith in God at all, but only faith in what He has done for us, and when these things are not apparent we lose our faith and say, "Why should this happen to me? Why should there be a war? Why should I be wounded and sick? Why should my 'cobber' be killed? I am going to chuck up my faith in God."

2. The Re-Establishment of Truth in Life and Personality

As the Source and Support of All Real Experience Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge? Therefore have I uttered that I understood not; things too wonderful for me, which I knew not. (Job 42:3)

There is a great difference between Christian experience and Christian faith. The danger of experience is that our faith is made to rest in it, instead of seeing that our experience is simply a doorway to God Himself. The reason many of us refuse to think and discover the basis of true religion is because evangelical Christianity has been stated in such a flimsy way. We get at Truth through life and personality, not by logic or scientific statements. "Therefore have I uttered that I understood not; things too wonderful for me, which I knew not." In refusing to stand by what was not true, Job uttered bigger things than he understood at the time. That is the way God uses men when they are rightly related to Him; He conveys His real presence as a sacrament through their commonplace lives. Our Lord Himself becomes real in the same way that life and personality are real. Intellect asks, "What is truth?" as if truth were something that could be stated in words. "I am . . . the Truth," said Jesus. The only way we get at Truth is by life and personality. When a man is up against things it is no use for him to try and work it out logically, but let him obey, and instantly he will see his way through. Truth is moral, not intellectual. We perceive Truth by doing the right thing, not by thinking it out. "If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine. . . . " Men have tried to get at the truth of Christianity head-first, which is like saying you must think how you will live before you are born. We instantly see the absurdity of that, and yet we expect to reason out the Christian life before we have been born into the realm of Jesus Christ. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." If ever we are to see the domain where Jesus lives and enter into it, we must be born again, become regenerated by receiving the Holy Spirit; then we shall find that Truth is not in a creed or a logical statement, but in Life and Personality. This is what Job is realising.

3. The Religious Basis of Science and Philosophy

As the Source and Support of All Abiding Exposition

Hear, I beseech Thee, and I will speak: I will demand of Thee, and declare Thou unto me. (Job 42:4)

We have not to bring God into our system of philosophy, but to found our philosophy on God. The source and support of all abiding exposition is a man's personal relationship to God. If we base our philosophy on reason, we shall produce a false philosophy; but if we base it on faith in God, we can begin to expound life rightly. Actual conditions come into account, but underneath lies the Redemption.

Sin is not man's problem, but God's. God has taken the problem of sin into His own hands and solved it, and the proof that He has is the Cross of Calvary. The Cross is the Cross of God. On the ground of the Redemption I can wash my robes, and make them "white in the blood of the Lamb." Pseudoevangelism has twisted the revelation and made it mean—"Now that God has saved me, I do not need to do anything." The New Testament revelation is that now I am saved by God's grace, I must work on that basis and keep myself clean. It does not matter what a man's heredity is, or what tendencies there are in him, on the basis of the Redemption he can become all that God's Book indicates he should be. The essential truth of Christianity in thinking is that I can wash my robes, and make them clean in the blood of the Lamb. That is the exposition of the Redemption in actual experience. Are we thinking along this line, or on the pagan line which makes out that the basis of things is rational, and leaves out God, and Jesus Christ, and the Redemption altogether?

4. Repentance and the Dawn of God's Humanity

As the Source and Support of a "Second Chance" I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes. (Job 42:5–6)

Because a man has altered his life it does not necessarily mean that he has repented. A man may have lived a bad life and suddenly stop being bad, not because he has repented, but because he is like an exhausted volcano. The fact that he has become good is no sign of his having become a Christian. The bedrock of Christianity is repentance. The apostle Paul never forgot what he had been; when he speaks of "forgetting those things which are behind," he is referring to what he has attained to; the Holy Spirit never allowed him to forget what he had been (see 1 Corinthians 15:9; Ephesians 3:8; 1 Timothy 1:13–15). Repentance means that I estimate exactly what I am in God's sight and I am sorry for it, and on the basis of the Redemption I become the opposite. The only repentant man is the holy man, i.e., the one who becomes the opposite of what he was because something has entered into him. Any man who knows himself knows that he cannot be holy, therefore if he does become holy, it is because God has "shipped" something into him; he is now "presenced with Divinity," and can begin to bring forth "fruits meet for repentance."

A man may know the plan of salvation, and preach like an archangel, and yet not be a Christian (cf. Matthew 7:21-22). The test of Christianity is that a man lives better than he preaches. The reality of the heredity of Jesus Christ comes into us through regeneration, and if ever we are to exhibit a family likeness to Him it must be because we have entered into repentance and have received something from God. If the disposition of meanness and lust and spite shows itself through my bodily life, when the disposition of Jesus Christ is there, it will show through my bodily life too, and no one need ever be afraid that he will be credited with the holiness he exhibits. "Now mine eye seeth Thee," said Job. "Wherefore I abhor myself ["I loathe my words," RV mg], and repent in dust and ashes." When I enthrone Jesus Christ I say the thing that is violently opposed to the old rule. I deny my old ways as entirely as Peter denied his Lord.

Jesus Christ's claim is that He can put a new disposition, His own disposition, Holy Spirit, into any man, and it will be manifested in all that he does. But the disposition of the Son of God can only enter my life by the way of repentance.

DISGUISE OF THE ACTUAL Job 42:7–17

That low man seeks a little thing to do, Sees it and does it: This high man, with a great thing to pursue, Dies ere he knows it. That low man goes on adding one to one, His hundred's soon hit: This high man, aiming at a million, Misses an unit.
That, has the world here—should he need the next
Let the world mind him!
This, throws himself on God, and unperplexed,
Seeking shall find him.
Robert Browning

Our actual life is a disguise, no one expresses what he really is. Job could not express actually, either before or after his suffering, what he really was. The "great Divine event" to which we look forward is when the earth will actually express itself as the work of God, and saints will actually express themselves as the sons of God. Meanwhile, actual appearances do not express the real things.

All through Job has maintained his belief that God is honourable; he declares that the friends' credal statement of God was not adequate because they have said things he could disprove from his own experience. "Why I am suffering, I do not know; but your explanation does not satisfy me. Though He slay me, though I am knocked to pieces really, I believe that God is honourable, a God of love and justice, and I will wait for Him, and one day it will be proved, that my faith was right." That is the sublime reach of Job's faith. Now God takes it in hand to deal with the friends.

1. The Scourge of Eternal Reality

The LORD said to Eliphaz the Temanite, My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends: for ye have not spoken of Me the thing that is right, as My servant Job hath. (Job 42:7)

Everyone who poses as a religious teacher is faced sooner or later by Eternal Reality. The friends had posed as religious teachers, they said they knew God, and their criticism of Job was along this line; but God says, "Ye have not spoken of Me the thing that is right, as My servant Job hath." In reading what Job says we should probably have come to the conclusion that a man who talked as he did could not be a good man, he said such wild, extravagant things; and yet in the end God, who is Eternal Reality, said that he had spoken rightly of Him. A man may utter wild things which seem to us all wrong, but it will be a humiliation to find that he has spoken of God more truly than we have. When Eternal Reality strikes, pose is no good, religious humbug is no good. The voice of God is scathing Eliphaz and the others, not because they had spoken untruthsthey had spoken what was logically true all the time, but because they had misrepresented Him. Christianity does not consist in telling the truth, or walking in a conscientious way, or adhering to principles; Christianity is something other than all that, it is adhering in absolute surrender to a Person, the Lord Jesus Christ.

If the Reality of God is a scourge to a man who has never pretended to be religious, it must be ten times more so to a man who has been a religious teacher, who has said to people, "I can tell you why you suffer." "I can tell you why God has allowed this war, and what He is doing with the British Empire." When such a man comes up against eternal realities and hears God say, "You have not spoken the thing which is true of Me," the scourge must be appalling (cf. John 15:2–6). Eliphaz had spoken the truth abstractly, but he had misrepresented God all through. God is not an abstract truth; He is the Eternal Reality, and is discerned only by means of a personal relationship.

When one is found out by Eternal Reality the danger is to become defiant or despairing. When the friends were scourged by God they took the right attitude and did not get into despair. If the scourge of Eternal Reality comes, see that it leaves you face to face with God, not with yourself.

2. The Surgery of Events Reacting

Therefore take unto you now seven bullocks and seven rams, and go to My servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt offering; and My servant Job shall pray for you: for him will I accept. (Job 42:8a)

We only see along the line of our prejudices—our evangelical or un-evangelical prejudices, the prejudices of our belief or of our agnosticism; we cannot see otherwise until events operate on us. The surgery of events is a most painful thing. It has taken a devilish thing like this war to root up the prejudices of men who were misrepresenting God to themselves. A prejudice is a foreclosed judgement without having sufficiently weighed the evidence. Not one of us is free from prejudices, and the way we reveal them most is by being full of objection to the prejudices of other people. If we stick obstinately to any line of prejudice, there will come the surgery of events that will shift us out of it. Watch that you do not make an issue with God; it is a dangerous thing to do.

The surgery of events brought the friends out of their prejudices. All along they had said to Job, "You are wrong, we can prove it, you are a bad man, and it is a wonder to us that God does not strike you dead." But the surgery of events brings them to their knees in utter humiliation. "Go to My servant Job," God says, "and he shall pray for you." "Go through the issue, or you will never get to Me." Think of the humiliation of it!

... lest I deal with you after your folly, in that ye have not spoken of Me the thing which is right, like My servant Job. (Job 42:8)

What is it to speak "the thing that is right" about God? I have never seen God; to call Him omnipotent and omnipresent and omniscient means nothing to me; I do not care one bit for an Almighty Incomprehensible First Cause. To speak the thing which is right about God, I must be in living personal relationship with Him. God is riddling the friends because while preaching the right thing, they have misrepresented Him and told a lie about the Author of Truth. If I preach the right thing but do not live it, I am telling an untruth about God. This is one of the cardinal truths of Christianity (see Romans 2:17–23). "But," a man says, "how am I going to live the truth?" The Sermon on the Mount says we must have a disposition which is never lustful or spiteful or evil; where are we going to begin? Unless Jesus Christ can put into us His own heredity, it is impossible. But that is just what He claims He can do. By regeneration Jesus Christ can put into any man the disposition that will make him the living example of what he preaches. The baptism of the Holy Ghost did not add anything to the Apostles' doctrine, it made them specimens of what they taught (see Acts 1:8).

3. The Sacrament of Experimental Repentance

So Eliphaz the Temanite and Bildad the Shuhite and Zophar the Naamathite went, and did according as the LORD commanded them. (Job 42:9)

The friends accepted the humiliation, and did a repentant thing.

Strictly speaking, repentance is a gift of God. No man can repent when he chooses. A man can be remorseful when he chooses, but remorse is a lesser thing than repentance. Repentance means that I show my sorrow for the wrong thing by becoming the opposite. The old Puritans used to pray for "the gift of tears." A man has the power to harden himself against one of God's greatest gifts. If in order to dissolve a piece of ice, you take a hammer and smash it up, you simply break it into so many pieces of ice; but put the ice out in the sunshine and it quickly disappears. That is just the difference between man's handling of wrong and God's. Man's handling may cause it to crumble, but it is only so much crumbled-up wrong; when God handles it, it becomes repentance, and the man turns to God and his life becomes a sacrament of experimental repentance.

These men did not say, "No, we will not go to Job"; they did not attempt to justify themselves, they did exactly what God told them to, and in so doing they did a grand and noble thing, and took the only chance of getting to know God.

4. The Supplication of Emancipating Religion

And the LORD turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends. (Job 42:10a)

Have you come to "when" yet? If you are in the position of Job and have shipped some trouble on board that makes you taken up with yourself, remember that when Job prayed for his friends, God emancipated him. Pray for your friends, and God will turn your captivity also. The emancipation comes as you intercede for them; it is not a mere reaction, it is the way God works. It is not a question of getting time for Bible study, but of spontaneous intercession as we go about our daily calling, and we shall see emancipation come all along, not because we understand the problems, but because we recognise that God has chosen the way of intercession to perform His moral miracles in lives. Then get to work and pray, and God will get His chance with other lives; you do not even need to speak to them. God has based the Christian life on Redemption, and as we pray on this basis God's honour is at stake to answer prayer.

5. The Society of Enlarged Friendship (Job 42:10–17)

... also the LORD gave Job twice as much as he had before. (Job 42:10b)

Job's actual life looked exactly the same after his suffering as before to anyone who does not know the inner history. That is the disguise of the actual. There is always this difference in the man who has been through real trouble—his society is enlarged in every direction, he is much bigger minded, more generous and liberal, more capable of entertaining strangers. One of the greatest emancipators of personal life is sorrow. After the war there will be the society of enlarged friendship in many a life; men will never be as estranged from one another as they used to be. One thing which has gone by the board entirely is the conceit that we know men. Men do not live in types; there is always one fact more in every life that no one knows but God. The last thing to go is the religious category. A man will stick to his religious categories of men until he receives a shaking up from Eternal Reality, as these men did. Eliphaz and the others maintained the conception that unless a man held to the particular shibboleth of their religious creed, he was lost. The one thing that will cause the conceit that we know men to disappear is the surgery of events, the Eternal Reality of God shaking the nonsense out of us. This has happened in many a life through the cataclysm of war, and men find they have a different and a broader way of looking at things. There is no room for veneer and pretence in camp life.

Then came there unto him all his brethren, and all his sisters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his house: and they bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that the LORD had brought upon him. (Job 42:11a)

There was a larger, grander society in Job's actual life after his suffering. In his Epistle Peter refers to the people who have plenty of time for you, they are those who have been through suffering, but now seem full of joy (see 1 Peter 4:12–19). If a man has not been through suffering he will snub you unless you share his interests, he is no more concerned about you than the desert sand; but those who have been through things are not now taken up with their own sorrows, they are being made broken bread and poured-out wine for others. You can always be sure of the man who has been through suffering, but never of the man who has not.

... every man also gave him a piece of money, and every one an earring of gold. (Job 42:11b)

Job accepted the gifts from his friends and brethren, which is an indication of a generous spirit. The majority of us prefer to give, but Job was big enough to accept all that his friends brought him.

So the LORD blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning. (Job 42:12)

- It was first published as a book in 1947.

Shortly after the Bible Training College opened in January 1911, Oswald Chambers began teaching a class on biblical ethics. The class was open to resident and visiting students alike, and reflected Chambers' deep belief in the importance of thinking.

"We must never forget that God is a great deal bigger than our experience of Him; that Jesus Christ is a great deal bigger than our experience of Him," Oswald said. "It is because people won't take the labour to think, that the snare gets hold of them; and remember thinking is a tremendous labour" ("Thinking," Tongues of Fire, January 1914, p. 5).

Noted London pastor Dr. G. Campbell Morgan⁴ spoke at the College's first anniversary celebration and made special mention of the classes on biblical ethics and biblical philosophy, saying that such classes were unusual in a Bible college of that day.

Throughout the years of the BTC⁵ (1911–15), Biblical Ethics remained a part of the syllabus, with Chambers sometimes using James Stalker's⁶ book The Ethic of Jesus according to the Synoptic Gospels (1909) as a text.

Additional material on ethics and thinking appears in The Moral Foundations of Life in this volume.

FOREWORD

(to the original 1947 edition)

This latest book of Talks, Lectures, Addresses, given by Oswald Chambers at different times and in varied circumstances—as when the New Theology was making its shallow appeal in 1909, or in the strenuous days of the Bible Training College in London, or when speaking to the soldiers in Egypt in 1917 (Just before his own Home-call)—covers a wide range of religious thinking.

The earlier chapters on Biblical Ethics remind us that the ultimate aim of Christ's Atonement is that God may readjust man to Himself. That calls for a moral response on our part, involving thought and feeling and will. And we need to recognise the ethical demands made in the Scriptures on God's people.

Our Lord gave us the Sermon on the Mount; it appears in the beginning of St. Matthew's Gospel. He also taught what appears later in the Gospel, that "the Son of Man must suffer many things . . .

and be killed, and the third day be raised up" (Matthew 16:21; and that His Life would be "a ransom for many" (Matthew 20:28). The former without the latter would mock us. Oswald Chambers based all on the Atonement.

I have found in this book some of the most arresting truths I have yet met with. Those who have been most helped by the O.C. literature already published will find fresh pastures here. For he was indeed a scribe bringing forth "out of his treasure things new and old," whose ideas never become obsolete or stale, as he is divinely enabled to see old and precious things in new relationships. May God make this book to be a blessing to many.

THE MORAL IMPERATIVE—I

(i.e., a law universal and binding on every rational will)

How Can I Do What I Ought to Do?

Strictly speaking, there is no disobedience possible to an imperative law, the only alternative being destruction. In this sense the moral law is not imperative, because it can be disobeyed and immediate destruction does not follow. And yet the moral law never alters, however much men disobey it; it can be violated, but it never alters. Remember, at the back of all human morality stands God.

1. God's "Oughts"—Old Testament

The Ten Commandments were not given with any consideration for human ability or inability to keep them; they are the revelation of God's demands made of men and women who had declared that if God would make His law known, they would keep it. "And all the people answered together, and said, All that the LORD hath spoken we will do" (Exodus 19:8). "And God spake all these words saying, . . . Thou shalt . . . Thou shalt not . . ." (Exodus 20:1–17). The commandments were given with the inexorable awfulness of Almighty God; and the subsequent history of the people is the record of how they could not keep them.

The moral law ordained by God does not make itself weak to the weak, it does not palliate our shortcomings, it takes no account of our heredity and our infirmities; it demands that we be absolutely moral. Not to recognise this is to be less than alive. The apostle Paul said, "I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died" (Romans 7:9). Undress yourself morally and see how much you owe to your upbringing, to the circumstances you are in; when you have got rid of all that, there is little to stand before God in, certainly nothing to boast of. Immediately we come into actual human conditions we find inability with regard to the keeping of God's law, then comes in the equivocation-"Of course God won't demand it." "Of course God will make allowances." God's laws are not watered down to suit anyone; if God did that He would cease to be God. The moral law never alters for the noblest or the weakest; it remains abidingly and eternally the same.

Every man has an imperative something within him which makes him say "I ought," even in the most degraded specimens of humanity the "ought" is there, and the Bible tells us where it comes from-it comes from God. The modern tendency is to leave God out and make our standard what is most useful to man. The utilitarian says that these distinct laws of conduct have been evolved by man for the benefit of man-the greatest use to the greatest number. That is not the reason a thing is right; the reason a thing is right is that God is behind it. God's "oughts" never alter; we never grow out of them. Our difficulty is that we find in ourselves this attitude—"I ought to do this, but I won't"; "I ought to do that, but I don't want to." That puts out of court the idea that if you teach men what is right they will do it—they won't; what is needed is a power which will enable a man to do what he knows is right. We may say "Oh I won't count this time"; but every bit of moral wrong is counted by God. The moral law exerts no coercion, neither does it allow any compromise. "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all" (James 2:10). Once we realise this we see why it was necessary for Jesus Christ to come. The Redemption is the Reality which alters inability into ability.

2. Christ's Principles—New Testament

If the "Oughts" of the Old Testament were difficult to obey, Our Lord's teaching is unfathomably more difficult. Remember, the commandments were given irrespective of human ability or inability to keep them; then when Jesus Christ came, instead of doing what we all too glibly say He did—put something easier before men, He made it a hundredfold more difficult, because He goes behind the law to the disposition. There is an idea abroad to-day that because as Christians we are not under law, but under grace, therefore the Ten Commandments have no meaning for us—what did Jesus say? "Think not that I am come to destroy the law . . . : I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil" (Matthew 5:17). The teaching of the Sermon on the Mount is overwhelmingly and disastrously penetrating. Jesus Christ does not simply say, "Thou shalt not do certain things"; He demands that we have such a condition of heart that we never even think of doing them, every thought and imagination of heart and mind is to be unblameable in the sight of God. Who is sufficient for these things—an unsullied purity that never lusts, a forgiving disposition that loves its enemies, a generous spirit that "taketh not account of evil" (RV)? That standard can produce only one thing in an open-eyed man, absolute despair.

What is the use of saying, "All we need is to know what Jesus Christ teaches and then live up to it": where are you going to begin? If we are Christians we have to live according to the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount; and the marvel of Jesus Christ's salvation is that He puts us in the place where we can fulfil all the old law and a great deal more.

Be careful not to be caught up in the clap-trap of to-day which says, "I believe in the teachings of Jesus, but I don't see any need for the Atonement." Men talk pleasant, patronising things about Jesus Christ's teaching while they ignore His Cross. By all means let us study Christ's teaching, we do not think nearly enough along New Testament lines, we are swamped by pagan standards, and as Christians we ought to allow Jesus Christ's principles to work out in our brains as well as in our lives; but the teaching of Jesus apart from His Atonement simply adds an ideal that leads to despair. What is the good of telling me that only the pure in heart can see God when I am impure? of telling me to love my enemies when I hate them? I may keep it down but the spirit is there. Does Jesus Christ make it easier? He makes it a hundredfold more difficult! The purity God demands is impossible unless we can be re-made from within, and that is what Jesus Christ undertakes to do through the Atonement. Jesus Christ did not come to tell men they ought to be holy—there is an "ought" in every man that tells him that, and whenever he sees a holy character he may bluster and excuse himself as he likes, but he knows that is what he ought to be: He came to put us in the place where we can be holy, that is, He came to make us what He teaches we should be, that is the difference.

Our Lord's first requirement is a personal relationship to Himself, and then obedience to His principles. Tolstoi blundered in applying the Sermon on the Mount practically without insisting on the need to be born again of the Spirit first, and he had an enormous following of intellectual faddists, mere "springcleaners." It is not a question of applying Jesus Christ's principles to our actual life first of all, but of applying them to our relationship to Himself, then as we keep our souls open in relation to Him our conscience will decide how we are to act out of that relationship. The principles of Jesus Christ go to the very root of the matter, they have an intensely practical application to our moral life. "For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matthew 5:20).

We said that the teaching of Jesus Christ apart from His Atonement leads to despair; but if it produces the pauper condition, it is the right kind of despair. "Blessed are the poor in spirit. . . ." Conviction of sin will bring a man there, and so will the realisation of God's demands. The best expression for us is the 139th Psalm, "Search me, O God"; I cannot make my heart pure, I cannot alter my heredity, I cannot alter the dreams of my mind; "Search me, O God, and know my heart." That is the poverty of spirit Jesus says is blessed; if you are in that condition, He says you can easily enter the kingdom of heaven. Why? Because God gives the almighty gift of salvation from sin to paupers; He gives the Holy Spirit to paupers (see Luke 11:13).

3. The New Man—Present Day

Jesus Christ, as Representative Man, accepted the responsibility of exhibiting on the human plane the absolute holiness of God; He lived up to God's standard in every detail of holy living and holy speaking and holy working, and His claim is that through the Atonement He can put us in the place where we can do the same. The very disposition that was in Him is put into me—is it there? If it is not, I will have to answer for it. It is not that God puts the life of Jesus in front of us and says, "Do your best to follow Him," but that "the life also of Jesus" is to "be made manifest in our mortal flesh." When "Christ is formed" in us by regeneration (Galatians 4:19), we have to see that our human nature puts on the "clothing" that is worthy of the Son of God. That is where our responsibility comes in—not in being absolutely holy, but in seeing that we allow Jesus Christ to be absolutely holy in us. Regeneration does not resolve a human being into imbecility, it lifts him powerfully into oneness with God in Christ Jesus.

We shall come to find that being "not under the law, but under grace" does not mean we are so free from the law that it does not matter now what we do; it means that in our actual lives we can fulfil all the requirements of the law of God.

THE MORAL IMPERATIVE—II

(i.e., a law universal and binding on every rational will)

Why Should I Do What I Ought to Do?

Authority in the final sense must spring from within. To begin with, we are educated by means of authority on the outside—"thou shalt" and "thou shalt not"; but that authority does not treat us as men. The ultimate aim imbedded in all external authority is to produce a standard of authority within ourselves. The authority our Lord obeyed was an internal authority, not an external one, that is, His inner life and the life He exhibited were one and the same, and the purpose of all external authority is to bring us there. We only realise the moral law when it comes with an IF, that means, I have the power not to obey it.

We imagine that if we obey authority we limit ourselves, whereas obedience to authority is not a limitation but a source of power; by obeying we are more. Naturally we are built to command, not to obey; man was originally constituted by God to have dominion—"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion ..." (Genesis 1:26); consequently there is the natural desire to want to explain things, because everything we can explain we can command. Spiritually, we are built not to command, but to obey. Always beware of the tendency to want to have things explained; you may take it as an invariable law that when you demand an explanation in connection with a moral problem it means you are evading obedience.

1. Authority and Humanity—Conditional

The first standard of authority the Bible reveals is the authority of innocence, a conditional authority (see Genesis 2:16–17). Innocence means the absence of legal guilt. As long as Adam obeyed God he was in this state of innocence; God placed him in an external setting so that he might transform his innocence into moral character by a series of choices. It was to be a natural progress of development, not from evil to good, but from the natural to the spiritual. This Adam failed to do; the temptation came—Take dominion over yourself, "and ye shall be as God"; he took dominion over himself, and by so doing lost dominion over everything else, and the disposition of sin-my claim to my right to myself, I will do what I like—became the inheritance of the whole human race. "Therefore, as through one man sin entered into the world . . ." (Romans 5:12 RV). Children born of natural generation are not innocent in the same way that Adam was innocent, neither does the innocence of a child contain conditional authority; the innocence of Regeneration alone corresponds to Adam's innocence.

Some people maintain that innocence should be the only standard of authority; the idea works out magnificently on paper or in thinking, but it does not work out in practical life. If we were all born with the 92 Biblical Ethics right disposition, development along this line would have been all right; but we quickly find out that there is something drastically wrong, the disposition of sin is at work, this opposing principle which is not true to human nature as God created it. It sounds very delightful to talk about the innocence of children and "living the simple life"; but try it in actual experience, and you will find it works out the wrong way every time. Authority based on innocence soon becomes ignorance, not ignorance of ourselves, but a determined being without the knowledge of God, and ignorance quickly corrupts into iniquity (see Genesis 3–4).

Another standard of authority is that of conscience, or "the inner light"—what Socrates called "the presiding dæmon," an un-get-at-able, indefinable spirit which gives liberty or check to whatever a man feels impelled to do. Every man has a conscience, although every man does not know God. If God had never made known His demands we might have said that every man was a law to himself-"Whatever I think is right according to my own inner light, must be right." As soon as a man becomes a law to himself he begins to do what he likes, and if you teach development along the line of obedience to a man's inner light, what about the man who is born with damnable tendencies—where will it lead him? to a moral pigsty. The final standard of authority must be one that can be owned by all men.

2. Authority as Happiness—Corrupt

Happiness is the portion of a child, children ought to be thoughtless and happy, and woe be to the people who upset their happiness; but if you take happiness as the end and aim for men and women you have to make its basis a determined ignorance of God, otherwise men will, like Job, remember God and be troubled (see Job 23:15). Read the Seventy-third Psalm, it is the description of the man who has made happiness his aim—he is not in trouble as other men, neither is he plagued like other men, he has more than heart could wish; but once let his moral equilibrium be upset by conviction of sin and all his happiness is destroyed. The end and aim of human life is not happiness, but "to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever." Holiness of character, chastity of life, living communion with God—that is the end of a man's life, whether he is happy or not is a matter of moonshine.8 Happiness is no standard for men and women because happiness depends on my being determinedly ignorant of God and His demands. Whenever the Spirit of God disturbs a man, He brings him back to the Decalogue. The point is that anything that relieves us from the individual responsibility of being personally related to God is corrupt.

Immorality will produce happiness very quickly—the duration of the happiness is another matter; if you go on doing wrong long enough you will be happy doing wrong and miserable doing right—therefore quit doing right! Immorality may be physically clean, but at its heart is this thought—"All I am concerned with is the happiness of the greatest number, and I don't care anything at all about God." Once remove personal accountability to God and you will get immorality, whether it is bestial or not is a matter of accident. The Bible talks very unvarnishedly, it calls things by the hideous names that belong to them (e.g., Colossians 3:5; Galatians 5:19–21). Beware of being cute enough to detect immorality only in a moral pigsty, learn to detect it in your own spiritual imaginations.

3. Authority as Holiness—Correct

The commandments of God exhibit not His consideration for man, but His authoritative demands of man. Man has to fulfil God's laws in his physical life, in his mental and moral life, in his social and spiritual life, and to offend in one point is to be guilty of all (see James 2:10). Until we realise that God cannot make allowances, the Gospel has no meaning for us; if God made allowances He would cease to be God. All through the Bible the authority of God's law is unflinchingly revealed, together with man's responsibility to meet its demand; but the problem of problems is—how is it going to be done? When a man reads the teachings of Jesus he is obliged to say, "Yes, that is right, but His teaching destroys my peace; I believe that is what I ought to be, but where am I going to begin?"

Holiness is the agreement between a man's disposition and the law of God, as expressed in the life of Jesus. According to the Bible there are only two Men, Adam and Jesus Christ; both came into the world directly by the hand of God, innocent. Jesus Christ, the last Adam, did what the first Adam failed to do; He transformed innocence into holy character. The law of God was incarnated in Jesus Christ, He walked this earth in human guise and lived the perfect life which God desired. Never think of Jesus Christ as an individual, He is the Federal Head of the race; He not only fulfilled all God's demands, but He made the way for every imperfect son of man to live the same kind of life. Jesus Christ does not put us back where Adam was, He puts us where Adam never was: He puts us where He is Himself; He presences us with Divinity, viz., the Holy Spirit. The meaning of the Redemption is that any man can be regenerated into the life Jesus lived and can have the holiness of God imparted to him, not the power to imitate His holiness, but the very nature of God—"... that we may be partakers of

His holiness." Holiness is the characteristic of the man after God's own heart.

The holiness which God demands is impossible unless a man can be re-made from within, and that is what Jesus Christ has undertaken to do. Jesus Christ does not merely save people from hell: "thou shalt call His name JESUS; for it is He that shall save His people from their sins," i.e., make totally new moral men. Jesus Christ came from a holy God to enable men, by the sheer might of His Redemption, to become holy. "Ye shall be holy: for I the LORD your God am holy."

MORAL INSTITUTIONS—I

In Precept

By "In Precept" is meant necessary principles laid down beforehand.

God has ordained that man is to govern man, whether he wants to or not. This keeps socialism from being "it"; the socialistic scheme falls to pieces because it ignores the fact that human institutions are not utilitarian, that is, they do not spring from the ingenuity of man, but were deliberately ordained by God for the government of man by man. Peter brings this out when he says, "Be subject to every ordinance of man," but he is careful to add "for the Lord's sake" (1 Peter 2:13 RV).

Man is responsible to God for the government of the whole world, but if a man succumbs to the temptations of his official position, that very position will have the effect of hardening his heart away from God. We read in the Old Testament that Pharaoh hardened his heart (Exodus 7:14, et seq.); and we read also that God hardened his heart (Exodus 4:21, et seq.). The difficulty of this apparent contradiction is purely superficial. It must not be interpreted to mean that God hardened a man's heart and then condemned him for being hardened. The hardening of Pharaoh's heart by himself and by God is the expression of the working of one of God's laws, and God's laws do not alter. Any ruler or ordinary man who refuses to obey the right law will find himself distinctly hardened away from God. If a man is to govern rightly he must see that the institutions he builds up are based on the stabilities of human nature as God created it; otherwise havoc will be produced.

One of the first general principles to be borne in mind is that we must never think of men and women in the mass. We talk about "the struggling mass of humanity"—there is no such thing, the mass is made up of separate individuals. The danger of thinking of people in the mass is that you forget they are human beings, each one an absolutely solitary life. Everyone has something or someone to govern, the most ignominious slave has an influence somewhere, and God is going to hold us responsible for the way we govern.

Another thing to be borne in mind is the incalculable element in every life. In the government of man by man you are not dealing with a mathematical problem, but with human beings, and you can never be sure how they will act, any more than you can always be sure how you yourself will act.

These are simply indications of the problems a man has to face in the government of other men, and yet God has so constituted things that man has to govern man and to answer to God for the way he governs.

DESIRE. One of the biggest ingredients in a man's make-up is what he desires, or regards as good. Discouragement or any kind of "sulks" is accounted for by the fact that the good a man aims at is not good enough. A man of character will set himself at nothing less than the highest.

The remarkable thing about the "universe of desire" is that at any second it may alter. Every now and again a tumult comes into a man's life and alters what he desires. For instance, death has an amazing power of altering what a man desires, because death profoundly affects his outlook; or the experience of new birth will do it. When a man is born again he stops desiring the things he used to desire, not gradually, but suddenly; things begin to matter that did not matter before, and the things that used to matter no longer do so. He experiences a conflict of desire; at one time he wants to do the old things, at another, the new, and for a while he is in an unbalanced state. That is the result ethically and morally of conviction of sin, and is exactly what Jesus meant when He said, "Think not that I came to cast peace on the earth: I came not to cast peace, but a sword" (Matthew 10:34 RV mg).

This sudden alteration in the universe of desire is one of the perplexities in the government of man by man. You cannot be sure that the man you are dealing with will always be the same, at any second he may alter. You see someone set on a line you know to be wrong, but remember, at any second the universe of his desire may change. To remember this will bring a tremendous hopefulness and cure us of our unbelief about any life.

Another thing to bear in mind is the difference between a young life and a mature life. A boy or girl just emerging from the "teens" is always chaotic; if a young life is normal it is a chunk of chaos; if it is not, there is something wrong, there ought to be the chaotic element. A precocious young life rarely ends well, it becomes ordered too soon. God holds us responsible for the way we judge a young life; if we judge it by the standards by which we would judge a mature life, we will be grossly unjust. As you watch the life it seems sometimes to lean towards the good, sometimes towards the wrong, and you find yourself getting either excited or depressed over it; but there is one main trend coming out, and that trend can be guarded by prayer. This emphasises the importance of intercessory prayer. Much misjudgement of young life goes on in the religious domain. There is a stage when a young life manifests a sudden interest in everything to do with religion, but never bank on these awakenings because they are not necessarily awakenings by the Spirit of God, and when the intense stage passes—and it certainly will pass if it is not born of the Spirit—the one who is judging is apt to say that the boy or girl has backslidden. What has happened is that they have passed through a dangerous stage of development. The defects of a growing life are one thing; the vices of a mature life are another. Be as merciless as God can make you towards the vices of a mature life, but be very gentle and patient with the defects of a growing life.

These things make us understand how careful we have to be to recognise God in our government of other lives. If the government of our own life is "upon His shoulder," we will be careful to rely on Him in connection with the lives we are called on to influence and govern.

MORAL INSTITUTIONS—II

In Practice

By "In Practice" is meant fitness through regular exercise. If we do not fit ourselves by practice when there is no crisis, we shall find that our nature will fail us when the crisis comes. The grace of God never fails, but we may fail the grace of God. Unless our nervous system is made the ally of the new life from God it becomes a humiliation to us, and we sit down under a tyranny of nerves. Once we have received the Holy Spirit we must sit down to nothing. In these distinctly personal matters it must be borne in mind that the moral institutions ordained by God take no account whatever of nervous disabilities, they take account only of God Himself and the way He has designed man. When your nervous system, which has been ruled by the wrong disposition, is inclined to say "I can't," you must say, "You must," and to your amazement you find you can!

1. Righteousness—Conformity to a Right Standard —where no one but God sees us. That is where very few of us are Christians.

(a) In Intention

Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous. (1 John 3:7)

Jesus Christ demands of His disciples that they live in conformity to the right standard in intention. We say, "Though I didn't do well, I meant well"; then it is absolutely certain you did not mean well. Jesus Christ makes no allowance for heroic moods; He judges us by the diligently applied bent of our disposition. Concentration on the part of a Christian is of more importance than consecration.

"... he that doeth righteousness is righteous." There are different kinds of intention, e.g., outer and inner; immediate and remote; direct and indirect. The righteous man is the one whose inner intention is clearly revealed in his outer intention, there is no duplicity, no internal hypocrisy. A man's outer intention is easily discernible by other people; his inner intention needs to be continually examined. The marvel of the grace of God is that it can alter the mainspring of our make-up; then when that is altered we must foster in ourselves those intentions which spring from the Spirit of Jesus and make our nervous system carry them out. The Holy Spirit will bring us to the practical test, it is not that I say I am righteous, but that I prove I am in my deeds.

(b) In Individuals

For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven. (Matthew 5:20 RV)

Take Saul of Tarsus as an example of Pharisaism; he says of himself in writing to the Philippians, "as touching the law, a Pharisee; . . . touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless . . ." (Philippians 3:5-6): Jesus Christ says as disciples we have to exceed that. No wonder we find His statements absolutely shattering. Our righteousness has to be in excess of the righteousness of the man whose external conduct is blameless according to the law-what does that produce? despair straightaway. When we hear Jesus say, "Blessed are the pure in heart," our answer, if we are awake is, "My God, how am I going to be pure in heart? If ever I am to be blameless down to the deepest recesses of my intentions, You must do something mighty in me." That is exactly what Jesus Christ came to do. He did not come to tell us to be holy, but to make us holy, undeserving of censure in the sight of God. If any man or woman gets there it is by the sheer supernatural grace of God. You can't indulge in pious pretence when you come to the atmosphere of the Bible. If there is one thing the Spirit of God does it is to purge us from all sanctimonious humbug, there is no room for it.

(c) In Institutions

Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake. . . . (1 Peter 2:13; see 2 Peter 2:13–18)

Peter's statements in these verses are remarkable, and they are statements the modern Christian does not like. He is outlining what is to be the conduct of saints in relation to the moral institutions based on the government of man by man. No matter, he says, what may be the condition of the community to which you belong, behave yourself as a saint in it. Many people are righteous as individuals, but they ignore the need to be righteous in connection with human institutions. Paul continually dealt with insubordination in spiritual people. Degeneration in the Christian life comes in because of this refusal to recognise the insistence God places on obedience to human institutions. Take the institution of home life. Home is God's institution, and He says, "Honour thy father and thy mother"; are we fulfilling our duty to our parents as laid down in God's Book? Guard well the central institutions ordained by God, and there will be fewer problems in civilised life. We have to maintain spiritual reality wherever we are placed by the engineering of our circumstances by God; as servants we are to be subject to our masters, to the froward master as well as to the good and gentle. That is where the shoe pinches, and whenever you feel the pinch it is time you went to the death of something.

2. Rights—What One Has a Just Claim To

Every right brings with it an obligation. Legally, a man can do what he likes with his own; morally, he is under obligation to use it for the general good; spiritually, he is bound to devote it to God.

(a) Of Life

Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed. (Genesis 9:6)

Every man in the sight of God has an equal right to life, and if a man takes away the life of another, his own life shall be taken away. The right of life is insisted on all through the Bible. As long as I do not murder anyone outright the law cannot touch me, but is there someone dependent on me to whom in the tiniest way I am not giving the right to live? someone for whom I am cherishing an unforgiving dislike? "whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer," says John (1 John 3:15). One of the terrors of the Day of Judgement will be our indifference to the rights of life.

(b) Of Land

When ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a sabbath unto the LORD. . . . In the seventh year shall be a sabbath of solemn rest for the land, a sabbath unto the LORD. (Leviticus 25:2, 4 RV; see Leviticus 25:1–7)

The twenty-fifth chapter of Leviticus is the great classic on the rights of the land. The establishment of men's rights on the earth is limited by the rights of the earth itself. If you keep taking from the land, never giving it any rest, in time it will stop giving to you. We talk about the rights of the land, and make it mean our right to grab as much from it as we can. In God's sight the land has rights just as human beings have, and many of the theories which are being advanced to-day go back to God's original prescription for the land. When God ordained "a sabbath of solemn rest for the land," it was a reiteration of the instructions given to Adam in the garden of Eden-"Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it" (Genesis 1:28). Man was intended to replenish the earth by looking after it, being its lord not its tyrant; sin has made man its tyrant (cf. Romans 8:19). The rights of the land will probably only be fully realised in the Millennium, because in this dispensation men ignore obedience to God's laws.

In the teaching of Jesus the earth is never confounded with the world. "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth" (Matthew 5:5). The meek, i.e., those who have the disposition of the Son of God and are practising righteousness in accordance with that disposition, are to inherit the earth. The world is the system of things which man has erected on God's earth. To-day people belong to various "isms" and "ites" and they say, "We are going to inherit the earth; we are the favoured people of God," but that characteristic is not meekness, it is rather the spirit of the devil. Jew or Gentile, lost tribe or found, none of it is of any account unless it is based on the principles

Jesus Christ lays down. He says that the meek, those who obey the laws of God, shall inherit the earth. The material earth is God's, and the way men treat it is a marvellous picture of the long-suffering of God.

(c) Of Liberty

All things are lawful for me, but not all things are expedient. (1 Corinthians 6:12 RV)

We call liberty allowing the other fellow to please himself to the same extent as we please ourselves. True liberty is the ability earned by practise to do the right thing. There is no such thing as a gift of freedom; freedom must be earned. The counterfeit of freedom is independence. When the Spirit of God deals with sin, it is independence that He touches, that is why the preaching of the Gospel awakens resentment as well as craving. Independence must be blasted right out of a Christian, there must be only liberty, which is a very different thing. Spiritually, liberty means the ability to fulfil the law of God, and it establishes the rights of other people.

The teaching of the Sermon on the Mount is the exact opposite of the modern jargon about "equal rights"; "Why shouldn't I do this? I'm within my rights." Of course you are, but never call yourself a Christian if you reason like that because a Christian is one who sacrifices his liberty for the sake of others, for Jesus Christ's sake. Paul's whole argument is based on this (see 1 Corinthians 8; Romans 14). Don't use your liberty "as an occasion to the flesh," he says. When we receive the Holy Spirit we receive the nature of God, and He expects us to keep our nervous system obedient to the dictates of the Holy Spirit. All through these studies we have emphasised the principle of obedience to the highest; it is one of the most practical guides for our conduct as individuals. Paul continually dealt with people who under the guise of religion were libertines; they talked about liberty when what they really meant was, "I insist on doing what it is my right to do, and I don't care a jot about anyone else." That is not liberty, that is lawlessness. The only liberty a saint has is the liberty not to use his liberty. There is nothing more searching than what the New Testament has to say about the use of liberty. It is never your duty to go the second mile, to give up your possessions or property to someone else, but Jesus says if we are His disciples, that is what we will do.

THE MORAL INDIVIDUAL—I

Individuality

Individuality is the husk of the personal life, it is all "elbows"; it separates and isolates. The husk of individuality is God's created natural covering for the protection of the personal life, but unless individuality gets transfigured it becomes objectionable, egotistical and conceited, interested only in its own independence. Individuality is the characteristic of a child and rightly so, but if we mistake individuality for the personal life we will remain isolated. It is the continual assertion of individuality that hinders our spiritual development more than anything else; individuality must go in order that personality may emerge and be brought into fellowship with God.

1. Independence

... a fugitive and a wanderer shalt thou be in the earth. (Genesis 4:12 RV)

Individuality is natural, but when individuality is indwelt by sin it destroys personal communion and isolates individuals, like so many crystals, and all possibility of fellowship is destroyed. The characteristics of individuality are independence and self-assertiveness. There is nothing dearer to the heart of the natural man than independence, and as long as I live in the outskirts of my prideful independence Jesus Christ is nothing to me.

Personality, not individuality, is the great Christian doctrine, but we misunderstand the teaching of Our Lord when we confound the natural with the spiritual, and individuality with sin. Independence of one another is natural; independence of God is sin. When natural independence of one another is wedded with independence of God it becomes sin, and sin isolates and destroys, and ultimately damns the life. Positive individuality in any form is not only anti-Christian, but antihuman, because it instantly says, "I care for neither God nor man, I live for myself."

Cain stands for positive individuality—"not as Cain was of the evil one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his works were evil, and his brother's righteous" (1 John 3:12 RV). (It is not the act of murder only that is taken into account—Our Lord said "out of the heart proceed . . . murders." The statements of Jesus at times startle us painfully awake.) Cain was the first isolated individual; Adam was not an isolated individual. Before the Fall Adam was in relationship with God and with the world; when he was driven out from the Garden he was still in relationship with the world. Cain's sin shattered him into absolute solitariness. Being alone is not solitariness; it is the loneliness with an element of moral dis-esteem in it which is solitariness. There is no comrade for a murderer, he is isolated by the very success of his sin. It is instructive to notice what associates itself with God and what with the sinner: nothing associates itself with the sinner but his sin. The sinner is absolutely solitary on God's earth, and as long as he remains proud in his solitariness he goes against everything that is anything like God; he goes against man, who is likest God, and against the earth, which is also like God, and both man and earth cry out to God against him all the time. "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto Me from the ground" (Genesis 4:10).

For an individual to be isolated is either a sign of sin or of a transition stage, i.e., a person in the making. The most dangerous stage in a soul's development is the "No one understands me" stage-of course they don't! "I don't understand myself"-of course you don't! If this stage develops unduly the boy or girl will find when they get out into the world that they cannot work with others, and they become more and more impossible until the unwholesome idea that they are different from everyone else is knocked out of them. It is well to remember that our examination of ourselves can never be unbiased, so that we are only safe in taking our estimate of ourselves from our Creator instead of from our own introspection which makes us either depressed or conceited. The oft-repeated modern phrase "self-mastery" is misleading; profoundly speaking, a man can never master what he does not understand, therefore the only master of a man is not man himself, or another man, but God. Because introspection cannot profoundly satisfy, it does not follow that introspection is wrong; it is right, because it is the only way in which we will discover our need of God. It is the introspective power that is made alert by conviction of sin.

2. Interdependence

And not one of them said that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common. (Acts 4:32 RV)

And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together. . . . (Hebrews 10:24–25) These two passages serve to indicate the main characteristic of Christianity, viz., the "together" aspect; false religions inculcate an isolated holy life. Try and develop a holy life in private, and you find it cannot be done. Individuals can only live the true life when they are dependent on one another. After the Resurrection Our Lord would not allow Mary to hold a spiritual experience for herself, she must get into contact with the disciples and convey a message to them—"Touch Me not; . . . but go unto My brethren, and say to them, I ascend unto My Father and your Father, and My God and your God." After Peter's denial the isolation of misery would inevitably have seized on him and made him want to retire in the mood of "I can never forgive myself," had not Our Lord forestalled this by giving him something positive to do—"... and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Immediately you try to develop holiness alone and fix your eyes on your own whiteness, you lose the whole meaning of Christianity. The Holy Spirit makes a man fix his eyes on his Lord and on intense activity for others. In the early Middle Ages people had the idea that Christianity meant living a holy life apart from the world and its sociability, apart from its work and citizenship. That type of holiness is foreign to the New Testament; it cannot be reconciled with the records of the life of Jesus. The people of His day called Him "the friend of publicans and sinners" because He spent so much time with them.

The danger of the Higher Christian Life movements¹⁰ is that the emphasis is put not on the regenerating power of the grace of God, but on individual consecration, individual fasting and prayer, individual devotion to God. The apostle Paul sums up individual human effort under the guise of religion as things which have "a shew of wisdom in will worship, and humility, and neglecting of the body" (Colossians 2:23). It is simply individualism veneered over with religious phraseology—"What has Jesus done for me? I have done it all for myself; I did it by prayer, by fasting, by consecration." To reason like that is to put Our Lord "out of it" as Saviour and Sanctifier. We do not come to Jesus Christ, we come to our own earnestness, to our own consecration; what happens when we do come to Jesus is the miracle of a new creation. The Christian life is stamped all through with impossibility. Human nature cannot come anywhere near Jesus Christ's demands, and any rational being facing those demands honestly, says, "It can't be done, apart from a miracle." Exactly. In our modern Christianity there is no miracle; it is - "You must pray more"; "you must give up this and that"—anything and everything but the need to be born into a totally new kingdom.

In these talks we have traced all through the insistence that we are brought up in families, and families form communities, and communities institutions, and institutions are under governments, and governments are answerable to God—all for one purpose, that we might develop together. In the external aspects of Christianity in civilised life individuality is not lost, but it is not positive, ¹¹ it is interdependent. Beware of becoming a positive individual in your Christian community, and saying,—"I must separate myself and start a little place of my own." "If we walk in the light, as He is in the light," we have fellowship with everyone else who is in the light. Natural affinity does not count here at all.

3. Identification

"... that they may be one, even as we are one." (John 17:22)

Christianity is personal, therefore it is un-individual. An individual remains definitely segregated from every other individual; when you come to the teaching of Our Lord there is no individuality in that sense at all, but only personality, "that they may be one." Two individuals can never merge; two persons can become one without losing their identity. Personality is the characteristic of the spiritual man as individuality is the characteristic of the natural man. When the Holy Spirit comes in He emancipates our personal spirit into union with God, and individuality ultimately becomes so interdependent that it loses all its self-assertiveness. Jesus Christ prayed for our identification with Himself in His oneness with the Father—"that they may be one, even as we are one." That is infinitely beyond experience. Identification is a revelation—the exposition of the experience. The standard Revelation with regard to identification is Our Lord Himself, and you can never define Him in terms of individuality, but only in terms of personality. When Jesus Christ emancipates the personality individuality is not destroyed, it is transfigured, and the transfiguring, incalculable element is love, personal passionate devotion to Himself, and to others for His sake.

THE MORAL INDIVIDUAL—II

THE WORLD In It WORLDLY Of It OTHERWORLDLY In It but Not of It

1. The World—In It

The term "world" is used to mean the material world, and the men and women in it—we are all "in it" in this sense. The Bible says that "God so loved the world. . . . "-and the unfathomable depth of His love is in that word "so"—yet it also says that "whosoever would be a friend of the world maketh himself an enemy of God" (James 4:4). The apparent contradiction can be explained like this—God's love for the world is the kind of love that makes Him go all lengths in order to remove the sin and evil from it. Love to be anything at all must be personal; to love without hating is an impossibility, and the stronger and more emphatic the love, the more intense is its obverse, hatred. God loves the world so much that He hates with a perfect hatred the thing that switched men wrong; and Calvary is the measure of His hatred. The natural heart of man would have argued—"God so loves the world that of course He will forgive its sin": God so loved the world that He could not forgive its sin. There is no such thing as God overlooking sin, therefore if He does forgive there must be a reason that justifies Him in doing so.

To be "a friend of the world" means that we take the world as it is and are perfectly delighted with it—the world is all right and we are very happy in it. Never have the idea that the worldling is unhappy; he is perfectly happy, as thoroughly happy as a Christian. The people who are unhappy are the worldlings or the Christians if they are not at one with the principle which unites them. If a worldling is not a worldling at heart, he is miserable; and if a Christian is not a Christian at heart he carries his Christianity like a headache instead of something worth having, and not being able to get rid of his head, he cannot get rid of his headache. A worldling is not immoral, he is one who wisely keeps within the bounds of the disposition which the Bible alone reveals as sinful, viz., my claim to my right to myself. The Bible reveals the solidarity of sin, a bond of union that keeps men together, it is the mutual inheritance of the human race—"Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Romans 5:12). Satan is anxious to keep that solidarity intact because whenever it breaks out into immoral acts it disintegrates his kingdom. Two things disintegrate the solidarity of sin—the breaking out into overt acts of sin, and the conviction of the Spirit of God. This will be found to be the solution of a number of moral problems.

To love the world as it is is the wrong kind of love, it is that sentiment which is "the enemy of God," because it means I am the friend of the system of things which does not take God into account. We are to love the world in the way God loves it, and be ready to spend and be spent until the wrong and evil are removed from it. When Jesus said "I pray not for the world, . . . " it did not mean He was indifferent to the world, or despised it: His work for the world is to save it. In thinking about the world we are apt to overlook the greatest factor of all from the Bible standpoint, viz., that man belongs to a fallen race. In our intellectual conceptions the Fall has no place at all; the human race is looked upon as a crowd of innocent babes in the wood. The Bible looks upon the human race as it is as the result of a mutiny against God; consequently you find in the Bible something you find in no other book or conception. The modern view of man is—What a marvellous promise of what he is going to be! The Bible looks at man and sees the ruin of what he once was. In the Bible everything is based on the fact that there is something wrong at the basis of things.

2. Worldly—Of It

To be "of" the world means to belong to the set that organises its religion, its business, its social life and pleasures without any concern as to how it affects Jesus Christ, as to whether He lived or died matters nothing at all. When Our Lord said "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." He obviously did not mean the world in the material physical sense, the rocks and trees, the seasons, and the beautiful order of Nature, the sea and sky; it was not these He overcame, but the world in its ordered system of religion and morality, with all its civilisations and progress, which system reveals in the final analysis that it is organised absolutely apart from any consideration of God. A clean cut from everything that savours of the world in this sense is essential for the Christian. No one can decide the matter for you; you may have to draw the line in one place; I may have to draw it in another, while the Holy Spirit is educating us down to the scruple.¹² If I have for my religious ideal a good social life lived among the societies of men, that is to be "of" the world, no matter how religious it may be in terms.

It is easy to denounce wrong in the world outside me—anyone without a spark of the grace of God can do that; easy to denounce the sins of others while all the time I may be allowing all sorts of worldly things in my own religious life. We must be continually renewed in the spirit of our mind so that the slightest beginning of compromise with the spirit of the world is instantly detected. "Well, what's the harm; there's nothing wrong in it," when you hear that you know you have the spirit of the world, because the spirit that comes from Jesus says, "Does this glorify God?" The only way we are going to overcome the world as Jesus overcame it is by experimental sanctification. We are to live in heavenly places in Christ Jesus while on this earth and among worldly people. That is the glorious discipline of the sanctified life. The apostle Paul in writing to the Corinthians says, I don't say you are to have no dealings with those that are without—"for then must ve needs go out of the world"; but I do say you are to have nothing to do with those who practise wrongdoing within the Christian community. Outside the Christian community, we must bear the shame and humiliation of contact with bad men vicariously, like Jesus did, and we may win them to God. "Do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without God judgeth" (see 1 Corinthians 5:10-13).

"As He is, so are we in this world." Our Lord's own life proved that in the midst of the world where we are placed we can be holy men and women, not only talking rightly, but living rightly. The greatest insult you can offer God is pious talk unless it is backed up by holy actions. The attitude of a Christian towards the providential order in which he is placed is to recognise that God is behind it for purposes of His own. For example, in our own country the dominance of State machinery stops occasionally and things are reconsidered and readjusted by means of a General Election. Then is the time for Christians to work and make their voice heard. As soon as the machinery is at work again, the counsel abides—subjection to the higher powers: "the powers that be are ordained of God."

3. Otherworldly—In It but Not of It

"Otherworldly" is simply a coined word to express what Our Lord prayed for in John 17—"I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil"—"I don't ask You to take them out of the world, away from the society of men, but to keep them out of compromise with the evil one who works in the world." The counsel of the Spirit of God to the saints is that they must allow nothing worldly in themselves while living among the worldly in the world. Those who live otherworldly in this world are the men and women who have been regenerated and who dare to live their life according to the principles of Jesus. When once the protest is made where your Lord requires you to make it, you will soon find where you stand—exactly where Jesus said you would, outside the synagogue, called purist, narrow and absurd.

"I have given them Thy word; and the world hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world" (John 17:14 RV). The hatred of the world is its intense objection to the principles exhibited by the saint, and frequently it is the best specimens of the worldly spirit who positively hate and detest the otherworldly spirit of the saint. It is not that they hate you personally, they may be very kind to you, but they hate what you represent of Jesus Christ. Remember what sin is, fundamental independence of God, the thing in me that says, I can do without God, I don't need Him. The hatred of the world has its source there. When you meet the hatred of the whole world-system unspiritual people around you will laugh to scorn the idea that you have a struggle on hand, but you realise that you are wrestling not against flesh and blood, but against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places.

Most of us live our life in the world without ever discovering its hatred, but it is there, and a crisis may suddenly arise and bring it to a head, then we are appalled to find the meaning of Our Lord's words, "And ye shall be hated of all men for My name's sake." I have no business to stir up the hatred of the world through a domineering religious opinionativeness—that has nothing whatever to do with the spirit of Jesus; I am never told to rejoice when men separate me from their company on that account; but when in all modesty I am standing for the honour of Jesus Christ and a crisis arises when the Spirit of God requires that I declare my otherworldliness, then I learn what Jesus meant when He said, men will hate you. It is the hatred of the world expressed to the otherworldly standpoint once it is made clear.

This Age is the last of the ordered ages which condition man's life on this earth, and the New Testament writers look on to the time when creation's thraldom ends in deliverance and in the manifestation of the sons of God. "We . . . look for new heavens and a new earth"; nowadays people have got tired of the preaching about a future heaven and they have gone to the other extreme and deal only with what is called the practical, consequently they rob themselves of the unfathomable joy of knowing that everything God has said will come to pass. The Redemption covers more than men and women, it covers the whole earth; everything that has been marred by sin and the devil has been completely redeemed by Jesus Christ. "... new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness"—nothing that defiles can be on it at all; at present that is absolutely inconceivable to us. The world and the earth are not the same; the world represents the societies of men on God's earth, and they do as they like; the earth remains God's. "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." The meek bide God's time.

THE MORAL INDIVIDUAL—III

Conversion

The literal meaning of "conversion" is a change of mind after watching certain facts, e.g., we read in Acts 28 that the barbarians "changed their minds" about Paul (Acts 28:6). We are dealing with conversion here not so much on the religious side as the ethical. Beware of making conversion synonymous with regeneration. Conversion is simply the effort of a roused human being; the sign of regeneration is that a man has received something. When a man fails in Christian experience it is nearly always because he has never received anything. There are books which set out to give the psychology of new birth by saying that suddenly something bursts up from a man's unconscious personality and alters him: a man is never born again by a subliminal uprush, but only by receiving something that was never there before, viz., the Holy Spirit. Certain forms of sin exhaust themselves and we may say of a man "Now he is saved," but he may be nothing of the sort. According to the New Testament the only evidence of new birth is not merely that a man lives a different life, but that the basis of that different life is repentance. The bedrock in the classic experience of the apostle Paul was not only his enthroning of Jesus Christ as Lord, but His enthronement on the basis of a real ringing repentance wrought in him by the Holy Ghost.

1. Mental Conversion

A double minded man is unstable in all his ways. (James 1:8)

Instability is an appalling snare in the natural life, and is disastrous spiritually—"for let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord," says James. There may be conversions of heart which are not conversions of mind; the last thing a man comes to is the conversion of his mind. Our Lord refers to this instability in His parable of the sower and the seed—they receive the word gladly, but they have no root in themselves—quicksilver Christians. They may have as many conversions as there are days in the year, and at the end of the year they remain the same unreliable emotional people, utterly incapable of resting in a stable point of truth, and they become eager adherents of every new interest. The main characteristic of young modern life to-day is an intense craving to be interested—literature, amusements, all indicate this tendency, and in religion the Church is apt to pander to the demand to be interested; consequently men won't face the rugged facts of the Gospel, because when the Holy Spirit comes in He challenges a man's will, demands a reconstruction of his whole life, and produces a change of mind which will work havoc in his former complacency.

2. Moral Conversion

"Except ye . . . become as little children." (Matthew 18:3)

Our Lord teaches that moral progress must start from a point of moral innocence, and is consequently only possible to a man when he has been born again. A child's life is implicit, not explicit. To become "as little children" means to receive a new heredity, a totally new nature, the essence of which is simplicity and confidence towards God. In order to develop the moral life innocence must be transformed into virtue by a series of deliberate choices in which the present pleasure is sacrificed for the ultimate joy of being good. This aspect of truth is familiar in all Paul's Epistles, viz., that the natural has to be transformed into the spiritual by willing obedience to the word and will of God. Such passages as Romans 12:2 ("... be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind") and Ephesians 4:23 ("be renewed in the spirit of your mind") apply directly to the moral life of those who have been supernaturally saved by the grace of God, those in whom the Holy Spirit dwells and is at work. To renew means to transform to new life. These passages make it clear that we can be renewed in our mind when we choose. We have no choice about being born into this world, but to be born again, if we will but come to Jesus and receive His Spirit, is within our own power. This is true all along in the Christian life, you can be renewed in the spirit of your mind when you choose, you can revive your mind on any line you like by sheer force of will. Always remember that Jesus Christ's statements force an issue of will and conscience first, and only as we obey is there the understanding with the mind (see John 7:17). The challenge to the will comes in the matter of study, as long as you remain in the "stodge" state there is no mental progress—"I am overwhelmed by the tremendous amount there is to know and it's no use my going on." If you will forge through that stage you will suddenly turn a corner where everything that was difficult and perplexing becomes as clear as a lightning flash, but it all depends on whether you will forge ahead. When people say, "Preach us the simple Gospel," what they mean is, "Preach us the thing we have always heard, the thing that keeps us sound asleep, we don't want to see things differently"; then the sooner the Spirit of God sends a thrust through their stagnant minds the better. Continual renewal of mind is the only healthy state for a Christian. Beware of the ban of finality¹³ about your present views.

3. Mystical Conversion

... to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles: which is Christ in you, the hope of glory. (Colossians 1:27)

"Mystical" is a word that is easily abused; it means the type of mind the Holy Spirit develops in us whereby we see things by intuition. Intuition in the natural world is the power to see things at a glance without reasoning, and the Spirit of God develops that power in the saint. The accuracy of intuitive judgement is in proportion to the moral culture of the one who judges. A child and a good woman are the best examples of intuitive judgement. It is a bad look-out when anything blurs intuition because it is an indication that something is wrong with the moral character. All this is common to human beings apart from the Holy Spirit; spiritual intuition lives in the same sphere as natural intuition plus the Holy Spirit. "My sheep hear My voice," said Jesus. Keep the intuitive secret life clear and right with God at all costs; never blunt intuition. Whenever a man comes into personal contact with Jesus Christ he knows at once whether he is good or bad; he does not reason it out, he knows it intuitively. These are the moments "when the spirit's true endowments stand out plainly from its false ones. . . . "

²If a man love Me, he will keep My words: . . . and We will come unto him, and make our abode with him" (John 14:23)—the Triune God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, abiding with the saint. These words of Our Lord refer to mystical communion with God in all matters of mental and moral judgement, and imply sympathy with all that the heart of God holds dear.

^{13.} ban of finality: the limitation or "curse" of having one's mind made up, unwilling to consider new information.

SPIRITUAL EVOLUTION

Evolution means a gradual working out or development. There is a difference between natural evolution and spiritual evolution: in natural evolution we do not know the final goal; in spiritual evolution the goal is given before the start—". . . till we all come in the unity of the faith . . . unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Ephesians 4:13).

1. Spiritual Biogenesis

In Him was life; and the life was the light of men. (John 1:4)

Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink His blood, ye have no life in you. (John 6:53)

No man by nature has the life of the Son of God in him; he has in him the life which God creates in all men, but before he can have in his actual life the life that was in the Son of God, he must be born from above. "Ye have not [this] life in yourselves" (RV), said Jesus, i.e., the life He had. The life of Jesus is imparted to us on the ground of the Redemption, but we have to come to Him for it. A man may say, "I have the life of God in me by nature, all I have to do is to develop it, Jesus will assist me; He is the great type-Christian." If you take that view, viz., that a man becomes spiritual as he pays attention to the best elements in himself, you make the Atonement unnecessary. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Unless my personal life so assimilates the life of Jesus that I can manifest it, I have not got the life which characterised Him. Life can only come from pre-existing life: I must get the life of God from the One who has it. "He that hath the Son hath the life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life" (1 John 5:12 RV). ". . . and ye will not come to Me, that ye may have life" (John 5:40 RV).

2. Spiritual Birth

Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. (John 3:7)

Drummond's 14 thesis in his Natural Law in the Spiritual World makes it too easy, it does not recognise the factor of sin, and consequently does not cover all the facts. According to the New Testament, a man can only be lifted into the Kingdom of God by being born into it. Here Drummond's illustration holds good,* but remember, it was the tragedy caused by sin that made new birth necessary. It sounds much more sensible to say that if a man goes on evolving and developing he will become a spiritual being; but once get a dose of "the plague of your own heart" and you will find that things are as the Bible says they are, tragically wrong. As long as men have no experience of tragedy in their own life they remain ignorant of the need for the Redemption. "I was alive without the law once," says the apostle Paul in that little-understood chapter, Romans 7, which deals with his alternating experiences. When once a man recognises the gap sin has made between God and man, the meaning of the Atonement is clear—that in the Cross Jesus Christ bridged the gap and made it possible for any man to be lifted to where the whole human race was designed to be, viz., in perfect communion with God.

God formed Adam of the dust of the ground, a son of God. The Son of God was born of the Holy Ghost. If I am ever going to have the heredity of the Son of God I must have a similar experience, I must be "born of the Spirit"; my personal life must be impregnated by the Holy Ghost—"My little children, of whom I am again in travail until Christ be formed in you" (Galatians 4:19 RV). You cannot illustrate new birth by natural birth. Natural birth is by means of a process of procreation; new birth is not in the least like it. The only symbol for being born

The first law of biology is this; That which is Mineral is Mineral; that which is Flesh is Flesh; that which is Spirit is Spirit. The mineral remains in the inorganic world until it is seized upon by a something called Life outside the inorganic world: the natural man remains the natural man, until a Spiritual Life from without the natural life seizes upon him, regenerates him, changes him into a spiritual man (pp. 380–81). [This footnote was in the original text]

"from above" is the advent of Jesus Christ into this world. Jesus Christ entered into the human race from outside it; He entered it through the door of the Virgin's womb by the conception of the Holy Ghost—"Therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:35).

Adam was created a son of God, that is, he was innocent in relation to God, and God intended him to take part in his own development by a series of moral choices whereby he was to sacrifice the natural life to the spiritual. If Adam had done this there would have been no death, but transfiguration, as in Jesus Christ, the last Adam. But Adam refused to let God be his Ruler; he took his right to himself and became his own god, thereby cutting himself off from the domain of God. The New Testament phrase is that we are "dead in trespasses and sins," dead towards all that Jesus Christ stands for.

The two realms, the natural and the spiritual, ought to be one and the same: to be born a man, should be to be a son of God, as Adam was in the beginning. But God's original order for mankind was broken into—"sin entered into the world, and death by sin"; consequently the necessity of the new birth is insisted on all through. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." It is a statement of foundation fact. The words were spoken not to a sinner, as men count sin, but to an upright, godly man. Before any man can be in the realm of God he must be born into it.

New birth is not the working of a natural law. The introduction of anything into this world is cataclysmic: before a tree can grow it must be planted; before a human being can evolve he must be born—a distinct and emphatic crisis. Every child born into the world involves a cataclysm to someone, the mother has practically to go through death. The same thing is true spiritually. Being "born from above" is not a simple easy process; we cannot glide into the Kingdom of God. Common sense reasoning says we ought to be able to merge into the life of God, but according to the Bible, and in actual experience, that is not the order. The basis of things is not rational, it is tragic, and what Jesus Christ came to do was to put human life on the basis of Redemption whereby any man can receive the heredity of the Son of God and be lifted into the domain where He lives.

The historic Jesus represents the personal union of God and man. He lived on the human plane for thirty-three years and during that time He presented what God's normal Man was like. When we are regenerated we enter into the Kingdom of God, we begin to grow, and the goal is certain—"... we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." But before I can begin to see what Jesus Christ stands for I have to enter into another domain— "Except a man be born again, he cannot . . . enter into the kingdom of God." I enter into the life of God by its entering into me, that is, I deliberately undertake to become the home of the life of the Son of God. "Bethlehem." I do not draw my life from myself, I draw it from the One who is the Source of life.

3. Spiritual Breath

And the spirit of the LORD shall rest upon Him, . . . and shall make Him of quick understanding in the fear of the LORD. (Isaiah 11:2–3)

—literally, "He shall draw his breath in the fear of the LORD." Most of us draw our breath from the ordinary human life we all live. The time a Christian gives to prayer and communion with God is not meant for his natural life, but meant to nourish the life of the Son of God in him. God engineers the circumstances of His saints in order that the Spirit may use them as the praying-house of the Son of God. If you are spiritual the Holy Spirit is offering up prayers in your bodily temple that you know nothing about, it is the Spirit making intercession in you (see Romans 8:26– 27). We hear it said that "Prayer alters things"; prayer not so much alters things as alters the man who prays, and he alters things. When I am born from above the life of the Son of God is born in me, and I have to take time to nourish that life. The essential meaning of prayer is that it nourishes the life of the Son of God in me and enables Him to manifest Himself in my mortal flesh.

The secret of our Lord's life is given us in His own words—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit" (John 12:24). Spiritual life is always of that order: just when you think it is going to be successful, it disappears; it is not time for it yet, it will appear in another order. Ultimately the meek shall inherit the earth, and then we shall have a system of national life without any of the materialistic crudities seen everywhere to-day. There are views abroad of a federation of nations, but it can only be brought about by the Lord Jesus Christ, by our adherence entirely to Him. Whenever a religious community begins to get organised it ceases to "draw [its] breath in the fear of the LORD"; the old way of talking is kept up, but the life is not there, and men who used to be keen on proclaiming the Gospel are keen now only on the success of the organisation.

TALKS ON SPIRITUAL CONSTRUCTION GIVEN AT ZEITOUN, EGYPT, APRIL 1917.

SPIRITUAL CONSTRUCTION—I

Nehemiah 4:1-6

So we built the wall. (Nehemiah 4:6)

The first essential in spiritual construction is to clear away the rubbish. Nehemiah could not begin to build until the rubbish had been dealt with (see Nehemiah 4:2). Rubbish is waste matter, and there is the moral equivalent of rubbish which must be dealt with before we can begin to build a spiritual character. We do not start with a clean sheet, we start with a sheet that is like a palimpsest, a manuscript that has been written on twice, and if the right chemical is used, the first writing is seen. We all have hereditary writing in us which is so much rubbish to be removed.

1. Destruction by Neglect

Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, passion, evil desire, and covetousness, the which is idolatry. (Colossians 3:5 RV)

In this passage Paul mentions things that are of the nature of rubbish, and he mentions them in their complete ugliness. They are the abortion of the stuff human nature is made of, and he says, "Mortify them, destroy them by neglect." Certain things can only be dealt with by ignoring them; if you face them you increase their power. It is absurd to say, Pray about them; when once a thing is seen to be wrong, don't pray about it, it fixes the mind on it; never for a second brood on it, destroy it by neglect. We have no business to harbour an emotion which we can see will end in any of the things Paul mentions. No man or woman on earth is immune, each one of us knows the things we should not think about, or pray about, but resolutely neglect. It is a great thing for our moral character to have something to ignore. It is because these things are not understood that there is so much inefficiency in spiritual life. What Christianity supplies is "the expulsive power of a new affection." We cannot destroy sin by neglect; God deals with sin, and we can get the effective measure of His dealing with it in our actual life.

2. Direction by Sacrifice

And if thy right eye causeth thee to stumble, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not thy whole body be cast into hell. (Matthew 5:2 RV)

Sacrifice is spoken of in the Bible in its disciplinary, chastening aspect as well as in its worshipping aspect.

The worshipping aspect means that I give back to God the best He has given me and in this way He makes it His and mine for ever. What is the best God has given me? My right to myself. Jesus Christ is always unyielding on one point, viz., that I must give up my right to myself to Him. He does not teach the annihilation of self, He shows how self can be rightly centred in personal passionate devotion to God. Self-sacrifice may be a disease; we are not to sacrifice for our own sake, or for the sake of anyone else, but for God's sake. Why should God make it that the natural had to be sacrificed to the spiritual? God did not: God intended the natural to be transformed into the spiritual by obedience; sin made it necessary to sacrifice the natural. It was God's permissive will, not His order. Sanctification means not only that we are delivered from sin, but that we start on a life of stern discipline. It is not a question of praying but of performing, of deliberately disciplining ourselves. There is no royal road there; we each have it entirely in our own hands. It is not wrong things that have to be sacrificed, but right things. "The good is the enemy of the best," not the bad, but the good that is not good enough. The danger is to argue on the line of giving up only what is wrong; Jesus Christ selected things essential to a full-orbed life—the right hand and the eye, these are not bad things, they are creations of God. Jesus Christ talked rugged unmitigated truth, He was never ambiguous, and He says it is better to be maimed than damned. There was never a saint yet who did not have to start with a maimed life. Anyone will give up wrong things if he knows how to, but will I give up the best I have for Jesus Christ? If I am only willing to give up wrong things, never let me talk about being in love with Him! We say, "Why shouldn't I do it, there is no harm in it?" For pity's sake, go and do it, but remember that the construction of a spiritual character is doomed once you take that line.

3. Designed by Desires

Delight thyself also in the LORD, and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart. (Psalm 37:4)

If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you. (John 15:7 RV)

We have any number of instincts, but very few desires. Desire is what you determine in your mind and settle in your heart and set yourself towards as good, and that is the thing God will fulfil if you delight in Him—that is the condition. God deals with us on the line of character building—"Ye shall ask what ye will," said Jesus, not what you like, but what your will is in; and we ask very few things. If our desires are distorted we are apt to say that God gave us a stone when we asked for bread, whereas God always hears our prayers, but He answers them according to His own nature.

The basis of spiritual construction is implicit faith in Jesus Christ. If I stake all on His astute Mind I will find I have struck bedrock. The majority of us only believe in Jesus Christ as far as we can see by our own wits. If we really believed Him what a mighty difference there would be in us! We would trust His Mind instead of our own, we would stop being "amateur providences" over other lives, and we would be fit to do our twenty-four hours' work like no one else. "Except ye . . . become as little children"—simplehearted, trusting and not being afraid.

You can never become a Christian by thinking, you can only become a Christian by receiving something from God; but you must think after you are a Christian. Some folks have a cowardly fear of intellect in spiritual matters. After the war the most energetic thinking will have to be done by Christians; we must think as we have never thought before, otherwise we will be outstripped by those who think on lines which ignore Jesus Christ and endeavour to prove that the Redemption is not necessary.

SPIRITUAL CONSTRUCTION—II

The Alloy

1. The Divine and the Human

But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us. (2 Corinthians 4:7)

In spiritual reconstruction after the war the purely spiritual line, if it ignores the human, will be useless; and the purely human will not be any good; there must be the amalgam, i.e., the pure Divine and the pure human mixed—not Divine and sinful, but Divine and human. Paul is not despising the earthen vessel, it is in the earthen vessel that the excellency of God's power is to be manifested.

In the Incarnation we see the amalgam of the Divine and the human. Pure gold cannot be used as coin, it is too soft; in order to make gold serviceable for use it must be mixed with an alloy. The pure gold of the Divine is of no use in human affairs; there must be an alloy, and the alloy does not stand for sin, but for that which makes the Divine serviceable for use. God Almighty is nothing but a mental abstraction to me unless He can become actual, and the revelation of the New Testament is that God did become actual: "the Word was made flesh." Jesus Christ was not pure Divine, He was unique: Divine and human.

The Christian doctrine of the Incarnation is not only that "God was manifest in the flesh," but that the same thing will take place in anyone who receives the Holy Spirit: he receives from God a totally new heredity, the life of the Son of God, "until Christ be formed in you." Human nature is the home where the Divine manifests itself. Holiness Movements are apt to ignore the human and bank all on the Divine; they tell us that human nature is sinful, forgetting that Jesus Christ took on Him our human nature, and "in Him is no sin." It was God who made human nature, not the devil; sin came into human nature and cut it off from the Divine, and Jesus Christ brings the pure Divine and the pure human together. Sin is a wrong thing altogether and is not to be allowed for a moment. Human nature is earthly, it is sordid, but it is not bad, the thing that makes it bad is sin. Sin is the outcome of a relationship set up between man and the devil whereby man becomes "boss" over himself, his own god (see Genesis 3:8). No man was ever created to be his own master, or the master of other men; there is only one Master of men, and that is Jesus Christ. We can be fanatical and ignore the human, or sinful and ignore the Divine, or we can become the mixture of the Divine and the human. No man is constituted to live a pure Divine life on earth; he is constituted to live a human life on earth presenced with Divinity. When the pure Divine comes into us we have the difficulty of making our human nature the obedient servant of the new disposition, it is difficult, and thank God it is! God gives us the fighting chance. A saint is not an ethereal creature too refined for life on this earth; a saint is a mixture of the Divine and the human that can stand anything.

2. The Preacher and the Philosopher

... it was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the thing preached to save them that believe. (1 Corinthians 1:21 RV mg)

The preacher is there not by right of his personality or oratorical powers, but by right of the message he proclaims. Who is the man that attracts us to-day? The man with a striking personality and we don't care about his message. Paul said, "Yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" An orator rouses human nature to do what it is asleep over: the New Testament preacher has to move men to do what they are dead-set against doing, viz., giving up the right to themselves to Jesus Christ; consequently the preaching of the Gospel awakens a terrific longing, but an equally intense resentment. The aspect of the Gospel that awakens desire in a man is the message of peace and goodwill—but I must give up my right to myself to get there. The basis of human life has been put on Redemption, and on the ground of that Redemption any man can be lifted into right relationship with God. The Gospel is "the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." There is no room for despair on the part of any man if he will only believe what the New Testament preacher proclaims—but it takes some believing. No thinking will ever make me a Christian; I can only become a Christian through listening to what is preached and accepting salvation as a gift; but I must think after I am a Christian.

The shaking through this war¹⁵ has revealed the shallowness of our Christianity, there is no moral power in it-not sufficient moral power to make a man live as a disciple of Jesus Christ in his home life, let alone his business life or his camp life. The consequence is the moral emphasis has been coming from the world, not from the Church. There needs to be a radical change in many of us who name the Name of Christ if we are going to measure up to the nobility and self-sacrifice exhibited by men and women of the world. Now is the time when the preaching of the Cross will have a chance it never had before. The war has hit rationalism a severe blow, but rationalism will gather itself together and take its revenge. Rationalism fundamentally is rotten. The boldness of rationalism is not in what it does, but in the way it criticises. The basis of things is not rational, it is tragic; there is something wrong at the heart of life that reason cannot account for. According to rationalism there is no need to be born again-"develop the best in yourself." That was God's original design for the human race, viz., that man should take part in his own development by a series of moral choices whereby he would transfigure the natural into the spiritual; but sin entered and there came an hiatus, a break, and man's development is not now based on the rational progression God designed, but on the Redemption, which deals with the tragedy caused by sin. No man can get at God as Jesus Christ presents Him by philosophy. The philosopher has vision, so has the poet, but neither of them has any memory; the preacher of the Gospel has vision and memory; he realises there is a gap between God and man, and knows that the only way that gap can be bridged is by Jesus Christ making the Divine and the human one. The goal of human life is to be one with God, and in Jesus Christ we see what that oneness means.

In spiritual construction after the war the emphasis must be laid on what the preacher proclaims, not on what the philosopher reasons about. The great message of the Incarnation is that there the Divine and the human became one, and Jesus Christ's claim is that He can manifest His own life in any man if he will co-operate with Him. If I am going to nourish the pure Divine in my human life I must first of all let God deal drastically with sin; by my own willing agreement I must let Him put His axe to the root of sin, and then when His life has come into me, I must obey it. Do I as a preacher of the Gospel really believe the Gospel I preach? The test is in the soul of the preacher himself, in the one who says he believes the Gospel. For instance, do I believe that that man who did me a cruel wrong, that man who thwarted me, can be presented "perfect in Christ Jesus"?

We are rarely taught to think along these lines. Thinking is not of first importance, but it is of mighty importance secondarily. The man who prefers to be lazy in his spiritual life may do well enough, but it is the man who has thought on the basis of things who is able to give intelligent help to those who are up against it. Men have been hit during the war and few of us have been able to help them, we are inarticulate, we don't know how to put things because we have not thought about them. "My people doth not consider," says God, they do not think. We are not called on to preach a philosophy of thought, which is the tendency nowadays—but to preach "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," because that preaching enables God to create His miracles in human lives. If I prefer to preach my philosophy I prevent God creating His miracles, but when I am simple enough to preach the Cross, God performs His miracles every time.

SPIRITUAL CONSTRUCTION—III

John 13:13-18

We have to recognise that we are one half mechanical and one half mysterious; to live in either domain and ignore the other is to be a fool or a fanatic. The great supernatural work of God's grace is in the incalculable part of our nature; we have to work out in the mechanical realm what God works in in the mysterious realm. People accept creeds, but they will not accept the holy standards of Jesus Christ's teaching. To build on the fundamental work of God's grace and ignore the fact that we have to work it out in a mechanical life produces humbugs, those who make a divorce between the mysterious life and the practical life. In John 13 the mysterious and the mechanical are closely welded together.

1. The Lordship of Jesus

Ye call Me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am. If I then, your Lord and the Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. (John 13:14)

Verse 13 refers to the spiritual mastery of Jesus over His disciples; verse 14 states how that mastery is to be expressed in the mechanical life. You can't wash anybody's feet mysteriously; it is a purely mechanical, matter-of-fact job; you can't do it by giving him devotional books or by praying for him; you can only, wash anybody's feet by doing something mechanical. Our Lord did not tell the disciples how they were to do it: He simply says—"Do it." He is not questioning whether or not they can do it; He is saying that they must do what the mastery of His ruling shows them they should do. Our bodily habits are purely mechanical, and the revolution caused in individual lives by our Lord's salvation is that He enables us to do what He commands us to do, if we will but practise the doing. Habits are built up, not by theory, but by practise. The one great problem in spiritual life is whether we are going to put God's grace into practise. God won't do the mechanical; He created us to do that; but we can only do it while we draw on the mysterious realm of His divine grace. "If ye love Me, ye will keep My commandments." We have to remember that there is a domain of our life that is handed over to mechanism; God will not work it for us, but if we obey His Spirit we shall find we can make this mechanism work out God's will exactly. Beware of any spiritual emotion that you do not work out mechanically; whenever in devotion before God His Spirit gives a clear indication of what He wants you to do, do it.

The way to examine whether we are doing what Jesus Christ wants us to do is to look at the habits of our life in three domains—physical, emotional, and intellectual. The best scrutiny we can give ourselves is along this line: Are my bodily habits chaste? is my emotional nature inordinate? is my intellectual life insubordinate? When we begin to work out what God has worked in, we are faced with the problem that this physical body, this mechanism, has been used by habit to obeying another rule called sin; when Jesus Christ delivers us from that rule, He does not give us a new body, He gives us power to break and then re-mould every habit formed while we were under the dominion of sin. Much of the misery in our Christian life comes not because the devil tackles us, but because we have never understood the simple laws of our make-up. We have to treat the body as the servant of Jesus Christ: when the body says "Sit," and He says "Go," go! When the body says "Eat," and He says "Fast," fast! When the body says "Yawn," and He says "Pray," pray!

Education is for the purpose of behaviour, and habits are the stuff out of which behaviour is formed. The difference between an educated and an uneducated person lies just here—when an educated person is put into new circumstances, he always knows how to behave because his mind is stored with examples of right behaviour. When an uneducated person comes into a new situation he does not know what to do and behaves in an ignorant manner. Spiritual education and habit go together in this connection, that I learn to make my body act quickly along the line of education the Holy Spirit has given me, then when I find myself in new circumstances I shall not be helpless because I have educated myself according to the laws of God's grace.

2. The Example of Jesus

For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you. (John 13:15)

Jesus did not tell the disciples to imitate Him in washing one another's feet; the one thing He condemned was imitation before the life was there. For instance, when He set before them a little child and said "Except ye... become as little children," He did not mean they were to act like babies; He was telling them to be as simple and artless in their relationship to God as a child is in relation to his father. If we try to imitate Jesus Christ we produce a mechanical exhibition of what we are ourselves, the life is not there, we are spiritual frauds, and everybody knows it. But our Lord's teaching is clear—"If I am your Lord and Master, it means you have received My Spirit, then you will do what I do," and our habits are copies of the true indwelling Spirit of Jesus.

The disciples had not always been in the relation of disciples to Jesus, but now they are His disciples and as such He says to them, "do as I have done to you." When you see a thing should be done, the command of Jesus is always—Do it. Beware of saying, "I must go and tell Mrs. So-and-so to do that, she is just suited for it"; it is for you to do. There must be a mechanical outlet for spiritual inspiration. You must do what you see, or become blind in that particular.

In order to obey our Lord we must accumulate all possible circumstances to reinforce the right motive. It is easy to sit in a drawing-room and think about the terrible condition of things in the world, and pray and sentimentalise over it to further orders; ¹⁶ but Jesus says, "I have given you an example, that you should go and do to others what I have done to you." If all Jesus Christ had done was to have sat before His Father's throne and prayed for us, we would have been exonerated for leaving things undone, but He has given us an example to follow. Never allow that your circumstances exonerate you from obeying any of the commands of Jesus. The lessons which have to be repeated are those we have not bothered our heads to learn.

3. The Warning of Jesus

I speak not of you all: I know whom I have chosen: but that the scripture may be fulfilled, He that eateth My bread lifted up his heel against Me. (John 13:18 RV)

Any one of us can lift our "heel," our mechanical life, against Jesus Christ's dominion, and while eating His bread play the traitor to Him in private. No one preaches more earnestly, talks more earnestly, than we do, we are absolutely sincere, but we are not real because we have never acted when the opportunity occurred along the line Jesus Christ wants us to. The thing the world is sick of to-day is sincerity that is not real.

So much depends on a simple understanding of the mechanical laws of our nature. The only One who knows the mysterious, unfathomable depths of our personality is God; we have to deal with the practical part, and see that we have faith in God with regard to the mysterious part while we obey Him in the practical domain. Jesus Christ lived the only sane life that ever was lived. In His life the mysterious and the mechanical were wrought into one wonderful unique Personality, and it is His life that is to be "manifested in our mortal flesh."

"Now is the day of salvation," and to do it now is the "thank you" of our acceptance of that salvation.

APRIL 9, 1917 — ZEITOUN YMCA HUTS, EGYPT

THE FUNDAMENTAL OFFENCE

And apart from shedding of blood there is no remission. Hebrews 9:22

1. Christ Is the Blood of God
The cross is the blood of Christ (1 John 2:2)

When we speak of the blood of Christ we mean that what He did drew upon what was the very citadel of His personality and involved His total self.

2. Sin Is the Blood of Satan Self-realisation is the blood of sin (1 John 3:8)

What in us harrows the heart, in Him harrowed Hell. He revolutionises the eternal foundations of our moral world.

3. Sanctification Is the Blood of the Saint Repentance is the blood of sanctification (1 John 1:7)

The sinner could only be saved by something that damned his sin.

Dr. P. T. Forsyth¹⁷

1. Christ Is the Blood of God

And He is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the whole world. (1 John 2:2 RV)

The expression "the blood of Christ" means not only that Christ shed His blood, but that He poured out

^{17.} Peter Taylor Forsyth (1848–1921), British Congregationalist minister and theologian. Chambers read many of Forsyth's books and valued his insights.

His very life before God. In the Old Testament the idea of sacrifice is that the blood, which is the life (see Genesis 4:4), is poured out to God, its Giver. When Jesus Christ shed His blood on the Cross it was not the blood of a martyr, or the blood of one man for another; it was the life of God poured out to redeem the world. It is easy to be thrilled by the sacrifices men make: it takes the Spirit of Almighty God to get us even interested in the cost of our redemption to God. There is a good deal of talk to-day to the effect that the men who sacrifice their lives are thereby redeemed. It is said in an earnest mood, but it reveals a total lack of understanding of the Cross, which is not the cross of a man, but the Cross of God, i.e., the offering of God for the purpose of bringing back the human race into fellowship with Himself. Either the Cross is the only way there is of explaining God, the only way of explaining Jesus Christ, and of explaining the human race, or there is nothing in it at all. If the human race apart from the Cross is all right, then the Redemption was a useless waste.

Our Lord did not sacrifice Himself for a cause: He poured out His life for a purpose in the Mind of God. We will sacrifice ourselves to further orders for another part of ourselves, but the meaning of Jesus Christ's passion is that He poured out His total Self. The Cross is the expression of the very heart of God, and when my eyes are opened I see that Jesus Christ has made the basis of life Redemptive, and it cost Him everything to do it. The death of Christ was not the death of a martyr, it was God manifesting Himself in the heart of the human race when the human race was saying, "Crucify Him."

The Christian revelation is not that Jesus Christ stands to us as the Representative of God, but that He is God. If He is not, then we have no God. "... God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself." We do not worship an austere, remote God, He is here in the thick of it. The Cross is a Reality, not a symbol—at the wall of the world stands God with His arms outstretched. There is nothing more certain in Time or Eternity than what Jesus Christ did on the Cross: He switched the whole human race back into right relationship to God and made the basis of human life Redemptive, consequently any member of the human race can get into touch with God now. It means not simply that men are saved from hell and put right for heaven, but that they are freed from the wrong disposition and can have imparted to them the very disposition of the Son of God, viz., Holy Spirit. The dangerous tendency of to-day is not so much the anti-religious tendency as the pietistic tendency, that by prayer and consecration, by giving up things and devoting ourselves to God, He will recognise us. We can never get to God in that way; we can get to God instanter irrespective of what we are on the basis of the Redemption. On that basis I can be forgiven, and through the forgiveness I can be turned into another man.

2. Sin Is the Blood of Satan

For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil. (1 John 3:8)

The Bible makes a distinction between the devil and Satan, only occasionally are the terms used synonymously, e.g., Revelation 20:2. The devil is the antagonist of God: Satan is the result of a relationship set up between man and the devil. God took on Himself the responsibility of having created the being who became the devil and the being who became the sinner, and the proof that He did so is the Cross. God never lays the sin of the human race on anyone saving Himself; the revelation is not that God punished Jesus Christ for our sins, but that "Him who knew no sin He made to be sin on our behalf. . . . " The relationship set up between Adam and the devil was selfrealisation, not immorality and vice, but, my claim to my right to myself, whether it is manifested in clean living or unclean living is a matter of indifference; sin is the fundamental relationship underneath. Sin is not wrong doing, it is wrong being, independence of God; God has undertaken the responsibility for its removal on the ground of the Redemption. The condemnation is not that a man is born with an heredity of sin; a man begins to get the seal of condemnation when he sees the Light and prefers the darkness (see John 3:19).

The great miracle of the Redemption is that I can receive an absolutely new heredity, viz., Holy Spirit; and when that heredity begins to work out in me, I manifest in my mortal flesh the disposition of the Son of God. The result of the Redemption in my life must be that I justify God in forgiving me. I can "mouth" my salvation, I can thank God for it, but if I do not produce "goods up to sample" my religious life is a travesty. Always beware of the presentation of Redemption which produces a dangerous state of priggishness in moral life-that I can receive forgiveness and yet go on being bad; if I do, God is not justified in forgiving me. "If you are justified by faith, show it by your works," says the Apostle James (see James 2:14–24); in what way are you different in your life? does the reality of the Redemption at work in you justify God in having forgiven you? A man has to clear the conscience of God in forgiving him. Present-day evangelism is inclined to go much more strongly on the line of the "passion for souls" than "the passion for sanctification"; everyone has gone a-slumming to save the lost; it suits our religious passion to help the men and women who are down and out. Saving souls is God's work, man's work is discipling those souls (see Matthew 28:18–20). When Jesus Christ faced men with all the forces of evil born in them and men who were cleanliving and moral and upright, He did not look at the immorality of the one or the morality of the other, He looked at something we do not see-self-realisation. If my religion is based on my right to myself, that spells "Satan" in my soul; I may be right-living, but I am anti-God. "If you are going to be My disciple," Jesus says, "you must give up your right to yourself." Jesus Christ came to do what I could not do, viz., alter my heredity, and the point for me is, am I going to let Him do it? "And apart from shedding of blood there is no remission." God redeemed the world by shedding His blood, by putting the whole passion of the Godhead into it. He did not become interested and put one arm in to help the human race up, He went into the Redemption absolutely, there was nothing of Himself left out. Am I willing to put my whole self into becoming His? or am I one of those who accept His salvation, but thoroughly object to giving up my right to myself to Him? Unless I am willing to shed my blood for Him my Christianity is not worth anything. The trouble is that we have never come to the realisation of what sin is, we confound it with sins. Sin has to be cleansed, sins must be forgiven; the Redemption of Jesus Christ deals with sin. Do I agree with God's judgement on sin and self-realisation on the Cross? If so, I see where that judgement hits me and I agree that God is right. Self-realisation and God cannot live together. In the history of the human race when God appeared in the Person of Jesus Christ, they crucified Him. When I am born from above I realise that if I am going to obey the Holy Spirit I must enter into identification with Jesus Christ, otherwise I will kill the life of God in me. If I agree with God's judgement on self-realisation, then the salvation of Jesus Christ will be manifested in me. It is a moral decision. There is no shirking the point and saying, "Oh, I'm not so bad as other people"; it is a question of agreeing with God's verdict on sin. Will I go through the condemnation now? If I will, there is no more condemnation for me, the salvation of Jesus Christ is made actual.

3. Sanctification Is the Blood of the Saint

But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, . . . the blood [the essential life] of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin. (1 John 1:7)

The one condition is that we walk in the light as God is in the light. God does not give a man a clean thing to look after, He puts a life within him that keeps him clean as long as he walks in the light—a superabounding life, "a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

Repentance is the blood of sanctification, the exhibition of a real gift of God; not only am I sorry for my sin, that is human, but in the sorrow for sin God slips in something else—the power never to do the thing again. Many a man is kept away from Jesus Christ by a sense of honour—"I don't deny what you say, that God is able to save, but it can't mean me—if you only knew me! the mistakes I have made, the wrong things I have done, the blundering things; I would be a perfect disgrace to Him." There are more men in that attitude than is commonly supposed; but when a man realises what Jesus Christ undertakes to do—not tell him to do his best, but to surrender to Him and He will put into him the power to do right, he is emancipated right away.

IS CHRISTIANITY WORTHY OF GOD?

2 Corinthians 5:18-21

The Redemption is God's battle unto death with sin.

Dr. Forsyth

There is a presentation of Christianity which is sentimental and weak and unworthy of God; the Christianity of the New Testament is something "angels desire to look into." God has paid the price of redeeming a race that had become degenerate; He is not going to redeem it, He has redeemed it. The Gospel is just that—good news about God, that He has redeemed the human race. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself. . . ." Is the Gospel, as it is popularly presented, good news about God, or is it a misrepresentation of God? It is not good news about God unless it presents the revelation that God has put the basis of human life on Redemption. The Redemption means a great deal more than my personal salvation and yours, that is a mere outcome; pseudo-evangelism is apt to make it the great thing. The great thing according to the New Testament is not that the Redemption touches me, but that it avails for the whole human race. The Cross is not the cross of a martyr: it is the mirror of the nature of God focused in one point of history. If I want to know what God is like, I see it in the Cross. Jesus Christ is not Someone who leads me to God: either He is God, or I have none.

1. Christ's Cross the Conscience of the Human Race

How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without blemish unto God, cleanse your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? (Hebrews 9:14 RV)

If we do not take as much pains that our conscience is true, the pains we take to be true to our conscience is wasted.

Dr. Forsyth

Christianity is not consistency to conscience or to convictions; Christianity is being true to Jesus Christ. Over and over again a man's personal relationship to Jesus Christ gets into his convictions and splits them, like new wine put into old wine-skins, and if he sticks to his convictions before long he will become anti-Christ. The standard for my conscience and for the conscience of the whole human race is the Cross, and if I do not take care to rectify my individual conscience by the Cross I become "persnickety" and end in criticising God. The standard for the Christian is never—Is this thing right or wrong? but, is it related to the blood and passion and agony of the Cross of Christ? does it identify itself with the death of self-realisation?

Wherever Christianity has ceased to be vigorous it is because it has become Christian ethics instead of the Christian evangel. People will listen more readily to an exposition of the Sermon on the Mount than they will to the meaning of the Cross; but they forget that to preach the Sermon on the Mount apart from the Cross is to preach an impossibility. What is the good of telling me to love my enemies—and that "Blessed are the pure in heart"? You may talk like that to further orders, but it does not amount to anything. Jesus Christ did not come to teach men to be or do any of these things: He did not come primarily to teach, He came to make a man the possessor of His own disposition, the disposition portrayed in the Sermon on the Mount.

The conscience of the race, i.e., the standard whereby men are judged, is the Cross. I do not make my own conscience the standard, or the Sermon on the Mount the standard; the Cross of Christ, not His teaching, is the central thing, and what God condemns in the Cross is His standard for me. My conscience may be a competitor against Jesus Christ; I may be conscientious to the backbone, as Saul of Tarsus was, and be anti-Christ. ("I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth" Acts 26:9.) The conscientious objector takes as his standard, not the Cross—which is a cruel thing, a thing which sheds blood and blasts life—but the teachings of Jesus, which have no meaning apart from His Cross, consequently he is in danger of becoming a bloodless kind of individual. Immediately you come face to face with realities there has to be war to the death. It is absurd to call Christianity a system of non-resistance; the great doctrine of Christianity is resistance "unto blood" against sin. If a man does not resist physically it is only in order that he may resist all the more morally; where moral resistance does not tell, then physical resistance must. Take Our Lord Himself, we read that He went into the Temple and cast out them that sold and bought, overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and in a voice of thunder ordered the whole crowd out. Is He the "meek and mild and gentle Jesus" there? Up to the time of the war we had a Christianity that had lost the element of fight, the element of grit and judgement; the war has brought back these elements. There is something appalling about human life, and if we make our own private conscience the standard and remain in the offing on the conscientious line, we shall come under the curse of Meroz who "came not to the help of the LORD . . . against the mighty." My aim is not to be the saving of my own soul, getting myself put right for heaven, but battling to the death for what the Cross of Christ stands for. The great thing is not the teaching of Jesus, but what He came to do for the human race, viz., to make the way back to God. It cost Him His life to do it, and the writer to the Hebrews says, "Consider Him . . . lest ve be wearied and faint in your minds. Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin." Have I got the iron of the Cross of Christ into my conscience, or am I a weak sentimentalist, kind and generous, but with nothing of the nature of the Cross in me? Is there anything in me that would go to the death for Jesus Christ's sake, or do I easily knuckle under because I base all on the teachings of Jesus instead of on His Cross? Conscientiousness is an ingredient in human nature, but the first and foremost relationship in Christianity is the sovereign preference for Jesus Christ.

2. Christ's Cross the Consecration of the Human Race

For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh. (Romans 8:3)

The process and progress of the Kingdom of God in history only unfolds this final achievement of His universal person.

Dr. Forsyth

The Cross of Christ consecrated the human race to God, and the human race cannot be run with success on any other line—we are certain it can. It cannot be run on imperial lines or democratic lines, it can only be run on the lines on which Jesus Christ consecrated it.

Where it touches my individual life is that in the Cross God "condemned sin in the flesh," not sins. Sins I look after; sin God looks after. The Redemption deals with sin. When the disposition of sin rules in my body it takes my organs and uses them for lust. Lust means, I will satisfy myself; whether I satisfy myself on a high or a low level makes no difference, the principle is the same. It is the exercise of my claim to my right to myself, and that has to go; in the final wind-up of the human race there won't be a strand of it left. Where we blunder is in confounding regeneration with the Redemption; the experience of regeneration is rare, the majority of men don't come anywhere near it, but that does not alter the fact of the Redemption. The meaning of regeneration is that in my actual life I become of some account to Jesus Christ, I become His disciple, and recognise that my body is the temple of the Holy Ghost. We say we can do what we like with our bodies, we cannot. If I try to satisfy any appetite on the basis of my right to myself, it means there is a spirit of antagonism to Jesus Christ at work in me; if I recognise that my body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, it is a sign that my life is based on the Cross.

3. Christ's Cross the Concentration of the Human Race

Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed. (Romans 6:6)

Mankind's acquirement of its soul is Christ's moral and bloody victory worked into detail; His justice made to triumph and sin made to yield its opposite.

Dr. Forsyth

There are two Mystical Bodies, the Body of Christ and the body of sin, both are outside me. The disposition of sin inside me, called the "old man," connects me with the body of sin; when I am born from above I have the disposition of holiness imparted to me, and this connects me with the Body of Christ and I go to the death of the "old man" and in this way the body of sin is going to be destroyed. Sanctification is not a question of being delivered from hell, but of identifying myself with the death of Christ. Am I based in the moral centre of my life on the Cross of Christ? Have I ever been moved for one second by the Cross? Those of us who are Christians ought to give a great deal more time to thinking on the fundamentals of our religion. Take it in your actual life, if you are not delivered from any particular element of sin, the reason is either you don't believe God can deliver you or you don't want Him to. Immediately you want Him to deliver you, the power of God is yours and it is done, not presently, but now, and the manifestation is wonderful. Let a man give up the right to himself to Jesus Christ, and the efficacy of His Redemption works out instanter.

THE ETHICS OF ENTHUSIASM

Ephesians 5

Enthusiasm means, to use the phrase of a German mystic, "intoxicated with God"; the word has come down in the world and popularly means anything that enthuses. Christianity takes all the emotions, all the dangerous elements of human nature, the things which lead us astray, all feelings and excitabilities, and makes them into one great power for God. Other religions either cut out dangerous emotions altogether or base too much on them. The tendency is in us all to say, "You must not trust in feelings"; perfectly true, but if your religion is without feeling, there is nothing in it. If you are living a life right with God, you will have feeling, most emphatically so, but you will never run the risk of basing your faith on feelings. The Christian is one who bases his whole confidence in God and His work of grace, then the emotions become the beautiful ornament of the life, not the source of it.

1. The Excitable Course of Personal Energy (Ephesians 5:1-13)

Anything that awakens the strong emotions of a man will alter his mental outlook, e.g., the incoming of the Holy Spirit breaks every habit and every arranged set of ideas he has, and if he will obey the Spirit, he can re-make himself according to God's plan.

(a) The Drift of Ideas

If a man is unexcited his ideas are dull, he drifts impersonally; but let the excitement of anger, or of love, or hate, or jealousy come in, or let the Holy Spirit come in, and the drift stops and his whole mind is concentrated at once along one line. Human nature, if it is healthy, demands excitement, and if it does not obtain its thrilling excitement in the right way, it will take it in the wrong. That is a law of human nature which the Spirit of God does not contradict, but exalts. Every false religion and false order of culture tries to make out that we ought to be absolutely unmoved—the passionlessness of exhaustion; but a healthy, full-orbed life is continually seeking excitement. God never makes us bloodless stoics, He makes us passionate saints. The word used of Jesus Christ has in it the very essence of Christianity—our Lord's "passion"; you could never speak of His passionlessness, the one characteristic of our Lord's life was its condensed intensity.

(b) The Direction of Ideas

Obedience to the Holy Spirit will mean that we have power to direct our ideas. It is astonishing how we sit down under the dominance of an idea, whether a right or wrong idea, and saints have sat down under this idea more than any other, that they cannot help thoughts of evil. Thank God that's a lie, we can. If you have never realised this before, put it to the test and ask yourself why the Spirit of God through the apostle Paul should say, "... bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ" if we cannot do it? Never sit down under ideas that have no part or lot in God's Book; trace the idea to its foundation and see where it comes from. The Bible makes it plain that we can help thoughts of evil; it is Satan's interest to make us think we cannot. God grant the devil may be kept off the brains of the saints!

(c) The Divine Inhibition of Ideas

The Holy Spirit not only instructs us, but as we obey Him He inhibits our ideas. Those of you who have been a while in grace, examine yourselves and you will be astonished to find how much has been shed off your life, like autumn leaves. Ideas you never imagined you could get rid of have gone completely because God's Spirit has been definitely selecting out of your mind the ideas He can use, and as you obey Him and keep on that line the other ideas die out. It is only done by obedience, not by impulses, but by keeping at it.

2. The Emotional Centre of Personal Energy (Ephesians 5:14-20)

(a) The Scarcity of Emotions

Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead. (Ephesians 5:14)

The Bible reveals that apart from the Spirit of God men have no moving emotion towards God, they are described as "dead"; the preaching of the Gospel, the reading of the Word of God, has no answering emotion. Religious enterprise that has not learned to rely on the Holy Spirit makes everything depend on the human intellect—"God has said so-and-so, now believe it and it will be all right," but it won't. The basis of Jesus Christ's religion is the acceptance of a new Spirit, not a new creed, and the first thing the Holy Spirit does is to awaken us out of sleep. We have to learn to rely on the Holy Spirit because He alone gives the Word of God life. All our efforts to pump up faith in the Word of God is without quickening, without illumination. You reason to yourself and say, "Now God says this and I am going to believe it," and you believe it, and re-believe it, and re-re-believe it. and nothing happens, simply because the vital power that makes the words living is not there. The Spirit of God always comes in surprising ways—"The wind bloweth where it listeth, . . . so is every one that is born of the Spirit." No creed or school of thought or experience can monopolise the Spirit of God. The great snare of some aspects of presenting the Gospel is that everything is put in the head, everything must be rational and logical, no room is left for the great power of life which shows itself in surprising ways. In natural life people without any emotions are undesirable to have as friends, and a Christian life that is without the continual recurrence of Divine emotion is suffering from spiritual sleeping-sickness.

(b) The Successive Emotions

See then that ye walk circumspectly. (Ephesians 5:15)

Emotions in nature and in grace succeed one another very rapidly and need a strong controlling power. In natural life people who have successive emotions are in danger of becoming sentimentalists; in spiritual life successive emotions lead to being driven about by every wind of doctrine that savours of piety. A sentimentalist is one who likes to live in a great swim of emotions, but he is unfit to meet the facts of life, and when real trouble comes his way he tries to hide himself away from it and becomes intensely selfish. The anxiety lest you should suffer—"It is such a distress to me to see you in pain"—is really anxiety lest he should suffer. In spiritual life successive emotions are more dangerous. If you are without the control of the Spirit of God, devotional emotion and religious excitement always end in sensuality. Emotions that stir feelings must act themselves out, whether rightly or wrongly will depend on the person. If you feel remarkably generous, then be generous at once, act it out; if you don't, it will react and make you mean. 18 If you have a time of real devotion before God and see what God wants you to do and you do not work it out in your practical life, it will react in secret immorality. That is not an exceptional law, it is an eternal law, and I wish it could be blazed in letters of fire into the mind of every Christian. Very often you will find that ^{18.} mean: ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

God paralyses your emotional nature and allows you to feel nothing; it is a sure sign that He is guiding, because your life has been too full of emotions you have not been working out.

(c) The Sovereign Emotions

... be filled with the Spirit. (Ephesians 5:18)

The sovereign emotions are guided and controlled by love, but bear in mind that love in its highest moral meaning is the preference of one person for another person. A Christian's love is personal passionate devotion to Jesus Christ, and he learns to grip on the threshold of his mind as in a vice every sentiment awakened by wrong emotions. God holds the saints responsible for emotions they have not got and ought to have as well as for the emotions they have allowed which they ought not to have allowed. If we indulge in inordinate affection, anger, anxiety, God holds us responsible; but He also insists that we have to be passionately filled with the right emotions. The emotional life of a Christian is to be measured by the exalted energy exhibited in the life of our Lord. The language applied to the presence of the Holy Spirit in the saint is descriptive of the energy of emotion that keeps the inner and outer life like our Lord's own life. We must find out for ourselves the particular "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" (Ephesians 5:19) which will keep our emotional life right with God, and we shall find that the Holy Spirit insists on intellectual fasting as well as on intellectual control. The apostle Paul continually urges the saints to stir up their minds; we have no right to be stagnant and dull. If we have no emotional life, then we have disobeyed God. "Be filled with the Spirit"; it is as impossible to be filled with the Spirit and be free from emotion as it is for a man to be filled with wine and not show it. The reason some of us are so amazingly dull and get sleeping-sickness is that we have never once thought of paying attention to the stirring up the Spirit of God gives the mind and our emotional nature. How many of us are terrified out of our wits lest we should be emotional! Jesus Christ demands the whole nature, and He demands that part of our nature the devil uses most, viz., the emotional part. We have to get the right bed-rock for our nature, the life of Jesus Christ, and then glean the things which awaken our emotions, and see that those emotions are expressed in ways like the character of our Lord.

3. The Expansive Character of Personal Energy (Ephesians 5:21–33)

(a) Transformation of Self-Hood

... submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God. (Ephesians 5:21)

When the Holy Spirit first comes into us He seems to put us into a prison house; then He opens our eyes and causes us to expand in the realisation that "all things are yours," from the tiniest flower that blooms to God on His throne. When we have learnt the secret that God Himself is the Source of our life, then He can trust us with the expansion of our nature. Every expansion of our nature transforms self-hood into unselfishness. It is not peculiar to Christians, it is true of human nature apart altogether from the grace of God. Inspiration, either true or false, unites the personality, makes a man feel at one with himself and with everyone else, and he is unselfish as long as the inspiration lasts. Paul says, "Don't be drunk with wine," which is the counterfeit of the true transformation, "but be filled with the Spirit," and all selfinterested considerations are transformed at once, you will think only, without trying to, of the good of others and of the glory of God. Be careful what you allow to unite you and make you feel unselfish; the only power we must allow as Christians is the Holy Spirit who will so transform us that it will be easy to submit one to another in the fear of God.

(b) Transfiguration of Self-Hood

Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. (Ephesians 5:22)

With a sudden abruptness Paul mentions the closest practical relationships in life, and immediately it becomes clear why he does so. If the expansive character of the Holy Spirit is at work in us as saints, it will transfigure the life in all these relationships. The Holy Spirit keeps us on the line of the transfiguration of self-hood and the thought of good to ourselves never enters in, unless it is introduced by someone else.

(c) Tenderness of Sainthood

The characteristic of the expansive power of the Holy Ghost in a saint appears in a tenderness just like Jesus Christ's—"... even as Christ also loved the church, and gave Himself for it" (Ephesians 5:25). These characteristics never come by impulse. Impulse is the impertinence of human nature keeping on tiptoe to try and look as big as God. The Holy Spirit always checks impulse, and the saint learns through humiliation to bring it to heel. Watch how Jesus Christ not only checked, but rebuked impulse in the disciples. The vagaries of modern spiritual life come in because our impulses are insubordinate—"No, I won't submit, I have illumination." The Holy Spirit never works like that. Be "being filled with the Spirit," and as we walk in the light the life of God is worked out moment by moment—a life of glorious discipline and steady obedience.

PERSONALITY—I

Personality is the perplexing fact of my self which is continually changing and yet remains the same. Personality is an enigma; its only answer is God. Never confound personality with consciousness; all that can be dealt with psychologically is consciousness, but a man's salvation is not limited to his consciousness.

1. The Disposition of Darkness

The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him. (1 Corinthians 2:14)

The word "disposition" is used here in the sense of the mainspring that moves me. Apart from a knowledge of Jesus Christ, and apart from being crumpled up by conviction of sin, men have a disposition which keeps them perfectly happy and peaceful. The natural man is not in distress, not conscious of any disharmony in himself; he is not "in trouble as other men," and is quite content with being once-born; the things Jesus Christ stands for have no meaning for the natural man. The Bible refers to this disposition as one of darkness—"... being darkened in their understanding" (Ephesians 4:18 RV). We preach to men as if they were conscious of being dying sinners, they are not, they are having a good time, and all our talk about the need to be born again is from a domain they know nothing about; because some men try to drown unhappiness in worldly pleasures it does not follow all are like that. There is nothing attractive about the Gospel to the natural man; the only man who finds the Gospel attractive is the man who is convicted of sin. Conviction of sin and being guilty of sins are not the same thing. Conviction of sin is produced by the incoming of the Holy Spirit because conscience is promptly made to look at God's demands and the whole nature cries out, in some form or other. "What must I do to be saved?"

For a man to be undisturbed and in unity with himself is a good condition, not a bad one, because a united personality means freedom from self-consciousness; but if his peace is without any consideration of Jesus Christ it is simply the outcome of this disposition of darkness which keeps men alienated from the life of God. When Jesus Christ comes in He upsets this false unity; He comes not as a Comforter, but as a thorough Disturber. "If I had not come . . . , they had not had sin"—then why did He come? If I was peaceful and happy, living a clean upright life, why should Jesus Christ come with a standard of holiness I never dreamt of? Simply because that peace was the peace of death, a peace altogether apart from God. The coming of Jesus Christ to the natural man means the destruction of all peace that is not based on a personal relationship to Himself.

2. The Disposition Divided

For we know that the law is spiritual: but I am carnal, sold under sin. For that which I do I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. (Romans 7:14–15)

Romans 7 is the classic for all time of the conflict a man experiences whose mind is awakened by the incoming of the light of God. Never say "We must get out of the 7th of Romans," some of us will never get into it; if we did, we would be in hell in two minutes. The 7th of Romans represents the profound conflict which goes on in the consciousness of a man without the Spirit of God, facing the demands of God. Only to one in a thousand can God lift the veil to show what the 7th of Romans means. It is the presentation by a man who stands now as a saint, looking back on the terrific conflict produced by his conscience having been awakened to the law of God, but with no power to do what his mind assigns he should. A lot of tawdry stuff has been written on this chapter simply because Christians so misunderstand what conviction of sin really is. Conviction of sin such as the apostle Paul is describing does not come when a man is born again, nor even when he is sanctified, but long after, and then only to a few. It came to Paul as an apostle and saint, and he could diagnose sin as no other. Knowledge of what sin is is in inverse ratio to its presence; only as sin goes do you realise what it is; when it is present you do not realise what it is because the nature of sin is that it destroys the capacity to know you sin.

The problem in practical experience is not to know what is right, but to do it. My natural spirit may know there are a great many things I ought to do, but I never can do what I know I should until I receive the Life which is life indeed, viz., Holy Spirit. "For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do" (Romans 7:19). That is the picture of a man conscious of a dislocation within himself. "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"The consciousness of a personality at this stage is that of a house divided against itself; it is the stage technically known as conviction of sin. "For I was alive without the law once"—at peace till I saw what Jesus Christ was driving at, "but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died" (Romans 7:9). "If all God can do for me is to destroy the unity I once had, make me a divided personality, give me light that makes me morally insane with longing to do what I cannot do, I would rather be without His salvation, rather remain happy and peaceful without Him." But if this experience is only a stage towards a life of union with God, it is a different matter.

3. The Disposition Divorced

For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would. (Galatians 5:17)

After being born again a man experiences peace, but it is a militant peace, a peace maintained at the point of war.

The wrong disposition is no longer in the ascendant, but it is there, and the man knows it is. He is conscious of an alternating experience, sometimes he is in ecstasy, sometimes in the dumps; there is no stability, no real spiritual triumph. To take this as the experience of full salvation is to prove God not justified in the Atonement.

"For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh." The Spirit of God entering into a man wars against "the flesh," not flesh and blood, but the disposition of sin. Paul calls the product of this friction between the Spirit and the flesh, "carnality." A worldly man has no carnality; he is not conscious of any conflict between the Spirit and his flesh; when he is born again the conflict begins, and there is a disclosure of the carnal mind, which is "enmity against God." No man knows he has that enemy on the inside until he receives the Holy Spirit.

The carnal mind is not something which has to be removed: it either is, or is not. Immediately you agree to the dethronement of the disposition which lusts against the Spirit, the carnal mind is not. The flesh and the Spirit are daggers drawn, so to speak, and I have to decide which shall rule. If I am going to decide for the Spirit, I will crucify the flesh; God cannot do it, I must do it myself. To "crucify" means to put to death, not counteract, not sit on, not whitewash, but kill. If I do not put to death the things in me which are not of God, they will put to death the things that are of God. To belong to Christ means I have deliberately chosen to depose the disposition of the flesh and be identified with Christ—"Yes, I agree with the Spirit, and go to the death of the old disposition; I agree with God's condemnation in the Cross of self-interest and self-realisation, though these things have been dearer to me than life." Jesus Christ is merciless to self-realisation, to self-indulgence, pride, unchastity, to everything that has to do with the disposition you did not know you had till you met Him. The Redemption does not tinker with the externals of a man's life; it deals with the disposition. "And they that are of Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with the passions and the lusts thereof" (Galatians 5:24 RV). No one is really Christ's till that is done.

4. The Disposition Divine

... that by these [exceeding great and precious promises] ye might be partakers of the divine nature. (2 Peter 1:4)

At this stage a man's personality is again united into peace. Jesus Christ's one aim is to bring us back into oneness with God. The whole purpose of the Redemption is to give back to man the original source of life, and in a regenerated man this means "Christ... formed in you." Am I willing that the old disposition should be crucified with Christ? If I am, Jesus Christ will take possession of me and will baptise me into His life until I bear a strong family likeness to Him. It is a lonely path, a path of death, but it means ultimately being "presenced with Divinity." The Christian life does not take its pattern from good men, but from God Himself, that is why it is an absolutely supernormal life all through. "Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect."

PERSONALITY—II

Self-Realisation versus Christ-Realisation

Self-realisation is a modern phrase—"Be moral, be religious, be upright, in order that you may realise yourself." Nothing blinds the mind to the claims of Jesus more effectually than a good moral life based on the disposition of self-realisation. Paul says, "If our gospel is veiled, it is veiled in them that are perishing: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of the unbelieving . . ." (2 Corinthians 4:3–4 RV). The issue is not with external sins and wrongdoing, but with the ideal of self-realisation, because it is this disposition that divides clean asunder from all Jesus Christ stands for. In using Bible terms, remember they are used from God's standpoint, not man's. From man's standpoint, self-realisation is full of light and wisdom; from God's standpoint, it is the dark night of the soul. Romans 7 describes the giving way of the foundations of self-realisation.

1. Separate Self-Consciousness

The notion that we conceive of ourselves as separate from everyone else is erroneous, it is the rarest thing—unless we have done wrong, then immediately we realise not our oneness with others, but our separateness. The guilty man is the one who wants to be alone, the man who is right with God does not; neither does a child. Separate self-consciousness is the realisation that I am other than what I see and am troubled by all that is not "me." The "I" of separate self-consciousness is the manifestation of sin; the final curse of a disobedient soul is that it becomes a separate, self-conscious individual.

God did not create Adam holy. He created him innocent, that is, without self-consciousness (as we understand the word) before God; Adam was conscious of himself only in relation to the Being whom he was to glorify and enjoy. Consciousness of self was an impossibility in the Garden until something happened, viz., the introduction of sin. To begin with Adam was not afraid of God; he was not afraid of the beasts of the field, or of anything, because there was no consciousness of himself apart from God. Immediately he disobeyed, he became conscious of himself and he felt afraid—"I heard Thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid . . ." (Genesis 3:10); he had ceased to be a child and had become a sinner. That is why our Lord says we have to become children all over again. Through the miracle of regeneration we are placed back into a state of innocence. "Sin kills the child out of us and creates the bitter sinner in us." In other words, God's right to me is killed by the incoming of my self-conscious right to myself-"I can do without God." Sin is not a creation, it is a relationship set up between the devil (who is independent entirely of God) and the being God made to have communion with Himself. Disobey God, separate yourself from Him, and you will be "as God, knowing good and evil" (Genesis 3:5 RV; see Genesis 3:22). The entrance of sin meant that the connection with God was gone and the disposition of self-realisation had come in its place.

Our Lord never denounced wrongdoing and immorality so strongly as He denounced self-realisation. Have you ever been puzzled by His attitude to the people of His day—why He told the chief priests that "the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you"? He could not have meant that social sins were not abominable: He was looking at something we do not see, viz., the disposition at the basis of right and wrongdoing. If either my goodness or my badness is based on the disposition of self-realisation, I am anti-Christ. Modern culture and much of the "Higher Christian Life" type of teaching goes on the line of perfecting my natural individual self until I am in such a condition that God will say, "Now you have done so well I will call you My child." Could anything be more alien to the New Testament? Our Lord's teaching is always anti—self-realisation. "He that findeth his life shall lose it . . ." Why do we ignore what Jesus said? When we come across something we don't like we say we don't understand it; it is too plain not to be understood. Jesus Christ says that the relationship to Himself is to be supreme. ". . . and he that loseth his life for My sake shall find it."

We know experimentally what it is to be born again, but we do not think along that line, consequently barriers come in the way, e.g., self-conscious piety, sanctimonious sincerity. Anything that makes me conscious of myself or of my experience is of the nature of sin and brings the bondage of self-consciousness. In a religious person self-consciousness dresses itself up in the guise of piety; you can't be "pi" without feeling self-conscious. The truly godly person is one who is entirely sanctified, and he or she is never sanctimonious, but absolutely natural. The characteristic of a saint is freedom from anything in the nature of self-consciousness. Our Lord was conscious of only one thing—"I and My Father are one."

2. Solidarity in Christ

If I am prepared to have the disposition of self-realisation destroyed and the disposition of Christ-realisation put in its place, I get to the bedrock of identification with the death of Jesus, and there begins the possibility of my being something which will show my gratitude for His Redemption. Identification with the death of Jesus is a most powerfully practical experience. The dominating principle at work now is towards Christ-realisation; experimentally it means that I am ruled by the very disposition of Jesus. Once we are reinstated in the life of God through the Redemption self-consciousness gets feebler and feebler until it disappears altogether, and we are conscious only of personality as a means of knowing God.

The beginning of the Christian life is characterised by an abomination of self-interest; it is "what the Lord said to me" and "what I said to Him"; it is a stage through which many a life goes, but it is not in agreement with the life Jesus pictures, not the life of a child. There is never any trace of self-conscious sainthood in abandonment to Jesus, there is only one consciousness—something like war or a bereavement strike the life and all the morbid self-interest is gone, and the abandonment of concern for others marks the beginning of real life. That is an ordinary natural law and has nothing to do with the Spirit of God. Apply it to what our Lord teaches about discipleship—He makes abandonment to Himself the condition (see Luke 14:26).

Jesus only, Jesus ever, Jesus all in all I see.

Some people are everlastingly badgered by self-consciousness, full of nervous troubles, but let

Whenever our Lord talked about the relation of a disciple to Himself it was in terms of mystical union: "I am the vine [not the root of the vine, but the vine itself], ye are the branches." We have not paid enough attention to the illustrations Jesus uses. This is the picture of sanctification in the individual, a completeness of relationship between Jesus Christ and myself. Pharisaic holiness means that my eyes are set on my own whiteness and I become a separate individual. I have the notion that I have to be something; I have not, I have to be absolutely abandoned to Jesus Christ, so one with Him that I never think of myself apart from Him. Love is never self-conscious.

We are one with God only in the manner and measure we have allowed the Holy Spirit to have way with us. The fruit of the Spirit is the fruit of a totally new disposition, the disposition of Christ-realisation. Instead now of self-realisation, self-consciousness and sin, there is sanctity and spiritual reality, bringing forth "fruit unto holiness."

PERSONALITY—III

Psalm 139

Intercessory Introspection

1. The Supernatural Intimacy of God (Psalm 139:1-6)

O LORD, Thou hast searched me, and known me. (Psalm 139:1)

The l39th Psalm ought to be the personal experience of every Christian. My own introspection, or exploration of myself, will lead me astray, but when I realise not only that God knows me, but that He is the only One who does, I see the vital importance of intercessory introspection. Every man is too big for himself, thank God for everyone who realises it and, like the Psalmist, hands himself over to be searched out by God. We only know ourselves as God searches us. "God knows me" is different from "God is omniscient"; the latter is a mere theological statement; the former is a child of God's most precious possession—"O LORD, Thou hast searched me, and known me."

No matter what our Christian experience may be the majority of us are nowhere near where the Psalmist was; we will rest in our experience instead of seeing that the experience is meant to bring us to the place of knowing God's supernatural intimacy.

"Thou compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O LORD, Thou knowest it altogether." To say "Of course God is omniscient and knows everything" makes no effect on me, I don't care whether God is "omni" anything; but when by the reception of the Holy Spirit I begin to realise that God knows all the deepest possibilities there are in me, knows all the eccentricities of my being, I find that the mystery of myself is solved by this besetting God. Do I really believe I am too big a mystery to solve by myself? or am I so desperately ignorant that I imagine I understand myself thoroughly? If so, I am likely to have a rude awakening. The Psalmist implies—"Thou art the God of the early mornings, the God of the late at nights; the God of the mountain peaks, the God of the sea; but, my God, my soul has further horizons than the early mornings, deeper darkness than the nights of earth, higher peaks than any mountain, greater depths than any sea—Thou who art the God of all these, be my God. I cannot search to the heights or to the depths; there are motives I cannot trace, dreams I cannot get at; my God, search me out and explore me, and let me know that Thou hast." Look back over your past history with God and you will see that this is the place He has been bringing you to—"God knows me, and I know He does." You can't shift the man who knows that; there is the sanity of almighty God about him. It is an interpretation of what Jesus Christ said—"The very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not therefore. . . . '

Never shall I think
Of anything that thou might'st overlook:—
In faith born triumph at thy feet I sink.

George MacDonald

2. The Surprising Presence of God (Psalm 139:7–12)

Whither shall I go from Thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from Thy presence? (Psalm 139:7)

The Psalmist states further that the presence of God is the secure accompaniment of His knowledge; not only does God know everything about him, but He is with him in the knowledge. Where is the place that God is not?—hell? No, hell is God; if there were no God, there would be no hell. "If I make my bed in hell, behold, Thou art there." The first thing "the fool" does is to get rid of God ("The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." (Psalm 14:1); then he gets rid of heaven and hell; then he gets rid of all moral consequences—no such thing as right and wrong. The Psalmist is stating that wherever he may go in accordance with the indecipherable Providence of God, there the surprising presence of God will meet him. Immediately you begin to forecast and plan for yourself God will break up your programme, He delights to do it, until we learn to live like children based on the knowledge that God is ruling and reigning and rejoicing, and His joy is our strength. When we say—"even there shall Thy hand lead me, and Thy right hand shall hold me," there is no foreboding anxiety, because "His love in times past" enables us to rest confidentially in Him. The only rest there is is in abandon to the love of God. There is security from yesterday—"Thou hast beset me behind"; security for to-morrow—"and before";

and security for to-day, "and laid Thine hand upon me." It was this knowledge that gave our Lord the imperturbable peace He always had. We must be like a plague of mosquitoes to the Almighty, with our fussy little worries and anxieties, and the perplexities we imagine, all because we won't get into the elemental life with God which Jesus came to give.

This Psalm is the expression of the Atonement at work in human experience, at-one-ment with God. The marvel of the Atonement is that Jesus Christ can create endlessly in lives the oneness which He had with the Father. When the Holy Spirit emancipates my personality no attention is paid to my individuality, to my temperament or prejudices; He brings me into oneness with God entirely when once I am willing to waive my right to myself and let Him have His way. No man gets there without a crisis, a crisis of a terrific nature in which he goes to the death of something.

God is never far enough away from His saints to think about them: He thinks them, we are taken up into His consciousness. This is expressed in the life of our Lord. How we get there we cannot say, but it is by the processes of God's training of us. God won't leave us alone until the prayer of His Son is answered, that we may be one with the Father even as He is one.

PERSONALITY—IV

I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me. Galatians 2:20

1. The Sacrifice of Soul

... when Thou shalt make His soul an offering for sin. (Isaiah 53:10)

Galatians 2:20 is a complete statement of "the life hid with Christ in God" in personal experience, and the prophecy in Isaiah that the soul of our Lord was made "an offering for sin" has exactly the same idea. The sacrifice of body may be an un-Christian sacrifice—"and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity [love, RV] it profiteth me nothing"; but the sacrifice of soul is a willing love-offering.

"I am crucified with Christ . . ." The teaching of self-realisation is the great opponent of the doctrine of sanctification—"I have to realise myself as a separate individual, educate and develop myself so that I fulfil the purpose of my being." Self-realisation and self-consciousness are ways in which the principle of sin works out, and in Galatians 2:20 Paul is referring to the time and the place where he got rid of his "soul" in this respect. There is nothing in the nature of self-realisation or of self-consciousness in our Lord.

People will say glibly, "Oh yes, I have been crucified with Christ," while their whole life is stamped with self-realisation; once identification with the death of Jesus has really taken place self-realisation does not appear again. To be "crucified with Christ" means that in obedience to the Spirit granted to me at regeneration, I eagerly and willingly go to the Cross and crucify self-realisation for ever. The crucifixion of the flesh is the willing action of an obedient regenerate man or woman. "And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts" (Galatians 5:24). Obey the Spirit of God and the Word of God, and it will be as clear as a sunbeam what you have to do; it is an attitude of will towards God, an absolute abandon, a glad sacrifice of the soul in unconditional surrender. Then comes the marvellous revelation—"I have been crucified with Christ"—not, "I am being crucified," or, "I hope to be crucified by and by"; not, "I am getting nearer to the place where I shall be crucified with Christ," but, "I have been crucified with Christ," I realise it and know it.

2. The Surprise of Sacrifice

For to me to live is Christ. (Philippians 1:21)

". . . nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Paul still says "I," but the "I" is so taken up with Christ that all he sees is Christ-realisation, not selfrealisation. "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him"—the "old man" is the scriptural name for self-realisation, and it is my "old man" that connects me with the body of sin. Sin is infinitely more than my "old man"; there is a supernatural body of sin which backs me up in wrong, it is an impulsion to wrong on the outside which is far more powerful than the disposition to sin on the inside. By the identification with the death of Christ Paul refers to, the "old man," self-realisation in me, is crucified, and in this way the body of sin is "done away," not crucified, but destroyed. There are two mystical bodiesthe body of sin ruled over by Satan, and the Body of Christ built up of the men and women who have been made one in Him. That is why Paul refers to our Lord as "the last Adam," He is the Federal Head of a totally new conception of Humanity. When I am lifted by the Atonement into oneness with God I do not lose my personal identity, my identity becomes that of conscious union with God. Man's relationship with God in the beginning was such that the consciousness of union with Him was a delight: as soon as sin entered that went and man became selfconscious: he realised he was no longer in union with God and tried to hide himself from His presence.

Paul says, "I have been crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live"—"my personal identity as created by God and restored in Christ Jesus, is still there, but the "I" is no longer ruled by the disposition of sin, that has been identified with the Cross, and it is Christ who lives in me." Paul's whole life was so identified with Christ that it was not only not untrue for him to say "Christ liveth in me," it was the only truth. When he says, in writing to the Corinthians, "I fear, lest . . . your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ," he is referring to the fundamental simplicity of this relationship. Our Lord Himself continually reminded His disciples of this simplicity—"Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, . . ." (Matthew 18:3); "I thank Thee, O Father, . . . because Thou . . . hast revealed [these things] unto babes" (Matthew 11:25)—out of the complication, out of the torture of self-consciousness, out of the strenuousness and effort, into the simplicity of the life hid with Christ in God, where God is at liberty to do with us what He likes, even as He did with His own Son.

3. The Summit of Substitution

He that eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood, dwelleth in Me, and I in him. (John 6:56)

"... and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God." The doctrine of substitution in the Bible is "Christ for me" that it may be "Christ in me," until the personal oneness can only be expressed in the language of our Lord in John 6. "The life which I now live," says Paul, not hereafter, but the life you can see, the life I live in the flesh, the life exhibited through my tongue, through all the organs of my body, the way I eat and drink, and the way I do my work. That is the life Paul has the audacity to say he lives "by the faith of the Son of God." It is the life of the Spirit made manifest in the flesh, and that is always the test of identification with Christ, not prayer meetings and times of devotion. If I have been identified with the Cross of Christ it must show through my finger-tips.

"... who loved me and gave Himself for me." Paul is identified for ever with the interests of the Son of God in other lives, he attracted to Jesus Christ all the time, never to himself; he became a sacramental personality, wherever he went Jesus Christ helped Himself to his life. "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, was this grace given, to preach [i.e., sacramentally express] unto the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ" (Ephesians 3:8 RV).

WHERE JESUS CHRIST TELLS

1. In the Domain of Struggle and Sin

If Jesus Christ does not mean anything to you it is because you have not entered into the domain where He tells; you may have to enter that domain through a ruthless doorway. Immediately you go through the bottom board of self-complacency and come to the elemental you enter the domain of struggle and sin, and Jesus Christ begins to tell at once. Men are alive physically and intellectually apart from Jesus Christ, and as long as they are satisfied with that attitude to life Jesus Christ is not a necessity; the wholesomeminded type is totally oblivious to Jesus Christ. "I did not come for the whole," said Jesus, "but for they that are sick" (see Luke 5:31–32).

There are numbers of men and women who are materially satisfied, their reach does not exceed their grasp; they are not moral renegades, but they remain outside the domain in which Jesus Christ figures. They have no disrespect for Jesus Christ, but they have no use for Him, He seems to be untouched by the reality of things. It is quite possible to live in that domain and never come across the need for Jesus Christ; in fact you can work out a better philosophy of life without Him because He comes in as an interruption. But when once a man realises that his actual life spits at his creed, then begins the struggle. A boy in his teens thinks higher and nobler than at any other time, then he begins to find that his actual life comes nowhere near his ideal—"I can't begin to be actually what I see I ought to be." The struggle represented by that type of mind is an agony, and that is the first domain where Jesus Christ begins to tell. If a man has got this struggle on there is only one way out—"Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." If you are not struggling, you don't need to bother your head; but if it is a struggle worthy of the name, remember the only way out is by coming to Jesus. So long as I have no struggle, no sense of sin, I can do well enough without Him.

2. In the Domain of Suffering and Sorrow

Another domain in which Jesus Christ tells is the domain of suffering and sorrow. You cannot think of a home to-day that is without suffering. The war has knocked on the head the stupid temperamental idea that "every cloud has a silver lining"; there are clouds in countless lives with an inkier lining inside than outside. It is an insult to tell such people to "Cheer up and look on the bright side"; their lives are blasted for all time from every standpoint saving Jesus Christ's. The remarkable thing is that it is rarely the one who suffers who turns against God; it is the lookers-on who turn against God because they do not see the one fact more in the life which gives God room to work. Those who look on are apt to come to the conclusion either that the one who suffers is a sinner, or that God is cruel; they take the line of Job's comforters. Why there should be suffering we do not know; but we have to remain loyal to the character of God as revealed by Jesus Christ in the face of it.

There is a type of suffering caused because we do not see the way out. A man may say that the basis of things is rational—"Get to the bottom of things and you will find it all simple and easy of explanation"—well, that simply is not true. The basis of things is not rational, but tragic, and when you enter the domain of suffering and sorrow you find that reason and logic are your guide amongst things as they are, but nothing more. Is it rational that I should be born with an heredity over which I have no control? Is it rational that nations that are nominally Christian should be at war? The basis of things is tragic, and the only way out is through the Redemption. Many a man in mental stress of weather is driven to utter what sounds like blasphemy, and yet he may be nearer God than in his complacent acceptance of beliefs that have never been tried. Never be afraid of the man who seems to you to talk blasphemously, he is up against problems you may never have met with; instead of being wrathful, be patient with him. The man to be afraid of is the one who is indifferent, what morality he has got is well within his own grasp, and Jesus Christ is of no account at all.

3. In the Domain of Spirit and Sublimity

It is in the implicit domains that Jesus Christ tells. By "implicit" is meant the thing you can't put into words but which makes you "you." It is in the moments when the implicit is awakened that Jesus Christ becomes the only One who does tell. You cannot get there when you like, there are moral conditions. Jesus Christ makes Himself the great Decider of human destiny—"But who say ye that I am?" Beware of the subtlety that likes to listen to the teaching of Jesus but says, "There is no need for all this talk about the Atonement and the Cross, all that is necessary is to live out the Sermon on the Mount, to follow in the steps of Jesus." If Jesus Christ came to teach a man to be what he never can be, would He had never come! He is the greatest tantaliser of mankind if all He came to do was to tell us to be pure in heart, to be so holy that when God scrutinises us He can see nothing to censure. But what He came to do was to make it possible for any man to receive the disposition that ruled Him, viz., the Holy Spirit. When a man is born again what happens is that he receives the heredity of Jesus Christ. That is the meaning of Regeneration. There is only one disposition that can live out the teaching of Jesus, and that is His own disposition. When I have received the disposition of Jesus Christ, God does not shield me from any requirements of a son; I have the opportunity of proving actually worthy of His great Redemption. "If the Son . . . shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed," said Jesusfree from the inside, free in essence; there will be no pretence, no putting yourself on a pedestal and saying "This is what God has done for me," you will be free, the thing will be there ostensibly.

WITH CHRIST IN THE SCHOOL OF PHILOSOPHY

1. The New Thinking of Pentecost

... the things of the Spirit of God. (1 Corinthians 2:14)

Everywhere the charge is made against Christian people, not only the generality of Christians, but really spiritual people, that they think in a very slovenly manner. Very few of us in this present dispensation live up to the privilege of thinking spiritually as we ought. This present dispensation is the dispensation of the Holy Ghost. The majority of us do not think according to the tremendous meaning of that; we think ante-Pentecostal thoughts, the Holy Spirit is not a living factor in our thinking; we have only a vague impression that He is here. Many Christian workers would question the statement that we should ask for the Holy Spirit (Luke 11:13). The note struck in the New Testament is not "Believe in the Holy Spirit," but "Receive the Holy Spirit." That does not mean the Holy Spirit is not here; it means He is here in all His power, for one purpose, that men who believe in Him might receive Him. So the first thing we have to face is the reception of the Holy Spirit in a practical conscious manner.

Always distinguish between yielding to the Spirit and receiving the Spirit. When the Spirit is at work in a time of mighty revival it is very difficult not to yield to the Spirit, but it is quite another thing to receive Him. If we yield to the power of the Spirit in a time of revival we may feel amazingly blessed, but if we do not receive the Spirit we are left decidedly worse and not better. That is first a psychological fact and then a New Testament fact. So as Christians we have to ask ourselves, does our faith stand "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power"? Have we linked ourselves up with the power of the Holy Ghost, and are we letting Him have His way in our thinking?

(a) Material of This Thinking

Ye shall know them by their fruits. (Matthew 7:16; see Matthew 7:15–20)

The touchstone of truth is not a big intellect but a pure heart—a holy man; but an unholy man can test the reality of a man's holiness. Jesus told His disciples to test preachers and teachers not by the fact that they prophesied in His name, but by their fruits. How many of us do? How many of us know experimentally what Jesus meant when He said: "My sheep hear My voice," but "they know not the voice of strangers"? We must never test our teachers by our spiritual prejudices. Jesus laid down as the one principle for testing teachers, not that God was at work through them, but by their fruits. God will honour His word whether a saint or a bad man preaches it; this is one of the startling things that our Lord says (see Matthew 7:21–23). Jesus demands that we submit our teachers to the test He Himself submitted to (see John 18:20). A teacher sent from God never teaches in secret, or teaches the special esoteric line of things which only the initiated few can get into.

Take it individually, are we thinking on the sane, vigorous lines we have indicated generally? Do the things we teach demonstrate themselves in practical living? "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." If a man's character does not back up what he teaches, we must brand him as a false prophet. We all know the boomerang effect of messages; after we have preached the Spirit of God comes and says, "What about you?" It is this kind of thinking that puts the death-blow to the sentimental evangelism and "Higher Lifeism" that is not robust enough to pay its debts, or to be clean and upright, to be absolutely beyond suspicion in every detail of the life.

(b) The Method of This Thinking Prove all things. (1 Thessalonians 5:21)

The only way we can prove spiritual things is by experience. Are we thinking along ante-Pentecostal lines? are we thinking, that is, without making room for the supernatural? Much of the thinking of to-day belongs to a day before Pentecost; the majority of us are out of date. To think along Pentecostal lines means that we have received the Holy Spirit, and this should be sufficient for us to see that we have the ability to do the things that are demanded by God. It is a crime for a saint to be weak in God's strength. "For this is the will of God, even your sanctification." Have we thought about that? Have we proved it by experience? We can prove it only by having the mind of the Person Who said it put into us. It is no use enquiring of John Wesley or of saved and sanctified saints, we must come to one place only, viz., five minutes' concentration before God—"Lord, I want to prove this thing, I am willing to go the whole length." That is the only way we can prove spiritual things, the only way we become vigorous New Testament thinkers, not working signs and wonders—that is child's play, froth, it may indicate the tremendous ocean underneath or it may not. The great thing that the Holy Spirit reveals is that the supernatural power of God is ours through Jesus Christ, and if we will receive the Holy Spirit He will teach us how to think as well as how to live. Always refer back to the receiving of the Holy Spirit, we receive Him to do His work in us. Just as Jesus glorified God, so the Holy Spirit glorifies Jesus; He makes us written epistles not only in living, but in thinking.

(c) The Mind of the Thinker

Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus. (Philippians 2:5)

To have the Spirit of Christ is one thing, to form His mind is another. To have the mind of Christ means that we are willing to obey the dictates of the Holy Spirit through the physical machines of our brains and bodies till our living bears a likeness to Jesus. Every Christian ought to be living in this intense, vigorous atmosphere, no sentimental weaknesses. The majority of us scorn self-pity along physical and moral lines, but I am not so sure that we scorn self-pity along spiritual lines. We must form the mind of Christ till it works out in a strong family likeness to Jesus. Every time we come in contact with a Christian of this sort we feel as if we are brought face to face with the Lord Himself. That alone is the evidence of the Holy Spirit. The great glorious power of the Holy Ghost, if He has been received by us, manifests itself in the way we think. It is not sufficient to know God said a thing, but relying on the Holy Ghost we must prove it. God brings us into circumstances where we have to "prove all things," where we form the mind of Christ and make our thinking like His—robust, vigorous and strong, right towards God, not because we are in earnest, but because we have received the earnest Holy Ghost.

2. The New Thinking about Christ

But Christ as a Son over His own house. (Hebrews 3:6)

(a) The Reminiscent Christ

... though we have known Christ after the flesh ... (2 Corinthians 5:16)

Pentecost made Christ spiritual to us. We mean by reminiscent what Paul implies here, trying to picture by desperate efforts of imagination what Christ was like, searching the Bible records and trying by sheer effort of mind to bring back to our minds what Christ would tell us if He were here now. All that belongs to a dispensation we have no business to be living in. The Holy Ghost makes Jesus Christ both present and real. He is the most real Being on earth, "closer is He than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet."

Simply receive the Holy Spirit, rely upon Him and obey Him and He will bring the realisation of Christ.

(b) The Realisation of Christ

Lo, I am with you alway. (Matthew 28:20)

When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven . . . (2 Thessalonians 1:7)

The Scriptures make a distinction between the Parousia and the Apokalupsis. The Parousia is spiritual and invisible; the Apokalupsis is a hope. We rejoice in the presence of the Lord, we wait in hope for the revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ from heaven. Are any of us struggling to remember what Christ was like, saying, "I wish that His hands had been placed on my head"? By receiving the Holy Spirit we may know Him ten thousand-fold better! The very life of Jesus will be in us by the sheer supernatural grace of God. That is the marvel of this present dispensation. The Holy Ghost is seeking to awaken men out of lethargy; He is pleading, yearning, blessing, pouring benedictions on men, convicting and drawing them nearer, for one purpose only, that they may receive Him so that He may make them holy men and women exhibiting the life of Jesus Christ. How the devil does rob Christians who are not thinking on Pentecostal lines of the tremendous power of the Presence of Jesus made real by the Holy Spirit!

(c) The Revelation of Christ

... and He shall give you another Comforter. (John 14:16)

The Holy Spirit is not a substitute for Jesus, the Holy Spirit is all that Jesus was, and all that Jesus did, made real in personal experience now. The Holy Spirit alone makes Jesus real, the Holy Spirit alone expounds His Cross, the Holy Spirit alone convicts of sin; the Holy Spirit alone does in us what Jesus did for us. It is thinking along these lines that makes it a burden insuperable when one sees men and women who ought to be princes and princesses with God bound up in a "show of things," taken up with duties which are not the supreme duty. Instead of applying the supreme law, which we ought to do in every case of conflict, viz., "Thou shalt love the Lord Thy God with all thy heart. ..." the second commandment is put first, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Whenever Jesus dealt with the closest relationships and with our own selfinterest, He always put Himself first. His meaning is perfectly clear, that if His claims clash with those relationships, it must be instant obedience to Him (see Luke 14:26). Men and women who ought to be living in the glorious privileges of this Pentecostal dispensation are very often bound up by duties that are right from every standpoint but one, the standpoint of the Holy Ghost; right according to the logic of morality and common sense and justice, but not according to the logic of Pentecost, the Spirit does not witness, His illumination does not come. Some people spend their lives sacrificing themselves for other people, with the only result that the people for whom the sacrifice is made become more and more selfish. Whenever the Holy Ghost inspires the sacrifice, it is the sacrifice of ourselves for Jesus' sake, and that never blights, but always blesses. Half the heart-breaks and difficulties which some of us have hurried ourselves into would have been prevented if we had only dared to obey God in the power of the Spirit.

3. The New Thinking about God

No man hath seen God at any time. (John 1:18)

(a) The Eternal God

He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father. (John 14:9)

Pentecost has made God spiritual to us. Jesus Christ was God Incarnate; Pentecost is God come in the Spirit. The essential nature of God the Father, of God the Son and of God the Spirit is the same. The characteristics that marked God the Father in the old dispensation, and that marked God the Son when He lived on this earth, mark God the Holy Ghost in this present dispensation. "God is a Spirit." Apart from the Spirit of God we cannot think about anything that has not its basis in space and time, consequently when people without the Spirit think of God, they think of a Being sitting somewhere or ruling somewhere. We cannot think about God until we have received the Spirit, our natural hearts are atheistic. We have a dumb blind instinct that feels after God (see Acts 17:27), but it leads nowhere. When we receive the Holy Spirit He opens the eyes of our understanding, convicts of sin and shows us what Jesus came to do. "The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." Is it not astounding the amount of persuasion that is necessary before some of us will receive the Holy Spirit—we will argue and debate and do everything under heaven before we will waive aside our preconceived notions, our doctrinal points of view, and come as simple children and ask for the Holy Spirit. "If thou knewest the gift of God, . . . thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water" (John 4:10). Jesus did not speak these words to a learned man, but to a sinful woman. He told her to ask for the Holy Spirit, and there would be done in that woman of Samaria what was done at Pentecost for the disciples, and that is where we ought to be living to-day.

(b) The Eternal Spirit (Universal)

I will pour out of My Spirit upon all flesh. (Acts 2:17)

The dispensation of Pentecost is not confined to the Jews, not confined to Christendom, it is confined nowhere, it is absolutely universal, the sweep and sway and majesty of the power of the Holy Ghost is at work in every crook and cranny of the universe. For what purpose? That men may receive Him. We imagine that God has special favourites, and by trying to prescribe the movements of the Holy Ghost we exploit Him. We do not say so, but we are apt to think that unless people come the way we came, the Holy Ghost will not teach them. The great truth is that God's Spirit in this dispensation is absolutely universal for one purpose, that the life of Jesus may be made manifest in our mortal flesh.

(c) The Eternal Spirit (Ubiquitous)

Whither shall I flee from Thy presence? (Psalm 139:7)

If we try to drown God's presence in the depths of iniquity, it is there; if we go to the heights and speculate, it is there—insisting, wooing, drawing; the hand of Christ knocking at the door, for one purpose, to get in. The Spirit of God is everywhere, would that men would yield to Him! The reason we do not yield is that in the deep recesses of our hearts we prefer the captaincy of our own lives, we prefer to go our own way and refuse to let God govern. A human being cannot alter us; God Almighty Himself cannot alter us. Jesus Christ Himself stood absolutely powerless before people with the spiritual "nod." Do you know what the spiritual "nod" is? Disbelief in anything but my own point of view. "And He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief."

Have you received the Holy Spirit? If not, why not receive Him now?

I. HOW TO THINK ABOUT GOD

Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us.

. . . He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father? John 14:8–9 How do we think about God habitually? Jesus said, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." In the face, in the character, in the walk and the work of Jesus, we have God the Father revealed. The Christian faith affirms the existence of a personal God Who reveals Himself. Pseudo-Christianity departs from this, we are told we cannot know anything at all about God, we do not know whether He is a personal Being, we cannot know whether He is good. The Christian revelation is that God is a personal Being and He is good. By "good," I mean morally good. Test all beliefs about God by that; do they reveal clearly that God is a good God, and that all that is moral and pure and true and upright comes from God?

1. Instinct and Revelation

For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, To The Unknown God. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you. (Acts 17:23)

The evangelical teaching about this intuition and instinct in human nature is that it is to be recognised as being there, but requiring a revelation from outside to discover to it what it wants. The Christian affirmation is that this instinct and intuition is not God, but a dumb, inarticulate feeling after God. "That they should seek God, if haply they might feel after Him, and find Him, though He is not far from each one of us" (Acts 17:27 RV). That is the first point of divergence of the modern tendency from the Christian affirmation. We see at once how it works out in practical religious life; it means that we have the Spirit of God in us by nature, we do not need to be born again of the Spirit. This line of thinking could not be more diametrically opposed to the New Testament conception. The New Testament reveals that the deepest instinct in us is to feel after God, but that instinct is never to be taken for the Spirit of God.

Honeycombing all our Christian teaching to-day is the idea that the instinct in us is God and that as we allow the deepest instinct in us expression, we reveal ourselves as more or less God, and that the Being in whom this instinct had its greatest expression was the Lord Jesus Christ; therefore He stands in the modern movements and to everyone who follows that line of thinking, as the best expression of God. The New Testament reasoning is that if we are going to enter into contact with the God Whom the Bible reveals we must be born from above, be lifted into a totally new realm by means of the Atonement. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again" (John 3:7). Jesus Christ is a distinct break in our order and not the product of our order. Just as Our Lord came into human history from the outside, so He must come into us from the outside. The meaning of new birth is that we know God in a vital relationship (see John 1:12–13).

Paul puts as the Christian attitude to God that we are "the offspring of God." The term "the fatherhood" of God is rarely used nowadays in the New Testament sense, it is only used in the sense of God as Creator, not in the sense that Jesus Christ used it; the consequence is great havoc is produced in our Lord's teaching. If God is our Father by creation in the sense Jesus says He is by the experience of regeneration, then the Atonement is nonsense. What was the good of Jesus Christ living and dying and rising again? Where is the need for all this teaching that we have to be born again? If our instinct is God, we need only be sufficiently well-educated to allow the instinct which is in us to come out. But does this satisfy you and me regarding ourselves? Are we consciously, solemnly and satisfyingly confident that if we let the deepest instinct in us have expression, we are letting God express Himself? According to the Bible, the very essence of Satan is self-rule, and there are two mighty forces at work, one against and one for God.

Paul argues, "who among men knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of the man, which is in him? even so the things of God none knoweth, save the Spirit of God" (1 Corinthians 2:11 RV). It is the same insistence on the need to be born from above, and if any man will take Jesus Christ's way and face facts as He asks us to face them, he will find all the mystery of doing right amid entrancing wrong, all the mystery of attaining the highest when the lowest is the most attractive, all the mystery of complete deliverance from the disposition of sin, opened up and made possible. Doctrine is expounded not by our intelligence, not by our searching, but by the indwelling of a completely new Spirit imparted to us by the Lord Jesus Christ.

It is necessary to give a note of warning against the tyranny of abstractions. An ideal has no power over us until it becomes incarnate. The idea of beauty lies unawakened until we see a thing we call beautiful. God may be a mere mental abstraction; He may be spoken of in terms of culture or poetry or philosophy, but He has not the slightest meaning for us until He becomes incarnate. When once we know that God has "trod this earth with naked feet, and woven with human hands the creed of creeds," then we are arrested. When once we know that the Almighty Being Who reigns and rules over His creation does not do so in calm disdain, but puts His back to the wall of the world, so to speak, and receives all the downcast, the outcast, the sin-defiled, the wrong, the wicked and the sinful into His arms, then we are arrested. An intellectual conception of God may be found in a bad vicious character. The knowledge and vision of God is dependent entirely on a pure heart. Character determines the revelation of God to the individual. The pure in heart see God. Jesus Christ changes the worst into the best and gives the moral readjustment that enables a man to love and delight in the true God. Of a great almighty incomprehensible Being we know nothing, but of Our Lord Jesus Christ we do know, and the New Testament reveals that the Almighty God is nothing that Jesus was not.

2. Ideas and Revelation

For in Him we live, and move, and have our being.... Being then the offspring of God... (Acts 17:28–2 RV)

Our ideas of God are no greater than ourselves, and we ought to receive from God other ideas by revelation, so that the working mind of man may receive the power to live a larger, grander life than lies in any of his own ideas. Our ideas of God are indistinct, and when we make those ideas in their indistinctness the ground of our understanding of God, we are hopelessly at sea. We are never told to walk in the light of our convictions or instinctive ideas; according to the Bible, we have to walk in the light of Our Lord. Nothing is known about God saving in and through Our Lord Jesus Christ. "Neither doth any know the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son willeth to reveal Him" (Matthew 11:27 RV). I can only have a personal, passionate love for a Being who is not myself, and the whole meaning of the Atonement is to destroy the idolatry of self-love, to extract the pernicious poison of self-interest, and presence us with the Divinity which enables us to love God with all our heart, and soul, and mind, and strength. The New Testament reveals that we are not ultimately to be absorbed into God; we are distinctly and eternally to be the passionate lovers of God. No man was ever created to be his own god, and no man was ever created to be the god of another man, and no system of ideas was ever made to dominate man as god. There is "one God," and that God was Incarnate in the Lord Jesus Christ. And as that marvellous Being has His dominant sway over us, the whole of Time, the whole of Eternity, and the threshold between the two, will be shot through with the dawn of an endless day that shall never end in night, when "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" and Heaven prove the complement of earth.

II. HOW TO THINK ABOUT THE LORD IESUS CHRIST

All things have been delivered unto Me of My Father: and no one knoweth the Son, save the Father. Matthew 11:27 (RV)

In Matthew 11:27 the unique position of Jesus Christ to His own consciousness is clearly exhibited. The mystery of the Person of Jesus resides in its nature from the beginning; before we begin to understand His Person we must be quickened from above by the Holy Spirit. That is where the battle rages to-day—around the Person of Jesus Christ (cf. 1 John 4:2–3). The call for every Christian worker is to thoroughly equip himself with right thinking about Jesus Christ.

The Bible has no respect for mental abstractions. Jesus Christ did not talk about "the Infinite" or "the Incomprehensible"; whenever He talked about God He brought it down to concrete reality—"He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Unless God has become a concrete reality in Jesus Christ, He has no meaning for us at all. Jesus nowhere said, "He that hath seen man hath seen the Father": He emphatically states that He is the only medium God has for revealing Himself. The trend of thought at the heart of all the modern ethical movements is based on the idea that God and Humanity are one and the same. Jesus nowhere taught that God was in man, but He did teach that God was manifest in human flesh in His Person that He might become the generating centre for the same thing in every human being, and the place of His travail pangs is Bethlehem, Calvary, and the Resurrection.

"I and My Father are one." Do we accept Jesus Christ's thinking about Himself? According to His own thinking He was equal with God, and He became Incarnate for the great purpose of lifting the human race back into communion with God, not because of their aspirations, but because of the sheer omnipotence of God through the Atonement. The life of Jesus Christ is made ours not by imitation, but by means of His death on Calvary and by our reception of His Spirit. Our Lord's marvellous message for all time is the familiar one: "Come unto Me, . . . and I will give you rest."

"The wayfaring men, yea fools, shall not err therein." When a man does err in the way of God, it is because he is wise in his own conceits. When the facts of life have humbled us, when introspection has stripped us of our own miserable self-interest and we receive a startling diagnosis of ourselves by the Holy Spirit, we are by that painful experience brought to the place where we can hear the marvellous message—profounder than the profoundest philosophies earth ever wove, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Until this experience comes men may patronise Jesus Christ, but they do not come to Him for salvation. The only solution is the one given by Jesus Christ Himself to a good upright man of His day: "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again."

"Howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth, is come . . . He shall glorify Me" (John 16:13–14). There is abroad to-day a vague, fanatical movement which bases everything on spiritual impulse—"God gave me an impulse to do this, and that," and there are the strangest outcomes to such impulses. Any impulse which does not lead to the glorification of Jesus Christ has the snare of Satan behind it. People say, "How am I to know whether my impulse is from the Holy Spirit or from my own imagination?" Very easily. Jesus Christ gave us the simplest, most easy-to-be-understood tests for guidance—"The Holy Ghost

... shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you"; the Holy Spirit "will guide you into all truth: for He shall not speak of Himself." Beware of any religious experience which glorifies you and not Jesus Christ. It may use the right phrasing, it may praise Jesus Christ and praise the Atonement—that is one of the subtlest powers of the insinuations of Satan, but the life does not glorify Jesus, it does not magnify and uplift the crucified Son of God. Living much in the presence of Jesus, coming in contact with His mind, simplifies life to a believer, and makes him an unflurried sceptic of everything that is not true to the nature of God.

The central citadel of Christianity is the Person of our Lord Jesus Christ. The final standard for the Christian is given at the outset—"to be conformed to the image of His Son."

III. HOW TO THINK ABOUT MAN

What is man, that Thou are mindful of him? And the son of man, that Thou visitest him? Psalm 8:4

The Christian faith declares the spiritual nature and dignity of man, that his creation is in the Divine image and his destination is to bear the likeness of God in a perfected relation of sonship-"... to be conformed to the image of His Son" (Romans 8:29). In reading the history of the race our thought must fit itself into one of two fundamental categories: either we are wonderful beings in the making, or we are wonderful ruins of what we once were. The latter is the view of the Bible. In John 3 we find our Lord recognised the un-making of man so keenly that He told Nicodemus not to marvel when he was told he must be born again. A man never grows out of a natural into a spiritual man without being re-created. The apostle Paul bases his reasoning entirely on this fundamental revelation; he argues, "Wherefore if any man is in Christ, there is a new creation" (2 Corinthians 5:17 RV mg). According to the Bible, we do not evolve into better manifestations of God, or even into nearness to God; but only by a violent readjustment to God through regeneration are we re-made to bear the family likeness to God which we were at first designed to have. It is much easier to live a holy life than to think on Jesus Christ's lines. Are we traitors intellectually to Jesus Christ while professing to be His disciples?

1. Man's Creation

So God created man in His own image. (Genesis 1:27; see Colossians 1:16–17)

The modern view is that man is continually evolving and developing, each phase being better than the last and the last gives us the best revelation of God; from this standpoint Jesus Christ is looked upon as the manifestation of all the best in the evolutionary processes of man. The evolutionary conception starts from something un-get-at-able, incalculable, with a power within itself to evolve endlessly. The great word we bow down and worship to-day is "progress"; we are progressing and developing, and the consequence is we are blind to the facts of history and blind to moral facts. The Bible revelation about man is that man as he is, is not as God made him.

Immediately we get the idea that we are part of God, and the universe is His thought about Himself, we are unable to accept the idea that God created us. It is far more natural for us to suppose ourselves emanations from the Being of God, time-manifestations of God, as Jesus was, all of the same kindred. Such conceptions have a wonderful element of truth in them when applied to regenerated humanity, but the Bible reveals the presence in unregenerated humanity of a positive anarchy against God (see Romans 8:7). It is possible to be so full of love and sympathy for unregenerate man as to be red-handed anarchists against God. This is exactly what the New Testament states, especially in the reasonings of St. Paul regarding the "old man," the disposition of self-interest that entered into human nature and un-made God's creation so that man's likeness to God in disposition was blotted out. The New Testament reveals that this disposition cannot be educated, it cannot be disciplined or altered, it must be removed and a new mainspring to human nature put in its place. The marvel of the Atonement is that any man or woman who will make the moral decision that the "old man" ought to be crucified, and will accept the gift of the Holy Spirit which was manifested in Jesus Christ, will receive the new disposition which introduces him into the kingdom of God, and raises him to sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, which surely means a present experience, not a future one.

It is always fascinating to follow an intellectual process that more or less blinds one to facts, because whatever hinders that intellectual process must either be absorbed or removed. In practical experience when the deep within us calls to the deep without, there is tumult and upset, and we find a tremendous force that works away from God and will never work in harmony with Him. When in the experience of individuals or of nations the upburst of this disintegrating power occurs, we turn with wistful glance to the Book that has been discarded; and to the one Being who has the key to all the problems of life and death, first things and last things, the beginning and ending of things, viz., the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Man's Calling

The Bible reveals that man's calling is to stand before God and develop by obedience from the lowest point of conscious innocence to the highest reach of conscious holiness, with no intermediaries. This is man's calling as God created him, and that is why God will never leave us alone until the blaze and pain of His fire has burned us as pure as He is Himself (cf. Matthew 3:11).

It is the moment of unique crisis when a man realises for the first time the hiatus between himself and God, when the cry goes out from the depths of his nature, "Oh, that I knew where I might find Him!" or, My God, "what must I do to be saved?" This is not the cry of a man crumpled up by moral irregularities, it is the cry wrung from the depths of human nature. In this crisis, which is the immortal moment of a man's conscious life, the meaning of the Gospel first comes into play (see Matthew 1:21; 1 John 3:8). Jesus Christ claims that He can do in human nature what human nature cannot do for itself, viz., "destroy the works of the devil," remove the wrong heredity and put in the right one. He can satisfy the last aching abyss of the human heart, He can put the key into our hands which will give the solution to every problem that ever stretched before our minds. He can soothe by His pierced hands the wildest sorrow with which Satan or sin or death ever racked humanity. There is nothing for which Jesus Christ is not amply sufficient and over which He cannot make us more than conquerors. The New Testament does not represent Jesus Christ as coming to us in the character of a celestial lecturer; He is here to re-create us, to presence us with Divinity in such a way that He can re-make us according to God's original plan, eternal lovers of God Himself, not absorbed into God, but part of the great Spirit-baptised humanity—"Till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a fullgrown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Ephesians 4:13 RV).

3. Man's Communion

And Enoch walked with God. (Genesis 5:24; see John 14:23)

The Bible reveals man's communion to be consciously with God, not in spasms or ecstasies, but under the figure of a walk in the Old Testament, and the abiding inmates²¹ of a home in the New Testament; it is not absorption, but communion. In the Bible man is revealed as a created being, intended to be God's lover, not a part of God, but to be brought back into the relationship of conscious, passionate devotion to God even as our Lord Himself expressed it. Jesus Christ showed us during a life of thirty-three years what a normal man should be; in what He did and said, and in what He was, He showed us how to think about man, viz., that he is to be the companion and lover of God.

Many to-day are seeking reconciliation between the modern views and the New Testament views. It is being attempted ably, but it is a perfectly useless attempt, as useless as trying to make black, white; as trying to make wrong, right; as trying to make the "old man" the "new man" by whitewash. It can never be done. There is only one solution, and that solution comes along the line of the Personality of truth, not the abstraction of truth. "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life"—the Way in the waylessness of this wild universe; the Truth amidst all the contending confusions of man's thought and existence; the Life amidst all the living deaths that sap men's characters and their relationships and connections with the highest. Only by being re-created and re-adjusted to God through the Atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ can we understand the marvellous unity between God and man for which God destined man. "That they may all be one; even as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be in us: that the world may believe that Thou didst send Me" (John 17:21 RV).

^{21.} inmates: people living under one roof as members of a family or group. Not used to mean those who are institutionalised or imprisoned.

IV. HOW TO THINK ABOUT SIN

Then the lust, when it hath conceived, beareth sin: and the sin, when it is full grown, bringeth forth death. James 1:15 (RV)

How do we think about sin habitually, as Christians? If we have light views about sin we are not students in the school of Christ. The fact of sin is the secret of Jesus Christ's Cross; its removal is the secret of His risen and ascended life. Do we think along these lines? It is quite possible to be living in union with God through the Atonement and yet be traitors mentally. It is easy to be traitors unless we are disciplined along the lines that Jesus taught, viz., the need to submit our intellect to Him as He submitted His intellect to His Father. Do we think along the line that salvation is only possible through the Cross? We do not think, and we do not like to think, along Jesus Christ's line, we are told it is old-fashioned and ugly, and so it is; it is awful, it is so awful that it broke God's heart on Calvary.

Every subject we have touched on during this series of talks has been important, but the subject of sin is the vital pivot on which all the rest turn. The slightest deflection from the real truth about sin, and all the rest of the reasoning goes wrong. Once placed fundamentally right regarding the doctrine of sin, and the reasoning follows in good order. If you read carefully the modern statements regarding sin you will be amazed to find how often we are much more in sympathy with them than with the Bible statements. We have to face the problem that our hearts may be right with God while our heads have a startling affinity with a great deal that is antagonistic to the Bible teaching. What we need, and what we get if we go on with God, is an intellectual re-birth as well as a heart re-birth.

The trouble with the modern statements regarding sin is that they make sin far too slight. Sin according to the modern view simply means selfishness, and preachers and teachers are as dead against selfishness as the New Testament is. Immediately we come to the Bible we find that sin is much deeper than that. According to the Bible, sin in its final analysis is not a defect but a defiance, a defiance that means death to the life of God in us. Sin is seen not only in selfishness, but in what men call unselfishness. It is possible to have such sympathy with our fellow-men as to be guilty of red-handed rebellion against God. Enthusiasm for humanity as it is, is quite a different thing from the enthusiasm for the saints which the Bible reveals, viz., enthusiasm for readjusted humanity.

Sin intellectually viewed is never anything else than defective development, because the intellect will not allow for gaps that destroy its main principle of outlook. The Bible supplies the facts for the gaps which intellect will not accept. According to the Bible, sin is doing without God. Sin is not wrong doing, it is wrong being, deliberate and emphatic independence of God. That may sound remote and far away from us, but in individual experience it is best put in the terms of "my claim to my right to myself." Every one of us, whether we have received the Holy Spirit or not, will denounce selfishness, but who amongst us will denounce "my right to myself"? As long as my right to myself remains, I respect it in you, you respect it in me, and the devil respects it in the whole crowd, and amalgamates humanity under one tremendous rule which aims at blotting the one true God off His throne. The Bible shows that human nature as it is is one vast "strike" against God. Paul states that "through one man sin entered into the world" (Romans 5:12 RV); but we must remember that that man was not a man like you or me, he was the federal head of the human race. Sin entered into the world through that man's disobedience to God's rule (see Genesis 3). From that moment the "strike" against God began and has gone on all down the dispensations, and never was there such a big, massive, organised "strike" as there is to-day against God and God's rule.

All the great movements of the modern mind are on the line of a combine that swamps individual value. Men detest the doctrine of individual responsibility, and react against a doctrine of salvation through Jesus Christ because it fixes on the value of the individual. The Bible reveals that the losing of the sense of personal responsibility is the result of sin (see Genesis 4:8–9). The characteristic of sin is to destroy the capacity to know we sin, and the Bible talks about unregenerate men as "dead," not dead physically, but dead towards God (see Ephesians 2:1).

The recovery of the Bible affirmation about sin is what is needed. The Bible distinctly states that sin is not the natural result of being a finite being, but a definite stepping aside from what that finite being knew to be right. How one wishes that people who read books about the Bible would read the Bible itself! Read the 18th chapter of Ezekiel—"the soul that sinneth, it shall die"; and again—"for the wages of sin is death" (Romans 6:23). The Bible does not deal with sin as a disease; it does not deal with the outcome of sin, it deals with the disposition of sin itself. The disposition of sin is what our Lord continually faced, and it is this disposition that the Atonement removes. Immediately our evangelism loses sight of this fundamental doctrine of the disposition of sin and deals only with external sins, it leaves itself open to ridicule. We have cheapened the doctrine of sin and made the Atonement a sort of moral "lavatory" in which men can come and wash themselves from sin, and then go and sin again and come back for another washing. This is the doctrine of the Atonement: "Him who knew no sin" (not sins)—Him who had not the disposition of sin, who refused steadfastly, and to the death on Calvary, to listen to the temptations of the prince of this world, who would not link Himself on with the ruling disposition of humanity, but came to hew a way single-handed through the hard face of sin back to God—"He made to be sin on our behalf; that we might become the righteousness of God in Him."

The disposition of sin that rules our human nature is not suppressed by the Atonement, not sat on, not cabined and confined, it is removed. Human nature remains unaltered, but the hands and eyes and all our members that were used as the servants of the disposition of sin can be used now as servants of the new disposition (see Romans 6:13). Then comes the glorious necessity of militant holiness. Beware of the teaching that allows you to sink back on your oars and drift; the Bible is full of pulsating, strenuous energy. From the moment a man is readjusted to God then begins the running, being careful that "the sin which doth so easily beset us" does not clog our feet.

I believe that God so radically, so gloriously, and so comprehensively copes with sin in the Atonement that He is more than master of it, and that a practical experience of this can take place in the life of anyone who will enter into identification with what Jesus Christ did on the Cross. What is the good of saying, "I believe in Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world" if you cannot answer the blunt question, "What has He saved you from?" The test is not in theories and theologies, but in practical flesh and blood experience. Jesus Christ is our Saviour because He saves us from sin, radically altering the ruling disposition. Anyone who has been in contact with the Lord when He alters the ruling disposition knows it, and so do others. But there is a painful, tremendous repentance first. The whole teaching of the Bible on the human side is based on repentance. The only repentant man is the holy man, and the only holy man is the one who has been made so by the marvel of the Atonement. And here comes the wonder-let the blunders of lives be what they may, let hereditary tendencies be what they like, let wrongs and evils crowd as they will, through the Atonement there is perfect readjustment to God, perfect forgiveness, and the gift of a totally new disposition which will manifest itself in the physical life just as the old disposition did (see Romans 6:19). Jesus Christ comes as the last Adam to take away the abnormal thing (which we call natural), the disposition of my right to myself, and He gives us a new disposition, viz., His own heredity of unsullied holiness, Holy Spirit.

V. HOW TO THINK ABOUT THE ATONEMENT

God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself. . . . 2 Corinthians 5:19 (see 2 Corinthians 5:18–21)

The modern view of the Atonement is that it simply reveals the oneness of God and man; immediately we turn to the New Testament we find that the doctrine of the Atonement is that God can readjust man to Himself, indicating that there is something wrong, something out of joint, something that has to be put right. The Bible reveals that there is anarchy somewhere, real thorough going anarchy in the heart of men against God; therefore the need is strong that something should come into us from the outside to readjust us, to reconcile us, to turn us round, to put us right with God. The doctrine of the Atonement is the explanation of how God does that. The doctrine of the Atonement is that "while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." All heaven is interested in the Cross of Christ, all hell terribly afraid of it, while men are the only beings who more or less ignore its meaning.

No one can believe in the teaching of Jesus unless he believes in the Cross. A man who says, "I believe in the Sermon on the Mount" means that he gives his mental assent to it—"it is a good ideal for whoever can come up to it." But if all Jesus came to do was to tell me I must have an unsullied career, when my past has been blasted by sin and wickedness on my own part, then He but tantalises me. If He is simply a teacher, He only increases our capacity for misery, for He sets up standards that stagger us. But the teaching of Jesus Christ is not an ideal, it is the statement of the life we will live when we are readjusted to God by the Atonement. The type of life Jesus lived, the type of character He expressed, is possible for us by His death, and only by His death, because by means of His death we receive the life to which His teaching applies.

"Him who knew no sin he made to be sin on our behalf; that we might become the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Corinthians 5:21 RV). The idea of substitution popularly understood is that Jesus Christ was punished for me, therefore I go scot-free. The doctrine of substitution in the Bible is always twofold: Christ for me, that He might be substituted in me. There is no Christ for me if there is no Christ in me. The doctrine of substitution is the most practical, radically working thing in the world; it is the very essence of our Lord's teaching. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink His blood, ye have not life in yourselves" (John 6:53 RV). When the apostle John says "He that doeth righteousness is righteous," he is not talking of the righteousness of good moral conduct, but the righteousness that is impossible to a man unless he has been readjusted to God. "When it pleased God . . . to reveal His Son in me..." says Paul. That is the doctrine of substitution; not, "I believe in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost," and remain the same miserable, selfish, crooked sinner all the time.

How are we to get to the place where the mighty efficacy of the Lord's life is ours? Immediately we are willing to recognise that God condemned sin for ever in the death of His Son. If we will accept His verdict and go to God just as we are, the Holy Spirit will apply the Atonement to us personally, and we will know with a knowledge that passes knowledge that we have been born again from above into the realm where Jesus lives, and all the marvellous efficacy of His life comes into our mortal frame. The consequence is we can do all that God commands. The only sign of a readjusted life to God is not a head-belief at all, but a manifestation in our mortal flesh that we can keep the commandments of God.

Now examine the Sermon on the Mount. Can a man by praying, by letting the generous impulse of his nature have its way, produce a heart so pure that it sees God? Can a man by doing those things that are easily within the reach of morality, produce a life unblameable in holiness before God? Paul says He is "made unto us . . . righteousness." That is the doctrine of the Atonement—that we are made undeserving of censure in God's sight, so that God looking down into the motives of our heart can see nothing to blame. Will I let God identify me with the Cross of Christ until I can say, not merely with my lips, but by my life—"I have been crucified with Christ; yet I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me: and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, Who loved me, and gave Himself up for me"? From that position it becomes possible for God to take us into His counsels regarding His redemptive purpose. Our understanding of the Atonement depends on our spiritual growth, not on our Bible study or on our praying. As we "grow up into Him in all things" the one thing about which we get more and more understanding is the mystery of Redemption, and we understand why Jesus said, "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

VI. HOW TO THINK ABOUT THE SCRIPTURES

For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Hebrews 4:12

"Why should I believe a thing because it is in the Bible?" That is a perfectly legitimate question. There is no reason why you should believe it, it is only when the Spirit of God applies the Scriptures to the inward consciousness that a man begins to understand their living efficacy. If we try from the outside to fit the Bible to an external standard, or to a theory of verbal inspiration or any other theory, we are wrong. "Ye search the scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have eternal life; and these are they which bear witness of Me; and ye will not come to Me, that ye may have life" (John 5:39–40 RV).

There is another dangerous tendency, that of closing all questions by saying, "Let us get back to the external authority of the Bible." That attitude lacks courage and the power of the Spirit of God; it is a literalism that does not produce "written epistles," but persons who are more or less incarnate dictionaries; it produces not saints but fossils, people without life, with none of the living reality of the Lord Jesus. There must be the Incarnate Word and the interpreting word, i.e., people whose lives back up what they preach, written epistles, "known and read of all men." Only when we receive the Holy Spirit and are lifted into a total readjustment to God do the words of God become "quick, and powerful" to us. The only way the words of God can be understood is by contact with the Word of God. The connection between our Lord Himself, who is the Word, and His spoken words is so close that to divorce them is fatal. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."

The Bible does not reveal all truth, we have to find out scientific truth and common-sense truth for ourselves, but knowledge of the Truth, our Lord Himself, is only possible through the reception of the Holy Spirit. "Howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth." The Holy Spirit alone makes the Word of God understandable. The regenerating and sanctifying work of the Holy Spirit is to incorporate us into Christ until we are living witnesses to Him. S. D. Gordon²² put it well when he said, "We have the Bible bound in morocco, bound in all kinds of beautiful leather; what we need is the Bible bound in shoe leather." That is exactly the teaching of our Lord. After the disciples had received the Holy Spirit they became witnesses to Jesus, their lives spoke more eloquently than their lips—"and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus." The Holy Spirit being imparted to us and expressed through us is the manifested exhibition that God can do all that His Word states He can. It is those who have received the Holy Spirit who understand the will of God and "grow up into Him in all things." When the Scriptures are made quick and powerful by the Holy Spirit, they fit every need of life. The only interpreter of the Scriptures is the Holy Spirit, and when we have received the Holy Spirit we learn the first golden lesson of spiritual life, which is that God reveals His will according to the state of our character (cf. Psalm 18:25–26).

VII. HOW TO THINK ABOUT OUR FELLOW-MEN

A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. John 13:34

There is no subject more intimately interesting to modern people than man's relationship to man; but men get impatient when they are told that the first requirement is that they should love God first and foremost. "The first of all the commandments is, . . . thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment." In every crisis in our lives, is God first in our love? in every perplexity of conflicting duties, is He first in our leading? "And the second is like, namely, this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Remember the standard, "as I have loved you." I wonder where the best of us are according to that standard? How many of us have turned away over and over again in disgust at men, and when we get alone with the Lord Jesus He speaks no word, but the memory of Him is quite sufficient to bring the rebuke—"as I have loved you." It takes severe training to think habitually along the lines Jesus Christ has laid down, although we act on them impulsively at times.

How many of us are letting Jesus Christ take us into His school of thinking? The saint who is thoughtful is like a man fasting in the midst of universal intoxication. Men of the world hate a thoughtful saint. They can ridicule a living saint who does not think, but a thinking saint—I mean of course, one who lives rightly as well—is the annoyance, because the thinking saint has formed the Mind of Christ and re-echoes it. Let us from this time forth determine to bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ.

Publication History

- As articles: In God's Revivalist Magazine, March 1911–January 1912.
- As a book: Published in 1912 by God's Revivalist Press, Cincinnati, Ohio.
- Mrs. Chambers reprinted the book in Britain in 1921 and issued a second edition (revised) in 1936. In the years following, various editions were published in Britain and the U.S.

Oswald and Biddy spent their honeymoon in America during the summer of 1910. As they traveled to Oswald's speaking engagements at camp meetings in Ohio, Maryland, Massachusetts, and Maine, they often pondered what God had in store for them. Two dreams that fired Oswald's imagination were a collaboration together in publishing and a shared ministry through a residential Bible training college.

When they returned to Britain in September, they faced a full schedule of League of Prayer classes in Manchester, Blackpool, and Stoke-on-Trent. Instead of preaching or lecturing, Oswald had decided to teach, requiring study and participation from the students. The topic for the classes was biblical psychology.

During the next few years, the Biblical Psychology material was used for correspondence courses, evening classes, and a core class at the Bible Training College.

Biblical Psychology is one of only three Oswald Chambers books compiled and printed before his death. The other two are Studies in the Sermon on the Mount (1915) and Baffled to Fight Better (1917).

Prefatory and introductory remarks to the earlier editions of Biblical Psychology are included on the following pages.

Chambers' Use of "Atoms" and "Molecules"

In chapter 18, "The Mundane Universe," it may appear to the modern reader that Chambers had his atoms and molecules mixed up, but a look at an earlier edition of this book reveals that he understood both modern and ancient science. The 1920 edition of Biblical Psychology read:

Away in the earlier days, when the Greeks tried to explain the material world, they said it was made of atoms, then down the ages they found they could split up the atoms, and they called those split-up elements molecules, then they found they could split up the molecules, and that the split-up molecules were made of electrons, then they discovered that the electron is like a solar system, and that behind it all is force.

In OC's 1911 lectures at the Bible Training College, he was referring to the Greek understanding of science during the fifth century B.C., specifically their theory of "atomism." The atomists believed that the basic elements of reality were atoms—indivisible and indestructible particles of matter.

In this case, a slight revision of the text made in 1936 to increase clarity resulted in some confusion for a later generation of readers.

Chambers' understanding of atomic theory, within the limits of his day, is revealed in this statement from Baffled to Fight Better, lectures given in Egypt in 1917: "Again, the atomic theory was thought to be the key; then it was discovered that the atom itself was composed of electrons, and each electron was found to be a universe of its own, and that theory too becomes a lock and not a key."

PREFATORY NOTE

(1st Edition)

This book is compiled from verbatim reports of my lectures on Biblical Psychology, delivered at the Bible Training College, 45, North Side, Clapham Common, London, during 1911.

The reports were taken by my wife and sent on to the editors of the Revivalist who now, out of the generosity of their hearts, are publishing them in book form.

May this "Introduction to the Study of Biblical Psychology" stir up the minds of the saints, lest Satan as an angel of light instil error (2 Peter 1:12–13).

1912, Oswald Chambers

INTRODUCTION TO THE 1920 EDITION

This book was originally published in America in 1912. That edition is now exhausted, and a second one has been found necessary.

The book was used as a text book at the evening study classes held in the Y.M.C.A., Zeitoun, Egypt, ² after my husband had entered into Life. Numbers of the men found it a great stimulus to the study of God's word, and realised the need to bring their thinking "into line with the living Spirit of God."

That God may continue to use the book to this end in many other lives is our prayer in sending out this new edition.

PREFACE TO THE 2ND EDITION (1936)

This is a revised edition of a very remarkable book. The first edition of Biblical Psychology was compiled from reports of lectures on that subject, given by Oswald Chambers at the Bible Training College, London. It was used as a textbook at the evening study classes at the Y.M.C.A., Zeitoun, Egypt, after Mr. Chambers entered into Life in November 1917; and another edition was published later on. The book ended with these lines by the author himself, "The whole book is merely a verbatim report of the lectures, and we have decided to let it go for what it is worth—a mere effort to arouse the average Christian worker to study the wealth of Scripture, and to become better equipped for dividing the Word of Truth."

This New Edition has been most carefully revised in the direction of increased lucidity and concentration of statement. It is a great book, and presents the Bible Psychology of profound thinkers like Delitzsch and Beck and others, through the media of modern psychological expressions. It is based so surely on Scripture that the homeliest mind who studies the Word of God can follow it. Yet there are also depths of thought in it for minds of finest training. It is a treasure of wealth for every kind of Christian worker, helping them to understand their own psychological experiences, and enabling them to present the Truth of God effectively to many minds perplexed by moral problems of their own inner life of feeling, thought, and will.

Chapter I

MAN: HIS CREATION, CALLING AND COMMUNION

ALTHOUGH THE PASSAGES QUOTED APPEAR AS TEXTS, THEY ARE REALLY PORTIONS OF CONNECTED REVELATION.

- 1. Conditions before Man's Creation (Genesis 1:1)
 - (a) Celestial Creations (Job 38:4-7)
 - (b) Celestial Catastrophe (Isaiah 14:12; Luke 10:18)
 - (c) Celestial Condemnation (John 8:44; Jude 6)
- 2. Conditions Leading to Man's Creation (Nehemiah 9:6)
 - (a) Terrestrial Chaos (Genesis 1:2)
 - (b) Terrestrial Creations (Genesis 1:2-25)
 - (c) Terrestrial Cosmos (Genesis 1:4, 10, 12, 18, 21, 25, 31)
- 3. Climax of Creation. (Genesis 1:26-27)
 - (a) The Son of God (Genesis 1:27; Luke 3:38)
 - (b) The Six Days' Work (Genesis 1:28–31)
 - (c) The Sabbath Rest (Genesis 2:1–3)

1. Conditions before Man's Creation

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. (Genesis 1:1–2)

Between verses 1 and 2 of the first chapter of Genesis, there is a great hiatus. Verse 1 refers to an order of things before the reconstruction referred to in 2.

(a) Celestial Creations

We mean by celestial creations the creations that were before men and the system of things as we understand them. These celestial creations belong to a period before man. The creations first alluded to, then, are not men, but something other than man. Job 38:4–7 refers to a time when "the sons of God shouted for joy." Who were these "sons of God"? They were not men; they were unquestionably angels and archangels, and the indirect inference is that God had put that former world under the charge of an archangel, Lucifer.

(b) Celestial Catastrophe

The Bible also alludes to a catastrophe before man was created, which makes the first two verses of Genesis

1 understandable. God gave the rule of this universe to Lucifer, who opposed himself to God's authority and rule. In falling, he dragged everything down with him, and consequently called forth on this earth a tremendous judgement which resulted in chaos: "and the earth was without form, and void." This catastrophe is referred to in such passages as Isaiah 14:12, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!" and Luke 10:18, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." When did our Lord behold this? Surely it is legitimate to suggest that this refers to the period before our Lord's Incarnation, when He was with God, in the beginning, before all things. (This particular verse is frequently thought to refer to the time yet to be and that our Lord annihilated time by His forelook.) These verses are like mountain peaks revealing a whole table-land of God's revelation of the order of things before man was created.

This interpretation is of the nature of a legitimate speculation and would seem to account for a great number of indications in the Bible. Beware, however, of making too much of these indications, because although as has been hinted, chaos may have been the result of judgement, a careful reading of Genesis 1:1–2 does not necessarily imply it.

(c) Celestial Condemnation

Then comes the condemnation of the angels, a celestial condemnation, the condemnation of Lucifer and all his angels, nothing whatever to do with man, "And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, He hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgement of the great day" (Jude 6).

When Jesus Christ uses the phrase "from the beginning" He does not mean the beginning of man, but the beginning of creation of God, which was long enough before man was created (see John 8:44). Hell is the place of angelic condemnation. It has nothing to do primarily with man. God's Book never says that hell was made for man, although it is true that it is the only place for the man who rejects God's salvation. Hell was the result of a distinct condemnation passed by God on celestial beings, and is as eternal as those celestial anarchists.

These three amazing episodes indicate the conditions before the creation of man, viz.: that the archangels and the angels governed a wonderful world which God created in the beginning, and which God's Spirit alludes to in that phrase in Job, "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." Lucifer fell, and with him all his angels in a tremendous ruin. "And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters" (Genesis 1:2). Without some such explanation, verse 2 is unintelligible. To say that "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth," and then to say that "the earth was without form, and void" is a confusion. The inference is that between the epochs referred to in these verses there occurred a catastrophe which the Bible does not say much about, the evident purpose of the Bible being to tell what God's purpose is with man. Roughly outlining that purpose, we might say that God created man in order to counteract the devil.

These sections refer to the strange unfamiliar background of the life we live at present. Such things are not to be made too much of, nor on the other hand are they to be ignored. It is necessary to note them in Biblical Psychology because they have a distinct part to play in man's present existence.

2. Conditions Leading to Man's Creation

Thou, even Thou, art LORD alone; Thou hast made heaven, the heaven of heavens, with all their host, the earth, and all things that are therein, the seas, and all that is therein, and Thou preservest them all; and the host of heaven worshippeth Thee. (Nehemiah 9:6)

(a) Terrestrial Chaos (Genesis 1:2)

Satan was the means of the ruin of the first created order, and now God begins to create another order out of the confusion of ruin. "Void" means the aftermath of destruction by judgement, or the result of Divine judgement.

(b) Terrestrial Creations

God began to create things. Genesis 1:2–25 gives a detailed account of the creation of the earth and the life upon it. The Bible nowhere says that God set processes to work and out of those processes evolved the things which now appear. The Bible says that God created things by a distinct act. If the Bible agreed with modern science, it would soon be out of date, because, in the very nature of things, modern science is bound to change. Genesis 1 indicates that God created the earth and the life on the earth in order to fit the world for man.

(c) Terrestrial Cosmos

The order and beauty of this world were created by God for man. Genesis 1, verses 4, 10, 12, 18, 21, 25 and 31, all say that "God saw that it was good." After the judgement by God on the previous order, God created a new thing, for a totally new being whom no angel had ever seen. This new being, man, stood at the end of the six days' work as a creation of earth, and he stood at the threshold of God's Sabbath Day. God created a unique being, not an angel, and not God Himself; He created man. Man was created out of the earth, and related to the earth, and yet he was created in the image of God, whereby God could prove Himself more than a match for the devil by a creation a little lower than the angels, the order of beings to which Satan belongs. This is, as it were, God's tremendous experiment in the creation of man. God put man at the head of the Terrestrial Creation. The whole meaning of the creation of the world was to fit and prepare a place for the wonderful being called Man that God had in mind. There is nothing in the Bible about the evolution and development of man as a "survival of the fittest," or about the "process of natural selection." The Bible reveals that we are earth and spirit, a combination of the two. The devil is spirit, just as God is; the angels are spirit; but when we come to man, man is earth and spirit.

3. Climax of Creation

(a) The Son of God (Luke 3:38)

Adam is called the son of God. There is only one other "Son of God" in the Bible, and He is Jesus Christ. Yet we are called "sons of God," but how? By being reinstated through the Atonement of Jesus Christ. This is an important point. We are not the sons of God by natural generation. Adam did not come into the world as we do; neither did Adam come into the world as Jesus Christ came. Adam was not "begotten"; Jesus Christ was. Adam was "created." God created Adam, He did not beget him. We are all generated, we are not created beings. Adam was the "son of God," and God created him as well as everything else that was created.

In Genesis 1:27 we read, "So God created man in His own image, in the image of God created He him; male and female created He them." This is a point of importance. Adam and Eve are both needed before the image of God can be perfectly presented. God is, as it were, all that the best manhood presents us with, and all that the best womanhood presents us with.

(This aspect will be dealt with in subsequent lectures.)

(b) The Six Days' Work (Genesis 1:28–31)

This word "day" means roughly what we understand by twenty-four hours, and has no such meaning as the Day of Atonement or the Day of Judgement. Devotion to the ephemeral scientific doctrine of evolution is responsible for the endeavour to make out that the Bible means a period of years instead of a solar day. The particular unparabolic use of the term "evening and morning" in Genesis distinctly indicates a solar day.

Man was the climax of the six days' work; in God's plan the whole of the six days' work of creation was for man. The tendency nowadays is to put the six days' work of creation above man. Some people are far more concerned about dogs and cats than about human beings.

There is not only the tendency to exalt animals above man, but there is the speculation of the superman, which holds that man, as we understand him and as the Bible reveals him, is not the climax of creation, but that there is a higher being yet to be, called "the superman," and that man is as inferior to this being that is going to be as the ape is to him. All through the New Testament the Spirit of God has foretold that we are going to have the worship of man installed, and it is in our midst to-day. We are being told that Jesus Christ and God are ceasing to be of importance to the modern man, and what we are worshipping more and more now is "Humanity," and this is slowly merging into a new phase; all the up-todate minds are looking towards the manifestation of this "superman," a being much greater than the being we know as man. Second Thessalonians 2 gives us a picture of the head of this great expectation. "... the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God" (2 Thessalonians 2:3-4). He is to be the darling of every religion; there is to be a consolidation of religions, and of races and of everything on the face of the earth, a great socialism. The ethical standard of the "superman" claims to be higher than Jesus Christ's standard. The tendency is noticeable already in the objection of some people to Jesus Christ's teaching, such as "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself"; they say, "That is selfish, you must love your neighbour and not think of yourself." The doctrine of the superman is absolute sinless perfection. We are going to evolve a being, they say, who has reached the place where he cannot be tempted. This is all an emanation from Satan.

Man is the climax of creation. He is on a stage a little lower than the angels, and God is going to overthrow the devil by this being who is less than angelic. God has, as it were, put man in the "open field," and He is allowing the devil to do exactly what he likes up to a certain point, "because," He says, "greater is He that is in you, than he that is in the world." This is also the explanation of our own spiritual setting. Satan is to be humiliated by man, by the Spirit of God in man through the wonderful regeneration of Jesus Christ.

Man, then, is the head and the purpose of the six days' creation. Man's body has in it those constituents that connect it with the earth; it has fire and water and all the elements of animal life, consequently God keeps us here. The earth is man's domain, and we are going to be here again after the terrestrial cremation. "Here-after," without the devil, without sin and wrong. We are going to be here, marvellously redeemed in this wonderful place which God made very beautiful, and with which sin has played havoc, and creation itself is waiting "for the manifestation of the sons of God."

(c) The Sabbath Rest (Genesis 2:1-3)

Not only is Man the head and climax of the six days' work, but he is the beginning of, and stands at the threshold of, the Sabbath of God. God's heart is, as it were, absolutely at rest now that He has created man; even in spite of the fact of the fall, and all else, God is absolutely confident that everything will turn out as He said it would. The devil has laughed at God's hope for thousands of years, and has ridiculed and scorned that hope, but God is not upset or alarmed about the final issue; He is certain that man will bruise the serpent's head. This has reference to those who are born again through Jesus Christ's amazing Atonement.

MAN: HIS CREATION, CALLING AND COMMUNION

Man's Making

- 1. The Man of God's Making (Genesis 2:4–25)
 - (a) The Image of God (John 4:24)
 - (b) The Image of God in Angels (Genesis 6:2; Psalm 89:6; Job 1:6; Job 38:7)
 - (c) The Image of God in Man (Genesis 1:26; Psalm 8:4–5)
- 2. The Manner of Man's Making (John 1:3)
 - (a) Man's Body (Genesis 2:7)
 - (b) Man's Soul (Acts 17:28)
 - (c) Man's Self-Consciousness (Proverbs 20:27; 1 Corinthians 2:11)

N.B.—VISIBLE CREATIONS THAT SURROUND MAN ARE NOT IN THE IMAGE OF GOD.

SOME NOTES WILL BE GIVEN ON THE APPEARANCES OF ANGELS IN OUR MATERIAL UNIVERSE.

SOME NOTES ALSO ON THE HUMAN REPRESENTATIONS OF GOD.

1. The Man of God's Making (Genesis 2:4-25)

God's heart is, so to speak, at rest now that He has created man.

(a) The Image of God God is a Spirit. (John 4:24)

This is a mountain-peak text which reveals a whole tableland of God's revelation about Himself.

(b) The Image of God in Angels

Now there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, and Satan came also among them. (Job 1:6; see also Genesis 6:2; Psalm 89:6; Job 38:7)

The phrase "sons of God" in the Old Testament always refers to angels, and we have to find out from the context whether they are fallen angels or not. Angels have no physical frame, they are not like man, and they are not manifested after this order of things; since, however, they are called "sons of God," the inference is clear that they bear the image of God.

(c) The Image of God in Man

And God said, Let Us make man in Our image, after Our likeness. (Genesis 1:26; see Psalm 8:4–5)

In its primary reference the image of God in man is to the hidden or interior life of man. The image of God in man is primarily spiritual, yet it has to be manifested in his body also. "Thou hast made him but little lower than God" (RV) or "than the angels" (Psalm 8:5). Man's chief glory and dignity is that he was made "of the earth, earthy" to manifest the image of God in that substance. We are apt to think that to be made of the earth is our humiliation, but it is the very point of which God's Word makes most. God "formed man of the dust of the ground," and the Redemption is for the dust of the ground as well as for man's spirit. Man's body before he degenerated must have been dazzling with light. We get this by inference from Genesis 3:7, "And the eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked; and they sewed fig leaves together, and made themselves aprons." Man was obviously naked before his disobedience, and the death of his union with God was instantly revealed in his body. (We shall deal with this point in the next chapter.)

From these revelation facts in God's Book, men have reasoned backwards; they have said that because men have bodies, therefore God has a corporeity too. This error began centuries ago and is continually being revived. The Bible does speak of the "form" of God—"Who, being in the form of God" (Philippians 2:6); but the error has arisen from our too readily inferring that "form" means physical body. In the Old Testament there are allusions over and over again to what is called the anthropomorphic view of God; that is, God is represented as having hands and limbs and looking like a man, and from this it is easy to draw the inference that God has a body like man. All these Old Testament pictures of God are forecasts of the Incarnation. There are passages in the Book of Isaiah which reveal apparently conflicting statements about God, He is represented in many contradictory phrases; but all these contradictions blend in that unique Being, Jesus Christ, the last Adam.

The great Triune God has "form," and the term that is used for describing that form is "glory." "And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was" (John 17:5). Our word "Trinity" is an attempt to convey the externally disclosed Divine nature, and "glory" is the Bible term for conveying the idea of the external form of that Triune Being.

(This will be alluded to several times in the course of our studies in Biblical Psychology, and we shall thus become familiar with this profound revelation.)

God is sometimes referred to as the sun, but the sun is never stated to be made in the image of God, although there are illustrations of God in God's Book drawn from the sun. But nowhere, is it stated that God made the sun in His own image.

In the Bible record angels certainly did appear to men. We may take it from the revealed facts in God's Word that angels have the power of will to materialise and to appear to human beings when human beings are in suitable subjective conditions. This power is given to good and bad angels alike. It is probably to this that Paul refers Ephesians 6:12: "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." This inference is a great guide in regard to Spiritualism. Spiritualism, according to the Bible, is not a trick; it is a fact. Man can communicate with beings of a different order from his own, and can put himself into a state of subjectivity in which angels can appear.

2. The Manner of Man's Making

All things were made by Him; and without Him was not any thing made that was made. (John 1:3)

God did not create man by direct fiat; He moulded him by His own deliberate power (see Genesis 1:26–27). A common mistake is to infer that the soul was made along with the body; the Bible says that the body was created prior to the soul. Man's body was formed by God "of the dust of the ground"; which means that man is constituted to have affinity with everything on this earth. This is not man's calamity but his peculiar dignity. We do not further our spiritual life in spite of our bodies, but in and by means of our bodies. Then we read that God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul," i.e., a soul-enlivened nature.

There is another "breathing" mentioned in John 20:22, when our Risen Lord breathed on the disciples and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." This has not the same meaning as Genesis 2:7, where God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life which became, not God's Spirit, but man's. Jesus Christ breathed into His disciples Holy Spirit, and man's spirit became energised by the Spirit of the Son of God. When God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, man did not become a living God, he became "a living soul." Consequently in man, regenerate or degenerate, there are three aspects—spirit, soul and body. The uniting of men's personality, spirit, soul and body, may be brought about in various ways. The Bible reveals that sensuality will do it (Ephesians 5:5); that drunkenness will do it (Ephesians 5:18); and that the devil will do it (Luke 11:21); but the Holy Spirit alone will do it rightly, this is the only true at-one-ment. When our personality is sanctified, it is not God's Spirit that is sanctified, it is our spirit. "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thessalonians 5:23). Paul's injunction to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit" refers to man's spirit.

God's inbreathing into man's nostrils the breath of life called into actual existence his soul, which was potentially in the body, i.e., existing in possibility. Man's soul is neither his body nor his spirit, it is that creation which holds his spirit and his body together, and is the medium of expressing his spirit in his body. It is not true to state that man's soul moulds his body; it is his spirit that moulds his body, and soul is the medium his spirit uses to express itself.

It is impossible for us to conceive what Adam was like as God made him—his material body instinct with spiritual light, his flesh in the likeness of God, his soul in absolute harmony with God, and his spirit in the image of God. In the personal life of a man who has fallen away from God, his soul and his spirit gravitate more and more to the dust of the earth, more and more to the brutish life on one side and the Satanic life on the other. The marvellous revelation is that in and through Jesus Christ, our personality in its three aspects of body, soul and spirit, is sanctified and preserved blameless in this dispensation; and in another dispensation, body, soul and spirit will be instinct with the glory of God. Whenever an Old Testament character succeeded in perfectly doing God's will, earth seemed to lose its hold on him, e.g., Enoch, Elijah. Again, why did not Jesus Christ go straight back to Heaven from the Mount of Transfiguration? He was standing in the full blaze and glory of His pre-incarnate glory; but He "emptied Himself" (RV) a second time of the glory of God, and came down from the Mount to the humiliation of the Cross. When Jesus Christ comes again, those who are saved and sanctified will be "changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye"; all disharmony will cease and a new order will begin.

What does glorification mean? Adam is never spoken of as being glorified in the first decades of creation. Glorification is Christ enthroned in fullness of consummating power, when having subdued all things unto Himself, He enters back into Absolute Deity as "in the beginning" before any creations were (see 1 Corinthians 15:28). That is where our vocabulary will not go.

To sum up: God made man in His own image and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became, not a living God, but a living soul, a soul-enlivened nature; his whole bodily temple, every corpuscle of blood, every nerve, every sinew, was the temple which could manifest harmony with God, i.e., manifest the image of God in the form of man, through faith and love. The angels can manifest the image of God only in bodiless spirits; only one being can manifest God on this earth, and that is man. Satan thwarted God's purpose, and then laughed his devilish laugh against God, but the Bible says that God will laugh last. "The Lord shall laugh at him: for He seeth that His day is coming" (Psalm 37:13).

ORIGIN OF SALVATION—DARING WAY BACK TO GOD

Now we come to the revelation statement of how sin was introduced into this world.

1. The Primal Anarchy

(a) The Serpent

Now the serpent was more subtil than any beast of the field which the LORD God had made. (Genesis 3:1)

This creature was evidently a beautiful creation of God's and we must beware of imagining that it was in the beginning as it was after being cursed. After the fall, God cursed this beautiful creature into the serpent, to feed on dust and to crawl. The serpent in the physical domain is a picture of Satan in the spiritual domain. In our universe of physical things we shall find many which picture spiritual things. (This line of thought belongs to Biblical Philosophy, so it is only alluded to in passing.)

(b) The Serpent and Eve

But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. (2 Corinthians 11:3)

Why did Satan come via the serpent, and to Eve? why did he not go direct to Adam? In thinking of man and woman as they were first created, it is extremely difficult, especially nowadays, to present the subject without introducing small, petty and disreputable ideas relative to the distinctions between man and woman. In Adam and Eve we are dealing with the primal creations of God. Adam was created immediately by the hand of God; Eve was created mediately. Eve stands for the soul side, the psychic side, of the human creation; all her sympathies, and affinities were with the other creations of God around. Adam stands for the spirit side, the kingly, Godward side. Adam and Eve together are the likeness of God, "And God said, Let Us make man in Our image. . . . Male and female created He them." The revelation made here is not that woman stands as inferior to man. but that she stands in quite a different relation to all things, and that both man and woman are required for the complete creation of God referred to by the big general term "Man."

(c) The Serpent, Eve and Adam

And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression. (1 Timothy 2:14)

Eve, having this affinity and sympathy with the other creations around, would naturally listen with more unsuspecting interest to the suggestions which came through the subtle creature which spoke to her. The Bible says that Eve was deceived, it does not say that Adam was deceived; consequently Adam is far more responsible than Eve because he sinned deliberately. There was no conscious intention to disobey in Eve's heart, she was deceived by the subtle wisdom of Satan via the serpent. Adam, however, was not deceived, he sinned with a deliberate understanding of what he was doing; so the Bible associates "sin" with Adam ("Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world . . ." Romans 5:12) and "transgression" with Eve ("And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression").

In this connection it is of importance to note that the Bible reveals that our Redeemer entered into the world through the woman. Man, as man, had no part whatever in the Redemption of the world; it was "the seed of the woman." In Protestant theology and in the Protestant outlook we have suffered much from our opposition to the Roman Catholic Church on this one point, viz., intense antipathy to Mariolatry, and we have lost the meaning of the woman side of the revelation of God. All that we understand by womanhood and by manhood, all that we understand by fatherhood and motherhood, is embraced in the term "El Shaddai" (Genesis 17:1 RV mg). (This is a mere hint at a line of thought that cannot be taken up here.)

A distinction may legitimately be made between transgression and sin (cf. Matthew 6:12–15). Transgression is nearly always an unconscious act, there is no conscious determination to do wrong. Sin is never an unconscious act, as far as culpability is concerned, it is always a conscious determination. Adam was the introducer of sin into this order of things (see Romans 5:12). Original sin is doing without God. A noticeable feature in the conduct of Adam and Eve is that when God turned them out of the garden, they did not rebel. The characteristic of sin in man is fear and shame. Sin in man is doing without God, but it is not rebellion against God in its first stages.

2. The Pre-Adamic Anarchy

(a) Satanic Pretensions

The pretensions of Satan are clear. He is the god of this world and he will not allow relationship to the true God. Satan's attitude is that of a pretender to the throne, he claims it as his right. Wherever and whenever the rule of God is recognised by man, Satan proceeds to instil the tendency of mutiny and rebellion and lawlessness.

(b) Satanic Perversions

Satan ever perverts what God says. Genesis 3:5 is one of the revelation facts concerning Satan ("For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil"). Remember, the characteristics of man's union with God are faith in God and love for Him. This union was the first thing Satan aimed at in Adam and Eve, and he did it by perverting what God had said. In the case of Job, Satan goes the length of trying to pervert God's idea of man. That is an amazing revelation of the power of Satan! He is represented as presenting himself with the sons of God in the very presence of God and trying to pervert God's mind about Job. We might apply personally (not exegetically) this statement from Isaiah: "A bruised reed shall He not break, and the smoking flax shall He not quench." Satan is called "the accuser of our brethren"; he not only slanders God to us, but accuses us to God. It is as if he looked down and pointed out a handful of people and insinuated to God, "Now, that woman is a perfect disgrace to You, she has only one spark of grace amongst all the fibres of her life; I advise You to stamp out that spark." What is the revelation? "He will raise it to a flame." Or, he points out a man and says, "That man is a disgrace to You, he is a bruised reed,' I wonder You build any hope on him whatever, he is a hindrance and an upset to You, break him!" But no, the Lord will bind him up and make him into a wonderful instrument. The old reeds were used to make wonderful musical instruments, and instead of crushing out the life that is bruised and wrong, God heals it and discourses sweet music through it.

In the revelation in Genesis 3 Satan implies that God is jealous—"God knows that if you disobey Him you will become as God." Satan perverted God's statement. He did not say that God had said it, he was too wise for that, he said, "Hath God said . . . ?" insinuating "You do not know what God meant, but I do; He means that if you disobey Him and eat of the tree, you will become as He is." I do not think that Eve accepted this suggestion about God, because, if you watch, Satan's words worked in her as a deception unconsciously, all she saw was that the fruit was "a delight to the eyes." Our discernment of what Eve did is given to us by the Spirit of God. We are not ignorant of Satan's devices (2 Corinthians 2:11). Satan's pretension is that he is equal with God. His perversion is twofold: he tries to pervert what God says to us, and also to pervert God's mind about us.

(c) Satanic Perils

And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgement of the great day. (Jude 6)

What are Satanic perils? The Satanic perils spring straight out of the way we are made, and in Matthew 16:22-23 we come to where we live. Have you ever noticed the remarkable identification Jesus Christ makes in this passage? When Peter said, "Be it far from Thee, Lord," what did our Lord reply?—"Get thee behind Me, Satan." Our Lord then told Peter that what he had said belonged to the wrong disposition in man, which He identifies with Satan. Beware of Satanic perils when they are taken to be merely natural tendencies. Remember, Satan is an awful being, he is able to deceive us on the right hand and on the left, and the first beginnings of his deceptions are along the lines of self-pity. Self-pity, self-conceit, and self-sympathy will make us accept slanders against God. Satanic perils arise out of the wrong disposition which was introduced into the human race, and that wrong disposition shows itself in self-pity and self-sympathy. Beware of slandering the "old man," as is often done; I mean, beware of making the "old man" appear ugly. The "old man" does not appear ugly to anyone but the Holy Ghost. The "old man," i.e., the disposition that connects me with the mystical body of sin, is a highly desirable thing until I am quickened by the Spirit of God and born from above; it makes me consider my rights, it makes me look after myself and consider what is good for me. "Ye are they that justify yourselves in the sight of men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is exalted among men is an abomination in the sight of God" (Luke 16:15 RV).

"Then shall that Wicked be revealed . . . even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders" (2 Thessalonians 2:8–9). This verse reveals another peril, viz., that there are tremendous and appalling external manifestations of Satan. The curious thing nowadays is that people are watching eagerly for these manifestations of Satanic power while they allow other Satanic perils, e.g., spiritualism, to have their way. Once the disposition is altered, we shall never be deluded by any of the Satanic powers which manifest themselves in the external world. The great peril is the peril within, which men never think of as a peril. My right to myself, self-pity, self-conceit, consideration for my progress, my ways of looking at things, those things are the Satanic perils which will keep us in perfect sympathy with Satan.

Satanic anarchy is conscious and determined opposition to God. Wherever God's rule is made known, Satan will put himself alongside and oppose it. Satan's sin is at the summit of all sins; man's sin is at the foundation of all sins, and there is all the difference in the world between them. Satan's sin is conscious, emphatic, and immortal rebellion against God; he has no fear, no veneration, and no respect for God's rule. Whenever God's law is stated, that is sufficient, Satan will break it, and his whole purpose is to get man to do the same. Satanic anarchy is a conscious, tremendous thing. Satan is never represented in the Bible as being guilty of doing wrong things: he is a wrong being. Men are responsible for doing wrong things, and they do wrong things because of the wrong disposition in them. The moral cunning of our nature makes us blame Satan when we know perfectly well we should blame ourselves; the true blame for sins lies in the wrong disposition in us. In all probability Satan is as much upset as the Holy Ghost is when men fall in external sin, but for a different reason. When men go into external sin and upset their lives, Satan knows perfectly well that they will want another Ruler, a Saviour and Deliverer; as long as Satan can keep men in peace and unity and harmony apart from God, he will do so (see Luke 11:21-22). Remember, then, Satan's sin is dethroning God.

3. The Punished Anarchists

We have seen in Chapter II how God punished Satan; He has reserved for him what is revealed as the eternal hell. Now we come to the punishment of Adam and Eve. "Therefore the LORD God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. So He drove out the man. . . . " (Genesis 3:23–24). It is a familiar revelation fact to us that there was no rebellion in Adam and Eve. They did not fight against God, they simply went out of the Garden covered with fear and shame. Satan was the originator of sin; Adam was not. Adam accepted the way Eve had been deceived and sinned with his eyes open, and instantly an extraordinary thing happened:. "they knew that they were naked." There is quite sufficient to indicate that when Adam's spirit, soul and body were united in perfect faith and love to God, his soul was the medium through which the marvellous life of the Spirit of God was brought down. The very image of God was brought down into his material body and it was clothed in an inconceivable splendour of light until the whole man was in the likeness of God. The moment he disobeyed, the connection with God was shut off, and spirit, soul and body tumbled into death that instant. The fact of dissolving into dust in a few years' time is nothing more than death visible. Do not bring the idea of time in at all. Death happened instantly in spirit, soul and body, spiritually and psychically. The connecting link with Deity was gone, and man's spirit, soul and body tumbled into disintegrating death; and when they "heard the voice of the LORD God walking in the garden," they were terrified and hid themselves. By the term "Death" is meant that the body crumbles back into dust, the soul disappears, and the spirit goes back to God Who gave it (see Ecclesiastes 12:7). Spirit is the immortal part of man. The spirit of man is not absorbed into God, it goes back to God, Who breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, with the characteristics upon it which he has developed for either the judgement or the praise of God.

God turned man out of the garden of Eden into destitution, but in turning him out He put him on the way to become an infinitely grander and nobler being than even Adam was at the first. The whole Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, instead of being a picture of despair is the very opposite. The worst is always "bettered" by God. God as it were, took His hand off man and let Satan do the very worst that diabolical spiritual genius could do. Satan knew what would happen, he knew that God would have to punish man, and God did punish him, but with the perfect certainty that the being that was to come out of the ordeal of the fall would be greater than the first Adam.

Adam and Eve went out from the garden covered with fear and shame. In the New Testament the characteristics of the wrong disposition are fearfulness and unbelief; what does the Atonement do? It takes away fearfulness and unbelief, and brings us back again into the relationship of faith and love to God. "... faith and love which is in Christ Jesus" (1 Timothy 1:14). Regeneration means that the Holy Spirit lifts man out of the slough he is in through sin and death into a totally new realm, and by sudden intuitions and impulses the new he is able to lift up soul and body. The soul must obey the union with God which the new life has given, or it may ultimately fall away. The new birth will bring us to the place where spirit, soul and body are identified with Christ, sanctified here and now and preserved in that condition, not by intuitions now, not by sudden impulses and marvellous workings of the new life within, but by a conscious, superior, moral integrity, transfigured through and through by our union with God through the Atonement.

When Adam sinned his union with God was cut off, and God turned him out of the garden and guarded the way to the tree of life, that is to say, God prevented Adam from getting back as a fallen being. If Adam had got back to the tree of life as a fallen being, he would have become an incarnate devil, and God would have been finally thwarted with man; but when Adam was driven out, God placed cherubim and a gleaming sword to keep the way of the tree of life. If Adam had become an incarnate devil, there would have been the same havoc on this earth as when the angels fell; but Adam did not sin as Satan sinned. Adam was covered with fear and shame, and the light that had glistened all through his physical body faded out because of sin. Jesus Christ is going to change "the body of our humiliation" and conform it "to the body of His glory," and the result will be not an intuitive innocency only, but a conscious manly and womanly holiness. Holiness is the expression of the new disposition God has given us maintained against all odds. Holiness is militant, Satan is continually pressing and ardent, but holiness maintains itself. It is morality on fire and transfigured into the likeness of God. Holiness is not only what God gives me, but what I manifest that God has given me. I manifest this coruscating holiness by my reaction against sin, the world, and the devil. Wherever God's saints are in the world they are protected by a wall of fire which they do not see, but Satan does. "That wicked one toucheth him not." Satan has to ask and plead for permission; as to whether God grants him permission is to do with the sovereignty of God and is not in our domain to understand. All we know is that Jesus Christ taught us to pray, "Lead us not into temptation."

Man was turned out into destitution, and was thus divided from Deity; God disappeared from him, and he disappeared from God. As mentioned before, there are three false unities possible in a man's experience, viz., sensuality, drunkenness, and the devil, whereby man's spirit, soul and body are brought into harmony and he is quite peaceful, quite happy, with no sense of death about him. A drunken man has no self-consciousness, he is perfectly delivered from all the things which disintegrate and upset. Sensuality and Satan will do the same; but each of these unities is only possible for a time. When Satan rules, men's souls are in peace, they are not troubled or upset like other men, but quite happy and peaceful. There is only one right at-one-ment, and that is in Jesus Christ; only one right unity, and that is when body, soul and spirit are united to God by the Holy Ghost through the marvellous Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The origin of salvation is a daring way back to God. How did Jesus Christ make a way back to God? Through every worst onslaught of Satan. By the sheer force of the tremendous integrity of His Incarnation, Jesus Christ hewed a way straight through sin and death and hell right back to God, more than conqueror over all.

As in chapters I and II, we are dealing here more properly with theology than with psychology, but it is these fundamental theological facts which must safeguard our psychological studies.

1. Incarnation. Word Made Weak

And the Word was made weak, and dwelt among us... (see John 1:14).

The word "Trinity" is not a Bible word. Over and over again in the Bible the Triune God is revealed, so that the idea conveyed by the Trinity is thoroughly scriptural. The following distinctions have existed from all eternity:

- The Essence of Godhead (esse) usually known as God the Father;
- The Existence of Godhead (existere) usually known as God the Son;
- The Proceeding of Godhead (procedere) usually known as God the Holy Ghost.

One thing we have to guard against is the teaching that God became incarnate in order to realise Himself; it is an unbiblical statement. God was Self-sufficient before the Son became Incarnate. What is known as New Theology springs from this fundamental error—that God had to create something in order to realise Himself; consequently we are told that we are essential to God's existence, that apart from us, God is not. If we start with that theory, then all that goes by the name of "New Theology" follows easily. The Bible has nothing to do with such conceptions. The Creation and the Incarnation are the outgoings of the overflowing life of the Godhead. Another aspect of New Theology is that God is all; the Bible reveals that God is not all. The Bible distinctly states that our universe is pluralistic, not monistic; that means there are other forces at work beside God, viz., man and the devil. These are not God, and never will be. Man is meant to come back to God and to be in harmony with Him through Jesus Christ; the devil will be at enmity with God for ever.

In Philippians 2:6 the form of God is mentioned. What is the form of God? In chapter II we found that men have reasoned that because man was made in the image of God, therefore God had a body. We stated that this did not mean God had a corporeal form; and that whenever bodily members are mentioned in connection with God, the reference is to the Incarnation. The Godhead had a form originally, and that "form" is best implied by the term "glory." The Bible reveals that the Godhead was absolutely Self-sufficient. God did not need to be incarnated in order to realise Himself; neither was the creation needed to enable God to realise Himself.

Jesus Christ is not a Being one-half God and one-half Man. When George Eliot⁴ translated Strauss's Life of Christ,⁵ this impossibility to human reason was presented to her mind, and it was along this line that she made shipwreck of her faith. The Bible reveals that Jesus Christ is God-Man, viz., God Incarnate, the Godhead existing in flesh and blood.

(a) The Self-Surrender of the Trinity

The Incarnation is part of the self-surrender of the Trinity. John 17:5 refers to this. "And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was." Jesus Christ was not a Being Who became Divine; He was the Godhead incarnated, the Word made weak. Jesus Christ emphatically alludes to His own limitations, and Paul says He "emptied Himself," i.e., of the form of God, "taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men."

In Mark 13:32 we see another indication of the limitations of our Lord. "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." I am aware of the danger of attempting to sketch out the Selfconsciousness of Jesus; we cannot do it. We have to remember what the Scriptures say about Him-that He was the Godhead Incarnate, and that He emptied Himself of His glory in becoming Incarnate. In the Redemption, it was not God the Son paying a price to God the Father: it was God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost surrendering this marvellous Being, the Lord Jesus Christ, for one definite purpose. Never separate the Incarnation from the Atonement. The Incarnation is for the sake of the Atonement. In dealing with the Incarnation, we are dealing with a revelation fact, not with a speculation.

We find another allusion to the limitations of Jesus through His Incarnation in the Epistle to the Hebrews. To say that Jesus Christ could not be tempted flatly contradicts the Word of God—He was "in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin" (Hebrews 4:15).

(b) Self-Same with Trinity

All things are delivered unto Me of My Father: and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him. (Matthew 11:27)

Jesus says here, in effect, "I am the only medium for revealing the Father; you cannot know the Father through Nature, or through the love of your friends, you cannot know the Father in any other way than through Me." Couple with that verse our Lord's words in John 14:6, 9, ("Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me"—"he that hath seen Me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father?"), where He makes the same statement. No one knows anything about the Father unless he accepts the revelation made of Him by Jesus Christ. These statements come over and over again, and if we examine our Lord's teaching closely we shall find that He makes the final destiny of man depend on his relationship to Himself.

(c) The Self-Sufficiency of the Trinity (Proverbs 8:22–32)

Read in the light of the Incarnation this passage is amazing. What Solomon calls "Wisdom" is the same word as "Logos" in John 1, it means God's Word expressing His thought. The Trinity was Self-sufficient; the Incarnation was not meant to satisfy God, but for another purpose altogether. The thought is exactly the opposite, viz., instead of man being necessary to complement God so that He might realise Himself, the Incarnation was in order that man might realise God and gain adjustment to Him. The whole purpose of the Incarnation is the Redemption, viz., to overcome the disasters of the fall and produce a being more noble than the original Adam.

At the climax of everything, the Son resumes His original position in the Trinity; the Son gives up all to the Father, and the Trinity thus resolves itself again into this absolute Self-sufficient Deity (see 1 Corinthians 15:28).

2. Identification. Son Made Sin

... we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. For He hath made Him to be sin for us, Who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him. (2 Corinthians 5:20–21)

These verses reveal why God became Incarnate, why the Word was made weak, why the "Logos" became possessed of a weak human frame, viz., that the Son might be identified with sin. The revelation is not that Jesus Christ was punished for our sins, that is a slighter aspect. The statement in verse 21 is astounding: He was made to be sin for us. Jesus Christ became identified not only with the disposition of sin, but with the very body of sin. He Who had no sin, no connection in Himself with the body of sin, became identified with sin, Him who knew no sin, He made to be sin. Language can hardly bear the strain put upon it, but it may nevertheless convey the thought that Jesus Christ went straight through identification with sin in order that every man and woman on earth might be freed from sin through the Atonement. He went through the depths of damnation, through the deepest depths of death and hell, and came out more than conqueror; consequently anyone and everyone who is willing to be identified with Him will find that he is freed from the disposition of sin, freed from his connection with the body of sin, and that he too can come out "more than conqueror" because of what Jesus Christ has done.

(a) The Day of His Death

For He taught His disciples, and said unto them, The Son of Man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill Him; and after that He is killed, He shall rise the third day. (Mark 9:31; see also Matthew 16:21; Romans 6:3)

By "day" we mean the period of time covered by our Lord's life on earth. Why was He born as a Babe in such conditions that the mightiest empires of the world were simply not able to detect His existence? Why did He live those thirty years in Nazareth, and those three years of popularity, scandal and hatred, and why did He say He came on purpose to lay down His life? Our Lord never presented His death as that of a martyr. He said "I have power to lay [My life] down, and I have power to take it again." He laid down His life because of the great purpose behind in the mind of God.

The only way we can explain Jesus Christ is the way He explains Himself-and He never explains Himself away. Why did Jesus Christ live and die? The Scriptures reveal that He lived and died and rose again that we might be readjusted to the Godhead, i.e., that we might be delivered from sin and be brought back into the relationship of favour with God. If we teach that Jesus Christ cannot deliver from sin we shall end in nothing short of blasphemy. Present that line of thinking before God, tell Him that the Atonement cannot deliver us from sin but can only give us a Divine anticipation, and the danger and un-scripturalness of it will soon appear. The Bible reveals that Jesus Christ became identified with sin in order that "we might become the righteousness of God in Him." Forgiveness is a tremendous thing from our standpoint, but it is not the whole experimental meaning of the Atonement for us. We can become so identified with Jesus Christ until we know that "our old man is crucified with Him," i.e., that our connection with the body of sin is severed, and we may become "the righteousness of God in Him." This means we are readjusted to God and are free to fulfil all His commands.

(b) The Day of His Resurrection

For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection. (Romans 6:5; see also Philippians 3:10)

By His resurrection, Jesus Christ has power to impart to us the Holy Spirit, which means a totally new life. The Holy Ghost is the Deity in proceeding power Who applies the Atonement of the Son of God in our experience. Jesus Christ laid all the emphasis on the coming of the Holy Spirit—"When He . . . is come, He will guide you into all truth," and shall "bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you"; He will not only be with you, but He "shall be in you." We hear on the right hand and on the left that this is the age of the Holy Spirit. Thank God it is, and the Holy Spirit is with all men that they might receive Him. Just as God the Father was rejected and spurned in the Old Testament dispensation, and Jesus Christ the Son was despised and spurned in His dispensation, so God the Holy Ghost is despised (as well as flattered), in this dispensation. He is not given His right, we praise Him and say that we rely on His power, but the question of receiving Him that He may make real in us all that Jesus Christ did for us, is a rare experience. Immediately the Holy Spirit comes in as life and as light, He will chase through every avenue of our minds; His light will penetrate every recess of our hearts; He will chase His light through every affection of our souls, and make us know what sin is. The Holy Spirit convicts of sin, man does not.

The Holy Spirit is that marvellous Spirit that kept our Lord when He was incarnate, spirit, soul and body in perfect harmony with absolute Deity. When Jesus said "Ye have no life in you," He meant the life He lived; and we cannot have that life saving through Him. "He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life"—the life Jesus lived, Holy Spirit life. The Holy Spirit will take us, spirit, soul and body, and bring us back into communion with God; and if we obey the light He gives, He will lead us into identification with the death of Jesus, until we know experimentally that our old man, my right to myself, is crucified with Him and our human nature is free now to obey the commands of God. The word "substitution" is never used in the Bible, although the idea is a scriptural one. Substitution is always twofold—not only is Jesus Christ identified with my sin, but I am so identified with Him that the disposition which ruled Him is in me.

(c) The Day of His Ascension

And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. (Matthew 28:18; see also 2 Corinthians 5:16)

At His Ascension our Lord became omnipresent, omniscient and omnipotent. This means that all He was in the days of His flesh, all that He was able to impart in the Day of His Resurrection, He is now almighty to bestow without measure on all obedient children of men. Jesus Christ makes us one in holiness with Himself, one in love with Himself and ultimately one in glory with Himself. He is the supreme Sovereign, and He is able to give to His people a supreme sovereignty. In the days of our flesh, He says, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." He is with us in all power and in all wisdom, guiding, directing, controlling and subduing. He is King of kings and Lord of lords from the day of His Ascension until now.

3. Invasion. Sinner Made Saint

I have been crucified with Christ; yet I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me: and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, Who loved me, and gave Himself up for me. (Galatians 2:20 RV)

Through the identification of Jesus Christ with sin we can be brought back again into perfect harmony with God; but God does not take away our responsibility; He puts upon us a new responsibility. We are made sons and daughters of God through the Atonement and we have a tremendous dignity to maintain; we have no business to bow our necks to any yoke saving the voke of the Lord Jesus Christ. There ought to be in us a holy scorn whenever it comes to being dictated to by the spirit of the age in which we live. The age in which we live is governed by the prince of this world who hates Jesus Christ. His great doctrine is selfrealisation. We ought to be free from the dominion of the prince of this world; only one voke should be upon our shoulders, the yoke of the Lord Jesus. Our Lord was meek towards His Father, He let God Almighty do what He liked with His life and never murmured; He never awakened self-pity, nor brought down sympathy for Himself. "Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light" (Matthew 11:29–30).

Galatians 2:20 is the scriptural expression of identification with Jesus Christ in such a way that the whole life is changed. The destiny was getting wonderfully like the destiny of Satan, viz., selfrealisation; now, Paul says, it is no longer the destiny of self-realisation for me, but the destiny of Christrealisation, ("and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, . . . ") that is, the very faith which governed Jesus Christ now governs him. Paul is not talking of elementary faith in Jesus, of the faith which is in the Son of God, the very faith that was in Jesus is in me, he says. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." There is only one kind of holiness, and that is the holiness of the Lord Jesus. There is only one kind of human nature, and that is the human nature of us all, and Jesus Christ by means of His identification with our human nature can give us the disposition that He had. We have to see to it that we habitually work out that disposition through our eyes and ears and tongue, through all the organs of our body and in every detail of our life. The apostle Paul has been identified with the death of Jesus Christ, his whole life has been invaded by a new spirit, he has been "by one spirit . . . baptized into one body," and now he has no longer any connection with the body of sin, that mystical body which ultimately ends with the devil. We are made part of the mystical Body of Christ by sanctification.

We have used the term "invasion" because it gives the idea better than any other. The illustration our Lord uses of the vine and the branches in John 15 is the most satisfactory one, because it indicates that every bit of the life in the branch which bears fruit is the result of an invasion from the parent stem: "I am the vine, ye are the branches." Our life is drawn from the Lord Jesus, not only the spring and the motive of the life, but our actual thinking and living and doing. This is what Paul means when he talks about the new man in Christ Jesus. After sanctification that is where the life is drawn from. "All my springs are in Thee." Notice how God will wither up every other spring you have. He will wither up your natural virtues, He will break up confidence in your natural powers, He will wither up your confidence in brain and spirit and body, until you learn by practical experience that you have no right to draw your life from any source other than the tremendous reservoir of the resurrection life of Jesus Christ. Thank God if you are going through a drying-up experience!

Our Lord never patches up our natural virtues, He replaces the whole man from within, until the new man is shown in the new manners. God does not give new manners; we make our own, but we have to make them out of the new life (Ephesians 4:22-32). Every detail of our physical life is to be absolutely under the control of the new disposition which God planted in us by means of identification with Jesus Christ, and we shall no longer be allowed to murmur "can't." There is no such a word as "can't" in a Christian's vocabulary if he is rightly related to God; there is only one word and that is "I can." "I know how to be abased, and I know also how to abound: in everything and in all things have I learned the secret both to be filled and to be hungry, both to abound and to be in want [RV]. I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me" (Philippians 4:12-13). And watch the kind of things Paul said he could do.

Manners refer to Christian character, and we are responsible for our manners. God works the alteration within us now, says Paul, "Work out what God works in," and we shall find when we are right with Him that God uses the machinery of our circumstances to enable us to do it. God is not after satisfying us and glorifying us; He wants to manifest in us what His Son can do. "When He shall come to be glorified in His saints, and to be admired in all them that believe" (1 Thessalonians 2:10). The invasion of the life of Jesus Christ makes us sons and daughters of God. These are things that the angels desire to look into. It is as if they look down on us and say, "Look at that woman, how wonderfully like Jesus Christ she is; she used not to be, but look at her now. We know Jesus Christ did it, but we wonder how?" Or, "Look at that man, he is just like his Master, how did Jesus Christ do it?"

Thank God we are not going to be angels, we are going to be something tenfold better. By the Redemption of Jesus Christ there is a time coming when our bodies will be in the image of God. The "body of our humiliation" is to be "conformed to the body of His glory," and our body will bear the image of God as our spirit does.

SOUL: THE ESSENCE, EXISTENCE AND EXPRESSION

- 1. The Term Soul (Generally)
 - (a) Applied to Men and Animals (Genesis 1:20–21, 24, 30)
 - (b) Applied to Men, Not Animals (Genesis 2:7; 1 Corinthians 15:45)
 - (c) Applied to Men Individually (Genesis 12:13; 1 Samuel 18:1)

N.B. (1) NEVER APPLIED TO ANGELS OR TO GOD. (COMP. 2 CORINTHIANS 4:7.) (2) NEVER APPLIED TO PLANTS. (SEE JOB 14:8–9.)

- 2. The Truth about the Soul (Specifically)
 - (a) And Spirit (Genesis 2:7)
 - (b) And Body (James 2:26)
 - (c) And Personality (Isaiah 29:24; Romans 8:16)

N.B.—"THE SPIRIT IS THE ESSENTIAL FOUNDATION OF MAN; THE SOUL HIS PECULIAR ESSENTIAL FORM; THE BODY HIS ESSENTIAL MANIFESTATION."

We take first of all the term Soul Generally and Specifically. The next chapter deals with "The Fundamental Powers" of the soul, which means the soul as it is influenced either by a degenerate intelligence or by the Spirit of God; there we shall deal with the varied powers of the soul. Then "The Fleshly Presentation of the Soul" will be considered, which means the soul manifesting and expressing itself in the bodily life: and finally, we shall deal with the "Past, Present and Future" of the Soul, and with the theses that have gathered round the doctrine of the soul, which are quite scriptural and yet lead to conclusions most unscriptural.

In the Old Testament the word "soul," i.e., animal soul, the soul that is present only in this order of beings, is mentioned about 460 times. In the New Testament the word "soul" is mentioned about 57, with the same meaning. When the Bible mentions a thing over five hundred times, it is time that Christians examined the teaching about it with care.

1. The Term Soul (Generally)

The term "soul" generally, is used in three distinct ways. First, as applied to men and animals alike as distinct from all other creations; second, the more particular use of the word as applied to men distinguished from animals; and third, as applied to one man as distinct from another.

(a) Applied to Men and Animals (Genesis 1:20-21, 24, 30)

The term "soul" here includes animals and men to distinguish them from every other form of creation.

The Bible nowhere says that God has a soul; the only way in which the soul of God is referred to is prophetically in anticipation of the Incarnation. Angels are never spoken of as having souls, because soul has reference to this order of creation and angels belong to another order. Our Lord emphatically had a soul, but of God and of angels the term "soul" is not used. The term "soul" is never applied to plants. A plant has life, but the Bible never speaks of it as having soul.

For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease. Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground; yet through the scent of water it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant. But man dieth, and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? (Job 14:7–10)

The distinction there is very clear; you can cut off a piece of a plant and the cut off part will grow; but if you cut off the limb of an animal and plant it, it will not grow, the reason being that a plant has no soul, but an animal has. There is nothing said in the Bible about the immortality of animals. The Bible says that there will be animals in the regenerated earth, but nowhere does it say that the animals which we see now are immortal and that when they die they are raised again. The Bible indicates that everything which partakes of the curse through the Fall will be restored by God's mighty Redemption; nothing will be lost.

(b) Applied to Men, Not Animals

And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. (1 Corinthians 15:45) Soul, then, is something peculiar to men and animals, that God has not, that angels have not, and that plants have not. Man has soul, and brute has soul. What kind of spirit has a brute? Soul is the holder of spirit and body together, then it follows that there must be a spirit in the brute, otherwise we must revise our statement about soul. There is certainly a spirit in the brute, for the Bible reveals that when an animal dies, its spirit "goeth downward." The spirit of the brute is part of the spirit of entire nature, and when the brute dies its spirit goes back again into entire nature. The spirit of entire nature is manifestly a creation of God. The spirit in man which holds his soul and body together is entirely different from the spirit of a brute; it is the human spirit which God created when He breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life. God did not make man a little god; He breathed into his nostrils the spirit which became man's distinct spirit, "and man became a living soul."

Where does man's spirit go when he dies? "The spirit of man . . . goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast . . . goeth downward to the earth" (Ecclesiastes 3:21). Scientists tell us that death is a molecular disturbance, that when we die we are distributed into the spirit of entire nature. The Bible says that the spirit of a man goes back to God. This does not imply that man's spirit is absorbed into God; but that man's spirit goes back to God with the characteristics on it for either judgement or praise. When we deal more narrowly with this subject later on, we shall find that the nature of man's spirit, whether it be sensual or spiritual, is to express itself in soul. The whole effort of the spirit is to try and express itself through the soul, that is, in ordinary physical life.

(c) Applied to Men Individually

Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister, that it may be well with me for thy sake; and my soul shall live because of thee. (Genesis 12:13)

And it came to pass, when he had made an end of speaking unto Saul, that the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul. (1 Samuel 18:1)

These passages describe the use of the term "soul" as an individual personal soul distinct from every other soul. An individual soul cannot be divided or cut up. In popular language we speak of a person expressing soul in music, or in literature or art; or we refer to him as being hard and mechanical and soul-less, and it is to this aspect of soul we are referring here. The phrases "beautiful soul" and "mean soul" fere to the individual aspect of soul. When demon possession is referred to in the Scripture (e.g. Luke 8:26–39), the body is the location or habitation of other spirits besides the man's own spirit. Thought takes up no room, spirit partakes of the nature of thought, and there is no limit to the number of spirits a man's body may hold during demon possession.

2. The Truth about the Soul (Specifically) (a) The Soul and Spirit (Genesis 2:7)

What is the relationship between spirit and soul? where did the soul come from? The soul has no existence until the spirit and the body come together; it holds its existence in fee entirely by spirit, which statement is the needed complementary truth of what has already been stated, that soul is the holder of spirit and body together.

What is the spirit in a fallen man? "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God" (1 Corinthians 2:11). We must approach this subject by making a distinction between sensual man and spiritual man. The spirit in a fallen or sensual man is his mind, which has a vast capacity for God, to Whom, however, he is dead, and the spirit of a fallen man is imprisoned in his soul and degraded by the body. A sensual person may have marvellous ideas, wonderful intelligence, and yet his whole life may be corrupt and rotten. Take Oscar Wilde for instance. It would be difficult to find a more flagrant example of gross immorality, and yet while in prison, after a life of unthinkable immorality, Oscar Wilde wrote a most amazing book entitled De Profundis, a book which shows a wonderful grasp of our Lord's teaching. The spirit in Oscar Wilde was nothing more than an intellectual spirit, a spiritual capacity that had no life in itself and was enslaved by the body through the soul. Instead of a fallen man's intelligence being able to lift up his body, it does exactly the opposite; a fallen man's intelligence severs his intellectual life more and more from his bodily life and produces inner hypocrisy. In the case of the lives of certain poets and literary men and geniuses, the exception is to find a man who has a clean life as well as a good mind. You can never judge a man by his intellectual flights. You may hear the most magnificent and inspiring diction from a man who his sunk lower than the beasts in his moral life. He has a sensual spirit; that is, instead of his soul allowing his spirit to lift up his body, it drags it down, and there is a divorce between the man's intellectual life and his practical life.

A spiritual man is quite different. Jesus Christ was a spiritual Personality; the Holy Spirit filled His spirit and kept His soul and body in perfect harmony with God. The meaning of the Atonement is that Jesus Christ has power to impart to us the Holy Spirit. Holy Spirit has "life in itself," and immediately that life is manifested in our souls, it wars against what we have been describing. Slowly and surely if we "mind" the Holy Spirit Who fills our spirit and re-energises it, we shall find that He will lift our soul, and with our soul our body, into a totally new unity until the former divorce is annulled. In a spiritual personality the Spirit of Jesus Christ enables the material body of a man to show His nature. The spirit of a man cannot do this for it has not life in itself. Never judge a man by the fact that he has good ideas; and never judge yourself by the fact that you have stirring visions of things. We are told that a man cannot teach the doctrine of entire sanctification unless he is entirely sanctified himself, but he can. The devil can teach entire sanctification if he pleases. This power is one of the most dangerous powers of the soul. There are "spiritual" persons and "sensual" persons. A sensual person is one in whom the divorce between mental conception and practical living is discernible. The only solution of the problem lies in receiving the Holy Spirit, not believing Him, or complimenting Him; but receiving Him. When we receive the Holy Spirit, He so energises our spirit that we are able to detect the things that are wrong, and we are enabled to rectify them if we "mind" the Holy Spirit. This is the Scotch use of the term "mind," and it means "remember to obey." It carries with it the meaning of another Scotch word, "lippen," that is, "trust." Mind the Holy Spirit, mind His light, mind His convictions, mind His guidance, and slowly and surely the sensual personality will be turned into a spiritual personality.

^{6.} mean: ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

(b) The Soul and Body

For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also. (James 2:26)

The body has the earth as its ancestor. "The being of man plants its foot on the earth and the being of earth culminates in man, for both are destined to the fellowship of one history." We have insisted all through these studies that from God's standpoint man's chief glory is his body. "But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us" (2 Corinthians 4:7). The "treasure" is God's Spirit being manifested in a human spirit. God's Spirit cannot be manifested in angels, or in animals, or in plants; it can only be manifested in human "earthen vessels." Do not make that mean that Paul is pouring contempt on the "earthen vessel"; it is exactly the opposite. Jesus Christ took on Him the nature of the "earthen vessel," not the nature of angels. "Of the earth, earthy," is man's glory, not his shame, and it is in the earth, earthy, that Jesus Christ's full regenerating work is to have its ultimate reach. Man's body and the earth on which he treads are to partake in the final restitution.

Our soul's history is not furthered "in spite of our bodies," but because of our bodies. Nothing can enter the soul but through the senses, God enters into the soul through the senses. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Beware of the absorption type of mysticism, it is never presented in the Bible. All that the soul retains comes through its bodily senses, and when the Holy Spirit is finding His way into a man's spirit it is through the bodily senses on the physical side. "He shall glorify Me," said Jesus; in my mind, my imagination, in and through my body. And again, He shall "bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." This can only be done by the material brain working through the body. Beware of all inward impressions. Beware of all instincts which you cannot curb by the wisdom taught in God's Book. If you take every impression as a call of the Spirit of God, you will end in hallucinations (see 2 Thessalonians 2:10–12). Test every movement by the tests Jesus Christ has given, and they are all tangible, sensible tests. The way to test men, Jesus says, is "by their fruits." We say that the fruit of the Spirit has altogether to do with the spiritual, but the Bible reveals that the spiritual must show itself in the physical. God knows no divorce whatever between the three aspects of a man's nature, spirit, soul and body, they must be at one, and they are at one either in damnation or in salvation. If a man has not the Holy Spirit of God energising his spirit, he will come to be judged more and more by the judgement passed on his bodily life. Beware of the people who teach that though a man's body may sin, his soul does not. No such distinctions are taught in God's Word. In God's judgement, body, soul and spirit go together. If a man is not enlivened by the Holy Spirit, his intelligence has no power to lift him; he cannot lift himself by his ideas, or intelligent notions, or knowledge. That is why intelligence is never the primary thing from God's standpoint. "If any man will know My doctrine," says Jesus, "let him do the will" (see John 7:17)—performance of the will before perception of the doctrine always in spiritual matters. Immediately we receive the Holy Spirit and are energised by God, we shall find our bodies are the first place of attack for the enemy, because the body has been the centre which ruled the soul and divided it from spiritually intelligent standards; consequently the body is the last "stake" of Satan. The body is the "margin of the battle" for you and me. Health is simply the perfect balance of the body with the outer world; when anything upsets that balance we become diseased. Immediately the Holy Spirit comes in, disturbance occurs, physically, morally and spiritually, and the balance is upset. Jesus Christ said, "I came not to send peace, but a sword." What balance will the Holy Spirit give back? The old one? No! We can never get back the old balance of health again; we have to get a new balance, viz., that of holiness, which means the balance of our disposition with God's laws. We shall find the "choppy waters" come just there. So many misunderstand why it is their bodies are attacked now that they are spiritual in a way they never were attacked before they were spiritual. We shall deal later with the difference between natural sickness and demoniacal sickness. The Bible has a great deal to say about them both. The Bible is the only Book that throws light on our physical condition, on our soul condition, and on our spiritual condition. In the Bible the sense of smell and sight, etc., are not used as metaphors only; they are identified with the nature of the soul's life. This accounts for what people are apt to call the vulgar teaching of the Bible.

God has safeguarded us in every way. Spiritualism is the great crime; it pushes down God's barriers and brings us into contact with forces we cannot control. On the other hand, if we give ourselves over to Jesus Christ and are ruled by Him, the Holy Spirit can do through us anything He chooses. "I beseech you, therefore, brethren . . . present your bodies a living sacrifice," and "bodies" means "faculties" as well. Why should we expect God to deal with less than the devil deals with? A good man is a flesh and blood good man, not an impression. The body is the "vessel" of the soul, and it enables the soul to turn its inward life into an outward life.

SOUL: THE ESSENCE, EXISTENCE AND EXPRESSION

Fundamental Powers of the Soul

1. Contraction

- (a) First Power. Self-Comprehending (Deuteronomy 13:6–7; 1 Samuel 18:1)
- (b) Second Power. Stretching beyond Itself (Psalm 27:12)

2. Expansion

- (c) Third Power. Self-Living (Job 2:6; John 10:11)
- (d) Fourth Power. Spirit-Penetrated (Isaiah 26:9; Jude 19)

3. Rotation

- (e) Fifth Power. Stirred Sensually or Spiritually (Exodus 23:9; 1 Peter 2:11)
- (f) Sixth Power. Speaking the Spirit's Thoughts (Genesis 41:40)
- (g) Seventh Power. Sum Total in Unity (Jeremiah 38:16)

1. Contraction

We mean by fundamental, the powers that work in the interior of the soul. The soul's existence has its origin in the spirit and in its struggle to realise itself. This is the counterpart of the statement made in the last chapter, viz., that the soul is the holder of the body and spirit together.

By Contraction, we mean that the soul has power to contract into itself. By Expansion, we mean that the soul has power to strive away from itself, reaching beyond itself; and by Rotation we mean that the soul has the power of expressing itself by the restlessness of becoming. This mechanical division is merely an arbitrary way of presenting a complex truth. All scientific laws exist in men's heads and are simply attempts to explain observed facts. For instance it is a dangerous mistake to talk about the law of gravitation as if it were a thing. The law of gravitation is the explanation given by scientific men of certain observed facts, and to say that Jesus Christ "broke the law of gravitation" when He walked on the sea, and when He ascended, is a misstatement. He brought in a new series of facts for which the law of gravitation, so-called, could not account.

(a) First Power. Self-Comprehending

If . . . thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known . . . (Deuteronomy 13:6–7; see also 1 Samuel 18:1)

These verses indicate the power of the soul to comprehend itself as an individual separate from every other individual. Watch your own experience, and you will recognise this soul power at once. When a child begins to be self-conscious, it is this power that is awakening, the power to contract into itself and to realise that it is different from its father and mother and from all other children, and the tendency to shut up the life to itself increases. This power shows itself in feelings of isolation and separation, alternating between pride and shyness. Self-consciousness drags down the harmony of the soul. In some people it lasts a long time; some never get beyond the manifestation of this power of soul, viz., the power to contract into themselves, the power to be different from everybody else; they have not gone on to realise that they have the power to expand, that is, to come into contact with other souls without being afraid or timid.

That is the first power in a natural soul. Now take it in a soul born again of the Spirit of God, how does this power of the soul express itself? The power of self-comprehension in a born-again soul shows itself in opposition to sinfulness. Watch the swing of the pendulum, as it were, in your own life, and in the life of anybody newly born again of the Spirit; the life goes to the opposite extreme of the way it lived when in the world, e.g., if it was given to finery and dress when in the world, it will go to the opposite extreme on its introduction to the new life. This is the first recognisable power of an individual soul.

(b) Second Power. Stretching beyond Itself

Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies: for false witnesses are risen up against me, and such as breathe out cruelty. (Psalm 27:12)

This power of the soul causes a person to find out first not the forces in agreement with it, but those that are different from it. Other souls seem to be in opposition to it. The boy who has become self-conscious always imagines every other boy is his enemy, and he suspects any boy who wants to become his friend. This power of the soul also makes a man realise that he can do pretty well what he likes with his body—a dangerous moment in a human life. Or again it makes a man realise he is able to deceive everyone else. There is no restriction at all when this power first dawns. I realise I can satisfy my bodily appetites as I choose; I can also cunningly deceive everyone else. If I am a servant, I can easily defraud my master or mistress; if I am a business man, I can easily defraud the public. This power of the soul can be seen worked out to its complete issue in the life of the world.

In a spiritual nature this power of the soul shows itself in opposition to sinful craving. Jesus Christ says, in effect: "If you are My disciple, you will easily be defrauded, but you will not allow yourself to be defrauded from the simplicity of the Gospel." Knowledge of evil broadens a man's mind, makes him tolerant, but paralyses his action. Knowledge of good broadens a man's mind, makes him intolerant of all sin, and shows itself in intense activity. A bad man, an evil-minded man, is amazingly tolerant of everything and everyone, no matter whether they are good or bad, Christian or not, but his power of action is paralysed entirely. He is tolerant of everything—the devil, the flesh, the world, sin, and everything else. Jesus Christ never tolerated sin for one moment, and when His nature is getting its way in a soul the same intolerance is shown, and it manifests itself "not with eye service." If I am a servant I won't serve my master or mistress with this power of my soul realising I have power to deceive. I will use it to show that I belong to Jesus Christ. Neither shall I use this power of my soul to do what I like with my body. "Not with eye-service, as menpleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart" (Ephesians 6:6). "Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh; not with eye-service as menpleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God" (Colossians 3:22).

In a spiritual soul this power of the soul will show itself in intense opposition to all sinful cravings. A soul that is born again does everything, from sweeping a room to preaching the Gospel, from cleaning streets to governing a nation, for the glory of God. This second power of the soul enables it to stretch beyond itself; the whole mainspring of the soul's life is altered.

2. Expansion

(c) Third Power. Self-Living

I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth His life for the sheep. (John 10:11)

And the LORD said unto Satan, Behold, he is in thine hand; but save his life. (Job 2:6)

These passages refer to the one power in a man that neither God nor the devil can touch without the man's sanction. The devil has power up to a certain point, but he cannot touch a man's life, and whenever Jesus Christ presents the Gospel of God to a soul, it is always on the line of "Are you willing?" There is never any coercion. God has so constituted us that there must be a free willingness on our part. This power is at once the most fearful and the most glorious power. A human soul can withstand the devil successfully, and it can also withstand God successfully. This selfliving power is the essence of the human spirit, which is as immortal as God's Spirit and as indestructible; whether the human spirit be good or bad, it is as immortal as God. This power of the soul enables it to put itself on a par with God; this is the very essence of Satan. The power that can make a man either a compeer of the Lord or a compeer of the devil is the most terrible power of the soul. Jesus Christ is referring to this power when He says, "I lay down My life. . . . No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself."

When the soul is born again and lifted into the domain our Lord lives in, this power shows itself in opposition to sinful passionateness. Passionateness means something that carries everything before it. The prince of this world is intense, and the Spirit of God is intense. When Paul talks about the flesh and the Spirit working in a man's soul, he expresses the intensity by using the word "lust." The Spirit lusts, passionately desires the whole life for God; and the mind of the flesh lusts, passionately longs, for the whole life back again in the service of the world. In the spiritual realm passionateness also means something that overcomes every obstacle. When the writer to the Hebrews talks about perfection, he means this overwhelming passion which carries a soul right on to all God has for it. "Be filled with the Spirit," this is the key word of life. The Bible indicates that we overcome the world not by passionlessness, not by the patience of exhaustion, but by passion, the passion of an intense and all-consuming love for God. This is the characteristic in a born-again soul—opposition to every sinful passionateness. Do insist in your own mind that God does not work in vague, gentle impressions in a human soul, but in violent oppositions which rend and tear the soul, making it, instead of a place of harmonious happiness, exactly the opposite for a season. This experience is true in every soul that is going on with God. When we are first introduced to the life of God there is violent opposition to everything that used to be prevalent, and that it is so is not a mistake, it is what God intends, because there is the force of a totally new life.

(d) Fourth Power. Spirit-Penetrated

With my soul have I desired Thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek Thee early. (Isaiah 26:9; see also Jude 19)

We mean by "Spirit-Penetrated" the spiritual power in man which struggles to express itself in soul. The spirit of man in an unregenerate nature is the power of mind not energised by the Holy Spirit which has no "life in itself." It proves utterly futile in lifting the body, and produces a great divorce between the ideal and the real. Every kind of intellectual excellence is a snare of Satan unless the spirit of the man has been renewed by the incoming of the Spirit of God. A man's intellect may give him noble ideas and power to express them through his soul in language but it does not give him power to carry them into action. The charge of idolatry is very apt here. We are apt to ridicule, or pass over with a smile, the descriptions given of idolatry in, say, the Book of Isaiah, where the writer refers to a tree being taken and one part of it used to cook the man's food and the other part carved into an idol before which the man bows and worships; yet this is exactly what men do with their ideas. The intellect forms ideas for guiding a man's physical life, and then takes other ideas and worships them as God, and if a man has made his own ideas his god, he is greater than his own god. This is not such a terrible power, perhaps, as the self-living power of the soul, but it is a power that will work havoc unless the soul is right with God. It is the power that produces internal hypocrisy, the power that makes me able to think good thoughts while I live a bad life, unconvicted.

How does this power show itself in those who are born again of the Spirit of God? This power shows itself in opposition to secularity. Take your own experience, those of you who are spiritual—spiritual in the Bible sense, identified with the Lord Jesus Christ in a practical way—you cannot make a distinction now between secular and sacred, it is all sacred; but in the first realisation of this power the line is drawn clearly and strongly between what is called secular and what is called sacred. In the life of Jesus Christ there was no division into secular and sacred, but with us when this power begins to be realised it always manifests itself in a line of cleavage. There are certain things we won't do; certain things we won't look at; certain things we won't eat; certain hours we won't sleep. It is not wrong, it is the Spirit of God in a soul beginning to utilise the powers of the soul for God; and as the soul goes on it comes to a full-orbed condition, where it manifests itself as in the life of the Lord Jesus and all is sacred.

If you obey the Spirit of God and practise in your physical life all that God has put in your heart by His Spirit, when the crisis comes you will find your nature will stand by you. So many people misunderstand why they fall. It comes from this idea, "Now I have received the grace of God, I am all right." Paul says he did not "frustrate the grace of God," i.e., receive it in vain. If we do not go on practising day by day and week by week, working out what God has worked in, when a crisis comes God's grace is there right enough, but our nature is not. Our nature has not been brought into line by practise and consequently does not stand by us, and down we go and then we blame God. We must bring our bodily life into line by practise day by day, hour by hour, moment by moment, then when the crisis comes we shall find not only God's grace but our own nature will stand by us, and the crisis will pass without any disaster at all, but exactly the opposite will happen, the soul will be built up into a stronger attitude towards God.

3. Rotation

(e) Fifth Power. Stirred Sensually or Spiritually Also thou shalt not oppress a stranger: for ye know the heart of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt. (Exodus 23:9)

Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul. (1 Peter 2:11)

Remember that the soul is manifested as the spirit struggles to make itself expressed. Exodus 23:1–9 is a magnificent passage; it is intensely, movingly practical in every detail, and there this power of the soul is clearly recognisable. It fits itself on with the second power, viz., the power we have to deceive everybody else, to do cunning things, to defraud, to utilise other people for our own ends; and the warning is, be careful not to be stirred in your soul by the wrong spirit. If the soul can be stirred by its own cunning, the cunning of a man's own inner nature, it can be stirred by vileness and abominable sensuality through the senses (1 Peter 2:11).

How does this power show itself in a regenerate soul? It shows itself in opposition to worldly bondage. You will find in your own experience, and in all recorded experiences, that when the life is going on along God's line, God puts the fear of you on those who are on the outside because of the scorn you have of worldly bondages. The Spirit of God in you will not allow you to bow your neck to any yoke but the yoke of the Lord Jesus Christ. When you stand on this platform of God's grace, you see instantly that the bondage is in the world. The etiquette and standards of the world are an absolute bondage, and those who live in them are abject slaves, and yet the extraordinary thing is that when a worldly person sees anyone emancipated and under the yoke of the Lord Jesus Christ, he says they are in bondage, whereas exactly the opposite is true. True liberty exists only when the soul has this holy scorn in it, "I will bow my neck to no yoke but the yoke of the Lord Jesus Christ." Our Lord was meek to all that His Father did, but intolerant to all the devil did; He would not suffer compromise with the devil in any shape or form. This power of the soul, then, when the soul is born again, manifests itself in opposition to all worldly bondage.

(f) Sixth Power. Speaking the Spirit's Thoughts Thou shalt be over my house, and according unto thy word shall all my people be ruled: only in the throne will I be greater than thou. (Genesis 41:40)

We are now dealing with Rotation, the restlessness of becoming. That is how all these powers are going to manifest themselves in a fully matured soul. Genesis 41:40 is a picture of a soul right with God; but remember there is a corresponding picture. A man in whom all the powers of the soul are developing will come to a place where he shows literally, not only with his mouth, but with his eyes and every power of his body, who is on the throne of his life. If it is the prince of this world, the man is prime minister of his own body under the devil. When the full powers of the soul are developed I am obliged to carry out the behests of the ruling monarch.

How does this power show itself when a soul is born again of the Spirit of God? It shows itself in opposition to worldly thoughts and customs. "Only in the throne will I be greater than thou." Take Pharaoh as a picture of Jesus Christ; the soul that is born again and is going on with God, who has been identified with Jesus Christ in practical sanctification and has the full powers of the soul developed and manifested, that soul is prime minister of his own body under Jesus Christ's dominion. That is the ideal, and it is not an ideal only, but an ideal which Jesus Christ expects us to carry out—all the powers of the soul working through the body in an express personality, revealing the Ruler to be the Lord Jesus Christ.

(g) Seventh Power. Sum Total in Unity

As the LORD liveth, that made us this soul, I will not put thee to death, neither will I give thee into the hand of these men that seek thy life. (Jeremiah 38:16)

The sum total is a perfect unity of badness or a perfect unity of goodness. "All the souls that came with Jacob into Egypt . . ." (Genesis 46:26 RV). The word "soul" there refers to the full maturity of the powers manifested in the bodily life. This is the description of a full-grown man, whether he is a bad man or a good man, and when a soul gets into full maturity of expression, the chances are he will never alter. In Jeremiah 38:16, soul is mentioned in the same way. This is not the soul in its beginnings, in its chaotic state; but the soul absolutely mastered by the ruling spirit and expressing itself through the body.

How does this perfection of soul life show itself in a born-again man who is living the life God wants him to live? It shows itself in opposition to all other powers, and manifests itself in its bodily life in "the wisdom that is from above." It is literally the uncrushable loveliness of a soul manifesting God's rule, all its powers now in harmony. This is not in Heaven, but on earth. It is not mental perfection, nor bodily perfection: it is the perfection of a soul's attitude when all its powers are under the control of the Spirit of God. All the "corners" have been chipped away; all the extreme swinging of the pendulum has been regulated; all the chaotic turmoil has become ordered, and the life is now manifesting the life of the Lord Jesus in its mortal flesh.

By way of revision, we find that these powers of the soul show themselves in every one of us more or less. For instance, we would never think of judging a boy or girl by the same standard of judgement we would pass on them when they are mature, because a boy or a girl is not in full grip of a character; but when once a soul is matured, the character which is manifested meets with severe judgement. There is no excuse to be made for it now; all its powers are consolidated and the wrong it does is not the wrong of an impulse, it is the wrong of a dead set. When the soul is consolidated and is right with God, the whole character manifests something which bears a strong family likeness to Jesus Christ. There is, however, a chaotic period in Christian experience. Read the Apostle Paul's earnest, almost motherlike, solicitation over his young converts; he almost seems to "croon" over them, to use an old Scotch word, to agonise in heart over them, because of the chaotic state of their souls. Jesus Christ commissioned Peter, and the other disciples through him to "feed My lambs."

Chapter VII

SOUL: THE ESSENCE, EXISTENCE AND EXPRESSION

Fleshly Presentation of the Soul

- 1. In Embryo
 - (a) Before Consciousness (Psalm 139:15; Hosea 12:3; Genesis 25:22; Luke 1:41)
 - (b) Breath Consciousness (Genesis 2:7; Isaiah 2:22)
 - (c) Blood Circulation (Genesis 9:4; Leviticus 17:10–14)
- 2. In Evolution
 - (d) "Hub" of Life (Proverbs 4:23)
 - (e) "Hubbub" of Life
 - (1) Sense of Sight (Psalm 119:37)
 - (2) Sense of Hearing (Job 12:11)
 - (3) Sense of Taste (Psalm 119:103)
 - (4) Sense of Smell (Genesis 8:21; 2 Corinthians 2:14–16)
 - (5) Sense of Touch (Acts 17:27; 1 John 1:1)
- 3. In Expression
 - (f) Hilarity of Life (Ecclesiastes 11:9; Luke 6:45)
 - (g) Himself (Judges 8:18; Luke 2:40, 52; Ephesians 4:13)

By the word "fleshly" we do not mean what the Apostle Paul meant when he uses the word in his Epistles; we are using the word to denote this natural body. Paul's use of the word, unless prefaced with "mortal," means a disposition of mind.

The subject is divided under three headings: in Embryo, in Evolution, and in Expression. In Embryo means in the beginning; Evolution means growth, the growth of the human soul. Evolution is a fact both scientific and scriptural, that is, if we mean by Evolution that there is growth in every species; but not growth from one species into another. There is growth in a plant, in an animal and in a man; and that is the only way in which we use the word. The last division simply means the Expression of the soul in and through the body.

1. In Embryo

(a) Before Consciousness

And it came to pass, that, when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the babe leaped in her womb; and Elisabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost. (Luke 1:41; see also Genesis 25:22; Hosea 12:3)

In the very beginning of human life, body, soul and spirit are together. "My substance was not hid from Thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth" (Psalm 139:15). Modern tendencies of thought which are working great havoc indicate that a child has not a soul until it is born into this world. The Bible says that body, soul and spirit develop together. This may not appear to the majority of us as being of any importance, but it will do so when we come in contact with the views that are abroad to-day, even amongst some who call themselves Christian teachers, but who are really wolves among the sheep and whose teaching comes from the bottomless pit.

(b) Breath Consciousness

And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. (Genesis 2:7; see also Isaiah 2:22)

In a multitude of verses in the Bible, the soul life and the breath of the body are identified. The Bible teaches that it is not the body that breathes, but the soul. The body did not breathe in the beginning before God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life; so as far as conscious soul life is concerned, it depends on our breathing. All through God's Book the soul life is connected with the breathing; in fact, it is incorporated into our idea of life that when breath is suspended, life is gone. "The soul is departed" is the popular phrase.

(c) Blood Circulation

But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat. (Genesis 9:4; see also Leviticus 17:10–14)

In the Bible the soul is connected and identified with breath and blood—two fleshly, physical things. In Genesis 9:4 blood and soul are alternate terms, they are identified completely, and the verses in God's Book that prove this are innumerable. When the blood is spilt, the soul is gone; when the breath is taken, the soul is gone. The whole life of a man consists physically in his breath and in his blood. The soul in working itself into the blood never fails to impart to it the peculiar character of its own life. This psychologically is brought out very clearly by our Lord's statement in John 6:53, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink His blood, ve have no life in you." An unobvious revelation is that when I eat and drink and discern the Lord's body, or, in other words, receive my food and drink from Him, the physical nourishment thus derived enables my Lord to manifest Himself in my flesh and blood. If I do not discern the Lord's body, and do not receive my food from Him, my physical nourishment will humiliate Him in me. The ruling disposition of the soul shows itself in the blood, the physical blood. In every language, good blood and bad blood is referred to; merciful blood and tender blood, hot or cold blood, and this is based on scriptural teaching. Jesus Christ insists on the fact that if we are His disciples it will be revealed in the blood, i.e., the physical life. The old soul tyranny and disposition, the old selfish determination to seek our own ends, manifests itself in our body, through our blood; and when that disposition of soul is altered, the alteration shows itself at once in the blood also. Instead of the old tempers and the old passions being manifested in our physical blood, the good temper reveals itself. It never does to remove Jesus Christ's spiritual teaching into the domain of the inane and vague, it must come right down where the devil works; and just as the devil works not in vague ways but through flesh and blood, so does the Lord, and the characteristics of the soul for better or worse are shown in the blood.

The first fundamental reference in the verse, "And without shedding of blood is no remission" of sins, is unquestionably to our Lord's Atonement; and yet there is a direct reference to ourselves. Do we begin to know what the Bible means by "the blood of Jesus Christ"? Blood and life are inseparable. In the Bible the experiences of salvation and sanctification are never separated as we separate them; they are separable in experience, but when God's Book speaks of being "in Christ" it is always in terms of entire sanctification. We are apt to look upon the blood of Christ as a kind of magic-working thing, instead of an impartation of His very life. The whole purpose of being born again and being identified with the death of the Lord Jesus is that His blood may flow through our mortal body; then the tempers and the affections and the dispositions which were manifested in the life of the Lord will be manifested in us in some degree. Our present-day "wise talk" is to push all the teaching of Jesus Christ into a remote domain, but the New Testament drives its teaching straight down to the essential necessity of the physical expression of spiritual life; that just as the bad soul life shows itself in the body, so the good soul life will show itself there too. There are two sides to the Atonement—it is not only the life of Christ for me but His life in me for my life; no Christ for me if I do not have Christ in me. All through there is to be this strenuous, glorious practising in our bodily life of the changes which God has wrought in our soul through His Spirit, and the only proof that we are in earnest is that we work out what God works in. As we apply this truth to ourselves, we shall find in practical experience that God does alter passions and nerves and tempers. God alters every physical thing in a human being so that these bodies can be used now as slaves to the new disposition. We can make our eyes, and ears, and every one of our bodily organs express as slaves the altered disposition of our soul. Remember, then, that blood is the manifestation of the soul life, and that all through the Bible God applies moral characteristics to the blood. The expressions "innocent blood," and guilty blood, have reference to the soul, and the soul life must show itself in the physical connection.

2. In Evolution

(d) Hub of Life

Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life. (Proverbs 4:23)

"Hub" literally means the centre of a wheel, and the word is used here to indicate the centre of the soul life, of the personal life and the spirit life. This will be dealt with more fully when we come to the chapters on "Heart." The Bible places in the heart everything that the modern psychologist places in the head.

(e) Hubbub of Life

By "hubbub" we mean exactly what the word implies, a tremendous confusion. The confusion in the soul life is brought about by the exercise of our senses. "In the Bible, psychological terms are not merely metaphors, but reflect the organic condition of the soul." The body makes itself inward by means of the soul, and the spirit makes itself outward by means of the soul. The soul is the binder of these two together. There is not one part of the human body left out in God's Book; every part is dealt with and made to have a direct connection either with sin or with holiness. It is not accidental but part of the Divine revelation. The five senses do not seem to the majority of us to have any spiritual meaning, but in the Bible they have. In the Bible the senses are dealt with in anything but a slight manner; they are dealt with as being expressions of the soul life. The Bible reveals that every part of man's physical life is closely connected with sin or with salvation, and that anything that sin has put wrong, Jesus Christ can put right. We are dealing with soul as it expresses itself through the body. The organs of the body are used as indicators of the state of the spiritual life. We mentioned previously in connection with breathing, that the internal part of a man's being is affected by his spiritual relationships. If his spiritual connections are not right with God, his bodily condition will, sooner or later, manifest the disorganisation. This is proved over and over again in the case of mental diseases. In most insane persons a bodily organ is seriously affected, and the old method of dealing with insanity was to try and get that organ healed. The modern method is simply to leave the organ alone and concentrate on the brain. When the mind is right, the disease in the organ disappears.

(1) Sense of Sight

Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity; and quicken Thou me in Thy way. (Psalm 119:37)

How am I going to have my eyes kept from beholding vanity? By having the disposition of my soul altered. God controls the whole thing, and you will find that you can control it too when once He has given you a start. That is the marvellous impetus of the salvation of Jesus Christ. Our eyes record to the brain what they look at, but our disposition makes our eyes look at what it wants them to look at, and they will soon pay no attention to anything else. When the disposition is right, the eyes, literally the body, may be placed wherever you like and the disposition will guard what it records. This is not a figure of speech; it is a literal experience. God does alter the desire to look at the things we used to look at; and we find our eyes are guarded because He has altered the disposition of our soul life.

(2) Sense of Hearing

Doth not the ear try words? (Job 12:11)

Jesus Christ continually referred to hearing: "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." We say that He means the ears of our heart, but that is very misleading. He means our physical ears which are trained to hear by the disposition of our soul life. God spoke to Jesus once and the people said it thundered, Jesus did not think it thundered; His ears were trained by the disposition of His soul to know His Father's voice (see John 12:28–30). We can elaborate this thought endlessly all through God's Book. I will always hear what I listen for, and the ruling disposition of the soul determines what I listen for, just as the ruling disposition either keeps the eyes from beholding vanity or makes them behold nothing else. When Jesus Christ alters our disposition, He gives us the power to hear as He hears. A telegraph operator does not hear the ticking of the machine, his ears are trained to detect the message; we detect only the jingle and tapping of the machine and can make nothing of it. You hear people say, "Thank God, I heard His voice!" How did they hear it? The disposition of the soul enabled the ears to hear something which the soul interpreted at once. It is always true that we only hear what we want to hear, and we shout the other sounds down by controversy and dispute. "Who hath believed our report?"—literally, "that which we have heard"—"and to whom hath the arm of the LORD been revealed?" (Isaiah 53:1 RV). We have either a disposition of soul that can discern the arm of the Lord, or we are just like the beasts of the field who take things as they come and see nothing in them. "I was as a beast before Thee," said the Psalmist—without any spiritual intelligence. The disposition of my soul determines what I see, and the disposition of my soul determines what I hear.

(3) Sense of Taste

How sweet are Thy words unto my taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth! (Psalm 119:103)

We are getting more and more remote and more difficult to understand from the ordinary, unspiritual standpoint. We have entirely divorced tasting and smelling, seeing and hearing and touching, from spiritual conditions, because the majority of Christian workers have never been trained in what the Bible has to say about ourselves. It can be proved over and over again, not only in personal experience, but all through God's Book, that He does alter the taste, not merely mental tastes, but physical tastes, the taste for food and drink; but there is something far more practical even than that, the blessing of God on our soul life gives us an added sensitiveness of soul akin to taste or to sight or healing.

(4) Sense of Smell

And the LORD smelled a sweet savour; and the LORD said in His heart, I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake... (Genesis 8:21; see also 2 Corinthians 2:14–16)

The Bible has a great deal to say about the sense of smell, and yet it is the one sense we make nothing of. This sense to the majority of us has only one meaning, viz., an olfactory nerve that makes us conscious of pleasant things or of exactly the opposite; but the Bible deals with the sense of smell in another way. Read the following quotation from a book written by Helen Keller, entitled The World I Live In, the chapter is entitled, "Smell, the Fallen Angel." Remember, Helen Keller writes as one who can neither see nor hear nor speak.

For some inexplicable reason the sense of smell does not hold the high position it deserves among its sisters. There is something of the fallen angel about it. When it woos us with woodland scents and beguiles us with the fragrance of lovely gardens, it is admitted frankly to our discourse. But when it gives us warning of something noxious in our vicinity, it is treated as if the demon had the upper hand of the angel, and is relegated to outer darkness, punished for its faithful service. It is most difficult to keep the true significance of words when one discusses the prejudices of mankind and I find it hard to give an account of odour perceptions which shall at once be dignified and truthful.

In my experience. smell is most important, and I find that there is high authority for the nobility of the sense which we have neglected and disparaged. It is recorded that the Lord commanded that incense be burnt before Him continually with a sweet savour. I doubt if there is any sensation arising from sight more delightful than the odours which filter through sun-warmed, wind-tossed branches, or the tide of scents which swells, subsides, and rises again wave on wave, filling the wide world with invisible sweetness. A whiff of the universe makes us dream of worlds we have never seen, recalls in a flash entire epochs of our dearest experiences. I never smell daisies without living over again the ecstatic mornings that my teacher and I spent wandering in the fields, while I learned new words and the names of things. Smell is a potent wizard that transports us across a thousand miles and all the years we have lived. The odour of fruits wafts me to my Southern home, to my childish frolics in the peach orchard. Other odours, instantaneous and fleeting, cause my heart to dilate joyously or contract with remembered grief. Even as I think of smells, my nose is full of scents that start awake sweet memories of summers gone and ripening grain-fields far away.

In Helen Keller the sense of smell takes the place of sight. This is a case which brings the Bible idea more home to us. Let this subject be revised in our Bible study, and let us see whether we are not treating whole tracts of our sense-life indifferently, not understanding that we can develop and cultivate our eyes, and nose, and mouth, and ears, and every organ of the body to manifest the disposition which Jesus Christ has put into us. Every sense that has been disorganised can be reorganised; not only the senses that we are dealing with, but other senses, every one of them, is mentioned in God's Book and is regulated either by the Spirit of God or by the spirit of Satan. When Paul refers to lust he never places it in the body, but in the disposition of the soul. "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof." Jesus Christ had a fleshly body as we have, but He was never tempted by lust, because lust resides in the ruling disposition, not in the body. When God changes the ruling disposition, the same body that was used as the instrument of sin to work all manner of uncleanness and unrighteousness, can now be used as the slave of the new disposition. It is not a different body; it is the same body, with a new disposition.

(5) Sense of Touch

That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after Him, and find Him, though He be not far from every one of us. (Acts 17:27)

That which . . . our hands have handled, of the Word of life. (1 John 1:1)

These passages refer not to mental feeling, but to real, downright, bodily feeling. The disciples had "felt" God Incarnate in Jesus Christ. This is where the issue is so strong between New Testament teaching and the Unitarian teaching. God does not ignore feeling and the sense of touch; He elevates them. The first effort of the soul towards bringing the body into harmony with the new disposition is an effort of faith. The soul has not yet got the body under way, therefore in the meanwhile feeling has to be discounted. When the new disposition enters the soul, the first steps have to be taken in the dark, without feeling; but immediately the soul has gained control, all bodily organs are brought into physical harmony with the ruling disposition.

3. In Expression (f) Hilarity of Life

Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou, that for all these things God wilt bring thee into judgement. (Ecclesiastes 11:9)

For out of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh. (Luke 6:45)

These passages refer to the physical hilarity of life. Remember, a bad man whose life is wrong has a hilariously happy time, and a good man whose life is right has a hilarious time. All in between are more or less diseased and sick, there is something wrong somewhere: the healthy pagan and the healthy saint are the only ones who are hilarious. The New Testament writers, especially the Apostle Paul, are intense on the hilarity of life. Enthusiasm is the idea, intoxicated with the life of God. Watch nature—if men do not get thrilled in the right way, they will get thrilled in the wrong way. If they are not thrilled by the Spirit of God, they will try to get thrilled with strong drink. "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess," says Paul, "but be filled with the Spirit." We have no business to be half-dead spiritually, to hang like clogs on God's plan; we have no business to be sickly, unless it is a preparatory stage for something better, or God is nursing us through some spiritual illness: but if it is the main characteristic of the life, there is something wrong somewhere. Psalm 73 describes the bad man as having all that heart can desire; this is the expression of soul satisfaction without God. When Solomon says that to fear the Lord shall be "marrow to thy bones" (Proverbs 3:8), he is talking about the physical bones which are affected amazingly by the condition of the soul life. In Luke 11 our Lord gives a description of the bad man: "When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace," i.e., when Satan, the prince of this world, guards this world, his goods the souls of men—are in peace; they are quite happy, hilarious and full of life. One of the most misleading statements is that worldlings have not a happy time; they have a thoroughly happy time. The point is that their happiness is on the wrong level, and when they come across Jesus Christ, Who is the enemy of all that happiness, they experience annoyance. People must be persuaded that Jesus Christ has a higher type of life for them, otherwise they feel they had better not have come across Him. When a worldly person who is happy, moral and upright comes in contact with Jesus Christ, Who came to destroy all that happiness and peace and put it on a different level, he has to be persuaded that Jesus Christ is a Being worthy to do this, and instead of the Gospel being attractive at first, it is the opposite. When the Gospel is presented to an unsaved, healthy, happy, hilarious person, there is violent opposition straight away. The gospel of Jesus Christ does not present what men want, it presents exactly what they need. As long as you talk about being happy and peaceful, men like to listen to you; but talk about having the disposition of the soul altered, and that the garden of the soul has first of all to be turned into a wilderness and afterwards into a garden of the Lord, and you will find opposition right away.

(g) Himself

We mean by "himself," not God, but man.

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. (Ephesians 4:13; see also Judges 8:18; Luke 2:40, 52)

In these passages we have a description splendidly given of a full-orbed man. A full-orbed bad man or woman (bad in God's sight) is a wonderful being to look at and a full-orbed man or woman who is right with God is also a wonderful being to look at. The rest of us are simply beings in the making. There is a tremendous fascination about a completely "bad" man; there is nothing more desirable from the standpoint of this world than a thoroughly well-trained bad man or woman, but they are the opponents of Jesus Christ, they hate Him with every power of the soul; I mean the Jesus Christ of the New Testament.

God grant that the ruling disposition of our souls may be so altered that we work out the alteration practically. If we have come into experimental touch with the grace of God and have received His Spirit, are we working it out? Is every organ of our body enslaved to the new disposition? or are we using our eyes for what we want to see, and our bodies for our right to ourselves? If so, we have received the grace of God in vain. God grant that we may determine to work out through our bodies the life which Jesus Christ has put into us by His Spirit.

Chapter VIII

SOUL: THE ESSENCE, EXISTENCE AND EXPRESSION

Past, Present and Future of the Soul

1. Pre-Existence

- (a) Spurious Speculations (Deuteronomy 29:29; Revelation 5:3)
- (b) Startling Scriptures (Jeremiah 1:5; Malachi 3:1; Romans 9:11–13; Luke 1:41)
- (c) Steadying Scriptures
 - (1) No Soul before Body (Genesis 1–2)
 - (2) No Soul Destiny Pre-Adamic (Romans 5:12)
 - (3) No Soul but by Pro-Creation (Genesis 5)

N.B.—Note the pre-existence of Our Lord Jesus Christ. John 17:5.

2. Present Existence

- (a) Satisfaction of the Soul (Psalm 66:8–9, 12, 16, Isaiah 55:3)
- (b) Sins and Surroundings of the Soul (Proverbs 18:7; Psalm 6; Ezekiel 18:4; 1 Peter 1:9)
- (c) Supernatural Setting for the Soul (Luke 9:54–56; Ephesians 6:12; 1 Corinthians 10:20–21)

N.B. Spiritualism is the great Soul CRIME. SICKNESS, NATURAL AND DEMONIACAL, WILL BE EXAMINED.

3. Perpetual Existence

- (a) Mortal Aspect of the Soul (Job 14:2; James 4:14
- (b) Immortal Aspect of the Soul (Luke 16:19, 31; 23:43)
- (c) Eternal Life and Eternal Death of the Soul (Matthew 10:28; Romans 5:21; 6:23)

In concluding our general survey of this great theme of the Soul, we purpose to sketch in outline the Past, Present and Future state of the soul.

1. Pre-Existence

—i.e. the speculation that souls existed in a former world.

(a) Spurious Speculations

The student cannot be too careful about these speculations. There is no book which lends itself more readily to speculation than the Bible, and yet all through the Bible warns against it. By speculation we mean taking a series of facts and weaving all kinds of fancies round them. In Deuteronomy 29:29 ("The secret things belong unto the LORD our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever . . . "), and Revelation 5:3 ("And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon"), the bounds of human knowledge with regard to Bible revelation are fairly well marked. What is revealed in God's Book is for us; what is not revealed is not for us. Speculation is searching into what is not revealed. The subject of pre-existence as it is popularly taught is not revealed in God's Book; it is a speculation based on certain things said in God's Book. Theosophy lends itself largely to speculation, and all theosophic and occult speculations are ultimately dangerous to the mental, moral and spiritual balance. Speculate if you care to, but never teach any speculation as a revelation from the Bible.

Speculation comes right down to our lives in very enticing ways. Telepathy is one enticing way in which the speculation of transmigration and pre-existence is introduced to our minds. Telepathy means being able to discern someone else's thought by my own. This opens up the line of auto-suggestion. If one man can suggest thoughts to another man, then Satan can do the same, and the consciousness of auto-suggestion on the human side opens the mind to it diabolically. Telepathy is mentioned because all these occult things come down to our lives in seemingly harmless phases. For instance, spiritualism comes by way of palmistry, reading fortunes in tea-cups or in cards, by planchette, and so on, and people say there is no harm in any of these things. There is all the harm and the "backing up" of the devil in them. Nothing awakens curiosity more quickly than reading fortunes in tea-cups or by cards. The same is true of all theosophic speculations, they come right down to our lives on the line of things which is wrongly called "psychology" and awaken an insatiable curiosity.

It has already been stated that the Bible does not teach pre-existence and yet we have-

(b) Some Startling Scriptures

-which appear to contradict that statement (Jeremiah 1:5; Romans 9:11-13; Luke 1:41).

We have called these startling Scriptures for the obvious reason that they look as if the Bible did teach pre-existence. There is, however, what may be termed a false and a true idea of pre-existence. The false idea of pre-existence is that we existed as human beings before we came into this world; the true idea is pre-existence in the mind of God. It is not an easy subject to state, but it is one which is revealed in Scripture, viz., the pre-existence in the mind of God not only with regard to the great fact of the human race, but with regard to individual lives. Individual lives are the expression of a pre-existing idea in the mind of God; this is the true idea of preexistence. Call it ideal, or call it what you like, but it is revealed in God's Book. In the few passages given, and in a great many more, the idea of pre-existence in the Divine mind is clearly revealed.

There is one other thing in regard to individual spiritual experience, viz., that our individual lives can be, and ought to be, manifest answers to the ideas in God's mind. "Man's goings are of the LORD; how can a man then understand his own way?" (Proverbs 20:24). This gives a lofty dignity as well as a great carefulness to human lives. The expression of it in the life of our Lord is becoming familiar to us, viz., that He never worked from His right to Himself; He never performed a miracle because He wanted to express how able He was; He never spoke in order to show how wonderful was His insight into God's truth. He said, "The Son can do nothing of Himself." He always worked from His Father (see John 14:10).

There are racial memories which obtrude themselves into our consciousness whereby a person may be distinctly conscious of a form of life he never lived, it may be a form of life centuries past. The explanation of this does not lie in the fact that that particular individual lived centuries ago, but that his progenitors did, and there are traces in his nerve substance which by one of the incalculable tricks of individual experience may suddenly emerge into consciousness.

(c) The Steadying Scriptures

By this we mean those Scriptures which hold our minds to some steady line of interpretation.

(1) No Soul before Body (Genesis 1–2)

In the creation of man the Bible reveals that his body was created first, not his soul. The body existed before the soul in creation; so we cannot trace the history or the destiny of the human soul before the creation of the human race. This is the first main general line of revelation. We have in Genesis 1:26 a splendid example of true pre-existence. God deliberately said what was in His mind before He created man—"Let Us make man in Our image, after Our likeness"—the pre-existence of man in the mind of God.

(2) No Soul Destiny Pre-Adamic

Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. (Romans 5:12)

Soul destiny began with the human race, not before it. Take any passage which deals with individual destiny—Ezekiel 18, for instance—and you will find that destiny is determined in the lifetime of the individual soul. All speculations regarding the transmigration of soul are alien to the teaching of the Bible.

(3) No Soul but by Pro-Creation

We are not created directly by the hand of the Almighty as Adam was; we are pro-created, generated, and our spirit, soul and body, all come together in embryo, as related elsewhere.

The pre-existence of our Lord. "And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was" (John 17:5). This pre-existence is quite different from the phase of pre-existence previously mentioned. This is the existence of a Being Who was known before He came here, and the reason of His coming here is explained by what He was before He came. This is the only case of the pre-existence of a Person in a former life. The Bible nowhere teaches that individuals existed in a world before they came here; the only pre-existence is in the Divine mind.

2. Present Existence

Now we come down to simple ground where we are at home. In the last chapter we dealt with something of the nature of the complex characteristics of the soul, more perplexing and whirling and confusing the more we think of them. When we begin to think of the possibilities of the human soul, no clear thought is possible at first. We come now to the possibilities and capacities of the soul. Can these be satisfied here and now? The Bible says they can. The claim of the salvation of Jesus Christ is that the Spirit of God can satisfy the last aching abyss of the human soul, not only hereafter, but here and now. Satisfaction does not mean stagnation; satisfaction is the knowledge that we have gained the right type of life for our souls.

(a) Satisfaction of the Soul

O bless our God, ye people, . . . [Who] holdeth our soul in life, and suffereth not our feet to be moved. (Psalm 66:8–9; see also Psalm 66:12, 16; Isaiah 55:3)

These are indications from innumerable passages in God's Book which prove that this complex soul which we have been examining can be satisfied and placed in perfect harmony with itself and with God in its present existence. The thought that a human soul can fulfil the predestined purpose of God is a great one. The human soul, however, can also be stagnated by ignorance. In the beginning, we do not know the capabilities of our souls and are content to be ignorant; but when we come under conviction of sin, we begin to understand the awful, unfathomable depths of our nature and the claim of Jesus Christ that He can satisfy this abyss. Every man who knows what his soul is capable of, knows its possibilities and terrors, but knows also the salvation of God, will bear equal testimony with the written Word of God that Jesus Christ can satisfy the living soul. Isaiah 55:3 is our Lord's message to the age in which we live—"Incline your ear, and come unto Me: hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David." Bear in mind that the devil does satisfy for a time. "Their eyes stand out with fatness: they have more than heart could wish" (Psalm 73:7). "They have no changes, therefore they fear not God" (Psalm 55:19).

(b) Sins and Surroundings of the Soul

Psalm 6 refers to the surroundings of the soul in bodily sickness and perplexity and the inward results of these. The Psalmist's first degree of prayer is, "Heal me; for my bones are vexed"; the second degree is, Heal me, "for my soul is also sore vexed," and the third degree is, "Save me for Thy mercies' sake." These are three degrees of perplexity arising from the soul's surroundings: because of pain; because the mental outlook is cloudy, and because God has not said a word. When the soul is perplexed—and it certainly will be if we are going on with God, because we are a mark for Satan and the sudden onslaught comes, as it did in the life of Job, we cry, "Heal me because of my pain," but there is no answer. Then we cry, "Heal me, not because I am in pain, but because my soul is perplexed; I cannot see any way out of it or why this thing should be"; still no answer; then at last we cry, "Heal me, O Lord, not because of my pain, nor because my soul is sick, but for Thy mercies' sake." Then we have the answer, "The LORD hath heard my supplication." The surroundings of the soul, the scenes which arise from our doings, do produce perplexity in the soul. The soul cannot be separated from the body, and bodily perplexities produce difficulties in the soul, and these difficulties go inward and at times intrude right to the very throne of God in the heart.

"Behold, all souls are Mine; . . . the soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezekiel 18:4). In this passage the soul life and the sin that is punished are connected. The inherited disposition of sin must be cleansed, but for every sin we commit we are punished. "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls" (1 Peter 1:9). "Salvation" refers to the whole gamut of a man, spirit, soul and body; "Christ the firstfruits," with the ultimate reach in the hereafter of our spirit, soul and body being like His in a totally new relationship. The soul in the present life can be satisfied in all its perplexities, and in all onslaughts and dangers it is kept by the power of God. Sin destroys the power of the soul to know its sin, punishment brings awakening, self-examination brings chastisement and saves the soul from sleeping sickness, and brings it into a healthy satisfaction.

In 1 Corinthians 11:30 ("For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep"), Paul alludes to sickness which has a moral and not a physical source. The immediate connection is the obscene conduct at the Lord's Supper of former heathen converts, and Paul says that that is the cause of their bodily sickness. The truth laid down abides, that certain types of moral disobedience produce sicknesses which physical remedies cannot touch; obedience is the only cure. For instance nothing can touch the sicknesses produced by tampering with spiritualism; there is only one cure—yielding to the Lord Jesus Christ.

(c) The Supernatural Setting for the Soul

... Lord, wilt Thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them? (Luke 9:54)

The disciples knew Jesus Christ well enough to know that He had intimacy with supernatural powers, but they had yet to learn that it is possible to scathe sin and at the same time serve one's self. "But He turned, and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." It is possible to do right in the wrong spirit. These were the very men who a little while afterwards asked that they might sit, "one on Thy right hand, and the other on Thy left hand, in Thy glory"; and one of them (see Acts 8) was sent down by God to Samaria, where he realised what the fire was that God was to send, viz., the fire of the Holy Ghost.

"For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers . . ." (Ephesians 6:12). This has to do not with the bodily side of things, but with the supernatural. We are surrounded immediately by powers and forces which we cannot discern physically.

"... I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils . . ." (1 Corinthians 10:20-21). You can always tell whether Christians are spiritually minded by their attitude to the supernatural. The modern attitude to demon possession is very instructive; so many take the attitude that there is no such thing as demon possession, and infer that Jesus Christ Himself knew quite well that there was no such thing, not seeing that by such an attitude they put themselves in the place of the superior person, and claim to know all the private opinions of the Almighty about iniquity. Jesus unquestionably did believe in the fact of demon possession. The New Testament is full of the supernatural; Jesus Christ continually looked on scenery we do not see, and saw supernatural forces at work. "Try the spirits whether they are of God" (1 John 4:1). The soul of man may be vastly complicated by interference from the supernatural; but Jesus Christ can guard us there.

Sickness, natural and demoniacal. By "natural" sickness we mean that which comes from natural causes, not through the interference of any supernatural force. Demoniacal sickness comes from certain parts of the body being infested by demons. Read the records of our Lord casting out demons. Sometimes He said "Thou dumb and deaf spirit, I charge thee, Come out, " (e.g., Mark 9:25); at other times He said nothing about demons when He healed the deaf and dumb (e.g., Matthew 9:32). In addressing the demon-possessed our Lord frequently mentioned the particular organ affected, but in the case of the man of Gadara, he was possessed by demons not only in a particular organ but through the whole of his body. How much room does thought take up? None! How many thoughts can we have in our brain? Why, countless! How much room does personality take up? None! How many personalities can there be in one body? Take this man of Gadara. "And Jesus asked him, What is thy name? And he said, Legion; for many devils were entered into him" (Luke 8:30 RV).

The case of Judas instances the identification of a human soul with the devil himself; just as a man may become identified with Jesus Christ so he can be identified with the devil. Just as a man can be born again into the kingdom where Jesus Christ lives and moves and has His being and can become identified with Him in entire sanctification, so he can be born again, so to speak, into the devil's kingdom and be entirely consecrated to the devil. "Then entered Satan into him" (John 13:27 RV). "Have not I chosen you twelve," said Jesus, "and one of you is a devil?" (John 6:70). This subject awakens tremendous terrors, but these are facts revealed in God's Book. There are supernatural sicknesses of the body and soul in this present life, but Jesus Christ can deal with them all.

3. Perpetual Existence

(a) Mortal Aspect of the Soul

What is your life? It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. (James 4:14; see also Job 14:2)

By mortal is meant in this order of things only. All through God's Book the soul and man as he appears now is described as mortal in one aspect. The soul is the holder of the body and spirit together, and when the spirit goes back to God Who gave it, the soul disappears. In the resurrection there is another body, a body impossible to describe in words, either a glorified body or a damnation body ("... for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear His voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation" [John 5:28-29]), and instantly the soul is manifested again. We have not a picture of the "resurrection unto damnation"; yet our Lord states that there will be such a thing (see also Luke 16:19–31). We have a picture of the "resurrection unto life" in the resurrected body of our Lord. "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body . . ." (Philippians 3:21).

The soul life, then, is entirely dependent upon the body. The indelible characteristics of the individual are in his spirit: and our Lord, Who is "the firstfruits" (1 Corinthians 15:23), was spirit, soul and body. Therefore resurrection does not refer to spirit, i.e., personality—that never dies, but to body and soul. "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." God raises an incorruptible glorified body like His own Son's—"every man in his own regiment," and Jesus Christ leading. Just as the glorified body of our Lord could materialise during those forty days, so will our body be able to materialise in the day yet to be.

The mortal aspect is strong in the Bible, and the immortal aspect is just as strong. The annihilationists build all their teaching on the mortal aspect; they give proof after proof that because the soul and body are mortal only those who are born again of the Spirit are immortal. The Bible reveals that there is everlasting damnation as well as everlasting life. Nothing can be annihilated. In Scripture the word "destroy" never means "annihilate." In this present bodily aspect the soul is mortal, but in another aspect it is immortal, for God sees the soul in its final connection with spirit in the resurrection. See Luke 16:25–26 ("Son, remember..."), and Luke 23:43 ("And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto Thee, Today shalt thou be with Me in paradise"). Both these passages refer to the state immediately after death, and reveal that man's spirit, i.e., personality, never sleeps and never dies in the sense that body and soul do. The "soulsleep" heresy creeps in here. The Bible nowhere says the soul sleeps; it says that the body sleeps but never the personality; the moment after death, unhindered consciousness is the state.

(c) Eternal Life and Eternal Death of the Soul For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. (Romans 6:23; see also Matthew 10:28; Romans 5:21)

We have no more ground for saying that there is eternal life than we have for saving there is eternal death. If Jesus Christ means by "eternal life," unending conscious knowledge of God, then eternal death must be never-ending conscious separation from God. The destruction of a soul in Hades, or Hell, is the destruction of the last strand of likeness to God. Mark uses a strange phrase: "salted with fire," i.e., preserved in eternal death. In Romans 8:6, Paul tells us what death is—"to be carnally minded is death." The people who say that eternal damnation is not personal but that eternal life is, put themselves in an untenable position. We know no more about the one than we do about the other, and we know nothing about either saving what the Bible tells us. Probably the greatest book on this subject, apart from the Bible, is the one entitled Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death (by Dr. F. W. H. Myers). It was written during the last few years by a great man who tried to prove, not from God's Book, but simply from speculation, that the human soul is immortal, and he ends exactly where he begins, viz., with his intuitions.

All we know about eternal life, about hell and damnation, the Bible alone tells us. If we say that God is unjust because He reveals perennial death and imply that the Bible therefore does not teach it, we put ourselves under the condemnation of those passages (i.e., in the Books of Deuteronomy and in the Revelation) to which we have already referred. These things transcend reason, but they do not contradict Incarnate Reason, our Lord Jesus Christ, and He is the final authority.

All we can have hoped to do in these studies of the human soul is to have suggested lines of research for the Bible student.

Chapter IX

HEART: THE RADICAL REGION OF LIFE

- 1. Centre of Physical Life
 - (a) Lifeless Objects (Deuteronomy 4:11; Matthew 12:40; Jonah 2:3; Ezekiel 26:5; 27:6)
 - (b) Lowest Life Power (Genesis 18:5; Judges 19:5)
 - (c) Life Power (Psalm 38:10; Luke 21:34)
 - (d) Life of the Whole Person (Acts 14:17; James 5:5)
- 2. Centre of Practical Life
 - (a) Emporium (Psalm 5:9; 49:11; 1 Peter 3:4)
 - (b) Export (Mark 7:21; Esther 7:5)
 - (c) Import (Acts 5:3; 16:14; 2 Corinthians 4:6)

N.B.—The relative position of Head and Heart in the Bible and Modern thought will be explained. The head is to the external appearance what the heart is to the internal agency of the soul.

1. Centre of Physical Life

In the Bible the heart, and not the brain, is revealed to be the centre of thinking. For a long time science maintained a steady opposition to the Bible standpoint; but modern psychologists are now slowly coming to find it necessary to revise their previous unbiblical findings in order to explain the facts of conscious life.

The heart is the first thing to live physically, and the Bible puts in the heart all the active factors we have been apt to place in the brain. The head is the exact outward expression of the heart. In the Mystical Body of Christ, Christ is the Head, not the heart. "Christ is the head of the church . . ." (Ephesians 5:23; see also Colossians 2:19; 1 Corinthians 11:3). Then how can people who are not rightly related to God, whose inward disposition has not been changed, be part of that Body, if Christ is the Head, i.e., the true expression of the Body, especially in the centre of its life?

In the Old Testament the head has the prominence of blessing given to it because it is the outward expression of the condition of the heart. "Blessings are upon the head of the just" (Proverbs 10:6; see also Genesis 48:14; 49:26; Leviticus 8:12; Psalm 133:2).

The other passages refer to "the countenance," meaning not only the face and front of the head, but the whole carriage which is an external expression of the person. The countenance becomes the true mirror of the heart, when the heart has had time to manifest its true life. "... Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with Him" (Exodus 34:29). "The shew of their countenance doth witness against them; and they declare their sin as Sodom, they hide it not" (Isaiah 3:9; see also Matthew 17:2; 2 Corinthians 3:13; 1 Samuel 16:7).

The Bible puts the head in the prominent position, not the central position; the head is the "finish off," the manifestation of what the heart is like; the outward expression of the heart, as a tree is the outward expression of the root. This is the relationship between the head and the heart which the Bible reveals.

Materialistic scientists say that "the brain secretes thinking as the liver does bile," they make the brain the centre of thinking. The Bible makes the heart the centre of thinking, and the brain merely the machinery the heart uses to express itself. This point is very vital in our judgement of men. Carlyle, 8 for instance, represents the judgement of men by those who do not accept the Bible standpoint on this matter. He judged men by their brains, and came to the conclusion that the majority of the human race were fools. God never judges men by their brains; He Judges them by their hearts.

The use of the Bible term "heart" is best understood by simply saying "me." The heart is not merely the seat of the affections, it is the centre of everything. The heart is the central altar, and the body is the outer court. What we offer on the altar of the heart will tell ultimately through the extremities of the body.

The heart, then, is the centre of living, the true centre of all vital activities of body and soul and spirit. When the Apostle Paul says "with the heart man believeth" he means by the word "heart" more than we are apt to mean. The Bible always means more than we are apt to mean. The term "heart" in the Bible means the centre of everything. The human soul has the spirit in and above it and the body by and about it; but the vital centre of all is the heart. When we speak of the heart, figuratively or actually, we mean the midmost part of a person. The Bible teaching differs from that of science in that it makes the heart the soul centre and the spirit centre as well.

In dealing with the Bible the danger is to come to it with a preconceived idea, to exploit it, and take out of it only what agrees with that idea. If we try, as has been tried by psychologists, to take out of the Bible something that agrees with modern science, we shall have to omit many things the Bible says about the heart. According to the Bible the heart is the centre: the centre of physical life, the centre of memory, the centre of damnation and of salvation, the centre of God's working and the centre of the devil's working, the centre from which everything works which moulds the human mechanism.

(c) Life Power

These passages are typical of many others where the heart is revealed to be the centre of all life power, physical and otherwise. Anything that makes the heart beat more quickly works towards a higher or lower manifestation of the life; our Lord produces the kind of life that instantly alters the heart life. There are people you come in contact with who "freeze" you, you cannot think, things do not "go," everything feels tight and mean; you come into the zone of other people and all those bands disappear, you are surprised at how clearly you can think, everything seems to "go" better. You take a deep breath and say, "Why, I feel quite different; what has happened?" The one personality brought an atmosphere that froze the heart not only physically, but psychically; kept it cold, kept it down, kept it back; the other personality gave the heart a chance to expand and develop and surge throughout the whole body. Taken in the physical domain, if people knew that the circulation of the blood and quickening of the heart life would remove distempers from the body, there would be a great deal less medicine taken and a great deal more walking done. The heart is the centre of all physical life and of all the imaginations of the mind. Anything that keeps the physical blood in good condition and the heart working properly, benefits the soul life and spirit life as well. That is why Jesus Christ said, "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting. . . . "Whenever Paul mentions certain kinds of sins he calls them idolatry. Covetousness is called idolatry because every drop of blood in the life of a covetous man is drawn away from God spiritually. And so it is by sensuality and drunkenness and vengeance. Vengeance is probably the most tyrannical passion of the carnal mind. The first wonderful thing done by the new life given to us by the Holy Spirit is to loosen the heart, and as we obey the Spirit the manifestation in the life becomes easier. Satan, however, is as subtle as God is good, and he tries to counterfeit everything God does, and if he cannot counterfeit it, he will limit it. Do not be ignorant of his devices!

(d) Life of the Whole Person

Nevertheless He left not Himself without witness, in that He did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness. (Acts 14:17; see also James 5:5)

These passages refer to the power of the heart life. If our hearts are right with God, we realise what is mentioned in Acts 14:17, that everything nourishes and blesses the life. James 5:5 indicates the other side of this truth ("Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter"). We can develop in the heart life whatever we will; there is no limit to the possible growth and development. If we give ourselves over to meanness and to Satan, there is no end to the growth in devilishness; if we give ourselves over openly to God, there is no end to our development and growth in grace. Our Lord has no fear of the consequences when once the heart is open towards Him. No wonder the Bible counsels us to guard our heart "with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life"; Solomon prayed for "an understanding heart," and Paul says that the peace of God will "garrison our hearts."

2. Centre of Practical Life

(a) The Emporium

For there is no faithfulness in their mouth; their inward part is very wickedness. (Psalm 5:9)

The phrase "inward part" is simply another phrase for heart, and in Psalm 49:11 the phrase "inward thought" means heart. "Whose adorning . . . let it be the hidden man of the heart, in the incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price" (1 Peter 3:3–4 RV). The heart is the exchange and mart; our words and expressions are simply the coins we use, but the "shop" resides in the heart, the emporium where all the goods are, and that is what God sees but no man can see. That is why Jesus Christ's judgements always confuse us until we learn how to receive, recognise and rely on the Holy Spirit. The way people judged

Jesus in His day is the way we judge Him to-day. The way the Bible is judged and Jesus Christ is judged is an indication of what the heart is like if we have not received the Holy Spirit. When we receive the Holy Spirit we are in the condition of the disciples after the Resurrection: their eyes were opened and they had the power to discern. Before they received the Holy Spirit they could not perceive correctly, they simply recorded physically; they saw that Jesus Christ was a marvellous Being Whom they believed to be the Messiah; but after they had received the Holy Spirit, they discerned what they had seen and heard and handled, because their hearts had been put right; the whole "shop" inside had been renovated and restocked by the Holy Spirit.

Notice the difference in the characteristics of the man who makes the head the centre and the man who makes the heart the centre. The man who makes the head the centre becomes an intellectual being, he does not estimate things at all as the Bible does. Sin is a mere defect to him, something to be overlooked and grown out of, and the one thing he despises is enthusiasm. Take the Apostle Paul, or any of the New Testament saints, the characteristic of their life is enthusiasm; the heart is first, not second. This is the antipodes of modern intellectual life. Mere intellectuality leads to bloodlessness and passionlessness, to stoicism and unreality. The more merely intellectual a person becomes the more hopelessly useless he is, until he degenerates into a mere criticising faculty, passing the strangest and wildest verdicts on life, on the Bible, and on our Lord.

(b) Export

For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders. . . . (Mark 7:21)

This passage is detestable to an unspiritual person, it is in absolutely bad taste, nine out of every ten people do not believe it because they are grossly ignorant about the heart. In these verses Jesus Christ says, to put it in modern language, "No crime has ever been committed that every human being is not capable of committing." Do I believe that? Do you? If we do not, remember we pass a verdict straight off on the Lord Jesus Christ, we tell Him He does not know what He is talking about. We read that Jesus "knew what was in man," meaning that He knew men's hearts; and the Apostle Paul emphasises the same thing—"Don't glory in man; trust only the grace of God in yourself and in other people." No wonder Jesus Christ pleads with us to give over the keeping of our hearts to Him so that He can fill them with a new life! Every characteristic seen in the life of Jesus Christ becomes possible in our lives when once we hand over our hearts to Him to be filled with the Holy Spirit.

(c) Import

But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost?... (Acts 5:3)

A Pentecostal liar. That is a terrible statement, a statement with a shudder all through it. Such a lie has never been mentioned in this particular profundity before, but it is mentioned here because it is actually possible for the heart to try and deceive the Holy Ghost. "Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God." "Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost?"

Our Lord undertakes to fill the whole region of the heart with light and holiness. "For God, Who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (2 Corinthians 4:6). Can He do it? Do I realise that I need it done? Or do I think I can realise myself? That is the great phrase to-day, and it is growing in popularity—"I must realise myself." (If I want to know what my heart is like, let me listen to my mouth, in an unguarded frame, for five minutes!) Thank God for everyone who has been saved from this perilous path by yielding himself to the Lord Jesus, and asking Him to give him the Holy Spirit and obeying the light He gives!

Chapter X

HEART: THE RADICAL REGION OF LIFE

The Radiator of Personal Life

1. Voluntary

- (a) Determination (Exodus 35:21; Esther 7:5; Ecclesiastes 8:11; 2 Corinthians 9:7; Romans 6:17)
- (b) Design (1 Kings 8:17–18; 10:2; Psalm 21:2; Proverbs 6:18; Isaiah 10:7; Acts 11:23; Romans 10:1)

2. Versatility

- (a) Perception (Deuteronomy 29:4; Proverbs 14:10; Isaiah 32:4; Acts 16:14)
- (b) Meditation (Nehemiah 5:7; Luke 2:19; Isaiah 33:18; Psalm 49:3; Psalm 19:14)

THIS INCLUDES DELIBERATION AND REFLECTION.

- (c) Estimation (Proverbs 16:1, 9; 19:21; Psalm 33:10–11
- (d) Inclination (Deuteronomy 32:46; Joshua 24:23; Deuteronomy 11:18; Proverbs 3:3)

3. Virtues and Vices

- (a) All Degrees of Joy (Isaiah 65:14; 66:5; Acts 2:46)
- (b) All Degrees of Pain (Proverbs 25:20; Psalm 109:22; Acts 21:13; John 16:6)
- (c) All Degrees of Ill-Will (Proverbs 23:17; Deuteronomy 19:6; Acts 7:54; James 3:14)

A radiator is a body that emits rays of light and heat. We have used a purely mechanical term in order to picture what the heart is, viz., the centre that emits rays of light and heat in the physical frame, in the soul, and in the spirit. The heart physically is the centre of the body; the heart sentimentally is the centre of the soul; and the heart spiritually is the centre of the spirit.

By Voluntary we mean acting by choice; choice is made in the heart, not in the head. By Versatility we mean the power to turn easily from one thing to another. By Virtues we mean moral excellencies; by Vices, immoral conduct.

1. Voluntary

The Bible reveals that the power of choice springs from the heart, and there are two things to be looked at, Determination and Design.

(a) Determination

But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. (Romans 6:17; see also Exodus 35:21)

These passages are typical of many which prove that the act of choice is in the heart, not in the brain. Impulse in anyone but a child is dangerous; it is the sign of something unstable and unreliable. Determination means to fix the form of our choice, and God demands that we use this power when we pray. The majority of us waste our time in mere impulses in prayer. There are many verses in God's Book which refer to this power in the heart to choose voluntarily. Impulse is not choice; impulse is very similar to instinct in an animal. It is the characteristic of immaturity and ought not to characterise men and women. In spiritual matters take it as a safe guide never to be guided by impulse; always take time and curb your impulse, bring it back and see what form a choice based on that particular impulse would take.

"Bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ"—that means the harnessing of impulse. We have the power in our hearts to fix the form of our choice either for good or for bad. No wonder the Bible says, "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." We never get credit spiritually for impulsive giving. If suddenly we feel we should give a shilling to a poor man, we get no credit from God for giving it, there is no virtue in it whatever. As a rule, that sort of giving is a relief to our feelings; it is not an indication of a generous character, but rather an indication of a lack of generosity. God never estimates what we give from impulse. We are given credit for what we determine in our hearts to give; for the giving that is governed by a fixed determination. The Spirit of God revolutionises our philanthropic instincts. Much of our philanthropy is simply the impulse to save ourselves an uncomfortable feeling. The Spirit of God alters all that. As saints our attitude towards giving is that we give for Jesus Christ's sake, and from no other motive. God holds us responsible for the way we use this power of voluntary choice.

(b) Design

Design means planning in outline.

Whereas it was in thine heart to build an house unto My name, thou didst well that it was in thine heart. (1 Kings 8:18)

This is a typical instance of the fact that God gives us credit, not for our impulses, but for the designs of our hearts. God may never allow the design to be carried out, but He credits us with it. When we have had a good dinner and feel remarkably generous, we say, "If only I had a thousand pounds, what I would do with it!" We do not get credit for that until what we do with what we have is considered. The proof that the design for the thousand pounds would be worked out is what we do with the twopence-halfpenny¹⁰ we have. David planned in his heart what he would do for God, and although he was not allowed to carry it out, God credited him with having the design in his heart. God deals with the designs of our hearts, either for good or for bad. Character is the whole trend of a man's life, not isolated acts here and there, and God deals with us on the line of character building.

Remember, then, that we have the power to fix the form of our choice. "Delight thyself also in the LORD; and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart." Desire embraces both determination and design. Some people when they read this verse, behave before God as people do over a wishing-bone at a Christmas dinner. They say, "Now I have read this verse, I wonder what shall I wish for?" That is not desire. Desire is what we determine in outline in our minds and plan and settle in our hearts; that is the desire which God will fulfil as we delight ourselves in Him.

2. Versatility

Versatility is the power to turn from one thing to another; in the natural world it is called humour. 11 The power to turn from one thing to another is due to a sense of proportion. A self-righting lifeboat gives the idea. Sin destroyed this power in the people of God. Read Psalm 106: "We have sinned with our fathers." How did they sin? They forgot what God had done in the past, they had no power to turn from their present trying circumstances to the time when their circumstances were not trying, consequently they sinned against God by unbelief. We have the power to turn from deep anguish to deep joy: "O my God, my soul is cast down within me: therefore will I remember Thee. . . . " Some people take on the characteristic of always being merry and think they must always keep up that role. Others take on the role of being great sufferers, and never turn from it.

In the life of our Lord we find the basal balance of this power; look also at Paul's argument in Romans 8:28: "And we know that to them that love God all things work together for good" (RV). We have to take the "all things" when put "together," not in bits. If your circumstances are trying just now, remember the time when they were not trying, and you will be surprised at the self-righting power in the human heart to turn from one thing to another. How much misery a human heart can stand, and how much joy! If we lose the power of turning from one to the other, we upset the balance. God's Spirit restores and keeps the balance right.

... an heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear... (Deuteronomy 29:4; see also Proverbs 14:10)

Perception means the power to discern what we hear and see and read; the power to discern the history of the nation to which we belong, the power to discern in our personal lives. This power is also in the heart. How many of us have the power to "hear with our ears"? Iesus said, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." We must have the power of perception in order to interpret what we hear. Isaiah 53:1 (mg) puts it in this way: "Who hath believed that which we have heard? and to whom hath the arm of the LORD been revealed?" We all see the common occurrences of our daily life, but which of us is able to perceive the arm of the Lord behind them? Who can perceive behind the thunder the voice of God? We read in John 12 that when there came a voice out of heaven, the people that stood by said it thundered; but Jesus recognised His Father's voice. The One had perception, the others had not. The light which smote Saul of Tarsus on the way to Damascus staggered and amazed the men who journeyed with him, but they heard not the voice; Saul knew it to be the Lord and answered, "Who art Thou, Lord?" The one had the power of perception, the others had not. The characteristic of a man without the Spirit of God is that he has no power of perception, he cannot perceive God at work in the ordinary occurrences. The marvellous, uncrushable characteristic of a saint is that he does discern God. You may put a saint in tribulation, amid an onslaught of principalities and powers, in peril, pestilence or under the sword, you may put a saint anywhere you like, and he is "more than conqueror" every time. Why? Because his heart being filled with the love of God, he has the power to perceive and understand that behind all these things is God making them "work together for good."

^{10.} two pence and a half penny, 1 percent of a British pound prior to 1971; "tuppence ha'penny" is a colloquial expression meaning next to nothing, or nothing at all.

^{11.} humour: mood, temperament or disposition.

"Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity." This does not mean "keep my eyes shut," but, "give me the power to direct my eyes aright." A sheet of white paper can be soiled, a sunbeam cannot be soiled, and God keeps His saints like light. Oh, the power of full-orbed righteousness! Thank God for the sanity of His salvation! He takes hold of our hearts and our heads!

(b) Meditation

Meditation means getting to the middle of a thing; not being like a pebble in a brook letting the water of thought go over us; that is reverie, not meditation. Meditation is an intense spiritual activity, it means bringing every bit of the mind into harness and concentrating its powers; it includes both deliberation and reflection. Deliberation means being able to weigh well what we think, conscious all the time that we are deliberating and meditating. "My heart consulted in me" (Nehemiah 5:7 mg)—that is exactly the meaning of meditation; also—"But Mary kept all these things, pondering them in her heart" (Luke 2:19 RV mg).

A great many delightful people mistake meditation for prayer; meditation often accompanies prayer, but it is not prayer, it is simply the power of the natural heart to get to the middle of things. Prayer is asking, whereby God puts processes to work and creates things which are not in existence until we ask. It is not that God withholds, but He has so constituted things on the ground of Redemption that they cannot be given until we ask. Prayer is definite talk to God, around which God puts an atmosphere, and we get answers back. Meditation has a reflex action; men without an ounce of the Spirit of God in them can meditate, but that is not prayer. This fundamental distinction is frequently obscured. Mary "pondered" these things in her heart, i.e., she meditated on them, got right to the centre of the revelations about her Son, but as far as we know, she did not utter a word to anyone. But read St. John's Gospel, and a wonder will occur to you. St. Augustine has called John's Gospel "the Heart of Jesus Christ." Recall what Jesus said to His Mother about John: "Woman, behold, thy son!" and to John about Mary, "Behold, thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home." It is surely quite legitimate to think that Mary's meditations found marvellous expression to John under the guidance of the Spirit of God, and found a place in his Gospel and Epistles.

(c) Estimation

The preparations of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the LORD. (Proverbs 16:1; see also verse 9)

To estimate means to reckon the value. Estimates are made in the heart, and God alters our estimates. To put it practically—those of you who have received God's Spirit and know His grace experimentally, watch how He has altered your estimate of things. It used to matter a lot what your worldly crowd thought about you: how much does it matter now? You used to estimate highly the good opinion of certain people: how do you estimate it now? You used to estimate that immoral conduct was the worst crime on earth, but how do you estimate it now? We are horrified at immoral conduct in social life, but how many of us are as horrified at pride as Jesus Christ was? Do we begin to understand what Jesus meant When He used such words as "ye are like unto whited sepulchres," or, "ye offspring of vipers" (RV)? To whom was He talking? To the Scribes and Pharisees!

God alters our estimates, and we shall find that God gives us a deeper horror of carnality than ever we had of immorality; a deeper horror of the pride which lives clean amongst men but lifts itself against God, than of any other thing. Pride is the central citadel of independence of God.

God will also alter our estimate of honour. Every man has an honour of some sort; a thief has an honour, a gambling man has an honour, everybody has an honour of some kind. Jesus Christ had an honour; they called Him "a man gluttonous, and a winebibber"; they said He was "beside Himself"; "hath a devil," and he never opened His mouth. He "made Himself of no reputation." But once let His Father's honour be touched and all was different. Watch His first public ministry in Jerusalem—a scourge of small cords in His hands overturning the moneychangers' tables, and driving men and cattle out! Where is the meek and mild and gentle Jesus now? His Father's honour was at stake.

Our estimate of honour measures our growth in grace. What we stand up for proves what our character is like. If we stand up for our reputation it is a sign it needs standing up for! God never stands up for His saints, they do not need it. The devil tells lies about men, but no slander on earth can alter a man's character. Once let God's honour be slandered, and instantly there is something else to deal with in your "meek" saint. You cannot arouse him on his own account, but once begin to slander God and a new sense of honour is awakened, a new estimate has been put in. God enables us to have the right perspective, to come to the place where we understand that the things which are seen are temporal, and to estimate them accordingly and hold a right scale of judgement.

3. Virtues and Vices

(a) All Degrees of Joy (Isaiah 65:14; 66:5)

The Bible talks plentifully about joy, but it nowhere speaks about a "happy" Christian. Happiness depends on what happens; joy does not. Remember, Jesus Christ had joy, and He prays "that they might have My joy fulfilled in themselves."

I want to give one warning concerning Christian Science. There is no objection to what Christian Science does to people's bodies, but there is a tremendous objection to its effect on people's minds. Its effect on people's minds is to make them intolerably indifferent to physical suffering, and in time it produces the antipodes of the Christian character, viz., a hardness and callousness of heart.

All degrees of joy reside in the heart. How can a Christian be full of happiness (if happiness depends on the things that happen) when he is in a world where the devil is doing his best to twist souls away from God, where people are tortured physically, where some are downtrodden and do not get a chance? It would be the outcome of the most miserable selfishness to be happy under such conditions; but a joyful heart is never an insult, and joy is never touched by external conditions. Beware of preaching the gospel of temperament instead of the Gospel of God. Numbers of people to-day preach the gospel of temperament, the gospel of "cheer up." The word "blessed" is sometimes translated "happy," but it is a much deeper word; it includes all that we mean by joy in its full fruition. Happiness is the characteristic of a child, and God condemns us for taking happiness out of a child's life; but as men and women we should have done with happiness long ago, we should be facing the stern issues of life, knowing that the grace of God is sufficient for every problem the devil can present.

(b) All Degrees of Pain

.... as vinegar upon nitre, so is he that singeth songs to an heavy heart. (Proverbs 25:20)

This is simply what has been stated already—preaching the gospel of temperament, the gospel of "cheer up," when a person cannot cheer up; telling him to look on the bright side of things when there is no bright side. It is as ridiculous as telling a jelly-fish to listen to one of Handel's Oratorios, it would have to be made over again first. It is just as futile to tell a man convicted of sin to cheer up; what he needs is the grace of God to alter him and put in him the well-spring of joy.

Pain exists in the heart and nowhere else. We try to measure pain in the aggregate; but we cannot. When hundreds are killed in a great accident, we are horrified, much more horrified than when one man is killed. There is no such thing as pain in the mass, pain is individual; nobody can feel more pain than the acme of nerves will give, and the more physical expression there is in pain, the less pain there is. It is by refusing to estimate things in their right light that we misunderstand the direction of pain.

(c) All Degrees of Ill-Will (Proverbs 23:17; Deuteronomy 19:6; Acts 7:54; James 3:14)

The deepest-rooted passion in the human soul is vengeance. Drunkenness, sensuality, and covetousness go deep, but not so deep as vengeance. Some such thought as this explains Judas; it says that he "kissed Him much" (Mark 14:45 RV mg). We read of the remorse of Judas, but there was no repentance in it; the end of his life was reached, there was nothing more to live for. There are records of men committing murder after a long line of vengeance and then dying of a broken heart, not because they are penitent, but because there was nothing more to live for.

Vengeance is the most deeply rooted passion in the human soul, and the impersonation of it is the devil. The devil has an absolute detestation of God, an immortal hatred of God. Satan's sin is at the summit of all sins; our sin is at the base of all sins. If sin has not reached its awful height in us, it may do so unless we let God alter the springs of our heart.

Thank God He does after the heart, and when His new life is in our heart, we can work it out through our head and express it in our lives.

Chapter XI

HEART: THE RADICAL REGION OF LIFE

1. Voluntary

- (c) Love (1 Timothy 1:5; Proverbs 23:26; Judges 5:9; Philippians 1:7; 2 Corinthians 7:3)
- (d) Hate (Leviticus 19:17; Psalm 105:25)

2. Versatility

- (e) Memory (Isaiah 65:17; Jeremiah 3:16; 2 Chronicles 7:11; Acts 7:23; 1 Corinthians 2:9; Luke 1:66; 21:14)
- (f) Thinking (Genesis 8:21; 17:17; 24:45; Ecclesiastes 1:16; Matthew 24:48; Hebrews 4:12)
- (g) Birthplace of Words (Job 8:10; Psalm 15:2; Matthew 12:34; Exodus 28:3)

3. Virtues and Vices

- (d) All Degrees of Fear (Proverbs 12:25; Ecclesiastes 2:20; Deuteronomy 28:28; Psalm 143:4; Jeremiah 32:40)
- (e) All Degrees of Anguish (Joshua 5:1; Jeremiah 4:19; Leviticus 26:36; Psalm 102:4)
- (f) All Conscious Unity (1 Chronicles 12:38; Jeremiah 32:39; Ezekiel 11:19; Acts 4:32)

1. Voluntary

(c) Love

But the end of the charge is love out of a pure heart and a good conscience and faith unfeigned. (1 Timothy 1:5 RV; see also Judges 5:9; Proverbs 23:26; Philippians 1:7; 2 Corinthians 7:3)

Love is the sovereign preference of my person for another person, and we may be astonished to realise that love springs from a voluntary choice. Love for God does not spring naturally out of the human heart; but it is open to us to choose whether we will have the love of God imparted to us by the Holy Spirit. "... the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us" (Romans 5:5; see also Luke 11:13). We are emphasising just now the need of voluntary choice. It is of no use to pray, "O Lord, for more love! give me love like Thine; I do want to love Thee better," if we have not begun at the first place, and that is to choose to receive the Holy Spirit Who will shed abroad the love of God in our hearts.

Beware of the tendency of trying to do what God alone can do, and of blaming God for not doing what we alone can do. We try to save ourselves, but God only can do that; and we try to sanctify ourselves, but God only can do that. After God has done these sovereign works of grace in our hearts, we have to work them out in our lives. "... work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure" (Philippians 2:12–13).

The love of God is the great mainspring, and by our voluntary choice we can have that love shed abroad in our hearts, then unless hindered by disobedience, it will go on to develop into the perfect love described in 1 Corinthians 13.

We have, then, to make the voluntary choice of receiving the Holy Spirit Who will shed abroad in our hearts the love of God, and when we have that wonderful love in our hearts, the sovereign preference for Jesus Christ, our love for others will be relative to this central love. "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake" (2 Corinthians 4:5).

(d) Hate

Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart. (Leviticus 19:17; see also Psalm 105:25)

(The passages quoted are chosen from an innumerable number which mention hate.) The exact opposite to love is hate. We do not hear much about hatred in connection with Christianity nowadays. Hatred is the supreme detestation of one personality for another, and the other person ought to be the devil. The Word of God clearly shows the wrong of hating our brother men; but Paul says, "we wrestle not against flesh and blood," i.e., against bad men, "but against principalities, against powers, . . . against spiritual wickedness" behind men. Bad men are simply the manifestation of the power of Satan.

If the love of God were presented as having no hatred of wrong and of sin and the devil, it would simply mean that God's love is not so strong as our love. The stronger and higher and more emphatic the love, the more intense is its obverse, hate. God loves the world so much that He hates with a perfect hatred the thing that is twisting men away from Him. To put it crudely, the two antagonists are God and the devil.

A good way to use the "cursing" Psalms is in some such way as this—"Do not I hate them, O LORD, that hate Thee? . . . I hate them with perfect hatred." Ask yourself what is it that hates God? Nothing and no one hates God half so much as the wrong disposition in you does. The carnal mind is "enmity against God"; what we should hate is this principle that lusts against the Spirit of God and is determined to have our bodies and minds and rule them away from God. The Spirit of God awakens in us an unmeasured hatred of that power until we are not only sick of it, but sick to death of it, and we will gladly make the moral choice of going to its funeral. The meaning of Romans 6:6 is just this put into scriptural language—"Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him." The "old man" is the thing the Spirit of God will teach us to hate, and the love of God in our hearts concentrates our soul in horror against the wrong thing. Make no excuse for it. The next time you read those Psalms, which people think are so terrible, bring this interpretation to bear on them.

One other thing, the Bible says that "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, . . . " and yet it says that if we are friends of the world we are enemies of God. "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God?" (James 4:4). The difference is that God loves the world so much that He goes all lengths to remove the wrong from it, and we must have the same kind of love. Any other kind of love for the world simply means that we take it as it is and are perfectly delighted with it. The world is all right and we are very happy in it; sin and evil and the devil are so many Orientalisms. It is that sentiment which is the enemy of God. Do we love the world in this sense sufficiently to spend and be spent so that God can manifest His grace through us until the wrong and the evil are removed?

Thank God, these voluntary choices are in our hearts, and they will work out tremendous purposes in our lives. Have I made the voluntary choice to receive the love of God? Have I come to the end of myself? Am I really a spiritual pauper? Do I realise, without any cunning, that I have no power at all in myself to be holy? Do I deliberately choose to receive from God the sovereign grace that will work these things in me? If so, then I must work them out with glad activity.

2. Versatility

In a previous study we explained Versatility as the power to turn easily from one thing to another. When you are in difficult circumstances, remember the time when they were not so trying. God has given us this power to turn ourselves by remembrance; if we lose the power, we punish ourselves and it will lead on to melancholia and the peril of fixed ideas.

(e) Memory

As expressive of this great and surprising power, take memory, which resides not in the brain, but in the heart. Thus Solomon finished the house of the LORD... and all that came into Solomon's heart to make in the house of the LORD... he prosperously effected. (2 Chronicles 7:11; see also Isaiah 65:17; Jeremiah 3:16; Acts 7:23; 1 Corinthians 2:9)

The brain is not a spiritual thing, the brain is a physical thing. Memory is a spiritual thing and exists in the heart; the brain recalls more or less clearly what the heart remembers. In our Lord's parable (see Luke 16:25) when Abraham said to the rich man, "Son, remember," He was not referring to a man with a physical brain in this order of things at all. There are other passages which refer to the marvellous power of God to blot certain things out of His memory. Forgetting with us is a defect; forgetting with God is an attribute. "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins" (Isaiah 44:22). "All these sayings were noised abroad throughout all hill country of Judaea. And all they that heard them laid them up in their hearts. . . . (Luke 1:65–66; see also Luke 21:14). In these passages memory is placed in the heart. We never forget save by the sovereign grace of God; the problem is that we do not recall easily. Recalling depends upon the state of our physical brain, and when people say they have a bad memory, they mean they have a bad power of recalling. Paul says, "Forgetting those things which are behind" (Philippians 3:13), but notice the kind of things he forgot. Paul never forgot that he was "before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious" (1 Timothy 1:13); he is referring to his spiritual attainments: "I forget to what I have attained because I am pressing on to something ahead." Immediately you begin to "rest on your oars" over your spiritual experience, and say, "Thank God I have attained to this," that moment you begin to go back. Forget to what you have attained, keep your eyes fixed on the Lord Jesus, and press on. People say God helps us to forget our past, but is that true? Every now and again the Spirit of God brings us back to remember who we are, and the pit from whence we were digged, so that we understand that all we are is by the sovereign grace of God, not by our own work, otherwise we would be uplifted and proud.

In the case of people with an impaired memory, as it is termed, some say it would be better to remove them; to put them to sleep if that were legal. Why do they say this? Because they estimate wrongly; they estimate according to the perfection of the machine. God looks at what we cannot see, viz., at the heart. God does not look at the brain, at what man looks at, neither does He sum men up in the way we do. The wonderful thing is that if we will hand our lives over to God by a voluntary choice and receive His Spirit, He will purify us down to deeper depths than we can ever go. Then how foolish people are not to hand over their lives to Him! "He will keep the feet of His saints." He will keep your heart so pure that you would tremble with amazement if you knew how pure the Atonement of the Lord Jesus can make the vilest human heart, if we will but keep in the light, as God is in the light. "But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7). We use this verse much too glibly; it is simply God letting the plummet right straight down to the very depths of the experience of a redeemed heart and saying, "That is how I see you"-made pure by the marvellous Atonement of Jesus, the last strand of memory purified through the blood of His Son.

(f) Thinking

Thinking takes place in the heart, not in the brain. The real spiritual powers of a man reside in the heart, which is the centre of the physical life, of the soul life, and of the spiritual life. The expression of thinking is referred to the brain and the lips because through these organs thinking becomes articulate. "For the word of God . . . is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (Hebrews 4:12; see also Genesis 8:21; 17:17; 24:45; Ecclesiastes 1:16; Matthew 24:48).

According to the Bible, thinking exists in the heart, and that is the region with which the Spirit of God deals. We may take it as a general rule that Jesus Christ never answers any questions that spring from a man's head, because the questions which spring from our brains are always borrowed from some book we have read, or from someone we have heard speak; but the questions that spring from our hearts, the real problems that vex us, Jesus Christ answers those. The questions He came to deal with are those that spring from the implicit centre. These problems may be difficult to state in words, but they are the problems Jesus Christ will solve.

(g) Birthplace of Words
The heart is the first thing to live in physical birth and in spiritual birth. It is a wonderful thing that God can cleanse and purify the thinking of our hearts. That is why our Lord says, "Of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh" (Luke 6:45). The Bible says that words are born in the heart, not in the head. "Shall not they teach thee, and tell thee, and utter words out of their heart?" (Job 8:10; see also Matthew 12:34).

Jesus Christ said He always spoke as His Father wished Him to. Did His Father write out the words and tell Him to learn them by heart? No, the mainspring of the heart of Jesus Christ was the mainspring of the heart of God the Father, consequently the words Jesus Christ spoke were the exact expression of God's thought. In our Lord the tongue was in its right place; He never spoke from His head, but always from

His heart. "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue . . . this man's religion is vain" (James 1:26), there is nothing in it. The tongue and the brain are under our control, not God's.

Look at the history of words in the different countries of the human race, or take our words to-day—the words, for instance, at the head of these studies, they are all technical, there is no "heart" in them. Compare the language of the Authorised Version of the Bible, which was translated into the language the people spoke. Our modern speech is a great aid to inner hypocrisy, and it becomes a snare because it is easy to talk piously and live iniquitously. Speaking from the heart does not mean refinement of speech merely; sometimes Jesus Christ's speech sounded anything but nice to natural ears, e.g., Matthew 23. Some of the words He used, and some applications He made of His truth were terrible and rugged. Read our Lord's description of the heart: "Out of the heart," says Jesus, "proceed . . ."—and then comes the ugly catalogue (Matthew 15:19). Upright men and women of the world simply do not believe this. Jesus Christ did not speak as a man there. He spoke as the Master of men, with an absolute knowledge of what the human heart is like. That is why He so continually pleads with us to hand the keeping of our hearts over to Him.

There is a difference between innocence and purity. Innocence is the true condition of a child; purity is the characteristic of men and women. Innocence has always to be shielded; purity is something that has been tested and tried and has triumphed; something that has character at the back of it, that can overcome, and has overcome. Jesus Christ by His Spirit can make us men and women fit to face the misery and wrong and discordance of life if we will keep in tune with Him.

3. Virtues and Vices

All degrees of Fear, all degrees of Anguish, and all Conscious Unity reside in the heart. Notice how the natural virtues break down, the reason being that our natural virtues are not promises of what we are going to be, but remnants of what we were designed to be. God does not build up our natural virtues and transfigure them. You will often find that when a good, upright worldling is born again, his natural virtues fail, and confusion is the first result of the Spirit of God coming in. Jesus Himself said, "I came not to send peace, but a sword," i.e., something that would divide a man's own personal unity.

There is a difference between the modern way of looking at men and the way the Bible looks at men. The modern way of looking at man and his virtues is to say, "What a wonderful promise of what man is going to be; given right conditions, he will develop and be all right." The Bible looks at man and says. "He must be born again; he is a ruin, and only the Spirit of God can re-make him." We cannot patch up our natural virtues and make them come up to Jesus Christ's standard. No natural love, no natural patience, no natural purity, no natural forgiveness, can come anywhere near what Jesus Christ demands. The hymn has it rightly:

And every value we possess, And every victory won, And every thought of holiness, Are His alone.

As we bring every bit of our bodily machine into harmony with the new life God has put within, He will exhibit in us the virtues that were characteristic of the Lord Jesus; the supernatural virtues are made natural. That is the meaning of learning to draw on the life of God for everything.

(d) All Degrees of Fear

Therefore is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate. (Psalm 143:4)

And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, . . . I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from Me. (Jeremiah 32:40; see also Proverbs 12:25; Ecclesiastes 2:20; Deuteronomy 28:28)

Fear resides in the heart. Take it physically, if you take a deep breath, you cause your heart to pump the blood faster through your veins, and physical fear goes; and it is the same with the spirit. God expels the old fear by putting in a new Spirit and a new concern. What is that concern? The fear lest we grieve Him.

(e) All Degrees of Anguish

I am pained at my very heart; . . . I cannot hold my peace. . . . (Jeremiah 4:19; see also Joshua 5:1; Leviticus 26:36; Psalm 102:4)

There again we find that the physical and spiritual centre is the heart. All anguish is in the heart. What we suffer from proves where our hearts are. What did Jesus Christ suffer from? The anguish of our Lord's heart was on account of sin against His Father. What causes the anguish of our hearts? Can we "fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ"? Are we shocked only at social evils and social wrongs, or are we as profoundly shocked at pride against God? Do we feel as keenly as Jesus Christ did the erecting of mine self-will against God? The centre of true anguish is in the heart, and when God puts our hearts right, He brings us into fellowship with Jesus Christ and we enter into fellowship with His sufferings.

(f) All Conscious Unity

All these men of war, that could keep rank, came with a perfect heart to Hebron, to make David king over all Israel and all the rest also of Israel were of one heart to make David king. (1 Chronicles 12:38; see also Jeremiah 32:39; Ezekiel 11:19; Acts 4:32)

The heart is the place where God works, and there all conscious unity resides; when once the Spirit of God is in the heart He will bring spirit, soul and body into perfect unity. Other powers can do this beside God, viz.: the world, the flesh, and the devil. The world can give a conscious unity to man's heart; so can the flesh and the devil. The man who gives way to sensuality, to worldliness, to devilishness, or to covetousness, is perfectly satisfied without God. God calls that idolatry.

We have to watch and see with what our hearts are getting into unity; what our hearts are bringing our souls and bodies into line with. "O LORD our God, other lords beside Thee have had dominion over us."

Chapter XII

HEART: THE RADICAL REGION OF LIFE

The Rendezvous of Perfect Life

- 1. The Inner
 - (a) Highest Love (Psalm 73:26; Mark 12:30–31)
 - (b) Highest Licence (Ezekiel 28:2)
 - (c) Darkened (Romans 1:21; Ephesians 4:18)
 - (d) Hardened (Isaiah 6:10; Jeremiah 16:12; 2 Corinthians 3:14)
- 2. The Inmost
 - (a) The Laboratory of Life (Mark 7:20–23)
 - (b) Lusts (Mark 4:15-19; Romans 1:24)
 - (c) Law of Nature (Romans 2:15)
 - (d) Law of Grace (Isaiah 51:7; Jeremiah 31:33)
 - (e) Seat of Conscience (Hebrews 10:22; 1 John 3:19–21)
 - (f) Seat of Belief and Disbelief (Romans 10:10; Hebrews 3:12)

3. The Innermost

- (a) Inspiration of God (2 Corinthians 8:16)
- (b) Inspiration of Satan (John 13)
- (c) Indwelling of Christ (Ephesians 3:17)
- (d) Indwelling of Spirit (2 Corinthians 1:22)
- (e) Abode of Peace (Colossians 3:15)
- (f) Abode of Love (Romans 5:5)
- (g) Abode of Light (2 Peter 1:19)
- (h) Abode of Communion (Ephesians 5:19)

A Rendezvous is an appointed place of meeting. The heart is the appointed place of meeting not only for all the life of the body physically, but for all the life of the soul and of the spirit. We have seen that the heart is the centre of the bodily life physically, the centre of the soul life, and the centre of the spirit life, and that the Bible places in the heart what modern science puts in the brain.

All through these studies we have insisted on what the Bible insists on, viz., that our body is the most gracious gift God has given us, and that if we hand over the mainspring of our life to God we can work out in our bodily life all that He works in. It is through our bodily lives that Satan works and, thank God, it is through our bodily lives that God's Spirit works. God gives us His grace and His Spirit; He puts right all that was wrong, He does not suppress it nor counteract it, but readjusts the whole thing; then begins our work. We have to work out what God has worked in, and we have to beware of the snare of blaming God for not doing what we alone can do. When Paul says, "Be renewed in the spirit of your mind," he is referring to the heart, which is renewed by the Spirit of God The expression of the heart is made through the mechanism of the brain, and the marvellous emancipation which comes, slowly and surely, is that when God has altered the heart and filled it with a new Spirit, we have the power to will and to do all that He wants us to do.

Jesus Christ puts the test this way: "If ye love Me, ye will keep My commandments," not some of them, but all of them. No man can keep Jesus Christ's commandments unless God has done a radical work in his heart; but if He has, this is the practical, commonsense proof—he keeps the commandments of Jesus.

1. The Inner

The Inner, the Inmost, and the Innermost—we now come right to the very centre of our personality, where we know nothing except what God reveals. God's Book counsels: "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life" (Proverbs 4:23). We are far too complex to understand ourselves; we must hand over the keeping of our hearts to God. If we think that we are simple and easy to understand, we shall never ask God to save us or keep us; but if we have come to the condition of the psalmist, we will hand the keeping of our souls right over to Him and say, "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts" (Psalm 139:23).

(a) Highest Love

We must put the emphasis where the Bible puts it: "God is the strength of my heart" (Psalm 73:26). "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment. And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Mark 12:30-31). According to the Bible, the highest love of the human heart is not for our kind, but for God. Our Lord distinctly taught His disciples that if they were going to live the spiritual life, they must barter the natural for it; that is, they must forgo the natural life. We mean by the "natural" life, the ordinary, sensible, healthy, worldly-minded life. The highest love is not natural to the human heart. Naturally, we do not love God, we mistrust Him; consequently in thinking we are apt to apply to God what should be applied to Satan. Satan uses the problems of this life to slander God's character; he tries to make us think that all the calamities and miseries and wrongs spring from God.

We have defined love, in its highest sense, as being the sovereign preference of my person for another person. The surest sign that God has done a work of grace in my heart is that I love Jesus Christ best, not weakly and faintly, not intellectually, but passionately, personally and devotedly, overwhelming every other love of my life.

In Romans 5:5 ("The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us"), Paul does not say that the capacity to love God is shed abroad in our hearts, he says "the love of God is shed abroad." The Bible knows only one love in this connection, and that is the supreme, dominating love of God. Jesus Christ teaches that if we have had a work of grace done in our hearts, we will show to our fellow-men the same love God has shown to us. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another" (John 13:34).

The natural heart, we cannot repeat it too often, does not want the Gospel. We will take God's blessings and His loving-kindnesses and prosperity, but when it comes to close quarters and God's Spirit informs us that we have to give up the rule of ourselves and let Him rule us, then we understand what Paul means when he says the "carnal mind" (which resides in the heart) "is enmity against God." Are we willing for God not to suppress or counteract, but to totally alter the ruling disposition of our heart? The wonderful work of the grace of God is that through the Atonement God can alter the centre of my life, and put there a supreme, passionate devotion to God Himself.

The natural man does not like God's commands; he will not have them, he covers them over and ignores them. Jesus said that the first commandment is: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." Men put the second commandment first: "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." The great cry to-day is "love for mankind." The great cry of Jesus is "love for God first," and this love, the highest love, the supreme, passionate devotion of the life, springs from the inner centre.

What a rest comes when the love of God has been shed abroad in my heart by the Holy Spirit! I realise that God is love, not loving, but love, something infinite greater than loving, consequently He has to be very stern. There is no such thing as God overlooking sin. That is where people make a great mistake with regard to love; they say, "God is love and of course He will forgive sin": God is holy love and He cannot forgive sin. Jesus Christ did not come to forgive sin; He came to save us from our sins. The salvation of Jesus Christ removes the "sinner" out of my heart and plants in the "saint." That is the marvellous work of God's grace.

That the natural heart of man does not want the Gospel of God is proved by the resentment of the heart against the working of the Spirit of God, "No, I don't object to being forgiven, I don't mind being guided and blessed, but it is too much of a radical surrender to ask me to give up my right to myself and allow the Spirit of God to have absolute control of my heart." That is the natural resentment. But oh, the ineffable, unspeakable delight when we are made one with God, one with Jesus Christ, and one with every fellowbeliever in this great, overwhelming characteristic of love, when life becomes possible on God's plan!

(b) Highest Licence

In Ezekiel 28:2 ("Say unto the Prince of Tyrus, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a God, . . . yet thou art a man, and not God. . . .") we have the presentation of the personality of sin, not the picture of the wrong disposition, which we have all inherited, but of the being who is the instigator behind the wrong disposition inciting to licence. Licence simply means—"I will not be bound by any laws but my own." This spirit resents God's law and will not have anything to do with it—"I shall rule my body as I choose, I shall rule my social relationships and my religious life as I like, and I will not allow God or any creed or doctrine to rule me." That is the way licence begins to work.

Watch how often the Apostle Paul warns us not to use our liberty "for an occasion to the flesh," i.e., don't use your liberty for licence. What is the difference between liberty and licence? Liberty is the ability to perform the law, perfect freedom to fulfil all the demands of the law. To be free from the law means that I am the living law of God, there is no independence of God in my make-up. Licence is rebellion against all law. If my heart does not become the centre of Divine love, it may become the centre of diabolical licence. Do people believe that nowadays? The majority of us do not accept Jesus Christ's statements. Immediately we look at them, their intensity and profundity make us shrink.

À very profitable and solemn study is the connection of the phrase "children of the devil" as used by Jesus. "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do" (John 8:44). He is not referring to ordinary sinners, but to religious sinners. Natural sinners are called "children of wrath," but when our Lord used the phrase, "children of the devil," He was referring to religious disbelievers, viz., those who had seen the light and refused to walk in it, they would not have it.

Remember the two alternatives: our heart may be the centre of the Divine rule making us one with God's thoughts and purposes, or it may be the centre of the devil's rule making us one with the prince of this world, the being who hates God, one with the natural life which barters the spiritual.

(c) Darkened

... when they knew God, they glorified Him not as God... but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. (Romans 1:21; see also Ephesians 4:18)

These are striking passages, quite at home in the New Testament, but at home nowhere else. This is not the darkness which comes from intensity of light, it is the refusal to allow any light at all. Read John 3:19 and you will see how our Lord uses the word "darkness." "This is the judgement," He says, i.e., the critical moment, "that the light is come into the world, and men loved the darkness rather than the light; for their works were evil" (RV). On another occasion Jesus said, "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" Darkness is my own point of view; when once I allow the prejudice of my head to shut down the witness of my heart, I make my heart dark.

When Jesus Christ preached His first public sermon in Nazareth "where He had been brought up," the hearts of the people witnessed to Him wonderfully, then their prejudices got in the way and they closed down the witness of their hearts, broke up the service and tried to kill Him. That is an instance of how it is possible to choke the witness of the heart by the prejudice of the head. In John 3 Jesus was talking to a man who was in danger of closing down the witness of his heart because of his Jewish prejudice. Is there any light for which some of us have been thanking God, as the Psalmist puts it "God is the LORD, which hath shewed us light: bind the sacrifice with cords . ." (Psalm 118:27), and is there a prejudice coming in and closing down the witness of the heart? If so, that is where the darkened heart begins; the light does not shine because it cannot. Until the Holy Spirit comes in we see only along the line of our prejudices. When we let the Holy Spirit come in, He will blow away the lines of our prejudices with His dynamic power, and we can begin to "go" in God's light.

A darkened heart is a terrible thing, because a darkened heart may make a man peaceful. A man says—"My heart is not bad, I am not convicted of sin; all this talk about being born again and filled with the Holy Spirit is so much absurdity." The natural heart needs the Gospel of Jesus, but it does not want it, it will fight against it, and it takes the convicting Spirit of God to make men and women know they need to experience a radical work of grace in their hearts.

(d) Hardened

But their minds were hardened: for until this very day . . . the same veil remaineth unlifted; which veil is done away in Christ. (2 Corinthians 3:14)

The characteristic of the hardened heart is familiar in the Bible but not anywhere else. For instance, we read in Exodus that God hardened Pharaoh's heart (Exodus 4:21, et seq.). This must not be interpreted to mean that God hardened a man's heart and then condemned him for being hard. It means rather that God's laws, being God's laws, do not alter, and that if any man refuses to obey God's law he will be hardened away from God, and that by God's own decree. No man's destiny is made for him, he makes his own; but the imperative necessity that a man must make his own destiny is of God.

Whenever a man comes into an exalted position, it is a position in which he can either show the marvellous grace of God, or the hardening of his heart away from God. This is true of the prejudiced heart and the hardened heart, but not so true of the darkened heart. In a hardened heart there is no witness being crushed down, the heart is simply hard and untouched, and when God's love and God's works are abroad, it remains like ice; it may be smashed and broken by judgements, but it is simply breaking ice. The only way to alter the hardened heart is to melt it, and the only power that can melt it is the fire of the Holy Ghost.

The heart is so truly central that God alone knows it, and the illustrations the Bible uses are varied figures in order that we may understand how God deals with the heart.

2. The Inmost

(a) The Laboratory of Life

A laboratory is the place where things are prepared for use. The heart never dies, it is as immortal as God's Spirit because it is the centre of man's spirit. Memory never dies, mind never dies; our bodily machine dies, and the manifestation of our heart and life in the body dies, but the heart never dies. "Son, remember," these words were spoken to a man out of the body.

The things prepared for use are prepared in the heart. "For from within, out of the heart of man, proceed evil thoughts . . ." (Mark 7:20). These are staggering words, and they spring from the lips of the Master of the human heart. They are not the shrewd guesses of a scientist, or the simple intimations of an apostle, they are the revelation of God Almighty through Jesus Christ. Look at them and see whether they do not awaken resentment in you unless you have received the Spirit of God. These verses mean that no crime has ever been committed by a human being that every human being is not capable of committing. How many people believe that? "It is absurd, morbid nonsense," they say, which means that Jesus Christ did not know what He was talking about. To-day people are willingly and eagerly and all-embracingly accepting Christian Science, that popularisation of the belief that there is no such thing as sin or suffering or death, they are all imagination. The consequence is people are preaching the gospel of temperament—"Cheer up and look on the bright side of things." How can a man look on the bright side of things when the Spirit of God has shown him the possibilities of hell within? The majority of us are shockingly ignorant about ourselves simply because we will not allow the Spirit of God to reveal the enormous dangers that lie hidden in the centre of our spirit. Jesus Christ taught that dangers never come from outside, but from within. If we will accept Jesus Christ's verdict and receive the Spirit of God, we need never know in conscious life that what He says about the human heart is true, because He will re-relate the heart from within.

Perfect life does not mean perfection. Perfection means perfect attainment in everything. Perfect life means the perfect adjustment of all our relationships to God, nothing out of joint, everything rightly related; then we can begin to have the perfect life, that is, we can begin to attain. A child is a perfect human being, so is a man; what is the difference? The one is not yet grown and matured, the other is. Paul puts the two perfections very clearly in Philippians 3:12–15. When you are sanctified you have become perfectly adjusted to God; but remember, he implies, that you have attained to nothing yet; the whole life is right, undeserving of censure, now then begin to attain in your bodily life and prove that you are perfectly adjusted to Him.

(b) Lusts

Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts. (Romans 1:24)

What is lust? "I must have it at once!" That is lust. Jesus said that lust would destroy the work of grace He has begun in us; "the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word" (Mark 4:19). The word "lust" is also used in other connections, viz., of the Spirit of God, "the Spirit [lusteth] against the flesh" (Galatians 5:17). The Spirit of God Who comes in at new birth lusts after this body. must have it at once, for God, and He will not tolerate the carnal mind for one second; consequently when a person is born again of the Spirit, there is a disclosure of enmity against God. No man knows he has that enmity inside until he receives the Holy Spirit. Immediately he receives the Spirit the carnal mind is aroused, and the carnal mind clamours and will not yield to the Spirit. This war is described in Galatians 5:17, the flesh lusting against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, both demanding "I must have this body at once." To which power are we going to give our body? Thank God for everyone who says, "Lord, I want to be identified with the death of Jesus until I know that my 'old man' was crucified with Him."

But watch lust on the other side—watch where it begins. "Ye did run well; who did hinder you?" Think what simple things Jesus Christ says will choke His word—"the cares of this world, . . . the lusts of other things." Once become worried and the choking of the grace of God begins. If we have really had wrought into our hearts and heads the amazing revelation which Jesus Christ gives that God is love and that we can never remember anything He will forget, then worry is impossible. Notice how frequently Jesus Christ warns against worry. The "cares of this world" will produce worry, and the "lusts of other things" entering in will choke the word God has put in. Is the thing which claims my attention just now the one thing for which God saved and sanctified me? If it is, life is all the time becoming simpler, and the crowding, clamouring lusts have no hold.

(c) The Law of Nature, (d) the Law of Grace, (e) the Seat of Conscience and (f) the Seat of Belief and Disbelief are all in the heart.

Conscience is the "eye of the soul," and the orbit of conscience, that marvellous recorder, is the heart. "Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience." God puts the law of grace where the law of nature works, viz., in the heart. Thank God for His sovereign grace which can alter the mainspring of life!

(f) The Seat of Belief and Disbelief

Take heed, brethren, lest there he in any of you an evil heart of unhelief, in departing from the living God. (Hebrews 3:12) There the distinction is made perfectly clear—the heart must never be agnostic, the head, if you like, may be. Every Christian is an avowed agnostic. Have you ever thought of that? How do I know God? All I know of God I have accepted as a revelation, I did not find it out by my head. "Canst thou by searching find out God?" Next time you meet some agnostic friend, say something like that to him and see if it does not alter the problem for him. We have to keep our minds open about a great many things. The reason people disbelieve God is not because they do not understand with their heads—we understand very few things with our heads, but because they have turned their hearts in another direction. Why was Jesus Christ so stern against disbelief? Because disbelief never springs from the head but from the wrong direction of the heart. Can I have the evil heart of unbelief taken out and a heart of belief put in? Thank God, the answer is "Yes!" "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you . . ." (Ezekiel 36:26). Can I have an impure, defiled heart made pure, so pure that it is pure in God's sight? The answer is "Yes!" ". . . the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7). Can I be filled with the Holy Ghost until every nook and cranny is exactly under the control of God? Again the answer is "Yes!" "He that cometh after me is mightier than I, . . . He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire: Whose fan is in His hand, and He will throughly purge His floor . . ." (Matthew 3:11–12).

Jesus Christ's salvation works first at the centre, not at the circumference. No one is capable of thinking about being born, or of how they will live when they are born, until they are born; we have to be born into this world first before we can think about it. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again"—"you must be born into a new world first, and if you want to know My doctrine, do My will" said Jesus. A right relation to God first is essential. How are we to have a right heart relationship to God? By accepting His Spirit, and He will bring us where we can understand how God's grace works. If any man will receive the Spirit of God, he will find He will lead him into all truth.

3. The Innermost

(a) The Inspiration of God

The inspiration of God may dwell in the innermost recesses of my heart. "But thanks be to God, which put the same earnest care into the heart of Titus for you" (2 Corinthians 8:16). You may be surprised at the seeming slightness of this passage. The inspiration for benevolence and philanthropy springs from God, and God's Book has some stern revelations to make about philanthropy and benevolence, it reveals that they may spring from a totally wrong motive.

The inspiration of God does not patch up my natural virtues; He re-makes the whole of my being until we find that "every virtue we possess is His alone." God does not come in and patch up our good works, He puts in the Spirit that was characteristic of Jesus; it is His patience, His love, and His tenderness and gentleness that are exhibited through us. "Whoso eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood" When God alters a man's heart and plants His Spirit within, his actions have the inspiration of God behind them; if they have not, they may have the inspiration of Satan.

(b) Inspiration of Satan

And supper being ended, the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot . . . to betray Him. . . . (John 13:2)

(c) The Indwelling of Christ

The indwelling of Christ—an unspeakable wonder! "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith . . ." (Ephesians 3:17). This figure of the indwelling of Christ is very remarkable; we are made part of the mystical Body of Christ that Christ may indwell us. The New Testament gives three pictures of Jesus: first, the historic Jesus; second, God Incarnate; and third, the mystical Body of Christ, which is being made up now of sanctified believers. By the sovereign work of God and the indwelling Christ, we can show through our lives, through our bodily relationships, the very same characteristics that were seen in the Lord Jesus, so that men may take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus, and, as our Lord said, men seeing your good works, may "glorify your Father which is in heaven."

The thought is unspeakably full of glory, that God the Holy Ghost can come into my heart and fill it so full that the life of God will manifest itself all through this body which used to manifest exactly the opposite. If I am willing and determined to keep in the light and obey the Spirit, then the characteristics of the indwelling Christ will manifest themselves.

(d) The Indwelling of the Spirit

This is something more explainable. The spirit, soul and body of the Man Christ Jesus were kept in perfect oneness with God the Father by the Holy Spirit. Study Jesus Christ's life: His up-look to God, i.e., His prayer life, was always right; His out-look on men was always right, and His down-look on sin and the devil and hell was always right. He did not ignore any of these facts, as a great many people are doing to-day, and His Spirit energising our spirit will produce in us the same characteristics and lift us by His marvellous Atonement into the same at-one-ment with God. "That they may be one, even as We are one," not by absorption, but by identification. This is not the teaching which is prevalent nowadays that we are to be absorbed into one great, infinite Being; we are to be made one in identity with Jesus Christ, to have a disposition like His; consequently we are interested only in the things in which He is interested, we cannot be appealed to on any other line.

(e) The Abode of Peace

"And let the peace of God rule in your hearts" (Colossians 3:15). This is the peace of God, not peace with God. Thank God, there is a peace with God, but this is a different peace. "Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you," said Jesus, i.e., the peace that characterised Jesus Christ is to characterise His saints.

(f) The Abode of Love

"The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts" (Romans 5:5), not the capacity to love God, but the very love of God. That is what Paul means by those words with which we are so familiar—"I have been [RV] crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God." This is not faith in Jesus, but "the faith of the Son of God," i.e., the faith that was in Jesus is in me; I am identified with Jesus to such an extent that you cannot detect a different spring of life, because there is not one! It is no longer the old disposition that rules me, says Paul, but the disposition that is in Jesus Christ. If you have not the Spirit of God, you will think the Apostle is straining language beyond its limit in his effort to express what the Spirit of God does, viz., He alters the ruling disposition, and a man shows himself as entirely changed.

(g) The Abode of Light

"... a light that shineth in a dark place" (2 Peter 1:19). We have a wonderful picture of light in James 1:17, "... the Father of lights, with Whom can be no variation, neither shadow that is cast by turning" (RV), nothing to hide. That is the characteristic of God, and St. Paul counsels us to "Walk as children of light."

(h) The Abode of Communion

St. John says, "If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another." That is a wonderful description of the communion we shall have. Natural affinity does not count here at all. Watch how God has altered our affinities since we were filled with the Spirit; we have an affinity of fellowship with people for whom we have no natural affinity at all, we have fellowship with everyone who is in the light, no matter who they are, or to what nation they belong, or anything else—a most extraordinary alteration.

Chapter XIII

OURSELVES: I; ME; MINE

Ourselves as "Knower." I the "Ego"

- 1. Some Distinctions of Importance
 - (a) Individuality
 - (b) Personality
 - (c) Egotism and Egoism
- 2. Some Determinations of Interest (John 3:2)
- (a) The Ego Is Inscrutable (Isaiah 26:9; Psalm 19:12)
 - (b) The Ego Is Introspective (Psalm 139; Proverbs 20:27)
 - (c) The Ego Is Individual (Ezekiel 18:1–4)
- 3. Some Delusions of Importance (2 Thessalonians 2:7–12)
 - (a) The Ego in Delusions of Insanity
 - (b) The Ego in Delusions of Alternating Personalities
 - (c) The Ego in Delusions of Mediums and Possessions

We have divided this subject of Ourselves into two: the part that knows, the Ego; and the part that is known, the Me.

1. Some Distinctions of Importance

First of all we will take these distinctions generally—Individuality and Personality, Egotism and Egoism, and we shall find that the Bible gives us wonderful insight into these distinctions.

(a) Individuality

Individuality is a smaller term than Personality. We speak of an individual animal, an individual man, an individual thing. An individual man is one by himself, he takes up so much space, requires so many cubic feet of air, etc.

(b) Personality

Personality is infinitely more. Possibly the best illustration we can use is that of a lamp. A lamp unlighted will illustrate individuality; a lighted lamp will illustrate personality. The lighted lamp takes up no more room, but the light permeates far and wide; so the influence of personality goes far beyond that of individuality. "Ye are the light of the world" said our Lord. Individually we do not take up much room, but our influence is far beyond our calculation. When we use the term "personality," we use the biggest mental conception we have, that is why we call God a Person, because the word "person" has the biggest import we know. We do not call God an individual we call God a Person. He may be a great deal more, but at least He must be that. It is necessary to remember this when the personality of God is denied and He is taken to be a tendency. If God is only a tendency, He is much less than we are. Our personality is always too big for us. When we come to examine the next sections and trace the Bible teaching we shall find that we are much too complex to understand ourselves.

Another illustration of personality, more often used, is the following: an island may be easily explored, yet how amazed we are when we realise that it is the top of a mountain, whose greater part is hidden under the waves of the sea and goes sheer down to deeper depths than we can fathom. The little island represents our conscious personality. The part of ourselves of which we are conscious is a very tiny part, there is a greater part underneath about which we know nothing; consequently there are upheavals from beneath that we cannot account for. We cannot grasp ourselves at all. We begin by thinking we can, but we have to come to the Bible standpoint that no one knows himself; the only One Who knows him is God. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Proverbs 16:25).

Individuality, then, is a smaller term than personality. Personality means that peculiar, incalculable being that is meant when you speak of "you" as distinct from everybody else. People say, "Oh, I cannot understand myself"; of course you can't! "Nobody else understands me"; of course they don't! There is only one Being Who understands us, and that is our Creator.

(c) Egotism and Egoism

It is necessary to have a proper distinction in our minds regarding egotism and Egoism. Egotism is a conceited insistence on my own particular ways and manners and customs. It is an easily discernible characteristic, and fortunately is condemned straightway by right thinking people. We are inclined to overlook egotism in young people and in ignorant people, but even in them it is of the detestable, vicious order. Of egoism only good things can be said. It is that system of thinking which makes the human personality the centre. The thinking that starts from all kinds of abstractions is contrary to the Bible. The Bible way of thinking brings us right straight down to man as the centre. That which puts man right and keeps man right is the revelation we have in God's Book. For instance, the teaching of our Lord and of the Apostle Paul continually centres around "I," yet there is no egotism about it; it is egoism. Everything in the Bible is related to man, to his salvation, to his sanctification, to his keeping, etc. Any system of thinking which has man for its centre and as its aim and purpose is rightly called Egoism.

2. Some Determinations of Interest

The personality of man is his inmost nature; it is distinct from spirit, soul and body and yet embraces all; it is the innermost centre of man's spirit, soul and body. There are three things to be said about the "Ego."

(a) Inscrutable

It is inscrutable, i.e., we cannot understand it or search it out. The Bible says that a man is incapable of searching himself out satisfactorily. "With my soul have I desired Thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek Thee early" (Isaiah 26:9). There the distinction is made clearly between the inmost personality called "I" and spirit, soul and body; and this distinction is maintained all through God's Book. I can search my spirit to a certain point. I can search my soul, but only to a certain point. Immediately man comes to examine himself he begins to find that he is inscrutable, he cannot examine himself thoroughly. He may make certain arbitrary distinctions and call himself body, soul and spirit, but he instantly finds that that is not satisfactory. Those of you who are familiar with books dealing with this subject will find the word "subliminal" (below the threshold) constantly occurring. Something from below the threshold of consciousness every now and again emerges and upsets our teaching about ourselves. Our Lord's dealings with the disciples made them conscious of things in themselves of which they had been hitherto unconscious. For instance, in Matthew 16 we read that Jesus said to Peter, "Blessed art thou," and shortly afterwards He said to him, "Get thee behind Me, Satan." Peter had not the slightest notion that God Almighty had lifted him up as a trumpet and blown a blast through him, which Jesus Christ recognised as the voice of His Father; or that a little while afterwards Satan took him up and blew a blast through him, which Jesus recognised as the voice of Satan. Again, if Peter had been told that he would deny his Lord with oaths and curses, he would have been unable to understand how anyone could think it possible. There are possibilities below the threshold of our lives which no one but God knows. Jesus Christ brought His disciples through crises in order to reveal to them that they were much too big to understand themselves; there were forces within them which would play havoc with every resolution they made. "Who can understand his errors? Cleanse Thou me from secret faults" (Psalm 19:12). This verse is simply a type of the revelation running all through God's Book. We cannot understand ourselves, we do not know the beginnings of our dreams or of our motives; we do not know our secret errors, they lie below the region we can get at.

(b) Introspective

Not only are we inscrutable, but we are so built that we are obliged to examine ourselves; that is the meaning of introspective. Introspection means the direct observation of the processes of our mind. Along this line people become insane. If you cut a tree in half you can tell by the number of rings inside how old it is; and people try to do this psychically, that is, they try to cut their consciousness in half and find out how it is made. We are so built that we must introspect. Immediately a man realises he is incalculable, he wants to understand himself, and consequently he begins to introspect. The great chapter in the Bible on wise introspection is the 139th Psalm; it is a Psalm of Intercessory Introspection. The words are a contradiction in terms, but they exactly convey the meaning of the Psalm. The tendency in me which makes me want to examine myself, and know the springs of my thoughts and motives takes the form of prayer, "O Lord explore me." The Psalmist talks of the great Creator. Who knows the beginnings of the morning and the endings of the evening, Who knows the fathomless deep and the tremendous mountains, but he does not end with vague abstractions; these things are all very well, but they are useless for his purpose: he asks this great Creator to come and search him. "My God there are beginnings of mornings and endings of evenings in me that I cannot understand; there are great mountain peaks I cannot scale; such knowledge is too wonderful for me, I cannot attain unto it, explore me, search me out." Or again, he means, "Search out the beginnings of my dreams, get down below where I can go, winnow out my way until You understand the beginnings of my motives and my dreams, and let me know that You know me; and the only way I shall know that You know me is that You will save me from the way of grief, from the way of self-realisation, from the way of sorrow and twistedness, and lead me in the way everlasting." The Greek philosophers used to tell us to know ourselves, and Socrates' teaching is exactly along the line of this Psalm, but from a different standpoint. Socrates' wisdom consisted in finding out that he knew nothing of himself, and that is why he was called by the Oracle the wisest man on earth. We have to be avowed agnostics about ourselves. We begin by thinking that we know all about ourselves, but a quarter of an hour of the "plague of our own heart" upsets all our thinking, and we understand the meaning of the Psalmist, "O Lord, search me!"

Mark you, God does not search us without our knowing. "The spirit of man is the candle of the LORD, searching all the inward parts of the belly" (Proverbs 20:27). The word translated by the old Saxon word "belly" means the innermost part. God makes a man know that He is searching him. When we come to our Lord, this line explains His attitude towards the human soul, "If I had not come, . . . they had not had sin." If Jesus Christ had not come with His light, and the Holy Ghost had not come with His light men had not known anything about sin. It takes the Apostle Paul to use the phrase "sold under sin," and to know the meaning of it Paul had been searched clean through by the penetration of the Spirit of God.

We are inscrutable, but we are so built that we must introspect. Introspection without God leads to insanity. We do not know the springs of our thinking, we do not know by what we are influenced, we do not know all the scenery psychically that Jesus Christ looked at. Our Lord continually saw things and beings we do not see. He talked about "Satan" and "demons" and "angels." We don't see Satan or demons or angels, but Jesus Christ unquestionably did, and He sees their influence upon us. The man who criticises Jesus Christ's statements about demon possession does not realise what he is doing. The people with no tendency to introspect are those described in the New Testament as "dead in trespasses and sins," they are quite happy, quite contented, quite moral, all they want is easily within their grasp, everything is all right with them; but they are dead to the world to which Jesus Christ belongs, and it takes His voice and His Spirit to awaken them.

(c) Individual

By the term individual, we mean, first, what we stated at the beginning in distinguishing between individuality and personality; and second, that every man is judged before God as an individual being; what he has done, he alone is responsible for. "The word of the LORD came unto me again, saying What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying, The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge? As I live, saith the Lord GOD, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel. Behold, all souls are Mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is Mine: the soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezekiel 18:1–4). This line of revelation runs all through God's Book, and it shows the absurdity of the criticism arising from the fictitious conception that we are punished for Adam's sin. The Bible does not say so. The Bible says that men are punished for their own sins, that is, for sins committed culpably. The Bible says that sin entered into the world by one man, but sin is not an act on my part at all. Sin is a disposition, and I am in no way responsible for having the disposition of sin; but I am responsible for not allowing God to deliver me from the disposition of sin when once I see that that is what Jesus Christ came to do. The wrong things I do I shall be punished for and whipped for, no matter how I plead. For every wrong that I do, I shall be inexorably punished and shall have to suffer. The inexorable law of God is laid down that I shall be held responsible for the wrong that I do, I shall smart for it and be punished for it, no matter who I am. The Atonement has made provision for what I am not responsible for, viz., the disposition of sin. John 3:19 sums it up: "This is the judgement" (the crisis, the critical moment), "that the light is come into the world, and men loved the darkness rather than the light; for their works were evil" (RV). What is light? Jesus says, "I am the light of the world," and He also said, "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" Darkness is my own point of view.

In Regeneration God works below the threshold of our consciousness; all we are conscious of is a sudden burst up into our conscious life, but as to when God begins to work no one can tell. This emphasises the importance of intercessory prayer. A mother, a husband, or a wife, or a Christian worker, praying for another soul has a clear indication that God has answered their prayer; outwardly the one prayed for is just the same, there is no difference in his conduct, but the prayer is answered. The work is unconscious as yet, but at any second it may burst forth into conscious life. We cannot calculate where God begins to work any more than we can say when it is going to become conscious; that is why we have to pray in reliance on the Holy Spirit (see Romans 8:26–27). The path of peace for us is to hand ourselves over to God and ask Him to search us, not what we think we are, or what other people think we are, or what we persuade ourselves we are or would like to be, but, "Search me out, O God, explore me as I really am in Thy sight."

3. Some Delusions of Importance (2 Thessalonians 2:7–12)

There are supernatural powers and agencies of which we are unconscious which, unless we are garrisoned by God, can play with us like toys whenever they choose. The New Testament continually impresses this on us. "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places" (Ephesians 6:12). All that is outside the realm of our consciousness. If we only look for results in the earthlies when we pray, we are ill-taught. A praying saint performs far more havoc amongst the unseen forces of darkness than we have the slightest notion of. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." We have not the remotest conception of what is done by our prayers, nor have we the right to try and examine and understand it; all we know is that Jesus Christ laid all stress on prayer. "And greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto My Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do."

It is only when these speculations and terrors are awakened in us that we begin to see what the Atonement of Jesus Christ means. It means safeguarding in the unseen, safeguarding from dangers we know nothing about. "Kept by the power of God"! The conscious ring of our life is a mere phase, Jesus Christ did not die and rise again to save that only; the whole personality of man is included. We have to beware of estimating Jesus Christ's salvation by our experience of it. Our experience is a mere indication in the conscious life of an almighty salvation that goes far beyond anything we ever can experience.

Second Thessalonians 2:7–12 represents the borderland realm of things which it is difficult to trace. The theme is not an isolated one, it runs all through the Bible and indicates a borderland we cannot step over.

(a) Delusions of Insanity

What is insanity? One of the greatest mistakes being made to-day is the statement that the cases of demon possession in the Bible were cases of insanity. The distinction between the two is made perfectly clear; the symptoms are not even the same. Insanity simply means that a man is differently related to affairs from the majority of other men and is sometimes dangerous. Paul was charged with madness (Acts 26:24-25), and the same charge was brought against Jesus Christ—"For they said, He is beside himself." Have you ever noticed the wisdom of the charge? Both Jesus Christ and Paul were unquestionably mad, according to the standard of the wisdom of this world; they were related to affairs differently from the majority of other men, consequently, for the sake of self-preservation, they must be got rid of. Our Lord was crucified, and Paul was beheaded. When we are imbued with Jesus Christ's Spirit and are related to life as He was, we shall find that we are considered just as mad according to the standard of this world.

Another thing said about insane people is that they have lost their reason; this is technically untrue. An insane person is one who has lost everything but his reason. According to the universal standard, an insane person has lost the relation of the body to his reason, lost the relation of the outside world to his reason, yet he can find a reason for everything. Anyone who knows anything about the diagnosis of insanity knows that this is true.

Read the expositions of the Sermon on the Mount to-day and you will find some of the cleverest dialectics that have ever been written. The writers try to prove that Jesus is not mad according to the standards of this world; but He is mad, absolutely mad, and there is no apology needed for saying it. Either the modern attitude to things must alter, or it must pronounce Jesus Christ mad. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Volumes have been written to prove that the Lord did not mean that; but He did. Common sense says, "That is nonsense, I must seek my living first, then I will devote myself to the kingdom of God." In 1 Corinthians 1 Paul reasons that in the view of God it is the world that is mad, and that man only becomes sane in God's sight when he is readjusted to God through the Atonement.

(b) Delusions of Alternating Personalities (see Mark 5:1–15)

That is, one body being the arena of more than one personality. This is not demon possession entirely, although the case we are taking is such. The incident recorded in Mark 5 is not a case of insanity. You wonder first of all who is speaking; the man with the unclean spirit bows down before Jesus and worships Him, he knows perfectly well that Jesus can deliver him; but as soon as he gets there, the other personality cries out against Jesus Christ, and pleads with Him to deal mercifully with him.

There are cases of alternating personalities today, amazing records of people suddenly disappearing from one part of the country and living a totally different life in another part of the country. The delusions arising from alternating personalities cannot be dealt with by science; but Jesus Christ can deal with them.

(c) Delusions of Mediums and Possessions

And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying. (Acts 16:16)

Paul was grieved because this girl was a medium. A spiritualistic medium commits the greatest psychical crime in the world, that is, the greatest crime against the soul. Drunkenness and debauchery are child's play compared with spiritualism. According to the Bible, it is possible for a man or woman to make himself or herself a medium through which unseen spirits can talk to seen men and women. Beware of using the phrase "Yield, give up your will." Be perfectly certain to whom you are yielding. No one has any right to yield himself to any impression or to any influence or impulse; immediately you yield, you are susceptible to all kinds of supernatural powers and influences. There is only one Being to whom you must yield, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ; but be sure it is the Lord Jesus Christ to Whom you yield. In religious meetings it is the impressionable people who are the dangerous people. When you get that type of nature to deal with, pray as you never prayed, watch as you never watched, and travail in communion as you never travailed in communion, because the soul that is inclined to be a medium between any supernatural forces and himself will nearly always be caught up by the supernatural forces belonging to Satan instead of by God. Insanity is a fact, demon possession is a fact, and mediumship is a fact. The Bible says regarding the false Christs ". . . if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect" (Matthew 24:24). So beware to whom you yield. When once a nature is laid hold of by the sovereign power of God and recognises to Whom he is yielding, then that nature is safeguarded for ever. Beware of impressions and impulses unless they wed themselves to the standards given by Jesus Christ.

"All power is given unto Me," said Jesus; "and I give unto you power . . . over all the power of the enemy."

Chapter XIV

OURSELVES: I: ME: MINE

Ourselves as "Known." "Me"

- 1. The Sensuous "Me" (Ecclesiastes 12:13)
 - (a) My Body (Romans 12:1)
 - (b) My Bounty (Hebrews 13:15)
 - (c) My Blessings (Romans 12:13)
- 2. The Social "Me" (Ecclesiastes 7:29)
 - (a) My Success (Matthew 5:13–16)
 - (b) My Sociability (John 5:40–44)
 - (c) My Satisfaction (Matthew 10:17–22)
- 3. The Spiritual "Me" (Ephesians 2:6)
 - (a) My Mind (Romans 12:2)
 - (b) My Morals (Matthew 5:20)
 - (c) My Mysticism (Colossians 2:20-23)

The Sensuous "Me." By "Sensuous" we mean bodily, material consciousness. My Body represents one aspect of "Me." Under the heading of My Bounty, we shall consider our "flesh and blood relations," and under the heading of My Blessings, our home, property, and wealth.

The Social "Me." Under the Social "Me" we shall consider all that my "set" means: if you insult my "set," you insult "Me." It is important to impress upon ourselves that God recognises that this is the way He has made us. Our Lord insists on the social aspect of our lives: He shows very distinctly that we cannot further ourselves alone.

The Spiritual "Me." This means my religious convictions—my Mind, my Morals, and my Mysticism.

To go back to our first statement. If my body is hurt, I look upon it as a personal hurt; if my home or my people are insulted, it is a personal insult; if my "set" and my society are hurt, I consider it a personal hurt; and if my religious convictions are hurt or upset or scandalised, I consider myself as being hurt and scandalised.

The normal "Me," from the scriptural standpoint, is not the average man. "Normal" means regular, exact, perpendicular, everything according to rule. "Abnormal" means irregular, away from the perpendicular; and "super-normal" means that which goes beyond regular experience, not contradicting it, but transcending it. Our Lord represents the "supernormal." Through the salvation of Jesus Christ we partake of the normal, regular, upright; apart from His salvation we are abnormal.

We mean by the term "Me" the sum total of all that a man calls his. That means there is no real practical distinction between "me" and "mine." My personality identifies "mine" with my self so completely that it is not necessary to make a distinction between "me" and mine.

1. The Sensuous "Me"

"Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep His commandments: for this is the whole duty of man." (Ecclesiastes 12:13)

This verse is the conclusion from the point of view of human and Divine wisdom as to what is the whole end of life, viz., to "fear God, and keep His commandments."

"Sensuous" means that which is affected through our senses, or that which we get at through our senses. The first thing we get at through our senses is the body. The Bible has a great deal to tell us about our bodies. The main point to emphasise is that the Bible reveals that our body is the medium through which we develop our spiritual life. In the Middle Ages the body was looked upon as a clog, a hindrance, an annoyance, something that kept us back and upset our higher calling; something which had sin in the very corpuscles of its blood, in the cells of its make-up. The Bible entirely disproves this view; it tells us that our body is "the temple of the Holy Ghost," not a thing to be despised. The Bible gives the body a very high place indeed.

(a) My Body

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice." (Romans 12:1)

The Apostle does not say, "Present your "all"; the "Higher Life"¹² hymns do that, consequently they are unsatisfactory for you can never know when you have given your "all." Look at it in the light of the last chapter, if our personality is too big for us to understand, how are we to know when we have presented our all? The Bible never says any thing so vague as "present your all," but "present your bodies." There is nothing ambiguous or indefinite about that statement, it is definite and clear. The body means only one thing to us all, viz., this flesh and blood body.

Ask yourself this practical question: Who is the ruling person that is manifested through my body, through my hands, through my tongue, through my eyes, through my thinking and loving? Is it a selfrealising person, or a Christ-realising person? Our body is to be the temple of the Holy Ghost, the medium for manifesting the marvellous disposition of Jesus Christ all through. Instead of our body being a hindrance to our development, it is only through our body that we are developed. We express our character through our body: you cannot express a character without a body. When we speak of character, we think of a flesh and blood thing; when we speak of disposition, we think of something that is not flesh and blood. Through the Atonement God gives us the right disposition; that disposition is inside our body, and we have to manifest it in character through our body and by means of our body. The meaning of bodily control is that the body is the obedient medium for expressing the right disposition. The Bible, instead of ignoring the fact that we have a body, exalts it. "What, know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you?" "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." Instead of the Bible belittling the laws of health and bodily uprightness and cleanliness, it insists on these by implication far more than modern science does by explicit statement. Go back again to our first subject, viz., The Making of Man, and you will recall that the chief glory of man is not that he is in the image of God spiritually, but that he is made "of the earth, earthy." This is not man's humiliation but his glory, because through his mortal body is to be manifested the wonderful life and disposition of Jesus Christ. "Christ in you, the hope of glory."

(b) My Bounty

By Him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks to His name. (Hebrews 13:15)

This verse comes in a chapter which is intensely practical, and which deals with our relationship to strangers as well as our relationships in the most intimate and practical matters of life. The next relationship of my body is my blood relations, my father and mother, my sister and brother, my wife, etc. Have you ever noticed that these are the relationships Jesus Christ refers to most often? Over and over again when Our Lord tells about discipleship, that is the sphere He deals with; He puts the relationships in this sphere as crucial. Read Luke 14:26-27, 33, there our Lord places our love for Himself away beyond our love for father and mother; in fact, He uses a tremendous word: "If any man come to Me, and hate not his father, and mother, . . . he cannot be My disciple." That word "hate" appears to be a stumbling-block to a great number of people. It is quite conceivable that many persons have such a slight regard for their fathers and mothers that it is nothing to them to separate from them; but the word "hate" shows by contrast the kind of love we ought to have for our parents, an intense love; yet, says Jesus, our love for Him is to be so intense that every other relationship is "hatred" in comparison if it should conflict with His claims.

Love for the Lord is not an ethereal, intellectual, dream-like thing; it is the intensest, the most vital, the most passionate love of which the human heart is capable. The realisation of such a fathomless love is rarely conscious, saving in some supreme crisis akin to martyrdom. In the generality of our days our love for God is too deeply imbedded to be conscious; it is neither joy nor peace, it is "me" obsessed by God in the unconscious domain. Love, to be love, is deeper than I am conscious of, and is only revealed by crises. This intense personal love is the only kind of love there is, not Divine and human love.

Jesus preached His first sermon in Nazareth, "where He had been brought up," and He told His disciples they were to begin "in Jerusalem." Did Jesus Christ have such great success in Nazareth where He was known? No, He had exactly the opposite. When they heard Him speak they were so filled with wrath that they broke up the service and tried to kill Him. Our Lord insists that we begin at Jerusalem for the sake of our own character, and our "Jerusalem" is unquestionably among the bounties of our own particular flesh and blood relations. It is infinitely easier to offer the "sacrifice of praise" before strangers than amongst our own flesh and blood. That is where the "sacrifice of praise" comes in, and that is what young converts want to skip. It is by testifying to our own flesh and blood that we are confirmed in our own character and in our relationship to Jesus Christ. It is recorded in Luke 4:23–27, that Jesus spoke words which maddened His own people; He said, in effect, "It is God's way to send His message through strangers before that message is accepted." They would not accept it from Him. Why? Because they knew Him, and if we look into that statement we shall find that it revolutionises a great many of our conceptions. We should naturally have said that if Jesus had testified amongst His own people, they would have gladly received Him: the only place in which they did not receive Him, the place in which He could not do many mighty works, was the place where He was brought up. The place in which Jesus tells us as His disciples to begin our work is amongst our own flesh and blood, that is our "Terusalem"; there we shall get consolidated and know where the true basis of our life lies. We do not often put together the words "sacrifice" and "praise." Sacrifice means giving the best we have, and it embraces an element of cost. Our own flesh and blood relationships have to be the scene of the sacrifice of praise on our part, whether it is accepted or not. That is where the sacrifice of praise comes in.

(c) My Blessings

By "Blessings" we mean our homes and our property.

Distributing to the necessity of saints; given to hospitality." (Romans 12:13)

The Bible has a great deal to say about "hospitality" and "entertaining strangers." God recognises the enormous importance of our immediate circle. The term "blessings" includes my home and my property, all that I distinctly look upon as mine, and I have to use it with this outlook of hospitality, and immediately I do, I find how personal it is. If any stranger finds fault with my home or insults it, my resentment is intense. My home is guarded in exactly the same way as my body is guarded. It is mine, therefore it is part of the very make-up of my personality, and God will not allow me to be exclusive over it, I must keep it open, be "given to hospitality." In the East they know a great deal more about hospitality than we do. By "home" we mean what we Britishers specially think of when we mention the word, viz., the most intimate relationships; that is the scene where we are to be given to hospitality. The point is that we are to be "given to hospitality" from God's standpoint; not because other people deserve it, but because God commands it. This principle runs all through our Lord's teaching. My body, my blood relationships, my home—I have to keep all these intimate and right, recognising the first duty in each one. My body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, not for me to disport myself in or to realise myself. My blood relationships unquestionably have to be recognised, but they are to be held in subjection; my first duty in them is to God; and my home is to be given to hospitality. Have you ever noticed how God's grace comes to those who are given to hospitality, if they are His children? Prosperity in home, in business, and in every way comes from following God's instructions in each detail.

2. The Social "Me"

Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions. (Ecclesiastes 7:29)

The word "inventions" is a quaint one. It means devices arising from man's self-love. God made man upright, normal, perpendicular, regular; but he has sought out many devices, many ingenious twistings away from the normal. The Social "Me" means recognition by my set, and this is a wonderful influence with us all. For instance, a boy who is good and mild to his father and mother at home may swear like a trooper when he is with the other set, not because he is bad or evil, but because he wants to be recognised by his set. This is true all through life, and the Spirit of God recognises the principle and regenerates it. We must be moulded by the set to which we belong whether we like it or not, and God may often alter our special setting. We may affect any amount of individuality, but it remains true that we either grovel or strut, according to our realisation of how we are recognised by the set to which we belong. The Book of God is insistent on this; we cannot develop a holy life alone, it would be a selfish life, without God in it and wrong. Jesus Christ was charged with being "a man gluttonous, and a winebibber" because He lived so sociably amongst men; and in His High-priestly prayer, He prays "... not that Thou shouldest take them from the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil one." The first place to which Jesus Christ led His disciples after He had said "Follow Me," was to a marriage feast. "We will come unto him, and make our abode with him," fellowship with the Trinity, that is the Set the Christian is placed in. Therefore our concern is to see that we live according to the recognition of that Set, and do those things which please God.

(a) My Success (Matthew 5:13-16)

Success means to end with advantage. What is the Christian standard of success? Jesus Christ distinctly recognises that we have to succeed, and He indicates the kind of success we must have. The advantage with which we are to end is that we become preserving salt and shining lights; not losing our savour but preserving health, and not covering our light with a bushel but letting it shine. If salt gets into a wound, it hurts, and if God's children get amongst those who are "raw" towards God—every immoral person is an open wound towards God, their presence hurts. The sun, which is a benediction to eyes that are strong, is an agony of distress to eyes that are sore. The illustration holds with regard to the man who is not right with God; he is like an open wound, and when "salt" has got into it, the pain stirs him first to annoyance and distress, and then to spite and hatred. That is why Jesus Christ was hated; He was a continual annoyance. Again, nothing is cleaner or grander or sweeter than light. Light cannot be soiled; a sunbeam may shine into the dirtiest puddle, but it is never soiled. A sheet of white paper can be soiled, so can almost any white substance, but you cannot soil light. Men and women who are rightly related to God can go and work in the most degraded slums of the cities, or in the vilest parts of heathendom where all kinds of immorality are practised, without being defiled because God keeps them like the light, unsullied.

(b) My Sociability

Sociability means good fellowship. How insistent God is that we keep together in fellowship! In the natural world it is only by mixing with other people that we get the corners rubbed off. It is the way we are made naturally, and God takes this principle and transfigures it. "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together" is a scriptural injunction.

In John 5:40–44 our Lord distinctly indicates that He can have nothing to do with a certain class of men, viz., with the men who "receive honour one of another." He says, in effect, "It is a moral impossibility for that man to believe in Me." Our Lord is exceedingly good company to the saints—"where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst." Beware of isolation; beware of the idea that you have to develop a holy life alone. It is impossible to develop a holy life alone, you will develop into an oddity and a peculiarism, into something utterly unlike what God wants you to be. The only way to develop spiritually is to go into the society of God's own children, and you will soon find how God alters your set. God does not contradict our social instincts, He alters them. Jesus said, "Leap for joy" when they shall "separate you from their company and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake," not for some crotchety notion or faddy idea of your own, or for some principle you have wedded yourself to, but, for My sake. When we are true to Jesus Christ, our sociability is lifted to a different sphere.

"And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus" (Ephesians 2:6). We are not raised up alone, but together. All through the social instinct is God-given. From the Bible standpoint, whenever a man gets alone, it is always in order to fit him for society. Getting alone with God is such a dangerous business that God rarely allows it unless it means that we come into closer contact with people afterwards. It is contact with one another that keeps us full-orbed and well-balanced, not only naturally but spiritually.

(c) My Satisfaction

These things are applicable in the natural and the spiritual world alike. Satisfaction means comfortable gratification. There are people who say that if you like a particular thing you must not have it, they think that any satisfaction is a sin. Satisfaction, comfortable gratification, is a good thing, but it must be satisfaction in the highest. Jesus said: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled," i.e., satisfied.

Matthew 10:17-22 may seem an extraordinary passage to be taken in this connection. The reason it is taken is that it indicates the only place where satisfaction is found, viz., in doing God's will. These verses are often applied to methods people adopt when they speak at meetings. I remember hearing a man say, "I have not had much time to prepare for this morning's address, so I am going to give you what the Holy Spirit gives me; I hope to be better prepared this evening," and he used this very passage as his justification. When we seek satisfaction from God in the world of men, we shall come in contact with "open wounds," and Jesus says men will hate you, systematically vex and persecute you "for My sake." You will be put in all kinds of difficult places, but don't be alarmed, the Spirit of God will bring to your remembrance in those moments what you should say.

So we end where we began, that the social setting of our lives is The Highest. In secret or in public the one Set we are anxious to please is God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit; and the only ones with whom we have real communion are those who have the same dominant note in their life. "Whosoever shall do the will of My Father which is in heaven, the same is My brother, and sister, and mother."

3. The Spiritual "Me"

And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. (Ephesians 2:6)

This verse refers to now, not to hereafter.

(a) My Mind

My mind means my particular cast of thought and feeling; if you ridicule that, you hurt me. Whenever a certain type of thought is ridiculed, someone is hurt. "And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable and perfect, will of God" (Romans 12:2). A wonderful thing in our spiritual experience is the way God alters and develops our sensitiveness. At one time we were amazingly sensitive to what certain people thought; then God altered that and made us indifferent to what they thought but amazingly sensitive to what other people thought, and finally we are sensitive only to what God thinks. "But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgement: yea, I judge not mine own self. . . . But He that judgeth me is the Lord" (1 Corinthians 4:3-4). We have to be renewed in the spirit of our minds for one purpose, viz., that we "may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

(b) My Morals

My morals, i.e., my standard of moral conduct.

Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven. (Matthew 5:20)

The practical outcome of these words is astonishing; it means that my standard of moral conduct must exceed the standard of the most moral, upright man I know who lives apart from the grace of God. Think of the most upright man, the most worthy person you know who has had no experience whatever of receiving the Spirit of God, Jesus Christ says, in effect, that we have to exceed his rectitude. Instead of our Lord lowering the standard of moral conduct, He pushes it to a tremendous extreme. We have not only to do right things, but our motives have to be right, the springs of our thinking have to be right; we have to be so unblameable that God Himself can see nothing to censure in us. That is the standard of moral conduct when we are born again of the Spirit of God and are obeying Him. What is my standard of moral conduct? Is it God's standard, or the modern one? The modern standard is summed up in one phrase, self-realisation. The two are diametrically opposed to one another, there is no point of reconciliation between them.

(c) My Mysticism (Colossians 2:20-23)

My mysticism means my direct and immediate communion with God.

Everyone, whether he is religious or not, has something of this sort whereby he goes directly to God. Mysticism is a natural ingredient in everybody's make-up, whether they call themselves "atheist," or "agnostic," or "Christian." God does not alter the need of our nature, He fulfils the need on a totally different line. We are so mysterious in personality, there are so many forces at work in and about us which we cannot calculate or cope with, that if we refuse to take the guidance of Jesus Christ, we may, and probably shall be, deluded by supernatural forces far greater than ourselves. Jesus Christ's way exalts everything about us, it exalts our bodies, exalts our flesh and blood relationships, exalts our homes, exalts our social standing, exalts all the inner part of our life, our mind and morals and mysticism, until we have at-one-ment with God in them all.

Chapter XV

OURSELVES: I; ME; MINE

Ourselves as "Ourselves." "Self"

THE PASSAGES ALLUDED TO IN THIS OUTLINE ARE EXCLUSIVELY FROM THE NEW TESTAMENT; THE STUDENT CAN SUPPLY OLD TESTAMENT ILLUSTRATIONS FOR HIS OWN USE.

- 1. Self (Luke 18:9-14)
 - (a) Greatness (Mark 12:29–31; comp. 2 Thessalonians 2:3)
 - (b) Grovelling (Luke 15:19; Luke 5:8)
- 2. Self-Seeking (Romans 15:1–3)
 - (a) Honour (John 5:41-44; John 8:49)
 - (b) Humility (Matthew 18:4; Philippians 2:1-4)
- 3. Self-Estimation (John 13:13–17)
 - (a) Superiority (Philippians 2:5–11)
 - (b) Inferiority (Matthew 5:19)

N.B. IMPORTANT DEFINITIONS:

- (1) SELF MEANS THE SUM TOTAL OF ALL A MAN CAN CALL "ME" AND "MINE."
- (2) SELFISHNESS MEANS ALL THAT GIVES ME PLEASURE WITHOUT CONSIDERING CHRIST'S INTERESTS.
- (3) SIN MEANS INDEPENDENCE OF GOD.

My self is my conscious personality. "My total self includes the whole succession of my personal experiences, and it therefore includes that special phase of my conscious life in which I think of myself." There are three divisions to guide our treatment of this subject: Self; Self-Seeking; Self-Estimation.

1. Self

Greatness and Grovelling. (Luke 18:9–14). In the final analysis, both attitudes are wrong; one grovels and the other swells in greatness, both are expressive of abnormal conditions. Our Lord never teaches the annihilation of self; He reveals how self can be rightly centred, the true centre being perfect love towards God (see 1 Corinthians 13:4–8). Until self is rightly related there, we either grovel or swell in greatness; both attitudes are untrue and need to be put right. The true centre for self is Jesus Christ.

(a) Greatness

The first of all the commandments is . . . thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. (Mark 12:29–30) This commandment is at the heart of all the revelations made by Jesus Christ. He reveals the right centre for self to be God, personal, passionate devotion to Him; then I am able to show to my fellow-men the same love that God has shown to me. Until I get there, I take the position of the Pharisee or of the publican; I either thank God that I am not an outand-out sinner and point out certain people who are worse than I am, or else I grovel to the other extreme. Both attitudes are wrong because they are not truly centred. How could the Pharisee in our Lord's parable possibly love his neighbour as himself? It was impossible, he had not found the true centre for himself. His centre was self-realisation, and instead of loving the publican he increased his own conceit in every detail of comparison. Immediately I become rightly related to God and have perfect love toward Him, I can have the same relationship to my fellow-men that God has to me, and can love my fellow-men as I love myself. When a man gets rightly related to God by the Atonement of Jesus Christ, he understands what the Apostle Paul meant when he said, "We preach not ourselves,"—i.e., self-realisation—"but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake."

This is the one thing that keeps a man from taking account of evil. If my love is first of all for God, I shall take no account of the base ingratitude of others, because the mainspring of my service to my fellow-men is love to God. The point is very practical and clear. If I love someone and he treats me unkindly and ungenerously, the very fact that I love him makes me feel it all the more, and yet Paul says love "taketh not account of evil," because self is absorbed and taken up with love for Jesus Christ. If you are going to live for the service of your fellowmen, you will certainly be pierced through with many sorrows, for you will meet with more base ingratitude from your fellow-men than you would from a dog. You will meet with unkindness and "two-facedness," and if your motive is love for your fellow-men, you will be exhausted in the battle of life. But if the mainspring of your service is love for God, no ingratitude, no sin, no devil, no angel, can hinder you from serving your fellow-men, no matter how they treat you. You love your neighbour as yourself, not from pity, but from the true centring of yourself in God.

(b) Grovelling

I am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants. (Luke 15:19 RV)

When Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord. (Luke 5:8)

Everyone goes through this stage when convicted of sin; we always have a wrong estimate of ourselves when we are under conviction of sin. The prodigal's estimate of himself went beyond his father's estimate of him, and when we are convicted of sin by the Holy Spirit the same thing happens. The balance is upset, the health of the body is upset, the balance is pushed right out by conviction of sin. Sin puts man's self altogether out of centre, and he becomes eccentric. When the Spirit of God convicts a man, he is wrongly related to everything; he is wrongly related to God, to his own body, to everything round about him, and he is in a state of abject misery. The picture of a man not convicted of sin is exactly the opposite. If you watch the tendencies all around us to-day you will notice this tendency—"Ignore sin, deny its existence; if you make mistakes, forget them: live the healthy-minded, open-hearted, sunshiny life; don't allow yourself to be convicted of sin, realise yourself, and as you do, you will attain perfection." There is no conviction of sin, no repentance, no forgiveness of sin, in that outlook. The Holy Spirit opens not only my eyes, but my heart and my conscience to the horror of the thing that is wrong within, and immediately He does, I get to the grovelling stage. The Psalmist says that conviction of sin makes man's beauty "to consume away like a moth" (Psalm 39:11). "Beauty" means the perfectly ordered completeness of a man's whole nature. The pharisee does not grovel, there is a certain beauty of order about a conceited man, a conformity with himself; he is of the nature of a crystal, clear and compact and hard. Immediately the Spirit of God convicts him, all that "beauty" crumbles and he goes to pieces, as it were. Jesus Christ takes the man who has been broken on the wheel by conviction of sin and rendered plastic by the Holy Spirit, and re-moulds him and makes him a vessel fit for God's glory.

Self, then, is not to be annihilated, but to be rightly centred in God. Self-realisation has to be turned into Christ-realisation. Our Lord never taught—"Deeper death to self"; He taught death right out to my right to myself, to self-realisation. He taught that the principal purpose of our creation is "to glorify God and to enjoy Him forever"; that the sum total of my self is to be consciously centred in God.

2. Self-Seeking (Romans 15:1–3)

"The reproaches of them that reproached Thee fell on Me." What reproaches fell on Jesus? Everything that was hurled in slander against God hurt our Lord. The slanders that were hurled against Himself made no impression on Him; His suffering was on account of His Father. On what account do you suffer? Do you suffer because men speak ill of you? Read Hebrews 12:3: "For consider Him that hath endured such gainsaying of sinners against [Himself, KJV], that ye wax not weary, fainting in your souls" (RV). Perfect love takes no account of the evil done unto it. It was the reproaches that hit and scandalised the true centre of His life that Jesus Christ noticed in pain. What was that true centre? Absolute devotion to God the Father and to His will; and as surely as you get Christ-centred you will understand what the Apostle Paul meant when he talks about filling up "that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ." Jesus Christ could not be touched on the line of selfpity. The practical emphasis here is that our service is not to be that of pity, but of personal, passionate love to God, and a longing to see many more brought to the centre where God has brought us.

(a) Honour

Jesus answered, . . . I honour My Father, and ye do dishonour Me. (John 8:49; see also John 5:41–44)

The central honour in our Lord's life was His Father's honour; He "made Himself of no reputation." Every kind of scandal it was possible for men to think of was heaped upon Him, and He never attempted to clear Himself; but let anyone show an attitude of dishonour towards His Father and instantly Jesus Christ was ablaze in zeal; and "as He is, so are we in this world." Jesus Christ changes the centre of our self-love. Is my honour God's honour? Are they identically the same, as they were in Jesus Christ? Let these statements analyse us: we are scandalised at immorality, why? Is it because God's honour is at stake? or is it not rather because our social honour is upset and antagonised? As saints, we should smart and suffer keenly whenever we see pride and covetousness and self-realisation, because these are the things that go against the honour of God. "Ye have not the love of God in you," said Jesus Christ to the Pharisees, and He pointed out that it was therefore a moral impossibility for them to believe (see John 5:44). No man with a standard of honour other than Jesus Christ's can believe in Him. Jesus Christ exalts the standard of honour and puts it alongside God's throne. The real underlying meaning of our Lord being "moved with indignation in the spirit" (John 11:33 RV mg) was because Martha and her sister had accepted a scandal against His Father. As soon as death came on the scene, they accepted an interpretation that went against the goodness and the love of God. The only thing that roused Jesus Christ was for His Father's honour to be brought into disrepute. In the Temple, instead of seeing "a meek and gentle Jesus," we see a terrible Being with a whip of small cords in His hand, driving out the moneychangers. Why could not He have driven them out in a gentler way? Because passionate zeal, an enthusiasm and detestation of everything that dared to call His Father's honour into disrepute, had eaten Him up; and exactly the same characteristic is seen in the saints. You cannot rouse them on the line of personal interest, of self-pity or of self-realisation; but when once anything is contrary to Jesus Christ's honour, instantly you find your meek and gentle saint becomes a holy terror. The phrase, "the wrath of the Lamb," is understandable along this line. The obverse side of love is hate.

(b) Humility

Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. (Matthew 18:4; see also Philippians 2:1–4)

These two passages are a wonderful revelation; they show that the true disposition of a saint in this order of things is humility. When the disciples were discussing who should be the greatest, Jesus took a little child in His arms and said, "Unless you become like that, you will never see the kingdom of heaven." He did not put up a little child as an ideal; if He had, He would have destroyed the whole principle of His teaching. If humility were put up as an ideal it would serve only to increase pride. Humility is not an ideal, it is the unconscious result of the life being rightly related to God and centred in Him. Our Lord is dealing with ambition, and had He put up a little child as a standard, it would simply have altered the manifestation of ambition. What is a little child? We all know what a child is until we are asked, and then we find we do not know. We can mention his extra goodness or his extra badness, but none of this is the child himself. We know implicitly what a child is, and we know implicitly what Jesus Christ means, but as soon as we try to put it into words it escapes. A child works from an unconscious principle within, and if we are born again and are obeying the Holy Spirit, we shall unconsciously manifest humility all along the line. We shall easily be the servant of all men, not because it is our ideal, but because we cannot help it. Our eye is not consciously on our service, but on our Saviour.

There is nothing more awful than conscious humility, it is the most Satanic type of pride. To consciously serve is to be worse than the Pharisee who is eaten up with conceit. Jesus Christ presented humility as a description of what we shall be unconsciously when we have become rightly related to God and are rightly centred in Jesus Christ. Our humility amongst men can only be understood by those who are Christ-centred in the same way. This is portrayed over and over again in the New Testament. Peter says, "They think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot" (1 Peter 4:4), and our Lord says, "Leap for joy" when "they shall separate you from their company, . . . for the Son of man's sake" (Luke 6:22-23). The centre of the life is altered, and the worldling is hopelessly at sea¹³ in trying to find out the centre from which the Christian works. The analysis of a Christian from a worldly standpoint results at first not in attraction, but in ridicule. The Apostle Paul said that what he preached was foolishness, unutterable stupidity to the Greeks, to those who seek after wisdom; and that is the attitude towards the saints in this dispensation. A saint arouses interest for a little while, when things go ill he arouses deep interest; but when things go well, the interest gradually changes into ridicule, and then into his being absolutely ignored, because he is centred in Someone the world does not see, viz., in God. As long as a Christian complies with the standards of this world, the world recognises him; but when he works from the real standard, which is God, the world cannot understand him, and consequently it either ignores or ridicules him. Jesus Christ and the Spirit of God in the Epistles point out this antagonism between the spirit of the world and the Spirit of God, it is a deeply rooted antagonism, and as Christians we have to realise that if we obey the Spirit of God, we are going to be detested and ridiculed and ignored by those whose centre is self-realisation.

Our attitude in this dispensation manifests itself in a humility that cannot sting us into action on our own account. That is the thing that maddens the prince of this world. When the prince of this world and his minions scandalise Jesus Christ and misrepresent Him, the weakest saint becomes a giant, he is ready to go to martyrdom any time and anywhere all the world over for the Lord Jesus Christ. We hear it said that the spirit of martyrdom has died out; the spirit of martyrdom is here. If scandal should arise against Jesus Christ, there would be many to-day who would stand true to the honour of the Lord Jesus Christ where in the past there would have been but one.

What is self-seeking? I must have self-seeking, and if my self is truly centred, my seeking is God's honour. God's honour is at stake in my eyes, in my hands and feet; His honour is at stake wherever I take my body. My body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, therefore I have to see that it is the obedient slave of the disposition Jesus Christ has put in to stand for Him. The centre of my self should be God and love for Him. This question often arises—"I believe I ought to love God, but how am I to do it? How am I to have this tremendous love towards God? I agree that I ought to love Him, but how can I?" Romans 5:5 is the solution: "The love of God hath been shed abroad in our hearts through the Holy Ghost which was given unto us" (RV). Have you received the Holy Spirit? If not, Luke 11:13 will help you: "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" Also John 17:26: "That the love wherewith Thou lovedst Me may be in them, and I in them" (RV). Ask God to answer the prayer of Jesus Christ. There is no excuse for any of us not having the problem answered in our own life. Our natural heart does not love God; the Holy Ghost is the only Lover of God, and immediately He comes in, He will make our hearts the centre of love for God, the centre of personal, passionate, overwhelming devotion to Jesus Christ. (God and Jesus Christ are synonymous terms in practical experience.) When the Holy Spirit comes in and sin and self-interest are in the road, He will instantly detect them and clear them out as soon as we give our consent, until we become incandescent with the very love of God. "Keep yourselves in the love of God" (Jude 21). That does not mean keep on trying to love God, it means something infinitely profounder, viz., "Keep the windows of your soul open to the fact that God loves you"; then His love will continually flow through you to others.

There are two terms used in modern psychology which are of importance in this connection—Projective and Ejective. Projective means that I see in other people the qualities I want but am without. Ejective means that I attribute my qualities or my defects to other people. The ejective method is seen in the matter of judging; when somebody has trespassed against me, I instantly impute to him every mean¹⁴ motive of which I would have been guilty had I been in his circumstances. "Wherefore thou art without excuse, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself" (Romans 2:1 RV). In Matthew 6:15 Jesus Christ puts the forgiveness of our trespasses on the ground that we forgive those who trespass against us. If we take the ejective method, we do not forgive them, we simply attribute to others what we should be capable of in the way of meanness in similar circumstances. The statement that we only see what we bring with us the power of seeing, is perfectly correct. If I see meanness and wrong and evil in others, let me take the selfjudgement at once—that is what I would be guilty of if I were in their circumstances. The searching light of the Scriptures comes over and over again on this line, and we come to find that there is no room in a Christian for cynicism.

3. Self-Estimation (John 13:13–17)

This is a reiteration of the same point, viz., that self must be centred in God. Is my self Christ-centred or self-centred? When I am in difficult circumstances. does the disposition in me make me say, "Why should this happen to me?" That disposition was never in the Lord Jesus Christ. Whenever His consciousness was revealed, it was His Father's honour that occupied Him, not His own honour. My self is a human edition for God to be glorified in. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (Philippians 2:5). Could anything be more practical, or more profound than that command? The mind of Christ showed itself in His actions and in His speech, and our mind is shown in our speech and in our actions. What was it that Satan antagonised in Jesus Christ? God-realisation. Satan wanted to alter that centre: "Do God's work in Your own way; You are His Son, then work from that centre." At the heart of each of our Lord's answers to Satan's temptations is this-"I came . . . not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." Jesus Christ was tempted, and so shall we be tempted when we are rightly related to God. "I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love" (Revelation 2:4). All the rest becomes of no account. To get eccentric, off the centre, is exactly what Satan wants. He does not tempt to immorality; the one thing he makes his business is to dethrone God's rule in the heart. The superiority of Jesus Christ's Self was that He was God-centred. "He that gathereth not with Me scattereth," said our Lord; and all morality, all goodness, all religion, and all spirituality that is not Christ-centred is drawing away from Jesus Christ all the time. All the teaching of Jesus weaves round the question of self. It is not "Oh, to be nothing, nothing!" but "Oh, to be something, something!" Aggressively and powerfully something, uncrushably something, something that stands next to God's throne, on the Rock; to be those in whom God can walk and talk and move and do what He likes with, because self is personally, passionately in love with God, not absorbed into God; but centred in God.

Selfishness means that which gives me pleasure without considering Jesus Christ's interests. Talk about selfishness on its bad side, and you will have everyone's sympathy; but talk about selfishness from Jesus Christ's standpoint and you will arouse the interest of very few and the antipathy of a great many. Sympathy for my fellow-men is quite likely to rouse antagonism to God. Unless my relationship to God is right, my sympathy for men will lead me astray and them also; but when once I am right with God, I can love my neighbour as God has loved me. How has God loved me? God has loved me to the end of all my sinfulness, the end of all my self-will, all my selfishness, all my stiff-neckedness, all my pride, all my self-interest; now He says—"love one another, as I have loved you." I am to show to my fellow-men the same love that God showed to me. That is Christianity in practical working order.

Chapter XVI

OURSELVES: I: ME: MINE

Ourselves and Conscience

CONSCIENCE is the innate law in nature whereby man knows he is known.

N.B. THE HALF TRUTH AND HALF ERROR OF SUCH PHRASES AS "CONSCIENCE IS THE VOICE OF GOD" AND "CONSCIENCE CAN BE EDUCATED" WILL BE DEALT WITH.

- 1. Conscience before the Fall (Genesis 2:16–17; 3:2–3)
 - (a) Consciousness of Self
 - (b) Consciousness of the World (Genesis 3:1–24)
 - (c) Consciousness of God

THESE THREE ARE THE SEVERAL SIDES OF MAN'S PERSONAL LIFE.

- 2. Conscience after the Fall (John 3:19-21)
 - (a) The Standard of the Natural Person (Romans 2:12–15)
 - (b) The Standard of the Nations—Pagan (Matthew 25:31–46)
 - (c) The Standard of the Naturally Pious (Acts 26:9; John 16:2)
- 3. Conscience in the Faithful (1 Corinthians 8:7–12)
 - (a) Conscience and Character in the Saint (Romans 9:1; John 17:22)
 - (b) Conscience and Conduct in the Saint (2 Corinthians 1:12)
 - (c) Conscience and Communion of the Saint (1 John 1:7; Ephesians 4:13; Hebrews 9:14)

"Conscience is the innate law in human nature whereby man knows he is known." From every standpoint that is a safeguarded definition of conscience.

If conscience were the voice of God, it would be the most contradictory voice man ever heard. For instance, a Hindoo mother obeys her conscience when she treats her child cruelly, and a Christian mother obeys her conscience when she sends her child to Sunday school and brings it up generally "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." If conscience were the voice of God, contrasts of this kind would never occur. "Conscience attaches itself to that system of things which man regards as highest," consequently conscience records differently in different people. The conscience of the Hindoo mother attaches itself to the highest she knows, viz., the Hindoo religion; the conscience of the Christian mother attaches itself to the highest she knows, viz., the revelation of God in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Probably the best illustration of conscience is the human eye. The eye records what it looks at, and conscience may be pictured as the eye of the soul recording what it looks at, and, like the eye, it will always record exactly what it is turned towards. We are apt to lose what Ruskin called the "innocence of sight." The majority of us know what we look at, and we try to tell ourselves what our eyes see. An artist does not use his logical faculties, he records exactly from the innocence of sight. When art students are being trained to sketch from nature, you will find that in looking at a distant hill draped in blue mist, with little touches of white or colour here and there, the beginner will sketch not what he sees, but what he knows those blotches indicate, viz., houses; while the artist gives you the presentation of what he sees, not of what he knows he sees. Something very similar happens with conscience. The recording power of conscience may be distorted or perverted, and conscience itself may be seared. "Some shall depart from the faith, ... having their conscience seared with a hot iron" (1 Timothy 4:1–2).

Then, again, if you throw a white light on trees, the eye records that the trees are green; if you throw a yellow light on the trees, the eye records that the trees are blue; if you throw a red light on trees, the eye records that the trees are brown. Your logical faculties will tell you all the time that the trees are green, but the point of the illustration is that the eye has no business other than to record what it looks at; and it is the same with conscience.

To go back to the illustration of the Hindoo mother and the Christian mother. The conscience of the Hindoo mother looks out on what her religion teaches her to be God and records accordingly. and reasoning on the records of her conscience, she behaves cruelly. The conscience of the Christian mother looks out on God as He is seen in the "white light" of Jesus Christ, and reasoning on what her conscience records, she behaves as a Christian mother should. So it can never be true to call conscience the voice of God. The difference in the records of conscience is accounted for by the varieties of traditional religions, etc. Whether a person is religious or not, conscience attaches itself to the highest he or she knows, and reasoning on that, the life is guided accordingly.

The phrase, "Conscience can be educated," is a truth that is half error. Strictly speaking, conscience cannot be educated. What is altered and educated is a man's reasoning. A man reasons not only on what his senses bring him, but on what the record of his conscience brings him. Immediately you face a man with the "white light" of Jesus Christ (white is pure, true light, and embraces all shades of colour), his conscience records exactly what he sees, his reason is startled and amazed, and his conscience condemns him from every standpoint.

1. Conscience before the Fall (Genesis 2:16–17; 3:2–3)

The words "consciousness" and "conscience" meant the same thing originally; they do not now. In Conscience before the Fall we take the three aspects of a man's personal life, viz., Consciousness of Self, Consciousness of the World, and Consciousness of God.

"And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Genesis 2:16–17). "And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden: but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die" (Genesis 3:2–3).

In these passages the three aspects are clearconsciousness of self, of the world, and of God. It is the consciousness of God which has been most conspicuously blurred by the Fall.

(a) Consciousness of Self

This takes us back to the general subject of Man. When the other creations were passed before Adam in procession "to see what he would call them . . . there was not found an help meet for him." Man has no affinity with the brutes; this instantly distinguishes man clearly and emphatically from the brute creation around him. There is no evidence that a brute is ever conscious of itself, but man is ostensibly self-conscious.

(b) Consciousness of the World

We mean by "the world" the thing that is not my self-"continuum," that which continues to exist outside me. By realising how we come into contact with that which is not ourselves we realise our barriers and limitations. For instance we can never understand the consciousness of an angel, or the consciousness of a dog, because both these creations are constituted differently from the way in which we are constituted.

How do we come in contact with what is not ourselves? By means of a nervous system; consequently we can always say, up to a certain point, how another human being sees things outside himself. How do angels come in contact with that which is not angelic? Certainly not by a nervous system; therefore we have no possibility of knowing how an angel comes in contact with what is not angelic. Read the records in the Bible of angelic appearances, and of the appearances of our Lord after His Resurrection; physical barriers simply did not exist to Him or to them. Physical barriers exist to us because of our nervous system. Angels can come and go through rocks and doors, can appear and disappear in a way we cannot understand. Their consciousness is above ours, different from it. When anyone tries to explain to you how an angel sees and knows things, say to yourself, "private speculation." You will always find that God's Book puts the barrier clearly, "Thus far and no farther." Jesus Christ did not take on Him the consciousness of an angel; He came down to where man was, into the world we live in, and He took on Him a body and a nervous system like our own. Jesus Christ saw the world as we see it, and He came in contact with it as we do (see Hebrews 2:16-18).

We are only conscious of ourselves and of what is outside us by means of a nervous system: our conscious life depends altogether on our nerves. When we are asleep we are not conscious at all. What happens when we sleep? The world "goes out"; the nervous system is not working. An anaesthetic makes the world "go out." The reason we shut up a lunatic in an asylum is because his nervous system relates him to the world differently from the majority of men. He does not record what he sees outside as we do, consequently he becomes so different and possibly dangerous that he has to be confined.

Now think of the lower animals. A great deal is said about the intelligence of dogs, and a great amount of talk about insight, falsely so called, into the nature of a dog. A dog is the most human of all animals, but yet we have no means of knowing how a dog sees what is not itself. We have no more means of knowing how a dog sees than we have of knowing how an angel sees; we simply take our own consciousness and transfer it to the dog. The recognition of these barriers above us and below us is essential to knowledge, and keeps us aware of our limitations. Spiritualists deny that there are any barriers: they claim that we can come in contact with angels, and understand how angels see things.

Remember, the body of man is his glory, not his drawback. It is through the body that man's character is made and manifested. The body is essential to the order of creation to which we belong; "Your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost," says Paul, and we are held responsible for the way we manifest this fact to the world. When a man experiences a great alteration inwardly, his nervous system is altered. This explains what Paul says in 2 Corinthians 5:17: "If any man is in Christ, he is a new creature: the old things are passed away; behold, they are become new" (RV). Wherever the grace of God works effectually in a man's inner nature, his nervous system is altered and the external world begins to take on a new guise. Why? Because he has a new disposition. "If any man is in Christ Jesus," his nervous system will prove that he is a "new creature," and he will begin to see things differently.

Heaven above is brighter blue. Earth around is sweeter green. Something lives in every hue Christless eyes have never seen; Birds with gladder songs o'erflow. Flowers with deeper beauties shine. Since I know, as now I know. I am His and He is mine.

That is not only poetry, it is a fact.

(c) Consciousness of God

These three types of consciousness are clearly manifest in the way Eve talked to the serpent (see Genesis 3:2–3). Eve was conscious of herself, she was conscious of her surroundings, and conscious of God. In our Lord Jesus Christ these three aspects of consciousness were perfectly clear. With us, the consciousness of God has become obliterated, and we miscall all kinds of things "God." The system of things a man considers highest he is apt to call "God." In Adam the consciousness of God was different from our natural consciousness, it was the same as in our Lord. Jesus Christ restores the three aspects of a man's personal life to their pristine vigour: we come into real, definite communion with God through Jesus Christ; we come to a right relationship with our fellow-men and with the world outside, and we come to a right relationship with ourselves, we become God-centred instead of self-centred.

2. Conscience after the Fall (John 3:19-21)

That is where we live to-day, viz., a mixture of Christian and non-Christian, and a great deal that is neither one nor the other. John 3:19–21 is the fundamental analysis: "... Light is come into the world, and men loved the darkness rather than the light; for their works were evil" (RV). What is light? Jesus said, "I am the Light." He also said, "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" Darkness, in this connection, is my own point of view. Immediately a man sees Jesus Christ and understands Who He is, that instant he is criticised and self-condemned; there is no further excuse. Our Lord is the final Standard.

(a) The Standard of the Natural Person

Under this heading we deal with the standard of the natural person—i.e., the one who has never seen or heard of Jesus Christ. In Romans 2:12–15 the contrast is drawn clearly and emphatically between what we may call religious and irreligious people. What is the standard of judgement? The Gentiles knew nothing about Jesus Christ or about the law of God as an external standard, and they were judged according to their conscience. Take the grossest case you can think of—nowhere is there any record of a cannibal tribe thinking it right to eat a man; they always try to conceal it.

(b) The Standard of the Nations

The Standard of the Nations—i.e., pagan nations, who likewise know nothing about Jesus Christ (Matthew 25:31–46). These verses are often applied to Christians, but their primary reference is to the judgement of the nations. The standard for Christians is not these verses in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew; the standard for Christians is our Lord Jesus Christ. In the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew God's magnanimous interpretation of the acts of certain people is revealed, and they are amazed and astounded-"When saw we Thee an hungered? . . . When saw we Thee sick?" We never heard of Thee before. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." The standard of judgement for the natural person is conscience; and the standard of judgement for the nations is conscience.

(c) The Standard of the Naturally Pious

I verily thought with myself [i.e., according to conscience], that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. (Acts 26:9)

If conscience is the voice of God, we have a nice problem to solve! Saul was the acme of conscientiousness. Our Lord refers to the same thing: "They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the hour cometh, that whosoever killeth you shall think that he offereth service unto God," they will think they serve God in putting you to death (John 16:2 RV). That is the outcome of obedience to what is understood as conscience. No one who has read the life of the Apostle Paul and his records of himself could accuse him of not being conscientious—he was hyperconscientious. Conscience is the standard by which men and women are to be judged until they are brought into contact with the Lord Jesus Christ. It is not sufficient for a Christian to live up to the light of his conscience; he must live in a sterner light, the light of the Lord Jesus Christ. Conscience will always record God when once it has been faced by God.

3. Conscience in the Faithful (1 Corinthians 8:7–12)

These verses show that we can be "spectacles" to other Christians. When the natural sight is wrong, spectacles are worn to adjust the vision. We have to be as spectacles to others. So many Christians are short-sighted, so many are long-sighted, and so many have not the right kind of sight; be spectacles to them! A very humble position, but a very useful one. In 1 Corinthians 7 Paul makes a distinction between equal rights and equal duties. The Corinthians have been criticising Paul, and from this chapter onwards he is dealing with their questions, and evidently the whole point is the matter of equal rights. Paul says, "No! equal duties, but not equal rights." We all have equal duties to perform towards God, but not equal rights. Paul deals with the matter in a statesmanlike manner.

There is a difference between "offence" and "stumbling." "And they were offended in Him. But Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country . . ." (Matthew 13:57). "But Jesus knowing in Himself that His disciples murmured at this, said unto them, Doth this cause you to stumble?" (John 6:61 RV; see also Matthew 5:29; 11:6; 13:41; 16:23; 17:27; 18:6–7). Offence means going contrary to someone's private opinion, and it is sometimes our moral duty to give offence. Did Jesus Christ know that He was offending the private opinion of the Pharisees when He allowed His disciples to pluck the ears of corn and eat them on the Sabbath day? Did He know that He was offending them when He healed the sick on the Sabbath day? Certainly He did; and yet our Lord never put an occasion of stumbling in anyone's way. The passage which alludes to Him as "a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence" has another reference.

Stumbling, then, is different from offence. For example, someone who does not know God as well as you do, loves you and continually does what you do because he loves you, and as you watch him, you begin to discern that he is degenerating spiritually, and to your amazement you find it is because he is doing what you are doing. No offence is being given, but he is stumbling, distinctly stumbling. Paul works this out from every standpoint in 1 Corinthians 8 and 9: "As long as I live," he says, "I will never again do those things whereby my brother is made to stumble; I reserve the right to suffer the loss of all things rather than be a hindrance to the gospel: I will not insist on my rights, on my liberty of conscience, but only on my right to give up my rights." Waive aside your own liberty of conscience if it is going to be the means of causing someone to stumble. The application of this is what our Lord teaches in the Sermon on the Mount in practical experience. To put it crudely, the Sermon on the Mount simply means that if you are a disciple of Jesus Christ, you will always do more than your duty, you will always be doing something equivalent to going the second mile. People say, "What a fool you are! Why don't you insist on your rights?" Jesus Christ says, "If you are My disciple, you will insist only on your right to give up your rights."

God educates every one of us from the great general principles down to the scruples.¹⁵ People who are right with God are often guilty of the most ugly characteristics and you are astounded that they do not see it: but wait; if they go on with God, slowly and surely God's Spirit will educate them from the general principles to the particular items, until after a while they are as careful as can be down to the "jots" and "tittles" of their life, thereby proving their sanctification in the growing manifestation of the new disposition God has given them. No wonder the Book of God counsels us to be patient with ourselves and with one another!

(a) Conscience and Character in the Saint

I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost. (Romans 9:1; see also John 17:22) ^{15.} down to the scruple(s): to the smallest item(s).

^{16.} jots and tittles: smallest details; minute things. See Matthew 5:18.

Character is the sum total of a man's actions. You cannot judge a man by the good things he does at times; you must take all the times together, and if in the greater number of times he does bad things, he is a bad character, in spite of the noble things he does intermittently. You cannot judge your character by the one time you spoke kindly to your grandmother if the majority of other times you spoke unkindly. The fact that people say of a man, "Oh well, he does do good things occasionally," proves that he is a bad character; the very statement is a condemnation. Character in a saint means the disposition of Jesus Christ persistently manifested. You cannot appeal to a saint on the line of self-interest; you can only appeal to him on the line of the interests of Jesus Christ. The feeblest, weakest saint becomes a holy terror immediately Jesus Christ is scandalised. Whose honour are we seeking?

(b) Conscience and Conduct in the Saint

For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward. (2 Corinthians 1:12)

The point there is an important one; viz., that the knowledge of evil which came through the Fall gives a man a broad mind but paralyses his action. The restoration of a man by our Lord gives him simplicity, and simplicity always shows itself in actions. Do not mistake simplicity for stupidity. By "simplicity" is meant the simplicity that was in Jesus Christ. Paul says, "I fear, lest by any means . . . your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ" (2 Corinthians 11:3). There are men and women of the world whose minds are poisoned by all kinds of evil, they are marvellously generous in regard to their notions of other people, but they can do nothing, every bit of their knowledge and broadmindedness paralyses them. The essence of the Gospel of God working through conscience and conduct is that it shows itself at once in action. God can make simple, guileless people out of cunning, crafty people; that is the marvel of the grace of God. It can take the strands of evil and twistedness out of a man's mind and imagination and make him simple towards God, so that his life becomes radiantly beautiful by the miracle of God's grace.

(c) Conscience and Communion of the Saint
But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another.... (1 John 1:7; see also Ephesians 4:13; Hebrews 9:14)

These references emphasise the "together" aspect. Nowhere is "Enthusiasm for Humanity" mentioned in the Bible, that is a modern phrase. "Enthusiasm for the communion of saints" is frequently mentioned, and the argument in these verses and many others is that if we keep our conscience open towards God as He is revealed in Jesus Christ, we shall find He will bring other souls into oneness with Himself through us.

In 1 Corinthians 4:3–4 ("But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgement: Yea, I judge not mine own self. For I know nothing against myself; yet am I not hereby justified: but He that judgeth me is the Lord" RV). Paul mentions three standards of judgement which he has left behind: 1. Judgement according to the standard of the "special set"—"It is a very small thing that I should be judged of you." 2. The standard of universal human judgement—"or of man's judgement." 3. The standard of conscience—"Yea, I judge not mine own self."

The standard Paul accepts as the final one is our Lord. "But He that judgeth me is the Lord."

One of the greatest disciplines in spiritual life is the darkness that comes not on account of sin, but because the Spirit of God is leading you from walking in the light of your conscience to walking in the light of the Lord. Defenders of the faith are inclined to be bitter until they learn to walk in the light of the Lord. When you have learned to walk in the light of the Lord, bitterness and contention are impossible.

Chapter XVII

SPIRIT: THE DOMAIN AND DOMINION OF SPIRIT

Process of the Trinity

N.B. "THE ENTIRE PROVINCE OF LIFE, BOTH IN ITS LOWEST FORMS OR STAGES AND IN ITS HIGHEST, IS THE PROVINCE OF SPIRIT."

- 1. An Instructive Parallel (1 Corinthians 2:1–14)
- 2. What the Bible Says about the Godhead (John 4:24)

The Essential Nature of God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost Will (Exodus 3:14; John 10:17–18; 16:8–11) Love (1 John 4:8; Revelation 1:5; Romans 5:5)

Light (1 John 1:5; John 8:12; John 16:13)

The Spirit is the first power we practically experience but the last power we come to understand. The working of the Spirit of God is much easier to experience than to try and understand, the reason being that we form our ideas out of things we have seen and handled and touched; but when we come to think about the Godhead and the Spirit, language is strained to its limit, and all we can do is to use pictures to try and convey our ideas. Yet in spite of the difficulty, it is very necessary that we should think as Christians as well as live as Christians. It is not sufficient to experience the reality of the Spirit of God within us and His wonderful work; we have to bring our brains into line with our experience so that we can think and understand along Christian lines. It is because so few do think along Christian lines that it is easy for wrong teaching and wrong thinking to come in, especially in connection with the Spirit.

1. An Instructive Parallel (1 Corinthians 2:11-14)

In these verses the Apostle Paul is referring to the basis of how to think. The way we understand the things of a man, he says, is by the spirit of man; and the way we understand the things of God is by the Spirit of God; that just as the spirit of man knows the things of a man, so the Spirit of God alone knows the things of God. This is the first principle that the Apostle Paul lays down, and we must see that we grasp and clearly understand it. The next step is clear, viz., that we cannot expound the things of God unless we have the Spirit of God. There is an analogy, Paul says: as there is a law in the natural world whereby we reason and think and argue about natural things, so there is a law in the spiritual world; but the law which runs through the natural world is not the same as in the spiritual world. We can only discern the spiritual world by the Spirit of God, not by our own spirit; and if we have not received the Spirit of God we shall never discern spiritual things or understand them; we shall move continually in a dark world, and come slowly to the conclusion that the New Testament language is very exaggerated. But when we have received the Spirit of God, we begin to "know the things that are freely given to us of God," and to compare "spiritual things with spiritual," "not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth."

The Apostle Paul here is at the very heart of things as he always is, because he is not only inspired by the Spirit of God in the way inspiration is generally understood, but he is "moved by the Holy Ghost" in a special manner to expound the basis of Christian doctrine.

The things of God cannot be expounded by the spirit of man, but only by the Spirit of God. "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (1 Corinthians 2:14). For example, take the attitude of the "master in Israel" to Jesus Christ. Nicodemus believed that the germ of life was in him and in all men like him; but Our Lord brought before him this truth which Paul is expounding, viz., "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again."

Let us get this fundamental distinction clearly in our minds: we cannot penetrate the things of God and understand them by our intelligence: the only way we can understand the things of God is by the Spirit of God. Every Christian unquestionably is mentally agnostic; that is, all we know about God we have accepted by revelation, we did not find it out for ourselves. We did not worry it out by thinking. Or work it out by reasoning. We did not say, "Because so and so is true in the natural world, therefore it must be true in the spiritual world." We cannot find out God in that way. Jesus said, "If you would know My doctrine," i.e., My logic, My reasoning and My thinking, "first do My will, believe in Me, commit yourself to Me, obey Me; then you will know whether My doctrine is of God, or whether I speak of Myself" (see John 7:17).

There is a great deal of teaching abroad to-day which says that we have the Spirit of God in us and all that is needed is for it to be developed; if people are placed into the right conditions, the spirit in them will develop and grow and in that way they will come to understand God. This is contrary to all that Jesus Christ taught, and contrary to the New Testament all through. We have to come to the stage of realising that we are paupers in our own spirit; we have no power to grasp God, we cannot begin to understand Him. If ever we are going to understand God, we must receive His Spirit, then He will begin to expound to us the things of God. We understand the things of the world by our natural intelligence, and we understand the things of God by "the spirit which is of God."

2. What the Bible Says about the Godhead

God is a Spirit: and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. (John 4:24)

Jesus Christ is not implying that I must worship God sincerely; "in spirit" does not refer to my spirit, i.e. to human sincerity, but to the Spirit of God. I must have the same Spirit in me before I can worship God.

"God is a Spirit." What is spirit? Instantly we find insuperable barriers to thought. Did you ever try for one minute to think of God? We cannot think of a Being Who had no beginning and Who has no end; consequently men without the Spirit of God make a god out of ideas of their own. It is a great moment in our lives when we realise we must be agnostic about God, that we cannot get hold of Him. Then comes the revelation that Jesus Christ will give to us the Holy Spirit, Who will lift us into a new domain and enable us to understand all that He reveals, and to live the life God wants us to live.

The Essential Nature of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost:

Will (Exodus 3:14; John 10:17–18; 16:8–11) Love (1 John 4:8; Revelation 1:5; Romans 5:5) Light (1 John 1:5; John 8:12; 16:13)

The first thing to notice is that what is true of God the Father is true also of God the Son and of God the Holy Ghost, because They are one. The main characteristics which are the same in the Father and in the Son and in the Holy Ghost are Will, Love and Light. The point to emphasise is that the essential nature of One Person of the Trinity is the essential nature of the other Persons of the Trinity. If we understand God the Holy Ghost, we shall understand God the Son and God the Father (see Matthew 11:27): therefore the first thing for us to do is to receive the Holy Ghost (see Luke 11:13).

The essential nature of God the Father is Spirit. In order to show the difficulty of putting this into words, ask yourself how much room does thinking take up? Why, no room at all because thought is of the nature of spirit. It is by means of our spirit that we understand the things with which we come in contact. "God is a Spirit," therefore if we are going to understand God, we must have the Spirit of God. Man's spirit takes up no room and the Spirit of God takes up no room, they work and interwork. My spirit has no power in itself to lay hold of God; but when the Spirit of God comes into my spirit, He energises my spirit, then the rest depends upon me. If I do not obey the Spirit of God and bring into the light the wrong things He reveals and let Him deal with them, I shall grieve Him, and may grieve Him away.

"And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: and He said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you" (Exodus 3:14). The first fundamental characteristic of God the Father, or God Almighty, is that of pure free will. There is no such thing as pure free will in man; God Almighty is the only Being Who has the power of pure free will. By His will He created what His breath sustains. The Bible revelation is that the essential nature of God is this power of free will.

What is the characteristic of God the Son? "I lay down My life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of My Father" (John 10:17–18). No man has the power to lay down his life in the way Jesus Christ is referring to. Remember, Jesus Christ is God Incarnate, and the fundamental characteristic of God the Father is the fundamental characteristic of God the Son. Our Lord says, in effect, "I lay down My life because I choose to lay it down, and I take it again because I choose to."

"And when He is come, He will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness and of judgement" (John 16:8). The subject of human free will is nearly always either overstated or understated. There is a pre-determination in man's spirit which makes him will along certain lines; but no man has the power to make an act of pure free will. When the Spirit of God comes into a man, He brings His own generating will power and causes him to will with God, and we have the amazing revelation that the saint's free choices are the pre-determinations of God. That is a most wonderful thing in Christian psychology, viz., that a saint chooses exactly what God pre-determined he should choose. If you have never received the Spirit of God this will be one of the things which is "foolishness" to you: but if you have received the Spirit and are obeying Him, you find He brings your spirit into complete harmony with God and the sound of your goings and the sound of God's goings are one and the same.

New Theology, Christian Science and Theosophy all teach that God created the Being called His Son in order to realise Himself. They say, in fact, that the term "Son of God" means not only our Lord Jesus Christ, but the whole creation of man. God is All, and the creation of man was in order to help God to realise Himself. The practical outcome of this line of thinking is to make men say, "It is absurd to talk about sin and the fall; sin is merely a defect, and to talk about the need of an atonement is nonsense." The Bible nowhere says that God created the world in order to realise Himself. The Bible reveals that God was absolutely Self-sufficient, and that the manifestation of the Son of God was for another purpose altogether, viz., for the solution of the gigantic problem caused by sin. The marvel of the creation of man is that he is made "of the earth, earthy." God allowed the enemy to work on this creation of man in a way he cannot work on any other creation, but ultimately God is going to overthrow the rule of His enemy by a being "a little lower than the angels," viz., man. When God came into this order of things, He did not come as an angel, He came as a Man, He took upon Him our human nature. This is the marvel of the Incarnation.

We know nothing about God the Father saving as Jesus Christ has revealed Him. "Philip saith unto Him, Lord, shew us the Father. . . . Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip? He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." The characteristics of God Almighty are mirrored for us in Jesus Christ; therefore if we want to know what God is like, we must study Jesus Christ.

The first fundamental characteristic of the mighty nature of God is will; consequently when God's Spirit comes into our spirit, we can will to do what God wants us to do. "For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure" (Philippians 2:13). Will is not a faculty. We talk of a person having a weak will, or a strong will; that is misleading. "Will" means the whole nature active, and when we are energised by the Spirit of God, we are enabled to do what we could not do before; that is, we are able to obey God.

The next great fundamental characteristic of God the Father is Love. "God is love" (1 John 4:8). The Bible does not say that God is loving, but that God is love. The phrase "the lovingkindness of God" is frequently used, but when the nature of God is revealed, the Bible does not say God is a loving Being, it says, "God is love."

The same characteristic is revealed in God the Son, viz., love, and instantly the kind of love is shown: He "loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood" (Revelation 1:5): not a love that overlooks sin, but a love the essential nature of which is that it delivers from sin.

"... the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us" (Romans 5:5). This does not mean that when we receive the Holy Spirit He enables us to have the capacity for loving God, but that He sheds abroad in our hearts the love of God, a much more fundamental and marvellous thing. It is pathetic the number of people who are piously trying to make their poor human hearts love God! The Holy Spirit sheds abroad in my heart, not the power to love God, but the very nature of God; and the nature of God coming into me makes me part of God's consciousness, not God part of my consciousness. I am unconscious of God because I have been taken up into His consciousness. Paul puts it in Galatians 2:20 (a verse with which we are perfectly familiar, but which none of us will ever fathom, no matter how long we live, or how much we experience of God's grace): "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Again in Galatians 1:15-16, Paul refers to the receiving of the very nature of Jesus Christ: "When it pleased God, Who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by His grace, to reveal His Son in me." This is the true idea of a saint. A saint is not a human being who is trying to be good, trying by effort and prayer and longing and obedience to attain as many saintly characteristics as possible; a saint is a being who has been re-created. "If any man is in Christ, he is a new creation" (RV mg).

We have to be solemnly careful that we do not travesty and belittle the work of God and the Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ. If we belittle it in the tiniest degree, although we may do it in ignorance, we shall surely suffer. The first thing which will make us belittle the Atonement is getting out of sympathy with God into sympathy with human beings, because when we do this we begin to drag down the tremendous revelation that the essential nature of God is Will and Love and Light, and that it is these characteristics which are imparted to us by the Holy Ghost. We have not these characteristics naturally. By nature our hearts are darkened away from God; we have no power to generate will within ourselves; we have no power to love God when we like, and our hearts are darkened.

Again, the essential nature of God the Father is Light. "This then is the message which we have heard of Him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all" (1 John 1:5). There is no variableness in God, no "shadow that is cast by turning" (RV). We are told that where there is light and substance, there must be shadow; but there is no shadow in God, none whatever.

What does Jesus Christ say of Himself? "I am the Light of the world" (John 8:12): no shadow in Jesus Christ. And of the Holy Spirit, Jesus said, "Howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth: for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak: and He will shew you things to come" (John 16:13).

Active Will, pervading Love showing itself as Light in God the Father; active Will, pervading Love showing itself as Light in the Lord Jesus Christ; all-pervading energy and Will and all-pervading Love showing itself as Light in the Holy Ghost. These are the fundamental characteristics of the Godhead.

To revise, "God is love." No man who is wideawake naturally ever believes that unless he has received the Spirit of God, it is foolishness to him. In the Sermon on the Mount Jesus Christ says, in effect, that when as His disciples we have been initiated into the kind of life He lives, we are based on the knowledge that God is our heavenly Father and that He is love. Then there comes the wonderful working out of this knowledge in our lives, it is not that we won't worry, but that we have come to the place where we cannot worry, because the Holy Spirit has shed abroad the love of God in our hearts, and we find that we can never think of anything our heavenly Father will forget. Although great clouds and perplexities may come, as they did in the case of Job, and of the Apostle Paul, and in the case of every saint, yet they never touch "the secret place of the Most High." "Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea." The Spirit of God has so centred us in God and everything is so rightly adjusted that we do not fear.

We cannot give ourselves the Holy Spirit; the Holy Spirit is God Almighty's gift if we will simply become poor enough to ask for Him. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" (Luke 11:13). But when the Holy Spirit has come in, there is something we can do and God cannot do, we can obey Him. If we do not obey Him, we shall grieve Him. "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God" (Ephesians 4:30). Over and over again we need to be reminded of Paul's counsel, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure." Thank God, it is gloriously and majestically true that the Holy Spirit can work in us the very nature of Jesus Christ if we will obey Him, until in and through our mortal flesh may be manifested works which will make men glorify our Father in heaven, and take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus.

Light is the most marvellous description of clear, beautiful moral character from God's standpoint. "If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7). "If we walk in the light . . ." What light? ". . . as God is in the light"! What light? "I am the Light of the world"! What light?—the light of the Holy Spirit! "And this is the condemnation," said Jesus, "that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil" (John 3:19). "Darkness" is my own point of view, my prejudices and preconceived determinations; if the Spirit of God agrees with these, well and good; if not, I shall go my own way.

The "weaning" that goes on when a soul is being taken out of walking in the light of its own convictions into walking in the light of God is a time of peril. When a child is being weaned, it is fractious, and when God is trying to wean us from our own ways of looking at things in order to bring us into the full light of the Holy Spirit, we are fractious too. If we persist in sticking to our own convictions, we shall end in darkness; but if we walk in the light, as God is in the light, recognising and relying on the Holy Spirit, we shall be brought into a complete understanding of God's way and we shall have "fellowship one with another" i.e., with all those who are walking in the same light.

Then comes this wonderful thing—we shall have a purity of life in God's sight that is too pure for us to begin to understand; "and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." Anything less than that—I say it measuring every word—anything less than that would be blasphemous. If God cannot cleanse us from all sin and make us "holy and without blame" in His sight, then Jesus Christ has totally misled us, and the Atonement is not what it claims to be. Oh, if we would only get into the way of bringing our limitations before God and telling Him He cannot do these things, we should begin to see the awful wickedness of unbelief, and why our Lord was so vigorous against it, and why the Apostle John places fearfulness and unbelief at the head of all the most awful sins (see Revelation 21:8). When the Holy Spirit comes in, unbelief is turned out and the energy of God is put into us, and we are enabled to will and to do of His good pleasure. When the Holy Spirit comes in He sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts, so that we are able to show our fellows the same love that God has shown to us. When the Holy Spirit comes in He makes us as "light," and our righteousness will exceed the righteousness of the most moral upright natural man because the supernatural has been made natural in us.

Chapter XVIII

SPIRIT: THE DOMAIN AND DOMINION OF SPIRIT

Mundane Universe

Spirit as Physical Force

- 1. World of Matter (Psalm 104:30; 33:6; 2 Peter 3:5)
- 2. World of Nature (Genesis 1:2; Job 26:13)
- 3. World of Self (John 6:63; James 2:26; Ezekiel 1:20; Revelation 11:11)

The student will find that we claim that the Bible gives the working explanation of all things. We found in the last chapter that the fundamental characteristics of the Godhead are Will, Love and Light; that God is the only Being Who can will pure will, and that when we receive the Holy Spirit He energises our spirits so that we are able to do the will of God. The present day is the dispensation of the Holy Spirit. We are familiar with the phrase, but do we understand sufficiently Who the Holy Spirit is? The Holy Spirit is identical with God the Father and with God the Son; and being a Person, He must exercise an influence. The more pronounced a person, the more powerful is his influence; but we have to recognise that nowadays the majority of people do not know the Holy Ghost as a Person, they know Him only as an influence.

Spirit as Physical Force

By the Mundane Universe is meant the terrestrial world in which we live, the earth and rocks and trees, and the people we come in contact with. When we dealt with the physical world, we found that everything leads us back to the Bible revelation, viz., that at the back of all is spirit force, not matter and material things, but spirit. What is this tremendous force? The Bible reveals that the force behind everything is the great Spirit of God. A great change has come over what is called material science, and scientists are coming back to the Bible point of view, viz., that at the back of everything is spirit; that the material world holds itself in existence by spirit. In the early days when men tried to explain the material world, they said that it was made up of atoms; then they found that those atoms could be split up, and the split-up elements were called molecules; then they found that the molecules could be split up, and that the split-up molecules were made of electrons; then they discovered that the electron itself is like a solar system.¹⁷

These facts are significant because they point out the absurdity of the cry that the Bible and modern science do not agree; how could they? If the Bible agreed with modern science, in about fifty years both would be out of date. All scientific findings have at one time been modern. Science is simply man's attempt to explain what he knows.

An important aside—do not belittle the Bible and say that it has only to do with man's salvation. The Bible is a universe of revelation facts which explains the world in which we live, and it is simply "giving a sop to Satan" 18 to say, as some modern teachers do, that the Bible does not pretend to tell us how the world came into existence. The Bible claims to be the only exposition of how the world came into being and how it keeps going, and the only Book which tells us how we may understand the world.

1. The World of Matter

By the word of the LORD were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of His mouth. (Psalm 33:6; see also Psalm 104:30; 2 Peter 3:5)

These passages simply express what is revealed all through the Bible, viz., that God created the world out of nothing. The Bible does not say God "emanated" the world. The exponents of the clever modern idea of emanation say that God evolved the world out of Himself. The Bible says that God created the world "by the breath of His mouth." Meditate for a moment on the word "creation," and see what a supernatural word it is. No philosopher ever thought of it, no expounder of natural history ever imagined such a word. We can understand "evolution" and "emanation," but we simply do not know what "creation" means. There is only one Being Who knows, and that is God Himself, and the Bible says that God created the heaven and the earth.

What is the world of matter? For instance, I am looking at a book, I see it is bound in a red cover, it is flexible, and has black marks on it. I can account by my senses for the redness and the blackness and ^{17.} See an explanation of Chambers' use of "atoms" and "molecules" in the introduction to this book.

^{18.} giving a sop to Satan: pacifying, appeasing, buying off with a present or bribe.

the flexibility, but the one thing I cannot describe is what it is that awakens those sensations. I see a clock, and I should probably describe it in the same way as you would—that it is hard and smooth, and brown and white; I can hear a sound, and see its face, and so on; all of which can be described as the result of my sensations, but what is it makes me have those sensations? The way we see things depends on our nerves, but what the thing is in itself that makes us see things in a particular way we do not know; that is, we do not know what matter is. The Bible says the world of matter was created by God; the way we interpret it will depend on what spirit we have.

2. The World of Nature

The world of nature (Genesis 1:2; Job 26:13)—i.e., the order in which material things appear to me. I explain the world outside me by thinking; then if I can explain the world outside me by my mind, there must have been a Mind that made it. That is logical, simple and clear; consequently atheism is what the Bible calls it, the belief of a fool. "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God" (Psalm 53:1). An atheist is one who says, "I can explain by my mind to a certain extent what things are like outside, but there is not a mind behind that created them."

"In the beginning" God created things out of nothing; matter did not exist before God created it. It was God Who created it, out of nothing; not out of Himself. "And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters" (Genesis 1:2). This verse refers to the reconstruction of things out of chaos. As we pointed out in dealing with the subject of Man, in all probability there was a former order of things, which was ruined by disobedience, thereby producing the chaos out of which God reconstructed the order of things which we know, and which we so differently interpret.

"For by Him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by Him" (Colossians 1:16). We hear it said that if God created everything that was created, then He is responsible for the presence of sin. The Bible reveals all through that God has taken the responsibility for sin. What is the proof that He has? Calvary! God created everything that was created; God created the being who became Satan and He created the being who became the sinner. But sin is not a creation; sin is the outcome of a wrong relationship set up between two of God's creations. From the very beginning God holds Himself responsible for the possibility of sin (cf. Revelation 13:8). Nowhere does the Bible say that God holds man responsible for having the disposition of sin; but what God does hold man responsible for is refusing to let Him deliver him from that heredity the moment he sees and understands that that is what Jesus Christ came to do. John 3:19 is the final word on condemnation, "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil."

We have seen that God is responsible for the established order of Nature; but there are conflicting views about the world of Nature. If you read the Book of Job carefully you will find there that the world of Nature is a wild contradiction; you cannot explain it satisfactorily at all. If you start out and say that God is good, you will come across some facts which seem to prove He is not good. How is it that we come to different conclusions about the world: one man sees everything as bad as bad can be, while another man sees everything as good as good can be? It all depends on the spirit within a man. There may be as many accounts of the world of Nature as there are human beings. That is why the world of Nature seems such a contradiction. The spirit within a man accounts for the way he interprets what he sees outside; and if I have not the Spirit of God, I shall never interpret the world outside as God interprets it; I shall continually have to shut my eyes and deny certain facts. I shall do what the Christian Scientist does, deny that facts are facts.

Along this line we see the limitations of trying to dispute with a man who says there is no God, you cannot disprove it to him; but get him to receive the Holy Spirit and his logic will alter immediately. That is Paul's argument in 1 Corinthians 2—that the spirit of man understands the things of a man, but that the spirit of man cannot understand the things of God. If I have not the Spirit of God, I shall never interpret the world of Nature in the way God does; the Bible will be to me simply an Oriental tradition, a "cunningly devised fable." If I am to understand the Bible, I must have the Spirit of God.

As Christians, we recognise that we must have the Spirit of God for practical living, but do we realise the need of the Spirit of God for thinking? Christian workers use dangerous weapons against what they take to be the enemies of Christianity (but in reality against our Lord Himself) simply because they are not renewed in the spirit of their mind; they won't think on God's line; they refuse to make their minds work. We have no business to be ignorant about the way God created the world, or to be unable to discern "the arm of the LORD" behind things. When the Holy Spirit has transformed our practical life, He begins to stir up our minds, and the point is, will we bring our minds into harmony with the new way of living? Jesus Christ laid down a remarkable principle for practical living and for practical thinking, that is, He taught His disciples how to think by "correspondences." "I am the true Vine." Is the natural vine false? No, the natural vine is the shadow of the real. "My Father giveth you the true Bread from heaven." Is the bread we eat false? No, it is the shadow of the real bread. "I am the Door," and so on.

If we have the Spirit of God within, we shall be able to interpret in the light of God what we see with our eyes and hear with our ears and understand with our minds. "The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light" (Isaiah 60:19). May this not mean that the ordinary days and nights bring before us facts which we cannot explain, but that when we receive the Spirit of God we get a line of explanation? For instance, we cannot explain life, yet it is a very commonplace fact that we are alive. We cannot explain love; we cannot explain death; we cannot explain sin; yet these are all everyday facts. The world of Nature is a confusion; there is nothing clear about it; it is a confusing, wild chaos. Immediately we receive the Spirit of God, He energises our spirits not only for practical living but for practical thinking, and we begin to see "the arm of the LORD," i.e., to see God's order in and through all the chaos.

"I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth. because Thou hast . . . revealed [these things] unto babes" (Matthew 11:25). Our Lord thanked His Father that He was the only Medium the Father had for revealing Himself; and the invitation "Come unto Me" is given to disciples, not to sinners. Watch your own mind if you have been born again of the Spirit of God, and you will understand the condition of mind Jesus Christ is alluding to—"all ye that labour and are heavy laden"; trying to think out what cannot be thought out, and Jesus Christ's message to all such is, "Come unto Me, . . . and I will give you rest." "I am the Way." "If My Spirit is imparted to you, you will begin to see things as I do." "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again," i.e., born again for practical thinking as well as for practical living.

It is a strange thing the indiscriminate way we are taught to think as pagans and live as Christians. So much of our thinking explanations are pagan; men who are being trained to teach others are taught to think as pagans, and the consequence is what we are seeing. We have to bring our thinking into line with the living Spirit of God, to take laborious trouble to think, to "meditate on these things," "bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." Never allow your mind to run off on wild speculations, that is where danger begins, "I want to find out this and that." The sin of Eve begins whenever the mind is allowed to run off at a tangent on speculations. "Come unto Me," says Jesus. "I am the Way," not only the way to be saved and sanctified and to live as a Christian, but the way to think as a Christian. "Neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomso-ever the Son will reveal Him," and Jesus will reveal the Father to anyone who will come to Him.

3. The World of Self

It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life. (John 6:63; see also James 2:26; Ezekiel 1:20; Revelation 11:11)

Can Jesus Christ speak to me to-day? Certainly He can, through the Holy Spirit; but if I take the words of Jesus without His Spirit, they are of no avail to me. I can conjure with them, I can do all kinds of things with them, but they are not "spirit" and "life." When the Holy Spirit is in me, He will bring to my remembrance what Jesus has said and make His Words live. The Spirit within me enables me to assimilate the words of Jesus. The Holy Spirit exercises a remarkable power in that He will frequently take a text out of its Bible context and put it into the context of our life. We have all had the experience of a verse coming to us right out of its Bible setting and becoming alive in the setting of our own life, and that word becomes a precious, secret possession. See that you keep it a secret possession, don't "cast ye your pearls before swine"—those are the strong words of our Lord.

To use an ingenious symbol—we read that when Jesus was led away to be crucified, they "were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to say, a place of a skull," and that is where Jesus Christ is always crucified; that is where He is put to shame to-day, viz., in the heads of men who won't bring their thinking into line with the Spirit of God. If men are inspired by the Holy Spirit, their words are built on the Word of God. Paul urges us to be renewed in the spirit of our mind; and the way we are renewed is not by impulses or impressions, but by being gripped by the Word of God. The habit of getting a word from God is right; don't give up till you get one. Never go on an impression, that will pass, there is nothing in it; there is nothing lasting until a word becomes living, when it does it is the Holy Spirit bringing back to your remembrance some word of Jesus Christ.

In this way we are able to discern "the arm of the LORD," and the World of Self becomes what Jesus Christ wants it to be, but if we are ruled by a spirit other than the Spirit of God, e.g., the spirit of "my right to myself," we shall explain the world of Self according to that spirit. We shall never explain things as Jesus Christ explains them, we will begin to patronise Him; or if we do not dare to patronise Jesus Christ, we will patronise the Apostle Paul. Anything to appear "up to date," because the spirit that is in man, no matter how cultured and moral and religious, or how favourable it may appear to men, if it is not indwelt by the Spirit of God, must be scattering away from Jesus Christ. "He that gathereth not with Me scattereth abroad."

"Whithersoever the spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels" (Ezekiel 1:20). This is a picture of the ultimate working of everything in harmony with God by His Spirit. "And when the cherubim went, the wheels went by them: and when the cherubim lifted up their wings to mount up from the earth, the same wheels also turned not from beside them" (Ezekiel 10:16). The cherubim are an Old Testament figure of the Mystical Body of Christ. Moses was told to make two cherubim: "And thou shalt make two cherubim of gold, of beaten work shalt thou make them, in the two ends of the mercy seat" (Exodus 25:18-22); and yet God had said, "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth" (Exodus 20:4). The cherubim are not like anything in heaven above or in the earth beneath, but like something which is now being made, viz., the Mystical Body of Christ. This is prefigured in Genesis; when Adam and Eve were driven out of the garden of Eden there was placed "at the east of the garden of Eden Cherubim, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life" (Genesis 3:24). The cherubim are the guardians into the holiest of all, and when the Mystical Body of Christ is complete, all the "machinery" of this earth will be moved and directed by the Spirit of God.

To be saved and sanctified means to be possessed by the Spirit, not only for living, but for thinking. If we will bring our thinking into captivity to the Holy Spirit, we form what is termed "Nous." Nous is a Greek word meaning responsible intelligence. Whenever we get to this point of responsible intelligence, we have come to a sure line of thinking. Until the nous is formed in natural life and in spiritual life, we get at things by intuition, by impulse, but there is no responsible intelligence. The writer to the Hebrews refers to this, "By this time you ought to be teachers, but you want "spooned meat" again: by this time you ought to be robust and mature, no longer either children or fools, but men and women able to distinguish between right and wrong, between good and bad, with a thoroughly informed, responsible intelligence" (see Hebrews 5:12-14). How many of us have allowed the Spirit of God to bring us there and enabled us to think along Jesus Christ's line? Or do we have to say when these subjects are referred to,

"Oh, I leave those things for other people"? We have no business to talk like that, we ought to be at our best for God. We have not only to be good lovers of God, but good thinkers, and it is only along this line that we can "try the spirits whether they are of God."

How are we going to test the teaching that is abroad to-day? A man or a woman may have a real Christian experience, but if their minds are not informed and disciplined, their intelligence becomes a hotbed for heresy. Our thinking would be revolutionised if we would bring our imagination into line with the Bible context, viz., the heart of God. The Bible not only explains God, it explains the world in which we live, it explains not only things that are right, but things that are wrong. If we start out with the idea that everything is going well and all is bright and happy and then there is an earthquake, or someone is killed by lightning, or there are tremendous floods, or a shocking murder, or worse crime, the idea with which we started out will be flatly contradicted by the world outside, that is, by the facts we see and know. The Bible and the outside world agree, but both the Bible and the outside world are an absolute puzzle to us until we receive the Spirit of God. When we receive the Spirit of God, we are lifted into a totally new realm, and if we will bring our minds into harmony with what the Spirit of God reveals, begin to discipline ourselves and bring every thought into captivity, we shall not only begin to discern God's order in the Bible, but our eyes will be opened and the secrets of the world will be understood and grasped. When we read the records of history we shall begin to discover the way in which God has been at work; and we shall discover when we look at our own lives, not a number of haphazard chances, but some preconceived idea of God which we did not know being worked out. We shall begin to find to our amazement that our lives are answers to the prayers of the Holy Ghost, and that at the back of everything is the mind of God.

"But we have the mind of Christ," says Paul. To have the mind of Christ means a great deal more than having the Spirit of Christ. To have the mind of Christ means to think as Jesus thought, and He always thought from one centre, viz., God. "For I have not spoken of Myself; but the Father which sent Me, He gave Me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak" (John 12:49). Where did our Lord get His words from? From the Spirit that was in Him. The tongue in our Lord Jesus Christ got to its right place because He never spoke from the spirit of His right to Himself; and our tongue and our brain will only be in the right place when we learn to obey the Spirit of God in thinking. Thank God we are given a line of explanation for everything under heaven. When we receive the Holy Spirit and obey Him, we find that Jesus Christ does satisfy the last aching abyss of our minds as well as our hearts. The one word ringing out over our mental life is "Obey! Obey!" Those of you who know what obedience means in the moral realm, bring it into the intellectual realm. Are you bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ? Are you continually being renewed in the spirit of your mind? Is your thinking in absolute harmony with Jesus Christ's thinking?

The day we live in is a day of wild imaginations everywhere, unchecked imaginations in music, in literature, and, worst of all, in the interpretation of Scripture. People are going off on wild speculations, they get hold of one line and run clean off at a tangent and try to explain everything on that line, then they go off on another line: none of it is in accordance with the Spirit of God. There is no royal road for bringing our brains into harmony with the Spirit God has put in our hearts; we do not get there all at once, but only by steady discipline.

SPIRIT: THE DOMAIN AND DOMINION OF SPIRIT

Man's Universe Job 12:10

NATURAL NOUS BEWILDERED NOUS SPIRITUAL NOUS

- 1. Spirit as Soul-Making Power
 - (a) Particular Form (Genesis 2:7; 6:17)
 - (b) Personal Form (Numbers 16:22; 27:16; Zechariah 12:1; Isaiah 19:3; Psalm 2:10)
 - (c) Physical Form (Job 32:8; Genesis 7:22; Hebrews 2:19; Revelation 13:15; Job 34:14–15)
- 2. Spirit in the Flesh
 - (a) Independent (1 Corinthians 2:12–14)
 - (b) Dependent (Psalm 32:2; 2 Corinthians 7:1; James 3:15)
 - (c) Death (Romans 7:18–23; 8:5–7; 1 Peter 3:19)

N.B. WE DEAL HERE PARTICULARLY WITH SPIRIT IN THE NATURAL MAN.

First of all we will deal with "Nous." As already stated, nous means responsible intelligence both in a natural man and a spiritual man. Jesus Christ is the expression of the responsible intelligence of God. He is "Logos," the Word of God Incarnate. There is the same thing in man, that is, there is spirit.

Natural Nous

The moment when responsible intelligence begins in the natural life differs; some people never seem to reach it at all, they live as children and die as children, or more as simpletons than children. They have impulses and imaginations and fancies, but they never come to a responsible intelligence. A child is not responsible, but the statements of persons of mature intelligence are responsible; consequently we are judged by our words. It is quite true that there are times when we have to say, "answer my meaning, not my words," but those times are exceptional. The things we express, the statements we make, and the thoughts we form, are all stamped with responsibility.

There is a capacity in man apart from the Spirit of God to know that there is a God. "For the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead" (Romans 1:20). We are speaking of natural nous apart altogether from the work of grace. As soon as a man becomes responsibly intelligent, he comes to the conclusion that there must be responsible intelligence not less than his own behind everything there is, and God holds every man responsible for knowing that. "... he that cometh to God must believe that He is" (Hebrews 11:6).

The ordinance of God is placed in the natural make-up of a man, and when a man becomes responsibly intelligent he is able to discern a great many things, things which he calls justice and righteousness, and the Apostle Paul states that the heathen are judged by conscience (see Romans 1:20–21). We are getting very near the point where conscience becomes the responsible power working in a man's life. When we dealt with conscience, we called it the "eye of the soul," which looks out towards God, and how it records depends entirely upon the light thrown upon God. Nous, or responsible intelligence, which is nearly the same as conscience, discerns the ordinance of God written in man's spirit; therefore to say that men are not responsible for doing wrong is untrue to experience and to revelation. The Bible says that a man knows by the way he is made that certain things are wrong, and as he obeys or disobeys the ordinance of God written in his spirit, he will be judged.

"Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear" (Hebrews 11:3). It is not a question of swallowing a revelation, but of understanding with responsible intelligence how the world was made. This is simply a fresh emphasis on what has been emphasised all through, viz., the responsibility of those of us who are Christians in experience for being Christians in responsible intelligence. If we can form responsible intelligence as natural men, we must form it also as spiritual men. The Bible does not only teach the way of salvation, but the way of spiritual sanity.

Bewildered Nous

In 2 Corinthians 11:3 Paul is referring to the devil beguiling Eve through his subtlety, and so bewildering her that she could not understand God's will or obey it, and he says, "I fear lest by any means . . . your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ"; and in writing to the Galatians he says, "Who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth?" This confusion of the responsible intelligence takes place at the beginning of the Christian life and people are in danger of becoming legal. "I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain," says Paul—lest you become all wrong, because you are going back to the old legal notions and trying to make yourselves perfect in that way (Galatians 4:11). It is along these lines that the subtlety of Satan bewitches away from God a life that was coming under His dominion. Our Lord alludes to the same thing when He says, "the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word," i.e., bewilder you. No wonder the first law of a bornagain soul is concentration. We hear a great deal about consecration, but not so much about concentration.

"A double minded man is unstable in all his ways" (James 1:8). A double-minded man is a "switherer," that is the description of a bewildered soul, the responsible intelligence of the natural man pulling and the responsible intelligence of the Spirit of Christ also pulling, and he does not know which way to take. "Let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord." A man must decide whether he will be identified with the death of the Lord Jesus Christ, which will mean the turning out not only of the "old man," but of the old responsible intelligence, the old bondage, the old legalism, the things which used to guide the life before, and the forming of a totally new mind. It works out in this way: in your practical life you come to a crisis where there are two distinct ways before you, one the way of ordinary, strong, moral, common sense and the other the way of waiting on God until the mind is formed which can understand His will. Any amount of backing will be given you for the first line, the backing of worldly people and of semi-Christian people, but you will feel the warning, the drawing back of the Spirit of God, and if you wait on God, study His Word, and watch Him at work in your circumstances, you will be brought to a decision along God's line, and your worldly "backers" and your semi-Christian "backers" will fall away from you with disgust and say, "It is absurd, you are getting fanatical."

"For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace" (Romans 8:6). We are familiar with the carnal mind in the moral aspect, its enmity against God, its wrong longings and seekings; but it takes a good deal of courage to face the fact that the mind of the natural man is wrong in its responsible thinking, that is, it will give verdicts against what Jesus Christ says; it will decide straightaway that His responsible intelligence is that of a madman, or the irresponsible intelligence of a mere dreamer. We are using the phrase "carnally minded" in this connection to mean what is called common sense, i.e., the mature responsible intelligence of an unregenerate human being, and over and over again we find how this clashes with the teaching of Jesus before it harmonises with it. We are bridging now between the bewildered and the spiritual nous. When the Holy Spirit comes in it confuses a man's reasonable intelligence and turns his thinking upside down, and he gets thoroughly bewildered (cf. Matthew 10:34). We are not dealing with the carnal mind here in the deep moral sense, but with the responsible intelligence which sets itself against the spiritual understanding and refuses to be reconciled to it, in the same way that it may refuse to be reconciled to it morally; and until common sense becomes sanctified sense (not "sanctified common sense," which is not a Bible phrase, nor has it a Bible meaning), and the responsible intelligence has been re-formed by the Spirit of God, this antagonism will go on. When we begin to think along God's line, we come up with an amazing clash against certain things which we have accepted as being inalienable rights for everyone, because Jesus Christ's teaching works from another standpoint, and this clash brings confusion and bewilderment for a time, until we resolve to remove ourselves altogether from the old ways of looking at things and to look at everything from the standpoint of the mind of Christ.

"If any man is in Christ, he is a new creation" (RV mg), not his spirit alone, but spirit, soul and body, and slowly the new creation is seen all through.

Spiritual Nous

For who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he may instruct Him? But we have the mind of Christ. (1 Corinthians 2:16)

The great benediction of the grace of God is that those who seem to have no natural nous are enabled to construct nous in the spiritual realm by the Spirit of God, and use it aright in the temple of the Holy Ghost. To begin with, a child has no responsible intelligence, and the same is true in the spiritual domain. When we begin the spiritual life we have the Spirit of Christ but not the mind of Christ. To have the mind of Christ means much more than having His Spirit, it means to have the responsible understanding of Christ. When we are born again, we find every now and then that the Spirit of God within us is struggling to get us to understand as God understands, and we are very stupid in the way we mistake the things the Spirit of God is trying to teach us; but when, in entire sanctification, the Son of God is formed in us (see Galatians 4:19), we understand with a responsible intelligence even as Jesus Christ did; consequently we are held responsible for doing through our bodies all that we understand God wishes us to do. Jesus Christ spoke what He knew His Father wished Him to speak, and He spoke nothing else; we must do the same if we have the mind of Christ. Jesus Christ worked only those works which He knew were the exact expression of His Father, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work" (John 5:17). We must do the same. To form a spiritual nous means not only that the Holy Spirit energises our spirit but that we allow Him to work out in a responsible intelligence in us.

"And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know Him that is true . . ." (1 John 5:20). The word "understanding" does not mean anything necromantic; it means that we understand with a responsible intelligence that which comes from God; and God holds us responsible for not knowing it. It is not a question of any uncanny spiritual influence, or of a flashing spiritual intuition, but of having the nous, our responsible intelligence, so obedient to the Holy Spirit that we can understand what is of God and what is not. In this way we begin to form a responsible spiritual intelligence, and we must take care not to grieve the Spirit of God along these lines.

"For this is the covenant that I will make, . . . saith the Lord; I will put My laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to Me a people" (Hebrews 8:10). That embraces everything—a full, mature, understanding intelligence on the part of the people of God, not being at the mercy of spiritual impulses, driven about by every wind of doctrine, but becoming mature, vigorous minded people who not only understand what the will of God is, but who do it.

1. Spirit as Soul-Making Power

We are dealing here particularly with spirit in the natural man.

Remember, the whole meaning of the soul is to express the spirit, and the struggle of spirit is to get itself expressed in the soul. In the natural life when an immature mind is trying to express itself, there are tremendous struggles and all kinds of physical exertions and efforts. It has no responsible intelligence, no vocabulary; when a child gets into tempers, it is often an attempt to express itself. When a young life is trying to express itself, it experiences exquisite suffering; music is run to, theatres are run to, literature is run to—anything to try and get the power to express what is there in longing; and if a life goes on too long on these lines, it will never form a responsible intelligence, but will become most unpractical. The discipline of the machinery of life enables us to get the power to express what is in us. That is the value of language. There is a great difference in languages; for instance, take the language of the Authorised Version of the Bible and the language we use to-day. The words of the Bible express the inner soul; the words we use to-day are nearly all technical, borrowed from somewhere else, and our most modern words do not express the spirit at all, but cunningly cloak it over and give no expression.

This kind of phrase is often heard from a young person, "Oh, I don't understand myself"; or, "Nobody understands me!" Why, of course they don't; but we are responsible for not having a responsible intelligence as to where we can be understood (see Psalm 139). The meaning of education is not to pack in something alien, but the drawing out of what is in for the purpose of expression. One of the greatest benefits when a young life is trying to express itself is to have something to work at with the hands, to model in wax, to paint, or write, or dig, anything that will give an opportunity of expression.

If it is true in the natural life that the mind goes through all this turmoil in trying to express itself, it is just as true in the spiritual life. When the Spirit of God comes into me the same kind of struggle goes on. The Spirit of God tries to get me out of the natural "ruts" into line with Him and to obey Him so that He can express Himself through my responsible intelligence. These are the throes and the growing pains of a life after being born again, and they go on until the mind of Christ is formed, and the old carnal antagonism is no more. The value of a spiritual teacher is that he expresses for us what we have been trying to express for ourselves but could not. Whenever a person or a book expresses for us what we have been trying to express for ourselves, we feel unspeakably grateful, and in this way we learn how to express for ourselves. Tribulation will teach us how to express things, our circumstances will teach us, temptations of the devil will teach us, difficult things will teach us. All these things will develop the power of expression until we become responsible in expression of the Spirit of God as Jesus Christ was the responsible expression of the mind of God Almighty.

(a) Particular Form

And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. (Genesis 2:7; see 6:17)

The particular forms of nature, i.e., rocks and trees, animals and men, are all the outcome of the breathing of the Spirit of God. There is a true law of correspondence between the things which we see and the Mind that is behind them. When we have in us the Mind behind the things we see, we begin to understand how these things manifest that Mind, but if we have not that Mind we shall never understand them.

(b) Personal Form

Let the LORD, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set a man over the congregation. (Numbers 27:16; see 16:22; Zechariah 12:1; Isaiah 19:3; Psalm 51:10)

These passages make it clear that man has a distinct responsibility of his own, that is, he can express the spirit of the prince of this world in a responsibly intelligent way, or he can express the Spirit of God in a responsibly intelligent way. This is what we mean when we say a man shows "soul" in his writings or speaking, he shows "soul" in his prayers and in his manner of living; we mean that he has the power to express his spirit, the personal note comes out all the time. God is a Person, and He expresses the peculiar stamp of His Person in all that He creates. When we have the Spirit of God and are forming a responsible intelligence spiritually, we begin to think God's thoughts after Him and to see His meaning, not by our natural intelligence, but by the Spirit of God.

(c) Physical Form

But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding. Great men are not always wise: neither do the aged understand judgement. (Job 32:8; see Genesis 7; Habakkuk 2:19; Revelation 13:15; Job 34:14–15)

Our physical life is meant to express all that is in the spirit. The soul struggles in travail of birth until the zone of expression in the body is reached. Paul is stating just this idea when he says, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you" (Galatians 4:19). To begin with we have not our own body, but probably a body which is very much like that of our grandmother or grandfather, but every few years the physical form alters, and it alters into the shape of the ruling spirit. We may find a beautifully moulded face begin to take on a remarkably un-beautiful moral expression as it grows older, or we may find an ugly face begin to take on a remarkably beautiful moral expression. Sooner or later, through the turmoil in the soul, the physical life must express the ruling spirit. We grow exactly like our spirit. If that spirit is the spirit of man, we shall grow further and further away from the image of God; but if we have the Spirit of God within, we shall grow more and more "into the same image from glory to glory."

2. Spirit in the Flesh

(a) Independent (1 Corinthians 2:11-14)

For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. (1 Corinthians 2:11)

The expression of the spirit is independent of the flesh to begin with, consequently there is a divorce between the spirit in a born-again person and the expression of the spirit in the life. Beware of saying there is no difference in the external life of a person who is born again and one who is sanctified. It is untrue to revelation and to experience alike; there is a tremendous difference. The spirit in a born-again person does not express itself in the flesh in the same degree that it does when the point of sanctification has been reached, because the body has not yet learned obedience to God. In the beginning the Spirit of God works in independence of the flesh and conviction of sin is produced. When the Spirit of God comes into a soul there is darkness and difficulty because He produces discernment of the wrong disposition, and this discernment makes the spirit yearn and long after being made like God, and nothing and no one but God can comfort the soul that is born of the Spirit. The only hope for that life is concentration on and obedience to the Spirit of God.

(b) Dependent (Psalm 32:2; 2 Corinthians 7:1; James 3:15)

Blessed is the man unto whom the LORD imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile. (Psalm 32:2)

When the Spirit of God comes into me, He does not express Himself straightaway in my flesh; He works independently of my flesh, and I am conscious of the divorce. I gain slow, sure, steady victories, but I am conscious of the turmoil. The soul is the birthplace of the new spirit, and the soul struggles while the spirit tries to express itself through the body. If I do not obey the Spirit of God, my spirit will become enchained to my flesh and be absolutely dependent upon it, and the clamouring of the wrong mind through the avenues of the flesh will gradually crush and grieve the Spirit of God. "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God" (2 Corinthians 7:1). The Spirit of God works independently in me to begin with, just as my natural spirit does, and if I do not obey the Spirit of God the insistence of the flesh, of "the carnal mind," will gradually defile everything He has been trying to do. When we are being brought into harmony with the Spirit of God and are learning to form the mind of Christ the flesh "lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh"; nevertheless we can, slowly and surely and victoriously, claim the whole territory for the Spirit of God, until at entire sanctification, the only thing there is, is the Spirit of God, Who has enabled us to form the mind of Christ, and now we can begin to manifest that growth in grace which will express the life of Jesus in our mortal flesh.

(c) Death

For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. (Romans 7:18; see 8:5–7)

Romans 8:6 ("To be carnally minded is death") is very direct, and puts an end to all the absurd squabbles as to what is spiritual death. To be given over to an ordinary responsible intelligence which has not been re-formed by the Spirit of God, is death, and that intelligence in its manifestation will develop further and further away from God, until a man can sink so low as to be perfectly happy without God. Psalm 73 describes this condition: "There are no bands in their death. . . . They are not in trouble as other men. . . . Their eyes stand out with fatness: they have more than heart could wish." The extraordinary thing is that that kind of man is the only man that worldly people call "alive"! When a person has the Spirit of God in him and is slowly manifesting the life of Christ in his life, the world says he is "half dead." "They think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot" (1 Peter 4:4). "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new" (2 Corinthians 5:17).

Where are we with regard to this responsible spiritual intelligence? How many of us as Christians with a definite spiritual experience, realise that we have to be continually renewed in the spirit of our mind so that we are able to discern what the will of God is—the thing which is "good, and acceptable, and perfect"? All the childish clamours, the "being driven from pillar to post" by every wind of doctrine, must cease, and the mature, sensible, strong, stable life begin. Nothing can upset that life, neither death, nor life, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature. Every power such a life comes up against, whether it be a material power or a human or a diabolical power, will be but another occasion for the forming of a deeper and more intelligent grasp of the mind of God. The only way we develop intelligence in the natural world is by coming in contact with things that are irrational and un-intelligent, and in the things of God we form the mind of Christ by subduing all to a spiritual understanding.

Chapter XX

1 Corinthians 15:45

N.B. WE DEAL HERE PARTICULARLY WITH SPIRIT IN THE SPIRITUAL MAN.

- Spirit in Its Freedom from the Flesh (Extraordinary)
 - (a) Ecstasy (Acts 10:10; 22:17; 2 Corinthians 12:2–4; Revelation 4:2; Sometimes with the body: Acts 8:39; 2 Corinthians 12:2–4; 1 Thessalonians 4:17; Revelation 12:5; Matthew 4:1)
- (b) Emancipation
 - (1) Death (Luke 16:25; 23:43; Hebrews 12:23)
 - (2) Deliverance (Hebrews 4:12; Galatians 5:24; Colossians 2:11; Romans 6:6; Galatians 6:8; John 3:8; 20:22)

- 2. Spirit Operating in Sense (Exodus 6:9; Proverbs 15:13; 2 Corinthians 2:13; Acts 17:16; John 11:33)
- 3. Spirit Operating Inwardly (Luke 10:21; 1 Corinthians 2:4; 14:2, 14–16)
- 4. Spirit Operating Morally (Exodus 35:21; Acts 19:21; 20:22; Proverbs 16:18; Isaiah 11:2)

The contrast in 1 Corinthians 15:45 is not a contrast of moral worth, but of revelation. The phrase "the first man Adam was made a living soul" refers to the great fact of God's creation; the phrase "the last Adam was made a quickening spirit," refers to God's regenerating work in the soul. Man's spirit has not "life in itself," i.e., man cannot will pure will, or love pure love. The Holy Spirit has life in Himself, and when He comes in He energises our spirit and enables us "to will and to do of His good pleasure." "Adam" does not mean the "old man," but our human nature. Never confound the "old man" with Adam, they are not synonymous terms: and never confound the "old man" with the devil.

1. Spirit in Its Freedom from the Flesh (Extraordinary)

We mean by Extraordinary, away from the ordinary, not contrary to it or against it, but out of it. We have to bear in mind that there are facts revealed in God's Book which are not common to our experience, and a great moment is reached in the mental life when our minds are opened to the fact that there are states of experience, either for good or bad, about which the majority of us know nothing. It is easy to ridicule these experiences, but ridicule may be a sign of ignorance; it may simply mean—I know everything that everybody can experience, and if a man says he has seen things I have not seen, then I take him to be a fool and laugh at him. It is I who am the fool. Paul uses this argument in 1 Corinthians 1, he says the preaching of the Cross is foolishness to those that seek after wisdom. Again, in connection with the testimony to sanctification people will tell you point blank that no man ever was sanctified, and if you say that you are sanctified, you are a liar, or you suffer from hallucinations. It is quite possible that many of us may have this attitude to the extraordinary experiences recorded in God's Book.

(a) Ecstasy

And he [Peter] became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance. (Acts 10:10)

And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance. (Acts 22:17)

And immediately I was in the Spirit: and, behold, a throne was set in heaven, and One sat on the throne. (Revelation 4:2)

I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven.... (2 Corinthians 12:2)

Ecstasy is a word applied to states of mind marked by temporary mental aberration and altered consciousness, a state in which a man is taken out of his ordinary setting into an extraordinary state where he sees and hears things apart from the bodily organs. Remember, this power may be for good or bad. A necromancer can take a man's personality right out of his bodily setting and put him into another setting where he sees and hears altogether apart from his body.

In these extraordinary conditions the body is sometimes taken with the spirit. "And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more" (Acts 8:39). In this phase of ecstasy the body is taken with the soul by extraordinary transportation, by a supernatural "aeroplane," something absolutely unusual. First Thessalonians 4:17 ("Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord") refers to the instantaneous change of a material body into a glorified body (cf. Revelation 12:5; Matthew 4:1). After the Resurrection our Lord appeared to His disciples during the forty days before He ascended; that is, He had power to materialise whenever He chose. "He said unto them, Have ye here any meat? And they gave Him a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honeycomb. And He took it, and did eat before them" (Luke 24:41–43). In the Millennium we shall have exactly the same power as saints; we are to "meet the Lord in the air." Is that conceivable to you? If it is, it certainly is not conceivable to me. I do not know how I am going to stay up "in the air" with the Lord; but that is no business of mine, all I know is that God's Book reveals that we shall do so. The marvellous power which the glorified resurrection body will have is pictured in the Lord Jesus Christ. He could materialise whenever He chose, He proved that He could, and He could disappear whenever He chose; and we shall do exactly the same. Just think of the time when our thinking will be in language as soon as we think it! If we have the idea that we are to be penned up for ever in a little physical temple, we are twisted away from the Bible revelation. Just now in this order of things we are confined in this bodily temple for a particular reason, but at any second, "in the twinkling of an eye," God can change this body into a glorified body.

All we are arguing for is the need to have an open mind about things we can know nothing of as yet. If when an experience is recorded, I say it is nonsense because I have never had it, I put myself in the place of the superior person, an attitude I have no business to take.

The state of ecstasy, something that lifts a man right out of his ordinary setting, and the transportation at times of body as well as spirit, then is revealed in the Bible. A miracle? Yes, but not more of a miracle than the fact that I am alive. Why should it be thought more of a miracle for God to transform me into the image of His Son than for me to be alive now? How is it that I am alive now? How is it that the material wood of this table and the fleshly material of my hand are different? If we can explain the one, we can explain the other; God Who has made the one made the other. The point we are emphasising is that we have to remember that at any moment God may turn a man's calculations upside down concerning what He will do and what He will not do. Scientists reached the conclusion long ago that they dare not produce their "experimental curve" into the inferential region beyond. They say, according to the record of common experience such and such is the case, and any isolated experience is put by itself. They do not say it cannot be, but that it does not come into their line of explanation. No true scientist says because the majority of human beings have never had a particular experience, therefore it is untrue.

All this is part and parcel of the subject of personality. As long as we are flippant and stupid and shallow and think that we know ourselves, we shall never give ourselves over to Jesus Christ; but when once we become conscious that we are infinitely more than we can fathom, and infinitely greater in possibility either for good or bad than we can know, we shall be only too glad to hand ourselves over to Him.

Mystery there must be, but the remarkable thing about the mysteries which the Bible reveals is that they never contradict human reason, they transcend it. The mysteries of other religions contradict human reason. The miracles which our Lord performed (a miracle simply means the public power of God) transcend human reason, but not one of them contradicts human reason. For example, our Lord turned water into wine, but the same thing is done every year all over the world in process of time: water is sucked up through the stem of the vine and turned into grapes. Why, should it be considered more of a miracle when it is done suddenly by the same Being Who does it gradually? When Jesus Christ raised a man from the dead, He simply did suddenly what we all believe implicitly He is going to do by and by.

Have any of us a sealed mind about these facts in God's Book which we have never experienced? Do we try and apologise for them, try to make out, for instance, that Philip was not caught away suddenly by the Spirit; that the Apostle Paul was not "caught up to the third heaven"; that Peter did not fall into a trance and see the things he did see? There is always the danger of doing this. Accept these revelations as facts, and you will find your understanding illuminated as to how marvellously things can happen when the great mighty God is at work.

(b) Emancipation

(1) Death

We are dealing here with the spirit in its freedom from the flesh. We mean by "flesh," this body we are in, not the "mind of the flesh." It is possible for the spirit to exist apart altogether from man's body.

"And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with Me in paradise" (Luke 23:43; see also Luke 16:25; Hebrews 12:23). These passages refer to the place where the body is not—the unseen. The Bible points out that man's spirit is immortal, whether or not he is energised by the Spirit of God; that is, spirit never sleeps. Instead of the spirit sleeping at what we call death, at the breaking away of spirit from the body, the spirit is ten thousand-fold more awake. With the majority of us our spirits are halfconcealed while we are in this body. Remember, spirit and personality are synonymous, but as long as a man is in the body his personality is obscured. Immediately he dies his spirit is no more obscured, it is absolutely awake; no limitations now, man is face to face with everything else that is of spirit "Son, remember. . . ."

Soul and body depend upon each other, spirit does not, spirit is immortal. Soul is simply the spirit expressing itself in the body. Immediately the body goes, the soul is gone, but the moment the body is brought back, soul is brought back, and spirit, soul and body will again be together. Spirit has never died, can never die, in the sense in which the body dies; the spirit is immortal, either in immortal life or in immortal death. There is no such thing as annihilation taught in the Bible. The separation of spirit from body and soul is temporary. The resurrection is the resurrection of the body.

Our Lord never speaks of the resurrection of spirit—the spirit does not need resurrecting; He speaks of a resurrection body for glorification and a resurrection body for damnation. "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear His voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation" (John 5:28–29). We know what the resurrection body for glorification will be like: it will be like "His glorious body"; but all we know about the resurrection of the bad is that Jesus Christ (Who ought to know what He is talking about) says that there will be a resurrection to damnation. The question of eternal punishment is a fearful one, but let no one say that Jesus Christ did not say anything about it, He did. He said it in language we cannot begin to understand and the least thing we can do is to be reverent with what we do not understand.

(2) Deliverance

For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. (Hebrews 4:12)

Many teachers make spirit and soul one and the same; when the word of God comes into my heart it instantly divides between the two, that is how the Spirit of God convicts of sin. "And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts" (Galatians 5:24). What is flesh? Paul is not talking to disembodied spirits, to a lot of corpses, he is talking to living men and women, so he certainly does not mean "mortal flesh"; he is referring to a disposition within which he calls "the flesh." When Paul speaks of the body, he speaks of it as "mortal flesh"; when he refers to the old disposition, he calls it "the flesh."

"In Whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ" (Colossians 2:11; see also Romans 6:6; Galatians 6:8; John 3:8). Emancipation means deliverance while I am in the flesh, not counteraction or suppression; it may begin in counteraction, but blessed be God, emancipation is possible here and now. According to the Apostle Paul, and according to the whole of the teaching of the New Testament, we can be delivered from the old disposition—"knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him. . . ." Crucifixion means death. The majority of testimonies contradict what the New Testament reveals. With whom are we going to side? "Let God be true, but every man a liar" (Romans 3:4)

Emancipation does not remove the possibility of disobedience; if it did, we should cease to be human beings. To make the removal of the wrong disposition mean that God removes our human nature is absurd. God does remove the wrong disposition, but He does not alter our human nature. We have the same body, the same eyes, the same imperfect brain and nervous system, but Paul argues—you used to use this body as an obedient slave to the wrong disposition, now use it as an obedient slave to the new disposition. ". . . for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness" (Romans 6:19).

2. Spirit Operating in Sense

We have been dealing with the emancipation of spirit from slavery of sin, now we come to the Bible teaching that the spirit can operate through our senses, so that we can express in our lives that we are delivered: no "reckoning" or hoodwinking ourselves, no pretending we are emancipated when we are not, but the manifestation through every cell of our bodies that God has done what we testify with our mouth He has done.

The children of Israel... hearkened not unto Moses for anguish of spirit, and for cruel bondage. (Exodus 6:9)

Their anguish of spirit had so distorted their senses that they could not listen. "A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance: but by sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken" (Proverbs 15:13). When a man is happy, he cannot pull a long face, he may try to, but it is the face of a clown; when he is happy inside he shows it on the outside. If you hear a Christian with a sad face saying, "Oh, I am so full of the joy of the Lord," well, you know it is not true. If I am full of the joy of the Lord, it will pour out of every cell of my body. "I had no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother . . ." (2 Corinthians 2:13). "While Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry" (Acts 17:16). "When Jesus therefore saw her weeping . . . He was moved with indignation in the spirit and troubled Himself" (John 11:33 RV mg). All these passages refer to spirit showing itself instantly in the flesh. The spirit of wrong shows itself in the flesh, and, thank God, the Spirit of God does the same.

As soon as we become rightly related to God, the prince of this world has his last stake in the flesh, he will suck every bit of your physical life out of you if he can. Many Christian workers do not know this, and Satan will seek to wear them out to the last cell; but if they know this "trick" of his and also know God's grace, every time they are exhausted in work for God, they will get supernatural physical recuperation, and the proof that it is God's work is the experience of this supernatural recuperation. If you become exhausted in doing work in the world, what have you to do? You have to take an iron tonic and have a holiday, but if you are exhausted in God's work, all the iron tonics in the world will never touch you, the only thing that will recuperate you is God Himself. Paul said he did not count his life dear unto himself so that he might finish his course with joy; and when the dear sisters and brothers say to you, "You must not work so hard," simply say, "Get thee behind me, Satan!" Remember, Satan's last stake is in the flesh, and when once you know that all your fresh springs are in God, you will draw on Him. Beware of laying off before God tells you to; if you lay off before God tells you to, you will rust, and that leads to "dry rot" always.

3. Spirit Operating Inwardly

The spirit operates outwardly through our senses, and operates inwardly towards God.

In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. (Luke 10:21)

Our Lord was talking to God inwardly by His Spirit. "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power" (1 Corinthians 2:4). If you have the Spirit of God in you, the preaching of the Cross is according to the wisdom of God: if you have not the Spirit of God in you, the preaching of Christ crucified is foolishness.

"For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful . . ." (1 Corinthians 14:14). The question of tongues here is not a question of foreign languages, but what is called "glossalalia," i.e., spiritual gibberish, nothing intelligible in it. Such phrases as "Hallelujah!" and "Glory be to God!" come about in this way. Just as a baby "blethers" for expression before its human spirit has worked through its soul, so a soul when being born of the Holy Ghost is apt to be carried away with emotional ecstasy. Try and understand a baby's blether, you cannot, unless you are its mother, then possibly you may.

In dealing with the Corinthians, Paul tells them to form a spiritual nous, an understanding whereby the spirit can be expressed. When a soul is first introduced to the heavenly domain by the Spirit of God, there is a tremendous bursting up of new life in the soul and there is no language for it. Paul urges the Corinthians to form a spiritual nous as soon as they can, to come to the point of understanding whereby the spirit can be expressed. "If you don't watch what you are doing, this will produce disgraceful mockery among the nations. If they come into your meetings and see you jabbering, you will give an occasion to the enemy to blaspheme" (see 1 Corinthians 14:23). In the modern Tongues movement the responsibility is with the teachers. May God have mercy on them!

When we are introduced by the Spirit of God into a new domain, we have no language; we are in a phase of spiritual babyhood; we have sighings and groanings and tears, but no language. Paul counsels us to be instructed, and one of the wisest ways of instruction is to let the Psalms express for you. When you are worked up to a pitch emotionally, read some of the Psalms, and the Spirit of God will gradually teach you how to form a spiritual nous, a mind whereby you will not only understand but will slowly and surely get to the place where you can express your spirit, you will have a totally new language. We read that "when the day of Pentecost was fully come . . . they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance" (Acts 2:1, 4). This was not "glossalalia," it was the gift of new language.

4. Spirit Operating Morally

And they came, every one whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the LORD's offering to the work of the tabernacle of the congregation, and for all His service, and for the holy garments. (Exodus 35:21; see also Acts 19:21; 20:22; Proverbs 16:18; Isaiah 11:2)

The Spirit working through the senses and working inwardly to God, produces a morality and an uprightness just like Jesus Christ's. The worthiness of our Lord Jesus Christ is moral worth in the Divine and in the human sphere, and our moral worth is to be of the same order.

God grant we may ever "walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh."

This book ends abruptly, but we leave it so. The whole book is merely a verbatim report of lectures given at the Bible Training College, and we have decided to let it go for what it is worth—a mere effort to rouse up the average Christian worker to study the wealth of the Scriptures, and thus become better equipped for rightly dividing the word of truth.

God bless all who care to read the book!

Bringing Sons unto Glory

When the Bible Training College opened in January 1911, it had great potential but no students. While Oswald Chambers worked and prayed for resident students at the College, he followed an aggressive program of correspondence courses and extension classes. The latter took him throughout greater London several times a week to teach core classes of the BTC curriculum. Even after the College reached its capacity of resident students, Chambers continued to teach evening classes at key locations in London. In so doing, he multiplied the outreach of the BTC and touched thousands of people who were able to take only one or two courses.

This book parallels and complements the study of Christ presented in OC's book The Psychology of Redemption, published in 1930.

FOREWORD

These Studies in the Life of Our Lord were given by Oswald Chambers at the Bible Training College, Clapham, and to groups of evening students in various parts of London. They interpret the Life of Our Lord as presented in the fourfold Gospel record. They take the same line as in the earlier book, The Psychology of Redemption. But in these Talks there is the "something else" which brings to the earnest reader a yet deeper spiritual insight into the meaning of Our Lord's Life for us. It is required of us that we walk even as He walked. Jesus Christ is the Firstborn of many brethren, the Elder Brother of a vast family of brothers, and it is our privilege to bear the family likeness of Jesus Christ. In Him we see the Son of God—the exact expression of Almighty God; and also the Son of Man—the presentation of God's normal Man. At times Jesus Christ lifts the veil from His own consciousness and we are permitted to gaze with awe into the depths of that sacred Personality. But the end is to be that we become partakers of the Divine nature, and build up ourselves on our most holy faith, and so grow up into Him in all things, Who is the Head, even Christ. Those who have been helped by earlier books will welcome this one as carrying us a stage further in each one becoming by the grace of God a disciple of Jesus Christ.

HIS HUMANITY AND INCARNATION

The only "Life" of the Lord Jesus is the New Testament. There are phases of the Life of Our Lord presented in the New Testament that no other Life, so-called, deals with. If you start with the theory that Jesus Christ was a man who became God, you have to leave out any number of New Testament facts; if you say that Jesus Christ was God and His manhood a seeming phase, you have to miss out other facts. The Person of Jesus Christ revealed in the New Testament is unique—God-Man. In Him we deal with God as Man, the God-Man, the Representative of the whole human race in one Person. Jesus Christ is not a Being with two personalities; He is Son of God—the exact expression of Almighty God, and Son of Man—the presentation of God's normal Man.

A great many of the books written on what is called "the Psychology of Jesus" are an attempt to understand the Person of Jesus through an understanding of ourselves. That is fatally misleading because Jesus Christ does not begin where we begin. "All things have been delivered unto Me of My Father: and no one knoweth the Son, save the Father . . ." (Matthew 11:27 RV). The basis of the Person of Jesus is not the basis of ours unless we have been born again of the Holy Ghost. The tendency today to "annul," i.e. "dissolve by analysis," the Person of Jesus, does untold damage to moral and spiritual understanding (see 1 John 4:1-3). Immediately we introduce a rationalism that does not accept the New Testament revelation, we get confused. We will not bring to the subject the innocence of mind which the Spirit of God demands; we bring objections which spring from preconceived notions.

Analogy of the First Adam and Last Adam (Romans 5:12, 19)

There are only two Men in the Bible: Adam and Jesus Christ, "with all humanity hanging at their girdles."

And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. (Genesis 2:7)

The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God. (Luke 1:35)

The New Testament reveals that the birth of Jesus was an advent, not a beginning—an advent that put Him on the plane, humanly speaking, that Adam was on. The first Adam and the last Adam came direct from the hand of God.

God did not create Adam holy, He created him innocent, without self-consciousness (as we understand the word) before God; the one thing Adam was conscious of was God and only of himself in relation to the Being Whose commands he was to fulfil; the main trend of his spirit was towards God. Adam was intended by God to take part in his own development by a series of moral choices whereby he would transform innocence into holiness. Adam failed to do this, Jesus Christ came on the same platform as Adam and did not fail. Supposing Adam had transformed the natural life into the spiritual by obedience, what would have happened? Transfiguration; he would have "spiritualised" the natural life and made it all that God wanted it to be. The natural life is neither good nor bad, moral nor immoral; it is the principle within that makes it good or bad, moral or immoral.

"And the child grew, and waxed strong, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon Him" (Luke 2:40 RV). The innocence of Jesus was not the innocence of a babe born into our order of things, it was the innocence of Adam as God created him, the innocence of an untried possibility of holiness. Innocence is never safe, it is simply full of possibility. The holiness of God is absolute, not progressive; that is, it knows no development by antagonism. Man's holiness must be progressive. The holiness of Jesus developed through antagonism because He revealed what a holy man should be.

Our Lord transformed innocence into holiness by a series of moral choices. Satan tempted Him along this line: "Do God's will according to Your own understanding; don't sacrifice the life of nature to the will of God." Jesus made invariably one answer—"For I am come down from heaven, not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me" (John 6:38).

How are we to "follow His steps"? By imitating Jesus? We cannot begin to. How are we going to have the innocence that Jesus had? In one way only, by being born again from above. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again" (John 3:7). We can be brought into a state of pristine childlike innocence before God by the regenerating work of His grace. God does something infinitely grander than give a man a new start: He re-makes him from the inside. We have the power, because we have received it, to transform the natural into the spiritual even as Jesus did, because the life generated into us is His own life.

(a) Resources of Life

God created Adam to "have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth" (Genesis 1:28); the one thing Adam was not to have dominion over was himself. God was to have dominion over him, and Adam had to partake in his own development by obeying God's rule over him, not his own wisdom. The source of life in Adam was his obedience to God.

Jesus Christ, the last Adam, states over and over again—"I can of Myself do nothing" (John 5:19, 30; see 7:16; 8:28; 12:49; 14:10).

The birth of Jesus throws a striking light on our regeneration. Our new birth is the birth of the Son of God into our human nature, and our human nature has to be transfigured by the indwelling life of the Son of God. We have the power now to sacrifice the life of nature to the will of God, keeping our minds dependent on Jesus Christ as He was dependent on God. To-day the characteristic is spiritual insubordination; we will not bring "every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ."

(b) Retrogression from Life

When the apostle Paul says that "sin entered into the world through one man," he did not mean a man like ourselves; he was speaking of the Federal Head of the human race, the noble being that God created. The third chapter of Genesis reveals how sin was introduced into the world. Watch the subtlety of Satan's reasoning: "And he said unto the woman, Yea, hath God said . . .?" The one thing he was aiming at was the dominion of God over man. "For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as God, knowing good and evil" (RV), i.e. you will become god over yourself. Sin is not a creation, it is a relationship. The essential nature of sin is my claim to my right to myself.

When Our Lord confronts men, He confronts them on that basis. Read the New Testament, and you will find that Jesus Christ did not get into a moral panic over the things that rouse us. We are staggered at immorality, but Jesus faced those things in the most amazingly calm way (see Matthew 21:31). When He was roused to a state of passionate indignation it was by people who were never guilty of such things. What Our Lord continually faced was the disposition behind either the morality or the immorality. "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin . . ." (John 15:22). Any man would have known without His coming that it was wrong to take life, the law is written in him; any man would have known that immorality was wrong; but no man apart from Jesus Christ would believe that "my right to myself" is the very essence of sin. When we realise what Jesus means when He says, "If you would be My disciple, give up your right to yourself to Me," we begin to understand that "the carnal mind is enmity against God." "I will not give up my right to myself; I will serve God as I choose." Jesus Christ came to remove this disposition of self-realisation.

(c) Readjustment into Life

Sin interrupted the normal development of man, and it required another Man to take up the story where it was broken off and complete it, without the sin. "Ye have not [this] life in yourselves," said Jesus (John 6:53 RV). What life? His life He had, the life that is at the true Source. Eternal Life means the life Jesus lived. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in His Son" (1 John 5:11). Eternal life is the life Jesus lived; the life of God in a mortal being, transformed by God's regenerating power into harmony with Himself.

"In Him was life; and the life was the light of men" (John 1:4). Why did Jesus live thirty-three years if all He came to do was to die for sin? He lived thirty-three years because He had to show what a normal man after God's pattern was like. He died that through His death we might have the source of life that was in Him (see Romans 5:17). That is why it is so absurd to say, "I accept Jesus as a Teacher only." Try to apply the teachings of Jesus to your life without an understanding of His Death and you will find it cannot be done; it would either make you commit suicide or take you to the Cross and give you an understanding of why it was necessary for Him to die.

Preaching about the life of Jesus awakens an immense craving, but it leaves us with the luxury of sympathy with ourselves—"Oh well, I know that is very high and holy, but I was not born that way and God cannot expect that kind of life from me." We like to hear about the life of Jesus, about His teaching and His words, about His sympathy and tenderness, but when we stand face to face with Him in the light of God and He convicts us of sin, we resent it. Men crave for what the Gospel presents but they resent the way it is presented by Jesus. That is a point that has been lost sight of nowadays, and every now and again the Church succumbs to the temptation to which Jesus Christ did not succumb—the temptation of putting man's needs first, with the result that certain features of the Gospel are eliminated. Never separate the Incarnation and the Atonement. The Incarnation was not for the Self-realisation of God, but for the purpose of removing sin and reinstating humanity into communion with God. Jesus Christ became Incarnate for one purpose, to make a way back to God that man might stand before Him as he was created to do, the friend and lover of God Himself. The Atonement means infinitely more than we can conceive, it means that we can be morally identified with Jesus Christ until we understand what the apostle Paul meant when he said, "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." All the mighty efficacy of the Death of Jesus, of His Resurrection and Ascension to the right hand of the throne of God, is implanted into us by regeneration. And the lowest and most sinstained can go that way. The measure of the salvation of Jesus is not that it does for the best man we know, but that it does for the worst and most sin-stained. There is no son of man that need despair, Jesus Christ can reproduce His saving work in any and every man, blessed be the Name of God!

Do we know anything about this sublime innocence which is the outcome of regeneration, and are we developing along that line? Are we transforming innocence into holiness by a series of moral choices, or are we paying too much attention to the natural life? When we are rightly related to God as Jesus was, the spiritual life becomes as natural as the life of a child. The one dominant note of the life after sanctification is the simplicity of a child, full of the radiant peace and joy of God. "Except ye . . . become as little children . . ."

THE SILENT YEARS TO THIRTY

Luke 2:40-52

A child's life has no dates, it is free, silent, dateless. A child's life ought to be a child's life, full of simplicity. By "the silent years to thirty" we mean to picture forth the experience of the sanctified soul; we have attained to nothing yet, we are simply perfectly adjusted to God. By sanctification we are placed in the condition of Our Lord at Bethlehem, and we have the life of Jesus as our Example. We are apt to mistake the sovereign works of Grace in salvation and sanctification as being final—they are only beginnings.

1. His Evolution in Mind and Ours

We mean by "evolution" growth and development. In the child the body is put first, "And the child grew" (Luke 2:40); in the young man the mind is put first, "And Jesus advanced in wisdom" (Luke 2:52 RV). During those silent years from twelve to thirty there is nothing recorded saving that "Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and men"—nothing precocious or necromantic, a slow, steady, sane progress till He reached maturity.

"And Jesus Himself . . . was about thirty years of age" (Luke 3:23 RV). That is the age from the Jewish standpoint at which physical maturity and soul maturity are supposed to be reached. Up to that age a man was looked upon as almost a child and dependent, after thirty he was shielded from no requirements of a full grown-man. Up to the age of thirty life is full of promise and expectation, the powers are untried, they are more or less chaotic and immature. The majority of the works of genius are done before thirty. After thirty, or what is represented by that age, there is no more promise, no more vision, the life has to be lived now in accordance with all the visions it has had. Spiritual maturity is a different matter. Spiritual maturity is not reached by the passing of the years, but by obedience to the will of God. Some people mature into an understanding of God's will more quickly than others because they obey more readily, they more readily sacrifice the life of nature to the will of God, they more easily swing clear of little determined opinions. It is these little determined opinions, convictions of our own that won't budge, that hinder growth in grace and makes us bitter and dogmatic, intolerant, and utterly un-Christlike.

(a) Willing Zone

"And He went down with them, and came to Nazareth" (Luke 2:51). Will is not a faculty but the whole man active. Our Lord sacrificed His own natural desire to the will of His Father. His natural desire would have been to stay in the temple, but "He went down with them and came to Nazareth," and stayed there eighteen years. This is an illustration of the way Jesus used His will all through His life (see John 6:38). He "advanced in wisdom" by applying His will to the will of His Father. "For Christ also pleased not Himself." To do what we like always ends in immorality; to do what God would have us do always ends in growth in grace.

(b) Wonder Zone

"How is it that ye sought Me? wist ye not that I must be in My Father's house?" (Luke 2:49 RV). This incident is the one glimpse given to us of those twelve years so full of wonder, so full of sky-lights open towards God. Think of the pure wonder of the Child Jesus in the temple when He realised with ^{4.} does for: suffices; meets the needs of.

spiritual intuition that He was in His Father's house; don't picture a precocious intellectual prig. Jesus was amazed that His mother did not know what He knew, or understand what He understood. A child's mind exhibits the innocence of intelligence, and in the life of Jesus this innocence never became conceited. The starting-point of every heresy is the corrupting of the innocence of intelligence by conceit. Conceit means to have a point of view; a point of view takes the wonder out of life. It is only when we are born again and sanctified that we enter into an understanding of the life of Jesus. His life is the type of life that the Spirit forms in us when we obey Him, full of innocent wonder. (Cf. Matthew 11:25)

(c) Waiting Zone

"And He was subject unto them" (Luke 2:51 RV). Have we ever caught the full force of the thirty silent years, of those three years wandering in Palestine? Have we ever caught the full force of those ten days of waiting in the upper room? If we measure those periods by our modern way of estimating we will put it down as waste of time; but into the life of Our Lord, and into the lives of the early disciples, were going to come elements that would root and ground them on a solid foundation that nothing could shake. The waiting time is always the testing time. How we hurry people into work for God! A thrilling experience, an ecstasy of spiritual emotion, a heavenly vision, and, "I am called of God to preach"! Are you? Get back to God's Book. If you are called to preach, God will put you through mills you never dreamed of. To testify for God is absolutely essential, but never open your mouth as a preacher unless you are called of God. If you are, it is a "woe is unto me, if I preach not," not a delight. One of the worst sins amongst us is that we are more interested in the most recent views on sanctification than we are in the testimonies in God's Book. Any excitable, hysterical testimony from a tide of revival is apt to be more welcome to the majority of sanctified people than the bedrock teaching of the New Testament. With what result? "... because they had no root, they withered away." Picture those silent years in the life of Our Lord, shielded by His Father, until all the tremendous forces of His life were developed and grasped.

2. His Evolution in Body and Ours

(a) Organic Soul

"And Jesus advanced in . . . stature" (Luke 2:52). The spirit is soul expressing itself in the body. The body has an enormous influence on the soul, and the soul on the body. When the body is developing into manhood or womanhood there is a sudden awakening of the soul to religious influences, and it is always a dangerous time. What is looked upon as evidence of the grace of God at work is merely the opening up of the soul in the process of development. God never places any importance on that phase. Over and over again people have built up hope on the religious promise of boys and girls in their teens and after a while it fades away and the unwise say, he, or she, has backslidden. May God have mercy on the parents who develop precocity in a child! What happens physically in children who show amazing signs of wisdom is that the grey matter of the brain is being used as quickly as it is formed. Precocity is something that ought to be checked. We are apt to place our faith on the years when we are in the making, whereas lives ought to be allowed to develop along a right line to the point of reliability.

If this is true in the physical and psychical domain, it is much more so in the spiritual. There are stages in spiritual development when God allows us to be dull, times when we cannot realise or feel anything. It is one of the greatest mercies that we have those blank spaces, for this reason, that if we go on with spiritual perception too quickly we have no time to work it out; and if we have no time to work it out it will react in stagnation and degeneration. Work out what God works in-work it out through your fingertips, through your tongue, through your eyes; then when that is worked out, God will flood your soul with more light. Beware of curiosity in spiritual matters (see 2 Corinthians 11:3). If once you begin to push God's restrictions on one side and say "I wonder what this Movement is; I wonder if I should have this or that experience," you may find yourself getting perilously near the condition of the prodigal son, taking the law into your own hands and going clean off at a tangent. Unless religious emotions spring from the indwelling grace of God and are worked out on the right level, they will always, not sometimes, react on an immoral level. The time when these dangers begin is in this stage of development.

It is a wonderful point of illumination that Our Lord's soul was in a body like ours, and that for thirty silent years He exhibited a holy life through all the stages of development that our life goes through.

(b) Organic Self-Sacrifice

"I lay down My life. . . . I lay it down of Myself" (John 10:17–18). Our Lord is referring to the power He has of Self-sacrifice. Have we that power? Thank God we have. After sanctification we have the power to deliberately take our sanctified selves and sacrifice them for God. It is an easy business to be self-sacrificing in mind—"I intend to do this and that," that is, I estimate what it is going to cost me. Paul says he not only estimated the cost, he experienced it. ". . . for Whom I suffered the loss of all things" (RV). As you go on towards maturity watch the by-path meadows—"I have been so blessed of God here, this is where I ought to stay." Read the life of Jesus, He kept His eye fixed on the one purpose His Father had for His life, which He calls going "up to Jerusalem," and we have to go with Him there. One of the greatest snares is the number of good things we might do. Jesus Christ never did the good things He might have done, He did everything He ought to do because He had His eye fixed on His Father's will and He sacrificed Himself for His Father. It is not done once for all, it can only be done once for always, day by day, day by day, the sacrifice of ourselves to the will of Jesus, that is, self-realisation is gone and Christ-realisation has come in. Difficult? Nothing is ever attained in the natural world without difficulty and the same thing applies in the spiritual world. How many of us have learned the A B C of concentration? "This one thing I do," our face set like a flint towards the purposes of God, not fanatically doing our duty, but going steadfastly on with the sacrifice of ourselves for Jesus as He sacrificed Himself for His Father.

(c) Organic Spirit

"Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit" (Luke 23:46). All through the life of Jesus there is a clear realisation of His authority over body, soul and spirit. He matured to that authority in those silent years. "Oh but," you say, "Jesus was the Son of God": He said He was the Son of Man, that is, He exhibited what we are to be when we become sons of God, and if He "learned obedience by the things which He suffered" (RV) are we going to rebel because we have to go the same way?

What are we doing with our brains since we entered into the experience of sanctification? Are we allowing the Holy Spirit to get hold of this bodily machine until we construct an expression of the mind of Christ? The Spirit of Jesus is given to us in new birth, but we have not the mind of Christ until we form it. How our minds express themselves depends entirely on the way we use our brains. I mean by "mind" not the spiritual mind, but the mind as it expresses itself in the bodily life. "But we have the mind of Christ." It is not true to say that God gives us our ideas, that notion is the starting-point of all heresies. God never gave anyone their ideas, God makes a man use his ideas in order to convey His mind; otherwise responsibility is destroyed. "Glean your thinking," says Paul, and we have to do it by will. The Holy Spirit energises the will to complete mastery of the brain. Don't be a mental wool-gatherer.

3. His Evolution in Maturity and Ours

Being "about thirty years of age . . ."—the period of maturity. Who was it reached maturity? The Son of God as Man—the maturity of all physical powers, all soul powers, all spiritual powers, and not until that point was reached did God thrust Him out into the three years of service. "I do always those things that are pleasing to [My Father]" (RV). Where did Jesus learn that power? In those thirty silent years.

Can God say of us—"That soul is learning, 'precept upon precept; line upon line'; it is not nearly so petulant and stupid as it used to be, it no longer sulks in corners, it no longer murmurs against discipline, it is getting slowly to the place where I shall be able to do with it what I did with My own Son"? What was that? God took His hand off, as it were, and said to the world, the flesh and the devil, "Do your worst"—"... greater is He that is in you, than he that is in the world." God shielded His Son from no requirements of a son, and when we are rightly related to God He will not shield us from any requirements of sons.

In spiritual maturity all our powers are thoroughly adjusted into a calm poise, rightly balanced, and God can begin to trust us with His work. "If a man love Me, . . . he will keep My words," said Jesus; He is referring to the freedom of the disciple to keep His commandments. No natural man is free to keep the commandments of God, he is utterly unable to unless he is born again of the Holy Spirit. Freedom means ability to keep the law; every kind of freedom has to be earned. "And My Father will love him, and We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him"—an unspeakable, unstateable communion, God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost, and the sinner saved and sanctified by grace, communing together. That is the sheer sovereign work of the Lord Jesus Christ.

THE SELF-CONSCIOUSNESS OF JESUS-I

His Baptism

All things are delivered unto Me of My Father: and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him. Matthew 11:27

There is a self-consciousness that is more or less of a disease, arising from unstrung nerves or from personal conceit; we cannot apply the term to Our Lord in that sense. By the term "the Self-Consciousness of Jesus" is meant the state of being conscious of His personal Self. I would like to warn against the modern literature which says that we can understand the Self-consciousness of Jesus Christ by examining our own. Jesus says emphatically, "No one knoweth the Son, save the Father." Any teaching regarding the Personality of Jesus that gives the lie to what He says about Himself is anti-Christ, it "dissolves by analysis" (see 1 John 4:1–3).

In attempting to deal with the Self-consciousness of Jesus we must remember that we are dealing with a revelation, something we have not as natural men, although through the experience of regeneration, we can have "the mind of Christ"; but the experience of new birth must take place first. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (Philippians 2:5). "But we have the mind of Christ" (1 Corinthians 2:16).

In these studies, the birth of Jesus at Bethlehem stands for a presentation of the experience of sanctification in which the soul is put into a state of spiritual innocence before God, a state of untried, untested innocence; then we have to develop that innocence into holiness by a series of moral choices whereby we sacrifice the life of nature to the will of God. The majority of us only know the experience of sanctification, we do not press on to transform innocence into holiness until all our powers are matured for God. Insubordination too often marks the beginnings of the sanctified life because we will not submit to the normal development that God demands; as soon as we enter the sanctified life we expect we are going to be giants for God. We are in danger of becoming fanatical instead of developing along the great, sane, majestic lines that Jesus developed on.

The distinction between a saved soul and a disciple is fundamental. The stern conditions laid down by Our Lord for discipleship are not the conditions of salvation; discipleship is a much closer and more conscious relationship (see Luke 14:26–27, 33). The secret of discipleship is the Cross of Our Lord Jesus Christ (Galatians 6:14; 1 Corinthians 2:2).

Just when maturity is reached spiritually we cannot say, all we know is it depends entirely on obedience. After they were baptised with the Holy Ghost, the early disciples evidently reached the point of spiritual maturity, for we read that they rejoiced "that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His Name." They could not be appealed to on any other line than that marked out for them by Jesus, it could not be tyrannised out of them or martyred out of them. The Baptism of Our Lord represents this point of amazing maturity; we are faced with a revelation we cannot understand, but must accept.

1. The Innate Realisation to Jesus Himself (John 1:26–34)

The experience of Jesus at His Baptism is as foreign to us as His Incarnation. Read the so-called "Lives" of Jesus, and see how little is made of His baptism, the reason being that most of the writers take the Baptism to be something to teach us, or as an illustration of the rite of baptism. In the New Testament the Baptism of Jesus is not taken as an illustration of anything which we experience, it is recorded as a manifestation of Who Jesus was. He stands forth consciously—Son of God, Son of Man, God-Man—having come for one purpose, to bear away the sin of the world.

We have been dealing with Our Lord's Childhood, and with the silent years of which nothing is recorded; now at His Baptism He emerges, a full outstanding personality with a tremendous maturity of power that never wilted for one moment. There was no ambiguity in Our Lord's mind as to Who He was, or as to the meaning of the step He was taking; He was no longer maturing, He was mature. He is not manifested here as our Example, but as God Incarnate for one purpose—to be identified with the sin of the world and to bear it away. Jesus fully felt Himself to be all that John the Baptist expected He would be. Take time to find out from the Old Testament what John did expect Him to be, and then realise that Jesus was consciously that and you will understand why He said, "No man knoweth the Son, save the Father." The reason we have no counterpart in our experience of the Baptism of Jesus is because of His innate realisation of Who He was. The Jesus of the New Testament is a Being Who made Napoleon say, "I know men, and Jesus Christ is not a man." What he meant was that in Jesus Christ he had come across a pre-eminent Master of men.

2. The Extraordinary Revelation (Mark 1:9-11)

Beware of bringing to the study of Jesus anything that does not belong to the New Testament. If we bring preconceived notions of our own we shall never look at the facts. If we are being taught "as the truth in Jesus," we shall accept the revelation that His Baptism was an extraordinary experience to Our Lord, extraordinary even to Him. When Jesus came from Galilee to the Jordan to be baptised by John, it was a tremendous epoch in the purpose of God Almighty. Who among us could presume to say what Jesus experienced when He was baptised? Jesus came forth at the threshold of His public ministry in the full consciousness of Who He was; from that moment He manifested Himself as being here for one purpose only, to be identified with the sin of the world and to bear it away. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself." Who was Jesus? God Incarnate. Watch what He says of Himself—"I do not work from My right to Myself" (see John 5:19, 30); "I do not think or speak from My right to Myself" (see John 8:28; 12:49); "I do not live from My right to Myself" (see John 6:38): "I work and think and live from My Father's right to Me." "Lo, I come . . . to do Thy Will, O God."

3. The Enduement Regally (Luke 3:21-22)

We read that Jesus was in communion with His Father at the time of His baptism— "Jesus also having been baptised, and praying" (RV), an inconceivable communion, and what happened?—"the heaven was opened, and the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon Him, and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art My beloved Son; in Thee I am well pleased." It was a purely personal experience. The Holy Ghost descended upon Jesus, and the voice of the Father spake to Him—"Thou art my beloved Son." This Man, Who was known to men as the humble Nazarene Carpenter, is Almighty God presented in the guise of a human life.

Opened heaven to Our Lord means opened heaven to every man. The Holy Ghost descending as a dove is symbolical of the Holy-Spirit life that Jesus can communicate to every man. The New Testament records two personal descents of the Holy Ghost: one on Our Lord as Son of Man at His baptism, the other on the Day of Pentecost—"Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear" (Acts 2:33). By right of His Death and Resurrection and Ascension Our Lord can impart Holy Spirit to any and every man (see Luke 11:13; John 20:22).

4. The Eminent Redeemer (Matthew 3:13–15)

"Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to the Jordan unto John, to be baptised of him" (RV). What was John's baptism? The baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. Iesus was baptised by that baptism, not by a baptism like it. What did John regard Jesus as? "The Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." At His baptism Jesus took on Him His vocation; it was the public manifestation that He became part of fallen humanity; that is why He was baptised with John's baptism of repentance. Beware of saying that Jesus took on the sin of the human race by sympathy. It is being said nowadays that Jesus had such a profound sympathy for the human race, He was such a pure noble character and realised so keenly the shame and horror of sin, that He took our sin on Himself by sympathy. All through the Bible it is revealed that Our Lord bore the sin of the world by identification, not by sympathy. If Jesus only took on the sin and wrong of human nature by sympathy, I can only take on His holiness by sympathy, All I can say is, "Yes, I mourn over my sin and wrongdoing and I wish I were better; I do accept the life of Jesus as very beautiful and holy, but that holiness is not mine." The New Testament says Jesus became literally identified with the sin of the human race. "Him Who knew no sin" (here language almost fails) "He made to be sin on our behalf" for one purpose only—"that we might become the righteousness of God in Him" (RV). Repentance to be true must issue in holiness, or it is not New Testament repentance. Repentance means not only sorrow and distress for the wrong done, but the acceptance of the Atonement of Jesus which will make me what I have never been—holy.

Ask God to awaken in your heart and conscience a realisation of what identification with sin on the part of Jesus meant. He did not come to manifest what God was like only; He came to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself so that men might see God in Him—"He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." The manifestation of Jesus as God Incarnate and in His holy Manhood are incidents connected with the one great purpose of His coming, which was a vicarious identification with sin.

As saved and sanctified saints, have we ever realised that our vocation is a vicarious identification with the life of the world that is not right? One of the subtlest snares is the idea that we are here to live a holy life of our own, with our eyes fixed on our own whiteness; we are here to carry out God's will as Jesus carried it out. Jesus carried out the will of God as the Saviour of the world; we are to carry out His will as saints. Jesus Christ was a vicarious Sufferer for the sin of the world, and we have to be vicarious sufferers, filling up "that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ." Have we ever realised that through the Atonement we can take on ourselves a vicarious attitude before God, a vicarious penitence, knowing "the fellowship of His sufferings"? Take it on the line of intercession, have we ever realised that we can hold off the curse and the terror of evil and sin from people who do not know God? May God save us from the selfish meanness of a sanctified life which says, "I am saved and sanctified, look what a wonderful specimen I am." If we are saved and sanctified we have lost sight of ourselves absolutely, self is effaced, it is not there. The sacrifice of the sanctified self is the lesson to be learned. We are saved and sanctified for God, not to be specimens in His showroom, but for God to do with us even as He did with Jesus, make us broken bread and poured-out wine as He chooses. That is the test—not spiritual fireworks or hysterics, not fanaticism, but a blazingly holy life that "confronts the horror of the world with a fierce purity," chaste physically, morally and spiritually, and this can only come about in the way it came about in the life of Our Lord.

Beware of the subtle insinuations which come in the guise of light, that we are to be like Jesus in the sense of sharing in His great mediatorial work; we are not. Jesus Christ came into the world to deliver men from sin; we do not. He was God Incarnate; we are not. Jesus said that He came to do the will of His Father, and He sends us to do His will. "As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." What is the will of Jesus? That we make disciples, after we ourselves have become disciples. The emphasis today is being put on the fact that we have to save men; we have not. We have to exalt the Saviour Who saves men, and then make disciples in His Name. Jesus says, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." If I lift up Jesus where the New Testament lifts Him up, on the Cross, i.e. if I present Him as being made sin and putting it away by the sacrifice of Himself, Jesus says He will draw all men unto Him, and there will come the surprising illumination of the Spirit "... so is every one that is born of the Spirit." The "so" refers to the infinite surprise of the Spirit of God at work in the souls of men bringing the amazing revelation—"I know Who Jesus is." We have unconsciously usurped the place of the Holy Ghost; we present a series of argumentative doctrines and say, "If you believe this and accept that, something will happen." It never happens in that way, but always as a tremendous surprise.

The touchstone of the Holy Spirit's work in us is the answer to our Lord's question: "Who do men say that the Son of Man is?" Our Lord makes human destiny depend on that one thing, Who men say He is, because the revelation of Who Jesus is is only given by the Holy Spirit. The sign that we have received the Holy Spirit is that we think rightly of Jesus. Jesus bases membership in His Church on the revelation of Who He is—"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." That is the "rock" on which Jesus builds His Church, viz., the revelation of Who He is and the public confession of it. (Cf. 1 Corinthians 12:3)

THE SELF-CONSCIOUSNESS OF JESUS-II

His Temptation

Matthew 4:1-11

In the silent years Our Lord learned how to be; at His Baptism He had revealed to Him what He had to do; in the Temptation what to avoid. Always remember that what is exhibited in the life of Our Lord is for our instruction when once we have been readjusted to God through the Atonement.

"Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil" (Matthew 4:1). Immediately after His Baptism Jesus was driven by the Spirit (not by the devil) into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. The Spirit submitted Jesus to the tremendous onslaught of a supernatural being next to God in power. We talk much too glibly about the devil. If Our Lord was led into temptation, it behoves us not to rush into it. "Resist the devil," not attack him. Our Lord taught us to pray—"Lead us not into temptation." When once we know that we are stronger through testing, the danger is real to seek it.

"And He was there in the wilderness forty days, tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts" (Mark 1:13). It was not because Jesus spent forty days in solitude that He was strong, but because of the power which He matured in the wilderness of living not by earthly, but by heavenly law. Solitude is bad unless the life is driven there by God. "Whosoever delighteth in solitude is a wild beast or a god" (Plato). Solitude may come after God's supreme call, as it came to the Apostle Paul (see Galatians 1:15–16); but the main characteristic of Christianity is to drive us out of solitude; other religions earn it as a reward.

The word "temptation" is built on a Latin word meaning "to stretch." Every nature brings the setting of its own temptation; it is the thing held that is strained. If you are not holy, you will not be tempted to be unholy, because you do not hold holiness. Temptation is no temptation at all if it is clearly to evil. "God cannot be tempted with evil," says James, "and He Himself tempteth no man" (RV); but immediately we come to man, and in the case of Our Lord, the Son of God Incarnate as Man, temptation is possible. He "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."

Temptation is the test by an alien power of the possessions held by a personality. What did Jesus hold? He held in His Person His own unspotted sanctity and the fact that He was to be the King of men and the Saviour of the world; and the Spirit of God drove Him into the wilderness to be tested and strained on these points. Steel can be "tired" in the process of testing, and in this way its strength is measured. Everything on earth, animate and inanimate, can be fatigued; but Satan could not begin to fatigue Our Lord; He retained the possessions of His personality intact. The affinities of a man after a period of temptation prove whether or not he has yielded. "And behold, angels came and ministered unto Him." If Jesus had failed in any degree, the angels would have had no affinity with Him. It was in the temptation that Jesus met the strong man and overcame him (see Luke 11:21–22). It was in the temptation that Our Lord bruised the head of the serpent (see Genesis 3:15, cf. Romans 16:20). Every temptation of Satan is perfectly wise. The wisest, shrewdest, subtlest things are said by Satan, and they are accepted by everybody as the acme of human philosophy; but when the Spirit of God is at work in a man, instantly the hollow mockery at the heart of what Satan is trying to do, is seen. When we understand the inwardness of the temptation we see how Satan's strategy is turned into confusion by the Spirit of God.

1. The Possibility of the Public Ministry (Matthew 4:1–4)

If Thou art the Son of God, command that these stones become bread. (Matthew 4:3 RV)

Jesus Christ came to be the Saviour of the world and the King of men; no one could ever have such an understanding of the condition of men or of their needs as He had. Now watch what Satan says—"Put man's needs first, heal their bodies, give them bread, and they will crown You King; Your chance is symbolised in Your own particular need, satisfy Your own requirements first, and then the needs of every other man." Was Satan right? Read John 6:15. After He had fed the five thousand the temptation was repeated, but "Jesus therefore perceiving that they were about to come and take Him by force, to make Him king, withdrew again into the mountain Himself alone" (RV). He would not realise His Kingship of men along that line.

What is the attitude of the Church to-day? Christ on the throne of God? No, Man on the throne of God! The tendency is to reverse the order of the commandments (see Mark 12:29-31). The temptation which beset Our Lord with such fascination and power is the very temptation which is besetting the modern Christian—"Heal bodies, cast out devils, feed the poor, and men will crown You King." The temptation is more powerful to-day than ever it has been in the history of the Church, to put men's needs first, not God; to spell God in the term "humanity"; to make God an etcetera for blessing humanity. If you heal men and give them bread, what do they care about the claims of Jesus Christ? Health and happiness is what is wanted to-day and Jesus Christ is simply exploited. We who name the Name of Christ, are we beginning to discern what Satan is after? He is trying to fatigue out of us what God has put in, viz., the possibility of being of value to God. Our only safety is to watch Our Lord and Saviour. "For in that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succour them that are tempted" (Hebrews 2:18).

2. The Possibility of the Powerful Mastery (Matthew 4:5-7)

If Thou art the Son of God, cast Thyself down. . . . (Matthew 4:6 RV)

Remember that temptation, literally, is to try the strength of the thing held. Satan did not tempt Jesus to sin, as we think of sin; he knew better. The one thing Satan aims at is that we put ourselves as master instead of God (see Genesis 3:5); and now he comes to the Son of God and says, "You are the King and the Saviour of mankind, why not use Your power? Use apparatus, startle people out of their wits and then say, 'Believe in Me." Could Jesus Christ have manifested His mastery over men in that way? Of course He could, but the Son of God as Son of Man is showing what a normal holy man is like. At His Baptism Our Lord accepted His vocation to bear away the sin of the world, and in this place of absolute loneliness He is being tested by all the powers that are against God; but He went through the temptation without fatigue.

There are plenty of Christians to-day who are not appealed to on the "bread" line, but the "signs and wonders" line does appeal to them. What is the cunning thing that is rending the Church to-day? Where it is not socialism, it is supernaturalism.—"Ask God for manifestations to prove you are a child of His." Satan's one aim is to thwart God's purpose, and he can easily do it if he succeeds in making us take this line—"Now that I am baptised with the Holy Ghost, there must be marvellous manifestations so that people will be amazed at what God has done for me." Jesus said, When the Holy Ghost is come, "He shall glorify Me," not glorify you. The error of the "signs and wonders" movement is that the eye is fixed not on Jesus, but on our own whiteness, or on the amazing of those around us because of what God has done. Jesus Christ never went on that line, and the unobtrusive kind of life He lived is exactly the type of life the saints are to live. There was no "show business" with the Son of God, and there is to be no "show business" with the saints. "Thinkest thou that I cannot beseech My Father, and He shall even now send Me more than twelve legions of angels?" (Matthew 26:53 RV). Why did Jesus refuse the supernatural intervention? It was not His Father's will for Him. That is the only reason. "How then should the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?" (RV). "He was crucified through weakness"—the strongest Being Who ever trod this earth, because He knew what He could do and did not do it. "He saved others, Himself He cannot save." Think of the miserable little "struts" we exhibit—"I must insist on my rights." Then take them! But if you are a saint, you have a glorious opportunity of following the example of Jesus and being strong enough to decline to exercise your rights. An infallible sign of error spiritually is when all you can say about a man or woman of God is that they are so sweet, so beautiful, so gentle; they have never been true to the Lord. If the Holy Ghost is indwelling a man or woman, no matter how sweet, how beautiful, how Christlike they are, the lasting thought you go away with is-What a wonderful Being the Lord Jesus Christ is.

3. The Possibility of Political Messiahship (Matthew 4:8–11)

All these things will I give Thee, if Thou wilt fall down and worship me. (Matthew 4:9)

This is the most subtle temptation of all—"You are the Son of God, You are here to fulfil all the promises of God, and You know perfectly well that if You compromise judiciously with the powers of evil, You can easily overcome them and will pull the whole world round to Your flag." Is Satan right? He certainly is. The first sign of the dethronement of God is the apparent absence of the devil and the peaceful propaganda that is spread abroad. The great cry today is "Be broad; accommodate yourself with evil so diplomatically that the line of demarcation is gone. Run up the white flag, say to the prince of this world, "We have been too puritanical in the past, there has been too clear a division between us, now we will go arm-in-arm." Is that the order? Never! "And the devil said unto Him, To Thee will I give all this authority, and the glory of them: for it hath been delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it" (Luke 4:6 RV). Satan is the prince of this world, and during this dispensation he has power to give authority to those who will yield to him and compromise. We are here to stand true to God, not to attack men. No prophet ever lived by his message; immediately he tries to, he must accommodate his message to the standards of the people. The messenger of God has to stand where Jesus Christ stood, steadfast in obedience to God first. One of the most curious phases to-day is that people are expecting the devil to do things. Let us keep our eyes on God, and remember that behind the devil is God, and that the Son of God has bruised Satan's head. There is a wonderful symbolism about the place of the crucifixion; Jesus was crucified at "a place called Golgotha, that is to say, a place of a skull." That is where He has always been put to shame, in the thinking part of man, and only when the thinking part of a man is swayed by the Holy Ghost will he find an answer to every one of the temptations that Satan brings. The temptation to the first Adam was to ignore the supremacy of God over the individual, to make man his own god. What was it Satan tried to make the last Adam do? To do God's will according to His own discernment—"You are the Son of God, assert Your prerogative of Sonship." Jesus was led into the wilderness to see whether what He held in His Person, viz., His unique Saviourhood and His unspotted sanctity, would stand the test. The first Adam did not stand the strain for very long; but the last Adam did not begin to give way under the strain. Adam was innocent, not holy; that is, he had no wrong disposition in him, yet he was tempted. Jesus was holy, yet He was tempted. It was impossible to tempt Jesus with evil. The first obedience of Jesus was not to the needs of man but to the will of His Father, and at the heart of every one of Our Lord's answers is this—"I came to do God's work in His way, not in My own way, though I am the Son of God."

When we are sanctified we get our first introduction into what God calls temptation, viz., the temptation of His Son. We imagine that when we are sanctified we are delivered from temptation; we are not, we are loosened into it; we are not free enough before to be tempted. Immediately we are sanctified, we are free, and all these subtleties begin to work. God does not shield us from any requirements of a fullgrown man or woman, because His aim is to bring many "sons unto glory"; not emotional, hysterical people, but men and women who can withstand and overcome and manifest not only innocence, but holiness. We cannot be innocent in the sense that the first Adam was until we are re-made by regeneration; and we cannot be holy in the sense that the last Adam was holy until we are made one with Him, then the same temptations that betook Our Lord will betake us when we have become His brethren (see Hebrews 2:11).

THE TRANSFIGURATION

The Great Divide

The "Great Divide" is the name given to the ultimate height of land in the Rocky Mountains where the waters separate and run one way to the Atlantic, the other to the Pacific. The Mount of Transfiguration is the "Great Divide" in the life of Our Lord.

1. Toward the Summit (Matthew 16:13–17:8)

When holy character was fully matured in Our Lord, earth lost its hold on Him and He was transfigured. In all probability if Adam had transformed his innocence into holy character by obeying God's voice, transfiguration would have been the way out of this order of things, there would have been no death. The entering in of sin made that impossible. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Romans 5:12). "For the wages of sin is death" (Romans 6:23). Adam was intended by God to partake in his own development by sacrificing the life of nature to the will of God, and in that way to transform innocence into holiness. Our Lord came on the same plane as Adam and He did all that Adam failed to do; He transformed innocence into holy character, and when He had reached the full purpose of His Manhood He was transfigured.

The characteristic of the holiness of Almighty God is that it is absolute, it is impossible to antagonise or strain it. The characteristic of the holiness of Jesus is that it manifested itself by means of antagonism, it was a holiness that could be tested (see Hebrews 4:15). The Son of God as Son of Man transformed innocence into holy character bit by bit as things opposed; He did not exhibit an immutable holiness but a holiness of which we can be made partakers—"that we might be partakers of His holiness" (Hebrews 12:10). Jesus Christ revealed what a normal man should be and in so doing showed how we may become all that God wants us to be. When we are sanctified we do not get something like a landslide of holiness from heaven; we are introduced into a relationship of one-ness with God, and as Our Lord met antagonistic forces and overcame them, so must we. The life Jesus lived is the type of our life after sanctification. We are apt to make sanctification the end; it is only the beginning. Our holiness as saints consists in the exclusive dedication to God of all our powers.

One thing that is not sufficiently noticed is the place of the Transfiguration in the life of Our Lord; it came at the climax of His public ministry. In Matthew 16 we read that Jesus asked His disciples, first,

"Who do men say that the Son of man is?" (RV) and then, "But who say ye that I am" (RV) and in a flashing, revolutionary moment of discernment Peter confessed, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Then Our Lord laid down the basis of membership in His Church—"upon this rock," i.e. the revelation of Who Jesus is and the public confession of it, "I will build My church." "From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto His disciples, how that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day." Our Lord had made mystical allusions to His death earlier (see John 2:19–22 but the disciples did not know what He meant; here He tells them plainly why He came—to be killed. And now we read that He took three of the disciples into a high mountain apart, "and He was transfigured before them" (RV).

Another thing we are apt to overlook is what led up to the Transfiguration in Our Lord's own life. The Gospels reveal these three things—first, Jesus Christ's deliberate free submission of Himself to His Father: "I can of Mine own self do nothing." Second, the subordination of His intelligence to His Father: "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of Myself." Third, the submission of His will (not the subjugation of His will) to His Father: "But the Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works." All through, Jesus manifested a strong personal identity, but the dominant note was the submission of it all to His Father. He separated His holy Self for God's purposes, "For their sakes I sanctify Myself." Before He spoke, He listened with the inner ear to His Father; He never allowed thought to originate from Himself. "For I spake not from Myself; but the Father which sent Me, He hath given Me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak" (RV). That is the meaning of communion, an intelligent determined submission. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do."

When we are sanctified, our spiritual education goes along the same lines—the deliberate sacrifice to God of the self God has sanctified; the determined subordination of our intelligence to God, and the determined submission of our will to God. What a glorious opportunity there is for Jesus Christ in our lives! We testify to salvation and sanctification, but are we proving day by day that Jesus Christ is "made unto us... sanctification" in all holy living, in all holy speaking, and all holy thinking? Are we doing the "greater works" that Jesus said we should do because our wills are submitted to Him as He submitted His will to His Father?

2. Transformation on the Summit (Luke 9:29) And as He prayed, the fashion of His countenance was altered, and His raiment was white and glistering.

We say, "No cross, no crown"; in the life of Our Lord the crown of the glory of the Transfiguration came before the Cross. You never know Jesus Christ, and Him crucified unless you have seen Him transfigured in all His transcendent majesty and glory; the Cross to you is nothing but the cross of a martyr. If you have seen Jesus glorified, you know that the Cross is the revelation of God's judgement on sin, that on the Cross Our Lord bore the whole massed sin of the human race. "Him Who knew no sin He made to be sin on our behalf" (RV). No wonder we say:

Since mine eyes have looked on Jesus I've lost sight of all beside.

Have we seen Him, "crowned with glory and honour"?

When the Transfiguration took place Our Lord as Son of Man had fulfilled all the requirements of His Father for His earthly life and He was back in the glory which He had with the Father before the world was. Why did He not stay there? Supposing Jesus had gone straight to heaven from the Mount of Transfiguration, what would have happened? He would have gone alone. No one would ever have been able to follow Him; His life would have been only a glorious ideal to lash humanity to despair. If Jesus Christ had gone to heaven from the Mount of Transfiguration we might have worshipped Him, but we would have had no power to live the kind of life He lived. But Jesus did not come to show us what a holy life was like: He came to make us holy by means of His death. The only way in which Our Lord does become our Example is when His life has been imparted to us. When we partake of His life through the experience of regeneration we are put into a state of innocence towards God, and we have then to do what Jesus did, viz., transform that innocence into holy character by a series of moral choices.

All that transpired in the life of Our Lord after the Transfiguration is altogether vicarious, we are without a guide to it in our own experience. Up to the Transfiguration we can understand His holy life and follow in His steps when we have received the Holy Spirit; after the Transfiguration there is no point of similarity, everything is unfamiliar to us. Jesus Christ has a consciousness about which we know nothing. We have come to the place where He is completing the will of God for the salvation of fallen humanity. Beware of the teaching that makes out that Jesus Christ suffered because He was so noble, so pure, so far beyond the age in which He lived, that men put Him to death; it is not true. No martyr ever said what He said—"I lay it [My life] down of Myself." As workers, you will find that people like to listen as long as you talk about the holiness of Jesus and exalt Him as a marvellous character; but immediately you speak of His death and say that He became identified with sin that we might be delivered from it, you find resentment. In the New Testament everything centres in the Cross. The Cross did not happen to Jesus: He came on purpose for it.

3. Transition from the Summit (Luke 9:30–43)

"And behold, there talked with Him two men . . . who . . . spake of His decease which He was about to accomplish at Jerusalem" (RV). They spake not of His glory, but of His death. Who were the glorified visitants? One was Moses, whom the rabbis said died of the embraces of God, God kissed him into eternity; an ecstasy of Divine delight. The other visitant was Elijah, who was taken up to heaven in a mighty whirlwind with the accompaniment of horses and a chariot of fire; a marvellous ecstasy. Here on the Mount Our Lord Jesus Christ was back in His pre-Incarnate glory, and what did He do? He turned His back on the glory and came down from the Mount into the demon-possessed valley to be identified with sin on the Cross. The Bible is full of anti-climaxes. Over and over again we are brought up to a sublime height and then rushed down to earth. This is an anticlimax no human mind could have dreamed of. The Son of God was transfigured before His disciples we were "eyewitnesses of His majesty," says Peter in his Epistle; the voice of the Father came with the Divine approval, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him"; then He came down from the Mount and was crucified in obscurity. At His baptism Our Lord took upon Him His vocation, viz., to take away the sin of the world by identification, and from the Transfiguration onward He fulfils that vocation. Between the Baptism and the Transfiguration there is no mention made of Jesus Christ being made sin; during that time He was perfecting holiness, i.e. living the kind of life God requires us to live. After the Transfiguration we see Him dealing with sin—"put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself."

The completion of the Transfiguration is the Ascension, not the Resurrection. The Transfiguration is a glimpse of glory—but not yet. "For the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified" (John 7:39).

We find here an explanation why God sends His servants into difficult places after the experience of sanctification; He sends them where He sent His Son. Transfiguration is the necessary result of obeying God, and there are moments when the glory does shine through, but we have to come down into all that is symbolised by the demon-possessed valley, into the toil and turmoil of the world for His sake. The Church of Jesus Christ is in danger of forgetting this nowadays; she is seeking favour in the eyes of the world, seeking signs and wonders, and Christ stands without the door knocking. Have you ever caught a glimpse of what going "without the camp bearing His reproach" means? What camp? The "camp" that does not put Jesus first. After the glorious vision in the heavenlies—what? Filling up "that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ" (RV). Few of us get there because we stop short at sanctification. The emphasis is put on the subjective side, "Can Jesus Christ make me holy?" The dominant note with the apostle Paul was not sanctification, but Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. When we are baptised with the Holy Ghost self is effaced in a glory of sacrifice for Jesus and we become His witnesses. Self-conscious devotion is gone, self-conscious service is killed, and one thing only remains, Jesus Christ first, second, and third.

THE KENOSIS

The Self-Limitation on the Part of the Logos in the Act of Incarnation

At one time the subject of the Kenosis was always being discussed by theologians—What was it that Jesus emptied Himself of? how did He limit Himself? or did He limit Himself at all? Nowadays, the subject is scarcely touched upon; according to the modern standpoint Jesus Christ was simply a great, noble and good man. It is not stated in so many words, but we are brought to that conclusion. We are told that by understanding our own consciousness, we can understand the consciousness of Jesus Christ. The New Testament reveals that to be false. Jesus distinctly said, "No one knoweth the Son, save the Father" (RV), and over and over again our Lord makes statements regarding Himself which reveal Him to be a unique Being.

The doctrine of the Kenosis is clear first to our heart, not to our head; it is a spiritual fact, not a thought-out fact. When a man's heart is right with God the mysterious utterances of the Bible are spirit and life to him. Spiritual truth is discernible only to a pure heart, not to a keen intellect. It is not a question of profundity of intellect, but of purity of heart.

1. Self-Disglorification

Have this in mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: Who, being in the form of God, counted it not a prize to be on an equality with God, but emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant. . . . (Philippians 2:5–7 RV)

Paul does not tell us what Jesus emptied Himself of: He emptied Himself of what He was in His former existence. That is a revelation fact, and we must beware of any explanation that explains it away. The Apostle Paul does not say that Jesus thought nothing of Himself; He thought truthfully of Himself, He knew Who He was, but there was no self-assertion. Paul connects the two—"being on an equality with God" and not counting it "a thing to be grasped" (AV). That means Jesus never presumed on His equality with God, He did not continually assert it. There was only one brilliant moment in the life of Jesus, and that was on the Mount of Transfiguration. We do not know what the glory was which He had with the Father before the world was, but if we stand with Him on the Mount we see what He emptied Himself of. On the Mount the voice of the Father expressed the Divine approval—"This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased"; yet it was a step on to the Cross—a way none ever went before, or has ever had to go since.

Recall the temptation of Our Lord; Satan tempted Him on this very line, viz., to assert Himself. "Remember Who You are, the Son of God, assert your prerogative as Son." At the heart of every one of our Lord's answers is this—"I did not come here to assert Who I am, I came here for God's will to be done through Me in His way."

The same temptation comes to us as God's children—"If you are sanctified, presume on it, think of it as something to be grasped." Whenever we get our thoughts fixed on our experience instead of on the God who gave us the experience, it is impossible to form the mind which was in Christ Jesus. It is not a question of sanctification, but of what happens after sanctification. The steadfast habit of the Christian life is the effacement of self, letting Jesus work through us without let or hindrance⁵ as the Father worked through Him.

Whenever we are told by the Spirit of God to follow the example of Jesus, the following is emphatically prescribed to a particular point:

For hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example, that ye should follow His steps: Who did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth: Who, when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, threatened not... (1 Peter 2:21–23 RV)

Peter makes it perfectly clear and unambiguous how we are to "follow His steps," viz., in the way we suffer as Christians. "Who did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth: . . . when He suffered, threatened not." "Follow His example there," says Peter; just as Christ exhibited an unthreatening spirit when He suffered, we are to do the same. No human being can suffer wrongfully without finding the spirit of threatening awakened in him, a spirit which if put into words would be-"I'll make that person smart! The idea of saying that about me!" If we are born again of the Holy Ghost the disposition of Jesus in us will enable us to "follow His steps" so that when we suffer wrongfully, we do not threaten. The following is distinctly limited to that one point. "Learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart." We are never told to be like the unique Being the Lord Jesus Christ who came into the world as God Incarnate to put away sin, but when sin has been put away through the Atonement, we are to be conformed to His image. To "follow His steps" does not mean we have the belittling idea that we are to be Jesus Christ over again. It is not a question of "What would Jesus do?" but, "What would Jesus have me do?" We have to exhibit over again the life He exhibited; in this particular instance, in the circumstance of suffering wrongfully. Suffering is the touchstone of saintliness, just as temptation is, and suffering wrongfully will always reveal the ruling disposition because it takes us unawares.

"Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (RV). In this verse Paul indicates the type of mind we are to form, viz., the mind of true humility, the mind of Christ which He exhibited when He was on earth—utterly self-effaced and self-emptied, not the mind of Christ when He was in glory. If you are a saint, says Paul, manifest it by having the mind which was in Christ who said, "I am among you as He that serveth." One of the essential elements of Deity is the humility expressed in a baby and in Jesus Christ. "And He called to Him a little child, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye . . . become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven" (RV). To interpret these words to mean that we are to have as our ideal being servants of all, would end in mock humility. We cannot form the mind of Christ if we have not got His Spirit, nor can we interpret His teaching apart from His Spirit. Our spiritual destitution and entire dependence upon God, and our despair of ever attaining to this kind of life, is in reality the most glorious chance for God. The Spirit of God never allows the thought that is apt to crop up now and again in spiritual teaching, that we are to be specimens of what God can do. That thought is inspired by the devil, never by the Spirit of God. I am not here to be a specimen of what God can do; I am here to live the life so hid with Christ in God that what Jesus said will be true, Men will "see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

2. Self-Renunciation

And the Word became flesh. . . . (John 1:14 RV)

Him who knew no sin He made to be sin on our behalf; that we might become the righteousness of God in Him. (2 Corinthians 5:21 RV)

The Word, the Logos, became flesh for one purpose, to be identified with sin and put it away. At His Baptism Our Lord took on Him His vocation, which was to bear away the sin of the world, and it was along that line that He narrowed and limited and confined Himself. We miss the mark when we think on the aesthetic line and take Our Lord as a specimen of a highly strung, superbly fine nature, suffering from contact with coarse natures; we are talking nonsense if we put His suffering there. He never paid the remotest attention to that kind of suffering, nor is there any allusion made to it in the New Testament. His suffering is not the suffering of a man of refined sensibilities among brutes, or a holy character among unholy characters; His suffering is in a totally different domain and along a different line from anything from which we suffer, it is the suffering of a Saviour. "Though He were a Son, yet He learned obedience by the things which He suffered." Jesus Christ was God Incarnate for one purpose, not to reveal God to us, that is simply one of the outcomes of the Incarnation; the one great purpose of His coming was to bring back the whole human race into oneness with God. He who was originally "in the form of God," on an equality with God—that was His right, not a thing to be grasped—renounced it all, and took upon Him the form of a slave, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, in order that He might deliver the weak and the ungodly and the sinful from sin. (See Romans 5:6-8.)

In presenting the life of Jesus Christ we are not presenting an example, but an historic Fact essential to our soul's salvation. A sinner saved by grace will always refer in his testimony to the moment at which he experienced new birth. People who have never been convicted of sin say that what we call saintliness is simply the evolution of the finer qualities in man; there is no room whatever for that thinking in the New Testament. The finer qualities of man are remnants and ruins of what he once was, not the promise of what he is going to be, and the only way a man can fulfil God's purpose is by being born from above. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born from above" (RV mg).

We have to be careful of the teaching which is built on the idea that Jesus Christ is a great, high and wonderful Figure for us to imitate; there is no place in the New Testament for that idea. Unless we come to know Him as Saviour we are left amazingly unsatisfied—a beautiful influence, a wonderful life, that is all. "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners." A sinner, i.e. one convicted of sin, is the only one who is in a fit state to understand why Jesus came. When God became Incarnate in Jesus Christ for the purpose of removing sin, men saw nothing in Him to desire. Jesus Christ is "disadvantaged" in the eyes of everyone not convicted of sin: "He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we see Him, there is no beauty that we should desire Him" (RV); but when once the heart of a sinner is reached, that is a state of heart and mind able to understand why it was necessary for God to become Incarnate. The worst state a man could be in is never to have had a twinge of conviction of sin, everything happy and peaceful, but absolutely dead to the realm of things Jesus represents.

3. Self-Expenditure

For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through His poverty might become rich. (2 Corinthians 8:9 RV)

"Grace" is a theological word and is unfortunately used, because we usually mean by theology something remote that has to do with controversy, something whereby our mind is tied up in knots and our practical life left alone. In the Bible theology is immensely practical. "Grace" means the overflowing nature of God; we see it in Nature, we have no words to describe the lavishness of God. "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ" is the overflowing of God's nature in entire and absolute forgiveness through His own sacrifice. Do we discern that grace? We talk about the sacrifice of the Son of God and forget that it was the sacrifice of God Himself. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself."

"... that ye through His poverty might become rich." Rich in what? Not in possessions, but in personal identity. Our Lord Jesus Christ became poor, not as an example, but to give us the secret of His religion. The religion of Jesus Christ is a religion of personal relationship to God and has nothing to do with possessions. Professional Christianity is a religion of possessions that are devoted to God. The disciple realises that his life does not consist in the abundance of things he possesses, because what we possess often possesses us—we are possessed by possessions. "This is mine, you must not touch it!" When we become rich towards God it will show in the details of our actual life. "Without shedding of blood is no remission," is true of the marvellous Redemption of our Lord Jesus, and true also of us as saints. The blood of the majority of Christians flows in hard cash. If ever we are to be loosened from the thing which keeps us poor in relation to God, we must shed our blood right out. "As having nothing, and yet possessing all things." The poverty of God's children in all ages is a significant thing, and the poverty has to come through calamity.

IT IS FINISHED

John 19:30

The Transfiguration was the "Great Divide" in the life of Our Lord. He stood there in the perfect, spotless holiness of His Manhood; then He turned His back on the glory and came down from the Mount to be identified with sin, that through His death fallen humanity might not only be redeemed, but be enabled to have a conscious entrance into the life He lived. The Church of God is in danger of forgetting what Jesus Christ came for and He is being presented as a mere example. When the conscience of the Church is awakened and made to face the Cross of Christ, and to take Our Lord at His own estimate of Himself, she will realise the meaning of Paul's words—"For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ,"—"and Him risen"? No. "And Him glorified"? No. "Save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." The Resurrection and glorification through the Ascension are understandable only by the Cross. The death of Jesus Christ holds the secret of the mind of God.

1. The Vicarious Visitation of God

The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world. (John 1:29)

At the outset of Our Lord's public ministry He accepted His vocation, which was to "bear away the sin of the world" (RV mg); we must never forget that. John's baptism was a baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, and that was the baptism with which Jesus was baptised. "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness"; and right through to the end Our Lord was identified with that one thing, viz., sin. The agony in Gethsemane reveals the last reach of the unfathomable depths to which Our Lord went in that identification. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us"; "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world"; these were almost the first words John the Baptist spoke about Jesus, and almost the last words Jesus spoke were to a criminal—"Today shalt thou be with Me in paradise." The last possible reach of faith is the cry of a sinner who begins to realise that God can save him. Immediately he cries out to God he will find the marvel of Jesus Christ's salvation wrought out in his personal experience.

The death of Jesus Christ was not the death of a martyr; it was the death of God (cf. Acts 20:28). The Son of God was put to death by humanity based on self-realisation; through the Redemption self-realisation is turned into Christ-realisation, that is, a man enters into a relationship which puts to death, not the Son of God, but the disposition of sin. The essence of sin is my claim to my right to myself.

2. The Vanishing Vision of God

My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me? (Matthew 27:46)

This is a cry from the depths, it is unfathomable; it is recorded by the Spirit of God, and we are meant to look into all that is recorded. God has nothing to conceal in His great purpose for the salvation of man, and we are meant to look into the depths that this cry represents.

Who is it that experiences God-forsakenness? Is it the lonely missionary with no comradeship? He is the one who knows the nearness of God. The ones who understand the experience of God-forsakenness are men like Cain—"Mine iniquity is greater than can be forgiven" (Genesis 4:13, RV mg); men like Esau—"... an exceeding great and bitter cry" (RV); men like Saul—"God is departed from me, and answereth me no more."

If Our Lord had never known the "vanishing vision of God" He could not have been a complete Saviour. Agony which has God behind it can be turned into triumph; but think of agony in which there is no God, neither in Heaven above nor earth beneath, only the terror of an accusing conscience. No human sympathy can touch that desolation. In all probability the man is to blame for it, and just because he is, no human sympathy can reach him. Anyone can have a fellow-feeling for a poor unfortunate being and can sympathise with him, but who among us can understand agony which goes deeper down than can be put into words? Who but Jesus Christ?

"... holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." God cannot look on sin, and on the Cross, the world's sin and the world's punishment met in the person of the Son of Man. The Cross of Christ means that the salvation of God goes deeper down than the deepest depths of iniquity man can commit. No man can get beyond the reach of Jesus: He made a way back to the throne of God from the very heart of hell by His tremendous Atonement.

There is a conception abroad to-day that the Incarnation is something altogether apart from the idea of Atonement. According to the Bible, the Son of God became incarnate in order to bear away the sin of the human race. Before a man can take on him the sin of a family, he must be a member of it; and Jesus Christ took on Him the form of the human family that was cursed with sin, and in that human form He lived a spotlessly holy life, and by means of His death He can introduce the shamed members of the human family into the life He lived. Our Lord made human solidarity His own: He represents the vilest sinner out of hell and the purest saint out of heaven. He stands as the one great Representative of the human race, atoning for its sin. It beggars language to describe what He did-He went into identification with the depths of damnation that the human race might be delivered. "When Thou shalt make His soul an offering for sin. . . . "We praise God for our salvation, but have we ever once thought how it came to us? Through the deep shadows, deeper than any human mind can ever go.

Beware of saying that Jesus Christ took on Him the sin of the world by sympathy; that would mean that we can only take on His righteousness by sympathy. Jesus Christ took on the sin of the world by being identified with it, and we take on His righteousness by being identified with it. "But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who was made unto us . . . righteousness" (RV).

3. The Victorious Voice for God

And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, He said, Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit. (Luke 23:46)

The Cross is a tragedy to man, but a tremendous triumph to God, an absolute triumph. Listen to the clear, ringing voice—"Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit"! The spirit of the Son of God only? No, the spirit of the whole human race incarnated in the Saviour of the world. My spirit was there, your spirit was there; and by God's mighty grace and the gift of His Spirit which Our Lord shed forth after He ascended, we can know experimentally His complete salvation for body, soul and spirit.

Never put it on the shallow line that on the Cross the physical sufferings of Jesus were so great that His mind was blinded and He imagined His Father had gone from Him; that line does not touch the depths of identification with sin to which Our Lord went. Neither is it true to say that God was angry and hid His face from Him; if one may put it so—God was never more pleased with His Son than when He bridged the gulf between God and man by the sacrifice of Himself. When the New Testament speaks of the sufferings of Christ, it is suffering in connection with our salvation and in no other connection— "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into His glory?" He suffered "according to the will of God." It is not the suffering of a man; this is the Eternal Christ of God tasting "death for every man." The agony in Gethsemane represents the incomprehensible mystery of 2 Corinthians 5:21. "For He hath made Him to be sin for us. . . ."

It is only by thinking along these lines, baresouled, and humbled before God, that we can understand what a wonderful thing our salvation is. Salvation is an immense marvel to me—I, a sinner, can be made into a saint; but it is only possible because of what Jesus Christ did. Are the unfathomable depths of suffering through which Our Lord went to mean less than entire deliverance from sin for us? The reason sanctification is so easy for us is because of Gethsemane. The Holy Spirit received as a gift into our personal life brings the supernatural marvel of the salvation wrought out by Our Lord. That is the message the Spirit of God has given to be proclaimed to the world. It matters not how sinstained a man may be, through the death of Jesus Christ on the Cross he can partake of that wondrous salvation.

"I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do." What was finished? The rehabilitation of the human race back to where God desired it to be. It was not the salvation of individual men and women like you and me that was being finished, but the whole human race was put on the basis of Redemption. Redemption is not going to be finished: it is finished. Believing does not make a man redeemed; believing enables him to realise that he is redeemed. To any man who thinks, the basis of life is not reason, but Redemption. The miracle of the work of God is performed when he places himself on the "It is finished" side of the Cross. We take our salvation and our sanctification much too cheaply. We ought to rejoice when a man says he is saved, but remember what it cost God to make His grace a free gift. It cost agony we cannot begin to understand. The Christian faith means that the historic Cross of Christ is the pinhole in actual history through which we get a view of the purpose of God all through. Jesus Christ is "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

THE PLEROSIS The Self-Fulfilling of Jesus

We have to place the Lord Jesus Christ to our faith where the New Testament places Him. We are apt to look upon Jesus Christ as some marvellous power of God with no identity of its own, forgetting altogether that the New Testament Jesus Christ, Who transforms human lives by the miracle of regeneration, retains His own identity all through. Our Lord had a Self-conscious existence built on exactly the same basis as our human personality. What is true of the conscious and unconscious mind is true also of personality. The part of our personality of which we are conscious is the tiniest bit; underneath are the deep realms of unconscious life known only to God. Our Lord can never be defined in terms of individuality, but only in terms of personality. "I and My Father are one." Every bit of the personality of Jesus, conscious and unconscious, fulfilled the purpose of God.

1. His Sovereign Self-Identification

That they may be one, even as We are one. (John 17:22)

(a) The Joy of Personality

These things have I spoken unto you, that My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. (John 15:11)

You can never use the word "happiness" in connection with Jesus or His disciples. It is an insult to God and to human nature to have as our ideal a happy life. Happiness is a thing that comes and goes, it can never be an end in itself; holiness, not happiness, is the end of man. The great design of God in the creation of man is that he might "glorify God and enjoy Him forever." A man never knows joy until he gets rightly related to God. Satan's claim is that he can make a man satisfied without God, but all he succeeds in doing is to give happiness and pleasure, never joy. Our lives mean much more than we can tell, they fulfil some purpose of God about which we know nothing; our part is to trust in the Lord with all our heart and not lean to our own understanding. Earthly wisdom can never come near the threshold of the Divine; if we stop short of the Divine we stop short of God's purpose for our lives.

"... that My joy might remain in you." What was the joy of Jesus? The joy of Jesus was the absolute Self-surrender and Self-sacrifice of Himself to the will of His Father, the joy of doing exactly what the Father sent Him to do. "I delight to do Thy will," and He prays that His disciples may have this joy fulfilled in themselves.

There is no joy in a personality unless it can create. The joy of an artist is not in the fame which his pictures bring him, but that his work is the creation of his personality. The work of Jesus is the creation of saints; He can take the worst, the most misshapen material, and make a saint. "Wherefore if any man is in Christ, there is a new creation" (RV mg). The fullest meaning of sanctification is that Jesus Christ is "made unto us . . . sanctification," that is, He creates in us what He is Himself. The Apostle Paul alludes to the joy of creating when he says, "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of glorying? Are not even ye . . .? For ye are our glory and our joy" (1 Thessalonians 2:19–20 RV).

"Who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, . . ." It was not reward Our Lord looked forward to, but joy. "Reward" is our lame word for joy. When we want a child to do well, we do not say "You will have joy"; we say "You will have a reward, a prize." The way the joy of Jesus manifests itself is that there is no desire for praise. As Bergson has pointed out, we only want praise when we are not sure of having done well; when we are certain we have done well, we don't care an atom whether folk praise us or not.

(b) The Peace of Personality

"My peace I give unto you" (John 14:27). The idea of peace in connection with personality is that every power is in perfect working order to the limit of activity. That is what Jesus means when He says "My peace." Never have the idea of jadedness or stagnation in your mind in connection with peace. Health is physical peace, but health is not stagnation; health is the perfection of physical activity. Virtue is moral peace, but virtue is not innocence; virtue is the perfection of moral activity. Holiness is spiritual peace, but holiness is not quietness; holiness is the intensest spiritual activity.

It is easy to conceive of a personality full of joy and peace, but isolated. The striking thing about Our Lord is that He was never isolated. "If a man love Me . . . ," He says, "we will come unto him, and make Our abode with him." The conception is that of perfect converse and union; the abiding of the Trinity with the saint. The destiny of mankind in the purpose of God is not to do something, but to be something— "that they may be one, even as We are one."

Jesus had joy and peace to the last reach of His personality. With us it is possible to have joy and peace in one domain and disturbance and unrest in another; we have spells of joy and spells that are the opposite of joy, tribulation that brings distress; but there is a time coming when there will be no more tribulation, no more distress, when every part of our personality will be as full of joy and peace as was the File Leader⁶ of our faith. Have we got the unfathomable comfort of knowing that in and above all the clouds and mysteries the joy of Jesus is unsullied? "Now unto Him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy" (Jude 24). It is a good thing to let the Spirit of God kindle our imagination as to what Jesus Christ is able to do.

2. His Sovereign Self-Fulfilment

Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted . . . (Acts 2:33)

The Ascension placed Jesus Christ back in the glory which He had with the Father before the world was. The Ascension, not the Resurrection, is the completion of the Transfiguration. The two visitants on the mount, who might well have come to usher Him back into heaven, instead spake with Him "of His decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem." And it came to pass, while He blessed them, He was parted from them, and carried up into heaven," and the angels told the watching disciples that "this Jesus, which was received up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye beheld Him going into heaven." Our Lord does now, without any hesitation, go back into His primal glory; but He does not go alone. Through His Death and Resurrection He has made the way for the whole human race to get to the very throne of God.

The Death of Jesus was a revelation in act of the judgement of God upon the sin of the human race; the Resurrection is the absolution of God pronounced upon the human race, the abolishing of death which is the wages of sin. By His Resurrection Our Lord not only has the right to give His own life to anyone who will take it, but power to "fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of His glory..." (RV). That does not take place in this dispensation. Beyond our comprehension, you say? Only beyond the comprehension of intellect. There is all the difference between the comprehension of intellect and the comprehension of spirit. We comprehend a thing by our spirit and feel we know it but cannot express it; it is a knowledge "which passeth knowledge."

(a) Supreme Power

'All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth" (Matthew 28:18). All power is given—unto whom? To the Being who lived a humble, obscure life in Nazareth; the One who says "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." If all power is given to Jesus Christ, what right have I to insult Him by worrying? If we will let these words of Jesus come into our heart, we shall soon see how contemptible our unbelief is. Jesus Christ will do anything for us in keeping with His own character; the power that comes from Him is stamped with His nature. Will I say sceptically, "What does Jesus Christ know about my circumstances? Is His power and understanding sufficient to manage things for me?" To talk like that is the way to realise the size of our unbelief, and to see why Jesus Christ was so stern in condemning it.

"All power is given unto Me," and yet Paul says "He was crucified through weakness," and, he adds, "we also are weak in Him." Am I powerful enough to be weak? Any weak man can strike another back, it takes a strong man to take it meekly; the omnipotence of Jesus at work in a man means that neither the world, the flesh or the devil can make him show anything but Christlikeness. The Self-identification of Jesus with His servants through all the ages is along this line. "They took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus." The meaning of salvation in experience is that we are enabled to manifest in our mortal flesh the family likeness that Jesus had to God. There is only one type of humanity, and only one type of holiness, the holiness that was manifested in the life of the Lord Jesus, and it is that holiness which He gives to us. It is not that we are put in a place where we can begin to be like Him: we are put in a place where we are like Him. In Galatians 2:20 the Apostle Paul is referring to the fact that the very disposition of holiness which was in Jesus is in him by means of his identification with His death. It is not sentiment, it is a fact; not poetry, but a practical working out of this marvellous likeness to Jesus Christ. "We know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is" (1 John 3:2).

(b) Supreme Wisdom

"Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do" (John 14:13). When you pray, remember that it is Jesus Christ who carries out the answer, God hands over this marvellous power to Him. By His Ascension Our Lord becomes omniscient, all-wise; have we ever had a glimpse of what that means? The wisdom which He exercised in a limited sphere and in complete dependence upon His Father while on earth, He can now exercise in an unlimited sphere. The revelation of our spiritual standing is what we ask in prayer; sometimes what we ask is an insult to God; we ask with our eyes on the possibilities or on ourselves, not on Jesus Christ. Get on to the supernatural line, remember that Jesus Christ is omniscient, and He says, "If ye shall ask anything in My name, I will do it."

(c) Supreme Presence

"And lo, I am with you alway." Don't refine this revelation fact away by taking it to mean a spiritual presence by the Holy Spirit; it is a grander, more massive revelation than that, "I am with you alway." Through His Ascension the glorified Lord is with us always. May God lift the veil as to what this means. Who was it saw Jesus after the Resurrection? Only those who had spiritual insight. When the Spirit of God opens our spiritual eyes, we see Jesus, "crowned with glory and honour."

By His Ascension Our Lord raises Himself to glory, He becomes omnipotent, omniscient and omnipresent. All the splendid power, so circumscribed in His earthly life, becomes omnipotence; all the wisdom and insight, so precious but so limited during His life on earth, becomes omniscience; all the unspeakable comfort of the presence of Jesus, so confined to a few in His earthly life, becomes omnipresence, He is with us all the days (RV mg).

What kind of Lord Jesus have we? Is He the All-powerful God in our present circumstances, in our providential setting? Is He the All-wise God of our thinking and our planning? Is He the Ever-present God, "closer than breathing, nearer than hands or feet"? If He is, we know what it means to "abide under the shadow of the Almighty." No one can tell us where the shadow of the Almighty is, we have to find it out for ourselves. When by obedience we have discovered where it is, we must abide there—"there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling." That is the life that is more than conqueror because the joy of the Lord has become its strength, and that soul is on the way to entering ultimately into the joy of the Lord.

OUR LORD'S VIEW OF HIMSELF AND HIS WORK—I

The Fact of Christ

"But who say ye that I am?" (RV). Jesus Christ is not a Being with a dual personality, He is a unique Personality with two manifestations: Son of God and Son of Man. He gives clear indication of how He lived a holy life, of how He thought and spoke, and He also gives clear expositions of God. Those expositions were given in a human body like ours, and the New Testament reveals how it is possible for us to live the same kind of life that Jesus lived through the marvel of the Atonement because the disposition which ruled Him is ruling us. What God demands of us is the very holiness that Jesus Christ exhibited in His life. We can "follow His steps" by recognising the wonderful work He has done, and manifest daily the marvel of His grace.

The first thing we have to do is to clear away the difficulties that have gathered round the Fact of Christ.

1. Difficulties of an Intellectual Kind

(a) Pre-Conceptions

Being the son (as was supposed) of Joseph. (Luke 3:23 RV)

There were many pre-conceptions about our Lord in His day, and this was a prevalent one. We do not bring with us those pre-conceptions, but we bring others; we have made up our mind that God will only come along certain lines, and like the religious people of His day, when He comes on another line, we do not recognise Him. It is difficult for anyone brought up with religious conceptions to get rid of them in the right way. What mental conception do we bring with us when we come to study the Lord Jesus Christ? If, for instance, a man has an agnostic pre-conception, it will obscure everything the New Testament says about God becoming Incarnate. This pre-conception may not trouble us, but it is as well to recognise that it is there. An agnostic says, "I cannot accept anything about Deity, I can only accept facts about human nature," then if you tell him he must accept the fact that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, you will never get near him; but if you go on this line—"Do you believe that Jesus Christ was the best, the holiest Man who ever lived?" he is obliged to listen. You cannot expect a man to accept an abstract proposition that the Bible is the Word of God; that is not the first thing to bring before him, the first thing is—"What about Jesus Christ? If He was the best, the holiest Man who ever lived, He was least likely to be deceived about Himself or to tell a lie; then will you ask for what He says God will give, viz., the Holy Spirit?" A man ceases to be an honest doubter the moment he refuses one way of getting at the truth because he does not like that way. The Apostle Peter, when he preached to the Gentiles, spoke of Jesus not as "the Son of God" but as "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God." That reveals the way in which the Holy Ghost brought Jesus Christ on to the platform on which men lived, and we have to do the same to-day. We have to be so controlled by the Holy Spirit, to so submit our intelligence to Him, that Jesus Christ is presented along the line that appeals to those to whom we talk.

(b) Prejudice

How can ye believe, which receive glory one of another, and the glory that cometh from the only God ye seek not? (John 5:44 RV)

These words of Jesus bring out the very essence of prejudice, viz., to foreclose judgement without sufficiently weighing the evidence. "It is a moral impossibility for you to believe in Me," Jesus says, "not because you are bad, but because you have another standard in view, you seek honour one of another." Remember, we only see along the line of our prejudice, and prejudice means ignorance; we are always prejudiced over what we know least about and we foreclose our judgement about it—"I have sealed the question, docketed it and put it into a pigeon-hole and I refuse to say anything more about it" (cf. John 9:22). Then it is impossible for you to see along any other line until you are willing to take the packet out of the pigeon-hole, unseal it and open the question again. Every point of view which I hold strongly makes me prejudiced and I can see nothing else but that point of view, there is a ban of finality about it which makes me intolerant of any other point of view.

Up to the time of the Resurrection the disciples saw only along the line of their old narrow Jewish prejudices; when they received the Holy Spirit from the risen Lord, the operation that was performed on the inside enabled them to see along the line of Christ's revelation (see Luke 24:31, 45). What takes place at new birth is an "explosion" on the inside (a literal explosion, not a theoretical one) that opens all the doors which have been closed and life becomes larger, there is the incoming of a totally new point of view.

The way a searchlight works is a very good illustration for prejudice. A searchlight illuminates only what it does and no more; but let daylight come, and you find there are a thousand and one things the searchlight had not revealed. Whenever you get the light of God on salvation it acts like a searchlight, everything you read in the Bible teaches salvation and you say, "Why, it is as simple as can be!" The same with sanctification, and the Second Coming. When you come to the place where God is the dominant light you find facts you never realised before, facts which no one is sufficient to explain saving the Lord Jesus Christ. Christianity is not walking in the light of our convictions but walking in the light of the Lord, a very different thing. Convictions are necessary, but only as stepping stones to all that God wants us to be. The Apostle Paul puts it in 1 Corinthians 4:3-4—"But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgement: yea, I judge not mine own self. For I know nothing by myself; yet am I not hereby justified: but He that judgeth me is the Lord." We have to get into the white light of Jesus Christ where He is easily first, not our experience of Him first, but Jesus Christ Himself first, and our experience the evidence that we have seen Him.

2. Difficulties of a Doctrinal Kind (a) Distortions

Ye search the scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have eternal life. . . . And ye will not come to Me that ye may have life. (John 5:39–40 RV)

These verses reveal how a knowledge of the Scriptures may distort the mind away from Jesus Christ. Unless we know the Living Word personally first, the literal words may lead us astray. The only way we can understand the Bible is by personal contact with the Living Word, then the Holy Spirit expounds the literal words to us along the line of personal experience. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." The Jews knew the Scriptures thoroughly, yet their minds were so distorted that when they saw Jesus Christ they said, "He hath a devil." There is a context to the Bible, and Jesus Christ is that Context. The right order is personal relationship to Him first, then the interpretation of the Scriptures according to His Spirit. Difficulties come because beliefs and creeds are put in the place of Jesus Christ.

(b) Direction by Belief (Philippians 3:18; cf. Colossians 2:8, 18–23)

"For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ. . . ." Who are the enemies of the cross of Christ? First of all, what was the Cross of Christ to Paul? The cross of a martyr? No. The Cross to Paul was the Cross of God whereby He readjusted humanity to Himself. "But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world" (Galatians 6:14). "If any one preaches ordinances, the precepts and doctrines of men, and ignores the Cross," Paul says, "I tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the revelation which God gave through Jesus Christ." You can always detect the right kind of belief by a flesh-and-blood testimony. How many of us can say "The life which I now live in the flesh" (the life you know and see), "I live by the faith of the Son of God"? Christian doctrines are the explanation of how Jesus Christ makes us saints, but all the doctrine under heaven will never make a saint. The only thing that will make a saint is the Holy Ghost working in us what Jesus Christ did in the Atonement. Jesus Christ demands absolute devotion to Himself personally, then the application of His principles to our lives. For what purpose? That we may understand Him better. To be devoted to doctrines will twist us away from the Centre; devotion to Jesus Christ relates our doctrines to the one Centre, Jesus Christ. Read the words of the Spirit to the Church in Ephesus—"Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love." "The doctrines you teach are all right, but they have become un-centred, they are not centred in love for Me." "Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works" (Revelation 2:5).

Am I prepared to accept Jesus Christ's view of Himself, or have I a point of view? Will I come to Jesus Christ just as I am and face the fact that He says certain astounding things about Himself? Jesus Christ did not preach a gospel of hope: He came to re-organise humanity from the inside through a tremendous tragedy in His own life called the Cross, and through that Cross every member of the human race can be reinstated in God's favour and enter into a conscious inheritance of the Atonement.

Jesus Christ is the only medium God Almighty has for revealing Himself—"And no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son. . . ." Our Lord knows nothing about God being revealed in Nature, in the love of our friends, etc. The poet talks about God being revealed in Nature, but the poet does not remember that there is sin in the world: he sees clearly what God's idea is for man, but he forgets that we belong to a fallen race, consequently his poetry is only a vision, it cannot be worked out on Mother Earth.

"... and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him" (Matthew 11:27). Who are the ones to whom Jesus Christ will reveal God? Jesus Christ will reveal God to all who come to Him, not those who accept certain creeds or doctrines, but those who come to Him, with beliefs or without them, if they will only get straight through to Him. "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "And him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out."

OUR LORD'S VIEW OF HIMSELF AND HIS WORK—II

The Force of the Fact of Christ on Thinking and Living

It is a tremendous thing to know that there are higher heights than we can scale, deeper depths than we can fathom. The reason why average Christian workers remain average Christian workers is that they are grossly ignorant about things for which they see no immediate use. The majority of us are brought up on spooned meat⁸ —"for when by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of solid food" (Hebrews 5:12 RV).

1. Method of Christian Thinking

Have this in mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus. (Philippians 2:5 RV)

The method of thinking for a Christian is first of all to become rightly related to Jesus Christ and then to begin to think in accordance with His mind. There is nothing simple under heaven saving the personal relationship to Jesus Christ, and Paul is concerned lest any philosophy should come in to corrupt that simplicity, the simplicity of an understanding relationship between God and our own soul. "But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve in his craftiness, your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity and the purity that is toward Christ" (2 Corinthians 11:3 RV). To-day any number of religious books set out to expound Jesus Christ from a philosophical point of view; they are entrancing and apparently helpful, but in reality they do a great deal of harm because instead of helping us to form the mind of Christ and understand His point of view, they serve to confuse our mind. When people use the phrase "Preach us the simple Gospel," they generally mean, "Preach us the thing we have always listened to, the thing that keeps us sound asleep; don't present us with anything new." That means the mind is not open to accept facts, not open to entering into relationship with God.

The Cross is the symbol of Christian living and it is also the symbol of Christian thinking. Until a man is born again his thinking goes round and round in a circle and he becomes intoxicated with his own importance. When he is born again there is a violent readjustment in his actual life, and when he begins to think along Jesus Christ's line there is just as tremendous a revolution in his thinking processes. To ignore the Cross in either living or thinking is to become a traitor to Jesus Christ. The Apostle Paul tells us how our thinking as saints is to be conducted, viz., by "casting down imaginations [reasonings], and every high thing that is exalted against the knowledge of God, and bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ" (RV). To bring every thought into captivity is the last thing we do, and it is not done easily; in the beginning we have to do violence to our old ways of thinking just as at sanctification we had to do violence to our old ways of living. Intellect in a saint is the last thing to become identified with Jesus Christ. Paul urges, "Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (RV). Many a Christian who loves Jesus Christ in his heart denies Him in his head.

The method of thinking for the saint is not to think along the line of Christian principles, but after he has become rightly related to Jesus Christ to see that he allows nothing to corrupt the profound simplicity of that relationship. That will mean we shall only have those experiences which Jesus Christ sanctions. If you go on the line of accepting whatever can be experienced, you will find you have to accept the wildest, vaguest, most indeterminate things. For example, a man may come and tell you that he has had communication with departed friends; well, he is no more likely to be untruthful than you are—how are you going to judge whether his experience is right or not? The only guide is your personal relationship to Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ prohibits it, and that shuts the door straight off for you from tampering with spiritualism, therefore you refuse to have anything to do with what He will not allow. It is imperative to estimate the danger abroad to-day in books which deal with Christian thinking, particularly those which have the word "psychology" tacked on; be sure what kind of psychology it is—unless it is the psychology of the Bible it may be the psychology of agnosticism pure and simple; it may sound all right but in the final result it dethrones Jesus Christ.

The Christian method of thinking has its source in a personal relationship to Jesus Christ, and this means we have to take into account Our Lord's view of Himself. In reading the New Testament the first thing that strikes you with overwhelming clarity is that Our Lord's fundamental view of Himself was His oneness with the Father. The first and foremost consciousness of Jesus was not the needs of manhood, not the pitiable condition of men, but His relationship to His Father whose Name He had to hallow before all else. Our Lord's holy living was produced by submitting Himself to His Father: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father doing" (John 5:19 RV); His holy speaking was produced by submitting His intellect to His Father: "For I spake not from Myself; but the Father which sent Me, He hath given Me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak" (John 12:49 RV); and His holy miracle working was produced by submitting His will to His Father: "the Father abiding in Me doeth His works" (John 14:10 RV).

That is Our Lord's view of Himself, and when we become identified with Him He relates us to Himself as He was related to His Father. " . . . that they may be one, even as We are one." As saints, are we submitting our intellect to the revealed will of God and refusing to be corrupted from the simplicity of that relationship? The insistence all through the Epistles is on being transformed by the renewing of our mind; on having our minds stirred by being put in remembrance, and on building ourselves up on our most holy faith. We are called upon not only to be right in heart, but to be right in thinking. When we have become personally related to Jesus Christ we have to do the thing that is in our power to do, viz., think aright. In Philippians 4:8–9 Paul gives the rule for the thinking life of the Christian. Have we ever given our brains the task of concentrated thinking along that line? "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." It is because we will not bring every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ that all the perplexities are produced regarding methods of thinking which look like Christianity—strands are taken out of Jesus Christ's teaching, the Bible is exploited to agree with certain principles, but The Truth, Our Lord Jesus Christ, is ignored. If we base our thinking on principles instead of on a Person we shall go wrong, no matter how devout or honest we are. The one great Truth to keep stedfastly before us is the Lord Jesus Christ; He is the Truth. Only the whole truth is The Truth, any part of the truth may become an error. If you have a ray of light on The Truth never call it the whole truth; follow it up and it will lead you to the central Truth, the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Method of Christian Living

For hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example, that ye should follow His steps. . . . (1 Peter 2:21 RV)

The life of a Christian is stamped by a strong family likeness to Jesus. When we become rightly related to God on the ground of the Redemption our brains have to begin to think along the lines Jesus Christ thought on, and in our bodily life there will be produced a likeness to Him, so that people take knowledge of us, that we have "been with Jesus." The piety which is not built on a personal relationship to Jesus Christ is simply religious egotism, and the scunner that most of us have against "pi" people is wholesomely right. A "pi" person is simply overweeningly conceited religiously; he substitutes prayer and consecration for devotion to Jesus—"I am going to give so much time to prayer, so much time to Bible study, and by doing these things I shall produce the type of life which will please God." Where does Jesus Christ come in? He does not come in anywhere. The first thing the Holy Spirit does is to take away all sense of our own importance and produce in us a state of true humility. The test of all doctrine is, does it produce a likeness to Jesus Christ? The final test is how a man's thinking works out in his life. The Apostle Paul warns about the thinking which says that by sheer will power a man can do what he likes: "... which things have indeed a show of wisdom in will-worship, ... but are not of any value against the indulgence of the flesh" (Colossians 2:23 RV). The test of this "will to power" method of thinking is, has it any element of power over the wrong thing, over the disposition of sin? Jesus Christ alone can deal with that.

Take another method of thinking, the aesthetic—and here I am on the ground that I know better than any other, saving my soul's salvation. An aesthete bases all his thinking on the principle that anything that produces joy is justifiable for him. Aestheticism may be all very well for the kingdom of heaven, but it is the doctrine of the devil himself for the kingdom of earth. If once you base your thinking on the principles of aestheticism, you can justify any kind of vile corruption. The test of every system of thinking is not how it works in the best case, but how it works in the worst case. If the test were the best cases, that is, if everyone were well brought up, if men and women had not a moral twist, then any of these philosophies would work out quite well. The miracle of the Redemption of Jesus Christ is that He can take the worst and the vilest of men and women and make saints out of them.

Another method of thinking is egoistical. The egoist is one who makes all his thinking centre around human personality. The number of books written from this standpoint is legion. "Our greatest work," they say, "is to get straight down to the one important thing, viz., man, his dignity and nobility, and to look after his needs." What is the practical outworking of this? That God and man are one and the same. All we have to do is to let our inmost personality have expression—and what are we doing? We are expressing God. Is that line of thinking unfamiliar to-day? It is becoming more and more familiar.

The Christian method of thinking puts the intellect second, not first; the modern view puts intellect on the throne. God does not sum up a man's worth by his thinking, but by the way he expresses his thinking in actual life, that is, by his character. It is possible for there to be a tremendous divorce between a man's thinking and his practical life; the only thing that tells in the sight of God is a man's character. Beware of putting principles first instead of a Person. Jesus Christ puts personal relationship first—"Be rightly related to Me, then work out your thinking."

In these methods of thinking which contrast with the Christian method, certain aspects of Christianity are stressed whilst other aspects are ignored, and in this way men's minds are corrupted from the simplicity which is in Christ Jesus. The presentation given of Jesus Christ in these methods of thinking is of one who has a little more breath than the rest of us: He is in the same "swim," but able to turn round and give us a helping hand. Is that the view the New Testament gives of Jesus Christ? Jesus said, "Upon this rock I will build My church"—the rock of personal revelation of who Jesus Christ is—"the Son of the living God." This is the invincible fact against which nothing can prevail. Along this line we see the profundity of the Apostle Paul's words, "For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified" (1 Corinthians 2:2). According to the New Testament the historic Jesus and the Eternal Christ are one and the same. The glorified Lord who appeared to the Apostle in all His ascended majesty is "this same Jesus" Who "trod this earth with naked feet, and wove with human hands the creed of creeds." The Jesus who saves our souls and identifies us with Himself is "this same Jesus" who went to sleep as a Babe on His mother's bosom; and it is "this same Jesus," the almighty, powerful Christ, with all power in heaven and on earth, who is at work in the world to-day by His Spirit.

OUR LORD'S VIEW OF HIMSELF AND HIS WORK-III

The Finality of the Person of Jesus Christ

By "Finality" is meant that there is nothing to be added. In our previous studies we have been clearing the ground for studying the Person of Our Lord Jesus Christ, and warning ourselves of the danger of bringing to that study a mental point of view which we have no right to bring. We must be prepared to accept facts and not try to build facts into our preconceived fancies.

"The Word became flesh..." (RV). What Word? The explaining Word about God, about Creation, about man, became Incarnate, became a flesh and blood Fact, and trod this earth with human feet, and worked with human hands, and thought with a human brain. Now perplexities and fogs have gone for ever! The Bible never asks us to try and find out God, the human mind can never work along that line; the Bible is dictated by the Holy Ghost and He knows exactly the lines along which human minds can work. "All things are delivered unto Me of My Father: and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him" (Matthew 11:27). Every other line of finding out God is atheistic impertinence, and trying to think about man is presumption, as long as we ignore the one Fact we can find out, the Lord Jesus Christ, and the interpreting fact about Him which is the Bible.

1. The Original Position of Man (Genesis 2:7; Romans 5:12)

When we read that "the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground," remember, that that man was the Federal Head of the race, not a member of the degenerate race to which we belong, but man as he came direct from the hand of God; "and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." God breathed into man that which, going forth from God and entering into man, became the spirit of man, that spirit is essentially man's spirit, and never ceases to be man's spirit. This is an insistent revelation all through the Bible. In John 20:22 another "breathing" is mentioned. After the Resurrection Jesus "breathed on them and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost"-man's spirit became energised by the Spirit of the Son of God. We must keep this distinction in mind in order to understand the difference between the Christian belief and the beliefs of other religions, which are reviving all over our land, viz., that man's spirit is simply a drop whipped out of the ocean of God's Spirit, that individuality is a mistake, and man is going to drop back again into God's Being and cease to be. The points of view are fundamentally different. Man's spirit is as immortal as God's Spirit; God can no more annihilate man's spirit than He can annihilate Himself.

Soul is the expression of spirit in the body; soul has no existence apart from spirit and body. Immediately body goes, the spirit returns to God who gave it, and soul is not. The resurrection is of body, not of spirit or soul. Spirit is the immortal, indestructible part of a man, and it goes back to God who gave it, with all the characteristics that marked it while it was on this earth. When the Bible speaks of the resurrection body of a good man, it says it is to be like Jesus Christ's glorious body (Philippians 3:21). Our Lord does not give the picture of the resurrection body of a bad man, but He does say there will be a "resurrection of damnation" (John 5:29).

The fundamental basis of the life of man was the life of God and communion with God, and until he fell Adam's spirit and soul and body were in absolute harmony with God. What do we mean by the Fall? God intended man to progress from innocence to holiness by a series of deliberate moral choices in which he was to sacrifice the life of nature to the will of God. Adam refused to do this, and that constitutes the Fall. When Adam fell the Spirit of God was withdrawn instantly, not after a time. The real seat of death is in man's spirit, the dissolution of the body is a mere incident; the point God's Book emphasises is the instant withdrawal of life, the withdrawal of the Spirit which held man's spirit, soul and body in living communion with God. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for all have sinned" (Romans 5:12).

Up to the time of the Fall man drew all his sustenance from God; when he fell, he lost that harmony completely; and the danger now is that although man's spirit is as immortal as God, it receives no sustenance from God. The first thing that happened was that man became his own god, exactly what the devil said would happen. Read Genesis 3, and you will find the devil insinuates—"God knows that if you eat of the fruit of the tree, and take the rule of yourself into your own hands, you will become as He is," and verse 22 is the confirmation from God's standpoint that man has become as He is. "Behold, the man is become as one of Us, to know good and evil." Man obliterated God from the throne and claimed that he was god. That is the essential principle of sin—"my claim to my right to myself." Insubordination is the characteristic of the fallen spirit of man, he will not sacrifice the natural life for the spiritual.

Personality, which in the Bible is synonymous with spirit, reveals itself in bodily life more or less clearly. The Spirit of God alone knows the full limit of our personality; therefore the Psalmist's attitude is the right one—"Search me, O God"; I am too deep to understand myself. Unless I have received the Holy Spirit my personality is dead to all God has to say, I have no affinity with anything God wants, I am my own god; but through the Atonement I can receive the Holy Spirit who imparts to me the life of Jesus and I am lifted into the domain where He is, and by obedience I can be led to the place of identification with His death.

Soul in fallen man is the expression of his personality, either in morality or in immorality. When Jesus Christ judges men He judges them according to the spirit, not according to soul, i.e., the fleshly presentation of their personality. He saw what we do not see, viz., the spirit behind. The spirit of fallen man has not the life of God in it, it has no power within it to discern God (cf. 1 Corinthians 2:10–14). The meaning of the Atonement is that man's spirit can be restored into harmony with God. It is not human nature that needs altering, it is man's spirit that needs to be brought back into right relationship with God, and before that can be done the disposition of sin has to be dealt with.

The gift of God to every fallen son of Adam is the gift of the Holy Spirit, that is, the essential power and nature of God coming into a man and lifting him to a totally new kingdom; and that power can be had for the asking—"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" (Luke 11:13). Yet is it not strange that men should go through seas of trouble before they get to the length of asking? If a man says, "I have this power in myself, all that is necessary is to develop it," then he will never be in agreement with Jesus Christ. Jesus says, "Ye have not [this] life in yourselves (RV)—the Fall obliterated it entirely; the gift of life was withdrawn, and "death reigned." Death is not annihilation: we exist in a kingdom of death (cf. Ephesians 2:1). In the Bible the term "life" is used only of the life of God; death is all that is not God. Man lives—to use a seeming contradiction of terms—in the kingdom of death, and only when he is born from above by the Holy Ghost does he enter into the kingdom of Life (see John 3:3). When man is right with God he is filled with God's Spirit. Whenever Jesus speaks about life He is referring to the life which is in Himself, and it is this life which He imparts by means of His death.

2. The Original Position of Jesus Christ

And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was. (John 17:5)

In these words the essence of the personality of Jesus is made known, it is identified as being exactly the same as Almighty God's. The snare of the modern tendency is in saying that we can know all about Jesus Christ if we will simply examine ourselves; Jesus says we cannot. "No man knoweth the Son, but the Father . . . "Jesus Christ makes the distinction perfectly clear between His personality and our human personality. Jesus Christ had a twofold personality: He was Son of God revealing what God is like, and Son of Man revealing what man is to be like. When our Lord talks about His own personality He identifies Himself with God Almighty—"I and My Father are one." For any man to say that would be blasphemy, we are not one with Almighty God; through the Atonement we become one with Jesus Christ, and He brings us into union with God, "... that they may be one, even as We are one." That is the meaning of the At-one-ment.

"Who, being [originally] in the form of God, . . . emptied Himself, . . . being made in the likeness of men" (RV). Our Lord might have taken on Him the form of an angel (see Hebrews 2:10), but He could not take the form of anything lower than man, because man is the last reach of creation in the image of God. Angels belong to a different realm; man was made in the likeness of God (see Genesis 1:26). In the Incarnation Jesus Christ came down to the lowest rung possible, He came on to the plane where Adam was originally, and He lived on that plane in order to show what God's normal man was like. And then He did what no man could ever do-He made the way for man to get back to the position he had lost. By the sheer might of the Atonement we can be reinstated in God's favour—that is the marvel. After we are identified with the death of Jesus the life of Jesus becomes the pattern for our walk in this world. Jesus Christ transformed innocence into holiness by sacrificing Himself to God; when we are rightly related to God the golden rule for our life is the sacrifice of our will to Jesus Christ. It has to be submission of the intellect all along the line, and in these mortal bodies of ours, impaired and damaged through sin though they are, we are to manifest the life of Jesus. The same body which used to be the seat of a soul which expressed the wrong disposition can make itself the seat of a soul that expresses a strong family likeness to Jesus.

The sacrifice of Iesus is the essence of renunciation, it was "a sacrifice to God for a sweetsmelling savour." The death of Jesus was not a satisfaction paid to the justice of God—a hideous statement which the Bible nowhere makes. The death of Jesus was an exact revelation of the justice of God. When we read of the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, it is the sacrifice of God also. "... God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself." When Jesus Christ lifts the veil from His own consciousness He makes it clear that His death was not the death of a martyr. "I lay it [My life down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." Our Lord laid down His life for one purpose, the express purpose in the mind of God; He is "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world"; "the Lamb that hath been slain from the foundation of the world" (RV).

There is nothing obscure about these revelations, but they are so deep that only the Holy Ghost can reveal them. Where are we with regard to understanding these mysteries of our faith? Along with the craving to be right with God, there is also a deep resentment, born of our laziness, that we should be expected to understand these things, and the urgency all through the New Testament is that we should stir up our minds to search out these things, and build ourselves up on our most holy faith. We are called upon not only to be right in heart, but to be right in thinking.

Publication History

Compiled and published as a book in 1936.

Oswald and Biddy Chambers both had great hearts for missions. This can be seen in their life together and in Oswald's emphasis at the Bible Training College¹ in London, 1911–15. Oswald firmly believed that a missionary must be called by God—but he saw it first as a call to "be" and second as a call to "do."

Mrs. Chambers arranged and published these selections from My Utmost as a topical collection on the call of God. Her reasoning is explained in the foreword.

Throughout her years of publishing her husband's spoken words, Mrs. Chambers was constantly making the material available in different formats to make it more accessible to people with a variety of interests.

^{1.} Residential school near Clapham Common in SW London, sponsored by the League of Prayer. Oswald Chambers was Principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers was Lady Superintendent. Known as the BTC, it closed in July 1915 because of World War I.

FOREWORD TO THE FIRST EDITION (1936)

Called of God is selected from My Utmost for His Highest, by Oswald Chambers, and is made up of those portions which bear very largely upon the Missionary Call. There are many who desire to have them in this separate form, both for personal use, and use in Study Circles when that theme is being considered. The whole subject is dealt with in fuller form in So Send I You. Those in charge of Young People's Classes will be glad to have these vital messages in this form for circulation among the members in preparation for corporate study.

CALLED OF GOD

Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me. Isaiah 6:8

God did not address the call to Isaiah; Isaiah overheard God saying—"Who will go for us?" The call of God is not for the special few, it is for everyone. Whether or not I hear God's call depends upon the state of my ears; and what I hear depends upon my disposition. "Many are called but few are chosen," that is, few prove themselves the chosen ones. The chosen ones are those who have come into a relationship with God through Jesus Christ whereby their disposition has been altered and their ears unstopped, and they hear the still small voice questioning all the time—"Who will go for us?" It is not a question of God singling out a man and saying, "Now, you go." God did not lay a strong compulsion on Isaiah; Isaiah was in the presence of God and he overheard the call, and realised that there was nothing else for him but to say, in conscious freedom—"Here am I; send me."

Get out of your mind the idea of expecting God to come with compulsions and pleadings. When Our Lord called His disciples there was no irresistible compulsion from outside. The quiet, passionate insistence of His "Follow Me" was spoken to men with every power wide awake. If we let the Spirit of God bring us face to face with God, we too will hear something akin to what Isaiah heard, the still small voice of God; and in perfect freedom will say—"Here am I; send me."

THE VOICE OF THE NATURE OF GOD

I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send? Isaiah 6:8

When we speak of the call of God, we are apt to forget the most important feature, viz., the nature of the One Who calls. There is the call of the sea, the call of the mountains, the call of the great ice barriers; but these calls are only heard by the few. The call is the expression of the nature from which it comes, and we can only record the call if the same nature is in us. The call of God is the expression of God's nature, not of our nature. There are strands of the call of God providentially at work for us which we recognise and no one else does. It is the threading of God's voice to us in some particular matter, and it is no use consulting anyone else about it. We have to keep that profound relationship between our souls and God.

The call of God is not the echo of my nature; my affinities and personal temperament are not considered. As long as I consider my personal temperament and think about what I am fitted for, I shall never hear the call of God. But when I am brought into relationship with God, I am in the condition Isaiah was in. Isaiah's soul was so attuned to God by the tremendous crisis he had gone through that he recorded the call of God to his amazed soul. The majority of us have no ear for anything but ourselves, we cannot hear a thing God says. To be brought into the zone of the call of God is to be profoundly altered.

THE VOCATION OF THE NATURAL LIFE

But when it pleased God... to reveal His Son in me. ... Galatians 1:15–16

The call of God is not a call to any particular service; my interpretation of it may be, because contact with the nature of God has made me realise what I would like to do for Him. The call of God is essentially expressive of His nature; service is the outcome of what is fitted to my nature. The vocation of the natural life is stated by the apostle Paul—"When it pleased God to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him" (i.e., sacramentally express Him) "among the Gentiles" (RV).

Service is the overflow of superabounding devotion; but, profoundly speaking, there is no call to that, it is my own little actual bit, and is the echo of my identification with the nature of God. Service is the natural part of my life. God gets me into a relationship with Himself whereby I understand His call, then I do things out of sheer love for Him on my own account. To serve God is the deliberate love-gift of a nature that has heard the call of God. Service is expressive of that which is fitted to my nature: God's call is expressive of His nature; consequently when I receive His nature and hear His call, the voice of the Divine nature sounds in both and the two work together. The Son of God reveals Himself in me, and I serve Him in the ordinary ways of life out of devotion to Him.

DO YOU SEE YOUR CALLING?

Separated unto the Gospel. Romans 1:1

Our calling is not primarily to be holy men and women, but to be proclaimers of the Gospel of God. The one thing that is all important is that the Gospel of God should be realised as the abiding Reality. Reality is not human goodness, nor holiness, nor heaven, nor hell, but Redemption; and the need to perceive this is the most vital need of the Christian worker to-day. As workers we have to get used to the revelation that Redemption is the only Reality. Personal holiness is an effect, not a cause, and if we place our faith in human goodness, in the effect of Redemption, we shall go under when the test comes

Paul did not say he separated himself, but— "when it pleased God who separated me . . ." Paul had not a hypersensitive interest in his own character. As long as our eyes are upon our own personal whiteness we shall never get near the reality of Redemption. Workers break down because their desire is for their own whiteness, and not for God. "Don't ask me to come into contact with the rugged reality of Redemption on behalf of the filth of human life as it is; what I want is anything God can do for me to make me more desirable in my own eyes." To talk in that way is a sign that the reality of the Gospel of God has not begun to touch me; there is no reckless abandon to God. God cannot deliver me while my interest is merely in my own character. Paul is unconscious of himself, he is recklessly abandoned, separated by God for one purpose—to proclaim the Gospel of God (cf. Romans 9:3).

THE CALL OF GOD

For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel. 1 Corinthians 1:17

Paul states here that the call of God is to preach the Gospel; but remember what Paul means by "the Gospel," viz., the reality of Redemption in our Lord Jesus Christ. We are apt to make sanctification the end-all of our preaching. Paul alludes to personal experience by way of illustration, never as the end of the matter. We are nowhere commissioned to preach salvation or sanctification; we are commissioned to lift up Jesus Christ (see John 12:32). It is a travesty to say that Jesus Christ travailed in redemption to make me a saint. Jesus Christ travailed in Redemption to redeem the whole world, and place it unimpaired and rehabilitated before the throne of God. The fact that Redemption can be experienced by us is an illustration of the power of the reality of Redemption, but that is not the end of Redemption. If God were human, how sick to the heart and weary He would be of the constant requests we make for our salvation, for our sanctification. We tax His energies from morning till night for things for ourselves—something for me to be delivered from! When we touch the bedrock of the reality of the Gospel of God, we shall never bother God any further with little personal plaints.

The one passion of Paul's life was to proclaim the Gospel of God. He welcomed heart-breaks, disillusionments, tribulation, for one reason only, because these things kept him in unmoved devotion to the Gospel of God.

THE CONSTRAINT OF THE CALL

Woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel! 1 Corinthians 9:16

Beware of stopping your ears to the call of God. Everyone who is saved is called to testify to the fact; but that is not the call to preach, it is merely an illustration in preaching. Paul is referring to the pangs produced in him by the constraint to preach the Gospel. Never apply what Paul says in this connection to souls coming in contact with God for salvation. There is nothing easier than getting saved because it is God's sovereign work—"Come unto Me and I will save you." Our Lord never lays down the conditions of discipleship as the conditions of salvation. We are condemned to salvation through the Cross of Jesus Christ. Discipleship has an option with it—"IF any man . . ."

Paul's words have to do with being made a servant of Jesus Christ, and our permission is never asked as to what we will do or where we will go. God makes us broken bread and poured-out wine to please Himself. To be "separated unto the Gospel" means to hear the call of God; and when a man begins to overhear that call, then begins agony that is worthy of the name. Every ambition is nipped in the bud, every desire of life quenched, every outlook completely extinguished and blotted out, saving one thing only—"separated unto the Gospel." Woe be to the soul who tries to put his foot in any other direction when once that call has come to him. This College exists to see whether God has any man or woman here who cares about proclaiming His Gospel; to see whether God grips you. And beware of competitors when God does grip you.

THE RECOGNISED BAN OF RELATIONSHIP

We are made as the filth of the world. 1 Corinthians 4:13

These words are not an exaggeration. The reason they are not true of us who call ourselves ministers of the Gospel is not that Paul forgot the exact truth in using them, but that we have too many discreet affinities to allow ourselves to be made refuse. Filling up "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ" is not an evidence of sanctification, but of being "separated unto the Gospel."

"Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you," says Peter. If we do think it strange concerning the things we meet with, it is because we are craven-hearted. We have discreet affinities that keep us out of the mire "I won't stoop; I won't bend." You do not need to, you can be saved by the skin of your teeth if you like; you can refuse to let God count you as one separated unto the Gospel. Or you may say—"I do not care if I am treated as the offscouring of the earth as long as the Gospel is proclaimed." A servant of Jesus Christ is one who is willing to go to martyrdom for the reality of the Gospel of God. When a merely moral man or woman comes in contact with baseness and immorality and treachery, the recoil is so desperately offensive to human goodness that the heart shuts up in despair. The marvel of the Redemptive Reality of God is that the worst and the vilest can never get to the bottom of His love. Paul did not say that God separated him to show what a wonderful man He could make of him, but "to reveal His Son in me."

THE OVERMASTERING MAJESTY OF PERSONAL POWER

For the love of Christ constraineth us. 2 Corinthians 5:14

Paul says he is overruled, overmastered, held as in a vice, by the love of Christ. Very few of us know what it means to be held in a grip by the love of God; we are held by the constraint of our experience only. The one thing that held Paul, until there was nothing else on his horizon, was the love of God. "The love of Christ constraineth us"—when you hear that note in a man or woman, you can never mistake it. You know that the Spirit of God is getting unhindered way in that life.

When we are born again of the Spirit of God, the note of testimony is on what God has done for us, and rightly so. But the baptism of the Holy Ghost obliterates that for ever, and we begin to realise what Jesus meant when He said—"Ye shall be witnesses unto Me" (RV). Not witnesses to what Jesus can do—that is an elementary witness—but "witnesses unto Me." We will take everything that happens as happening to Him, whether it be praise or blame, persecution or commendation. No one can stand like that for Jesus Christ who is not constrained by the majesty of His personal power. It is the only thing that matters, and the strange thing is that it is the last thing realised by the Christian worker. Paul says he is gripped by the love of Christ; that is why he acts as he does. Men may call him mad or sober, but he does not care; there is only one thing he is living for, and that is to persuade men of the judgement seat of God, and of the love of Christ. This abandon to the love of Christ is the one thing that bears fruit in the life, and it will always leave the impression of the holiness and of the power of God, never of our personal holiness.

THE CONSCIOUSNESS OF THE CALL

For necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel! 1 Corinthians 9:16

We are apt to forget the mystical, supernatural touch of God. If you can tell where you got the call of God and all about it, I question whether you have ever had a call. The call of God does not come like that, it is much more supernatural. The realisation of it in a man's life may come with a sudden thunder-clap or with a gradual dawning, but in whatever way it comes, it comes with the undercurrent of the supernatural, something that cannot be put into words, it is always accompanied with a glow. At any moment there may break the sudden consciousness of this incalculable, supernatural, surprising call that has taken hold of your life—"I have chosen you." The call of God has nothing to do with salvation and sanctification. It is not because you are sanctified that you are therefore called to preach the Gospel; the call to preach the Gospel is infinitely different. Paul describes it as a necessity laid upon him.

If you have been obliterating the great supernatural call of God in your life, take a review of your circumstances and see where God has not been first, but your ideas of service, or your temperamental abilities. Paul said—"Woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel!" He had realised the call of God, and there was no competitor for his strength.

If a man or woman is called of God, it does not matter how untoward circumstances are, every force that has been at work will tell for God's purpose in the end. If you agree with God's purpose He will bring not only your conscious life, but all the deeper regions of your life which you cannot get at, into harmony.

THE COMMISSION OF THE CALL

Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for His body's sake. Colossians 1:24

We make calls out of our own spiritual consecration, but when we get right with God He brushes all these aside, and rivets us with a pain that is terrific to one thing we never dreamed of, and for one radiant, flashing moment we see what He is after, and we say—"Here am I, send me."

This call has nothing to do with personal sanctification, but with being made broken bread and poured-out wine. God can never make us wine if we object to the fingers He uses to crush us with. If God would only use His own fingers, and make me broken bread and poured-out wine in a special way! But when He uses someone whom we dislike, or some set of circumstances to which we said we would never submit, and makes those the crushers, we object. We must never choose the scene of our own martyrdom. If ever we are going to be made into wine, we will have to be crushed; you cannot drink grapes. Grapes become wine only when they have been squeezed.

I wonder what kind of finger and thumb God has been using to squeeze you, and you have been like a marble and escaped? You are not ripe yet and if God had squeezed you, the wine would have been remarkably bitter. To be a sacramental personality means that the elements of the natural life are presented by God as they are broken providentially in His service. We have to be adjusted to God before we can be broken bread in His hands. Keep right with God and let Him do what He likes, and you will find that He is producing the kind of bread and wine that will benefit His other children.

SOMETHING MORE ABOUT HIS WAYS

He Comes Where He Commands Us to Leave When Jesus had made an end of commanding His twelve disciples, He departed thence to teach and to preach in their cities. Matthew 11:1

If when God said "Go," you stayed, because you were so concerned about your people at home, you robbed them of the teaching and preaching of Jesus Christ Himself. When you obeyed and left all consequences to God, the Lord went into your city to teach; as long as you would not obey, you were in the way. Watch where you begin to debate and to put what you call duty in competition with your Lord's commands. "I know God told me to go, but then my duty was here"; that means you do not believe that Jesus means what He says.

He Teaches Where He Instructs Us Not To

Master, . . . let us make three tabernacles.

Are we playing the spiritual amateur providence in other lives? Are we so noisy in our instruction of others that God cannot get anywhere near them? We have to keep our mouths shut and our spirits alert. God wants to instruct us in regard to His Son, He wants to turn our times of prayer into mounts of transfiguration, and we will not let Him. When we are certain of the way God is going to work, He will never work in that way any more.

He Works Where He Sends Us to Wait

Tarry ye . . . until . . .

Wait on God and He will work, but don't wait in spiritual sulks because you cannot see an inch in front of you! Are we detached enough from our own spiritual hysterics to wait on God? To wait is not to sit with folded hands, but to learn to do what we are told.

These are phases of His ways we rarely recognise.

THE BIG COMPELLING OF GOD

Behold, we go up to Jerusalem. Luke 18:31

Jerusalem stands in the life of Our Lord as the place where He reached the climax of His Father's will. "I seek not Mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent Me." That was the one dominating interest all through Our Lord's life, and the things He met with on the way, joy or sorrow, success or failure, never deterred Him from His purpose. "He stedfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem."

The great thing to remember is that we go up to Jerusalem to fulfil God's purpose, not our own. Naturally, our ambitions are our own; in the Christian life we have no aim of our own. There is so much said to-day about our decisions for Christ, our determination to be Christians, our decisions for this and that, but in the New Testament it is the aspect of God's compelling that is brought out. "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you." We are not taken up into conscious agreement with God's purpose, we are taken up into God's purpose without any consciousness at all. We have no conception of what God is aiming at, and as we go on it gets more and more vague. God's aim looks like missing the mark because we are too short-sighted to see what He is aiming at. At the beginning of the Christian life we have our own ideas as to what God's purpose is—"I am meant to go here or there"; "God has called me to do this special work"; and we go and do the thing, and still the big compelling of God remains. The work we do is of no account, it is so much scaffolding compared with the big compelling of God. "He took unto Him the twelve." He takes us all the time. There is more than we have got at as yet.

THE BRAVE COMRADESHIP OF GOD

Then He took unto Him the twelve. Luke 18:31

The bravery of God in trusting us! You say—"But He has been unwise to choose me, because there is nothing in me; I am not of any value." That is why He chose you. As long as you think there is something in you, God cannot choose you because you have ends of your own to serve; but if you have let Him bring you to the end of your self-sufficiency, then He can choose you to go with Him to Jerusalem, and that will mean the fulfilment of purposes which He does not discuss with you.

We are apt to say that because a man has natural ability, therefore he will make a good Christian. It is not a question of our equipment but of our poverty; not of what we bring with us, but of what God puts into us; not a question of natural virtues, of strength of character, knowledge, and experience—all that is of no avail in this matter. The only thing that avails is that we are taken up into the big compelling of God and made His comrades (cf. 1 Corinthians 1:26-30). The comradeship of God is made up out of men who know their poverty. He can do nothing with the man who thinks that he is of use to God. As Christians we are not out for our own cause at all, we are out for the cause of God, which can never be our cause. We do not know what God is after, but we have to maintain our relationship with Him whatever happens. We must never allow anything to injure our relationship with God; if it does get injured, we must take time and get it put right. The main thing about Christianity is not the work we do, but the relationship we maintain and the atmosphere produced by that relationship. That is all God asks us to look after, and it is the one thing that is being continually assailed.

THE BAFFLING CALL OF GOD

And all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished. . . . And they understood none of these things. Luke 18:31, 34

God called Jesus Christ to what seemed unmitigated disaster. Jesus Christ called His disciples to see Him put to death; He led every one of them to the place where their hearts were broken. Jesus Christ's life was an absolute failure from every standpoint but God's. But what seemed failure from man's standpoint was a tremendous triumph from God's, because God's purpose is never man's purpose.

There comes the baffling call of God in our lives also. The call of God can never be stated explicitly; it is implicit. The call of God is like the call of the sea, no one hears it but the one who has the nature of the sea in him. It cannot be stated definitely what the call of God is to, because His call is to be in comradeship with Himself for His own purpose, and the test is to believe that God knows what He is after. The things that happen do not happen by chance, they happen entirely in the decree of God. God is working out His purposes.

If we are in communion with God and recognise that He is taking us into His purposes, we shall no longer try to find out what His purposes are. As we go on in the Christian life it gets simpler because we are less inclined to say—"Now why did God allow this and that?" Behind the whole thing lies the compelling of God. "There's a divinity that shapes our ends." A Christian is one who trusts the wits and the wisdom of God, and not his own wits. If we have a purpose of our own it destroys the simplicity and the leisureliness which ought to characterise the children of God.

THE "GO" OF PREPARATION

Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Matthew 5:23–24

It is easy to imagine that we shall get to a place where we are complete and ready, but preparation is not suddenly accomplished, it is a process steadily maintained. It is dangerous to get into a settled state of experience. It is preparation and preparation.

The sense of sacrifice appeals readily to a young Christian. Humanly speaking, the one thing that attracts to Jesus Christ is our sense of the heroic, and the scrutiny of Our Lord's words suddenly brings this tide of enthusiasm to the test. "First be reconciled to thy brother." The "go" of preparation is to let the word of God scrutinise. The sense of heroic sacrifice is not good enough. The thing the Holy Spirit is detecting in you is the disposition that will never work in His service. No one but God can detect that disposition in you. Have you anything to hide from God? If you have, then let God search you with His light. If there is sin, confess it, not admit it. Are you willing to obey your Lord and Master, whatever the humiliation to your right to yourself may be.

Never discard a conviction. If it is important enough for the Spirit of God to have brought it to your mind, it is that thing He is detecting. You were looking for a great thing to give up. God is telling you of some tiny thing; but at the back of it there lies the central citadel of obstinacy: "I will not give up my right to myself"—the thing God intends you to give up if ever you are going to be a disciple of Jesus Christ.

THE "GO" OF RELATIONSHIP

And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain. Matthew 5:41

The summing up of Our Lord's teaching is that the relationship which He demands is an impossible one unless He has done a supernatural work in us. Jesus Christ demands that there be not the slightest trace of resentment even suppressed in the heart of a disciple when he meets with tyranny and injustice. No enthusiasm will ever stand the strain that Jesus Christ will put upon His worker, only one thing will, and that is a personal relationship to Himself which has gone through the mill of His spring-cleaning until there is only one purpose left—"I am here for God to send me where He will." Every other thing may get fogged, but this relationship to Jesus Christ must never be.

The Sermon on the Mount is not an ideal, it is a statement of what will happen in me when Jesus Christ has altered my disposition and put in a disposition like His own. Jesus Christ is the only One Who can fulfil the Sermon on the Mount.

If we are to be disciples of Jesus, we must be made disciples supernaturally; as long as we have the dead-set purpose of being disciples we may be sure we are not. "I have chosen you." That is the way the grace of God begins. It is a constraint we cannot get away from; we can disobey it, but we cannot generate it. The drawing is done by the supernatural grace of God, and we never can trace where His work begins. Our Lord's making of a disciple is supernatural. He does not build on any natural capacity at all. God does not ask us to do the things that are easy to us naturally; He only asks us to do the things we are perfectly fitted to do by His grace, and the cross will come along that line always.

THE "GO" OF RENUNCIATION

Lord, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest. Luke 9:57

Our Lord's attitude to this man is one of severe discouragement because He knew what was in man. We would have said—"Fancy losing the opportunity of winning that man!" "Fancy bringing about him a north wind that froze him and turned him away discouraged!" Never apologise for your Lord. The words of the Lord hurt and offend until there is nothing left to hurt or offend. Jesus Christ has no tenderness whatever toward anything that is ultimately going to ruin a man in the service of God. Our Lord's answers are based not on caprice, but on a knowledge of what is in man. If the Spirit of God brings to your mind a word of the Lord that hurts you, you may be sure that there is something He wants to hurt to death.

Verse 58. These words knock the heart out of serving Jesus Christ because it is pleasing to me. The rigour of rejection leaves nothing but my Lord, and myself, and a forlorn hope. "Let the hundredfold come or go, your lodestar must be your relationship to Me, and I have nowhere to lay My head."

Verse 59. This man did not want to disappoint Jesus, nor to hurt his father. We put sensitive loyalty to relatives in place of loyalty to Jesus Christ and Jesus has to take the last place. In a conflict of loyalty, obey Jesus Christ at all costs.

Verse 61. The one who says—"Yes, Lord, but . . ." is the one who is fiercely ready, but never goes. This man had one or two reservations. The exacting call of Jesus Christ has no margin of good-byes, because good-bye, as it is often used, is pagan, not Christian. When once the call of God comes, begin to go and never stop going.

THE "GO" OF UNCONDITIONAL IDENTIFICATION

One thing thou lackest: . . . come, take up the cross, and follow Me. Mark 10:21

The rich young ruler had the master passion to be perfect. When he saw Jesus Christ, he wanted to be like Him. Our Lord never puts personal holiness to the fore when He calls a disciple; He puts absolute annihilation of my right to myself and identification with Himself—a relationship with Himself in which there is no other relationship. Luke 14:26 has nothing to do with salvation or sanctification, but with unconditional identification with Jesus Christ. Very few of us know the absolute "go" of abandonment to Jesus

"Then Jesus beholding him loved him." The look of Jesus will mean a heart broken for ever from allegiance to any other person or thing. Has Jesus ever looked at you? The look of Jesus transforms and transfixes. Where you are "soft" with God is where the Lord has looked at you. If you are hard and vindictive, insistent on your own way, certain that the other person is more likely to be in the wrong than you are, it is an indication that there are whole tracts of your nature that have never been transformed by His gaze.

"One thing thou lackest. . . ." The only "good thing" from Jesus Christ's point of view is union with Himself and nothing in between.

"Sell whatsoever thou hast. . . ." I must reduce myself until I am a mere conscious man I must fundamentally renounce possessions of all kinds, not to save my soul, (only one thing saves a man—absolute reliance upon Jesus Christ) but in order to follow Jesus. "Come, . . . and follow Me." And the road is the way He went.

THE METHOD OF MISSIONS

Go ye therefore, and teach [disciple, RV] all nations. Matthew 28:19

Jesus Christ did not say—"Go and save souls" (the salvation of souls is the supernatural work of God), but—"Go and teach," i.e., disciple, "all nations," and you cannot make disciples unless you are a disciple yourself. When the disciples came back from their first mission, they were filled with joy because the devils were subject to them, and Jesus said—"Don't rejoice in successful service; the great secret of joy is that you are rightly related to Me." The great essential of the missionary is that he remains true to the call of God, and realises that his one purpose is to disciple men and women to Jesus. There is a passion for souls that does not spring from God, but from the desire to make converts to our point of view.

The challenge to the missionary does not come on the line that people are difficult to get saved, that backsliders are difficult to reclaim, that there is a "wadge" of callous indifference; but along the line of his own personal relationship to Jesus Christ. "Believe ye that I am able to do this?" Our Lord puts that question steadily, it faces us in every individual case we meet. The one great challenge is-Do I know my risen Lord? Do I know the power of His indwelling Spirit? Am I wise enough in God's sight, and foolish enough according to the world, to bank on what Jesus Christ has said; or am I abandoning the great supernatural position, which is the only call for a missionary, viz., boundless confidence in Christ Jesus? If I take up any other method, I depart altogether from the method laid down by Our Lord—"All power is given unto Me. ... Go ye therefore."

WHAT IS A MISSIONARY?

As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you. John 20:21

A missionary is one sent by Jesus Christ as He was sent by God. The great dominant note is not the needs of men, but the command of Jesus. The source of our inspiration in work for God is behind, not before. The tendency to-day is to put the inspiration ahead, to sweep everything in front of us and bring it all out to our conception of success. In the New Testament the inspiration is put behind us, the Lord Jesus. The ideal is to be true to Him, to carry out His enterprises.

Personal attachment to the Lord Jesus and His point of view is the one thing that must not be overlooked. In missionary enterprise the great danger is that God's call is effaced by the needs of the people until human sympathy absolutely overwhelms the meaning of being sent by Jesus. The needs are so enormous, the conditions so perplexing, that every power of mind falters and fails. We forget that the one great reason underneath all missionary enterprise is not first the elevation of the people, nor the education of the people, nor their needs; but first and foremost the command of Jesus Christ—"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations."

When looking back on the lives of men and women of God the tendency is to say—"What wonderfully astute wisdom they had! How perfectly they understood all God wanted!" The astute mind behind is the Mind of God, not human wisdom at all. We give credit to human wisdom when we should give credit to the Divine guidance of God through child-like people who were foolish enough to trust God's wisdom and the supernatural equipment of God.

MISSIONARY PREDESTINATIONS

And now, saith the LORD that formed me from the womb to be His servant. Isaiah 49:5

The first thing that happens after we have realised our election to God in Christ Jesus is the destruction of our prejudices and our parochial notions and our patriotisms; we are turned into servants of God's own purpose. The whole human race was created to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever. Sin has switched the human race on to another tack, but it has not altered God's purpose in the tiniest degree; and when we are born again we are brought into the realisation of God's great purpose for the human race, viz., I am created for God, He made me. This realisation of the election of God is the most joyful realisation on earth, and we have to learn to rely on the tremendous creative purpose of God. The first thing God will do with us is to "force thro' the channels of a single heart" the interests of the whole world. The love of God, the very nature of God, is introduced into us, and the nature of Almighty God is focused in John 3:16, "God so loved the world."

We have to maintain our soul open to the fact of God's creative purpose, and not muddle it with our own intentions. If we do, God will have to crush our intentions on one side however much it may hurt. The purpose for which the missionary is created is that he may be God's servant, one in whom God is glorified. When once we realise that through the salvation of Jesus Christ we are made perfectly fit for God, we shall understand why Jesus Christ is so ruthless in His demands. He demands absolute rectitude from His servants, because He has put into them the very nature of God.

Beware lest you forget God's purpose for your life.

THE KEY TO THE MISSIONARY

All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations. Matthew 28:18–19

The basis of missionary appeals is the authority of Jesus Christ, not the needs of the heathen. We are apt to look upon Our Lord as One Who assists us in our enterprises for God. Our Lord puts Himself as the absolute sovereign supreme Lord over His disciples. He does not say the heathen will be lost if we do not go; He simply says—"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." Go on the revelation of My sovereignty; teach and preach out of a living experience of Me.

"Then the eleven disciples went... into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them" (Matthew 28:16). If I want to know the universal sovereignty of Christ, I must know Him for myself, and how to get alone with Him; I must take time to worship the Being Whose Name I bear. "Come unto Me"—that is the place to meet Jesus. Are you weary and heavy laden? How many missionaries are! We banish those marvellous words of the universal Sovereign of the world to the threshold of an aftermeeting; they are the words of Jesus to His disciples.

"Go ye therefore. . . . " "Go" simply means live. Acts 1:8 is the description of how to go. Jesus did not say—Go into Jerusalem and Judaea and Samaria, but, "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me" (RV) in all these places. He undertakes to establish the goings.

"If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you . . ."—that is the way to keep going in our personal lives. Where we are placed is a matter of indifference; God engineers the goings.

"None of these things move me..." That is how to keep going till you're gone!

THE KEY TO THE MISSIONARY MESSAGE

And He is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. 1 John 2:2

The key to the missionary message is the propitiation of Christ Jesus. Take any phase of Christ's work—the healing phase, the saving and sanctifying phase, there is nothing limitless about those. "The Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world"!—that is limitless. The missionary message is the limitless significance of Jesus Christ as the propitiation for our sins, and a missionary is one who is soaked in that revelation.

The key to the missionary message is the remissionary aspect of Christ's life, not His kindness and His goodness, and His revealing of the Fatherhood of God; the great limitless significance is that He is the propitiation for our sins. The missionary message is not patriotic, it is irrespective of nations and of individuals, it is for the whole world. When the Holy Ghost comes in He does not consider my predilections, He brings me into union with the Lord Jesus.

A missionary is one who is wedded to the charter of his Lord and Master; he has not to proclaim his own point of view, but to proclaim the Lamb of God. It is easier to belong to a coterie which tells what Jesus Christ has done for me, easier to become a devotee to Divine healing, or to a special type of sanctification, or to the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Paul did not say—"Woe is unto me, if I do not preach what Christ has done for me," but—"Woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel!" This is the Gospel—"The Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world"!

THE KEY TO MISSIONARY DEVOTION

For His name's sake they went forth. 3 John 7

Our Lord has told us how love to Him is to manifest itself. "Lovest thou Me... Feed My sheep"—identify yourself with My interests in other people, not, identify

Me with your interests in other people. 1 Corinthians 13:4–8 gives the character of this love, it is the love of God expressing itself. The test of my love for Jesus is the practical one, all the rest is sentimental jargon.

Loyalty to Jesus Christ is the supernatural work of Redemption wrought in me by the Holy Ghost Who shed abroad the love of God in my heart, and that love works efficaciously through me in contact with everyone I meet. I remain loyal to His Name although every commonsense fact gives the lie to Him, and declares that He has no more power than a morning mist.

The key to missionary devotion means being attached to nothing and no one saving Our Lord Himself, not being detached from things externally. Our Lord was amazingly in and out among ordinary things; His detachment was on the inside towards God. External detachment is often an indication of a secret vital attachment to the things we keep away from externally.

The loyalty of a missionary is to keep his soul concentratedly open to the nature of the Lord Jesus Christ. The men and women Our Lord sends out on His enterprises are the ordinary human stuff, plus dominating devotion to Himself wrought by the Holy Ghost.

THE KEY TO THE MASTER'S ORDERS

Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into His harvest. Matthew 9:38

The key to the missionary problem is in the hand of God, and that key is prayer, not work, that is, not work as the word is popularly understood to-day, because that may mean the evasion of concentration on God. The key to the missionary problem is not the key of common sense, nor the medical key, nor the key of civilisation or education or even evangelisation. The key is prayer. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest." Naturally, prayer is not practical, it is absurd; we have to realise that prayer is stupid from the ordinary commonsense point of view.

There are no nations in Jesus Christ's outlook, but the world. How many of us pray without respect of persons, and with respect to only one Person, Jesus Christ? He owns the harvest that is produced by distress and conviction of sin, and this is the harvest we have to pray that labourers may be thrust out to reap. We are taken up with active work while people all round are ripe to harvest, and we do not reap one of them, but waste our Lord's time in over-energised activities. Suppose the crisis comes in your father's life, in your brother's life, are you there as a labourer to reap the harvest for Jesus Christ? "Oh, but I have a special work to do." A Christian is called to be Jesus Christ's own, one who is not above his Master, one who does not dictate to Jesus Christ what he intends to do. Our Lord calls to no special work: He calls to Himself. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest," and He will engineer circumstances and thrust you out.

THE MISSIONARY'S GOAL

Behold, we go up to Jerusalem. Luke 18:31

In the natural life our ambitions alter as we develop; in the Christian life the goal is given at the beginning, the beginning and the end are the same, viz., Our Lord Himself. We start with Christ and we end with Him—until we all attain to the stature of the manhood of Christ Jesus, not to our idea of what the Christian life should be. The aim of the missionary is to do God's will, not to be useful, not to win the heathen; he is useful and he does win the heathen, but that is not his aim. His aim is to do the will of his Lord.

In Our Lord's life Jerusalem was the place where He reached the climax of His Father's will upon the Cross, and unless we go with Jesus there, we shall have no companionship with Him. Nothing ever discouraged Our Lord on His way to Jerusalem. He never hurried through certain villages where He was persecuted, or lingered in others where He was blessed. Neither gratitude nor ingratitude turned Our Lord one hair's breadth away from His purpose to go up to Jerusalem.

"The disciple is not above his Master." The same things will happen to us on our way to our Jerusalem. There will be the works of God manifested through us, people will get blessed, and one or two will show gratitude and the rest will show gross ingratitude, but nothing must deflect us from going up to our Jerusalem.

"There they crucified Him." That is what happened when Our Lord reached Jerusalem, and that happening is the gateway to our salvation. The saints do not end in crucifixion: by the Lord's grace they end in glory. In the meantime our watchword is—I, too, go up to Jerusalem.

THE MISSIONARY'S MASTER

Ye call Me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am. John 13:13

To have a master and to be mastered is not the same thing. To have a master means that there is one who knows me better than I know myself, one who is closer than a friend, one who fathoms the remotest abyss of my heart and satisfies it, one who has brought me into the secure sense that he has met and solved every perplexity and problem of my mind. To have a master is this and nothing less—"One is your Master, even Christ."

Our Lord never enforces obedience; He does not take means to make me do what He wants. At certain times I wish God would master me and make me do the thing, but He will not; in other moods I wish He would leave me alone, but He does not.

"Ye call me Master and Lord"—but is He? Master and Lord have little place in our vocabulary, we prefer the words Saviour, Sanctifier, Healer. The only word to describe mastership in experience is love, and we know very little about love as God reveals it. This is proved by the way we use the word obey. In the Bible obedience is based on the relationship of equals, that of a son with his father. Our Lord was not God's servant, He was His Son. "Though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience. . . ." If our idea is that we are being mastered, it is a proof that we have no master; if that is our attitude to Jesus, we are far away from the relationship He wants. He wants us in the relationship in which He is easily Master without our conscious knowledge of it, all we know is that we are His to obey.

THE MISSIONARY WATCHING

Watch with Me. Matthew 26:38

"Watch with Me"—with no private point of view of your own at all, but watch entirely with Me. In the early stages we do not watch with Jesus, we watch for Him. We do not watch with Him through the revelation of the Bible; in the circumstances of our lives. Our Lord is trying to introduce us to identification with Himself in a particular Gethsemane, and we will not go; we say—"No, Lord, I cannot see the meaning of this, it is bitter." How can we possibly watch with Someone Who is inscrutable? How are we going to understand Jesus sufficiently to watch with Him in His Gethsemane, when we do not know even what His suffering is for? We do not know how to watch with Him; we are only used to the idea of Jesus watching with us.

The disciples loved Jesus Christ to the limit of their natural capacity, but they did not understand what He was after. In the Garden of Gethsemane they slept for their own sorrow and at the end of three years of the closest intimacy "they all forsook Him, and fled."

"They were all filled with the Holy Ghost"—the same "they," but something wonderful has happened in between, viz., Our Lord's Death and Resurrection and Ascension, and the disciples have been invaded by the Holy Spirit. Our Lord had said— "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you," and this meant that they learned to watch with Him all the rest of their lives.

HIS!

Thine they were, and Thou gavest them Me. John 17:6

The missionary is one in whom the Holy Ghost has wrought this realisation—"Ye are not your own." To say "I am not my own," is to have reached a great point in spiritual nobility. The true nature of the life in the actual whirl is the deliberate giving up of myself to another in sovereign preference, and that other is

Jesus Christ. The Holy Spirit expounds the nature of Jesus to me in order to make me one with my Lord, not that I might go off as a showroom exhibit. Our Lord never sent any of the disciples out on the ground of what He had done for them. It was not until after the Resurrection, when the disciples had perceived by the power of the Holy Spirit Whom He was, that Jesus said "Go."

"If any man come to Me, and hate not . . . , he cannot be My disciple," not—he cannot be good and upright, but—he cannot be one over whom Jesus writes the word "Mine." Any one of the relationships Our Lord mentions may be a competitive relationship. I may prefer to belong to my mother, or to my wife, or to myself; then, says Jesus, you cannot be My disciple. This does not mean I will not be saved, but it does mean that I cannot be "His."

Our Lord makes a disciple His own possession, He becomes responsible for him. "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me" (RV). The spirit that comes in is not that of doing anything for Jesus, but of being a perfect delight to Him. The secret of the missionary is—I am His, and He is carrying out His enterprises through me.

Be entirely His.

AFTER OBEDIENCE—WHAT?

And straightway He constrained His disciples to get into the ship, and to go to the other side. . . . Mark 6:45

We are apt to imagine that if Jesus Christ constrains us, and we obey Him, He will lead us to great success. We must never put our dreams of success as God's purpose for us; His purpose may be exactly the opposite. We have an idea that God is leading us to a particular end, a desired goal; He is not. The question of getting to a particular end is a mere incident. What we call the process, God calls the end.

What is my dream of God's purpose? His purpose is that I depend on Him and on His power now. If I can stay in the middle of the turmoil calm and unperplexed, that is the end of the purpose of God. God is not working towards a particular finish; His end is the process—that I see Him walking on the waves, no shore in sight, no success, no goal, just the absolute certainty that it is all right because I see Him walking on the sea. It is the process, not the end which is glorifying to God.

God's training is for now, not presently. His purpose is for this minute, not for something in the future. We have nothing to do with the afterwards of obedience; we get wrong when we think of the afterwards. What men call training and preparation, God calls the end.

God's end is to enable me to see that He can walk on the chaos of my life just now. If we have a further end in view, we do not pay sufficient attention to the immediate present; but if we realise that obedience is the end, then each moment as it comes is precious.

READINESS

God called unto him. . . . And he said, Here am I. Exodus 3:4

When God speaks, many of us are like men in a fog, we give no answer. Moses' reply revealed that he was somewhere. Readiness means a right relationship to God and a knowledge of where we are at present. We are so busy telling God where we would like to go. The man or woman who is ready for God and His work is the one who carries off the prize when the summons comes. We wait with the idea of some great opportunity, something sensational, and when it comes we are quick to cry—"Here am I." Whenever Jesus Christ is in the ascendant, we are there; but we are not ready for an obscure duty.

Readiness for God means that we are ready to do the tiniest little thing or the great big thing, it makes no difference. We have no choice in what we want to do; whatever God's programme may be we are there, ready. When any duty presents itself we hear God's voice as Our Lord heard His Father's voice, and we are ready for it with all the alertness of our love for Him. Jesus Christ expects to do with us as His Father did with Him. He can put us where He likes, in pleasant duties or in mean² duties, because the union is that of the Father and Himself. "That they may be one, even as We are one."

Be ready for the sudden surprise visits of God. A ready person never needs to get ready. Think of the time we waste trying to get ready when God has called! The burning bush is a symbol of everything that surrounds the ready soul, it is ablaze with the presence of God.

^{2.} mean: ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

VISION

I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision. Acts 26:19

If we lose the vision, we alone are responsible, and the way we lose the vision is by spiritual leakage. If we do not run our belief about God into practical issues, it is all up with the vision God has given. The only way to be obedient to the heavenly vision is to give our utmost for God's highest, and this can only be done by continually and resolutely recalling the vision. The test is the sixty seconds of every minute, and the sixty minutes of every hour, not our times of prayer and devotional meetings.

"Though it tarry, wait for it." We cannot attain to a vision, we must live in the inspiration of it until it accomplishes itself. We get so practical that we forget the vision. At the beginning we saw the vision but did not wait for it; we rushed off into practical work, and when the vision was fulfilled, we did not see it. Waiting for the vision that tarries is the test of our loyalty to God. It is at the peril of our soul's welfare that we get caught up in practical work and miss the fulfilment of the vision.

Watch God's cyclones. The only way God sows His saints is by His whirlwind. Are you going to prove an empty pod? It will depend on whether or not you are actually living in the light of what you have seen. Let God fling you out, and do not go until He does. If you select your own spot, you will prove an empty pod. If God sows you, you will bring forth fruit.

It is essential to practise the walk of the feet in the light of the vision.

THE VISION AND THE VERITY

Called to be saints. 1 Corinthians 1:2

Thank God for the sight of all you have never yet been. You have had the vision, but you are not there yet by any means. It is when we are in the valley, where we prove whether we will be the choice ones, that most of us turn back. We are not quite prepared for the blows which must come if we are going to be turned into the shape of the vision. We have seen what we are not, and what God wants us to be, but are we willing to have the vision "batter'd to shape and use" by God? The batterings always come in commonplace ways and through commonplace people.

There are times when we do know what God's purpose is; whether we will let the vision be turned into actual character depends upon us, not upon God. If we prefer to loll on the mount and live in the memory of the vision, we will be of no use actually in the ordinary stuff of which human life is made up. We have to learn to live in reliance on what we saw in the vision, not in ecstasies and conscious contemplation of God, but to live in actualities in the light of the vision until we get to the veritable reality. Every bit of our training is in that direction. Learn to thank God for making known His demands.

The little "I am" always sulks when God says do. Let the little "I am" be shrivelled up in God's indignation—"I Am That I Am" hath sent thee. He must dominate. Is it not penetrating to realise that God knows where we live, and the kennels we crawl into! He will hunt us up like a lightning flash. No human being knows human beings as God does.

VISION AND REALITY

And the parched ground shall become a pool. Isaiah 35:7

We always have visions before a thing is made real. When we realise that although the vision is real, it is not real in us, then is the time that Satan comes in with his temptations, and we are apt to say it is no use to go on. Instead of the vision becoming real, there has come the valley of humiliation.

Life is not as idle ore,
But iron dug from central gloom,
And battered by the shocks of doom
To shape and use.

God gives us the vision, then He takes us down to the valley to batter us into the shape of the vision, and it is in the valley that so many of us faint and give way. Every vision will be made real if we will have patience. Think of the enormous leisure of God! He is never in a hurry. We are always in such a frantic hurry. In the light of the glory of the vision we go forth to do things, but the vision is not real in us yet; and God has to take us into the valley, and put us through fires and floods to batter us into shape, until we get to the place where He can trust us with the veritable reality. Ever since we had the vision God has been at work, getting us into the shape of the ideal, and over and over again we escape from His hand and try to batter ourselves into our own shape.

The vision is not a castle in the air but a vision of what God wants you to be. Let Him put you on His wheel and whirl you as He likes, and as sure as God is God and you are you, you will turn out exactly in accordance with the vision. Don't lose heart in the process. If you have ever had the vision of God, you may try as you like to be satisfied on a lower level, but God will never let you.

THE PASSION OF PATIENCE

Though it tarry, wait for it. Habakkuk 2:3

Patience is not indifference; patience conveys the idea of an immensely strong rock withstanding all onslaughts. The vision of God is the source of patience, because it imparts a moral inspiration. Moses endured, not because he had an ideal of right and duty, but because he had a vision of God. He "endured, as seeing Him Who is invisible." A man with the vision of God is not devoted to a cause or to any particular issue; he is devoted to God Himself. You always know when the vision is of God because of the inspiration that comes with it; things come with largeness and tonic to the life because everything is energised by God. If God gives you a time spiritually, as He gave His Son actually, of temptation in the wilderness, with no word from Himself at all, endure; and the power to endure is there because you see God.

"Though it tarry, wait for it." The proof that we have the vision is that we are reaching out for more than we have grasped. It is a bad thing to be satisfied spiritually. "What shall I render unto the LORD?" said the Psalmist. "I will take the cup of salvation." We are apt to look for satisfaction in ourselves—"Now I have got the thing; now I am entirely sanctified; now I can endure." Instantly we are on the road to ruin. Our reach must exceed our grasp. "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect." If we have only what we have experienced, we have nothing; if we have the inspiration of the vision of God, we have more than we can experience. Beware of the danger of relaxation spiritually.

COULD THIS BE TRUE OF ME?

But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself. Acts 20:24

It as easier to serve God without a vision, easier to work for God without a call, because then you are not bothered by what God requires; common sense is your guide, veneered over with Christian sentiment. You will be more prosperous and successful, more leisure-hearted, if you never realise the call of God. But if once you receive a commission from Jesus Christ, the memory of what God wants will always come like a goad; you will no longer be able to work for Him on the commonsense basis.

What do I really count dear? If I have not been gripped by Jesus Christ, I will count service dear, time given to God dear, my life dear unto myself. Paul says he counted his life dear only in order that he might fulfil the ministry he had received; he refused to use his energy for any other thing. Acts 20:24 states Paul's almost sublime annoyance at being asked to consider himself; he was absolutely indifferent to any consideration other than that of fulfilling the ministry he had received. Practical work may be a competitor against abandonment to God, because practical work is based on this argument—"Remember how useful you are here," or—"Think how much value you would be in that particular type of work." That attitude does not put Jesus Christ as the Guide as to where we should go, but our judgement as to where we are of most use. Never consider whether you are of use; but ever consider that you are not your own but His.

IS HE REALLY LORD?

... so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus. Acts 20:24

Joy means the perfect fulfilment of that for which I was created and regenerated, not the successful doing of a thing. The joy Our Lord had lay in doing what the Father sent him to do, and He says—"As My Father hath sent Me, even so am I sending you." Have I received a ministry from the Lord? If so, I have to be loyal to it, to count my life precious only for the fulfilling of that ministry. Think of the satisfaction it will be to hear Jesus say—"Well done, good and faithful servant"; to know that you have done what He sent you to do. We have all to find our niche in life and spiritually we find it when we receive our ministry from the Lord. In order to do this we must have companied with Jesus; we must know Him as more than a personal Saviour. "I will shew him how great things he must suffer for My name's sake."

"Lovest thou Me?" Then—"Feed My sheep." There is no choice of service, only absolute loyalty to Our Lord's commission; loyalty to what you discern when you are in closest contact with God. If you have received a ministry from the Lord Jesus, you will know that the need is never the call: the need is the opportunity. The call is loyalty to the ministry you received when you were in real touch with Him. This does not imply that there is a campaign of service marked out for you, but it does mean that you will have to ignore the demands for service along other lines.

FELLOWSHIP IN THE GOSPEL

Fellow-labourer in the Gospel of Christ. 1 Thessalonians 3:2

After sanctification it is difficult to state what your aim in life is, because God has taken you up into His purpose by the Holy Ghost. He is using you now for His purposes throughout the world as He used His Son for the purpose of our salvation. If you seek great things for yourself—"God has called me for this and that," you are putting a barrier to God's use of you. As long as you have a personal interest in your own character, or any set ambition you cannot get through into identification with God's interests. You can only get there by losing for ever any idea of yourself and by letting God take you right out into His purpose for the world and because your goings are of the Lord, you can never understand your ways.

I have to learn that the aim in life is God's, not mine. God is using me from His great personal standpoint, and all He asks of me is that I trust Him, and never say—"Lord, this gives me such heart-ache." To talk in that way makes me a clog. When I stop telling God what I want, He can catch me up for what He wants without let or hindrance.³ He can crumple me up or exalt me, He can do anything He chooses. He simply asks me to have implicit faith in Himself and in His goodness. Selfpity is of the devil; if I go off on that line I cannot be used by God for His purpose in the world. I have "a world within the world" in which I live, and God will never be able to get me outside it because I am afraid of being frost-bitten.

^{3.} without let or hindrance: legal phrase meaning "without obstacle or impediment."

WHAT IS THAT TO THEE?

Lord, what shall this man do?... What is that to thee? Follow thou Me. John 21:21–22

One of our severest lessons comes from the stubborn refusal to see that we must not interfere in other people's lives. It takes a long time to realise the danger of being an amateur providence, that is, interfering with God's order for others. You see a certain person suffering, and you say—"He shall not suffer, and I will see that he does not." You put your hand straight in front of God's permissive will to prevent it, and God says—"What is that to thee?" If there is stagnation spiritually, never allow it to go on, but get into God's presence and find out the reason for it. Possibly you will find it is because you have been interfering in the life of another; proposing things you had no right to propose; advising when you had no right to advise.

When you do have to give advice to another, God will advise through you with the direct understanding of His Spirit; your part is to be so rightly related to God that His discernment comes through you all the time for the blessing of another soul.

Most of us live on the borders of consciousness—consciously serving, consciously devoted to God. All this is immature, it is not the real life yet. The mature stage is the life of a child which is never conscious; we become so abandoned to God that the consciousness of being used never enters in. When we are consciously being used as broken bread and poured-out wine, there is another stage to be reached, where all consciousness of ourselves and of what God is doing through us is eliminated. A saint is never consciously a saint; a saint is consciously dependent on God.

SACRAMENTAL SERVICE

Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ. Colossians 1:24

The Christian worker has to be a sacramental "gobetween," to be so identified with his Lord and the reality of His Redemption that He can continually bring His creating life through him. It is not the strength of one man's personality being superimposed on another, but the real presence of Christ coming through the elements of the worker's life. When we preach the historic facts of the life and death of Our Lord as they are conveyed in the New Testament, our words are made sacramental; God uses them on the ground of His Redemption to create in those who listen that which is not created otherwise. If we preach the effects of Redemption in human life instead of the revelation regarding Jesus, the result in those who listen is not new birth, but refined spiritual culture, and the Spirit of God cannot witness to it because such preaching is in another domain. We have to see that we are in such living sympathy with God that as we proclaim His truth He can create in souls the things which He alone can do.

"What a wonderful personality!" "What a fascinating man!" "Such marvellous insight!" What chance has the Gospel of God through all that? It cannot get through, because the line of attraction is always the line of appeal. If a man attracts by his personality, his appeal is along that line; if he is identified with his Lord's personality then the appeal is along the line of what Jesus Christ can do. The danger is to glory in men; Jesus says we are to lift Him up.

DESERTER OR DISCIPLE?

From that time many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him. John 6:66

When God gives a vision by His Spirit through His word of what He wants, and your mind and soul thrill to it, if you do not walk in the light of that vision, you will sink into servitude to a point of view which Our Lord never had. Disobedience in mind to the heavenly vision will make you a slave to points of view that are alien to Jesus Christ. Do not look at someone else and say—"Well, if he can have those views and prosper, why cannot I?" You have to walk in the light of the vision that has been given to you and not compare yourself with others or judge them, that is between them and God. When you find that a point of view in which you have been delighting clashes with the heavenly vision and you debate, certain things will begin to develop in you—a sense of property and a sense of personal right, things of which Jesus Christ made nothing. He was always against these things as being the root of everything alien to Himself. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." If we do not recognise this, it is because we are ignoring the undercurrent of Our Lord's teaching.

We are apt to lie back and bask in the memory of the wonderful experience we have had. If there is one standard in the New Testament revealed by the light of God and you do not come up to it, and do not feel inclined to come up to it, that is the beginning of backsliding, because it means your conscience does not answer to the truth. You can never be the same after the unveiling of a truth. That moment marks you for going on as a more true disciple of Jesus Christ, or for going back as a deserter.

YE ARE NOT YOUR OWN

Know ye not that . . . ye are not your own? 1 Corinthians 6:19

There is no such thing as a private life—"a world within the world"—for a man or woman who is brought into fellowship with Jesus Christ's sufferings. God breaks up the private life of His saints, and makes it a thoroughfare for the world on the one hand and for Himself on the other. No human being can stand that unless he is identified with Jesus Christ. We are not sanctified for ourselves, we are called into the fellowship of the Gospel, and things happen which have nothing to do with us, God is getting us into fellowship with Himself. Let Him have His way, if you do not, instead of being of the slightest use to God in His Redemptive work in the world, you will be a hindrance and a clog.

The first thing God does with us is to get us based on rugged Reality until we do not care what becomes of us individually as long as He gets His way for the purpose of His Redemption. Why shouldn't we go through heartbreaks? Through these doorways God is opening up ways of fellowship with His Son. Most of us fall and collapse at the first grip of pain; we sit down on the threshold of God's purpose and die away of self-pity, and all so-called Christian sympathy will aid us to our death-bed. But God will not. He comes with the grip of the pierced hand of His Son, and says—"Enter into fellowship with Me; arise and shine." If through a broken heart God can bring His purposes to pass in the world, then thank Him for breaking your heart.

A BOND-SLAVE OF JESUS

I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live: yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. Galatians 2:20

These words mean the breaking of my independence with my own hand and surrendering to the supremacy of the Lord Jesus. No one can do this for me, I must do it myself. God may bring me up to the point three hundred and sixty-five times a year, but He cannot put me through it. It means breaking the husk of my individual independence of God, and the emancipation of my personality into oneness with Himself, not for my own ideas, but for absolute loyalty to Jesus. There is no possibility of dispute when once I am there. Very few of us know anything about loyalty to Christ—"For My sake." It is that which makes the iron saint.

Has that break come? All the rest is pious fraud. The one point to decide is—Will I give up, will I surrender to Jesus Christ, and make no conditions whatever as to how the break comes? I must be broken from my self-realisation, and immediately that point is reached, the reality of the supernatural identification takes place at once, and the witness of the Spirit of God is unmistakable "I have been crucified with Christ" (RV).

The passion of Christianity is that I deliberately sign away my own rights and become a bond-slave of Jesus Christ. Until I do that, I do not begin to be a saint.

One student a year who hears God's call would be sufficient for God to have called this College into existence. This College as an organisation is not worth anything, it is not academic; it is for nothing else but for God to help Himself to lives. Is He going to help Himself to us, or are we taken up with our conception of what we are going to be?

WHERE THE BATTLE'S LOST AND WON

If thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the LORD . . . Jeremiah 4:1

The battle is lost or won in the secret places of the will before God, never first in the external world. The Spirit of God apprehends me and I am obliged to get alone with God and fight the battle out before Him. Until this is done, I lose every time. The battle may take one minute or a year, that will depend on me, not on God; but it must be wrestled out alone before God, and I must resolutely go through the hell of a renunciation before Him. Nothing has any power over the man who has fought out the battle before God and won there.

If I say—"I will wait till I get into the circumstances and then put God to the test," I shall find I cannot. I must get the thing settled between myself and God in the secret places of my soul where no stranger intermeddles, and then I can go forth with the certainty that the battle is won. Lose it there, and calamity and disaster and upset are as sure as God's decree. The reason the battle is not won is because I try to win it in the external world first. Get alone with God, fight it out before Him, settle the matter there once and for all.

In dealing with other people, the line to take is to push them to an issue of will. That is the way abandonment begins. Every now and again, not often, but sometimes, God brings us to a point of climax. That is the Great Divide in the life; from that point we either go towards a more and more dilatory and useless type of Christian life, or we become more and more ablaze for the glory of God—"My Utmost for His Highest."

Publication History

The six "Disciplines" were published individually as articles and booklets before being issued as a two-volume book in 1965.

The Discipline of Divine Guidance: OC's messages on divine guidance, published in God's Revivalist magazine, March/April 1909, and February 1911, were most likely given at summer camp meetings in Cincinnati. They were also published as a pamphlet by God's Revivalist Press.

The Discipline of Suffering: This material was delivered as a sermon at God's Bible School, Cincinnati, Ohio, during early 1907. It was published as two articles in God's Revivalist magazine (May 1907) and later that same year as a pamphlet by God's Revivalist Press.

The Discipline of Peril: The first of these messages was given in the autumn of 1914, immediately following Britain's entry into World War I. Chambers was forty years old with a wife and a one-year-old daughter. As the country mobilized for all-out war, men were joining the army at the rate of thirty thousand a day, people were asked to sell their automobiles and farm horses to the government, and lists of the dead and wounded began appearing in daily newspapers. Uncertainty was the order of the day. Chambers was addressing fearful people facing a very real threat of personal and national peril. The messages in "The Discipline of Peril" appeared as articles in Tongues of Fire magazine, September 1914-May 1915 and were published by OC as a booklet in 1915. The message "The Day of the Lord" is very specifically related to Britain during the days of war and probably for that reason was not included in the 1965 book Christian Disciplines. The editors have chosen to include it in this collection:

"The Discipline of Peril," Tongues of Fire, September 1914

"Christian Seemliness," Tongues of Fire, October 1914

"Slighted Security," Tongues of Fire, November

"Fitness," Tongues of Fire, December 1914

"First and Last," League of Prayer¹ New Years' Convention, Friday, January 1, 1915, in Pontefract, W. Yorkshire

"God's Parenthesis," Tongues of Fire, March 1915 "Are You Ever Disturbed?" is a talk given at a BTC² devotional meeting, May 27, 1914

"Radiant in the Thick of It" is a talk given in Hawes, Yorkshire September 12, 1915, at the Sunday evening service, Wesleyan Methodist Chapel

"The Day of the Lord," Tongues of Fire, May 1915

The Discipline of Prayer: This material was published by OC as a pamphlet in the summer of 1915.

The Discipline of Loneliness: These were sermons given, most likely, during the summer of 1908 at the annual camp meeting at God's Bible School, Cincinnati. The material was published as two articles in God's Revivalist, January 1909.

The Discipline of Patience: These were lectures given, most likely, to League of Prayer audiences during spring 1909. This material was first published in Tongues of Fire magazine as three articles, in July, August, and September 1909.

Christian Disciplines incorporates some of the earliest published lectures of Oswald Chambers, some dating back to 1907. In D. W. Lambert's book Oswald Chambers: An Unbribed Soul (1968), Lambert says of The Discipline of Suffering, The Discipline of Loneliness, and The Discipline of Guidance: "These three booklets based on talks given in America before the war, were first issued by the Cincinnati Bible School. These, unlike the later books, bear the marks of having been edited by Chambers; one feature is the prolific use of apt poetic quotations." All of the Oswald Chambers books originated with his spoken words, but most were published after Chambers died in 1917. In only a few cases did he personally edit his spoken material before it was published.

Because Chambers was primarily a teacher, it should be remembered that he gave the same lectures and sermons on many occasions in various places and always altered his presentation to address the unique character and needs of his audience. Mrs. Chambers had shorthand notes of several versions of some messages. Because she used all the notes in her possession to prepare the final copy for print, the book versions of his messages often differ from the earlier articles and pamphlets.

Just before Chambers left the Bible Training College in July 1915, a friend persuaded him to publish some of his messages in Britain. Any proceeds from their sale were designated for OC's work as a YMCA chaplain in Egypt. By the summer of 1915, The Discipline in the Cure of Souls (later expanded into the book Workmen of God) and The Discipline of Peril were in print. The Discipline of Prayer was in the press.

All of the six "Disciplines" were printed first as pamphlets, then in the 1930s were issued as individual booklets in a series. In 1965, they were combined into two books, Christian Disciplines, Volume 1 and Volume 2.

Where possible, the date and place of individual messages has been added in this volume.

FOREWORD TO "THE DISCIPLINE OF PERIL"

This booklet is composed of articles by Oswald Chambers written during the Great War,³ with two added messages that have appeared in leaflet form. In the main they stand as they were first prepared. They are full of that penetrating insight into those principles underlying our human lives which explains much that happens in the days of personal or national tragedy. The heart that knows and loves Jesus Christ will not yield to panic. But such will hear the call to keep awake and pray. "When the veil is lifted we shall find that the seemly conduct of prayer wrought the things of God in man." Our Lord foresaw days of crisis in the lives of men and nations, and bid us be ready for them. Always Jesus Christ is to be lifted up as an Atoning Saviour, and always we are called to intercessory prayer on the basis of His wonderful Redemption. We commend this vital booklet to all thoughtful people in these days of international uncertainty and strain.

THE DISCIPLINE OF DIVINE GUIDANCE

God is not a supernatural interferer; God is the everlasting portion of His people. When a man "born from above" (RV mg) begins his new life he meets God at every turn, hears Him in every sound, sleeps at His feet, and wakes to find Him there. He is a new creature in a new creation, and tribulation but develops his power of knowing God, till on some transfiguration morning, he finds himself entirely sanctified by God; and from that unspeakable bliss God loosens him from Heaven, a "pilgrim of eternity," to work a work for Him among men. Out he goes, a man any may take advantage of, but none dare. His child-like simplicity excites the ridicule of men, but a wall of fire encircles him. His ignorance of the way he takes makes the cunning of the age laugh at the ease with which they think they can utilise him for their own ends, but lo! they are caught in their own snare, and their wisdom is turned to sorrow and foolishness. Such a man becomes a spectacle to angels and to men. Nothing can daunt him, nothing affright him, nothing deflect him. He may be tried by cruel mockings and scourgings, by bonds and imprisonment; he may be stoned or sawn asunder, tempted, or slain with the sword; he may wander about in sheepskins and goatskins; he may be destitute, afflicted, tormented; he may home in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth, but ever, by some mysterious mystic touch, we know he is one "of whom the world was not worthy." All Heaven and earth and hell are "persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creation, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

The child-mind is the only mind to which God can appeal, and our Lord went deeper than the profoundest philosophy in the incident recorded in Mark 9:36-37—"And He took a little child, and set him in the midst of them: and taking him in His arms, He said unto them, Whosoever shall receive one of such little children in My name, receiveth Me: and whosoever receiveth Me, receiveth not Me, but Him that sent Me" (RV). As soon as the gates of the head are closed on our experiences we limit God, and by sealing our minds we limit our growth and the possibility of graduating in Divine guidance. The child-heart is open to any and all avenues; an angel would no more surprise it than a man. In dreams, in visions, in visible and invisible ways, God can talk and reveal Himself to a child; but this profound yet simple way is lost for ever immediately we lose the open, child-like nature.

By every standard we know, saving one, the God of the Bible is a confusing contradiction to Himself. The God Who caused to be written: "Thou shalt not kill," commanded Abraham to offer "thine only son, whom thou lovest, even Isaac, . . . for a burnt offering" (Genesis 22:2 RV). The God Who said: "Thou shalt not commit adultery," commanded His servant Hosea to marry a harlot (see Hosea 1:2). Jesus Christ Himself presents a similar dilemma to every standard, saving one. He tells the seventy: "Behold, I have given you authority to tread upon serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall in any wise hurt you" (Luke 10:19 RV). Again He tells His disciples: "They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the hour cometh, that whosoever killeth you shall think that he offereth service unto God" (John 16:2 RV). And the apostle Paul, who said he had "the mind of Christ," wrote to the Corinthians: "why not rather take wrong? why not rather be defrauded?" (1 Corinthians 6:7 RV); and yet when being tried himself, he said, "I appeal unto Caesar" (Acts 25:11).

God Himself, our Lord Jesus Christ and the saints, are examples of contradiction judged by every standard saving one, viz., the standard of personal responsibility to God on the basis of personal character.

In testing circumstances saints decide differently—may all the different decisions be correct? Unquestionably they may, for the decisions are made on the basis of personal character in its responsibility to God. The blunder of the saint lies in saying, "Because I decide thus in this crisis, therefore that is the rule for all." Nonsense! God is Sovereign, and His ways are discernible according to the attainment of the particular character. One of the most fallacious lines of reasoning is on the line of an hypothesis in the matter of God's will. No saint knows what he will do in circumstances he has never been in. "I would have you without carefulness," says the apostle Paul. A saint is a creature of vast possibilities, knit into shape by the ruling personality of God.

Supernatural voices, dreams, ecstasies, visions and manifestations, may or may not be an indication of the will of God. The words of Scripture, the advice of the saints, strong impressions during prayer, may or may not be an indication of the will of God. The one test given in the Bible is discernment of a personal God and a personal relationship to Him, witnessed to ever after in walk and conversation. A striking line of demarcation discernible just here between the guidance of God and all other guidance is that all other supernatural guidance loses sight of human personality and of Divine personality, and ends in a swoon into absolute nothingness. In every stage of Divine Guidance which the Bible records, these two elements become ever clearer: God and myself. The most intense statement of this is made by our Lord:

Jesus answered, The first [commandment] is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God, the Lord is one: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God from all thy heart, and from all thy soul, and from all thy mind, and from all thy strength. The second is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these. (Mark 12:29–31 RV mg)

The eternal truth is that God created me to be distinctly not Himself, but to realise Him in perfect love. If I allow that God teaches me to walk in His will, I shall allow my neighbour, whom I love as myself, the same certainty, although his way may seem so different. "What is that to thee? follow thou Me."

Professor W. James⁵ in "The Varieties of Religious Experience," says:

Among the visions and messages some have always been too patently silly; among the trances and convulsive seizures some have been too fruitless for conduct and character, to pass themselves off as significant, still less as divine. In the history of Christian mysticism the problem how to discriminate between such messages and experiences as were really divine miracles, and such others as the demon in his malice was able to counterfeit, thus making the religious person twofold more the child of hell than he was before, has always been a difficult one to solve, needing all the sagacity and experience of the best directors of conscience. In the end it had to come to our Imperialist Criterion. "By their fruits ye shall know them," not by their roots. Jonathan Edwards' "Treatise on Religious Affections" is an elaborate working out of this thesis. The roots of a man's virtue are inaccessible to us. No appearances whatever are infallible proofs of grace. Our practice is the only sure evidence, even to ourselves, that we are genuine Christians.

When all religions and philosophies and philologies have tried to define God, one and all sink inane and pass, while the Bible statements stand like eternal monuments, shrouded in ineffable glory: God Is Light; God Is Love; God Is Holy. Every attempted definition of God other than these sublime inspirations negates God, and we find ourselves possessed of our own ideas with never a glimpse of the living God.

When the flatteries, the eulogies, the enthusiasms and the extravagances regarding Jesus Christ have become enshrined sentiments in poetry and music and eloquence, they pass, like fleeting things of mist, coloured but for a moment by reflected splendours from the Son of God, and our Lord's own words come with the sublime staying of the simple gentleness of God: "I am the way, and the truth, and the life." When art has fixed her ideals, and contemplation has cloistered her choicest souls, and devotion has traced her tremulous records, quivering with the unbearable pathos of martyrdom, we realise that all these miss the portrayal of the saint; and again the severe adequacy of Scripture, undeflected by earth's heartbreaks, or griefs, or sorrows, remains the true portraiture of the saint: Saved, and Sanctified, and Sent.

It is when silenced by some such considerations as these that we can behold the child-heart nestling in the arms of God, or playing about the path of the Lord Jesus Christ, or hasting with willing feet to souls perishing in the wilderness. It is only thus, with chastened, disciplined, stilled hearts that we whisper out before His throne, "I had heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee, wherefore I loathe my words, and repent in dust and ashes" (Job 42:5–6 RV mg).

And Moses said unto the LORD, See, Thou sayest unto me, Bring up this people: and Thou hast not let me know whom Thou wilt send with me. Yet Thou hast said, I know thee by name, and thou hast also found grace in My sight. Now therefore, I pray thee, if I have found grace in Thy sight, shew me now Thy ways, that I may know Thee, to the end that I may find grace in Thy sight: and consider that this nation is Thy people. And He said, My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest. (Exodus 33:12–14 RV)

Little lamb, who made thee?
Dost thou know who made thee,
Gave thee life, and bid thee feed
By the stream and o'er the mead,
Gave thee clothing of delight.
Softest clothing, woolly, bright,
Gave thee such a tender voice,
Making all the vale rejoice?
Little lamb, who made thee?
Dost thou know who made thee?

Little lamb, I'll tell thee: Little lamb, I'll tell thee: He is called by thy name, For He calls Himself a Lamb, He is meek, and He is mild,

First Stage. By God's Sayings

How often in the Bible we read such words as those in Genesis 12:l: "Now the LORD said unto Abram . . ." (RV), and in Ezekiel 1:3, "the word of the LORD came expressly unto Ezekiel . . ." and in Matthew 7:24: "Every one therefore which heareth these words of Mine, and doeth them, shall be likened unto a wise man, which built his house upon the rock . . ." (RV).

What is the word of God? Where are the sayings of God? The answer is readily given: "The Bible is the Word of God." But we must ask again, because we have all known battlers for the Bible as the Word of God whom we should hesitate to call saints, for many have proved logically what never came to pass from the Bible; consequently the answer is given more cautiously: "The Bible contains the word of God." This is a most ingenious fallacy and leads to a mystical type of religious life which by being "special," speedily becomes spurious (see 2 Peter 1:20).

The Bible is the Word of God only to those who are born from above and who walk in the light. Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Word of God, and the Bible, the words of God, stand or fall together, they can never be separated without fatal results. A man's attitude to our Lord determines his attitude to the Bible. The "sayings" of God to a man not born from above are of no moment; to him the Bible is simply a remarkable compilation of literature—"that it is, and nothing more." All the confusion arises from not recognising this. But to the soul born from above, the Bible is the universe of God's revealed will. The Word of God to me is ever according to my spiritual character; it makes clear my responsibility to God as well as my individuality apart from Him.

A quotation from an able article in the Spectator for April 13, 1907, entitled "The Mind of Christ" will serve well:

If we refuse to look at the Gospel as a whole and to use our reason; if we insist on making of Christ what He distinctly refused to be, a ruler and a judge, instead of the Light of the World, we may set up tyrannies as bad as, or worse than, those instituted by Roman dogmatism. There will be no new Torquemadas, but how much suffering may not be caused by a new Tolstoy. Upon isolated sentences of Jesus absolutely conflicting systems may be erected, and a measure of fanaticism is natural to man. . . . But we may not forget that there is an indifference which plumes itself on its moderation, and is even more opposed to the mind of Christ than fanaticism.

What applies to our present dispensation is exactly the same in principle as applied to the hoary antiquity, viz., that the pure in heart see and hear God. The stupendous profundities of God's will, surging with unfathomable mysteries, come down to the shores of our common life, not in emotions and fires, nor in aspirations and vows, and agonies and visions, but in a way so simple that the wayfaring men, yea fools, cannot make a mistake, viz., in words.

It is recorded in Deuteronomy 32:46–47: "And he said unto them, Set your heart unto all the words which I testify unto you this day; which ye shall command your children, to observe to do all the words of this law. For it is no vain thing for you; because it is your life, and through this thing ye shall prolong your days upon the land, whither ye go over Jordan to possess it" (RV). And our Lord in Mark 4:14, states that "The sower soweth the word."

As soon as any soul is born from above, the Bible becomes to him the universe of revelation facts, just as the natural world is the universe of common-sense facts. These revelation facts are words to our faith, not things. The stage of Divine guidance by God's sayings is reached when a soul understands that, by the tribulations of the providential life, God's Spirit speaks an understanding of His Word never known before. For any soul to teach what he has not bought by suffering is almost sure to bring tribulation which will either destroy or lead to personal understanding of the word taught. Divine guidance by the Word indicates a profound and personal preparation of heart. God's sayings are sealed to every soul saving as they are opened by the indwelling Spirit of God. How often the individual soul has to learn by a bitter and, in some sense, an altogether uncalled for experience, that-

He placed thee mid this dance
Of plastic circumstance.
This Present, thou, forsooth, wouldst fain arrest:
Machinery just meant
To give thy soul its bent
Try thee and turn thee forth, sufficiently impressed.

Robert Browning

To search for a word of God to suit one's case is never Divine guidance, but guidance by human caprice and inclination. The Holy Spirit Who brings to our remembrance what Jesus has said and leads us into all truth, does so to glorify Jesus Christ. Divine guidance by the Word always makes us realise our responsibility to God. In the tribulations, God brings the Divine guidance by His Word and as we go on we begin to understand what our Lord said: "The words that I have spoken unto you are spirit, and are life" (John 6:63 RV). Every interpretation of the sayings of God that does not reveal this fundamental responsibility to God, and a realisation that we are to be for the praise of His glory, is a private interpretation, and is severely condemned by God.

. . . We abide

Not on this earth; but for a little space We pass upon it: and while so we pass, God through the dark hath set the Light of Life, With witness for Himself, the Word of God, To be among us Man, with human heart, And human language, thus interpreting The One great Will incomprehensible, Only so far as we in human life Are able to receive it.

How often have our misunderstandings of God's Word proved to us the need for the penetrating words of our Lord: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." In our prayings, in our desirings, in our patience, does our knowledge of God enable us to say and really mean, "Speak, LORD; for Thy servant heareth"? Would we really hear God's Word, or are we not rather in this immediate tribulation waiting for God to persuade us that our own way is right after all? Oh, the bliss of that disciplined child-heart, which when He speaks, says, "Yes, Lord," and simply obeys.

Pining souls! come nearer Jesus,
And oh come not doubting thus,
But with faith that trusts more bravely
His huge tenderness for us.
If our love were but more simple,
We should take Him at His word;
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord.

Frederick Faber

The school of the Divine Guidance by God's Sayings is one of severe discipline. It will mean great heart-searchings, great patience, and great simplicity to be guided in this way.

Second Stage. By God's Symbols

And the LORD went before them by day in a pillar of cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light; that they might go by day and by night: the pillar of cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night, departed not from before the people. (Exodus 13:21–22 RV)

When ye see the ark of the covenant of the LORD your God, and the priests the Levites bearing it, then ye shall remove from your place, and go after it. (Joshua 3:3)

And a man shall be as an hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. (Isaiah 32:2)

And the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily form, as a dove, upon Him, and a voice came out of heaven, Thou art My beloved Son; in Thee I am well pleased. (Luke 3:22 RV)

The cloudy pillar, the fiery pillar, the ark, the man, the dove, are all God's symbols. This way of Divine guidance by symbols is a deep and blessed one. God does not leave us to the vague, ungraspable intuitions of the mind of some great man for guidance, or to our own vain imaginings. He has made a world of things, other than ourselves, the safeguard and inspiration of our common-sense reasonings; and He has made a world of spiritual realities the safeguard and inspiration of our discernment. It is on this God-created ingredient in our nature that every great organisation, good or bad, is based. The revolt against error on one side is ever apt to enter into error on the other. The revolt, for instance, against Roman Catholicism has developed into an irresponsible individualism which is equally unbiblical.

How often our Lord Jesus Christ emphasises the guidance by symbols—"I am the door"; "I am the bread of life"; "I am the true vine"; "I am the way." A right understanding of this biblical conception is essential to all Christian thinking. The Bible order seems to be—the absolute Truth; the symbolic Truth; the False.

All that we see on this earth is symbolic reality, and only as our inward heart is purged from sin can we see the symbolism. That is why when a man is in Christ Jesus he is a new creation, and he sees everything in the common world as symbols—unseeable realities. (Remember, there are symbols of the devil and of the kingdom of evil just as there are symbols of God and of the kingdom of heaven.) How simply and clearly our Lord teaches this: "If thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" And vice versa: "If therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light." When Jesus heard His Father speak, "the multitude therefore, that stood by, and heard it, said that it had thundered" (RV). Again, when Saul of Tarsus was met by Jesus on the way to Damascus and heard His voice, the men that journeyed with him saw only sudden lightning and physical collapse.

Earth's crammed with heaven, And every common bush afire with God; But only he who sees, takes off his shoes; The rest sit round it and pluck blackberries, And daub their natural faces unaware More and more from the first similitude!

Elizabeth Browning

One is made to turn with weary exhaustion from the unthinking, hand to mouth experience of much of the religious literature of the day. To think as a Christian is a rare accomplishment, especially as the curious leaven which puts a premium on ignorance works its sluggish way. To speak of Plato to the majority of Christian preachers, particularly holiness preachers, would be to meet not a consciousness of ignorance, but a blatant pride which boasts of knowing nothing outside the Bible, which, in all probability, means knowing nothing inside it either. Christian thinking is a rare and difficult thing; so many seem unaware that the first great commandment according to our Lord is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . . from all thy mind. . . ." (RV mg).

No mind, other than the Mind of our Lord, has so profoundly expounded this line of Guidance by Symbols as Plato. He saw with a clearness of vision second only to the inspired prophets of God. No wonder many in the early thoughtful days of Christianity wanted to class him as a Father of the Church. It is impossible for men to be guided by absolute Truth. God, Who is Absolute Truth, said to Moses: "Thou canst not see My face: for man shall not see Me and live" (Exodus 33:20 RV). God guides us stage by stage, and the most marvellous stage of His guidance is by symbols.

What are we to understand by a symbol? A symbol represents a spiritual truth by means of images or properties of natural things. A symbol must not be taken as an allegory, an allegory is simply a figurative discourse with a meaning other than that contained in literal words. A symbol is sealed until the right spirit is given for its understanding, and God's symbols are undetected unless His Spirit is in His child to enable him to understand. What did the cloudy pillar by day or the fiery pillar by night signify to the hordes in the desert? Nothing more than the mystery of ever-varying cloud forms. To the children of God, they meant the manifested guidance of God. How a man interprets God's symbols reveals what manner of man he is. How often we have to say with the Psalmist, "I was as a beast before Thee," i.e., without understanding. How often the ass recognises that one of God's angels is speaking before the so-called prophet on its back detects it.

All that meets the bodily sense I deem Symbolical—one mighty Alphabet

For infant minds! And we in this low world Placed with our backs to bright Reality That we may learn with young, unwounded ken The Substance from the Shadow!

Samuel Taylor Coleridge

God shifts His symbols and we know not why; but God is ever only good, and the shifting of one symbol means surely that another symbol is to guide us to a nearer grasp of Himself. When God, so to speak, has left a symbol, it becomes transparent, and has no further binding force. How sad it is under the sun to see men worshipping a symbol which has been abandoned by God. How degenerate, how idolatrous, how ensnaring it becomes when God's voice sounds to the spirit of a child of His—"Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." We are not to worship reminiscences; this is the characteristic of all other religions, saving the Bible religion. The Bible religion is one of eternal progress, an intense and militant going on. A perilous time ensues for the individual and for the religious world whenever God shifts His symbols. Obedience to the voice of the Spirit within, the Word of God without and the suffering of the tribulation around, enable the child of God to hear God's voice and recognise His changing symbols. This discipline of Divine guidance by symbols is a serious, momentous discipline, and God never leaves His children alone in such times, for,

... behind the dim unknown Standeth God within the shadows, Keeping watch upon His own.

James Russell Lowell

The worship of a past symbol is not a whit more dangerous than the irresponsible individualism that refuses to have any symbol. Both are contrary to God's Word and God's ways. Where do we stand to-day with regard to God's great symbols? Is it a selfish isolation, an unholy "come-out-ism"? Then may God hand us the wine-cup from the hand of a despised Church member until our spiritual dullness is discerned and our spiritual pride humbled. Or is it a dead symbolism, cast aside in the economy of God, a moribund ritualism? If so, may the Spirit sting our traditional "churchianity" into going "without the camp, bearing His reproach."

Blind me with seeing tears until I see! Let not fair poetry, science, art, sweet tones, Build up about my soothed sense a world That is not Thine, and wall me up in dreams;

^{6. &}quot;Come-out-ism": belief among some holiness groups that true Christians should leave "dead" churches and form their own fellowships. Chambers agreed with the League of Prayer's position that Spirit-filled believers should remain in their churches to pray and work for revival.

So my sad heart may cease to beat with Thine, The great World-heart, whose blood forever shed Is human life; whose ache is man's dumb pain.

As year by year the thrills of spring-tide shoot Through earth's dull veins, with fresh, magnetic might,

Nor fail, for frosts that nip and winds that blight,

So, Lord, who erst didst stir with quickening power

My answering soul, achieve what Thou hast aimed:

Draw, for Thou has drawn; hold, what Thou hast claimed.

Draw through all failure to the perfect Flower; Draw through all darkness to the perfect Light. Yea, let the rapture of Thy springtide thrill Through me, beyond me, till its ardour fill The lingering souls that know not Thee aright; That Thy great love may make of me, even me, One added link to bind the world to Thee.

Third Stage. By His Servants

Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people. (Isaiah 55:4)

Guidance by God's sayings has to bring the soul into the surgery of events before a new harkening attitude can be gained to those sayings. At first the soul hears in one direction only, viz., that of its prejudices. Guidance by God's symbols makes it clear to the heart that outward vision is only possible as the inward eye is opened; and as God touches the eye with eye-salve, the soul realises that the changing symbols give deeper and more penetrating visions of God.

Guidance by His servants gives a yet more intimate nearness to God Himself. It is during this discipline that we learn that no ideal is of any practical avail unless it be incarnated. If the mystic spell of Nature in her rolling air, her eternal uplands and abiding plains, her sunrise dawnings and setting glories, her perennial springs and summer nights languishing to autumn, the strenuous grip of her icy colds—if these awaken a sense of the sublime and the unreached, it ends but in a spontaneous ache when the deep within calls to the deep outside! If the imprisoned soul of sound makes the human spirit weep tears from too deep a well to be reached by individual suffering—if music turns the human heart into a vast capacity for something as yet undreamt of till all its being aches to the verge of infinity; if the minor reaches of our music have awakened harmonies in spheres we know not, till with dumb yearnings we turn our sightless orbs, "crying like children in the night, with no language but a cry"; if painters' pictures stop the ache which Nature started, and fill for one amazing moment the yearning abysses discovered by the more mysterious thing than joy in music's moments—it is but for a moment, and all seems but to have increased our capacity for a crueller sensitiveness, a more useless agony of suffering. But when God's servants guide us to His heart, then the first glorious outlines of the meaning of it all pass before us.

If we trace the lineaments of the servants of God in the Bible, we find a servant of God to be altogether different from an instrument of God. An instrument of God is one whom God takes up and uses and puts down again. A servant of God is one who has given up for ever his right to himself, and is bound to his Lord as His slave. "For he that was called in the Lord, being a bondservant, is the Lord's freedman: likewise he that was called, being free, is Christ's bondservant" (1 Corinthians 7:22 RV).

An instrument is one who shows God's Sovereignty, an unaccountable sovereignty may be, but unchallengeable ever. A servant is one who, recognising God's sovereign will, leaps to do that will of his own free choice.

What shall we say then? Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid. For He saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I have compassion. So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that hath mercy. For the scripture saith unto Pharaoh, For this very purpose did I raise thee up, that I might shew in thee My power, and that My name might be published abroad in all the earth. So then He hath mercy on whom He will, and whom He will He hardeneth.

Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth He still find fault? For who withstandeth His will? Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to Him that formed it, Why didst thou make me thus? Or hath not the potter a right over the clay, from the same lump to make one part a vessel unto honour, and another unto dishonour? (Romans 9:14–21 RV)

Guidance by His servants! What a blessed guidance, but oh, it is stern. "A servant of God"—the meaning of this phrase is largely lost to-day. The phrase that suits our modern mood better is, "a servant of men." Our watch-cry to-day is, "The greatest good for the greatest number." The watch-cry of the servant of God is, "The greatest obedience to my Lord." How many of us know a servant of God who has a right understanding of the science of God, and can introduce us to Him, and to His thoughts and His hopes? We are over-satiated with sympathisers with men, and with that mystic-sounding shibboleth, "Humanity." To quote G. K. Chesterton, whose insurgent mind is the best cure for any complacent stoicism:—

And the same antithesis exists about another modern religion, I mean the religion of Comte, generally known as Positivism, or the worship of humanity. Such men as Mr. Frederick Harrison, 7 that brilliant and chivalrous philosopher, who still, by his mere personality, speaks for the creed, would tell us that he offers us the philosophy of Comte, but not all Comte's fantastic proposals for pontiffs and ceremonials, the new calendar, the new holidays, and saints' days. He does not mean that we should dress ourselves up as priests of humanity or let off fireworks because it is Milton's birthday. To the solid English contrast all this appears, he confesses, to be a little absurd. To me it appears the only sensible part of Comteism. As a philosophy it is unsatisfactory. It is evidently impossible to worship humanity just as it is impossible to worship the Savile Club;8 both are excellent institutions to which we may happen to belong. But we perceive clearly that the Savile Club did not make the stars and does not fill the universe. And it is surely unreasonable to attack the doctrine of the Trinity as a piece of bewildering mysticism, and then to ask men to worship a being who is ninety million persons in one God, neither confounding the persons nor dividing the substance.

An eminent difference is discernible between biographic studies in the Bible and outside the Bible. When men write studies of the servants of God, they are apt to drop out the uncouth and the unlovely, and out of their devotion state only the elements that idealise the servant. But the Bible reveals the blunderings and the sins and the uncouthness of the servants of God, and leaves only one idea dominant—that these men were for the glory of God. How deeply is written over the lives of the servants of God in the Bible record, "Wherefore let no one glory in men" (RV). The servants of God in the Bible are spoilt for earth, they live and speak backed by Jehovah. What kind of a bosom companion would Abraham have made? or Moses, or Jeremiah? What sort of a bedfellow would Elijah or Ezekiel have been? How sick we are over and over again with the vain sentimentalism about the servants of God. No wonder God lifts His servants up at times and shakes them and flings the parasites off.

The servants of God in the Bible never stole hearts to themselves, but handed them over to God. There is a ruggedness and an intolerable isolation about the servants of God in the Bible. They each one seem to do without you. There is nothing in the world saving God to these servants of His; all else is as a shadow. The lure the servants of God are made but attracts men to a wilderness wherein God woos men to Himself. Oh, the wild wail of the heart of the man or woman who mistook the fascination of God in His servant for God Himself, and clasped to his or her heart "a man of like passions as we are" (RV)! Oh for that man of God who will hand over to God the hearts God has called through him! It is not you who awakened that mighty desire in the heart; it is not you who called forth that longing in that spirit; it is God in you. Are you a servant of God? Then point them to Him. Down on your face, down in the dust, oh man of God, if those arms clasp you, and that heart rests on you! If that longing, loving heart awakens and finds you instead of God, what a passion of despair will blight you with the curse of solitariness and silence!

Oh, there are sad cries all over the spiritual world entering into the heart of God, and He will avenge them. Oh that we could hear it—"You have taken the East from me; you have taken the West from me; you have taken what is before me; and what is behind me; you have taken the moon, you have taken the sun from me, and, my fear is great, you have taken God from me."

Are all servants of God like that? No, thank God! The sheep are many and the shepherds are few, for the fatigue is staggering, the heights are giddy and the sights are awful. It is no wonder our Lord said "the sheep follow Him: for they know His voice. And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers" (John 10:4–5).

One of the greatest of these servants of God said he was a voice that cried but one thing, "Repent," and that pointed in one direction, "Behold the Lamb of God!" That is what a servant of God is for. Aye, and what a school God puts His servant through! Its years of graduation are—Separation, Sorrow, Supreme Sanctification and Suffering.

Is there one man in disenchanted days
Who yet has feet on earth and head in Heaven?
One viceroy yet to whom his King hath given
The fire that kindles and the strength that sways?
Is there a wisdom whose extremest ways
Lead upward still? For us who most have striven

Made wise too early and too late forgiven, Our prudence palsies and our seeing slays. We are dying; is there one alive and whole,

A hammer of the Lord, a simple soul, Man with the men and with the boys a boy? We are barren, let a male and conquering voice Fill us and quicken us and make rejoice, Even us who have so long forgotten joy.

God guides by His servants, and it is a guidance that disciplines heart and mind and spirit. Watch this guidance through the records of Holy Writ; the careers of Abraham, of Moses, of Joshua, of Gideon, of Deborah, and trace the discipline of their apprenticeship and mastership. Grasp the loneliness of Abraham, "the Friend of God." Enter into and imagine the rugged discipline of Moses, who esteemed "the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt." Bow before the winnowing of the unworldly heart of Joshua. Marvel as you see how God took timid Gideon as His wardrobe, and clothed Himself with him. And be silent before Deborah, that sibyl of God's sanctity, as she leads God's army. And marking their self-effacement and other-worldliness, bow your face before God and learn the strangeness of His guidance by His servants.

Scarcely have we paid enough attention to the prefiguring of our Lord Himself in the prophets and servants of God, and perhaps we have over-emphasised His prefiguring in the signs and symbols of the dispensations surrounding those prophets and servants. How strangely the writers of the Psalms launch out into a definite prefiguring of our Lord! How wonderfully the sorrows of these servants of God take on new meaning when we see Jesus! The anthropomorphism of the Old Testament can never be despatched by the statement that it is man trying to state God in terms of his own ignorance. It is rather God prefiguring the stupendous mystery of the Incarnation.

'Tis the weakness in strength, that I cry for! my flesh, that I seek

In the Godhead! I seek and I find it. O Saul, it

A Face like my face that receives thee; a Man like to me,

Thou shalt love and be loved by, for ever: a Hand like this hand

Shall throw open the gates of new life to thee! See the Christ stand!

Fourth Stage. By His Sympathy

I will make mention of the lovingkindnesses of the LORD, and the praises of the LORD, according to all that the LORD hath bestowed on us; and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which He hath bestowed on them according to His mercies, and according to the multitude of His lovingkindnesses. For He said, Surely, they are My people, children that will not deal falsely: so He was their Saviour. In all their affliction He was afflicted, and the angel of His presence saved them: in His love and in His pity He redeemed them; and He bare them, and carried them all the days of old. (Isaiah 63:7–9 RV)

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness; He compassed him about, He cared for him, He kept him as the apple of His eye: as an eagle that stirreth up her nest, that fluttereth over her young, He spread abroad His wings, He took them, He bare them on His pinions: the LORD alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with Him. (Deuteronomy 32:10–12 RV)

Thou hast also given me the shield of Thy salvation: and Thy right hand hath holden me up, and Thy gentleness hath made me great. Thou hast enlarged my steps under me, and my feet have not slipped. (Psalm 18:35–36 RV)

The Sympathy of God

God having feeling for us! The very heart of the phrase is given in Hebrews 4:15–16, "For we have not a high priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but one that hath been in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore draw near with boldness unto the throne of grace, that we may receive mercy, and may find grace to help us in time of need" (RV).

It is in the mystic tenderness of the guidance by His sympathy that God gives a love like His own. Oh, how can language put it—when the soul, the individual soul, knows God has marked all sorrows and has kept all tears till not one drop is lost, knows that "He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust," when the first great surprise of the light of His sympathy bursts on our tear-dimmed soul and turns it into radiant rainbows of promise; when no sayings of His resound on our ears with thrilling clarion call; when no visible symbol disciplines our faltering steps; when no servant of God is near to help us discern His will; when the cloud gathers round us, and we fear as we enter the cloud, and lo! a mystic touch is on our spirits, a coolness and balm, "as one whom his mother comforteth" so the Lord comforts us. Oh, the tenderest touch of a mother's love is nothing compared to our blessed Father's sympathy! It is there, couched in His arms, that we are guided into that secret of secrets, that it is not men's sins we have to deal with, but their suffering, it is ensphered in the nights when He gives us the treasures of darkness, that discipline us to be staying powers in the alarm moments of other lives. What an atmosphere there breathes about the life God is guiding by His sympathy! We feel a larger horizon, an expanding heart and brain and spirit grasping us and uplifting us. Nothing seems changed yet a kiss, as if the kiss of God, touches our care, and we smilingly wonder how things have altered, and life is never the same again. From guidance by His sympathy, we learn that God heeds not our faults nor our mistakes, He looks at our hearts. This point, so blessed, so rare, perhaps we could never see before. How gladly, how nobly, how purely we grow under the guidance by God's sympathy!

And yet it would be dangerous if God guided us by His sympathy too soon. Look again at Isaiah 63 for the sad sequel to such guidance: "But they rebelled, and grieved His holy Spirit: therefore He was turned to be their enemy, and Himself fought against them" (v. 10 RV). And again at the sequel in Deuteronomy 32: "But Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked... then he forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation" (v. 15).

Clearly, sympathy may be dangerous in its effects on men. In undisciplined, self-centred lives it seems to engender a self-confident vanity that abuses the end and meaning of God's sympathy, and the goodness of God, which ought to lead to repentance, leads rather to blatant presumption. But to a nature disciplined and chastened by self-knowledge, whose cynicism (which ever arises from the narrow view of personal limitations) has long since given way to larger, more generous, more self-effacing views—to such a nature, guidance by God's sympathy is an unspeakable boon, ever leading the soul out into deep adoration of God and devotion to Him.

This aspect of guidance by God's sympathy is rarely spoken of by expounders of God's ways with men, partly because of the definite indefinableness of the guidance, and partly because so few understand it, or have learned to partake in such guidance by those mystic touches which endear the soul to God and God to that soul beyond all words.

Guidance by sympathy amongst ourselves is often questionable, because a man may sympathise out of self-sentiment, which is nothing more than disguised selfishness and has an enervating, unennobling effect. Sympathy to benefit and brace and ennoble, must spring from a higher source than the one who is suffering has reached as yet. The purpose and heart of our Lord's sympathy is that it does not make us submissive to a broken heart and to degenerate hereditary bondage; but guides us to where He will bind up the brokenhearted and set at liberty the captives. There is a distressing snare which besets a certain type of saint, the snare of a morbid desire for sympathy, which simply makes them craving spiritual sponges, so to speak, to mop up sympathy. God's criticism of us, strange to say, does not hurt, for the soul understands that it springs from a deep well of sympathy. Criticism without sympathy is cruel, but criticism that springs from sympathy is blessed—faithful wounds and goads and rousings!

The discipline of guidance by God's sympathy leads to a clearer, better understanding of God's ideas and hopes and aims. In this way He makes known to us His ways; otherwise we simply know His acts (Psalm 103:7). Through guidance by His sympathy we understand that "He doeth all things well," and though He slay, that soul cannot fear. The language of the soul guided by God's sympathy is an amazed rebuke to those who do not know God! For he says by his life—"It is the LORD: let Him do what seemeth Him good."

The guidance by God's sympathy keeps the soul and heart in a rare atmosphere of blessed spiritual love. It is along this line of Divine guidance that God takes us into counsel with Himself, as it were, saying as He did about Abraham, "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do . . . ?"

Before we take our final meditation and musing on those serene thoughts of guidance by God Himself, let our hearts lie open before that marvel of revelation in the fourteenth chapter of St. John's Gospel.

And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may be with you for ever, even the Spirit of truth: whom the world cannot receive; for it beholdeth Him not, neither knoweth Him: ye know Him; for He abideth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you desolate: I come unto you.

Call the Comforter by the term you think best—Advocate, Helper, Paraclete, the word conveys the indefinable blessedness of His sympathy; an inward, invisible kingdom that causes the saint to sing through every night of sorrow. This Holy Comforter represents the ineffable Motherhood of God. Protestantism has lost for many generations this aspect of the Divine revelation because of its violent antipathy to Mariolatry as practised by the Roman Catholic Church; and it behoves us to remember that Protestantism is not the whole Gospel of God, but an expression of a view of the Gospel of God specially adapted to the crying needs of a particular time.

George MacDonald in his book entitled Sir Gib-bie, writes as follows (and by the way it is a striking indication of the trend and shallowness of the modern reading public that George MacDonald's books have been so neglected)—

See revelation culminate in Elizabeth and Mary, the mothers of John the Baptist and Jesus. Think how much fitter that it should be so; that they to whom the Word of God comes should be women bred in the dignity of a natural life, and familiarity with the large ways of the earth; women of simple and few wants, without distraction, and with time for reflection—compelled to reflection, indeed, from the enduring presence of an unsullied consciousness, for wherever there is a humble, thoughtful nature, into that nature the divine consciousness, that is, the Spirit of God, presses as into its own place. Holy women are to be found everywhere, but the prophetess is not so likely to be found in the city as in the hill country.

We quote this simply for the purpose of suggesting how we limit ourselves and our conceptions of God by ignoring the side of the Divine Nature best symbolised by womanhood, and the Comforter, be it reverently said, surely represents this side of the Divine Nature. It is the Comforter Who sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts. It is the Comforter Who baptises us into oneness with Jesus, in the amazing language of Scripture, until we are indwelt by a mysterious union with God. It is the Comforter Who brings forth the fruit of love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance. Guidance by His sympathy leads by a blessed discipline into an understanding of God which passeth knowledge.

... that whatsoever spark
Of pure and true in any human heart
Flickered and lived, it burned itself towards Him
In an electric current, through all honds
Of intervening race and creed and time,
And flamed up to a heat of living faith.
And love, and love's communion, and the joy
And inspiration of self-sacrifice;
And drew together in a central coil,
Magnetic, all the noblest of all hearts,
And made them one with Him, in a live flame
That is the purifying and the warmth
Of all the earth even to these latter days.

Fifth Stage. By Himself

For in all the world there is none but Thee, my God, there is none but Thee.

After these things the word of the LORD came unto Abram in a vision, saying, Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward. (Genesis 15:1)

And He said, My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest. (Exodus 33:14)

If there arise in the midst of thee a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and he give thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or unto that dreamer of dreams: for the LORD your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the LORD your God with all your heart and with all your soul. Ye shall walk after the LORD your God, and fear Him, and keep His commandments, and obey His voice, and ye shall serve Him, and cleave unto Him. (Deuteronomy 13:1–4 RV)

The LORD is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the waters of rest. He restoreth my soul: He guideth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake. (Psalm 23:1–3 RV mg)

This is the goal on earth. In all we have touched upon we have not approached the goal of the Hereafter. God is never in a hurry, and His guidance is so severe and so simple, so sweet and so satisfying, that nothing but the child-spirit can discern it. But this is the goal—God Himself.

... not joy, nor peace, Nor even blessing, but Himself, my God.

How true is the word of the apostle Paul's: "strengthened with all power, according to the might of His glory, unto all patience and longsuffering with joy" (Colossians 1:11 RV). Our Lord Himself strikes the same note of patience: "In your patience ye shall win your souls" (Luke 21:19 RV) and the apostle John writes: "I John, your brother and partaker with you in the tribulation and kingdom and patience which are in Jesus . . ." (Revelation 1:9 RV). Oh, the discipline of patience! How His guidance hastens us, sweetens us, and quickens us, until without let or hindrance He can guide us by Himself.

Go thou into thy closet, shut thy door—
And pray to Him in secret: He will hear.
But think not thou, by one wild bound, to clear
The numberless ascensions, more and more
Of starry stairs that must be climbed, before
Thou comest to the Father's likeness near.
And bendest down to kiss His feet so
That, step by step, their mounting flights passed o'er

Be thou content if on thy weary need There falls a sense of showers and of the Spring; A hope that makes it possible to fling Sickness aside, and go and do the deed:

^{9.} without let or hindrance: legal phrase meaning "without obstacle or impediment."

For highest aspiration will not lead Unto the calm beyond all questioning.

George MacDonald

From earliest childhood there has hovered over us in a vast o'erarching the "Over Soul," the blessed Presence that is indefinable. But it is only to the soul disciplined by suffering, by loneliness, and by Divine guidance, that "our Father's feet" appear among the dusty clouds. In the days and years of the preparation of our moral and spiritual characters, the vision tarried and we wearied waiting for it. How often it seemed like some vagrant will-o'-the-wisp, and all our life grew sick with longing. But ever and anon a vision came, perhaps in the rapt spell of prayer, when one felt if he put out his hand he might, nay, he would, touch God Himself. Perhaps it was in a holy spell of contemplation that God Himself enfolded us, till fear was impossible, and God was all in all, beyond all language and all thought. But these all passed:

God's fashion is another; day by day
And year by year He tarrieth; little need
The Lord should hasten; whom he loves the most
He seeks not oftenest, nor woos him long,
But by denial quickens his desire,
And in forgetting best remembers him.
Till that man's heart grows humble and reaches out
To the least glimmer of the feet of God,
Grass on the mountain-tops or the early note
Of wild birds in the bush before the day,—
Wherever sweetly in the ends of the earth
Are fragments of a peace that knows not man.

What is the meaning of all the pain, the longing and the questioning? Why does God not tell us plainly of Himself? Ah! our God is a Masterworkman in perfecting His ideas in us; He never hastens. So often we mistake Him and His purpose, and sinking into quietism and contemplation we begin to repose in a sanctified stagnation, when suddenly He ruthlessly uproots us, and when at last we are agreed with Him and His ways, He dazes and confounds us with His own questions. (All this is put for our instruction in the last chapters of the Book of Job.) We do so want God to realise that we take ourselves very seriously. But some of the questions God asks us destroy this seriosity:

Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth?... Hast thou commanded the morning since thy days began, and caused the dayspring to know its place?... Hast thou entered into the springs of the sea? or hast thou walked in the recesses of the deep? Have the gates of death been revealed unto thee? or hast thou seen the gates of the shadow of death? Hast thou comprehended the breadth of the earth?... Canst thou bind the sweet influences [mg] of the Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion? Canst thou lead forth the signs of the Zodiac [mg] in their season? or canst thou guide the Bear with her train? Knowest thou the ordinances of the heavens? canst thou establish the dominion thereof in the earth? (RV)

Oh, these terrible questions when God seems to laugh at the soul, destroying its serious self-importance, even while He upholds that soul.

Then Job answered the LORD, and said, Behold, I am of small account; what shall I answer Thee? I lay mine hand upon my mouth. Once have I spoken, and I will not answer, yea twice, but I will proceed no further... I know that Thou canst do all things, and that no purpose of Thine can be restrained. Who is this that hideth counsel without knowledge? therefore have I uttered that which I understood not... I had heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth Thee, wherefore I loathe my words [mg], and repent in dust and ashes. (RV)

It is by these processes, for the most part unstateable, that God by His Divine guidance destroys that awful barrier of taking ourselves too seriously.

Lord, what I once had done with youthful might, Had I been from the first true to the truth, Grant me, now old, to do—with better sight. And humbler heart, if not the brain of youth; So wilt thou, in thy gentleness and truth Lead back thy old soul, by the path of pain, Round to his best—young eyes and heart and brain.

Come to me, Lord:
I will not speculate how,
Nor think at which door I would have thee appear,

Nor put off calling till my floors be swept.
But cry, "Come, Lord, come anyway, come now."
Doors, windows, I throw wide; my head I bow,
And sit like some one who so long has slept
That he knows nothing till his life draws near.

George MacDonald

God is a light so bright that the first vision of Himself is dark with excess of light. In Genesis 15, we read that "the word of the LORD came unto Abram in a vision," (mark, it was a vision—God's order is, first vision, then humiliation, then reality) "saying, Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward. . . . And when the sun was going down, a deep sleep fell upon Abram; and, lo, an horror of great darkness fell upon him"—a darkness through excess of light.

There is much that changes during this discipline of Divine guidance, but one thing grows clearer and clearer, the revelation of God Himself. Moses, the servant of God, was guided first by the cloudy pillar, i.e., by an outward mysterious method; then by guidance from Mount Sinai with its inner understanding of the words uttered there; then we see the God of the cloudy pillar, the God of mount Sinai's law, revealing Himself to him, and saying, "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." The unspeakable rapture of it all made the heart of Moses plead, "Shew me, I pray Thee, Thy glory" (RV), and God in overflowing graciousness and condescension did so-"Behold, there is a place by Me, and thou shalt stand upon the rock . . . and I will take away Mine hand, and thou shalt see My back: but My face shall not be seen" (RV).

"There is a place by Me," a place of unapproachable safety. Affliction and tribulation may destroy all else, but the saint abiding in this secret place of the Most High is untouchable. There is no self-consciousness there, no uncertainty, but only Rest, unfathomable rest in God Himself, not in a vision of God, but in God Himself as a Reality, a living, bright Reality. Walking with God, and talking to Him as friend with friend, knowing that God knows He can do what He likes with us; there are no questions and no perplexities because He knows. Here, in the heart of this way of guidance by Himself, does God convey to us "the secret of the LORD."

Within this place of certain good Love evermore expands her wings, Or nestling in Thy perfect choice, Abides content with what it brings. Oh, lightest burden, sweetest yoke! It lifts, it bears my happy soul, It giveth wings to this poor heart; My freedom is Thy grand control. Upon God's will I lay me down, As child upon its mother's breast; No silken couch, nor softest bed Could ever give me such deep rest. Thy wonderful, grand will, my God, With triumph now I make it mine; And faith shall cry a joyous Yes! To every dear command of Thine.

Gerhardt Tersteegen

A dear little friend of mine, not four years old, facing one day some big difficulty to her little heart, with a very wise shake of her head, said, "I'll go and tell my papa." Presently she came back, this time with every fibre of her little body strutting with the pride that shone in her eye, "Now, my papa's coming!" Presently her papa came, she clasped her little hands and screamed with delight, and danced round about him, unspeakably confident in her papa. Child of God, does something face you that terrifies your heart? Say, "I'll tell my Father." Then come back "boasting" in the Lord, "Now my Father's coming." And when He comes, you too will clasp your hands in rapture, your mouth will be filled with laughter, and you will be like one that dreams, when your Father comes.

And all this seems unmeasurable bliss here and now. What will it be when this order has passed away? If all this is but as His back, not His face, oh, what will it be! It hath not entered into the heart of man to conceive!

Conclusion

The deep secret of God is Love, and only the child-heart and the child-spirit can find the way to learn this secret. Jesus Christ satisfies the last aching abyss of the human spirit, and until He does there is a great element of the precarious in our life. Half the heartbreaks in life are caused by the lack of understanding that

We needs must love the highest when we see it, Not Lancelot, nor another.

Tennyson

Half the wasted days and languid reveries and immortal contemplations that embarrass human relationships and obliterate individual responsibility arise from the same lack of understanding. God is not an outward gush of sentiment, not a vague abstraction of impersonal good nature: God is a living, intense Reality, and until this truth is grasped, the puzzles and the questions are more than can be met. But when by the discipline of His Divine guidance, we know Him, and He going with us gives us Rest, then Time and Eternity are merged and lost in that amazing vital relationship. The union is one not of mystic contemplation, but of intense perfection of activity, not the Rest of the placid peace of stagnation, but the Rest of perfect motion.

Only, my God, see thou that I content thee—
Oh, take thy own content upon me.
God! Ah, never, never, sure, wilt thou repent thee
That thou hast called thy Adam from the clod!
Yet must I mourn that thou shouldst ever find me
One moment sluggish, needing more of the rod
Than thou didst think when thy desire designed

No less than thou, O Father, do we need A God to friend each lonely one of us.

George MacDonald

THE DISCIPLINE OF SUFFERING

Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial among you, which cometh upon you to prove you, as though a strange thing happened unto you.... Wherefore let them also that suffer according to the will of God commit their souls in well-doing unto a faithful Creator. 1 Peter 4:12, 19 (RV)

The awful problem of suffering continually crops up in the Scriptures, and in life, and remains a mystery. From Job until now, and from before Job, the mystery of suffering remains. And always, after the noisy clamour of the novice in suffering, and after the words of weight of the veteran; after the sarcasm and cynicism and bitterness of more or less pained people, aye, and after the slander of Satan against God—the voice of the Spirit sounds clear, "Hast thou considered My servant Job?"

Perhaps to be able to explain suffering is the clearest indication of never having suffered. Sin, suffering, and sanctification are not problems of the mind, but facts of life—mysteries that awaken all other mysteries until the heart rests in God, and waiting patiently knows "He doeth all things well." Oh, the unspeakable joy of knowing that God reigns! that He is our Father, and that the clouds are but "the dust of His feet"! Religious life is based and built up and matured on primal implicit trust, transfigured by Love; the explicit statement of that life can only be made by the spectator, never by the saint.

Some years ago the wife of a murdered missionary in China told me of the blank amazed agony of those days—"We did not feel, we did not pray, we were dazed with sorrow." She was shown a lock of her little child's golden hair, and told that both husband and child had been discovered murdered, beheaded and naked in a godless Chinese town. Shattered and undone, the widow returned with the little ones spared to her to Britain. She did not doubt God, but—"He did not answer prayer." "Oh, how many prayed for my husband, good valued servant of God, but all to no avail." In those days of dull dreary reaction the people who nearly drove her wild with distress were those who knew chapter and verse, the "why" and "wherefore" of her suffering and grief. She said, "I used to beat a tattoo on the floor with my foot while they chattered, crying in my heart 'How long, O Lord, how long?" One day as she lay prostrate on the sofa the old minister who had known her husband in the glad other days, entered the room softly, he did not speak but came gently over to her and kissed her on the forehead and went out without saying a word. "From that moment," she said, "my heart began to heal."

The unexplained things in life are more than the explained. God seems careless as to whether men understand Him or not; He scarcely vindicates His saints to men. Martha and Mary tell Jesus of the sickness of Lazarus-"Lord, behold, he whom Thou lovest is sick"; but Jesus sends no word, nor does He go. Lazarus dies, is buried, and four days afterwards Jesus appears. If you do not understand Martha as she exclaims, in effect, "Oh, I know that my brother will rise again at the last day, but that does not explain why You did not come when I sent for You; he need not have died if You had come"—if you do not understand Martha, and are satisfied with any explanation to be deduced from this incident, you are unaware of the problem of suffering, unaware of the poignant agony of God's silences.

An informal consideration of 1 Peter 4:12–19 will serve to knit into some kind of order what we consider the Bible indicates and implies with regard to the Discipline of Suffering.

The Springs of Suffering

For let none of you suffer as a murderer, or a thief, or an evil-doer, or as a meddler in other men's matters. (1 Peter 4:15 RV)

The first spring of suffering from the Bible point of view is twofold—Wrong Doing and Wrong Temper.

(a) Wrong Doing

For let none of you suffer as a murderer, or a thief, or an evil-doer. . . .

The blasting blight of wrongdoing finds its expression in the literature of all the ages; it is a suffering that works as cruelly as the grave, and is as undying as the eternal ages. By way of expression to the suffering that springs from wrongdoing, Myers's¹⁰ words are final—

When this man's best desire and highest aim Had ended in the deed of traitorous shame. When to his bloodshot eyes grew wild and dim The stony faces of the Sanhedrim,— When in his rage he could no longer hear Men's voices nor the sunlight nor the air, Nor sleep, nor waking, nor his own quick breath,

Nor God in Heaven, nor anything but death,— I bowed my head, and through my fingers ran Tears for the end of that Iscariot man, Lost in the hopeless struggle of the soul To make the done undone, the broken whole.

The sense of the irrevocable wrings the human spirit with the awful suffering of "what might have been." It begins its records in the far past, hoary with the ages, when Paradise was lost, and the cherubim with the circling fiery sword branded the life of Adam and Eve with "Nevermore, nevermore." It embraces that lonely murderer Cain, who in his undying pain cried out, "My punishment is greater than I can bear." It pauses around Esau when, too late, remorse seized that strong man and made him weep those tears of bitter repentance, all in vain; and its records of the unspeakable suffering of the wrong-doer remain till today—

Oh, brother! howsoever, whereso'er Thou hidest now the hell of thy despair Hear that one heart can pity, one can know With thee thy hopeless, solitary woe.

F. W. H. Myers

(b) Wrong Temper

There is also suffering that springs from the wrong temper—"For let none of you suffer . . . as a meddler in other men's matters" (RV). From talking in the wrong mood springs a suffering so keen, so stinging, so belittling, so hopeless, that it debases and drives the suffering one still lower. The old song from the ancient pilgrim's Song Book has this thorn at the heart of its suffering—

Deliver my soul, O LORD, from lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue. What shall be given unto thee, and what shall be done more unto thee, thou deceitful tongue? It is as the sharp arrows of the mighty man [mg], with coals of juniper. (Psalm 120:2–4 RV)

The suffering which springs from being "a meddler in other men's matters" ("a busybody") is humiliating to the last degree. A free translation of 1 Thessalonians 4:11 might well read: "Study to shut up and mind your own business," and among all the texts we hang on our walls, let this be one. The suffering that arises from a wrong temper has no refining side, but only a humiliating side. "Therefore take heed to your spirit." A blameworthy temper of mind is the most damning thing in the human soul. Peter, as a meddler in other men's matters, received a deserved rebuke from Our Lord: "Peter therefore seeing him saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do? Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou Me" (RV). And surely the rebuke contained in our Lord's answer to Martha is of the same nature—"Martha, Martha, thou art anxious and troubled about many things: but one thing is needful: for Mary hath chosen the good part, which shall not be taken away from her" (RV), i.e., "she is taking her orders from Me."

How will sad memory point where, here and there,

Friend after Friend, by falsehood or by fate, From him or from each other parted were, And love sometimes becomes the nurse of hate!

Rather, he thinks he held not duly dear Love, the best gift that Man on Man bestows,

While round his downward path, recluse and drear,

He feels the chill indifferent shadows close.

"Why did I not," his spirit murmurs deep,

"At every cost of the momentary pride,
Preserve the love for which in vain I weep;
Why had I wish or hope or sense beside?
O cruel issue of some selfish thought!
O long, long echo of some angry tone!
O fruitless lesson, mercilessly taught,
Alone to linger—and to die alone!"
Houghton¹¹

The wreck of many friendships has started in this mutiny of busybody meddlesomeness. Suffering "as a busybody" (KJV) and listening to slander ends in pitiable pain. This wrong temper slanders the Almighty, and men believe the busybody gossip of the devil and sever friendship with God. Oh, the damnable pangs caused by that arch busybody, "the accuser of our brethren."

This then is the first spring of suffering, and the Spirit warns men lest they drink of this spring and endure a suffering that is neither grand nor ennobling.

(c) Suffering as a Christian

But if a man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God in this name. (1 Peter 4:16 RV)

The suffering that arises from superiority, from an essential difference from the societies around, is an ennobling and God-glorifying thing. Our designation of "Christian" is of Divine appointment, whether it comes from the versatile wit of Antioch, or from the reverent respect of the Gentile; to live worthily of the name of Christian is to suffer persecution. To suffer because of meekness is an exalting, refining and Godglorifying suffering. And mark this and mark it well, to suffer "as a Christian" is a shameful thing in the eyes of the societies of this world. The friends who in your hour of trial and slander, gather round to support and stand with you, are first amazed, then dazed, and then disgusted, when they find that you really do not mean to stand up for yourself, but meekly to submit. In that hour when your friends pity you (Oh, the shame of being pitied, says the world; but what a God-glorifying thing it is, for to be pitied by the world is to be pitied by God) He Himself will come and whisper to your spirit—"Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake. Rejoice in that day, and leap for joy: for behold, your reward is great in heaven" (Luke 6:22-23 RV).

To "suffer as a Christian" is not to be marked peculiar because of your views, or because you will not bend to conventionality; these things are not Christian, but ordinary human traits from which all men suffer irrespective of creed or religion or no religion. To "suffer as a Christian" is to suffer because there is an essential difference between you and the world which rouses the contempt of the world, and the disgust and hatred of the spirit that is in the world. To "suffer as a Christian" is to have no answer when the world's satire is turned on you, as it was turned on Jesus Christ when He hung upon the cross, when they turned His words into jest and jeer; they will do the same to you. He gave no answer, neither can you.

"... but if a man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed" (RV). It was in the throes of this binding, amazing problem that Peter staggered. Peter meant to go with his Lord to death, and he did go; but never at any moment did he imagine that he would have to go without Him-that he would see Jesus taken by the power of the world, "as a lamb that is led to the slaughter" (RV), and have no answer, no word to explain—that froze him to the soul. That is what it means to "suffer as a Christian"-to hear men taunt Him, see them tear His words to pieces, and feel you cannot answer; to smart under their merciless, pitying sarcasm because you belong to that contemptible sect of "Christians." When the heart is stung in the first moments of such suffering, the language of the poet may suit it-

I can simply wish I might refute you, Wish my friend would,—by a word, a wink,—
Bid me stop that foolish mouth,—you brute, you!

He keeps absent,—why, I cannot think.

Never mind! Though foolishness may flout me,
One thing's sure enough: 'tis neither frost,
No, nor fire, shall freeze or burn from out me
Thanks for truth—though falsehood, gained—though lost.

Robert Browning

But when you have been comforted by His rod and His staff, you count it all joy to go through this God-glorifying suffering. ". . . but let him glorify God in this name." Suffering "as a Christian" is the second great spring of suffering, whose waters purify and ennoble the soul.

How very hard it is to be A Christian! Hard for you and me,

And the sole thing that I remark
Upon this difficulty, this;
We do not see it where it is,
At the beginning of the race:
As we proceed, it shifts its place,
And where we looked for crowns to fall,
We find the tug's to come,—that's all.

... and I find it hard
To be a Christian, as I said!
Still every now and then my head
Raised glad, sinks mournful—all grows drear
Spite of the sunshine, . . .

But Easter-Day breaks! But Christ rises! Mercy every way Is infinite,—and who can say?

Robert Browning

(d) Suffering According to the Will of God Wherefore let them also that suffer according to the will of God commit their souls in well-doing unto a faithful Creator. (1 Peter 4:19 RV)

If the springs of suffering we have been considering arise in mystery, this spring overwhelms its own source in mystery, as well as the soul it covers. The great tides lift here, the splendid solitude of God's purpose transfigures agony into Redemption, and the baffling hurricanes speed the soul like a flaming arrow on to God's great Day. G. K. Chesterton, writing on Job, says in his own individual, sufficient way—

But God comforts Job with indecipherable mystery, and for the first time Job is comforted. Eliphaz gives one answer, Job gives another answer, and the question still remains an open wound. God simply refuses to answer, and somehow the question is settled. Job flings at God one riddle, God flings back at Job a hundred riddles, and Job is at peace; he is comforted with conundrums.

When all the trite things, the sentimental things, the poetic things and the explanatory things have been said, the still small voice of the Spirit introduces the perpetual conundrum—"Hast thou considered My servant Job?" And after a pause, when our commonplace shoes are off our feet and we stand before the Cross, the conundrum is put still more deeply and more perplexingly—"Thou art My beloved Son; in Thee I am well pleased." "Yet it pleased the LORD to bruise Him; He hath put Him to grief," and we bow our head while our spirit murmurs, "Who hath believed our report" (or, "that which we have heard?") "and to whom hath the arm of the LORD been revealed?"

This spring of suffering, suffering "according to the will of God," is a great deep. Job did not know the preface to his own story, neither does any man. Job was never told that God and the devil had made a battleground of his soul. Job's suffering was not for his own sake, not for his perfecting or purifying, that was incidental; Job suffered "according to the will of God."

When shall we learn that God's great work is the production of saints? It is humbling beyond words to be told by our Father that it was not for love of the Truth that we had been bold, but that the great labour allowed us was the means of releasing our imprisoned hearts and was for our own peace. God seems careless over what men do at times.

The words of our Lord sound from those blessed Palestinian days with a deeper, truer significance: "If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me," (RV), that is, I must never do God's will according to my will. That surely is the very essence of Satan's temptation of our Lord, and of every sanctified soul—"Take your right to yourself and do God's will according to your own sanctified understanding of it." "Never!" said Jesus, "For I am come down from heaven, not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me"; and in the hour when dilemma perplexes him, the waves and the billows overwhelm him, and the noise of the water-spouts deafen him, the disciple learns the meaning of his Master's "Follow Me."

In the course of a sermon preached by Father Frere in St. Paul's Cathedral some years ago on "The Fourfold Attitude towards Suffering," he said this—"Have you, I wonder, ever had to do something to a pet dog in order to get it well, something which hurt it very much—pulled a thorn out of its foot, or washed out a wound, or anything of that sort? If so, you will remember the expression of dumb eloquence in the eyes of the dog as he looked at you; what you were doing hurt him tremendously and yet there seemed to speak from his eyes such a trust of you as if he would say, 'I don't in the least understand what you are doing, what you are doing hurts, but go on with it."

That is an apt illustration of suffering "according to the will of God." It is very necessary to be brought to the stage of trust in our experience of suffering; perhaps we are brought to it most acutely when in the case of someone we love we have to look up mutely to God and say, "I don't understand it at all, but go on with what You are doing." That marks a real stage of learning to trust in God, and it is a step towards something still further on. Spiritual experience has begun; suffering has already deepened the soul. To look on at suffering with eyes that know not God is to make the mouth slander the Highest. To sympathise with men who suffer, without first knowing God, is to hate Him.

Therefore gird up thyself, and come to stand Unflinching under the unfaltering hand. That waits to prove thee to the uttermost. It were not hard to suffer by His hand If thou couldst see His face;—but in the dark! That is the one last trial:—be it so. Christ was forsaken, so must thou be too—How couldest thou suffer but in seeming, else? Thou wilt not see the face nor feel the hand, Only the cruel crushing of the feet, When through the bitter night the Lord comes down

To tread the winepress.—Not by sight, but faith, Endure, endure,—be faithful to the end!

H. E. Hamilton King¹²

The Signs of Suffering

In the cruel fire of Sorrow
Cast thy heart, do not faint or wail!
Let thy hand be firm and steady,
Do not let thy spirit quail!
But wait till the trial is over
And take thy heart again;
For as gold is tried by fire
So a heart must be tried by pain.

I shall know by the gleam and glitter Of the golden chain you wear By your heart's calm strength in loving, ^{12.} Harriet Eleanor Hamilton King (1840–1920): English poet; author of The Disciples (1873), an epic poem much quoted and loved by Chambers.

Of the fire they have had to bear. Beat on, true heart, for ever! Shine bright, strong golden chain, And bless the cleansing fire And the furnace of living pain!

A. Procter¹³

Men and women betray their suffering in different ways—by threatening and evil doing; by sullenness and quietism; or by active well doing.

Suffering, when the heart knows nothing of trust in God and love for the Highest, shows itself in rancorous spite and evil deeds. The sarcasms, the cynicisms, the satires, the slanders, the murders, the wars, the law suits, all these spring from this source, and are usually, although not always, the sign of suffering which springs from wrongdoing. When we sum up the history of the various civilisations whose records are available we find it made up mostly of these forms of suffering, and we are reminded of the voice of the Ancient of Days echoing down the ages—"In sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life" (Genesis 3:17). It is caught up in the reflections of the wisest man that ever lived—"For all his days are but sorrows, and his travail is grief; yea, even in the night his heart taketh no rest" (Ecclesiastes 2:23 RV); and uttered again in connection with God's servant Job, who remains the incarnation of the problem of suffering—"For affliction cometh not forth of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground; but man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward" (Job 5:6-7 RV).

Suffering is the heritage of the bad, of the penitent, and of the Son of God. Each one ends in the cross. The bad thief is crucified, the penitent thief is crucified, and the Son of God is crucified. By these signs we know the widespread heritage of suffering.

Judge not! the workings of his brain
And of his heart thou canst not see;
What looks to thy dim eyes a stain,
In God's pure light may only be
A scar, brought from some well-won field—
Where thou wouldst only faint and yield.

The look, the air that frets thy sight
May be a token, that below
The soul has closed in deadly fight
With some infernal fiery foe,
Whose glance would scorch thy smiling grace,
And cast thee shuddering on thy face!

The fall thou darest to despise;—
May be the Angel's slackened hand
Has suffered it, that he may rise
And take a firmer, surer stand;
Or, trusting less to earthly things,
May henceforth learn to use his wings.

So judge none lost but wait and see, With hopeful pity, not disdain! The depth of the abyss may be The measure of the height of pain, And love and glory that may raise This soul to God in after days.

A. Procter

Another sign of suffering among men is characterised by sullenness and quietism. There is a luxury of suffering that fosters the growth of the most dangerous isolation of pride, and produces a kind of human sphinx, shrouded in mystery, which seems more profound than it is. This luxury of suffering is pre-eminently cowardly as well as proud, its habit is the habit of the cloister or nunnery. According to the character of the individual it is sullen and gloomy in its expression, or mystical and remote in its quietism. The portrayal of the sullen type is well expressed in Psalm 106:24–25. "Yea, they despised the pleasant land, they believed not His word: but murmured in their tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the LORD."

Bishop Paget¹⁴ in a remarkable essay on "The Sin of Accidie" deals with this suffering in a unique exposition of the sullen temperament; and the Apostle Paul uses a significant phrase in the same connection ". . . but the sorrow of the world worketh death" (2 Corinthians 7:10). The ultimate result of this kind of suffering is a hatred of holier lives—"But all the congregation bade stone them with stones" (Numbers 14:10); envy and murmuring at the messengers of God—"They envied Moses also in the camp, and Aaron the saint of the LORD" (Psalm 106:16), and sullen contempt of God's word. Dante places these souls in the fifth circle, tormented in the Stygian lake—

Fix'd in the slime, they say: "Sad once were we, In the sweet air made gladsome by the sun, Carrying a foul and lazy mist within: Now in these murky settlings are we sad."

The other aspect of this sign of suffering is different in character and quality, viz., quietism, a life spent in the luxury of reverie and contemplation. This type of suffering was very common in mediaeval Christianity, it produces a quietness apart, and flatly contradicts the very spirit of Christianity. The Psalmist of old tried to be a quietist, but he found himself too robust, it would not work with him-"I said, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me. I was dumb with silence, I held my peace, even from good; and my sorrow was stirred. My heart was hot within me; while I was musing the fire kindled: then spake I with my tongue . . ." (Psalm 39:1-3 RV). This kind of sanctity, so called, is highly esteemed in all religions, but it engenders a pseudo-mysticism that inevitably ends in private illuminations apart from the written word and prayer, and actually spells "strong delusion." The true element in evangelical mysticism, which is easily distinguishable from Quietism, is the mystery of a human life visibly manifesting the life of the Lord Jesus in its mortal flesh.

^{13.} Adelaide Anne Procter (1825-64): English poet.

This brings us to the third sign of Suffering—active well-doing. "Wherefore let them also that suffer according to the will of God commit their souls in well-doing unto a faithful Creator" (1 Peter 4:19 RV). The New Testament idea of a saint is not a cloistered sentiment gathering around the head of an individual like a halo of glory, but a holy character reacting on life in deeds of holiness. "I am the true vine, and My Father is the husbandman. Every branch in Me that beareth not fruit, He taketh it away: and every branch that beareth fruit, He cleanseth it, that it may bear more fruit" (John 15:1–2 RV). The cleansing of the individual branch is here made the sign of well-doing.

When a soul experiences suffering caused by the cleansing process and the pruning knife, he knows he is bearing fruit. A subtle law, which is ever and anon lost sight of by Christian teachers, is that an emotion which does not react in a proper manner will find an outlet in an improper manner. How often religious fervour and emotion, not finding reaction in its proper sphere, has sought an outlet in a lower, baser form. How sad and sordid and sorrowful is the connection between high spiritual emotions and sensual disaster. The hugging to one's self of any spiritual emotion is eminently dangerous.

This line of thought throws an important sidelight on our Lord's interview with Mary Magdalene on the Resurrection morning. Mary thought to hold Jesus to herself, to have Him again as a blessed Companion for herself, but Jesus said to her—"Take not hold on Me [mg]; for I am not yet ascended unto the Father: but go unto My brethren, and say to them, I ascend unto My Father and your Father, and My God and your God" (John 20:17 RV). There, as ever, the emphasis is on doing, not on contemplation. Du Bose says—

In the first place, Jesus took definite part with the West against the East in making the distinctive note of life not apatheia but energia. Thought, desire, will were not to be abjured and disowned in despair, through the overpowering sense of their futility. Life was not to be reduced to zero through their renunciation, but raised to infinity through their affirmation and satisfaction. The life of Christianity is a life of infinite energy because it is a life of infinite faith and hope. (The Gospel in the Gospels, p. 19)

The essential difference between the stoic and the saint is just at the point where they seem most alike. Dr. George Matheson¹⁵ points this out in his book entitled Studies in the Portrait of Christ. A stoic overcomes the world by passionlessness; the saint's overcoming is by passion. This suffering in active well-doing results in a blessed and beneficent reaction on life.

Arise! this day shall shine for evermore,
To thee a star divine on Time's dark shore!
Till now thy soul has been all glad and gay;
Bid it awake and look at Grief to-day! . . .
But now the stream has reached a dark, deep sea;
And Sorrow, dim and crowned, is waiting thee.

Each of God's soldiers bears a sword divine: Stretch out thy trembling hands to-day for thine! . . .

Then with slow, reverent step, and beating heart,

From out thy joyous day thou must depart,—
And leaving all behind come forth alone.
To join the chosen band around the throne:—
Raise up thine eyes!—be strong!—nor cast away
The crown that God has given thy soul to-day!
A. Procter

Suffering "according to the will of God"—To be "in the will of God" is not a matter of intellectual discernment, but a state of heart. To a sanctified soul the will of God is its implicit life, as natural as breathing. It is the sick man who knows intellectually what health is, and a sinful man knows intellectually what the will of God is; but a sanctified heart is the expression of the will of God. Its motto is—"My Father can do what He likes with me, He may bless me to death, or give me a bitter cup; I delight to do His will."

"... as unto a faithful Creator." The sovereignty of God is the greatest comfort to the saint. The soul of the sanctified saint is en rapport with God, he has no responsibility, he is "without carefulness" because his Father cares, God's predestinations are that soul's voluntary choosings. The pre-eminent mystery in this thought is the mystery of the nature of Love: the saint knows, with a knowledge "which passeth knowledge." This truth is never discerned by the powerful in intellect, but only by the pure in heart.

Therefore to whom turn I but to thee, the ineffable Name?

Builder and maker, thou, of houses not made with hands!

What, have fear of change from thee who art ever the same?

Doubt that thy power can fill the heart that thy power expands?

There shall never be one lost good! What was, shall live as before;

The evil is null, is nought, is silence implying sound;

What was good shall be good, with, for evil, so much good more;

On the earth the broken arcs; in the heaven, a perfect round.

All we have willed or hoped or dreamed of good shall exist;

Not its semblance, but itself; no beauty, nor good, nor power

Whose voice has gone forth, but each survives for the melodist

When eternity affirms the conception of an hour

The high that proved too high, the heroic for earth too hard,

The passion that left the ground to lose itself in the sky,

Are music sent up to God by the lover and the bard;

Enough that he heard it once: we shall hear it by-and-by.

Robert Browning

This brings us to the grand finale of the Discipline of Suffering, viz.:

The Sublimity of Suffering

It is not possible to define life, or love, or suffering, for the words are but names for incalculable elements in human experience, the very essence of which is implicit, not explicit. To quote G. K. Chesterton againA critic who takes a scientific view of the Book of Job is exactly like a surgeon who should take a poetical view of appendicitis; he is simply an old "muddler."

Suffering is grand when the heart is right with God. But for the night "the moon and the stars, which Thou hast ordained," would never be seen. And so God giveth to His own "the treasures of darkness."

The Sublimity of Suffering can be indicated in three glorious outlines—Friendship with God, Fellowship with Jesus, and Freedom in the Highest.

(a) Friendship with God

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are My friends, if ye do the things which I command you. . . . (John 15:13–14 RV)

The relationship of a soul to Jesus Christ is capable of being interpreted in varying ways, but our Lord seems to imply that there is an end to discipleship, an end to learning the pace, and a point is reached where the disciple emerges as the friend of God, carrying with him the swinging stride of the mountains of God, and the atmosphere of the eternal hills. In such glimpses one recalls how in the dawnlight of the ages "Enoch walked with God," and so fascinating, so exhilarating, so entrancing, were those walks that one day he did not return—"and he was not; for God took him." Again, we read of Abraham, who has been known through all the ages as the "Friend of God," the father of all those who have become or will yet become the friends of God.

It is not possible to express what Jesus Christ has done for us in better words than those of the writer to the Hebrews—"For it became Him, for whom are all things, and through whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. For both He that sanctifieth and they that are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren . . ." (Hebrews 2:10–11 RV). Oh, unspeakably blessed is the suffering of the sanctified that leads them step by step to this sublime friendship with God!

But whoso wants God only and lets life go, Seeks him with sorrow and pursues him far, And finds him weeping, and in no long time Again the High and Unapproachable Evanishing escapeth, and that man Forgets the life and struggle of the soul, Falls from his hope, and dreams it was a dream.

Yet back again perforce with sorrow and shame

Who once hath known him must return, nor long Can cease from loving, nor endures alone The dreadful interspace of dreams and day, Once quick with God; nor is content as those Who look into each other's eyes and seek To find one strong enough to uphold the earth, Or sweet enough to make it heaven: aha, Whom seek they or whom find? for in all the world There is none but thee, my God, there is none but thee.

F. W. H. Myers

Lest you who are suffering under the call to supreme sanctification should faint or wail, you will presently hear Him say, "Fear not, . . . I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." Do you catch the majesty, the might, the awe, the unspeakable satisfaction of those words?

My goal is God Himself, not joy, nor peace, Nor even blessing, but Himself, my God: 'Tis His to lead me there, not mine, but His— "At any cost, dear Lord, by any road." F. Brook¹⁶

Oh, that men would not degrade and belittle what our Lord Jesus Christ has done for us by morbid introspective sympathy with one another! How many of us can hear Him say: "These things have I spoken unto you in parables [mg]: the hour cometh, when I shall no more speak unto you in parables, but shall tell you plainly of the Father. In that day ye shall ask in My name: and I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you; for the Father Himself loveth you, because ye have loved Me, and have believed that I came forth from the Father" (John 16:25–27 RV) Friendship with God is not a legal fiction; it is a reality in time. "In Thy presence is fulness of joy; in Thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore" (Psalm 16:11).

And all this is ours by the sheer might of the Atonement of Jesus, who gave Himself for us to cleanse and recreate us, to baptise us with the Holy Spirit and fire, till looking at us as we tread this earth among the common round and tasks of men, Jesus will see of the travail of His soul, and being satisfied, will say, "Father, this have I done; here is another soul." That soul incandescent with the Holy Spirit, walks and talks with God, as friend with friend, letting God do as He wills with him. This, and nothing less and nothing else, constitutes the suffering of the sanctified. Oh, the sublimity of the sufferings of the sanctified! Suffering according to the will of God, not so much for personal perfecting as to enable God to express His ideas in the life.

(b) Fellowship with Jesus

But if, impatient, thou let slip thy cross, Thou wilt not find it in this world again, Nor in another; here, and here alone Is even thee to suffer for God's sake. In other worlds we shall more perfectly Serve Him and love Him, praise Him, work for Him,

Grow near and nearer Him with all delight;
But then we shall not any more be called
To suffer, which is our appointment here
Couldst thou not suffer then one hour,—or two
If He should call thee from thy cross to-day,
Saying, It is finished!—that hard cross of thine
From which thou prayest for deliverance,
Thinkest thou not some passion of regret
Would overcome thee? Thou wouldst say,
"So soon?

Let me go back, and suffer yet awhile
More patiently;—I have not yet praised God."
And He might answer to thee,—"Never more.
All pain is done with." Whensoe'er it comes,
That summons that we look for, it will seem Soon, yea too soon. Let us take heed in time
That God may now be glorified in us;
And while we suffer, let us set our souls
To suffer perfectly: since this alone,
The suffering, which is this world's special grace,
May here be perfected and left behind.

H. E. Hamilton King

The Cross of Jesus Christ stands unique and alone. His Cross is not our cross. Our cross is that we manifest before the world the fact that we are sanctified to do nothing but the will of God. By means of His Cross, our cross becomes our divinely appointed privilege. It is necessary to emphasise this because there is so much right feeling and wrong teaching abroad on the subject. We are never called upon to carry Christ's Cross: His Cross is the centre of Time and Eternity; the answer to the enigmas of both.

"For hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example, that ye should follow His steps" (1 Peter 2:21 RV). This is the essence of fellowship with His sufferings. He suffered for you. Are you suffering on account of someone else, or for someone else? Are your agonising prayers and suffering before the Lord on behalf of that "distressing case" because it hurts you, discomforts you, makes you long for release? If so, you are not in fellowship with His suffering, nor anything like it. But if your soul, out of love for God, longs for others and bears with them in a voluntary, vicarious way, then you have a fellowship Divine indeed.

When your work suffers eclipse do you wail before God because the work of your hands is ruined? Do you say, "I looked upon this as my lifework, now it is broken and blighted and shattered"? If so, you do not know what fellowship with His suffering means. But if, when you see men defiling the house of God, making His courts a place for traffic in worldly business, for engendering false affections, a home for vagrant beasts, you agonise before the Lord with alternate zeal and tears, then you have fellowship with Him in His sufferings. "Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake, and fill up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for His body's sake, which is the church" (Colossians 1:24 RV).

For as the sufferings of Christ abound unto us, even so our comfort also aboundeth through Christ. (2 Corinthians 1:5 RV)

That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, becoming conformed unto His death. (Philippians 3:10 RV)

This fellowship with His sufferings is a mystery only understood by the saint. But not all suffering leads to this sublime fellowship. To suffer from the hatred of men, to be separated from their company, to be reproached of men, to be considered as having an evil name, is not necessarily to have fellowship with His sufferings. We only have fellowship with Him if we suffer "for the Son of man's sake." To suffer martyrdom, to lose your life, to leave father and mother, houses and lands, is not to have fellowship with His sufferings unless it is done because of Him and for His sake.

This same thing thins the ranks of the suffering ones who claim fellowship with Him, and it humbles us to the dust. To drink of His cup, to be baptised with His baptism, is a thing so rare that few of us ever see it, or enter into it. Have you begun the solitary way with Him and has the clamour of father or mother made you quail? or does love for them pale into insignificance before your love for Him? Does wife arise, and with face and hands too tender, seek to prevent you from your course for Him? or does your love for Him in that supreme moment rise so high that your love for her appears hatred in comparison? Have your children's baby fingers bowed your head to earth again? or has your love for Him prevailed, and commending them, bone of your bone, and flesh of your flesh, to God, have you gone forth? Have brothers and sisters scathed and scandalised you, shamed you by their just and righteous indignation? or has love for Him prevailed even over that? Has self-culture impeded your solitary way with Him? or has love for Him been so passionate that you love not your own life? Then you have become a disciple of Jesus indeed.

All this is not yet fellowship with His sufferings; it is the first lesson learned towards that fellowship: "If any man cometh unto Me, and hateth not his own father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple" (Luke 14:26 RV). "Doth this cause you to stumble? . . . From that time [KJV] many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him. Jesus said therefore unto the twelve, Would ye also go away?" (John 6:61, 66–67 RV).

Oh, the sublimity of the suffering that gains us fellowship with Jesus!

To abandon all, to strip one's self of all, in order to seek and follow Jesus Christ naked to Bethlehem, where He was born, naked to the hall where He was scourged, and naked to Calvary where He died on the cross, is so great a mystery that neither the thing, nor the knowledge of it, is given to any but through faith in the Son of God.

John Wesley

Wherever this finds you, my beloved sister or brother, can you hear, in imagination at least, our Lord say to you at the last, knowing all, "Well done, good and faithful servant"?

But if Himself He come to thee, and stand Beside thee, gazing down on thee with eyes That smile, and suffer; that will smite thy heart, With their own pity, to a passionate peace; And reach to thee Himself the Holy Cup (With all its wreathen stems of passion-flowers And quivering sparkles of the ruby stars), Pallid and royal, saying, "Drink with Me"; Wilt thou refuse? Nay, not for Paradise! -The pale brow will compel thee, the pure hands Will minister unto thee; thou shalt take Of that communion through the solemn depths Of the dark waters of thine agony, With heart that praises Him, that yearns to Him The closer through that hour. Hold fast His hand, Though the nails pierce thine too! take only care Lest one drop of the sacramental wine Be spilled, of that which ever shall unite Thee, soul and body to thy living Lord!

For the glory and the passion of this midnight I praise Thy name, I give Thee thanks.

O Christ!

Thou that hast neither failed me nor forsaken, Through these hard hours with victory overpriced; Now that I too of Thy passion have partaken, For the world's sake called, elected, sacrificed.

Thou wast alone through Thy redemption-vigil, Thy friends had fled;

The angel at the garden from Thee parted, And solitude instead

More than the scourge, or cross, O tender-hearted, Under the crown of thorns bowed down Thy head.

But I, amid the torture, and the taunting, I have had Thee!

Thy hand was holding my hand fast and faster, Thy voice was close to me

And glorious eyes said, "Follow Me, Thy Master, Smile as I smile thy faithfulness to see."

(c) Freedom in the Highest

Freedom is that implicit life which fulfils all the law of God, and transfigures the fulfilment in loving devotion. Oh, the sublimity of that Freedom in the Highest, wherein suffering has freed us from being the dupes of ourselves, of our convictions and our temperaments, and we realise that "our fellowship is with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ." Let it be said with reverence, even with bated breath, and in the atmosphere of the deepest humility, that suffering "according to the will of God" raises us to a freedom and felicity in the Highest that baffles all language to express. As ever, the only sufficient language is the language of Scripture. "If a man love Me, he will keep My word; and My Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him" (John 14:23 RV). "If any man hear My voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me" (Revelation 3:20). This is verily the apotheosis of freedom and felicity. This mirrors the incomprehensible mystery of the abiding of the Trinity in every suffering soul raised to the sublimity of fellowship. "If therefore the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed" (John 8:36 RV). "I delighted and [RV mg] sat down under His shadow with great delight, and His fruit was sweet to my taste. He brought me to the banqueting house, and His banner over me was love" (Song of Solomon 2:3-4). "To day I must abide at thy house" (Luke 19:5).

Do you know the unspeakable bliss of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit abiding with you, feasting with you, and making you one with Them? This is the sublime height of suffering "according to the will of God."

Surely we gaze now at the mystery of godliness. No wonder "angels desire to look into" these things! A poor, evilly-disposed sinner, cleansed, saved, wholly sanctified, walking as the friend of God, in communion with the Lord in suffering, and the Trinity abiding with him as Companions daily and hourly and momentarily. This truly is a height from which the soul can look into the depths of the pain that our Saviour and Sanctifier went through to bring us there. This gives us a key to understand the shame and agony, the mock trial, the Crucifixion, the Resurrection, the Ascension and Pentecost.

There is a way for man to rise
To that sublime abode;
An offering and a sacrifice,
A Holy Spirit's energies,
An advocate with God.

No wonder St. Paul prays ". . . that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you a spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him; having the eyes of your heart enlightened, that ye may know what is the hope of His calling, what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints" (Ephesians 1:17–18 RV). This is the hope of His calling; we are part of the glory of His inheritance. This unveils to our hearts an understanding of our Lord's great prayer ". . . that they may be one, even as We are one." One in holiness, one in love, one for ever with God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost.

Servants of God!— or sons Shall I not call you? because Not as servants ye knew Your Father's innermost mind, His, who unwillingly sees One of His little ones lost— Yours is the praise, if mankind Hath not as yet in its march Fainted, and fallen, and died.

Then, in such hour of need
Of your fainting, dispirited race,
Ye, like angels appear
Radiant with ardour divine.
Beacons of hope, ye appear!
Languor is not in your heart,
Weakness is not in your word,
Weariness not on your brow.
We alight in our van! at your voice,
Panic, despair, flee away.
Ye move through the ranks, recall
The stragglers, refresh the outworn,
Praise, re-inspire the brave.

Order, courage, return; Eyes rekindling, and prayers, Follow your steps as ye go. Ye fill up the gaps in our files, Strengthen the wavering line, Stablish, continue our march, On, to the bound of the waste, On, to the City of God.

Matthew Arnold¹⁷

But, marvel of marvels, the outward and visible sign of the Sublimity of Friendship and Fellowship and Freedom in the Highest is in being the humblest servant of all—"Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, being in the form of God, counted it not a prize to be on an equality with God, but emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men . . ." (Philippians 2:5–7 RV). "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples . . ." (John 13:35).

It is a strange thing, a unique thing, that in this hierarchy of suffering, those nearest the throne are willingly, eagerly, the humblest; and the King Himself is Servant of all. "But I am in the midst of you as He that serveth" (Luke 22:27 RV).

"Its way of suffering is the witness which a soul bears to itself" (Amiel). 18

The production of a saint is the grandest thing earth can give to Heaven. A saint is not a person with a saintly character: a saint is a saintly character. Character, not ecstatic moods, is the stuff of saintliness. A saint is a living epistle written by the finger of God, known and read of all men. A saint may be any man, any wastrel or vagabond, who discovering himself at Calvary, with the nature of sin uncloaked to him, lies in despair; then discerning Jesus Christ as the Substitute for sin and rising in the glamour of amazement, he cries out—"Jesus, I should be there." And to his astonished spirit, he receives justification from all his sinfulness by that wondrous Atonement. Then, standing in that great light, and placing his hands, as it were, over his Saviour's crucified hands, his feet over His crucified feet, he crucifies for ever his right to himself, and the baptises him with the Holy Ghost and fire, substituting in him a new principle of life, an identity of holiness with Himself, until he bears unmistakably a family likeness to Jesus Christ.

God, who at sundry times in manners many Spake to the fathers and is speaking still, Eager to find if ever or if any Souls will obey and hearken to his will;—

Who that one moment has the least descried him, Dimly and faintly, hidden and afar, Doth not despise all excellence beside him. Pleasures and powers that are not and that are,

Ay amid all men bear himself thereafter Smit with a solemn and a sweet surprise, Dumb to their scorn and turning on their laughter Only the dominance of earnest eyes?

This hath he done and shall we not adore him? This shall he do and can we still despair? Come let us quickly fling ourselves before him, Cast at his feet the burthen of our care,

Flash from our eyes the glow of our thanksgiving,

Glad and regretful, confident and calm, Then thro' all life and what is after living

Thrill to the tireless music of a psalm.

Yea thro' life, death, thro' sorrow and thro' sinning

He shall suffice me, for He hath sufficed: Christ is the end, for Christ was the beginning, Christ the beginning, for the end is Christ. F. W. H. Myers

THE DISCIPLINE OF PERIL

("The Discipline of Peril," Tongues of Fire, September 1914)

And when you hear of wars and disturbances, do not be scared; these have to come first, but the end is not at once. Luke 21:9 (MOFFATT)

The Discipline of Peril

Our Lord talks so much about peril and disaster and we deliberately shut our eyes and hearts and minds to it, and then when these things come, if we think at all, we are at our wits' end, we do not know what to make of them.

But these things have I told you, that when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them. (John 16:4)

This question is on the lips of people to-day: Is war of the devil or of God? It is of neither. It is of man, though God and the devil are both behind it. War is a conflict of wills, either in individuals or in nations, and just now there is a terrific conflict of wills in nations. If I cannot make my will by diplomacy bear on other people, then the last resort is war, and always will be until Jesus Christ brings in His kingdom.

The Inevitableness of Peril

War and disturbances . . . have to come first.

Our Lord insists on the inevitableness of peril. Right through His talks with His disciples, without panic and without passion and without fear, He says: "You must lay your account with this sort of thing, with war, with spite, with hatred, with jealousy, with despisings, with banishment, and with death. I have told you these things, that when they happen, you may remember that I told you of them, and not be scared."

Have we realised that the worst must happen? And yet Jesus says, "When ye hear of wars and disturbances do not be terrified." We are not only hearing of wars and commotions, they are here right enough. It is not imagination, it is not newspaper reports, the thing is here, there is no getting away from it. War, such as the history of the world has never known, has now begun.

Jesus Christ did not say, "You will understand why war has come," but "Do not be scared, do not be put in a panic." It is astonishing how we ignore what Jesus Christ tells us. He says that the nations will end in war and bloodshed and havoc; we ignore what He says, and when war does come we lose faith in God, we lose our wits and exhibit panic. The basis of panic is always cowardice.

The Impulse of Panic

Do not be scared. There is one thing worse than war, and that is sin. The thing that startles us is not the thing that startles God. We get tremendously scared when our social order is broken up, and well we may. We get terrorised by hundreds of men being killed, but we forget that there is something worse—sinful, dastardly lives being lived day by day, year in and year out, in our villages and towns—men without one trace of cleanness in their moral lives. That is worse.

How many of us in times of peace and civilisation bother one iota about the state of men's hearts towards God? Yet these are the things that produce pain in the heart of God, not the wars and the devastation that so upset us. The human soul is so mysterious that in the moment of a great tragedy men get face to face with things they never gave heed to before, and in the moment of death it is extraordinary what takes place in the human heart towards God.

Are the terrors that are abroad producing panic—panic born of cowardice and selfishness? You never saw anybody in a panic who did not grab for themselves, whether it was sugar or butter or nations. Jesus would never allow His disciples to be in a panic. The one great crime on the part of a disciple, according to Jesus Christ, is worry. Whenever we begin to calculate without God we commit sin.

"Fret not thyself, it tendeth only to evil-doing" (Psalm 37:8 RV). Face facts. Very few of us will face facts, we prefer our fictions. Our Lord teaches us to look things full in the face and He says: "When you hear of wars and disturbances, do not be scared." It is the most natural thing in the world to be scared. There is no natural heart of man or woman that is not scared by these things, and the evidence that God's grace is at work amongst us is that we do not get terrified.

Our attitude must be: "Father, I do not know what these things mean: it looks like starvation and distress, but Thou hast said, 'Do not be scared,' so I will not be; and Thou hast said, 'Let not your heart be troubled,' so I will not let it be; and I stake my confidence in Thee." That is the real testimony.

It is very easy to trust in God when there is no difficulty, but that is not trust at all, it is simply letting the mind rest in a complacent mood; but when there is sickness in the house, when there is trouble, when there is death, where is our trust in God? The clearest evidence that God's grace is at work in our hearts is that we do not get into panics.

Christian Seemliness

("Christian Seemliness," Tongues of Fire, October 1914)

And take heed to yourselves. . . . Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass. . . . (Luke 21:34, 36)

Seemliness is conduct in accordance with the highest standard recognised. Our Lord in these verses describes the character of Christian conduct in the confusion at the end of this dispensation, that is, the day in which we live.

In verse 34 Our Lord warns against the subtleties of indulgence; in verse 35 He describes the snare of war and confusion as inevitable, and in verse 36 He urges Christians to strenuously maintain their integrity.

Subtleties of Indulgence

And take heed to yourselves, lest . . . (v. 34)

The most startling thing about this verse is that the Lord should have considered it necessary to warn Christians lest they sought distraction in these times of confusion by dissipation or drunkenness.

And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares.

This verse is another indication of how our Lord will not allow Christians to build their conduct on suppositions based on ignorant innocence, but only on the revelation facts which He Himself gives. For instance, we should feel quite sure that we were not at all likely to seek distraction in these ways: but let us not forget that our Lord said, "Take heed to yourselves, lest . . ."

In this present war there have been many attempts to inculcate seemliness of conduct in the British Empire according to the highest standard of nobility accepted by our nation, and it behoves us as saints to see that we conduct ourselves according to the plan laid down for us by our Lord.

Although our Lord talks of distraction in its final stages, we must remember that He condemns it in its initial stages. The beginning of surfeiting is indifference to present conditions from self-indulgence. We must take heed that in the present calamities, when war and devastation and heart-break are abroad in the world, we do not shut ourselves up in a world of our own and ignore the demand made on us by our Lord and our fellow-men for the service of intercessory prayer and hospitality and care.

This same line of things holds good with regard to the dissipation of drunkenness and the cares of this life. The latter distraction to Christians is the most dangerous of all. A Christian must see to it that his interest in his possessions is not of such vital order that he is distracted from God in this present confusion.

Our Lord says that if these things are not heeded that day will come upon us unawares. If in that day any Christian finds himself in a panic, that is a sin which must be confessed and the burden of criminal carefulness laid at our Lord's feet, with a determination to follow a course more seemly according to God's standard for His saints.

Snare of the Inevitable

... for as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. (v. 35)

This verse states that the sudden arriving of this day of confusion will ensnare the whole world. It is not stated as a probability but as an inevitable certainty, and Christians are counselled by our Lord to lay their account with the inevitable. Civilisation and its amenities are made possible by Christianity, but they are not Christianity, and it is these amenities which ensnare and devastate in the time in which we live, and if we by unspiritual self-indulgence have been living our life in the externals, we shall be caught by this crisis and whirled into confusion.

There is a false sense of security produced by considering that there is safety in numbers, but our Lord in this verse states that the consternation will embrace "all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth," so that instead of numbers proving a security it proves an added element of terror. Have we taken heed and laid our account with these stern certainties, or are we as Christians indulging in the infatuation of any false security?

Strenuousness of Integrity

Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape. . . . (v. 36)

The striking thing about these words is that the escape is not the free gift of God, but the result of Christian integrity. This verse is positive in its counsel as the other verses are positive in their commands. The counsel is to keep awake and pray. That our Lord should think fit to counsel prayer in time of war when practical common sense would place active doing first, reveals how totally different man's conceptions are from our Lord's. Prayer seems suitable for old men and women and sentimental young people, but for all others it is apt to be looked upon as a religious weakness.

There are many things in the minds of Christians which are not yet brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. Prayer is always answered rightly by God, our Lord says; no wonder we have to keep awake and pray, for thousands of men are being hurled into eternity during this war. Are we keeping awake and praying, or are we amazed at the magnitude of the slaughter? Countries are devastated, cities are sacked, commerce is tied up, hundreds are bankrupt, millions out of work, innumerable homes are blighted and broken; are we keeping awake and praying?

When the veil is lifted we shall find that the seemly conduct of prayer wrought the things of God in men. Let us keep awake and readjust ourselves to our Lord's counsel. He counsels His children to keep alert, to be pure, to yield to no temptation to panic, to false emotion, to illegitimate gain, or to a cowardly sense of futility. We can never be where we are not, we are just where we are; let us keep alert and pray just there for His sake. Then our Lord says we shall be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man—stand, not lie, nor grovel, nor cry, but stand upright, in the full integrity of Christian manhood and womanhood before the Son of Man.

The seemliness of Christian conduct is not consistent adherence to a mere principle of peace, but standing true to Jesus Christ. Let us stop all futile wailings that express themselves in such statements as "War ought not to be." War is, and we must not waste our time or our Lord's by giving way to any surfeit of screaming invective for or against any one or any thing; but "casting down imaginations, and every high thing that is exalted against the knowledge of God" (RV) in connection with ourselves, let us face life as it is, not as we feel it ought to be, for it never will be what it ought to be until the kingdom of this world is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of His Christ.

Let us gird up our loins, watch and be sober, and behave in the seemly manner of those that look for their Lord.

Slighted Security

("Slighted Security," Tongues of Fire, November 1914)

If thou hadst known... the things which belong unto thy peace! But now they are hid from thine eyes.... Thou knewest not the time of thy visitation. (Luke 19:42, 44)

The Burdened Sense

From the end of the earth will I cry unto Thee, when my heart is overwhelmed. (Psalm 61:2)

The feeling of bewilderment, of burden and perplexity is busy with the margins of many minds to-day; although the heart remains stout in its confidence in God, yet the senses are burdened with perplexity and misgiving. We shall be wise to let these things lead us to the Rock that is higher than we are.

Incredible Things Do Happen

The kings of the earth believed not, neither all the inhabitants of the world, that the adversary and the enemy should enter into the gates of Jerusalem. (Lamentations 4:12 RV)

That ancient peril is apt to repeat itself to-day, viz., a proud arrogancy arising from intellectual confidence in God's prophetic word, irrespective of the heart's condition. God has not any favourites outside faithfulness. God's order is the beginning and the end, His permissive will is the middle. God's eternal purposes will be fulfilled, but His permissive will allows Satan, sin and strife to produce all kinds of misconceptions and false confidences until we all, individually as well as collectively, realise that His order is best. It is possible to build up a false security, as Israel and Judah did of old, based on God's own prophetic word, but which ignores heart purity and humility before Him. The destruction of a certain class of prophetic student is stated by our Lord:

Many will say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? . . . And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you. (Matthew 7:22–23)

It was not that what they prophesied was not true, but it was not participated in by any whose hearts are unregenerated by God's spirit, no matter what their nationality may be. The ancient city of Jerusalem stands for all time as the symbol of destructive infatuation based on God's word, whereas God's word is only interpreted by and fulfilled in regenerated hearts and lives.

There Is No Road Back to Yesterday

He found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears. (Hebrews 12:17)

There are irreparable things. To God alone there is no irreparable past. We are delivered from sin by our Lord Jesus Christ, but He alone is the sinless One; we can never be as though we had not sinned. The gates of Paradise were irreparably closed to Adam and Eve and were never entered again by them (cf. Revelation 2:7). ". . . the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmerworm . . ." shall be restored, but only to a regenerated community (Joel 2:25).

What we need to heed in these days of war is that the unregenerated heart can never perceive the rule of God: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:3); and that an unadjusted intellect, no matter if the heart be regenerated, will work itself untold destruction: "... in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction" (2 Peter 3:16).

We do well to insist carefully for ourselves on the fact that although the Kingdom-Revelation may be the key-word to our Lord's teaching, the key-word to the Life to which alone that teaching applies is the Cross. The disciples were not told that by the interpretation of prophecy would all men be drawn to God, but—

I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me. (John 12:32)

When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am He, and that I do nothing of Myself; but as My Father hath taught Me, I speak these things. (John 8:28)

The Bland Satisfaction

If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day . . .

The tears of the Redeemer over Jerusalem are without parallel for significance and teaching. Our Lord said to the daughters of Jerusalem, who were undergoing paroxysms of tears over Him:

Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children. (Luke 23:28)

The tears of our Lord embrace the Divine knowledge of Jerusalem's irreparable past: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee" (Matthew 23:37); the Divine knowledge of God's order: "And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband" (Revelation 21:2); and the Divine knowledge of God's permissive will: "... how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate" (Matthew 23:37–38).

It is too late now. The bland satisfaction, that smooth, mild infatuation which arises from pride and arrogance, has not only perverted her knowledge and her power of reading events, but given her a great sense of security. This is of great significance to-day.

If there is bland satisfaction in the conscience of any nation, then disillusionment and sudden destruction is certain. But are we quite free individually from this bland satisfaction? It is perilously possible to be fatally ignorant of our true relationship to things and to God, and for that ignorance to be culpable. Are we blandly satisfied that it is all right and yet we are not born from above? Are we still stiff-necked? Then sudden destruction cometh. It is too late now to mourn over our indifference, but wake up, call on God and be saved!

The Belittled Security

... the things which belong unto thy peace!

Jerusalem and Jesus! What a contrast! With what an amazed stare of contempt the personal powers of Jerusalem confronted Jesus, the despised and rejected! Yet He was their Peace for time and eternity, and the things that belonged to their peace were all connected with Him. He said to His disciples:

"These things have I spoken unto you, that in Me ye may have peace. In the world ye have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world" (John 16:33 RV). The parallels in this great European war of belittled security may be many, but our aim here is more personal. Are we belittling our own security? It is easy to do it. Just as nations place their confidence for security in armaments or arbitration (as the whim takes them) and neglect the worship of God as the only security, so individuals may easily place confidence in the amenities of society, in civilised entrenchments, in a good home and a good situation, and belittle the one abiding security—IN GOD!

To be indifferent to our Lord's claims is to belittle our security and remain in infatuation, out of which it will one day be too late to deliver us.

Rouse yourselves; it is too late now to mourn over the days and years in which you did not watch with your Lord, but wake up now!

The Blind Spot

... but now they are hid from thine eyes ... because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation.

Like Nelson,¹⁹ when he put the telescope to his blind eye that he might not see the order to retreat, so Jerusalem saw only in the direction of her prejudices. Here among them stood God Incarnate, a visitation from God Himself, but pride and arrogance and self-sufficiency blinded them and they saw Him not; they called Him "a man gluttonous, and a winebibber," they called Him "a sinner," "a Samaritan," they said that He was "beside Himself," and that He was demon-possessed. And this fatal blindness arose from merely not wanting to see certain things.

An immediate danger to-day is to apply all this to nations and to feel a sense of peculiar national security by noting the blind spot in Germany's outlook²⁰; but our aim must be to see that we have no blind spot ourselves, no spot of obtuse obstinacy which has slowly formed itself into a blind spot in which we too cannot see the day of our visitation, the day in which God is visiting us. Nay, let us apply it personally—Have I a blind spot? Am I purposely, even judiciously, blind whenever I hear anyone testifying to deliverance from sin, or to the baptism of the Holy Spirit, or to the amazing positive things that happen when God is seen?

^{19.} Horatio Nelson (1758-1805): British admiral and naval hero.

^{20.} Germany's outlook: lecture given during World War I (1914-18).

The Blessed Sense

Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see Me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord. (Matthew 23:38–39)

Just as it is too late now with regard to this war, so it is too late to mourn in futile fashion over days of sin and pride and self-interest. Just as it is certain that desolation and havoc and misery will come in the wake of this war, so it is certain that desolation and havoc are in your life because of sin. But what a day of rejoicing it will be when you say, "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord!" Why not now, in a humbling sense of confessed sin, bow down under the mighty hand of God that where sin abounded, He may make grace much more abound. God hasten the day when "the kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of His Christ" (RV).

Fitness

("Fitness," Tongues of Fire, December 1914)

I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, Who loved me and gave Himself for me. (Galatians 2:20)

There are three things in this verse about personal fitness in this day for what the Lord requires of us, all full of pressing personal importance.

- The Relinquished Life—"I am crucified with Christ"
- The Distinguished Life—"nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me"
- The Extinguished Life—"and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me"

These are three aspects of the one great theme of personal identification with our Lord.

The Relinquished Life. Fitness to Fly

"I am crucified with Christ." No one is ever united with the Lord Jesus Christ until he is willing to relinquish all of the life he held before. This does not only mean relinquishing sin, it means relinquishing the whole way of looking at things. To be born from above (RV mg) of the Spirit of God means that we must let go before we lay hold.

There are many people who believe in Jesus Christ but they have not relinquished anything, consequently they have not received anything; there is still the realisation of a life that has not been relinquished, and this great word of the Apostle Paul's is a foreign language altogether, it is not practical to them, it is "in the clouds," literally there is "nothing in it." But, blessed be the Name of God, there is something in it!

In the first stages it is a relinquishing of pretence. What our Lord Jesus Christ wants us to present to Him is not our goodness, or our honesty, or our endeavour, but our real solid sin, that is all He can take. "For He hath made Him to be sin for us, Who knew no sin." And what does He give in exchange for our solid sin? Great solid righteousness—"that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him"; but we must relinquish all pretence of being anything, we must relinquish in every way all claim to being worthy of God's consideration. That is the meaning of conviction of sin.

A word to those who have been quickened by the Spirit of God and introduced into His Kingdom—they have had their eyes opened and know something of what our Lord said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." If we can say, "I have been quickened by the Spirit and I do perceive the rule of God," then in us the Spirit of God will show what further there is to relinquish. There must be the relinquishing of my right to myself in every phase and condition of it. Am I willing to relinquish my hold on my life, my hold on all I possess, my hold on all my affections, my hold on everything? Am I willing to be God's child, and to be so identified with the death of the Lord Jesus Christ that I too know I have been crucified with Him?

There may be a sharp, painful disillusionment to go through before we do relinquish. When once a man really sees himself as the Lord Jesus Christ sees him, it is not the abominable social sins of the flesh that shock him, it is the awful nature of the pride of his own heart against the Lord Jesus Christ—the shame, the horror, the desperate conviction that comes when we realise ourselves in the light of Jesus Christ as the Spirit of God reveals Him to us. That is the true gift of repentance and the real meaning of it.

Are you hoodwinking your own soul by an intellectual comprehension of God's prophetic truth while you are perfectly unfit in moral life, in spiritual life and in domestic life, to meet Him? God grant that to-day the Spirit of God may come to you and to me and make us know whether we are living this relinquished life.

If we are going to fly, things that would prevent must not have any hold on us. Lusts of the flesh, desires of the mind, possessions, must all go. One thing we are realising to-day is that to the majority of us, civilised life is an elaborate way of doing without God. We have not been living a life hid with Christ in God, we have been living the abundance of the things which we possess. Now they are shaken, and terror, panic and mental imbecility have laid hold on people who a little while ago were very strong-minded and disdainful with regard to the phase of truth presented by the Pentecostal League of Prayer or by the Salvation Army; but the shattering of the pillars of their refuge has come. Thank God, He still leaves His mighty, winning, wooing Spirit with us. "I am crucified with Christ"—it is a real definite personal experience.

The Distinguished Life. Fitness to Fight ... nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me.

This life has marked characteristics entirely of its own. Paul is stating that the relinquished life has found him identified with his Lord, and now all the great power of God is distinguishing him as a different man from the man he was before. He does not hate what he used to hate. He used to persecute and despise the followers of Jesus Christ; he despises them no longer. Not only does he not despise them, but he is identified with them and with their Lord. After Pentecost we read that "they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus." They saw the strong, distinguished family likeness in them and recognised it at once as the Lord Jesus Christ.

One great characteristic in the life of a man whose life is hid with Christ in God is that he has received the gift Jesus Christ gives. What gift does Jesus Christ give to those who are identified with him? The gift His Father gave him, The Father gave Him the Cross, and He gives us our cross: "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me." "Let him relinquish, give up his right to himself"—distinguished by one thing, "... ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price." To take up our cross daily means that we take now what otherwise would go on to Jesus Christ. The distinguished life means that we "fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in [our] flesh for His body's sake, which is the church." That means practically the fulfilment of Matthew 11:29, "Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart." There is nothing to fill up of that which remains of the afflictions of Christ for the purposes of Redemption, that is complete; but we can fill up that which remains behind of His sufferings for His Body's sake. Are we distinguished as the ones in whom Christ lives, meeting things as He did? If so, we are fit for flying, for fighting and for following.

The Extinguished Life. Fitness for Following And the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, Who loved me, and gave Himself for me.

—that is, there is no more of the old disposition manifested in this man, Paul the Apostle. There is no "Saul of Tarsus" disposition manifested; that has been extinguished, died right out! This is much more than sin, mark you, it is all the old way of reasoning; what is manifested now, Paul says, is the faith which was in the Son of God. Do you remember what this man said— "When it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by His grace, to reveal His Son in me"? The characteristic that is manifested is the faith of the Son of God, the Lord Jesus Christ seeing the full purpose and meaning of His own life working through the Apostle Paul.

Is that altogether beside the mark? It is the practical clear direct message of God to your heart and mine to-day—a perfect fitness by the wonderful Redemption of our Lord Jesus Christ being realised in us as we relinquish.

You will find the supreme crisis in your life is "will-issues" all the time. Will I relinquish? Will I abandon? It is not that God won't make us fit, it is that He cannot. God cannot make us fit to meet Him in the air unless we are willing to let Him. He cannot make us fit as the dwellings of His Son unless we are willing, because He wants sons and daughters. If you are up against a crisis, go through with it, relinquish all, and let Him make you fit for all He requires of you in this day.

First and Last

("First and Last," League of Prayer New Years' Convention, Friday, January 1, 1915, in Pontefract, W. Yorkshire)

I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me. (John 14:6)

The words of our Lord come to one as those that alone can be welcomed on the threshold of 1915. Other people's words are too fraught with personal prejudice or clouded by personal pain to convey a message for this New Year. There are thousands of hearts and minds too distracted by this terrible war to receive with meekness any other words than those of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Way I am the way.

Thomas's depressed exclamation, "Lord, we know not whither Thou goest; and how can we know the way?" is the language of many a heart to-day, and if all the saints and all the suffering and sorrowing ones would only listen to our Lord's reply, we would all be strong to bear, and rejoicing to do in the strength of the Lord.

Our Lord said, "I am the way," not the way to any one or anything; He is not a road we leave behind us, He is the Way to the Father in which we abide (see John 15:4). He is the Way, not He was the Way, and there is not any way of living in the Fatherhood of God except by living in Christ. Whoso findeth himself in Christ findeth life. The Way to the Father is not by the law, nor by obedience, or creed, but Jesus Christ Himself, He is the Way of the Father whereby any and every soul may be in peace, in joy, and in divine courage during the days of this coming year. In any assailing tribulation our Lord says, "that in Me ye might have peace." When imagination brooding on wars and rumours of wars is apt to affright the souls of men, Christ Jesus is the Way of the Fatherhood of God, sustaining, and comforting and joyous.

To all those who are in the Way let me urge you by abiding in Jesus to let the rivers of living water pour through you to the binding up of the brokenhearted, the setting at liberty of the captives, and the proclaiming of the acceptable year of the Lord.

The Truth I am . . . the truth.

Amid all the whirling contentions and confusions produced in men's minds by what is called truth, again our Lord's word to Thomas abides, "I am . . . the truth." Truth is not a system, not a constitution, nor even a creed; the Truth is the Lord Jesus Christ Himself, and He is the Truth about the Father just as He is the Way of the Father. Our tendency is to make truth a logical statement, to make it a principle instead of a Person. Profoundly speaking there are no Christian principles, but the saint by abiding in Christ in the Way of the Fatherhood of God discerns the Truth of God in the passing moments. Confusion arises when we disassociate ourselves from our Lord and try to live up to a standard merely constructed on His word.

In John 14:8–11, our Lord distinctly says that He and the Father are one. Would that men who name the Name of Christ realised that He is the Truth, not the proclaimer of it; that He is the Gospel, not the preacher of the Gospel; that He is the Way of the Fatherhood of God. What men and women need is the "Fathering" of God, so that from all affright and fear they may be held steady by the gentleness of God, and that is only realised in Christ. Those of us who do know it have a gracious ministry to maintain, so abiding in Him that we reveal the truth as it is in Jesus in our going in and out among the devastated and distracted.

The Life I am . . . the life.

Many start this year crying to God from weariness of life that they might die. The light of their eyes has been taken from them, the prospects of life have been extinguished and all they held most dear has been shattered, and this in no sentimental but in a very real sense. Again the superb declaration of our Lord, "I am . . . the life," comes with eternal succour. He is the Life of the Father just as He is the Father's Way and the Father's Truth. "The gift of God is eternal life"; not the gift from God, as if eternal life were a present given by God: it is Himself. The life imparted by our Lord is the Life of God, and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is the visible commemoration of this ever-abiding fact. "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till He come."

Let us remember that Jesus Christ is Life, and our life, all our fresh springs are in Him (PBV),²¹ so that whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, let us do all to the glory of God. May this be a year in which those of us who are God's children manifest the life of God in our mortal flesh.

We are near the end of the present order, and the throes and weariness of exhausted turmoil are concentrated in many hearts and lives. What is needed is the Life of the Father which is ours in Jesus Christ. He said, "I am come that they might have life"; and He also said, "Ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life." Let those of us who are God's children be the conductors of the Life of God to exhausted men and women till they too are made one in Him.

The Exclusive One

No man cometh unto the Father, but by Me.

Many to-day are realising the futility of beautiful sentimental phrases about the Fatherhood of God; they are finding them beautiful untruths. The words of our Lord, "no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me," reveal the error and at the same time open the way to the Father. Our Lord Jesus Christ is the Exclusive Way to the Father. By His Cross alone a man enters into the adoption of a son of God. Our Lord did not say, "No man cometh unto God, but by Me." There are many ways of coming to God other than by the Lord Jesus Christ, but no man ever came to the Father, but by Jesus Christ. He is the Exclusive Way there, the constant active medium to our intercourse with the Father.

^{21.} PBV: Prayer Book Version. The Book of Common Prayer of the Church of England.

This war, which for a time has made men in pain say petulant, unbelieving things about the creeds that are right in theory but utterly futile in practice, has at the same time prepared their hearts for the universality of the exclusive way of Christ to the Father. He is the only Way to the Father, but it is a Way that is open to any and every man, the Way that knows "neither Greek nor Jew, . . . Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all." It is the duty and privilege of those who are Christ's to proclaim this glorious revelation with lip and life, with impassioned zeal and earnestness in the closing phases of the dispensation in which we live.

God grant that 1915 may find each one of us abiding in the Way, incorporated into the Truth, infused by the Life, and manifesting the mighty Fatherhood of God in and through our Lord Jesus Christ. In the Name that is above every name we pray that this year may be the year of the First and the Last, the Beginning and the End, Our Lord Jesus Christ.

God's Parenthesis

("God's Parenthesis," Tongues of Fire, March 1915)

Yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also. (Luke 2:35)

A parenthesis is a phrase or sentence inserted in another which is grammatically complete without it, and if you want to understand the author, pay particular attention to the parenthesis.

God puts a parenthesis in the middle flow of our lives; if you want to understand your life, read the parenthesis, if you can. There was a parenthesis in Hezekiah's life, and when he was through it, he said, "I shall go as in a solemn procession all my years." A short time after though he forgot and began to "knuckle down" and compromise with a pagan king.

Have we been paying sufficient attention to the parentheses God puts in our lives? It may have been "good fortune," it may have been "bad fortune," it may have been a delightful friendship, it may have been a heart-break. But when God sums up our lives, it is that parenthesis which really gives the heart of our life with Him.

Impaired by God

The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God. (Luke 1:35)

The Virgin Mary is not only unique as the mother of our Lord, but she stands as the type of what we must expect if we are going to be those whom our Lord calls "My brother, and sister, and mother" (Matthew 12:50).

Simeon was completely possessed, guided, and controlled by the Holy Ghost, and when he saw Mary he spoke these wonderful words:

Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel, . . . (Yea, and a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also,) that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed. (Luke 2:34–35)

When Christ is formed in us by the power of regeneration, our natural life experiences exactly the same thing, viz., a sword that we would never have had if we were not born again of God, a type of suffering that we would know nothing about if we were not born from above (RV mg), if the Son of God were not formed in us.

When the angel saluted her, Mary was amazed and staggered. After the Holy Ghost had come upon her, her life was impaired, full of embarrassment and terror. It is an abiding truth that when we are born of the Holy Ghost, instantly the life becomes impaired from every merely natural standpoint.

When we receive God's Spirit and God suddenly opens up His purpose for our lives, then when the "angel" departs we begin to realise exactly what an impaired life means if we go on with it. It means that our life will produce one or two characteristics people will sneer at, one or two characteristics people will be contemptuous over, thoroughly annoyed and angry over. It was so with Mary. The sword Simeon spoke of very soon began to pierce through her own soul.

We need to remind ourselves of the stern, heroic stuff Jesus Christ always spoke when He talked about discipleship. "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me" (Luke 9:23). Few of us do it though plenty of us talk about it. It means an impaired life:—"A sword shall pierce through thy own soul also."

You have been full of complaints these past months and have blamed everything but yourself; the reason is you were not prepared for an impaired life as far as this world was concerned. The beginnings of God's life in a man or woman are directly across the will of nature, because nature has to be transformed in your particular bodily life and mine into a spiritual life by obedience. Obedience to the Spirit of God means a maimed life, maimed in a hundred and one ways, and in the closest relationships of all (see Luke 14:26).

The Impeded Life with God

Woman, what have I to do with thee? (John 2:4)

This new life impedes us in our natural outlook and ways until we get these rightly related by putting on the new man, until the Son of God is formed in us and both the natural and the holy are the same.

The natural in us wants the Son of God to do Almighty God's work in our way. What could be better than that the Son of God should manifest the fact that He is in us? Thousands saved in a day! Ourselves transformed and held as marvellous specimens of what God can do!! Something wonderful performed at the dictates of our natural (not sinful) lives!!! We want Him to do this and that, we demand He should do it, we rush in and say, "Now this is the time," but we receive a real check from God which means that we dare not open our mouths to Him again on the subject. When our Lord's miracles are at work in us they always manifest themselves in a chastened life, utterly restrained.

Has God's parenthesis come to you by impeding some great natural impulse? You are a child of God, you started off to work for Him and expected Him to do wonderful things; in fact you demanded He should do them; then He brought you into "a corner" and you were rebuked directly by the Son of God.

Is that the parenthesis God has put in your life just now? Some purpose, some aim of yours in God's work and you were expecting Him to manifest Himself straight away by a mighty miracle, but instead there came the extinction of your naturally good impulse. Nobody heard the rebuke but you, but when the miracle was wrought you were able to understand and to listen to Him. Beware of listening to your own point of view when the Son of God has come.

The Insulated Life with God

Now there stood by the cross of Jesus His mother. . . . (John 19:25)

To insulate means to place in a detached position. The sword began to pierce very early in Mary's life, and it pierced all through. Now she stands at the Cross with her own Son, in Whom every Scripture and oracle of God has centred. He has been through His agony and His mother could do nothing for Him, she could not understand the depth of the agony of Gethsemane; now she sees Him on the Cross what happens? Jesus sees her and says, "Woman, behold thy son!" and to John, "Behold thy mother!" That is an illustration of what happens when the life of the Son of God and the full purpose of God are being worked out in us in ways we cannot understand but do not doubt.

Beware of saying, "I do not need any discipline, I am saved and sanctified, therefore everything I think is right." Nothing we think is right, only what God thinks in us is right. The Son of God revealed exactly how a man's brain and body and will were to be used if he was to live in obedience to God. Our Lord submitted His intelligence to His Father, and He submitted His will to His Father. "I came not to do Mine own will," He says over and over again.

There are great perplexities in life, but thank God, if we will trust, with the bold, implicit trust of our natural life, in the Son of God, He will bring out His perfect, complete purposes in and through our particular lives.

Are You Ever Disturbed?

("Are You Ever Disturbed?" is a talk given at a BTC devotional meeting, May 27, 1914.)

Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. (John 14:27)

Have You Ever Received in This Way?

The disciples, like many to-day, were not in a state to provide their own inner peace. There are times when inner peace is based on ignorance; but when we awake to the troubles of life, which more than ever before surge and heave in threatening billows, inner peace is impossible unless it is received from our Lord. When our Lord spoke peace, He made peace. His words are ever spirit and life. Have you ever received what He spoke?

The peace of sins forgiven, the peace of a conscience at rest with God, is not the peace that Jesus imparts. Those are the immediate results of believing and obeying Him, but it is His own peace He gives, and He never had any sins to be forgiven or an outraged conscience to appease. Have you ever received His peace? When you are right with God, receive your peace by studying in consecrated concentration our Lord Himself; it is the peace that comes from looking at His face and remembering the undisturbed condition of our Lord in every set of circumstances. "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory" (2 Corinthians 3:18).

Are you painfully disturbed just now, distracted by the waves and billows of God's providential permission, and having turned over, as it were, the boulders of your belief, you still find no well of peace or joy or comfort—all is barren? then look up and receive the undisturbedness of our Lord Jesus Christ. Above and in the facts of war and pain and difficulties He reigns, peaceful. Reflected peace is the greatest evidence that I am right with God, for I am at liberty to turn my mind to Him. If I am not right with God I can never turn my mind anywhere but on myself. "Then will I go . . . unto God my exceeding joy" (Psalm 43:4). Am I certain that God is not miserable? Then His joy will be my strength. We are changed by looking, not by introspection. The source of peace is God, not myself; it never is my peace but always His, and if once He withdraws, it is not there. If I allow anything to hide the face, the countenance, the memory, the consideration of our Lord Jesus from me, then I am either disturbed or I have a false security. "Consider Him . . . , that ye wax not weary, fainting in your souls" (Hebrews 12:3 RV). Nothing else is in the least like His peace. It is the peace of God, which passeth all understanding. Are you looking unto Jesus just now in the immediate pressing matter and receiving from Him peace? Then He will be a gracious benediction of peace in and through you.

Have You Ever Recognised in This Way?

The world means what it says, but it cannot impart. Our Lord imparts what He says, He does not give like the world does. Will I be absolutely confident in Jesus? What does it matter what happens to me? The thought ought never to bother us, the thing that ought to occupy us is setting the Lord always before us (cf. Acts 20:24). Jesus Christ imparts the Holy Spirit to me, and the Holy Spirit sheds abroad the love of God in my heart (see Romans 5:5). The peace of Jesus is not a cherished piece of property that I possess; it is a direct impartation from Him, and my enjoying His peace depends on my recognising this.

Have You Ever Remembered in This Way?

This kind of peace banishes trouble just now and presently. Our Lord says in effect, "Don't let your heart be troubled out of its relationship with Me." It is never the big things that disturb us, but the trivial things. Do I believe in the circumstances that are apt to bother me just now, that Jesus Christ is not perplexed at all? If I do, His peace is mine. If I try to worry it out, I obliterate Him and deserve what I get.

When we confer with Jesus Christ over other lives all the perplexity goes, because He has no perplexity, and our concern is to abide in Him. The reason we get disturbed is that we have not been considering Him. Lay it all out before Him, and in the face of difficulties, bereavement and sorrow, hear Him say, "Let not your heart be troubled." Let us be confident in His wisdom and His certainty that all will be well. "He abideth faithful; for He cannot deny Himself" (2 Timothy 2:13 RV). The angels' song is still the truth: "Glory to God in high heaven, and peace on earth for men whom He favours!" (MOFFATT).

Radiant in the Thick of It (Romans 8:33-39)

("Radiant in the Thick of It" is a talk given in Hawes, Yorkshire September 12, 1915, at the Sunday evening service, Wesleyan Methodist Chapel.)

In all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. (v. 37)

The Vocation of the Saint

They looked unto Him, and were radiant. (Psalm 34:5 ASV)

There are circumstances and difficulties which can only be described as "the thick of it," and in and through all such the Apostle Paul says we are to be "more than conquerors." Paul always talked from the deep centre of things, and the majority of us do not pay much attention to him until some calamity or disaster strikes us out of the shallows, then the Bible takes on a new guise and we find that it always speaks profoundly.

The vocation of a saint is to be in the thick of it "for Thy sake." Whenever Jesus Christ refers to discipleship or to suffering, it is always, "for My sake." The deep relationship of a saint is a personal one, and the reason a saint can be radiant is that he has lost interest in his own individuality and has become absolutely devoted to the Person of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? Shall God that justifieth?" (v. 33 RV mg). When once a saint puts his confidence in the election of God, no tribulation or affliction can ever touch that confidence. When we realise that there is no hope of deliverance in human wisdom, or in human rectitude, or in anything that we can do, then Paul counsels us to accept the justification of God and to stand true to the election of God in Christ Jesus. This is the finest cure for spiritual degeneration or for spiritual sulks.

"Who is he that shall condemn? Shall Christ Jesus that died . . .?" (v. 34 RV mg). "Christ died for the ungodly." Then is it a remarkable thing that after we have accepted His salvation we begin to find out our unworthiness? "Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died." Stake your confidence in Him! Let there be a real shifting of the whole centre of life into confidence in Jesus Christ.

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" (v. 35). In the confusion and turmoil of things, there is very little we can explain; things happen which upset all our calculations, but—"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" Nothing! When we know that nothing can separate us from the love of Christ, it does not matter what calamities may occur, we are as unshakeable as God's throne.

The Valley of the Shadow

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil. (Psalm 23:4)

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine . . . ?" (RV). Can we remain true to the vocation of a saint in tribulation? Think of the thousands who have had to go through tribulation during these past years—every human hope taken from them; but yet the saint with an amazing hopefulness remains radiant in the thick of it.

". . . or nakedness, or peril, or sword?" In our own day all these things are dastardly realities. Can we maintain our vocation as a saint there? Life was going on all right when suddenly we were struck by a psychological nor'wester! Paul says we have to maintain our vocation in the midst of the most desperate things that can happen in individual life.

The Vision of Slaughter

For Thy sake we are killed all the day long; we were accounted as sheep for the slaughter. (v. 36 RV)

Every man who comes to Jesus Christ has to go through the ordeal of condemnation, he has to have his beauty "consume away like a moth," and his righteousness drop from him "as filthy rags" when he stands face to face with God.

"For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities . . ."—these are things beyond our control, and they introduce painful agonies into our experience, they slaughter our hopes: "nor things present"—things present prevail, things we cannot alter; a bereavement profoundly alters life, so does a joy, or war: "nor things to come"—think of the number of bridges we have all crossed before we come to them! Things to come are always prevailing, human wisdom cannot touch them: "nor powers," there are terrific powers that move around in total disregard of us: "nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature . . ." Can we maintain our vocation in the face of every terror? Paul says we can, because he is persuaded that none of these things "shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

It all comes back to this—am I radiant in the thick of it for His sake?

THE DAY OF THE LORD

("The Day of the Lord," Tongues of Fire, May 1915)

The sun shall be changed into darkness and the moon into blood, ere the great, open Day of the Lord arrives. Acts 2:20 (MOFFATT)

The Day of the Lord is at hand, at hand:
The storms roll up the sky:
The nations sleep starving on heaps of gold;
All dreamers toss and sigh;
The night is darkest before the morn;
When the pain is the sorest, the child is born
And the Day of the Lord is at hand.

Gather you, gather you, angels of God— Freedom, and Mercy, and Truth: Come! for the Earth is grown coward and old, Come down. and renew us her youth. Wisdom, Self-Sacrifice, Daring, and Love, Haste to the battle-field, stoop from above, To the Day of the Lord at hand.

Gather you, gather you, hounds of hell—
Famine, and Plague, and War;
Idleness, Bigotry, Cant, and Misrule,
Gather, and fall in the snare!
Hireling and Mammonite, Bigot and Knave, Crawl to the battle-field, sneak to your grave,

In the Day of the Lord at hand.

Who would sit down and sigh for a lost age of gold,

While the Lord of all ages is here?
True hearts will leap up at the trumpet of God,
And those who can suffer, can dare.
Each old age of gold was an iron age too,
And the meekest of saints may find stern work to do.

In the Day of the Lord at hand.

Distraction of Nations

For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom. (Matthew 24:7)

The words of Charles Kingsley quoted above are rousingly appropriate for that day of "blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke," the Day of the Lord, so near at hand. To consider that the "flower" of the British Empire will be mown down this summer, that the "flower" of Germany is being exterminated, the "flower" of France is broken and shattered in the soil of Flanders, ²³ is really appalling. Truly it is a day of "blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke." Pictures and poems inspired by broken hearts, and the dissipation of tender and beautiful ideals, have been and are being painted and written, daring almost to blasphemy, in a realisation born of agony.

^{22.} Charles Kingsley (1819-75): English cleric and writer.

^{23. &}quot;flower" of . . . : lecture given during World War I (1914–18).

It is easy to criticise from the severe security of a crystallised orthodoxy, such conceptions, but we had better remember that the cry of the human heart, long blinded to God by the god of this age, when suddenly made to see by the alchemy of Hell in slaughter, sees with distorted and blurred vision, but beware lest we forget that such things may be the half-way expression to worship. Pray for them, you who have got better sight and clearer understanding. Our duty is to serve by intercession. In these days when there are wild interpretations of His words, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends," remember that they are His words. If in the inspiration of the terror of war, artist or poet has made the blunder of James and John when they said in early zeal that they could drink of His cup and be baptised with His baptism, why any more than these disciples should they be made out to be belittlers of the great Atonement? We who know that the love of God is revealed in that while we were yet enemies Christ died for us, ought to have more of His Spirit who redeemed us than to criticise; we are called to pray for them the effectual prayer.

Distress of Nations

Upon the earth distress of nations, in perplexity for the roaring of the sea and the billows, men expiring for fear, and for expectation of the things which are coming on the inhabited earth. (Luke 21:25–26 RV mg)

Let us not imagine that "distress of nations" is exactly war. War is the natural inspiration of a nation's challenged pride; but distress of nations is the diabolic inspiration of covetousness, leading people to revolution and mutiny and anarchy. Psalm 65:7 says, "which stilleth the roaring of the seas, the roaring of their waves, and the tumult of the peoples," and those words might well put us on to the right track for the meaning of our Lord's words quoted above—"the roaring of the sea" refers to the nations.

Those ominous mutterings before the war, those sinister sounds during the war, on the Clyde, those irregular undisciplined outbursts in neutral countries like America, and the stormy petrels which appear from time to time in Germany are all big with portent.

On Wednesday, March 3rd, 1915:—

A telegram from Berlin states that on the occasion of the second reading of the Budget for the Ministry of the Interior in the Prussian Diet, Dr. Liebnecht, the Socialist member, speaking before an almost empty House, said that the bourgeois attitude on the franchise question did not mean the democratisation of Government, but more consistent plutocratisation through plural voting.

"For the National Liberals," he said, "the war is an important economical and political business.

The democratisation of foreign and domestic policy in all states would have prevented the war.

"The only salvation for the mass of the people is an international class war. Therefore away with the hypocrisy of party peace. Forward to class war against war."

These are grave indications, and just to consider that when the "flower" of our own country, of France and Germany, are gone, who will be able to restrain the lawless mobs? Truly the words of our Lord are full of fearsome warning, "men expiring for fear."

It is also opportune here to quote Abraham Lincoln in reference to a big factor in this "distress of nations." He said this just before his assassination—

I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me, and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. Corporations have been enthroned, an era of competition in high places will follow, and the moving power of the country will endeavour to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until the wealth is aggregated in a few hands, and the Republic is destroyed.

Much is suppressed, but we as God's children have no right to be taken unawares when our Lord speaks so plainly, let us note how history fulfils the word, and watch unto prayer. Our motto ought not to be "Business as usual," or "Victory as usual," but rather "Nothing us usual."

Delivered from Nations

But watch ye at every season, making supplication, that ye may prevail to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man. (Luke 21:36 RV)

There is yet, thank God, ample opportunity for repentance and we children of God must beware of two extremes:—the one the "Jonah-mood" where indignation with God arises from the fact that God's judgements are conditional, like His promises, and just because the Ninevites repented, the conditional judgements of God which Jonah had pronounced seemed to fail. God's purpose is not so much to vindicate the word of His servants as to bring to pass His divine purpose. Now there is a type of prophetic study that is apt to produce just this hard defiant severity.

The other extreme is to refine all prophetic utterances relative to the end of this age into mere spiritualised imagery, and to deify the emotions of human interest. "The Day of the Lord" is an awful joy in the Scripture use of the phrase, for it is the final vindication of Goodness and the final establishment of righteousness.

Do not be ignorant of our times, "look up." Let intercession entrench itself in all our plans for those in the trenches, enwheel the vessels and embrace them below, above and around; let intercession ascend the heavens and guard the airy premise's. For it is not peace that is to be born of this war, but the Day of the vengeance of our God, the drawing nigh of Redemption.

And He saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor: therefore His own arm brought salvation unto Him, and His righteousness, it upheld Him. (Isaiah 59:16 RV)

Devotion in Nations

Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man. (Luke 21:36)

The "escape" in that verse must be interpreted in its evangelical context, namely, it must be made to convey the idea, not of saving "one's skin," because it is a word of our Lord's, and He never taught such self-preservation, but escape must be made to mean deliverance from all personal forms of selfish remembrance, and to "stand before the Son of man" undisturbed, with the "heart at leisure from itself to soothe and sympathise," and with ample power to give to others through God's good grace.

You who know by His revelation in the words of the Bible, that the earth is the Lord's and His saints, and that human world systems have foisted themselves, so to speak, on God's earth and these must pass by cataclysms or otherwise because there is nothing eternal in them, and then the meek shall inherit the earth. Surely in the "blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke" we may be accounted worthy to escape from it all standing before the Son of man unsullied and uncompromised, devoted directors and helpers together with Him!

THE DISCIPLINE OF PRAYER

Introduction

The following quotation will suggest the right background for this introduction:

In the East the following phenomenon is often observed. Where the desert touches a river-valley or oasis, the sand is in a continual state of drift from the wind, and it is this drift which is the real cause of the barrenness of such portions of the desert at least as abut upon the fertile land. For under the rain, or by infiltration of the river, plants often spring through the sand, and there is sometimes promise of considerable fertility. It never lasts. Down comes the periodic drift, and life is stunted or choked out. But set down a rock on the sand, and see the difference its presence makes. After a few showers, to the lee-ward side of this some blades will spring up; if you have patience, you will see in time a garden. How has the boulder produced this? Simply by arresting the drift.

George Adam Smith¹

And a man shall be as an hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. Isaiah 32:2

Our Lord Jesus Christ is just that rock to God's children.

He personally stays the drift of arduous Christian activities, of insidious mental scepticisms, of intuitive uncertainties, and produces a sanctuary within which abide perennial inspiration and wonderful ways to imitate.

How many cease from praying by indiscernible, unconscious ways! They are not those who because of intellectual barriers have determined on prayerlessness, or who have abandoned praying in favour of a cherished sin, but those who have ceased praying by more indecipherable ways. The life of God in us is manifested by spiritual concentration, not by pious self-consciousness; pious self-consciousness produces the worship of prayer, which is anti-Christian. This unscriptural piety fixes itself on the actual incidents in such verses as Mark 1:35—"And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, He went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed," and disproportionately emphasises "rising up a great while before day," implying that if this actual early rising were imitated it would produce Christ-likeness in us; whereas our Lord prayed because He was concentrated on God; that is, He did not worship prayer.

There are sure to be resurgent, periodic drifts of scepticism destructive of all such unrobust, pious sentimentality, because the worshipping of prayer is not of the nature of reality, for spiritual effects are thus construed into spiritual causes; as if a "gift of prayer" were the cause of Christ-likeness, it may be the cause of devotion, but it is the gift from prayer that matters, and this is the outcome of Christian concentration.

The intellectual desire to explain and thereby command is part of our natural inheritance, but it will turn into a tyrannic dictator if not kept strictly in its place as an instrument of the life of man and not the life itself; this can only be done by obedience (see Romans 12:2). The intellectual desire to dominate by explanation has so largely prevailed that prayer has become a mere borderland exercise of natural intelligence, wherein it is explained that prayer is the "reflex action" of a particular individual with the "God of All."

It is absurd to imagine anyone trying to think how they will live before they are born, yet it is this absurdity which the intellect tries to perform in connection with prayer. If the dominion of intellectual explanation is the characteristic of a naturally cultured life, dominion by obedience is the characteristic of the spiritually disciplined life. Intellectual expression in life is the effect of a naturally educated life, but is not the cause of the life; and the Christian experience of prayer is not its own cause, but the effect of the life of God in me. Prayer is the instrument of the life of worship, it is not worship itself. Intellect and prayer are united in the saint in the consciousness of Christ which we share, consequently the consciousness of self-realisation is a perversion and a snare. Our spiritual certainty in prayer is God's Divine certainty, not a side eddy of sanctimoniousness.

O patient, patient God,
Misprized, profaned God,
Grieved and wounded God,
Dooming and quickening God,
We weary of the victim faint,
The hero martyr, peasant saint,
Who stirs our love but leaves our taint,
Is balm but never rod,
Nor rends our last green sod,

^{1.} George Adam Smith (1856-1942): Scottish Old Testament scholar.

Or tombs restraint.
We crave the Eternal Holy Son,
Earth's Lord and Hell's, the Living One,
Straight from His Cross, His Grave, His Throne.
With a world-pardon all our own;
With sacramental immanence
Transcending our abased sense;
With eyes of flame at which we fall
Dead men, till He out life recall,
And be Our Life, our All in all.
With all the Church's faithful folk,
This Lord, this Spirit, we invoke.

In order to present this study on the Discipline of Prayer in as direct a way as possible, it is put under headings.

The Position of Prayer

Also, when you pray, you must not be like the hypocrites, for they like to stand and pray in the synagogues and at the street-corners, so as to be seen by men; I tell you truly, they do get their reward. When you pray, go into your room and shut the door, pray to your Father who is in secret, and your Father who sees what is secret will reward you. Do not pray by idle rote like pagans, for they suppose they will be heard the more they say; you must not copy them; your Father knows your needs before you ask Him. (Matthew 6:5–9 MOFFATT)

This general heading indicates that it is important to notice that in the New Testament, and in the life of our Lord, prayer is not so much an acquired culture as the implicit nature of the spiritual life itself. Outside the New Testament prayer is apt to be presented as something entirely acquired, something placed in the position of a meritorious decoration for valiant service in piety. In other words, the position we are apt to give to prayer is too consciously an attainment of communion, and thus it is presented out of all proportion, so that in times of spiritual declension we are inclined to place the need of prayer instead of penitent approach to God in the forefront.

Yet Thou art oft most present, Lord,
In weak distracted prayer;
A sinner out of heart with self
Most often finds Thee there.
For prayer that humbles, sets the soul
From all illusions free,
And teaches it how utterly,
Dear Lord, it hangs on Thee.

Frederick W. Faber

The Place of Prayer

Pray without ceasing. (1 Thessalonians 5:17)

There is a quietism of devotional self-indulgence which takes the place spiritually that loafing does socially. It is easy to call it meditative prayer, but meditation is only attained in actual life by the strenuous discipline of brooding in the centre of a subject. God gives of His abundant grace and the Divine fire of instinctive inspiration, but we must acquire the technical skill of expressing that genius of God in our life. There are spiritual loafers who are painfully impressionable about "tones" and "moods" and "places," and they remind one of the aesthetic affectation of many persons who have not enough of the artist in them to work arduously and overcome technical difficulties, so they live a life of self-indulgent sentimental artistic indolence. An artist is never consciously artistic, and a saint is never consciously a praying one. A saint endeavours consciously and strenuously to master the technical means of expressing God's life in himself. The place of prayer in the New Testament is just this one of severe technical trying in which spiritual sympathies are sustained in unsecular strength, and manifested in the vulgar details of actual life.

The Platform of Prayer

Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus. (Hebrews 10:19)

Prayer does not bring us into contact with the rationality of human existence but into accordance with eternal Reality. The great Reality is Redemption, and Redemption is the platform of prayer. The historic fact of the Death of Jesus is Redemptive Reality brought to us as a fact which creates belief in itself. Let Hebrews 10:19 be realised, and many pietistic perils of the devotional life will never appear again. Reality is not in intellect, or intuitions, but in the conscience reacting to Redemption, that is, through the whole nature. We are based on the platform of Reality in prayer by the Atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is not our earnestness that brings us into touch with God, nor our devotedness, nor our times of prayer, but our Lord Jesus Christ's vitalising death; and our times of prayer are evidences of reaction on the reality of Redemption, so we have confidence and boldness of access into the holiest. What an unspeakable joy it is to know that we each have the right of approach to God in confidence, that the place of the Ark is our place, "Having therefore, brethren, boldness." What an awe and what a wonder of privilege, "to enter into the holiest," in the perfectness of the Atonement, "by the blood of Jesus."

The Purpose of Prayer

Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. (Philippians 4:6)

To forebode is to forbid communion with God. The child of God can never think of anything the Heavenly Father will forget; then to worry is spiritual irritability with our Lord. Prayer is the evidence that I am spiritually concentrated on God, when to fore-think is but to pray about everything, and to live in actual conditions is to be thankful in anything. Prayer is not to be used as the petted privilege of a spoiled child seeking for ideal conditions in which to indulge his spiritual propensities ad lib., the purpose of prayer is the maintenance of fitness in an ideal relationship with God amid conditions which ought not to be merely ideal but really actual. Actualities are not here to be idealised, but to be realised, while by prayer we lay hold on God and He unites us into His consciousness. The purpose of prayer is to reveal the presence of God equally present all the time in every condition.

For perfect childlike confidence in Thee;
For childlike glimpses of the life to be;
For trust akin to my child's trust in me;
For hearts at rest through confidence in Thee;
For hearts triumphant in perpetual hope;
For hope victorious through past hopes fulfilled;
For mightier hopes born of the things we know;
For faith born of the things we may not know;
For hope of powers increased ten thousand fold;
For that last hope of likeness to Thyself,
When hope shall end in glorious certainty;
With quickened hearts
That find Thee everywhere,
We thank Thee, Lord!

The Particulars of Prayer

It is of the greatest importance to think of prayer as our Lord taught in regard to it. Our Lord never referred to unanswered prayer; He taught that prayers were always answered, "For every one that asketh receiveth" (Luke 11:10). He ever implied that prayers were answered rightly because of the Heavenly Father's wisdom, "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him." (Matthew 6:8). In regard to prayer, we are apt to be apologetic and apathetic, complex and confused; yet what a splendid audacity a childlike child has! And that is what our Lord taught us to have.

I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. (Matthew 11:25)

Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. (Matthew 18:3)

We may be converted, but obviously we have too often not become as little children.

Our Motive

And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. (Matthew 6:5)

Surely there is a great glow of humour in our Lord's words, "Verily, I say unto you, They have their reward," as one who should say, "That is all there is to it." Their motive is to be "seen of men"; they are seen of men, and that is their reward, placarded "piness"! Watch your motive; is it a pose arising from a real enchantment? (the word "hypocrites" here is really "play-actors"). You very earnestly and solemnly tax your resources to be a praying person; people call at your house but cannot see you because it is your time for prayer. You perhaps have not noticed before that you always take care to tell those to whom it matters how early you rise in the morning to pray, how many all nights of prayer you spend; you have great zealousness in proclaiming your protracted meetings. This is all pious play-acting. Jesus says, "Don't do it." Our Lord did not say it was wrong to pray in the corners of the street, but He did say it was wrong to have the motive to be "seen of men." It is not wrong to pray in the early morning, but it is wrong to have the motive that it should be known. Avoid every tendency away from the simplicity of relationship to God in Christ Jesus, and then prayer will be as the breath of the lungs in a healthy body. It is at first difficult to learn a new and better way of breathing, consequently we are conscious of it for a time, but it is merely consciousness of what will by habit become an unconscious possession. So in the better and new way of breathing spiritually in prayer, we shall be conscious of forming the habit, but it will soon pass into normal spiritual health, and it must never be worshipped as a conscious process.

Our Method

But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. (Matthew 6:7)

Beware of the trick of exposition which externalises Scripture so that we teach but never learn its lessons. That means just this—we take a description from missionary literature of the heathen prayer roll with its yards of prayers that wind and unwind, and we dextrously show how futile and pathetic this is, and so on, and by our very method remove it from its home-coming benefit. Let the words come home to us personally in their New Testament setting, "But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions." Our Lord prayed the same prayer, using the same words, three times in the Garden of Gethsemane, and He gave the disciples a form of prayer which He knew would be repeated throughout the Christian centuries; so it cannot be mere repetition or the form of words that He is referring to. The latter half of the verse comes home better for personal purposes—"for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking"—that is, Do not rely on your earnestness as the ground for being heard. This is a much-needed caution because it is so subtle a thing, this thing called earnestness. As the Rev. John McNeill,² the great Scottish evangelist, said about the student of Elisha after he had lost the axe-head (2 Kings 6:1–7): "If he had been of the modern school, Elisha would have said, "Whack awa' wi' the stump, mon; earnestness is everything!" Earnestness is not by any means everything; it is very often a subtle form of pious selfidolatry, because it is obsessed with the method and not with the Master. The phrase "pray through" often means working ourselves up into a frenzy of earnestness in which perspiration is taken for inspiration. It is a mistake to think we are heard on the ground of our earnestness; we are heard on the ground of the evangelical basis, "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus" (Hebrews 10:19).

Our Manner

After this manner therefore pray ye. (Matthew 6:9)

(At this particular point we are not dealing with what is known as the "Lord's Prayer"; that is dealt with subsequently).

Our Lord wishes us to understand that all morbid excesses must be cut off, and the simple personal relationship allowed to react. When we pray, remember we pray to a Person, "Our Father," not to a tendency, or for the resulting reflex action; and we pray for particular personal needs, which are universal. "Daily bread," "debts," "debtors," deliverances (verses 11–13), and we pray as citizens of a universal spiritual kingdom—"Thine is the kingdom" (verse 13), and the manner is bald, simple, but absolutely spiritual.

All through our Lord implies discipleship, or what we understand by an experience of regeneration. In other words, His Death is the gateway for us into the life He lives and to which His teaching applies. Therefore to take our Lord's teaching and deny the need to be born from above (RV mg), is to produce a mockery, born of the very desire to do the opposite.

This section is presented as a stirring up and away from sentimental religiosity which is injurious to a degree that becomes immoral, because it unfits for life instead of equipping for life, the life that is ever the result of our Lord's life in us.

The Pattern Prayer

Let this be how you pray: "our Father in heaven, Thy name be revered, Thy Reign begin, Thy will be done on earth as in heaven! give us to-day our bread for the morrow, and forgive us our debts as we ourselves have forgiven our debtors, and lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil." (Matthew 6:9–13 MOFFATT)

(This translation may serve to rouse complacent attention to re-examine the very familiar form of words.)

This pattern prayer is our Lord's lesson on prayer in answer to a prayer: Luke 11:1-"One of His disciples said unto Him, Lord, teach us to pray." It is well to remember that our Lord's disciples were used to prayer and religious exercises from their earliest childhood, but contact with Jesus produced in them the realisation of the reality of free prayer other and beyond the liturgical form. How similar is our condition: after we have received spiritual quickening and illumination from our Lord, our eloquence falters, our coherent praying falters into an unsyllabled lack of utterance, and in utter confusion of mind and chaos of spirit we come as helpless babes to our Father with the first prayer, "Lord, teach us to pray," and He teaches us the alphabet of all possible prayer. This sense of utter impoverishment spiritually is a blessed pain because it is pain that takes us to God and His gracious rule and kingdom. "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven" (Matthew 5:3).

Presentation of Ideas

After this manner therefore pray ye. (Matthew 6:9)

How blessed it is to begin at the beginning, spiritual minors, stripped of our rich and verbal devotional language, and impoverished into receptive teachableness. Let our minds, made fertile by reason of genuine humility, receive the ideas our Lord presents in this familiar pattern prayer; receive in wonder and reverence the simple idea of God's personal relationship to us, "Our Father." "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him" (verse 8). Our Father gathers us near Him in the secret place alone with our fears and apprehensions and foolishnesses and aspirations, and He rewards us. When we talk about the Fatherhood of God, let us remember that the Lord Jesus is the exclusive way to the Father. That is not an idea to be inferred, but to be received:

^{2.} John McNeill: late-nineteenth-century Scottish evangelist brought to faith in Christ through the preaching of D. L. Moody.

"No man cometh unto the Father, but by Me" (John 14:6). We can get to God as Creator apart from Jesus Christ (see Romans 1:20), but never to God as our Father saving through Him. Let us receive this inspired idea of our Lord's right into our inmost willing heart, believe it, and pray in the confidence of it.

Again, let us receive the idea of praying about our Personal Requirements. What topics our Lord suggests! What emancipation and joy come to us when we receive the revelation from our Lord Himself that we pray about things which naturally we take as animals, trusting to our wits and instinct and intuition. How many of us are like the Psalmist of old who wrote a paragraph of autobiography in the words, "So foolish was I, and ignorant: I was as a beast before Thee" (Psalm 73:22). He does not mean an immoral beast, but just as a beast of the field taking its fill without the slightest apprehension of God. When we ask "grace before meat" let us remember that it is not to be a mere pious custom, but a real reception of the idea of Jesus that God enables us to receive our daily bread from Him. I sometimes wonder if there would be as much chronic indigestion as there is if we received our ideas from God as Jesus would have us do.

Again, let us receive the idea of the Personal Rule of our Lord, "Thy kingdom come" (verse 10). This does not mean bringing to Christian discipleship our natural ideas of the kingdom, but receiving our Lord's idea of the Kingdom, or Rule, or Realm of God, a heavenly and eternal kingdom, which will only be established on earth as it is in heaven by our willing reception and reverence.

Presentation of Language

When ye pray, say, Our Father which art in heaven.... (Luke 11:2)

Words are full of revelation when we do not simply recall or memorise them but receive them. Receive these words from Jesus—"Father," "heaven," "Hallowed be Thy Name," "kingdom," "will," there is all the vocabulary of the Deity and Dominion and Disposition of Almighty God in relation to men in these words. Or take the words—"bread," "forgiveness," "debts," "temptation," "deliverance," "evil," in these words the primary psychological colour which portray the perplexing puzzles and problems of personal life, are all spelled out before our Father.

Or, lastly, look at such words as "power," "glory," "for ever," "Amen," —in them there sounds the transcendent triumphant truth that all is well, that God reigns and rules and rejoices, and His joy is our strength. What a rapturous grammar class our Lord Jesus conducts when we go to His school of prayer and learn of Him!

Presentation of Faith

Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. (Matthew 6:10)

It is not that our Lord gives us original thoughts, but that He gives spontaneous original life to all who receive from Him. Our Lord's very words, repeated by a simple receiver of His tuition, create the faith required for Christian perseverance. Receiving from Jesus and requesting Almighty God in obedience to Him, enables God, so to speak, to create the actual things prayed for. Faith worked out in this way is submissive, but how we miss the meaning of the New Testament words if we take them etymologically only, instead of in their evangelical accidence. Submission, for instance, means etymologically, surrender to another, but in the evangelical sense it means that I conduct myself actually among men as the submissive child of my Father in heaven.

There is an illustration of this subject in the pattern prayer: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses" (Matthew 6:14–15).

The forgiveness of a child of God is not placed on the ground of the Atonement of our Lord, but on the ground that the child of God shows the same forgiveness to his fellows that God his Father has shown to him.

This is submission and perseverance and faith all worked into an intensely humble, sensible, actual, human life. We are delivered from sin that we might actually live as saints amongst men who treat us as we once treated our Heavenly Father. Let us, with chastened and delighted hearts and lips, thank God that He has taught us in the pattern prayer of our Father, our Fellowship, and our Faith.

Oh, long and dark the stairs I trod, With stumbling feet to find my God:

Gaining a foothold bit by bit, Then slipping back and losing it:

Never progressing, striving still, With weakening gasp and fainting will,

Bleeding to climb to God: while He Serenely smiled, unnoting me.

^{[*} Even if this clause is not in any of the oldest MSS., it is so universally used in the Christian Church that it is not wise to miss it.—This footnote is part of Chambers' original book.]

Then came a certain time when I Loosened my hold and fell thereby.

Down to the lowest step my fall, As if I had not climbed at all.

And while I lay despairing thereby.
I heard a footfall on the stair,

In the same path where I, dismayed, Faltered and fell and lay afraid.

And lo! when hope had ceased to be, My God came down the stairs to me.

Private Prayer

When you pray, go into your room and shut the door, pray to your Father who is in secret, and your Father who sees what is secret will reward you. (Matthew 6:6 MOFFATT)

This verse presents our Lord's Recommendation and His Revelation.

Our Lord's Recommendation naturally presents itself in these ways: A disciple should have a Special Habit, a Selected Place, a Secret Silence, and a disciple should Strenuously Pray; and our Lord's Revelation naturally presents itself in these ways: The Father's Discerning Disposition, and Delighted Doings. So we will construe all we have to consider according to this outline.

A Disciple Should Have a Special Habit But thou, when thou prayest . . .

Beware of the impression that could be expressed something like this—"But it is so difficult to get time." Of course it is, we have to make time, and that means effort, and effort makes us conscious of the need to re-organise our general ways. It will facilitate matters to remember, even if it humbles us, that we take time to eat our breakfast and our dinner, etc. Most of the difficulty in forming a special habit is that we will not discipline ourselves. Read carefully this quotation from Professor William James's brilliant textbook of psychology,³ and apply it to the matter of prayer:

The great thing, then, in all education, is to make our nervous system our ally instead of our enemy. It is to fund and capitalise our acquisitions, and live at ease upon the interest of the fund. For this we must make automatic and habitual, as early as possible, as many useful actions as we can, and guard against the growing into ways that are likely to be disadvantageous to us, as we should guard against the plague. . . . The first (maxim) is that in the acquisition of a new habit, or the leaving off of an old one, we must take care to launch ourselves with as strong and decided an initiative as possible. . . . The second maxim is: Never suffer an exception to occur till the mew habit is securely rooted in your life. . . . A third maxim may be added to the preceding pair: Seize the very first possible opportunity to act on every resolution you make, and on every emotional prompting you may experience in the direction of the habit you aspire to gain.

Let us apply that lesson now right away to ourselves, and take our Lord's advice home until it becomes character. You say you cannot get up early in the morning; well, a very good thing to do is to get up in order to prove that you cannot! This does not contradict at all what has already been said, viz., that we must not put earnestness in the place of God; it means that we have to understand that our bodily mechanism is made by God, and that when we are regenerated He does not give us another body, we have the same body, and therefore the way we use our wits in order to learn a secular thing is the way to learn any spiritual thing. "But thou, when thou prayest"—begin now.

A Disciple Should Have a Selected Place enter into thy closet . . .

Did you ever say anything like this to yourself, "It is so difficult to select a place?" What about the time when you were in love, was it impossible to select a place to meet in? No, it was far from impossible; and beware of self-indulgence. Think how long our Lord has waited for you; you have seen Him in your visions, now pray to Him; get a place, not a mood, but a definite material place and resort to it constantly, and pray to God as His Spirit in you will help you. Bring to earth the promised life you have longed for, curb your impulsive undisciplined wayward nature to His use, and rule in your body like a king where now, even in strength and honesty, you walk sentenced to be a prey to baser and less spiritual things. Do not say, "If I only had so and so;" you have not got so and so; but you can, if you will, select a place where you are actually. We can always do what we want to do if we want to do it sufficiently keenly. Do it now, "enter into thy closet"; and remember, it is a place selected to pray in, not to make little addresses in, or for any other purpose than to pray in, never forget that.

A Disciple Should Have a Secret Silence and when thou hast shut thy door . . .

^{3.} Principles of Psychology, 1890; William James (1842-1910): American philosopher, psychologist, and teacher.

"It is so difficult to get quiet," you say, What about the time when you were ill? Oh, it can be done, but you must know how to shut the door. Remember the devil may not know what you know until you tell him, so do not say to your friends, or your household, or your landlady, as the case may be, "I am just going to pray," that's too much like the play-acting we have already been warned about. No, it is to be a selected place, a secret shut-in place, where no one ever guesses what you are doing. Quietists and Mystics are inclined to grave danger, but they say and write some very fine things. For instance, Molinos⁴ says this, and it is exactly suitable for being quiet in the shut-in place:

The way of inward peace is in all things to be conformed to the pleasure and disposition of the divine will. Such as would have all things succeed and come to pass according to their own fancy, are not come to know this way, and therefore lead a harsh and bitter life, always restless or out of humour, without treading in the way of peace which consists in a total conformity to the will of God.

There is another vital moral matter mentioned in Matthew 5:23–24: "Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."

If you have incurred a debt and not paid it, or cared about paying it, or have spoken in the wrong mood to another, or been vindictive—these and similar things produce a wrong temper of soul and you cannot pray in secret, it is no use trying to pray until you do what the Lord says. The one thing that keeps us from doing it is pride, and pride has never yet prayed in the history of mankind.

I walk down the Valley of Silence,
Down the dim voiceless valley alone,
And I hear not a sound of a footstep
Around me but God's and my own,
And the hush of my heart is as holy
And bowers whence angels have flown.
In the hush of the Valley of Silence,
I hear all the songs that I sing,
And the notes float down the dim Valley
Till each finds a word for a wing
That to men like the dove of the deluge,
The message of peace they may bring.

A Disciple Should Strenuously Pray pray to thy Father which is in secret . . .

The objection is easily brought forward: "It is so difficult to concentrate one's thought," yet what about the time you were working for that position, or to pass that examination? All our excuses arise from some revealing form of self-indulgence. To pray strenuously needs careful cultivation. We have to learn the most natural methods of expressing ourselves to our Father. In the beginning we may clamour for presents and for things, and our Father encourages us in these elementary petitions until we learn to understand Him better; then we begin to talk to Him in free reverent intimacy, understanding more and more His wonderful nature. "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him" (Matthew 6:8).

The real reason for prayer is intimacy of relation with our Father. There are many ways that help. Let me give some out of my own experience, although it is unsatisfactory to do this because others are apt to imitate instead of assimilate. To re-write the Psalms into a free language of expression of one's own has proved to me a valuable treasure-house of self-expression to God. At times, though very rarely, I like a horology such as Bishop Andrews' Devotions; but I find a most beneficial exercise in secret prayer before the Father, is to write things down so that I see exactly what I think and want to say. Only those who have tried these ways know the ineffable benefit of such strenuous times in secret.

Lord, what a change within us one short hour Spent in Thy presence will prevail to make, What heavy burdens from our bosoms take, What parched grounds refresh as with a shower! We kneel, and all around us seems to lower; We rise, and all, the distant and the near Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear; We kneel, how weak, we rise how full of power. Why therefore should we do ourselves this wrong Or others that we are not always strong, That we are ever overcome with care That we should ever weak or heartless be Anxious or troubled, when with us is Prayer And joy and strength and courage are with Thee?

Richard Chenevix Trench

Such, then, are our Lord's recommendations for Private Prayer, now let us look at His Revelation regarding Private Prayer.

The Father's Discerning Disposition and thy Father which seeth in secret . . .

The revelation here is of the free kingdom of love; there is no blind creaturely subjection to a Creator, ^{4.} Miguel de Molinos (1640-97): Spanish theologian and author of A Spiritual Guide (1675).

but the free kingdom in which the one who prays is conscious of limit only through the moral nature of the Father's holiness. It is a revelation of pure joyousness in which the child of God pours into the Father's bosom the cares which give pain and anxiety that He may solve the difficulties. Too often we imagine that God lives in a place where He only repairs our broken treasures, but Jesus reveals that it is quite otherwise; He discerns all our difficulties and solves them before us. We are not beggars on the one hand or spiritual customers on the other; we are God's children, and we just stay before Him with our broken treasures or our pain and watch Him mend or heal in such a way that we understand Him better.

The Father's Delighted Doings

... shall reward thee openly.

Think of the unfathomable bliss of the revelation that we shall perceive our Father solving our problems, and shall understand Him; it is the reward of the joyous time of prayer. In all the temptations that contend in our hearts, and amidst the things that meet us in the providence of God which seem to involve a contradiction of His Fatherhood, the secret place convinces us that He is our Father and that He is righteousness and love, and we remain not only unshaken but we receive our reward with an intimacy that is unspeakable and full of glory.

Give me the lowest place, not that I dare
Ask for the lowest place, but Thou hast died
That I might give and share
Thy glory by Thy side.

Give me the lowest place, or if for me That lowest place too high, make one more low Where I may sit and see My God and love Thee so.

Public Prayer

I tell you another thing: if two of you agree on earth about anything you pray for, it will be done for you by my Father in heaven. For where two or three have gathered in My name, I am there among them. (Matthew 18:19–20 MOFFATT)

These words are so simple, and so remarkable for guidance and instruction regarding public prayer meetings, that our departure from their counsel is a great mystery. It is comparatively easy to think or say apt things about private prayer, but it is not so easy to say things about public prayer, the reason probably being that few of us are willing to carry the cross of public prayer, or at least if we do, we repeat aloud to a large extent our own private concerns, which are much better told in secret and alone. It is easier too to evade self-consciousness in private prayer; emancipation from self-consciousness is like a deliverance from a terrible sickness, and one gets rather alarmed at the slightest symptom of it again. Probably this is the reason why many Christians, who ought to be the strength and safeguard of a public prayer meeting in a community of Christians, are not so; they keep silent and just one or two who have merely the gift of devotional language are allowed to dominate the prayer meeting; and the midweek prayer meeting is given up and becomes the midweek service. We must remember that there is a sacrifice of prayer as well as a sacrifice of praise.

In the words of Matthew 18:19–20, Our Lord conveys simple and plain guidance in regard to the Arrangement and the Atmosphere of a Public Prayer Meeting.

The Arrangement of the Public Prayer Meeting

It is never easy to pray in public, and so few of us are willing to have our nervous equilibrium upset for the sake of fulfilling a request of our Lord's, but why should not our nervous equilibrium be upset? Why should many public prayer meetings be ruined by the long-winded brother who does not really pray but discourses on theology and insists on doctrine? We all mourn this abuse of the public prayer meeting, it is a contemptible thing because it usurps the time of the saints; yet the real rebuke ought to lie at the door of the humble saints who should pray when the opportunity is given, and thus allow no occasion to the enemy.

Agreement in Purpose on Earth

Again I say unto you, That if two of you shall agree on earth...

We need to know this simple, direct truth about praying in public. It is perilously easy to make public prayer the mere fringe of devotion to what we are pleased to think of as the real centre of the meeting. Agreement in purpose on earth must not be taken to mean a predetermination to agree together to storm God's fort doggedly till He yields. It is far from right to agree beforehand over what we want, and then go to God and wait, not until He gives us His mind about the matter, but until we extort from Him permission to do what we had made up our minds to do before we prayed; we should rather agree to ask God to convey His mind and meaning to us in regard to the matter. Agreement in purpose on earth is not a public presentation of persistent begging which knows no limit, but a prayer which is conscious that it is limited through the moral nature of the Holy Ghost. It is really "symphonising" on earth with our Father Who is in heaven.

Asking in Prayer on Earth

as touching any thing that they shall ask . . .

It is a very important matter of instruction to be guided in our asking in public, and to facilitate this end it is better to have numbers of short prayers than a few long ones, and numbers of short prayers not on the same subject, but on many subjects, so that the whole meeting may agree with the petitioners. There are many simple helps in this matter, such as the leader of the meeting suggesting topics, or asking the people themselves to quote a verse of Scripture, or anything that will enable the people to pronounce aloud the request that is in their heart. It is never necessary in a public prayer meeting for one to present all the petitions as it is in a public service; there one man has to make the presentation in prayer of the needs of the congregation, and of the much larger sphere of men; but that is public worship. As in private matters, our Lord's instruction on public prayer is essentially simple.

Public Prayer Is Answered in Particular from Heaven

... it shall be done for them of My Father which is in heaven.

This reminds us very forcibly of our Lord's statement, viz., that "every one that asketh receiveth" (Luke 11:10). Prayer to the natural man who has not been born from above (RV mg) is so simple, so stupid, and so supernatural as to be at once "taboo." Strange to say, the reasons he gives for objecting to prayer are the very reasons that give it its true nature. Prayer is simple, as simple as a child making known its wants to its parents (see Matthew 11:25); prayer is stupid, because it is not according to common sense; it is certain that God does things in answer to prayer, and this, common sense naturally says, is ridiculous (see James 5:16); prayer is supernatural because it relies entirely on God (1 John 5:14–15).

Let us then go into the hearty cultivation of public prayer, making our requests known before one another as well as before God, and thus securing the answers in particular from Heaven.

The Atmosphere of the Public Prayer Meeting

Atmosphere is not only something assimilated, but something we help to produce, and is both subjective and objective. To ask the Spirit of God to take up His abode in the atmosphere of a meeting is not at all unnecessary; the idea of "sacred places" can be easily abused, but it does not follow that there is no such thing as a sacred place. For instance, it is easier to pray in a place used only for prayer than it is to pray in a theatre.

"For where two or three are gathered together . . ." Christian secrecy when made a conscious effort is a snare and a delusion because it leads to segregation, not congregation. The "together" aspect of the Christian life is continually insisted on in the New Testament. We are raised up together, and made to "sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus" (Ephesians 2:6); we attain together, ". . . unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Ephesians 4:13), and the writer to the Hebrews warns us not to forsake "the assembling of ourselves together" (Hebrews 10:25). There is nothing of the special coterie about the Christian prayer meeting, it is not a "hole-and-corner" secret society, but a public meeting for one purpose, assembling together to pray, and the assembly must be akin to each other.

"In My Name..." this oft-repeated phrase means, "in My nature." It is a sad fact that through pique or self-opinionatedness a man sometimes finds himself and his self-love wounded in the prayer meeting with his brethren, so he separates himself and has a little prayer meeting in his own home. That is certainly not assembling together "in My Name," but is assembling together from a motive of defiance. "In My Name" refers to those who are born of the Spirit of God; the nature of God is imparted to the recipient so that when we pray in His Name we pray in His nature (cf. Romans 5:5).

"... there am I in the midst of them." A wonderful picture—a group of our Lord's children around the knees of the Heavenly Father, making their requests known in familiarity, in awe and reverence, in simplicity and confidence in Him, and in humble certainty that He is there.

Our prayers should be in accordance with the nature of God, therefore the answers are not in accordance with our nature but with His. We are apt to forget this and to say without thinking that God does not answer prayer; but He always answers prayer, and when we are in close communion with Him we know that we have not been misled.

Stir me, oh! stir me, Lord, I care not how, But stir my heart in passion for the world! Stir me to give, to go—but most to pray; Stir, till the blood-red banner is unfurled O'er lands that still in heathen darkness lie, O'er deserts where no cross is lifted high.

Stir me, oh! stir me, Lord, till prayer is pain— Till prayer is joy—till prayer turns into praise!

Stir me, till heart and will and mind—yea, all Is wholly Thine to use through all the day. Stir, till I learn to pray "exceedingly:" Stir, till I learn to wait expectantly.

Patient and Prevailing Prayer

So far we have been dealing with the aspects of prayer which are more or less easy of statement; we enter now into an aspect which is more difficult to state. Prayer is the outcome of our apprehension of the nature of God, and the means whereby we assimilate more and more of His mind.

We must here remind ourselves again of the fundamental matters of our Christian relationship, viz., that in a Christian, faith and common sense are moulded in one person by devotion to the mastership of Jesus Christ. This necessitates not conscious adherence to principles, but concentrated obedience to the Master. Faith does not become its own object, that produces fanaticism; but it becomes the means whereby God unveils His purposes to us (see Romans 12:2).

Our Lord in instructing the disciples in regard to prayer presented them with three pictures (see Luke 11:1–13; 18:1–8), and strangely puzzling pictures they are until we understand their meaning. They are the pictures of an unkind friend, an unnatural father, and an unjust judge. Like many of our Lord's answers, these pictures seem no answer at all at first, they seem evasions, but we find that in answering our inarticulate questions our Lord presents His answer to the reality discernible to conscience, and not to logic.

The Unkind Friend (Luke 11:5-8)

This is plainly a picture of what the Heavenly Father does sometimes seem to be like, and the problem our Lord faced in the minds of His disciples has to be faced by us at all times. He says, in effect, "I know that to your mind the Heavenly Father will appear at times as an unkind friend, but let Me assure you He is not; and even if He were, if you went on praying long enough, He would answer you. There is a reason which He cannot explain to you just now, because the explanation only comes through the experience of discipline which you will understand some day."

It appears as if God were sometimes most unnatural; we ask Him to bless our lives and bring benedictions, and what immediately follows turns everything into actual ruin. The reason is that before God can make the heart into a garden of the Lord, He has to plough it, and that will take away a great deal of natural beauty. If we interpret God's designs by our desires, we will say He gave us a scorpion when we asked an egg and a serpent when we asked a fish, and a stone when we asked for bread. But our Lord indicates that such thinking and speaking is too hasty, it is not born of faith or reliance on God. "Every one that asketh receiveth." Our Lord says that God the Father will give the Holy Spirit much more readily than we would give good gifts to our children, and the Holy Spirit not only brings us into the zone of God's influence but into intimate relationship with Him personally, so that by the slow discipline of prayer the choices of our free will become the preordinations of His Almighty order. When we say we have no faith, we simply betray our own case, viz., that we have no confidence in God at all, for faith is born of confidence in Him.

The Unjust Judge (Luke 18:1-8)

In this illustration our Lord recognises by implication that God does seem at times utterly powerless and unjust, but He says, in effect, "God is not unjust, He is long-suffering." Our Lord does not attempt to answer our questions on our level, He lifts us up to His level and allows us to make no excuse for not continuing in prayer. The battle in prayer is against two things in the earthlies: wandering thoughts, and lack of intimacy with God's character as revealed in His word. Neither can be cured at once, but they can be cured by discipline. In mental work it takes time to gain the victory over wandering thoughts; they do not come necessarily through supernatural agents, but through lack of concentration. Concentration is only learned little by little, and the more impulsive you are, the less concentrated you will be. So when wandering thoughts come in in prayer, don't ask God to forgive you, but stop having them. It is not a bit of use to ask God to keep out wandering thoughts, you must keep them out. And in regard to God's word, see you take time to know it; God's Spirit will give you an understanding of His nature, and make His word spirit and life to you.

Our counsel for Patient Prayer is to note the importunity which our Lord insists on in each of these illustrations, and to remember it is importunity on behalf of another, not on our own account. Our importunity must be intercessory, and the whole power of our intercession lies in the certainty that prayer will be answered. Intercessory prayer based on the Redemption enables God to create that which He can create in no other way; it is a strenuous business demanding the undivided energy of mind and heart. The effect of prayer on ourselves is the building up of our character in the understanding of the character of God, that is why we need patience in prayer. We cannot "by one wild bound, clear the numberless ascensions of starry stairs." Prayer is not logical, it is a mysterious moral working of the Holy Spirit.

The Unnatural Father (Luke 11:9-13)

Just here at the conclusion of these pictures the case of Job is of peculiar significance. In Job's case there was every element to make him conceive of God as an unkind Friend, an unnatural Father, and an unjust Judge; but through everything Job stuck to his belief in the character of God. Job lost his hereditary creed, which was that God blessed and prospered physically and materially the man who trusted in Him, but his words, "though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him," prove how tenaciously he clung to God.

At the conclusion of the book of Job these striking words occur, "And the LORD turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends: also the LORD gave Job twice as much as he had before" (Job 42:10). So the question to ask yourself, which, though it may be ungrammatical, is very pointed, is—"Have you come to 'when' yet?" Have you entered into the high-priestly union of praying for your friends? When you do, God will turn your captivity.

Go thou into thy closet; shut thy door,
And pray to Him in secret: He will hear.
But think not thou, by one wild bound, to clear
The numberless ascensions, more and more,
Of starry stairs that must be climbed, before
Thou comest to the Father's likeness near;
And bendest down to kiss the feet so dear
That, step by step, their mounting flights passed o'er.

Be thou content, if on thy weary need
There falls a sense of showers and of the Spring;
A hope that makes it possible to fling
Sickness aside, and go and do the deed:
For highest aspiration will not lead
Unto the calm beyond all questioning.

Subconscious Prayer

Under the heading of Prevailing Prayer we come really to the subject of subconscious prayer. We mean by subconscious prayer the prayer that goes on in our unconscious mind, only occasionally bursting up into the conscious. Romans 8:26–28 is the classical example of this:

Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And He that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because He maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God. And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose.

"Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit" (Ephesians 6:18). Prayer "in the Spirit" is not meditation, it is not reverie; it is being filled with the Holy Ghost Who brings us as we pray into perfect union before God, and this union manifests itself in "perseverance and supplication for all saints." Every saint of God knows those times when in closest communion with God nothing is articulated, and yet there seems to be an absolute intimacy not so much between God's mind and their mind as between God's Spirit and their spirit.

The conscious and the subconscious life of our Lord is explained perhaps in this way. Our Lord's subconscious life was Deity, and only occasionally when He was on earth did the subconscious burst up into His conscious life. The subconscious life of the saint is the Holy Ghost, and in such moments of prayer as are alluded to in Romans 8:26–28, there is an uprush of communion with God into the consciousness of the saint, the only explanation of which is that the Holy Ghost in the saint communicating prayers which cannot be uttered, acquaints us with the—

Unrealised Particulars of Prayer

Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. (Romans 8:26)

This verse details for us our infirmities, our inability and our Intercessor. The Holy Spirit has special prayers in every individual saint which bring him or her at times under the powerful searching of God to find out what is the mind of the Spirit. This searching of the heart is bewildering at first because we are tortured by our unsyllabled lack of utterance, but we are soon comforted by the realisation that God is searching our hearts not for the convicting of sin, but to find out what is the mind of the Spirit.

And He that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because He maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God. (verse 27)

Unrivalled Power of Prayer

This verse describes the Spirit's intercession before God, and identification with God going on in the personality of the saint, apart altogether from the saint's conscious power of understanding. This can safely be called "speechless prayer"; we wait before God, lying fallow, as it were, while He answers the prayer the Holy Spirit is praying in us. The prayer of our Lord in John 17 is closely allied with the intercession of the Holy Ghost, and this High-priestly prayer explains many, if not all, of the mysterious things a saint has to go through.

And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose. (Romans 8:28)

This verse presents the unrecognised providence of prayer.

Unrecognised Providence of Prayer

The shrine of our conscious life is placed in a sacredness of circumstances engineered by God whereby He secures our effectual calling. That God engineers our circumstances for us if we accept His purpose in Christ Jesus is a thought of great practical moment.

Allow yourself to think for a little that you are to be a walking, living edition of the prayers of the Holy Spirit. No wonder God urges us to walk in the light! No wonder His Spirit prays in us and makes intercessions with groanings we cannot utter. We may feel burdened or we may not; we may consciously know nothing about it; the point is that God puts us into circumstances where He can answer the prayers of His Son and of the Holy Spirit. Remember the prayer of Jesus is "that they may be one, even as We are one." That is a oneness of personality in which individuality is completely transfigured; it is independence lost and identity revealed.

It is well to remember that it is the "together" of circumstances that works for good God changes our circumstances; sometimes they are bright, sometimes they are the opposite; but God makes them work together for our good, so that in each particular set of circumstances we are in, the Spirit of God has a better chance to pray the particular prayers that suit His designs, and the reason is only known to God, not to us.

In James 5:16–18 there is instruction for everyone. This might be called Successful Prayer. We are told that the great man Elijah is as a little man, "Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are" (verse 17); and that the great man prayed just as a little man, "and he prayed earnestly"; and the great man was answered just as a little man will be answered, by God. The phrase "he prayed earnestly" is literally, "he prayed in prayer."

Intercessory prayer is part of the sovereign purpose of God. If there were no saints praying for us, our lives would be infinitely balder than they are, consequently the responsibility of those who never intercede and who are withholding blessing from other lives is truly appalling. The subject of intercessory prayer is weakened by the neglect of the idea with which we ought to start. We take for granted that prayer is preparation for work, whereas prayer is the work, and we scarcely believe what the Bible reveals, viz., that through intercessory prayer God creates on the ground of the Redemption; it is His chosen way of working. We lean to our own understanding, or we bank on service and do away with prayer, and consequently by succeeding in the external we fail in the eternal, because in the eternal we succeed only by prevailing prayer,

Perils of Prayer

In conclusion it is as well to note one or two points in regard to The Perils of Prayer. Luke 22:31 reveals not only the possibility of Satan praying, but of his prayers being answered, "Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat"; and in Psalm 106:13–15, we have the prayer of sensuality. In both these instances prayer was answered. Satan was allowed to sift Peter and the other disciples, with the result that after the Resurrection they were ready to receive the Holy Ghost (see John 20:22), and we read that God gave the children of Israel their request, but "sent leanness into their soul."

First John 5:16 deals with Prayer and Will. "If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and He shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it." Intercessory prayer for one who is sinning prevails, God says so. The will of the man prayed for does not come into question at all, he is connected with God by prayer, and prayer on the basis of the Redemption sets the connection working and God gives life. There is, however, a distinct limitation put to intercession—"I do not say that he shall pray for it." This is also illustrated in the prayers of Abraham for Sodom (see Genesis 18:16-33). The only way in which we can discern this limit of intercession is by living in continual communion with God and not in any wise leaning to our own understanding.

There are, so to speak, two types of redemptive effect in answer to intercession; the first where souls are "saved; yet so as by fire"; and the second where they are saved and brought into requisition for God in this life. The intercession for all men is on the former line and the intercession for particular cases is on the second. Beware of the philosophy with regard to the human will bringing factors in here that are distinctly absent in God's revelation about prayer. The fundamental basis of the human will deep down is inclined towards God, and prayer works wonders fundamentally. The prayer of the feeblest saint on earth who lives in the Spirit and keeps right with God is a terror to Satan. The very powers of darkness are paralysed by prayer; no spiritualistic seance can succeed in the presence of a humble praying saint. No wonder Satan tries to keep our minds fussy in active work till we cannot think in prayer. It is a vital necessity for Christians to think along the lines on which they pray. The philosophy of prayer is that prayer is the work.

Jesus Christ carries on intercession for us in heaven; the Holy Ghost carries on intercession in us on earth; and we the saints have to carry on intercession for all men.

There remains one further matter it is well to note, viz., idle prayer.

Idle Prayer

This subject of idle prayer is referred to by Charles Kingsley⁵ in a letter written April 25, 1852:

You have said boldly, in words which pleased me much, though I differ from them—that I ought not to ask you to try to cure self-seeking by idle prayer—as if a man by taking thought could add one cubit to his stature. I was pleased with the words; because they show me that you have found that there is a sort of prayer which is idle prayer, and that you had sooner not pray at all than in that way. Now of idle prayer I think there are two kinds: one of fetish prayer, when by praying we seek to alter the will of God concerning us. This is, and has been, and will be common enough and idle enough. For if the will of Him concerning us be good, why should we alter it? If bad, what use praying to such a Being at all? . . . Another, of praying to oneself to change oneself; by which I mean the common method of trying by prayer to excite oneself into a state, a frame, an experience. This too is common enough among protestants and papists, as well as among unitarians and rationalists. Indeed, some folks tell us that the great use of prayer is "its reflex" action on ourselves, and inform us that we can thus by taking thought add certain cubits to our stature. God knows the temptation to believe it is great. I feel it deeply. Nevertheless I am not of that belief.

^{5.} Charles Kingsley (1819-75): English cleric and writer.

The whole letter is well worth reading (Charles Kingsley: His Letters and Memories of His Life).

THE DISCIPLINE OF LONELINESS

And I am no more in the world, and these are in the world, and I come to Thee. Holy Father, keep them in Thy name which Thou hast given Me, that they may be one even as we are. . . . I have given them Thy word; and the world hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of [mg] the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil one. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them in the truth: Thy word is truth. As Thou didst send Me into the world, even so sent I them into the world. John 17:11, 14–18 (RV)

The friendship of a soul who walks alone with God is as abiding as God Himself, and, in degree, as terrible. What a volume of meaning is in these words, so simple in statement—"And he looked upon Jesus as He walked, and saith, Behold, the Lamb of God!" (John 1:36 RV). Charles Kingsley speaks of his wife as his "dear dread." A friend whose contact and whose memory does not make us ever do our best is one in name only. Friendship to a soul undisciplined by loneliness is a precarious sea on which many have been lost, and on whose shores the wrecks of many human hearts lie rotting.

Solitude with God repairs the damage done by the fret and noise and clamour of the world. To have been on the mount with God means that we carry with us an exhilaration, an incommunicable awe. We do not descend to the valley, no matter how low the walk of the feet may have to be, no matter how perplexing the demon-tossed may be around us, no matter if the cross awaits us in the shadows.

And it came to pass, when Moses came down from mount Sinai with the two tables of the testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount, that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with Him. (Exodus 34:29)

... they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus. (Acts 4:13)

The disaster of shallowness ultimately follows the spiritual life that takes not the shining way upon the Mount of God. Power from on high has the Highest as its source, and the solitudes of the Highest must never be departed from, else that power will cease.

Heart, heart, awake! The love that loveth all Maketh a deeper calm than Horeh's cave:—
God in thee;—can His children's folly gall?
Love may be hurt, but shall not love be brave?
Thy holy silence sinks in dews of balm;
Thou art my solitude, my mountain-calm!
George MacDonald

Loneliness marks the child of God. In tumults, in troubles, in disasters, in pestilences, in destructions, in fightings with wild beasts, the child of God abides under the shadow of the Almighty, Singing hymns unbidden, Till the world is wrought To sympathy with hopes and tears it heeded not. Shelley⁶

The child of God who walks alone with Him is not dependent on places and moods but carries to the world the perpetual mystery of a dignity, unruffled, and unstung by insult, untouched by shame and martyrdom. Robert Browning describes him in "An Epistle containing the Strange Medical Experience of Karshish, the Arab Physician"—

^{6.} Percy Bysshe Shelley (1792–1822): English poet.

I probed the sore as thy disciple should:
"How, beast," said I, "this stolid carelessness
Sufficeth thee, when Rome is on her march
To stamp out like a little spark thy town,
Thy tribe, thy crazy tale and thee at once?"
He merely looked with his large eyes on me.
The man is apathetic, you deduce?
Contrariwise, he lives both old and young,
Able and weak, affects the very brutes
And birds—how say I? Flowers of the field—
As a wise workman recognises tools
In a master's workshop, loving what they make.

The very God! think, Abib; dost thou think? So, the All-Great, were the All-Loving too—So, through the thunder comes a human voice Saying, "O heart I made, a heart beats here! Face, my hands fashioned, see it in myself! Thou hast no power nor mayest conceive of mine, But love I gave thee, with myself to love, And thou must love me who have died for thee!" The madman saith He said so: it is strange.

Browning

The culture of the entirely sanctified life is often misunderstood. The discipline of that life consists of Suffering, Loneliness, Patience and Prayer. How many who started with the high ecstasy of vision have ended in the disasters of shallowness! Time, the world and God fire out the fools. Our Lord was thirty years preparing for three years' service. The modern stamp is three hours of preparation for thirty years of service. John the Baptist and Paul were trained in the massive solitudes of the desert, as are all characters of God's heroic mould.

... not in vain His seers
Have dwelt in solitudes and known that God
High up in open silence and thin air
More presently reveals him, having set
His chiefest temples on the mountain-tops,
His kindling altar in the hearts of men,
And these I know with peace and lost with pain,
And oft for whistling wind and desert air
Lamented, and in dream; was my desire
For the flood Jordan, for the running sound
And broken glitters of the midnight moon.
F. W. H. Myers⁷

Thus does Frederick Myers make John the Baptist soliloquise in prison. And again he touches Paul in soliloquy—

Oh the regret, the struggle and the failing! Oh the days desolate and useless years! Vows in the night, so fierce and unavailing! Stings of my shame and passion of my tears!

How have I seen in Araby Orion, Seen without seeing, till he set again, Known the night-noise and thunder of the lion: Silence and sounds of the prodigious plain!

How have I felt with arms of my aspiring Lifted all night in irresponsive air, Dazed and amazed with overmuch desiring, Blank with the utter agony of prayer!

In the momentous crisis of Entire Sanctification and the Baptism of the Holy Ghost and Fire, all Heaven is opened and the soul is drunk with ecstasy; yet that is but the introduction to a new relationship. Entirely sanctified soul, alone with God, suffering with Jesus, do you hear Him say, "Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink the cup that I drink? or to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" (RV). The world is cursed with holiness preachers who have never trembled under awesome Sinai, or lain prostrate in shame before Calvary and had the vile ownership of themselves strangled to death in the rare air heights of Pentecost. Testify to what the Lord has done for you, but at the peril of being cast away as reprobate silver, presume to preach or teach what you have not bought by suffering. Out on the disastrous shallowness that teaches and preaches experiences! The true holiness preacher is one whose experience has led him to know that he is charged with the oracles of God, and, backed by Jehovah, an awful woe is on him if he preaches not the Gospel.

There is a solitude of despair, a solitude of sin—a vast curse black with the wrath of God, moaning with the pride of hatred; there is a solitude which is the aftermath of spent vice and exhausted self-love. There is no God in such solitudes; only an exhausting pessimism and a great despair. These solitudes produce the wayward, wandering cries so prevalent amongst men. At one time, striking his fist at the throne of God, that lonely soul cries—

I would ne'er have striven
As thus with thee in prayer in my sore need.
Oh! lift me as a wave, a leaf, a cloud!
I fall upon the thorns of life! I bleed!

A heavy weight of hours has chained and bowed One too like thee: tameless, and swift, and proud.

Or again, in the utter exhaustion of companionless isolation—

I could lie down like a tired child, And weep away the life of care Which I have borne and yet must bear,
Till death like sleep might steal on me,
And I might feel in the warm air
My cheek grow cold, and hear the sea
Breathe o'er my dying brain its last monotony.
Shelley

But the solitude of the sanctified, the loneliness of the child of God, brings again the glimmering of his Father's feet amongst the sorrows and the haunts of men. And to the broken in heart, to the bound in hereditary prisons, and to the wounded and weak, Jesus our Saviour draws near.

Then on our utter weakness and the hush
Of hearts exhausted that can ache no more,
On such abeyance of self and swoon of soul
The Spirit hath lighted oft, and let men see
That all our vileness alters God no more Than our dimmed eyes can quench the stars in heaven:—

From years ere years were told, through all the sins, Unknown sins of innumerable men. God is himself for ever, and shows to-day As erst in Eden, the eternal hope.

Loneliness in Preparation

And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day. (Genesis 32:24)

... life is not as idle ore
But iron dug from central gloom
And heated hot with burning fears,
And dipt in baths of hissing tears,
And batter'd with the shock of doom
To shape and use.

Tennyson

It is so human and so like us to be attracted by Jesus, to be fascinated by His life; but what a sorrowful revulsion many of us experience when His own words repulse us and blow out the fires of our emotion; and turning away sorrowful, we leave Jesus alone. Christianity is based on heroism and manifested in martyrdom; and the preparation for being a Christian is drastic, definite and destructive.

Separation from Possessions

And as He was going forth on His way [mg], there ran one to Him and kneeled to Him, and asked Him, Good Teacher [MOFFATT], what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life? And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou Me good? none is good save one, even God. Thou knowest the commandments, Do not kill, Do not commit adultery, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Do not defraud, Honour thy father and mother.

And he said unto Him, Master, all these things have I observed from my youth. And Jesus looking upon him loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow Me. But his countenance fell at the saying, and he went away sorrowful: for he was one that had great possessions. (Mark 10:17–22 RV)

Such was the preparation necessary before this admirable soul could become a disciple of Jesus Christ. To use the language of Dr. Donald Davidson—

Strip yourself of every possession, cut away every affection, disengage yourself from all things, be as if you were a naked soul, alone in the world; be a mere man merely, and then be God's. "Sell all that thou hast and follow Me!" Reduce yourself down, if I may say so, till nothing remains but your consciousness of yourself, and then cast the self-consciousness at the feet of God in Christ.

You cannot become a disciple of Jesus Christ as a rich man, or as a landed proprietor, or as a man of splendid reputation, or as a man of good name and family. The only road to Jesus is ALONE. Will you strip yourself and separate yourself and take that lonely road, or will you too go away "sorrowful"?

If any man is in Christ he is a new creature. (RV) Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born from above. (RV mg)

Jesus Christ always speaks from the source of things, consequently those who deal only with the surface find Him an offence.

Separation from Professions

And there came one scribe, and said unto Him, Master, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest. And Jesus said unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the heaven have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay His head. (Matthew 8:19–20 RV)

But Peter said unto Him, Although all shall be caused to stumble [mg], yet will not I. And Jesus saith unto him, Verily I say unto thee, that thou to-day, even this night, before the cock crow twice, shalt deny Me thrice. But he spake exceeding vehemently, If I must die with Thee, I will not deny Thee. And in like manner also said they all. (Mark 14:29–31 RV)

Professions last as long as the conditions that called them forth last, but no longer. As long as the fervid, strong attachment to Jesus lasts, the professions are the natural expression of that attachment; but when the way grows narrow, and reputations are torn, and the popular verdict is against the shameful poverty and meekness of the Son of Man, professions wither on the tongue; not through cowardice, but because the conditions that made the heart warm, and the feelings move and the mouth speak, are altered. When the way of joyfully leaving all and following Jesus in the bounding days of devotion turns into the way of sorrow, and the heroic isolation of being with Jesus ends in shadows, and Jesus seems weak before the world, and the way of following ends in the way of derision, then professions are blighted, and the heart's feelings are frozen or changed into horror and perplexity. Peter's profession ended in denial and disaster—"But he began to curse, and to swear, I know not this man of whom ye speak" (Mark 14:71 RV).

Love never professes; love confesses.

From all high and stirring emotions, from all exhilarating professions arising out of true human devotion, our Lord repulses with a stern, bracing rebuke. Sanctified poverty! Ah, it chills the heart and professions die. The poverty of our Lord and of His disciples is the exact expression of the nature of the religion of Jesus Christ—just man and God; man possessing nothing, professing nothing; yet when the Lord asks at some dawn, after a heart-breaking failure, "Lovest thou Me?" the soul confesses, "Yea, Lord; Thou knowest that I love Thee." And when that poverty is a disgust to the full-fed religious world, the disciple does not profess, but confesses, with aching hands and bleeding feet, "I love Him," and goes outside the camp, "bearing His reproach."

Prof. Wm. James⁸ in his pioneer work, "The Varieties of Religious Experience," says—

Poverty indeed is the strenuous life,—without brass bands, or uniforms, or hysteric popular applause, or lies, or circumlocutions; and when one sees the way in which wealthgetting enters as an ideal into the very bone and marrow of our generation, one wonders whether a revival of the belief that poverty is a religious vocation may not be the transformation of military courage, and the spiritual reform of which our time stands most in need.

We have grown literally afraid of being poor. We despise anyone who elects to be poor in order to simplify and save his inner life. If he does not join the general scramble, and pant with the moneymaking street, we deem him spiritless and lacking in ambition. We have lost the power of imagining what the ancient idealisation of poverty could have meant—the liberation from material attachments, the unbribed soul, the manlier indifference, the paying our way by what we are or do, and not by what we have; the right to fling away our life at any moment irresponsibly, the more athletic trim, in short, the moral fighting shape.

For His sake those tears and prayers are offered,
Which you bear as flowers to His throne;
Better still would be the food and shelter,
Given for HIM, and given to His own.
Praise with loving Deeds is dear and holy,
Words of Praise will never serve instead;
Lo! you offer music, hymn and incense,
When He has not where to lay His head. . . .
Jesus then and Mary still are with us—
Night will find the Child and Mother near,
Waiting for the shelter we deny them
While we tell them that we hold them dear!

Separation from Positions

And there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be greatest. But when Jesus saw the reasoning of their heart, He took a little child, and set him by His side, and said unto them, Whosoever shall receive this little child in My name receiveth Me: and whosoever shall receive Me receiveth Him that sent Me: for he that is least among you all, the same is great. (Luke 9:46–48 RV)

Grant unto us that we may sit, one on Thy right hand, and one on Thy left hand, in Thy glory. But Jesus said unto them, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink the cup that I drink? or to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? And they said unto Him, We are able. And Jesus said unto them, The cup that I drink ye shall drink; and with the baptism that I am baptized withal shall ye be baptized: but to sit on My right hand or on My left hand is not Mine to give: but it is for them for whom it hath been prepared. (Mark 10:37–40 RV)

How we miss it! those loyal true, human hearts, and ourselves, until we are changed by the deep upheaval of a birth from above, and the presence of an overwhelming love to our Lord in our hearts. The desire to be the "loyalest," the "faithfullest," the "holiest" disciple produces a winsome rebuke from our Lord, and our hearts feel we have missed the point but scarcely know how. It was surely natural for the disciples to imagine "who should be the greatest"; and yet when Jesus questioned them, their hearts confused and rebuked them.

And he called to Him a little child, and set him in the midst of them, and said, . . . Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven. (Matthew 18:2, 4 RV)

By means of the implicit life of a little child Jesus taught the disciples that unless they became "as this little child," they could in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven. The true child of God is such from an inward principle of life from which the life is ordered by implicit loving devotion, as natural as breathing, and as spontaneous as the life of a little child.

And another of the disciples said unto Him, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. But Jesus saith unto him. Follow Me; and leave the dead to bury their own dead. (Matthew 8:21–22 RV)

To plead with Jesus to notice us and enrol us as His disciples from any position, good, bad or indifferent, will meet one of those otherwise unaccountable chills. To seek the lowest position, or the highest, or any position at all, is to miss the mark utterly. In the days of preparation from all Possessions, Professions and Positions, Jesus leads in a separating, isolating wav—"What seekest thou?" "Whom seekest thou?" The sad eyes of the Son of God lure us into the wilderness alone, and these questions ring in our hearts. From all desire for position, place, power, from every pedestal of devotion, or dedication, or deed, He draws and separates us; and suddenly we discern what He wants, deeper than tongue can express, an obedience to the heavenly vision, arising from an abandonment of love to Himself, leads us to heaven. Not as faithful friends, or as moral men, or as devout souls, or as righteous men—Jesus separates us from all these positions by an unbridgeable distance when He is making clear to us that we must leave ALL. These lonely moments are given to each of us. Have we heeded them?

Oh, we're sunk enough here, God knows!
But not quite so sunk that moments,
Sure tho' seldom, are denied us.
When the spirit's true endowments
Stand out plainly from its false ones,
And apprise it if pursuing
Or the right way or the wrong way,
To its triumph or undoing.

There are flashes struck from midnights,
There are fire-flames noondays kindle,
Where by piled-up honours perish.
Where by swollen ambitions dwindle,
While just this or that poor impulse,
Which for once had play unstifled,

Seems the sole work of a life-time

That away the rest have trifled.

Robert Browning

Loneliness in Consecration

It is no wonder that preparation has to be so drastic and so deep. It is easy to say things about the necessity of preparation, but we too readily take on the pattern and print of the age, or set, or country in which we live. The emphasis to-day in spiritual domains is on the work, not on the workman. Three hours is considered sufficient preparation for thirty years' work. But when we turn to the Bible records we almost unconsciously take the deliberate stride of the hills of God, and ever after we have an unhasting and unresting heart amid the cities of men. Our Lord Jesus Christ had thirty years' preparation for three years of ostensible work. John the Baptist had a similar preparation, and the Apostle Paul spent three lonely years in Arabia. Some words from Dr. Alexander Whyte's 10 individual reading of St. Paul will serve to keep us in the right atmosphere for the consideration of this subject of the Loneliness in Consecration-

For it was in Arabia, and it was under the Mount of God, that Paul's apostolic ink-horn was first filled with that ink of God with which he long afterwards wrote that so little understood writing of his, which we call the seventh of the Romans. A little-understood writing; and no wonder! The Apostle came back from Arabia to Damascus, after three years' absence, absolutely ladened down with all manner of doctrines, and directions, and examples, for us and for our salvation, if we would only attend to them and receive them. Directions and the examples, of which this is one of the first. That solitude, the most complete and not short solitude, was the one thing that Paul determined to secure for himself immediately after his conversion and his baptism. . . . And thus it is that Holy Scripture is everywhere so full of apartness and aloneness and solitude: of lodges in the wilderness, and of shut doors in the city: of early mornings, and late nights, and lonely nightwatches: of Sabbath-days and holidays, and all such asylums of spiritual retreat. 11

Down to Gehenna, and up to the throne, He travels the fastest who travels alone.
We cannot kindle when we will The fire which in the heart resides!

The Spirit bloweth and is still,—
In mystery our soul abides!
But tasks in hours of insight willed
Can be through hours of gloom fulfilled.

With aching hands and bleeding feet,
We dig and heap, lay stone on stone;
We bear the burden and the heat
Of the long day, and wish 'twere done,
Not till the hours of light return,
All we have built do we discern.

Matthew Arnold¹²

By the term Consecration is meant that human action whereby we present ourselves to God. The period of consecration may be three minutes, or thirty years, according to the individual; or the soul may degenerate during its consecration. The period of consecration may be thoroughly misused. Sanctification begins at regeneration, and goes on to a second great crisis, when God, upon an uttermost abandonment in consecration, bestows His gracious work of entire sanctification. The point of entire sanctification is reached not by the passing of the years but by obedience to the heavenly vision and through spiritual discipline. Spiritual degeneration, so keenly portrayed in the Epistle to the Hebrews, is brought about by weak and prolonged consecration, during which the soul degenerates completely. "Of whom we have many things to say, and hard of interpretation, seeing ye are become dull of hearing. For when by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that one teach you which are the rudiments of the beginning [mg] of the oracles of God; And are become such as have need of milk, and not of solid food. . . . Wherefore let us cease to speak of the first principles of Christ, and press on unto perfection [full growth, mg]" (see Hebrews 5:11–12; 6:1 RV). Perfection here simply means the full maturity of a man's powers; then begins his work.

Separation from Country

Abraham! the "Pilgrim of Eternity!" "The Father of the Faithful!" These titles give a touch emphatic and decisive to that wonderful career which emphasises this Loneliness in Consecration.

Now the LORD said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto the land that I will shew thee. (Genesis 12:1 RV)

By faith Abraham, when he was called, obeyed to go out unto a place which he was to receive for an inheritance; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. (Hebrews 11:8 RV) The separation from the ideals and aims and ways of looking at things peculiar to one's set, or society, or country, is a great break. To the man who is undergoing consecration for a supreme sanctification, this separation is a persistent and pressing pain until it is obeyed. To run away from one's country or one's set is cowardly and un-Christian; that is not Christianity, but cowardly selfishness. One careful glance at our Lord's prayer will kill that cunning cowardice at once—"I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of [mg] the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil one. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world" (John 17:15–16 RV).

In Christianity the Kingdom and its laws and principles must be put first, and everything else second, and if the holy calling demands it, there must be instant and military obedience, leaving all and rallying round the standard of Jesus Christ. The missionary of the Cross is not first a British or an American subject, but a Christian. The missionary is not a sanctified patriot, but one whose sympathies have broken all parochial bounds and whose aims beat in unison with God's own heart. A Christian is a sanctified man in his business, or legal or civic affairs, or artistic and literary affairs. Consecration is not the giving over of the calling in life to God, but the separation from all other callings and the giving over of ourselves to God, letting His providence place us where He will—in business, or law, or science; in workshop, in politics, or in drudgery. We are to be there working according to the laws and principles of the Kingdom of God, not according to the ideals or aims or ways of looking at things from the point of view of a particular set. This constitutes us fools in the eyes of our set, and the temptation is strong then to get out of our country. It will mean working according to different aims, and we must never take the pattern and print of the set to which we belong. "Business is business" is not true for the Christian. Business is a sphere of labour in the world where a man exhibits the laws and principles of the Kingdom, otherwise he is a coward, a deserter, and a traitor to that Kingdom. It is a lonely way-

With a thousand things that are Births of woe and food for crime: Still, to vindicate the right Is a rough and thankless game:—Still the leader in the fight Is the hindmost in the fame.

Do you answer to the stern, bracing, heroic call in consecration—Get thee out of thy country and stand alone with Jesus? It is a foolish and a shameful thing to be a saint in business. To be a saint may be to be outcast and ridiculed. Try it. Faith is built on heroism. Consecration is the narrow, lonely way to over-flooding love. We are not called upon to live long on this planet, but we are called upon to be holy at any and every cost. If obedience costs you your life, then pay it.

There are few who care to analyse
The mingled motives, in their complex force,
Of some apparently quite simple course.
One, disentangled skein might well surprise.
Perhaps a "single heart" is never known.
Save in the yielded life that lives for God alone,—

And that is therefore doubted as a dream
By those who know not the tremendous power
Of all-constraining love!

F. R. Havergal¹³

Separation from Comrades

If any man cometh unto Me, and hateth not his own father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple. (Luke 14:26 RV)

You cannot consecrate yourself and your friends. If at the altar your heart imagines that loving arms are still around you, and that together, lovers as lovers, and friends as friends, can enter through this mighty gate of supreme Sanctification, it is a fond dream, doomed to disillusionment. Alone! Relinquish all! You cannot consecrate your children, your wife, your lover, your friend, your father, your mother or your own life as yours. You must abandon all and fling yourself on God as a mere conscious being, and unperplexed, seeking you'll find Him. The teaching that presents consecration as giving to God our gifts, our possessions, our comrades, is a profound error. These are all abandoned, and we give up for ever our right to ourselves. A sanctified soul may be an artist, or a musician; but he is not a sanctified artist or musician: he is one who expresses the message of God through a particular medium. As long as the artist or musician imagines he can consecrate his artistic gifts to God, he is deluded. Abandonment of ourselves is the kernel of consecration, not presenting our gifts, but presenting ourselves without reserve.

Our Lord uses stern words; He says it is better to be deformed than damned—

And if thy hand or thy foot causeth thee to stumble, cut it off, and cast it from thee: it is good for thee to enter into life maimed or halt, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into the eternal fire. And if thine eye causeth thee to stumble, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is good for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into the Gehenna of fire [mg]. (Matthew 18:8–9 RV)

The foot and the hand and the eye are great and mighty gifts, and also means of livelihood; yet the stern principle of our Lord is clear—It is better to be deformed than damned. The inner experience of some gifted soul, some genius or orator or artist, who has undergone this test of supreme sanctification, might well expound this marvellously profound experience. Oh, the wail of the souls who have failed at the altar, and have made their consecration a wilderness experience years long. Their language wrings with pain.

I descended into the fire of Hell
And gazed until I burned;
I came, but how I came I cannot tell,
My vile heart led me, being its own spell.
I looked, was marred,—and turned.
I entered on a heritage of woe,
And never can return;
I broke the heart of God's own Son to go,
I spurned His Spirit that besought me so,
And entered Hell to burn.
And marvel ye that I must watch and pray
While ye are sweet asleep?
Lest haply from His saving grace I stray,
Enticed by things with which you play!
Sleep on! but I must weep!

This subject of Consecration has been purposely dealt with from its deepest meaning in order that its application to all domains might be made clear. Its one note is—"Ye are not your own; for ye were bought with a price: glorify God therefore in your body" (1 Corinthians 6:19–20 RV). It is the loving hands, the tender hands, that hinder most at the altar; the hands too loving that prevent. It is a lonely way; we cannot take it with comrades.

Peter began to say unto Him, Lo, we have left all, and have followed Thee. Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or mother, or father, or children, or lands, for My sake, and for the gospel's sake, but he shall receive a hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the age [mg] to come eternal life. But many that are first shall be last; and the last first. (Mark 10:28–31)

As in the case of Separation from Country, this Separation from Comrades is not a cowardly, selfish, immoral breaking away from human ties which God has ordained; but it does mean that, if Jesus demands it, nothing must stand in the way; He must be first. Oh, for more of that abandonment of consecration and fire from Heaven which would make a mighty army of saints!

Yes, without cheer of sister or of daughter, Yes, without stay of father or of son, Lone on the land and homeless on the water Pass I in Patience till the work be done.

Yet not in solitude if Christ anear me Waketh Him workers for the great employ, Oh not in solitude, if souls that hear me Catch from my joyaunce the surprise of joy.

Hearts I have won of sister or of brother Quick on the earth or hidden in the sod, Lo every heart awaiteth me, another Friend in the blameless family of God.

F. W. H. Myers

This hour of solitude and loneliness in consecration is followed by a blessed sanctified socialism, the hidden secret of which is the heart alone in delight with God. Multitudes of men follow whenever a soul has been on the mount with God. If one might dare whisper it, the blighting suffering in lonely consecration is God's imperial way of making what we once had intermittently our eternal possession.

Separation from Comforts

Yet it was well, and Thou hast said in season
As is the Master shall the servant be:
Let me not subtly slide into the treason,
Seeking an honour which they gave not Thee:
Never at even, pillowed on a pleasure,
Sleep with the wings of aspiration furled,
Hide the last mite of the forbidden treasure,
Keep for my joys a world within the world.

F. W. H. Myers

Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I go, I will send Him unto you. . . . And ye therefore now have sorrow: but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no one taketh away from you. (John 16:7, 22 RV)

Interior desolations serve a vital purpose in the soul of a Christian. It is expedient that the joys of contact be removed that our idea of the Christian character may not be misplaced. In the early days of spiritual experience we walk more by sight and feelings than by faith. The comforts, the delights, the joys of contact are so exquisite that the very flesh itself tingles with the leadings of the cloudy pillar by day and the fiery pillar by night; but there comes a day when all that ceases. Madame Guyon¹⁴ in her poem entitled, "The Dealings of God; or The Divine Love in Bringing the Soul to a State of Absolute Acquiescence," states this Separation from Comforts—

How I trembled then and fear'd, When my Love had disappear'd! "Wilt thou leave me thus?" I cried, "Whelm'd beneath the rolling tide?" Vain attempt to reach His ear! Love was gone, and would not hear.

Ah, return and love me still; See me subject to Thy will; Frown with wrath, or smile with grace, Only let me see Thy face! Evil I have none to fear; All is good, if Thou art near.

Yet He leaves me,—cruel fate! Leaves me in my lost estate. Have I sinn'd? Oh, say wherein. Tell me, and forgive my sin! King and Lord whom I adore, Shall I see Thy face no more?

Be not angry,—I resign
Henceforth all my will to Thine.
I consent that Thou depart,
Though Thine absence breaks my heart.
Go, then, and forever, too
All is right that Thou wilt do.

This was just what Love intended: He was now no more offended; Soon as I became a child, Love returned to me and smiled. Never strife shall more betide 'Twixt the Bridegroom and His bride.

It is difficult to put this experience into language without making God's way seem foolish and an occasion for our petulance. The very essence of Christianity is not so much a walk with Jesus as a walk like His walk, when we have allowed Him to baptise us with the Holy Ghost and fire. As we pointed out in "The Discipline of Suffering," the disaster of sentiments and emotions indulged in for themselves is that these end in the revenge of the lower nature; so here, delight in experiences heralds the approach of a false mysticism, the characteristic of which is an inwardness of experience, developing into a private illumination apart from the written Word. Madame Guyon ran perilously near this danger of quietism. All ecstasies and experiences, all inner voices and revelations and dreams, must be tested by the pure outer light of Jesus Christ and His word. By looking to Him we are changed into the same image from glory to glory, when consecration has been made a definite transaction. Sanity in ordinary human life is maintained by a right correspondence with outer facts, and sanity in Christian life is produced by the correspondence with the facts revealed by our Lord Jesus Christ.

These experiences are not recognised at the time, but in looking back from a more mature stage one's heart comments "Amen" to the exposition of the way God has taken us. All false mysticism arises from the fact that teachers insist on an inner experience, which by the simple process of introspection ultimately kills itself. Subjective states must be tested and estimated and regulated by objective standards. This is the only safeguard against the irresponsible crowd of fanatics who live from hand to mouth in spiritual experience and get nowhere, and by reason of their own shallowness, end in contemptible disasters. This elementary state of spiritual experience ought to herald the last stage of a protracted consecration. Thank God, these isolating, separating forces may be recognised at the moment of regeneration by intuition, and, by a willing transaction, the soul may be borne on unto perfection without these distressing wilderness experiences.

To quote Madame Guyon again; she comments thus on her own experience, long after such experiences had ceased—"To complete my distress, I seemed to be left without God Himself, Who alone could support me in such a distressing state."

"The misfortune," she adds, "is that people wish to direct God instead of resigning themselves to be directed by Him. They wish to take the lead and to follow in a way of their own selection, instead of submissively and passively following where God sees fit to conduct them. And hence it is that many souls who are called to the enjoyment of God Himself and not merely to the gifts of God, spend all their lives in pursuing and in feeding on little consolations, resting in them as in their place of delights, and making their spiritual life to consist in them."

All this goes to show that the Christian life simply reconstructs the reasonings from the commonsense facts of natural life, preparing the way for that walk in faith that fears nothing because the heart is blazing with the love of God.

It thou wouldst have high God thy soul assure, That she herself shall as herself endure, Shall in no alien semblance, thine and wise, Fulfil her and be young in Paradise, One way I know; forget, forswear, disdain Thine own best hopes, thine utmost loss and gain.

Till when at last thou scarce rememberest now If on the earth be such a man as thou Nor hast one thought of self-surrender—no For self is none remaining to forgo,— If ever, then shall strong persuasion fall That in thy giving thou hast gained thine all, Given the poor present, gained the boundless scope,

And kept thee virgin for the further hope.

F. W. H. Myers

An aside. Possibly the lack of recognising the human option in this Loneliness in Consecration has led teachers to blunder unconsciously into a line of teaching perilously dangerous to Christianity. There is in our midst to-day a strong revival of pagan spirituality. Many are using the terms of Hindooism or of Buddhism to expound Christianity, and they end not in expounding Christianity at all, but in expounding the very human experience of consecration, which is not peculiar to Christianity. The peculiar doctrine or Gospel of the Christian religion is Entire Sanctification, whereby God takes the most unpromising man and makes a saint of him. The teaching called "Deeper Death to Self" is a misleading form of this doctrine. The sentiments it expresses are so languid and painful, so injurious, that during the stage of consecration there is a sympathetic agreement with the introspective morbid condition that results. Our Lord does not teach a consecrated anaemia, i.e. the destruction of personality: He teaches a very positive death for ever to my right to myself—a positive destruction of the disposition of sin and a positive placing in, in Entire Sanctification, of the Holy Spirit, a pronounced identity that bears a strong family likeness to Jesus. Not "Deeper Death to Self," that is sanctified suicide, but the realisation of another's self in love, that other Self being God. Jesus Christ emancipates the personality and makes the individuality pronounced, and the transfiguring, incalculable element is love, personal, passionate devotion to Himself, and to others. "Deeper Death to Self" is complacent, and enervatingly encouraging to the morbid soul who having missed the first period of discipleship in consecration, is ever fainting on the Via Dolorosa, but never getting to the place where the "old man," "my right to myself," dies right out. Entire sanctification puts a man's breast and back as either should be, places his feet on earth and his head in Heaven, and gives him the royal insignia of the saints.

Loneliness in Sanctification

And they all left Him and fled. And a certain young man followed with Him, having a linen cloth cast about him, over his naked body: and they lay hold on him; but he left the linen cloth, and fled naked. (Mark 14:50–52 RV)

Stripped for Flight or Following?

Say, could aught else content thee? which were best, After so brief a battle an endless rest, Or the ancient conflict rather to renew, By the old deeds strengthened mightier deeds to do, Till all thou art, nay, all thou hast dreamed to be Proves thy mere root or embryon germ of thee;—Wherefrom thy great life passionately springs, Rocked by strange blasts and stormy tempestings,

Yet still from shock and storm more steadfast grown, More one with other souls, yet more thine own?— Nay, thro' those sufferings called and chosen then A very Demiurge of unborn men—A very Saviour, bending half divine
To souls who feel such woes as once were thine;—For these perchance, some utmost fear to brave Teach with thy truth, and with thy sorrows save.

F. W. H. Myers

The Loneliness of Preparation and of Consecration are more or less complicated by enfeebling interminglings of sin and sympathy and selfishness. Now we come to the loneliness of the serene uplands where the silences of God's Eternities are ever around. Oh, it is a great thing when our Father can safely leave us alone on the mountains of God, even if the darkness is unspeakable. The loneliness of a blessed personal responsibility gladly accepted—master of everything, the lover and friend of God. God takes us mighty ways; He takes us by the lonely ways of Apprenticeship, and Workmanship, and Mastership.

Separation in Sifting

And straightway the Spirit driveth Him forth into the wilderness. And He was in the wilderness forty days tempted of Satan; and He was with the wild beasts; and the angels ministered unto Him. (Mark 1:12–13 RV)

After the baptism by the Holy Ghost and fire, we emerge as masters in the sense of fitness for the work of a saint. Then God shows us His greatest mercy, for He spares us no requirement of that mastership, or saintship. We find ourselves alone with forces which are working to sift and disintegrate, to discourage and destroy; but our inward implicit communion makes us feel the confidence of God in us. It is as if God, smiling, were saying to Satan—"Do your worst; I know that He that is in him is greater than he that is against him." I can recall seeing a picture in the Royal Academy¹⁵ some years ago, it was a picture of lesser importance, but the artist had grasped the lofty loneliness of temptation as portrayed in Mark 1:12-13. The wilderness was under a grey lowering aspect, distance and dreariness and dread was stamped on every rock and stone, and in the midst the Figure of Christ stood, alone. No devil or angel was portrayed, only a few prowling wild beasts, accentuating the wild loneliness of that supreme moment of Satanic sifting. Is that same kind of sifting given to us? Surely it is. "For we have not a high priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but one that hath been in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin" (Hebrews 4:15 RV). When our apprenticeship is ended, we are tested as our Lord and Master was. On the threshold of our Mastership—or to put it into theological terms, after regeneration and entire consecration, when we have passed the mighty crisis of the Baptism of the Holy Ghost and begin our walk and work and worship under a supreme sanctification, then we are tempted as He was. It is not our object to consider the nature of that temptation, but merely to mention its place and its loneliness. It is not the loneliness of birth pains, or growing pains, it is the loneliness of the saint. As in nature so in grace. The first period of our natural life is one of promise and vision and enthusiasm, in which the surrounding mysteries have a fascination that alternates with fears. Then there comes a time when it is-Never again the boy-life, Only the pain and joy life— More the first than the last.

F. R. Havergal

and all subsequent life holds out the proving of our powers. Saintship means mastership. The order of the saintly life is—"a witness, a leader, and a commander."

The Loneliness of Sifting lays the conviction broad and deep that the saint has substituted the will of God for his individual will. The first ordeal of temptation that tries the stuff of which the saint is made is that of loneliness, and it comes on the very threshold of the super-conquering life.

What, if He hath decreed that I shall first Be try'd in humble state and things adverse, By tribulations, injuries, insults, Contempts, and scorns, and snares, and violence,— Suffering, abstaining, quietly expecting, Without distrust or doubt,—that He may know, What I can suffer, how obey?

Milton

Separation in Suffering

These things have I spoken unto you, that in Me ye may have peace. In the world ye have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world. (John 16:33 RV)

Men as men,
Can reach no higher than the Son of God,
The Perfect Head and Pattern of mankind.
The time is short and this sufficeth us
To live and die by; and in Him again
We see the same first, starry attribute,
"Perfect through suffering," our salvation's seal
Set in the front of His humanity.

And while we suffer, let us set our souls To suffer perfectly: since this alone, The suffering, which is this world's special grace, May here be perfected and left behind.

H. Hamilton King¹⁶

The most fundamental thing that can be said about the suffering¹ [1 This subject is dealt with more fully in "The Discipline of Suffering."—This footnote appears in Chambers' original text.] of the supremely sanctified is that it springs from an active, unquestioning submission to the will of God, allowing God to work out in the life His idea of what a saint should be, just as He worked out in the life of Jesus Christ, not what a saint should be, but what a Saviour should be.

After all that can be said, is said, the sufferings of the saint arise, not from inbred sin, but from obedience to the will of God, which can rarely be stated explicitly. The will of God is apprehended by the Holy Spirit indwelling the saint; it is apprehended not as the mind apprehends a truth, but in the way any incalculable element is intuitively grasped. Inestimable damage is done when the will of God is made an external law to be obeyed by conscious grasp. The will of God is apprehended by an almost unconscious impelling of the indwelling Holy Spirit. It is essentially a lonely way, for the saint knows not why he suffers as he does, yet he comprehends with a knowledge that passeth knowledge that all is well. His language is that of Job—"But He knoweth the way that I take; when He hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold" (Job 23:10).

When we understand that the saints are the rich glory of Jesus Christ's inheritance, we have added light on the mystery of the suffering of the saints.

... that ye may know ... what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints. (Ephesians 1:18)

When He shall come to be glorified in His saints, and to be marvelled at in all them that believed. (2 Thessalonians 1:10 RV)

The suffering of the saints at heart is not what is ensnaringly known as "Deeper Death to Self"; it springs from an active submission and determination to accept the intensely individual responsibility of doing God's will. It is not absolution by loss of individuality; that destroys all possibility of suffering, and indicates the paganising of the sanctified life so prevalent to-day. It is rather the transfiguration of individuality in the mastership of God's purpose in Christ—"till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Ephesians 4:13 RV).

The moment in which a man enters into the experience of supreme sanctification is the crisis that marks his evangelical perfection; all alien things that retarded and deformed him have been removed. Then begins his life as a Master Christian, and there is no other kind of Christian on this road. In this supreme sanctification he develops and attains height after height. How clearly St. Paul puts these two perfections—

Not that I have already obtained, or am already made perfect: but I press on, if so be that I may apprehend that for which also I was apprehended by Christ Jesus. Brethren, I count not myself yet to have apprehended: but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded: and if in anything ye are otherwise minded, even this shall God reveal unto you: only, whereunto we have already attained, by that same rule let us walk. (Philippians 3:12–16 RV)

And I smiled as one never smiles but once, Then first discovering my own aim's extent, Which sought to comprehend the works of God, And God himself, and all God's intercourse With the human mind; I understood, no less, My fellows' studies, whose true worth I saw, But smiled not, well aware who stood by me. And softer came the voice—"There is a way: 'Tis hard for flesh to tread therein, imbued With frailty—hopeless, if indulgence first Have ripened inborn germs of sin to strength: Wilt thou adventure for my sake and man's, Apart from all reward?" And last it breathed— "Be happy, my good soldier; I am by thee, Be sure, even to the end!"—I answered not, Knowing him. As he spoke, I was endued With comprehension and a steadfast will; And when he ceased, my brow was sealed his own. If there took place no special change in me, How comes it all things wore a different hue Thenceforward?—pregnant with vast consequence, Teeming with grand result, loaded with fate? So that when, quailing at the mighty range Of secret truths which yearn for birth, I haste To contemplate undazzled some one truth, Its bearing and effects alone—at once What was a speck expands into a star, Asking a life to pass exploring thus, Till I near craze. I go to prove my soul! I see my way as birds their trackless way. I shall arrive! what time, what circuit first I ask not: but unless God send his hail Or blinding fire-balls, sleet or stifling snow, In some time, his good time, I shall arrive: He guides me and the bird. In his good time!

Separation in Service

Hark, hark! a voice amid the quiet intense!
It is thy Duty waiting thee without—
Rise from thy knees in hope, the half of doubt—
A hand doth pull thee—It is Providence!
Open thy door straightway and get thee hence;
Go forth into the tumult and the shout!
Work! love! with workers, lovers all about!
Of noise alone is born the inward sense
Of silence; and from Action springs alone
The inward knowledge of true love and faith.

George MacDonald

Work may be executed by driven slaves or by master workmen. A saint is not an instrument of God; he is a master workman for God. A man may be used as an instrument of God without being a servant of God; there is no trace of the master workman about him. We too may have found that during the days of our apprenticeship God has allowed us to do work, not for Him, but for our own perfecting. But now God takes the saints, with skilled finger, so to speak, and with tried and tested patience, into His enterprises to battle and to build. After His Resurrection Jesus said to the disciples, "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (John 20:21 RV). And again, "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations" (Matthew 28:19 RV). And in His High-priestly prayer our Lord prayed—"As Thou didst send Me into the world, even so sent I them into the world" (John 17:18 RV). And the Apostle Paul in writing to Timothy said—"Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, holding a straight course in the word of truth" (2 Timothy 2:15 RV mg). All these words breathe activity, energy, and triumphant master-work. Jesus did not say, "Go and discourse about making disciples," but "Go and make disciples." The making of converts is a Satanic perversion of this strenuous workmanlike product. How many make followers of their own convictions, and how few make disciples! The production of saints, that is the work. God Almighty regenerates men's souls; we make disciples. Are we doing it? God is apparently not very careful whom He uses or what He uses for the work of regeneration; but none but the master workmen, that is, the saints, can make disciples. Does your work for God stamp the hearts of the people round about you with an enervating, sentimental love for you? or does every remembrance of you cause a strenuous stirring of hearts to do better, grander work for God? God's curse is on the spiritual nature that cannot reproduce its own kind. The Apostle Paul cries out exultingly—"For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of glorying? Are not even ye, before our Lord Jesus Christ at His coming? For ye are our glory and our joy" (1 Thessalonians 2:19–20 RV). Can you catch sight of the product? The making of saints. What are you doing with the thousands of souls that God's mighty Spirit is regenerating? Are you stripped and at work, studying, praying, suffering, to make disciples of them?

Get leave to work
In this world!—'tis the best you get at all!
For God in cursing, gives us better gifts
Than men in benediction. God says Sweat For foreheads,—men say Crowns,—and so we are crowned

Ay, gashed—by some tormenting circle of steel Which snaps with a secret spring.—Get Work!

Get Work! Be sure 'tis better than what you work to get!

E. B. Browning

"Lovest thou Me?... Tend My sheep" (RV). Can you feed the lambs and the sheep? Do you, or are you in the show business? Listen to the voice of your Master: "As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you" (RV). Is it not time for you to present yourself before God and say, "Father, look at my hands, my heart, and my head: Jesus has cleansed me"? And He will answer, "Son, go work to day in My vineyard."

I too could now say to myself: Be no longer a chaos, but a World, or even worldkin. Produce! Produce! Were it but the pitifullest, infinitesimal fraction of a product, produce it in God's name! 'Tis the utmost that thou hast in thee: out with it then. Up, Up! Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy whole might. Work while it is called to-day, for the night cometh, wherein no man can work.

Carlyle¹⁷

This Loneliness in Service is so subtle that if we try and state it in words we almost lose it. It is so easy to coarsen this sublime theme by a word misunderstood, so difficult to put it in any language saving when the heart is in profoundest communion with God. We are so apt to consider work as something done by an individual and yet separate from him. The essential peculiarity of the work of the sanctified servant of God is that he never can be separated from his work without a violent outrage. We are ever apt to overestimate the aloneness of our Lord prefigured by the types and symbols of the old dispensation: the scapegoat, the lamb, and the shed blood; and we ignore that the true prototype of our Lord is the prophet. How continually the prophets break out with some arresting statement that seems fit only in the mouth of our Lord! How often the Psalmist bursts out with utterances of an unaccountable touch, the full meaning of which is found for us in Jesus Christ alone. These prophets, these workmen of God, foreshadowed Jesus Christ in their measure, and experienced the awful loneliness of a servant of God. Their desolation sprang from no illusion of weakness, nor from any horror-stricken doubt of God, any more than did the profound cry of our Lord-"My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" We discern in the personal, passionate pain of the prophets the true outlines of the workman of God. The character of the prophet is essential to his work. In all other work the character of the workman is made subservient to his skill.

"But the spirit of the LORD clothed itself with Gideon" (Judges 6:34 RV mg). Before the Holy Spirit can materialise in the saints of this present age as He did in the prophets of old, a perfect holiness, physical, moral and spiritual, is necessary. This is what Jesus Christ has wrought for us in the Atonement, and this is what is meant by Entire Sanctification. On that foundation the true elements of prophecy are built. A prophet is not a sanctified gypsy telling fortunes, but one who speaks as he is moved by the Holy Spirit within.

To make disciples, then, we must have been made disciples ourselves. There is no royal road to sainthood and discipleship. The way of the Cross is the only way. We see God only from a pure heart, never from an able intellect. The elements in the lot of a workman for God are those that first of all make him a workman, and then constitute him a toiler for God. The workman for God in all probability will have to go the way his Lord and Master went. The first flush of the career of a workman for God may be in glory and acclaim, leading to blessed transfiguration; then there comes the descent into the valley, deeper and deeper, until in that lonely place, toiling unseen, unknown, unmarked, he reaches in the spirit of travail that sublime agony of loneliness when "Father" seems frozen in his heart, and he cries out, "Why hast Thou forsaken me?" It is not a cry of weakness, nor of imperfection; it is not a cry of doubt in God; it is a cry from the last touch of heroism on the workman for God who is being made conformable unto the death of Jesus, not for his own sake or his own perfecting, but for the work of God. It takes him to the threshold of that awful abvss of the Master Workman Himself, where He was left alone with death and became as lonely as sin, and amid the spiritual ramifications of that unshared, unfathomed experience, He cried out, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" The workman for God dare not talk, he dare not speculate; but in wonder, love and awe he thanks God for "the glory and the passion of this midnight," because it has brought him to the threshold of an understanding of the loneliness of Jesus Christ Who was "made to be sin on our behalf; that we might become the righteousness of God in Him" (RV).

And that most closely we may follow Him, By suffering, have all hearts of men allowed. Is suffering then more near and dear to God For its own sake than joy is? God forbid! We know not its beginning nor its end; Is it a sacrifice? a test? a school? . . . We suffer. Why we suffer,—that is hid

Alone with God

Still, still with Thee, when purple morning breaketh,

When the bird waketh, and the shadows flee; Fairer than morning, lovelier than daylight, Dawns the sweet consciousness, I am with Thee.

Alone with Thee, amid the mystic shadows, The solemn hush of nature newly born; Alone with Thee, in breathless adoration, In the calm dews and freshness of the morn.

All these may draw upon Thy power, Thy mercy may command, And still outflows Thy silent sea Immutable and grand.

Faber¹⁹

"In Thy presence is fulness of joy; in Thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore" (Psalm 16:11 RV). This walk alone with God is an incommunicable rapture, that leads more and more through Eternal Pleasure, Eternal Prosperity, and Eternal Paradise.

Eternal Pleasure

Therefore, behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak to her heart. And I will give her vineyards from thence, and the valley of Troubling for a door of hope: and she shall sing there, as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt. And it shall be at that day, saith the LORD, that thou shalt call Me, My husband, and shalt call me no more, My master. . . . I will betroth thee unto Me in righteousness, and in judgement, and in lovingkindness, and in mercies. I will even betroth thee unto Me in faithfulness: and thou shalt know the LORD. (Hosea 2:14–16, 19–20 RV mg)

All that we know of bliss and pleasure in other domains of friendship and fellowship with kindred minds, is but the faintest foreshadowing of the unspeakable pleasure of this communion with God alone. How unhesitatingly the language of Scripture mentions human relationships as the only means of suggesting the unspeakable pleasure of this eternal fellowship with God. Just as the language of lovers is inexplicable to an unloving nature, so the language of the heart in its aloneness with God is inexplicable to those not in a like relationship. There are things "not lawful for a man to utter," not because they transcend language, but because they are based on the sacred intimacy of an individual soul united to God in love. It is perilously possible to take the language of love and degrade it into a language that grovels; and it is perilously possible to take the language of the soul alone in these walks of eternal pleasure and degrade it into a wallowing horror.

The daring sufficiency of the Song of Songs is an example of how easy it is to make that sublime Song grovel in Eastern voluptuousness and sensual wallowing; but for the soul walking alone with God its language is the choicest in the whole Bible to adequately express the eternal pleasure of this blessed loneliness—

Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth: for thy love is better than wine. Thine ointments have a goodly fragrance; thy name is as ointment poured forth; therefore do the virgins love thee. Draw me; we will run after thee: the king hath brought me into his chambers: we will be glad and rejoice in thee, we will make mention of thy love more than of wine: in uprightness [mg] do they love thee. (Song of Solomon 1:2–4 RV)

Possibly only when we stand alone with God are we in a fit condition to understand the strong words of Jesus, and not abuse them—"Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast your pearls before the swine, lest haply they trample them under their feet, and turn and rend you" (Matthew 7:6 RV).

"And this is life eternal, that they should know Thee the only true God, and Him whom Thou didst send, even Jesus Christ" (John 17:3 RV). This constitutes eternal life—an increasing knowledge of the unfathomable God and His only begotten Son. This is Eternal Pleasure—to know Him! How far removed it is from our conceptions of rewards and crowns and heaven. The way of a soul walking alone with God, unless we know this same unspeakable fellowship, seems a way overshadowed with sadness and insane with fanaticism.

I stand upon the mount of God, With sunlight in my soul; I hear the storms in vales beneath, I hear the thunder's roll.

But I am calm with Thee, my God, Beneath these glorious skies; And to the height on which I stand Nor storms nor cloud can rise.

Oh! this is life! oh, this is joy!
My God to find Thee so;
Thy face to see, Thy voice to hear,
And all Thy love to know!

Eternal Prosperity

The eternal God is thy dwelling place, and underneath are the everlasting arms: and he thrust out the enemy from before thee, and said, Destroy. And Israel dwelleth in safety, the fountain of Jacob alone, in a land of corn and wine; yea, his heavens drop down dew. Happy art thou, O Israel: who is like unto thee, a people saved by the LORD, the shield of thy help, and that is the sword of thy excellency! and thine enemies shall submit themselves unto thee; and thou shalt tread upon their high places. (Deuteronomy 33:27–29 RV)

A man's idea of prosperity is according to where his hopes are founded—on God or on a hearsay God; on the living God, or on ideas of God. It is in the way alone with God that the soul says with Job—"I had heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth Thee, wherefore I loathe my words [mg], and repent in dust and ashes" (Job 42:5–6 RV).

Alone with God! It is there that what is hid with God is made known—God's ideals, God's hopes, God's doings. The intense individual responsibility of walking amongst men from the standpoint of being alone with the real God, is never guessed until we do stand alone with God. It is a hidden thing, so hidden that it seems not only untenable but a wild quixotic thing to do, and so it would be if God were not known to be real. This idea is put in refreshing language by Dr. Josiah Strong:²⁰

The supreme need of the world is a Real God; not the Great Perhaps, but the great "I am"; not a God of yesterday; not an "absentee" God, but one who is precisely here; not a Sunday God, but an every day God. . . . Vital religion always realises God, while irreligion or worldliness is a practical denial of Him; it is living as if God were not; it is leaving out of account the greatest fact of the universe, which is of course the greatest blunder in the universe.

Accounting the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he looked unto the recompense of reward. . . . He endured, as seeing Him who is invisible. (Hebrews 11:26–27 RV)

Alone with God! All hope and all aspiration springs from that source, and consequently all prosperity is measured from that source, and prosperity that springs from any other source is looked upon as disastrous. The pleasure of the Lord prospered in the hand of His Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, by the disastrous way of failure, as the world measures prosperity.

Yet it pleased the LORD to bruise Him; He hath put Him to grief: when thou shalt make His soul an offering for sin, He shall see His seed, He shall prolong His days, and the pleasure of the LORD shall prosper in His hand. (Isaiah 53:10)

Going alone with God, the pleasure of Jehovah prospering in our hands! What a pleasure, and what a prosperity! Our Lord walked alone with God; He despised the shame and the bruising, because His Father was working out His good pleasure in His own inscrutable way; and now we follow in His steps, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in our hands.

What is that pleasure? Making disciples. The pleasure of the Lord that prospered in our Lord and Saviour was seeing His seed, that is, all that we understand by Regeneration and Entire Sanctification. The pleasure of the Lord God is seen as we walk alone with God while we live and move and have our being in this world. Unstamped by the pattern and print of the age in which we live, we present so many puzzling features that men are obliged to pause and question, and thus the pleasure of the Lord prospers in our hands.

It is a prosperity that, beginning in the innermost of the innermost, works out to the outermost. A prosperity which transfigures with the beauty of holiness; a prosperity which, as sure as it is inward, will manifest itself to the utmost limit outwardly.

He fixed thee 'mid this dance
Of plastic circumstance,
This Present, thou, forsooth, wouldst fain arrest:
Machinery just meant
To give thy soul its bent,
Try thee and turn thee forth, sufficiently impressed.

Look not thou down but up!
To uses of a cup,
The festal board, lamp's flash and trumpet's peal,
The new wine's foaming flow,
The Master's lips a-glow!
Thou, heaven's consummate cup, what need'st thou with earth's wheel?

But I need, now as then,
Thee, God, who mouldest men:
And since, not even while the whirl was worst,
Did I,—to the wheel of life
With shapes and colours rife, Bound dizzily,—mistake my end, to slake Thy thirst:
So, take and use Thy work:

Amend what flaws may lurk,

What strain o' the stuff, what warpings past the aim!
My times be in Thy hand!
Perfect the cup as planned!
Let age approve of youth, and death complete the same!

Eternal Paradise

That they may all be one; even as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be in us: that the world may believe that Thou didst send Me. And the glory which Thou hast given Me I have given unto them; that they may be one, even as we are one; I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be perfected into one; that the world may know that Thou didst send Me, and lovedst them, even as Thou lovedst Me. Father, that which Thou hast given Me, I will that, where I am, they also may be with Me; that they may behold My glory, which Thou hast given Me: for Thou lovedst Me before the foundation of the world. O righteous Father, the world knew Thee not, but I knew Thee; and these knew that Thou didst send Me; and I made known unto them Thy name, and will make it known; that the love wherewith Thou lovedst Me may be in them, and I in them. (John 17:21–26 RV)

Paradise is a beautiful word, with an emphatic meaning which no other word conveys, viz.: spiritual and material.

And the city hath no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine upon it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb, the lamp thereof. And the nations shall walk by the light thereof: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory into it. And the portals thereof shall in no wise be shut by day (for there shall be no night there): and they shall bring the glory and the honour of the nations into it: and there shall in no wise enter into it anything common, or he that doeth an abomination and a lie: but only they which are written in the Lamb's book of life. (Revelation 21:23–27 RV mg)

This Eternal Paradise, entered now by those who walk alone with God, must not be spiritualised by a process of abstractions into a mere inward state of soul. This Mother Earth will yet be governed by the saints. "The kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ" (RV). The saints, with a tested, heroic mastership of earth and air and sky, will reign in a very real concrete Paradise. Just as we infer from the tangible material world an unseen spiritual substratum, so there is to be a concrete world which will be but the manifestation of this unseen spiritual substratum, whereby we may infer its character. It is "by their fruits" that character is known, and also society. From this present order of things we infer an unseen power making for disintegration and destruction, yet in every human heart there lurks an implicit hope of a different order. These hopes ever fade and fall, and the vision tarries so long that hearts grow sick and embittered, and all seems to end in a poet's song, or a lover's passionate extravagance, or a dreamer's dream. But to the soul alone with God the secret is known and made real, and already a Paradise has begun that presages a grander and a greater blessedness than has entered into the heart of man to imagine. The Paradisaic kingdom which cannot be seen to-day by those who have never been alone with God, will one day, at a sudden catastrophic stage, alter the configuration of the globe.

The wilderness and the [parched land] shall be glad; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: . . . they shall see the glory of the LORD, the excellency of our God. (Isaiah 35:1–2 RV)

It is not a flimsy, false dream that springs in the human heart, but a real visible paradise of God; the hope "springs eternal in the human breast" and will be abundantly satisfied. To spiritualise it into the vague and inane is a sickly, unreal tendency.

Alone with God, we have the glory that Jesus had, here and now, the glory of His holiness; and being "transformed into the same image from glory to glory" (RV), on and on the saints go to each place of attainment, following the Lamb "whithersoever He goeth."

And wonder of wonders, that is, after all, only the end of the stages in time; but when time shall be no more, and the basal principles of our thoughts will no more be time and space—how can we conceive what it will be like!

But as is written, Things which eye saw not, and ear heard not, and which entered not into the heart of man, whatsoever things God prepared for them that love Him. (1 Corinthians 2:9 RV) Beloved, now are we children of God, and it is not yet made manifest what we shall be. We know that, if He shall be manifested, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him even as He is. (1 John 3:2 RV)

There's a fancy some lean to and others hate—
That when this life is ended, begins
New work for the soul in another state.
Where it strives and gets weary, loses and wins:
Where the strong and the weak, this world's congeries,

Repeat in large what they practised in small,
Through life after life in unlimited series;
Only the scale's to be changed, that's all.
Yet I hardly know. When a soul has seen
By the means of Evil that Good is best,
And, through earth and its noise, what is heaven's serene,—

When our faith in the same hath stood the test—

Why, the child grown man, you burn the rod, The uses of labour are surely done; There remaineth a rest for the people of God And I have troubles.

Robert Browning

THE DISCIPLINE OF PATIENCE

Yea, wait thou on the LORD. Psalm 27:14 (RV)

The subject of Patience is so largely dealt with in the Bible that it ought to have a much larger place in our Bible studies and talks.

Patience to most minds is associated with exhaustion, or with "patients," consequently anything robust and vigorous seems naturally to connect itself with all that is impatient and impetuous. Patience is the result of well-centred strength. To "wait on the LORD," and to "rest in the LORD," is an indication of a healthy, holy faith, while impatience is an indication of an un-healthy, un-holy unbelief. This well-centred strength, or Patience, forms a prominent characteristic in the Bible revelation of God, of our Lord Jesus Christ and of the saints.

Then on our utter weakness and the hush
Of hearts exhausted that can ache no more,
On such abeyance of self and swoon of soul
The Spirit hath lighted oft, and let men see
That all our vileness alters God no more Than our dimmed eyes can quench the stars in heaven:

From years ere years were told, through all the sins, Unknown sins of innumerable men, God is Himself for ever, and shows to-day As erst in Eden, the eternal hope.

Frederic W. H. Myers

The Patience of God

Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the LORD, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? (Isaiah 40:28)

The God of patience. (Romans 15:5)

How unmoved by, while yet unremoved from, the affairs of men is our God! He changes not and yet He does not reign in remote regions away from men; He is in the thick of all men's perplexities and loves. The gods of other religions are unmoved by men's troubles simply because they do not care; but our God in His love and compassion imposes on Himself our weakness and pain, while yet He is unmoved from the well-centred strength of His mighty purposes. If we trace in the Bible with reverence the lines along which the patience of God most obviously runs, it will well enrich us. Let us trace, for instance, the Patience of God with—

The World's Ages

According to the Bible, the history of the world is divided into Ages—(1) the pre-Adamic; (2) the Eden; (3) the Antediluvian; (4) the Mosaic; (5) the Church; (6) the Kingdom; and the remarkable thing in the record of the Ages that have been, and that are, and that are going to be, is that each Age ends in apparent disaster. In this connection read carefully (1) Genesis 1:2; (2) Genesis 3:24; (3) Genesis 7:19; (4) John 19:15-16; (5) 2 Thessalonians 2:1-4; (6) Revelation 20:7–9. This is very unexpected for one would naturally suppose that the Bible would show how successful God had been with the world's Ages, successful, that is, in the way we count success, and because the Bible does not prove this, men's minds revolt and they say that all God's plans have been overthrown by the devil and God has been checkmated, so to speak; or else they say that the Bible view is simply the fancy of a few oriental religious men of genius and is not of any use to us nowadays.

Perhaps the illustration of an artist at work on a great canvas will throw more light on the attitude of the God of the Bible to the world's Ages. In the preliminary stages of his work the artist may sketch in charcoal and for days execute sketches of varying excellence, and the beauty of these sketches may win our admiration. Then one day we are perplexed to find that he has begun to confuse and obliterate with paints all his beautiful drawings; but he is really interpreting the meaning of those sketches which was hidden from us.

Or take the old-fashioned way of erecting a scaffolding and building the structure inside. The scaffolding may be so skilfully erected and admirably proportioned and be there for so long that we come to consider this the scheme in the mind of the architect. Then one day we see the loosening of ropes and planks and ladders, and the turmoil destroys for ever the skill and beautiful proportion of the scaffolding; all that is happening is but to clear the real building that it may stand nobly before all as a thing of beauty. There is something similar to the Bible revelation of the way God deals with the world's Ages.

There have been prophets and students who handle the Bible like a child's box of bricks; they explain to us the design and structure and purpose; but as time goes on things do not work out in their way at all. They have mistaken the scaffolding for the structure, while all the time God is working out His purpose with a great and undeterred patience.

The Lord is not slack concerning His promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. (2 Peter 3:9)

There are no dates In His fine leisure.

Then we might trace the Patience of God with—

The World's Anarchy

And GOD saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth. . . . And it grieved Him at His heart. (Genesis 6:5–6)

For He said, Surely they are My people. . . . But they rebelled, and vexed His holy Spirit. (Isaiah 63:8, 10)

Every other view of sin, saving the Bible view, looks on sin as a disease, a weakness, a blunder, an infirmity; the Bible revelation shows sin to be an anarchy, not a missing of the mark merely, but a refusal to aim at the mark. Sin is that disposition of selfrule which is enmity against God (see Romans 8:7), and as one traces right away from Genesis the clear indication of God's patience with this anarchy, His working out of the Atonement which deals with the fundamental disposition of anarchy against Himself, one reaches the unfathomable, supernatural patience of God. During the ages, human history proves that sin in man makes his heart naturally atheistic. We are all atheists at heart, and the whole world is but a gigantic palace of mirrors wherein we see ourselves reflected, and we call the reflection, God.

Know ye that the LORD He is God: it is He that hath made us, and not we ourselves. . . . (Psalm 100:3)

Isaiah 63:8, 10, already quoted, exhibits the patience of God with this disposition of anarchy in His own children. In the New Testament this spirit of anarchy is called "the old man, the carnal mind," which, until it is crucified by identification with the Cross of Christ, will continually rebel and vex His Holy Spirit. It is this spirit of anarchy that has confused the interpretation of God's dealings with men.

Lastly, we might look at the Patience of God with—

The World's Acknowledgement

In returning and rest shall ye be saved; . . . and ye would not. . . . And therefore will the LORD wait, that He may be gracious unto you. (Isaiah 30:15, 18)

How long-suffering our God is until we acknowledge Him, and how full of misery and perplexity and sorrow, and worse, men are, until they do acknowledge God.

Erasmus in a wonderful passage shows the unnecessary anguish he went through before he basked in the realisation of the acknowledged love of God:

I must confess it was the very bitterness of extremity that first compelled me to love Him, though of Himself no less lovely than love itself. It was the sharp sauce of affliction that gave edge to mine affections, and sharpened mine appetite to that sweet meat that endureth to everlasting life. But now having had some little foretaste of Him, I am ever in a holy ecstasy, so ravished, so transported, with a fervent desire of Him and of His presence, that where I am, there am I not; and where I am not, there I am. The soul is where it loveth, not where it dwelleth.

But God commendeth His own love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. (Romans 5:8 RV)

The phrase "His own love" is very beautiful; it is God's own peculiar individual love, just as the love of a mother is her own peculiar love, and the love of a father is his own peculiar love. Every different kind of love illustrates some aspect of God's love; but it must not be forgotten that the love of God is His own peculiar love. The word translated "commendeth" conveys the meaning of recommend. Because of the disposition arising from anarchy against God, men do not see or believe that the Cross of Christ is the expression of God's own love; but when a man is convicted of sin, he begins to discern the marvellously patient love of God, and as he looks at the Cross his heart slowly realises—"Surely now I see—He has borne my griefs, and carried my sorrows: yet I did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted; but He was wounded for my transgression." Such a moral vision is an acknowledgement of God's own patient love with a twofold verdict—first, that God is love, and second, that the natural heart of man is desperately wicked.

Until the world acknowledges God, very often the outcome of the patience of God is that His purposes are carried out in man's bad time, and not, as so many say, in God's good time. God's good time is, Now, and His children as well as others cause the repetition of His words in Isaiah 30:15, "In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength: and ye would not." Beware of going to sleep on the decrees of God. In regard to the fulfilment of some of these decrees, such as our salvation and sanctification and sacramental service, it is not a submissive waiting that is required, but the flinging up of our hands and the acknowledgement of God's right to us.

There is one solemn, unwelcome word of warning—do not despise God's patience and keep Him waiting beyond the limit.

Knowing this first, that in the last days mockers shall come with mockery, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of His coming? for, from the days that the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. (2 Peter 3:3–4 RV)

The Patience of Our Lord

Looking unto Jesus . . . Who . . . endured the cross, despising shame, and hath sat down at the right hand of the throne of God. For consider Him . . . that ye wax not weary, fainting in your souls. (Hebrews 12:2–3 RV)

In many sections of the Christian community to-day Enthusiasm for Humanity is the main characteristic, but it gives a sudden alteration to this point of view when we consider the life of our Lord Jesus Christ, and notice that His first obedience was to the will of His Father, not to the needs of Humanity. It is a difficult matter to adjust the relationship of these two callings, but the delicate adjustment is brought about by the Spirit of God, for the Spirit and the Word of God ever put first things first, the first thing is love to God and obedience to God, and the second, service to humanity.

Let us consider the subject of the Patience of our Lord under three heads: The Father's Will; the Father's Weakness, and the Father's Waiting.

The Father's Will

The underlying element in Satan's temptation of our Lord is his seeking to remove the "first thing." Satan tempted our Lord, as he tempted the first Adam, to do God's work in His own way; and the underlying point in the strenuous replies of our Lord is always in one direction—God and God's will first. "For I came down from heaven, not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me" (John 6:38). Hebrews 10:7 emphasises this—"Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of Me,) to do Thy will, O God" (cf. Psalm 40:7), and the light thrown on the sufferings of our Lord as an individual will interpret the remarkable statement in Hebrews 5:8 (RV)—"Though He was a Son, yet learned obedience by the things which He suffered."

In speaking of our Lord Jesus Christ we must bear in mind that we are dealing with a unique Being, of Whom it is distinctly said that He "emptied Himself" to marked limitations (see Philippians 2:6–7 RV). This point is mentioned here to show that the sufferings of our Lord did not consist in a wilfulness contrary to His Father's will, but in the fact that He, without question, let God the Father express through His life what the Saviour of the world should be.

Father, if Thou be willing, remove this cup from Me: nevertheless not My will, but Thine, be done. (Luke 22:42)

The patience of our Lord with the Father's will and the Father's purpose is a wonderful topic to study, and it explains also the harsh misunderstanding criticisms that have been made during the past centuries.

The next aspect in which the patience of our Lord exhibits itself is more startling, and at the same time more illuminating, viz., the patience of our Lord with—

The Father's Weakness

The phrase, "the weakness of God," is astonishing, but scriptural. "The weakness of God is stronger than men" (1 Corinthians 1:25). Our astonishment arises from the fact that what we call strength from the natural standpoint may be weakness; and that what God calls strength is too often esteemed by men as weakness. It was so in the life of Jesus Christ judged from the standpoint of the natural man. The Father's weakness is exhibited in the aspects of the Cradle, the Cross, and the Called.

In Isaiah 7:14, the word comes—"Therefore the Lord Himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call His name Immanuel."

How much attention, think you, could the mighty Roman Empire, the tramp of whose legions shook the world and whose laws girdle it till now, pay to that little Babe born of a Jewish peasant girl and laid in a cow's trough! It was beneath the possibility of that gigantic world-power's notice. As G. K. Chesterton has stated:

All the empires and the kingdoms have failed, because of this inherent and continual weakness; they were founded by strong men, and upon strong men, but this one thing, the historic Christian Church, was founded upon a weak man, and for that reason it is indestructible, for no chain is stronger than its weakest link.

The writer points out the thing that we are emphasising, God's ways of working are weakness from man's standpoint.

How patient our Lord ever was with the weakness of God! And He never explains Himself to any man saving as He receives, recognises and relies on the Holy Spirit. Our Lord could have commanded twelve legions of angels to His assistance, but He did not.

Or thinkest thou that I cannot beseech My Father, and He shall even now send Me more than twelve legions of angels? (Matthew 26:53 RV)

What weakness! Our Lord lived thirty years in Nazareth with His brethren who did not believe on Him (John 7:5); He lived three years of popularity, scandal and hatred; fascinated a dozen illiterate men who at the end of three years all forsook Him and fled (Mark 14:50); and finally He was taken by the powers that be and crucified outside the city wall. Judged from every standpoint save the standpoint of the Spirit of God, His life was a most manifest expression of weakness, and the idea would be strong to those in the pagan world who thought anything about Him that surely now He and His crazy tale were stamped out.

It is this factor of weakness that alone expounds the revelation given in the Old Testament as well as in the New

For He grew up before Him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we see Him, there is no beauty that we should desire Him. (Isaiah 53:2 RV)

Yet when man's wisdom is rendered foolishness by the breaking forth of the Spirit of God, he understands the unspeakable wisdom of God and the unspeakable strength of God to lie in what he before called foolishness and weakness.

'Tis the weakness in strength that I cry for! my flesh, that I seek

In the Godhead! I seek and I find it. O Saul, it shall be

A Face like my face that receives thee; a Man like to me,

Thou shalt love and be loved by, for ever! a Hand like this hand

Shall throw open the gates of new life to thee! See the Christ stand!

Robert Browning

What is as weak as one baby? Another! And so our Lord Himself taught that we must all become babes. No wonder Paul says:

For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called. (1 Corinthians 1:26; see also John 3:7 and Matthew 18:2–3)

It is the "baby" weakness which is so misunderstood in the New Testament teaching, and the patience of our Lord with us until we learn the absolute necessity of being born from above is only equalled by His own patience with His Father's will.

But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world . . . ; the weak things of the world . . . ; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, . . . yea, and things which are not. . . . (1 Corinthians 1:27–28)

In every age it has always been the despised crowd that have been called Christians.

The Cross, the climax of our Lord's earthly life, is likewise an exhibition of the weakness of God.

But we preach Christ crucified, unto Jews a stumbling-block, and unto Gentiles foolishness. (1 Corinthians 1:23 RV)

Probably in the Cross more than in any other aspect of our Lord's life do we see the stumbling-block presented to the wisdom of the world. Wise men of intelligence after the flesh cannot understand why God does not speak, and misunderstanding, prejudices, and unbelief prevail among all men until by receiving the Spirit of God as babes they perceive that our Lord Jesus Christ from the Cradle to the Cross is God's great Eternal Word.

Let us look at the final aspect of our Lord's patience—

The Father's Waiting

For He must reign, till He hath put all His enemies under His feet. (1 Corinthians 15:25 RV)

It is vastly important to remember that our duty is to fit our doctrines to our Lord Jesus Christ and not to fit our Lord into our doctrines. Our Lord is God-Man, not half God and half man, but a unique Being revealed from heaven, and the Holy Spirit alone can expound Him. Let us emphasise again what has been already emphasised, viz., that our Lord Incarnate distinctly subjected Himself to limitations.

But of that day or that hour knoweth no one, not even the angels in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father. (Mark 13:32 RV)

Much discussion is thus foreclosed that would otherwise gather round and confuse the life of our Lord and His temptations, in so far as these are disclosed to us. The patience of our Lord with the Father's Waiting is truly a great and wonderful deep. God the Father on occasions witnessed to His Son-"This is My beloved Son: hear Him" (cf. 2 Peter 1:17– 18); but yet God never vindicated His Son to the men of His own generation because it was not the Father's purpose to do so. He left Him to the supreme satire of the Jews on the Cross in silence, and our Lord too was silent, "He opened not His mouth." Read prayerfully Mark 15:29-32, and note what might be termed the "Dilemma of Golgotha" in which Christ's own words were turned into a cruel jest and hurled back into His face while He was on the Cross. The way of sorrow for our Lord was turned into a way of derision. Men laughed while God's heart broke, and thus while hard slanders rose against God and against His Christ, the Father waited, and with pure supernatural patience, the prayer arose from the lips of our Lord—"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do" (Luke 23:34).

And the end is not yet; the Father still waits. It must be borne in mind that the mystery abides. All the poetical things and the mystical things that have been said and written about our Lord are but effusions that appear and disappear while the mind of the unregenerate man alternates between ridicule and confusion.

The patience of God and the patience of our Lord is working to one grand Divine event, and our Lord knows, as He did in the days of His flesh, how all His saints are straitened till it be accomplished.

But I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished! (Luke 12:50)

Right for ever on the scaffold, Wrong for ever on the throne; But that scaffold sways the future, And behind the dim unknown Standeth God within the shadows, Keeping watch upon His own.

James Russell Lowell

The Patience of the Saints

We are bound to give thanks to God always for you, ... for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and in the afflictions which ye endure. (2 Thessalonians 1:3–4 RV)

The life of faith is the life of a soul who has given over every other life but the life of faith. Faith is not an action of the mind, nor of the heart, nor of the will, nor of the sentiment, it is the centring of the entire man in God.

The Patience of Faith

The heroes of faith catalogued in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews were not men who vaguely trusted that "somehow good would be the final goal of ill," they were heroes who died "according to faith" (verse 13 RV mg), not faith in a principle, but faith in a Person Who promises.

Seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us . . . run with patience the race that is set before us. (Hebrews 12:1)

This cloud of witnesses is not a noble army of poets, or dreamers, or thinkers, but a noble army—who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the power of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, from weakness were made strong, waxed mighty in war, turned to flight armies of aliens. (Hebrews 11:33–34 RV)

These mighty acts were not wrought by diplomacy, but by faith in God, and we are urged to run with patience this same way of faith, "looking unto Jesus."

In dealing with the patience of the saints, the subject naturally unfolds itself into the Patience of Faith, the Patience of Hope, and the Patience of Love. We have already indicated the chief matter in the Patience of Faith, viz., faith in a Person Who promises.

The proof of your faith worketh patience. And let patience have its perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, lacking in nothing. (James 1:3–4 RV)

Howbeit when the Son of Man cometh, shall He find the faith on the earth? (Luke 18:8 RV)

Here is the patience and the faith of the saints. (Revelation 13:10 RV)

Here is the patience of the saints, they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus. (Revelation 14:12 RV)

These passages assuredly serve to indicate how prominent a place patience plays in God's plans for His saints. It brings again prominently to the front what was stated earlier, that patience is an indication of strong spiritual health, not of weakness and enervation.

The Patience of Hope

For by hope were we saved. . . . If we hope for that which we see not, then do we with patience wait for it. (Romans 8:24–25 RV)

Let us rejoice in hope of the glory of God... knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, probation; and probation, hope: and hope putteth not to shame. (Romans 5:2–5 RV)

Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. . . . Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts. (James 5:7–8 RV)

I John, your brother and partaker with you in the tribulation and kingdom and patience which are in Jesus. (Revelation 1:9 RV)

The faith of the saints is, as it were, a God-given sixth sense which takes hold on the spiritual facts that are revealed in the Bible. The hope of the saint is the expectation and certainty of human nature transfigured by faith. Let it be borne in mind that hope not transfigured by faith dies. "But we hoped that it was He which should redeem Israel" (Luke 24:21 RV). Hope without faith loses itself in vague speculation, but the hope of the saints transfigured by faith grows not faint, but endures "as seeing Him Who is invisible."

The saint in the discipline of patience enters into an experimental understanding of the patience of God and the patience of our Lord. The saint has been crucified with Christ and testifies—"I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me: and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God" (Galatians 2:20 RV).

The saint bears a strong family likeness to his Lord, "weak in Him" (2 Corinthians 13:4). The saint with a glad alacrity can be humiliated or emptied or despised; he can also with untainted holiness be exalted or filled or abounding (Philippians 4:12). The hope of the saint gives the true value to the things seen and temporal—in fact the real enjoyment of things seen and temporal is alone possible to the saint because he sees them in their true relationship to God, and the sickening emptiness of the worldly-minded who grasp the things seen and temporal as though they were eternal, is unknown to him. The characteristic of the saint is not so much the renunciation of the things seen and temporal as the perfect certainty that these things are but the shows of reality. The patience of hope does not turn men and women into monks and nuns, it gives men and women the right use of this world from another world's standpoint.

"Wherefore we faint not; . . . while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal" (2 Corinthians 4:16, 18 RV).

The Patience of Love

The character produced by the Patience of Hope is one that exhibits the expulsive power of a new affection.

But now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; and the greatest of these is love. (1 Corinthians 13:13 RV)

That the love wherewith Thou lovedst Me may be in them. (John 17:26 RV)

Because thou didst keep the word of My patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of trial. (Revelation 3:10 RV)

There is one sovereign preference in the Bible, viz., love towards God, and that love is not a sentiment, it is the prayerful activity of a perfectly adjusted relationship between God and the saint. Love in the Bible is ONE; it is unique, and the human element is but one aspect of it. It is a love so mighty, so absorbing, so intense that all the mind is emancipated and entranced by God; all the heart is transfigured by the same devotion; all the soul in its living, working, waking, sleeping moments is indwelt and surrounded and enwheeled in the rest of this love. The saint at times soars like the eagle, he runs like the exuberant athlete, he walks with God and knows no reaction, he faints not nor falters in the largeness of the way (see Mark 12:29–31); and, like Tennyson's Sir Galahad, his strength is as the strength of ten, because his heart is pure,

That ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be strong to apprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled unto all the fulness of God. (Ephesians 3:17–19 RV)

The Patience of Love works out in the practical true life of the saint; it is a love that suffers long and is kind. "Love envieth not" (RV).

The saint has one striking characteristic, and that is in loving with a Divine love. Its thirst is not so much to be loved as to be loveable. The characteristics in the life of the saint are the characteristics of our Lord's life. The saint bears a strong family likeness to Jesus Christ.

"The word of My patience" is a striking phrase. It cannot be the patience of pessimism because that was not the characteristic of the patience of our Lord; neither is it the patience of exhaustion, for "He shall not fail nor be discouraged." It is surely the patience of love, the patience of joyfulness, which knows that God reigns and rules and rejoices, and that His joy is our strength.

The patience of the saints may be illustrated by the figure of a bow and arrow in the hands of God. He sees the target and takes aim, He strains the bow, not to breaking-point, however severe the strain may seem to the saint, but to just that point whence the arrow will fly with surest, swiftest speed to the bull's-eye.

The patience of the saints, like the patience of our Lord, puts the sovereignty of God over all the saint's career, and because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, we choose by our free will what God predestinates, for the mind of God, the mind of the Holy Spirit, and the mind of the saint are all held together by a oneness of personal passionate devotion.

Work, for the Day is coming!
Made for the saints of light;
Off with the garments dreary,
On with the armour bright:
Soon will the strife be ended,
Soon all our toils below;
Not to the dark we're tending,
But to the Day we go.

Work, then, the Day is coming!
No time for sighing now!
Harps for the hands once drooping,
Wreaths for the victor's brow,
Now morning Light is breaking,
Soon will the Day appear;
Night shades appal no longer,
Jesus, our Lord, is near.

The material in this volume is taken from notes in classes taught by Oswald Chambers at the Bible Training College, London (1911–15) and from sermons and talks delivered in Britain, America, and Egypt.

Publication History

- As articles: Like many of the OC works published after 1932, most of the contents of Conformed to His Image appeared first as articles in the *BTC Monthly Journal*² before being compiled into a book. These were published between 1945 and 1950
- A longer version of "Memory of Sin in the Saint" appeared as an article in God's Revivalist magazine, October 13, 1910. Most likely, Chambers preached this message at a camp meeting in America during the summer of 1910.
- As a book: The material was published as a book in 1950. Mrs. Chambers often made slight changes in words or phrasing between article and book publication. Her goal was always clarity of her husband's messages.

"Notes on Lamentations" appeared in the BTC Jour-nal in 1947 with a note from Mrs. Chambers saying: "These studies in Lamentations were given at the Bible Training College, following on the series on Jeremiah; it was towards the close of a Session and the Chapters were not taken in detail, consequently brief notes only are available."

Chambers taught the series on Lamentations in November 1913, a time when Biddy Chambers, caring for six-month-old Kathleen,³ may have found it difficult to fulfill all the roles of lady superintendent of the College, wife, mother, and stenographer.

Oswald preached "A Fatal Error of Îndignant Integrity" on Sunday, October 29, 1916, at Zeitoun, Egypt.⁴

CHRISTIAN THINKING

I cannot soar into the heights you show, Nor dive into the deeps that you reveal; But it is much that high things are to know, That deep things are to feel.

Jean Ingelow⁵

The safe position in Christian thinking is to remember that there are deeper depths than we can fathom, higher heights than we can know; it keeps us reverent, keeps us from hardening off into a confined, cabined experience of our own.

Thinking is not of first importance; life is of first importance. Neither in natural nor in spiritual life do we begin by thinking. Christian thinking means thinking on the basis of things, not thinking in pious terms. With many the experience is right, the life of God is there, but there has been no thinking on the basis of things, and when things hit, there is confusion. If we are going to think along Christian lines and know where to place our individual experiences, it is time we exercised ourselves intellectually as well as spiritually.

1. Redemption

The Gospel to me is simply irresistible. Being the man I am, being full of lust and pride and envy and malice and hatred and false good, and all accumulated exaggerated misery—to me the Gospel of the grace of God, and the Redemption of Christ, and the regeneration and sanctification of the Holy Ghost, that Gospel is to me simply irresistible, and I cannot understand why it is not equally irresistible to every mortal man born of woman.

Pascal

Redemption is the great outside fact of the Christian faith; it has to do not only with a man's experience of salvation, but with the basis of his thinking. The revelation of Redemption means that Jesus Christ came here in order that by means of His Death on the Cross He might put the whole human race on a redemptive basis, so making it possible for every man to get back into perfect communion with God. "I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do." What was finished? The redemption of the world. Men are not going to be redeemed; they are redeemed. "It is finished." It was not the salvation of individual men and women like you and me that was finished: the whole human race was put on the basis of Redemption. Do I believe it? Let me think of the worst man I know, the man for whom I have no affinity, the man who is a continual thorn in my flesh, who is as mean as can be; can I imagine that man being presented "perfect in Christ Jesus"? If I can, I have got the beginning of Christian thinking. It ought to be an easy thing for the Christian who thinks to conceive of any and every kind of man being presented "perfect in Christ Jesus," but how seldom we do think! If I am an earnest evangelical preacher I may say to a man, "Oh yes, I believe God can save you," while in my heart of hearts I don't believe there is much hope for him. Our unbelief stands as the supreme barrier to Jesus Christ's work in men's souls. "And He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief" (Matthew 13:58). But once let me get over my own slowness of heart to believe in Jesus Christ's power to save, and I become a real generator of His power to men. "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved"—the solitary, incommunicable place of Jesus in our salvation! Are we banking in unshaken faith on the Redemption, or do we allow men's sins and wrongs to so obliterate Jesus Christ's power to save that we hinder His reaching them? "He that believeth on Me," i.e., active belief based on the Redemption—out of him "shall flow rivers of living water." We have to be so faithful to God that through us may come the awakening of those who have not yet realised that they are redeemed.

We must distinguish between the revelation of Redemption and the experience of regeneration. We don't experience life; we are alive. We don't experience Redemption; we experience regeneration, that is, we experience the life of God coming into our human nature, and immediately the life of God comes in it produces a surface of consciousness, but Redemption means a great deal more than a man is conscious of. The Redemption is not only for mankind, it is for the universe, for the material earth; everything that sin and the devil have touched and marred has been completely redeemed by Jesus Christ. There is a day coming when the Redemption will be actually manifested, when there will be "a new heaven and a new earth," with a new humanity upon it. If Redemption is confounded with regeneration, we get confused. In the majority of cases men have had an experience of regeneration, but they have not thought about what produced the experience, and when the great revelation fact of the Redemption is expounded there is misunderstanding. All that a man experiences is believing in Jesus, but that experience is the gateway into the awe and wonder of the knowledge of God. "And this is life eternal, that they should know Thee the only true God" (RV).

The Bible deals with the fundamental underlying things of human life, and one of these fundamental things is the presence of a disposition of sin in every man. Solidarity means oneness of interests, and the phrase, "the solidarity of the human race" indicates that there is an underlying connection running straight through human life; on the religious side this connection is the heredity of sin, which was introduced into the world through one man, not by the devil-"Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world . . . for that all have sinned" (Romans 5:12), and when the Apostle Paul says, "Knowing this, that our old man was crucified with Him" (RV), he is referring to this heredity. Through the Redemption we have deliverance from the disposition of sin which is within us, and severance from the body of sin to which we are connected by our "old man"; that is, we are absolutely and completely delivered from sin both in disposition and in domination: "Being then made free from sin . . ." Unless the universality of sin is recognised we will never understand the need for the Redemption. What the Redemption deals with is the sin of the whole human race, not primarily with the sins of individuals, but something far more fundamental, viz.: the heredity of sin. Pseudo-evangelism singles out the individual, it prostitutes the terrific meaning of the Redemption into an individual possession, the salvation of my soul.

The basis of Christian thinking is that God has redeemed the world from the possibility of condemnation on account of the heredity of sin, "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." The revelation is not that Jesus Christ was punished for our sins, but "He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." God nowhere holds a man responsible for having inherited the disposition of sin any more than he is held responsible for being born. We have nothing to do with our birth or with what we inherit, because we had no choice in either. A man will say, "If I am not held responsible for having a wrong disposition, what am I held responsible for?" God holds a man responsible for not allowing Jesus Christ to deliver him from the wrong disposition when he sees that that is what He came to do. A man gets the seal of condemnation when he sees the Light, and prefers darkness (see John 3:19).

If you look upon Jesus Christ from the commonsense standpoint you will never discern who He is; but if you look upon Him as God "manifested in the flesh" (RV) for the purpose of putting the whole human race back to where God designed it to be, you get the meaning of Redemption. The great marvellous revelation of Redemption is that it atones for everyone; men are "condemned to salvation" through the Cross of Christ. Discipleship is another matter. There are things to be brought about in this world that can only be done through those of us who are prepared to fulfil the conditions of discipleship. On the basis of the Redemption I can, by committing myself to Jesus Christ and by receiving His Spirit as a gift, become a disciple in my actual life; that is, I can exhibit in my mortal flesh "the life also of Jesus."

2. Man

... what is man, that Thou art mindful of him? (Psalm 8:4)

(a) Man and Mankind

And God created man in His own image, in the image of God created He him, male and female created He them. (Genesis 1:27 RV)

There is only one Begotten Son of God, one created son of God, and multitudes of regenerated sons of God through the Redemption. These three stand in different categories.

The Bible speaks of only two men—Adam and Jesus Christ. "Mankind" is the term applied to the whole race of men, the mass of human beings. God did not make us in His own image; He made the Federal Head of the race in His image. "In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made He him; male and female created He them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam ['Man,' mg]" (Genesis 5:1–2 RV). Both man and woman are required for the completed creation of God. Jesus Christ is the last Adam in this sense, viz.: that He reveals the characteristics of El-Shaddai, the Father-Mother God, all vested in the unique manifestation of the Incarnation.

(b) Man as He Was

And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. (Genesis 2:7)

Man as God created him is a revelation fact, not a fact we get at by our common-sense. We have never seen Man. God created the earth and "formed man of the dust of the ground," that is, God did not make man's body by a creative fiat, He deliberately builded it out of the dust of created matter according to a design in the Divine mind. Adam and Jesus Christ both came direct from the hand of God. We are not creations of God, we are pro-created through progenitors, the heredity of the human race is mixed; that accounts for all the perplexities. "And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground"—there is nothing the matter with matter; what has gone wrong is the infection of material things by sin, which is not material. Sin is not in matter and material things; if it were, it would be untrue to say that Jesus Christ, who "was made in the likeness of men," was "without sin."

Genesis 2:7 reveals that man's nature was a spiritual, sensuous nature—he was made of the dust of the ground, and God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. These two things, dust and Divinity, make up man. It is impossible for us to conceive what Adam was like before the Fall; his body must have been dazzling with light through his spiritual communion with God. When he took his rule over himself he not only lost his communion with God, lost the covering of glory and light inconceivable to us, he lost the dominion God intended him to have had—"Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of Thy hands" (Psalm 8:6). Men who are their own masters are masters of nothing else. A man may feel he ought to be master of the life in the sea and air and earth, but he can only be master on the line God designed he should, viz.: that he recognised God's dominion over him. The only Being who ever walked this earth as God designed man should was Jesus Christ. He was easily Master of all created things because He maintained a steadfast obedience to the word and the will of His Father. "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey Him?" (Matthew 8:27 RV). Man's personal powers are apt to be looked at as a marvellous promise of what he is going to be; the Bible looks at man as a ruin of what he was designed to be. There have come down in mankind remnants, broken remnants, of the first creation, they are evidence of the magnificent structure God made in the beginning, but not promises of what man is going to be.

(c) Man as He Is

... and were by nature the children of wrath. (Ephesians 2:3)

The words "ye are of your father the devil," John 8:44, were not addressed by Jesus to men generally, but to persistent religious disbelievers in Himself.

"By nature the children of wrath." The love of God and the wrath of God are obverse sides of the same thing, like two sides of a coin. The wrath of God is as positive as His love. God cannot be in agreement with sin. When a man is severed from God the basis of his moral life is chaos and wrath, not because God is angry like a Moloch, it is His constitution of things. The wrath of God abides all the time a man persists in the way that leads away from God; the second he turns, he is faced with His love. Wrath is the dark line in God's face, and is expressive of His hatred of sin. Civilisation is the gloss over chaos and wrath, we are so sheltered that we are blinded to our need of God, and when calamity comes there is nothing to hold to. Over and over again in the history of the world man has made life into chaos. Men try to find their true life in everything but God, but they cannot, they find the "insistence of the Feet" behind them all the time.

But with unhurrying chase, And unperturbed pace, Deliberate speed, majestic instancy, They beat—and a Voice beat More instant than the Feet— "All things betray thee, who betrayest Me."

> The Hound of Heaven Francis Thompson⁷

Every love and justice and nobility in the world is loyal to Jesus Christ, and only loyal to me when I recognise Him as their Source. The Incarnation is the very heart of God manifested on the plane of chaos and wrath; what Jesus Christ went through in a Time phase is indicated in such words as these, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" Jesus Christ came right straight down into the very depths of wrath, He clothed Himself with the humanity of the race that had fallen and could not lift itself, and in His own person He annihilated the wrath until there is "no condemnation," no touch of the wrath of God, on those who are "in Christ Jesus."

(d) Man as He Will Be

. . . He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son. (Romans 8:29)

God's order is seen in the first and the last; the middle is the record of man's attempt to arrange things in his own way. Man is to be again in the image of God, not by evolution, but by Redemption. The meaning of Redemption is not simply the regeneration of individuals, but that the whole human race is rehabilitated, put back to where God designed it to be, consequently any member of the human race can have the heredity of the Son of God put into him, viz.: Holy Spirit, by right of what Jesus did on the Cross. The task which confronted Jesus Christ was that He had to bring man, who is a sinner, back to God, forgive him his sin, and make him as holy as He is Himself; and He did it single-handed. The revelation is that Jesus Christ, the last Adam, was "made to be sin" (RV), the thing which severed man from God, and that He put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself—"that we might become the righteousness of God in Him." He lifted the human race back, not to where it was in the first Adam, He lifted it back to where it never was, viz.: to where He is Himself. "And it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is."

3. Sin

To-day the Bible revelation of sin as a positive thing has been revolted against, and sin is dealt with only as something which is ostensibly wrong; the Bible view is that there is something profoundly wrong at the basis of things. Sin is a revelation fact, not a common-sense fact. No natural man is ever bothered about sin; it is the saint, not the sinner, who knows what sin is. If you confound sin with sins, you belittle the Redemption, make it "much ado about nothing." It is nonsense to talk about the need of Redemption to enable a man to stop committing sins—his own will power enables him to do that, a decent education will prevent him from breaking out into sinful acts, but to deny that there is an heredity of sin running straight through the human race aims a blasphemous blow at the Redemption. The only word that expresses the enormity of sin is "Calvary."

Guilt remains guilt; you cannot bully God into any such blessing as turns guilt to merit, or penalty to rewards.

Theen

Ibsen saw sin, but not Calvary; not the Son of God as Redeemer. If it cost God Calvary to deal with sin, we have no business to make light of it.

God created Adam innocent, that is, he was intended to develop, not from evil to good, but from the natural to the spiritual by obedience, it was to be a natural progress. Adam switched off from God's design, instead of maintaining his dependence on God he took his rule over himself, and thereby introduced sin into the world. Sin is not wrong doing, it is wrong being, deliberate and emphatic independence of God. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world... for that all have sinned" (Romans 5:12). It is not now a question of development, the problem is that an opposing force has come in which always says "I won't" and never can be made to say "I will." "I won't" is not imperfect "I will"; it never develops into "I will," its very nature is "shan't" and "won't." Sin is mutiny against God's rule; not vileness of conduct, but red-handed anarchy. When you get sin revealed in you, you know that that phrase is not too strong. It is not that men are conscious anarchists—the devil is the only being in whom sin is conscious anarchy—but that a man perceives that that is the nature of sin once the light of God is thrown upon it; it is "enmity against God," not "at enmity," it is enmity. This opposing principle is abnormal, it was not in human nature as God designed it. The exposition of the nature of sin rarely enters into my human consciousness, when it does I know there is nothing in my spirit to deliver me from it, I am powerless; "sold under sin," said Paul. "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin."

Bear in mind that it requires the Holy Ghost to convict a man of sin; any man knows that immorality is wrong, his conscience tells him it is; but it takes the Holy Ghost to convince a man that the thing he most highly esteems, viz.: his own self-government, is "an abomination in the sight of God" (RV). There is nothing more highly esteemed among men than self-realisation, but it is the one thing of which Jesus Christ is the enemy because its central citadel is independence of God. If a man can stand on his own feet morally—and many a man can—what does he want with Jesus Christ and His salvation? with forgiveness? Some men are driven to God by appalling conviction of sins, but conviction of sins is not conviction of sin. Conviction of sin never comes as an elementary experience. If you try to convict a man of sin to begin with you draw him to a plan of salvation, but not to Jesus Christ.

The essence of sin is my claim to my right to myself, it goes deeper down than all the sins that ever were committed. Sin can't be forgiven because it is not an act; you can only be forgiven for the sins you commit, not for an heredity. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins": sin must be cleansed by the miracle of God's grace. It does not awaken antipathy in a man when you tell him God will forgive him his sins because of what Jesus did on the Cross, but it does awaken antipathy when you tell him he has to give up his right to himself. Nothing is so much resented as the idea that I am not to be my own master. If any man will be My disciple, said Jesus, "let him deny himself," i.e., deny his right to himself, not give up external sins, those are excrescences. The point is, am I prepared deliberately to give up my right to myself to Jesus Christ? prepared to say, "Yes, take complete control"? If I am, Jesus Christ has gained a disciple. We don't go in for making disciples to-day, it takes too long; we are all for passionate evangelism—taken up with adding to the statistics of "saved souls," adding to denominational membership, taken up with the things which show splendid success. Jesus Christ took the long, long trail—"If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself"—"Take time to make up your mind." Men were not to be swept into the Kingdom on tidal waves of evangelism, not to have their wits paralysed by supernatural means; they were to come deliberately, knowing what they were doing. One life straight through to God on the ground of discipleship is more satisfactory in His sight than numbers who are saved but go no further. Over and over again men and women who should stand in the forefront for God are knocked clean out. When a crisis comes, the reason is not external wrongdoing, but something has never been given up, there is something in which Jesus Christ has not had His right of way, and the discipleship is marred. God will give us ample opportunity of proving whether we have ever really given up the right to ourselves to Jesus Christ. The one who has offers no hindrance to the working of the Holy Spirit through him.

4. New Birth

As soon as we begin to examine the foundations of our salvation we are up against the thoughts of God, and as Christians we ought to be busy thinking God's thoughts after Him. That is where we fall short; we are delighted with the fact that "once I was this, and now I am that," but simply to have a vivid experience is not sufficient if we are to be at our best for God. It is because of the refusal to think on Christian lines that Satan has come in as angel of light and switched off numbers of God's children in their head, with the result that there is a divorce between heart and head. There is nothing simpler under heaven than to become a Christian, but after that it is not easy; we have to leave "the word of the beginning of Christ," and "press on unto full growth" (Hebrews 6:1 RV mg).

Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. (John 3:3)

There is no natural law whereby a man can be born a second time—Nicodemus was right there: How can a man be born when he is old? No man ought to need to be born again; the fact that he does indicates that something has gone wrong with the human race. According to modern thinking, man is a great being in the making; his attainments are looked on as a wonderful promise of what he is going to be; we are obsessed with the evolutionary idea. Jesus Christ talks about a revolution—"Ye must be born again." The evolutionary idea doesn't cover all the facts. Not every man needs to be converted; conversion simply means turning in another direction, it may be a right or a wrong direction; but every man needs to be born from above if he is going to see the kingdom of God. In listening to some presentations of the Gospel you get the impression that a man has to be a blackguard before Jesus Christ can do anything for him. It is true that Jesus Christ can make a saint out of any material, but the man down-and-out in sin is not the only class He deals with. It was to Nicodemus, a godly upright man, not to a sinner as we understand the term, that He said, "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." "Class yourself with the whole human race, it is necessary for you, the Teacher of Israel, to be born again." It is easier to think about the sensational cases of men being transformed and lifted into a new realm by God's grace, but there are hundreds of men who are not sinners in the external sense. Does Jesus Christ do anything for them?

Many Christians don't seem to know what happened to them when they were born again, that is why they continually go back to the initial experience of having had their sins forgiven, they don't "press on unto full growth." In the New Testament new birth is always spoken of in terms of sanctification, not of salvation; to be saved means that a man receives the gift of eternal life, which is "the gift of God"; sanctification means that his spirit becomes the birthplace of the Son of God. "My little children, of whom I am again in travail until Christ be formed in you" (Galatians 4:19 RV). If Jesus Christ is going to be in me, He must come into me from the outside; He must be "formed" in me. It is not a question of being saved from hell, the Redemption has to do with that; this is the Redemption at work in my conscious life. I become a "Bethlehem" for the life of the Son of God. The part of human nature is to sacrifice itself to nourish that life, and every now and again there are things demanded by the life of the Son of God in me that my human nature neither likes nor understands. What Simeon said to Mary—"A sword shall pierce through thine own soul" (RV)—is true of my human nature. Am I willing for my human nature to be sacrificed in order that the life of the Son of God in me may be nourished, or do I only want Him to see me through certain difficulties? The way the life of the Son of God is nourished in me is by prayer and Bible revelation, and by obedience when a crisis comes.

When I am born again my human nature is not different, it is the same as before, I am related to life in the same way, I have the same bodily organs, but the mainspring is different, and I have to see now that all my members are dominated by the new disposition (see Romans 6:13, 19). There is only one kind of human nature, and that is the human nature we have all got, and there is only one kind of holiness, the holiness of Jesus Christ. Give Him "elbowroom," and He will manifest Himself in you, and other people will recognise Him. Human beings know human beings too well to mistake where goodness comes from; when they see certain characteristics they will know they come only from the indwelling of Jesus. It is not the manifestation of noble human traits, but of a real family likeness to Jesus. It is His gentleness, His patience, His purity, never mine. The whole art of spirituality is that my human nature should retire and let the new disposition have its way. We are told to "follow His steps," but we can't do it; the heredity in us is not the same as it is in Jesus. Anyone who reads the Sermon on the Mount with his eyes open knows that something must happen if it is going to be lived out in him, for he has not the goods on board to produce the result. There is only one Being who can live the Sermon on the Mount and that is the Son of God. If I will walk in the light as God is in the light, then the holy nature of Jesus manifests itself in me. It is not that I receive an impartation of the Divine nature and then am left to work it out by myself— Jesus Christ "is made unto us . . . sanctification," that is, He is the holy nature which we receive.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit," said Jesus, because it is through that poverty I enter His Kingdom; I cannot enter it as a good man or woman, I can only enter it as a complete pauper. The knowledge of my poverty brings me to the frontier where Jesus Christ works, as long as a man is sufficient for himself, God can do nothing for him. A man may be "pagan-ly" all right, in fact a pagan is a delightful man to know, he is not "out at elbows," not troubled or upset, and he cannot understand why you should talk of the need to be born again. The born-again man has been put on the basis of a new construction of humanity, consequently for a time he is chaotic, disturbed, broken, and at this stage he is not so desirable as the man who represents the climax of the natural life. Other natural virtues are our deepest inheritance, but when the miracle of new birth is experienced, the first thing that happens is the corruption of those virtues because they can never come anywhere near what God demands. Jesus Christ loved moral beauty (see Mark 10:21), but He never said it would do. The natural virtues are a delight to God because He designed them, they are fine and noble, but behind them is a disposition which may cause a man's morality to go by the board. What Jesus Christ does in new birth is to put in a disposition that transforms morality into holiness. He came to put into the man who knows he needs it His own heredity of holiness; to bring him into a oneness with God which he never had through natural birth. "That they may be one, even as We are one."

The experimental aspect of Redemption is repentance; the only proof that a man is born from above is that he brings forth "fruits meet for repentance." That is the one characteristic of New Testament regeneration, and it hits desperately hard because the Holy Spirit brings conviction on the most humiliating lines. Many a powerless, fruitless Christian life is the result of a refusal to obey in some insignificant thing—"first go." It is extraordinary what we are brought up against when the Holy Spirit is at work in us, and the thing that fights longest against His demands is my prideful claim to my right to myself. The only sign of regeneration in practical experience is that we begin to make our life in accordance with the demands of God. Jesus Christ did not only come to present what God's normal man should be, He came to make the way for everyone of us to get there, and the gateway is His Cross. I cannot begin by imitating Jesus Christ, but only by being born into His Kingdom; then when I have been regenerated and have received the heredity of the Son of God, I find that His teaching belongs to that heredity, not to my human nature.

All this means great deliberation on our part. God does not expect us to understand these things in order to be saved, salvation is of God's free grace; but He does expect us to do our bit in appreciation of His "so great salvation."

5. Repentance

Never mistake remorse for repentance; remorse simply puts a man in hell while he is on earth, it carries no remedial quality with it at all, nothing that betters a man. An unawakened sinner knows no remorse, but immediately a man recognises his sin he experiences the pain of being gnawed by a sense of guilt, for which punishment would be a heaven of relief, but no punishment can touch it. In the case of Cain (see Genesis 4:9–14) remorse is seen at its height: "Mine iniquity is greater than can be forgiven" (4:13 RV mg) Cain was in the condition of being found out by his own sin; his conscience recognised what he had done, and he knew that God recognised it too. Remorse is not the recognition that I am detected by somebody else, I can defy that; remorse comes when intellectually and morally, I recognise my own guilt. It is a desperate thing for me to realise that I am a sneak, that I am sensual and proud, that is my sin finding me out. The Holy Spirit never convicts of sin until He has got Jesus Christ pretty close up; a human being would like to convict of sin before Jesus Christ is there. The classic experience of Cain has all lesser experiences folded up in it; few of us are actually murderers, but we are all criminals in potentiality— "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer" (1 John 3:15); and one of the greatest humiliations in work for God is that we are never free from the reminder by the Holy Spirit of what we might be in actuality but for the grace of God.

When any sin is recalled with a gnawing sense of guilt this "biting again" of remorse, watch carefully that it does not make you whine and indulge in sulks about the consequences. The beginning of sulks is the blaming of everybody but yourself, and every step you take in that direction leads further away from God and from the possibility of repentance. Whenever the lash of remorse comes, never try to prevent it, every bit of it is deserved. And if you are a worker, never tell a lie out of sympathy and say, "Oh well, you don't need to feel like that, you couldn't help it." Never tell a lie to another soul. The temptation is tremendously strong to sympathise with a man and prove a traitor to his soul's true instincts; he may fling off from you at a tangent, but truth will tell in the end.

Reformation, which means to form again or renew, is a law that works in human nature apart from the grace of God as well as after regeneration; if it takes place apart from regeneration it is simply the reformation of a rebel. Certain forms of wild oats bring forth their crop and pass and a man becomes different in conduct, but he is a deeply entrenched unregenerate person. That a man stops being bad and becomes good may have nothing to do with salvation; the only one sign that a man is saved is repentance. Instances of reformation apart from the grace of God can be multiplied because there is something in human nature that reacts towards reformation when once the right influence is brought to bear at the right time, e.g., the boy who won't reform for his father's threats or his schoolmaster's punishment, will experience a reaction towards reformation through his mother's love. Again, though a bad man become worse in the presence of suspicious people, when with little children he experiences a reaction towards reformation. If being in the presence of a good man or woman does not produce a reaction towards goodness in me, I am in a bad way. The Apostle Paul sums up this law when he says, "... not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?" (Romans 2:4).

"And Zacchaeus stood, and said unto the Lord, Behold Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold" (Luke 19:8). Why did Zacchaeus say that? who had said a word about his peculations! The desire to make restitution was stirred through his coming into the presence of Jesus, and was a sign of the working of this inevitable law of reaction. Restitution means the determination to do right to everybody I have "done," and it is astonishing the things the Holy Spirit will remind us of that we have to put right. Over and over again during times of revival and great religious awakening workers are presented with this puzzle, that people do unquestionably make restitution—men who stole pay up like sheep, with no notion why they do it, and if the worker is not well taught he will mistake this for the work of the Holy Spirit and a sign that they are born again, when the fact is that the truth has been so clearly put that it caused their nature to react towards reformation. The thing to do with people in that condition is to get them to receive something from God.

Luke 11:25 is a picture of clear, sweeping reformation, the house "swept and garnished"; but what our Lord points out is the peril of a moral victory unused because the heart is left empty. The man who reforms without any knowledge of the grace of God is the subtlest infidel with regard to the need of regeneration. It is a good thing to have the heart swept, but it becomes the worst thing if the heart is left vacant for spirits more evil than itself to enter; Jesus said that "the last state of that man becometh worse than the first" (RV). Reformation is a good thing, but like every other good thing it is the enemy of the best. Regeneration means filling the heart with something positive, viz., the Holy Spirit.

Repentance is the experimental side of Redemption and is altogether different from remorse or reformation. "Repentance" is a New Testament word and cannot be applied outside the New Testament. We all experience remorse, disgust with ourselves over the wrong we have done when we are found out by it, but the rarest miracle of God's grace is the sorrow that puts an end for ever to the thing for which I am sorry. Repentance involves the receiving of a totally new disposition so that I never do the wrong thing again. The marvel of conviction of sin, of forgiveness and of the holiness of God are so interwoven that the only forgiven man is the holy man. If God in forgiving me does not turn me into the standard of the Forgiver, to talk about being saved from hell and made right for heaven is a juggling trick to get rid of the responsibility of seeing that my life justifies God in forgiving me. The great element in practical Christianity—and that is the only kind of Christianity there is—is this note of repentance, which means I am willing to go all lengths so long as God's law which I have broken is cleared in my case—"... that Thou mayest be justified when Thou speakest, and be clear when Thou judgest" (Psalm 51:4 RV). Have I ever had a moment before God when I have said, "My God, I deserve all that Thou canst bring on me as punishment for breaking Thy holy law—'against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned, and done that which is evil in Thy sight"? The essence of repentance is that it destroys the lust of self-vindication; wherever that lust resides the repentance is not true. Repentance brings us to the place where we are willing to receive any punishment under heaven so long as the law we have broken is justified. That is repentance, and I think I am right in saying that very few of us know anything at all about it. We have the idea nowadays that God is so loving and gentle and kind that all we need do is to say we feel sorry for the wrong we have done and we will try to be better. That is not repentance; Repentance means that I am re-made on a plane which justifies God in forgiving me.

Once get this kind of thing into your mind and you will understand what is meant by conviction of sin. The repentant man experiences the humiliating conviction that he has broken the law of God and he is willing to accept, on God's terms, the gift of a new life which will prove sufficient in him to enable him to live a holy life, not hereafter, but here and now. Strictly speaking, repentance is a gift of God; a man cannot repent when he chooses. Repentance does not spring out of the human heart, it springs from a ground outside the human heart, viz., the ground of the Redemption.

6. Reality (a) The Will to Believe the Redeemer

... blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. (John 20:29; cf. John 11:40)

Reality is the thing which works out absolutely solidly true in my personal life, but I must be careful not to confound the reality of my experience with Reality itself. For instance, when I am born again I am not conscious of the Redemption of my Lord, the one thing that is real to me is that I have been born again; but if I watch the working of the Holy Spirit I find that He takes me clean out of myself till I no longer pay any attention to my experiences, I am concerned only with the Reality which produced those experiences, viz., the Redemption. If I am left with my experiences, they have not been produced by the Redemption. If experience is made the only guide it will produce that peculiar type of isolated life that is never found in the New Testament.

We say "seeing is believing," but it is not; we must believe a thing is possible before we would believe it even though we saw it. Belief must be the will to believe, and I can never will to believe without a violent effort on my part to dissociate myself from all my old ways of looking at things and putting myself right over on to God. It is God who draws me, my relationship is to Him, consequently the issue of will comes in at once—Will I transact on what God says? Never discuss with anyone when God speaks; discussion on spiritual matters is impertinent. God never discusses with anyone. Let me stake my all, blindly, as far as feelings are concerned, on the Reality of the Redemption, and before long that Reality will begin to tell in my actual life, which will be the evidence that the transaction has taken place. But there must be the deliberate surrender of will, not a surrender to the persuasive power of a personality, but a deliberate launching forth on God and what He says. Remember, you must urge the will to an issue; you must come to the point where you will to believe the Redeemer, and deliberately wash your hands of the consequences.

In testing for ourselves our relation to Reality we are not left in a vague fog, we have the Word of God expressing God to us, and the Word of God, our Lord Jesus Christ, expresses Himself to us through His teaching, made vitally applicable to every domain of our human life. Any attempt to divorce the words of God from the Word of God leads to unreality; the words of God are only vitally real when we are in a right relationship to God through the Word. Men worship an intellectual creed, and you can't dispute it because it is logically correct, but it does not produce saints; it produces stalwarts and stoics but not New Testament saints, because it is based on adherence to the literal words rather than on a vital relationship to God, who is the one abiding Reality. In the final issue Christian principles are found to be antichrist, i.e., an authority other than Christ Himself. It is quite possible to have an intellectual appreciation of the Redemption without any experience of supernatural grace; an experience of supernatural grace comes by committing myself to a person, not to a creed or a conviction. I can never find Reality by looking within; the only way I can get at Reality is by dumping myself outside myself on to Someone else, viz.: God, immediately I do I am brought in touch with Reality.

(b) The Will to Receive the Redeemer But as many as received Him . . . (John 1:12)

We do not create truth, we receive it. There are things which you perceive clearly, but are they real to you? They are not real if you have never been through a transaction of will in connection with them, your perception is based on the weaving of your own brain, not on the knowledge of Someone who knows you. The Giver is God, and every gift He offers is based on His knowledge of us; our attitude is to be that of receiving from Him all the time, and in this way we become sons and daughters of God. It requires the greatest effort, and produces the greatest humility, to receive anything from God, we would much sooner earn it. Receiving is the evidence of a disciple of the Lord; reasoning about it is the indication of a dictator to God. Effective repentance is witnessed to by my receiving from God instead of reasoning why God should give it to me. When I am willing to be such a fool as to accept, that is repentance; the other is rational pride. We can only get at Reality by means of our conscience which ultimately embraces both head and heart. There is always a practical proof when we do get at Reality, viz., actuality is made in accord with it. Does your intellect make you in accord actually with what you think? Of course it does not. Read the lives of some of the most intellectual men, men whose aesthetic sensibilities are of the finest order, but their actual life won't bear looking at. I cannot get at Reality by my intellect or by emotion, but only by my conscience bringing me in touch with the Redemption. When the Holy Spirit gets hold of my conscience He convicts me of unreality, and when I respond to God I come in touch with Reality and experience a sense of wonder—"That He should have done this for me!" It is not extravagant, it is the result of a totally new adjustment, a relation to the Reality which has been created in me by means of my abandonment to Jesus Christ.

(c) The Will to Obey the Redeemer

If ye love Me, keep My commandments. (John 14:15; see vv. 21, 23; 15:11–12)

These verses are specimens of many that reveal what is to be the abiding attitude of the saint, viz.: obeying the commandments of One whom we can only believe by will, and whose gifts we can only receive by will. We will to believe Him, then we obey by will. These exercises of the will are essential to the wholesome upkeep of a saint's actual life. The effort on the human side is to maintain the childlike relation to God, receiving from Him all the time, then obedience works out in every detail. When a man is rightly related to God it is the Holy Ghost who works through him, and as long as he maintains the will to believe, the will to receive and the will to obey, the life of Jesus is manifested in his mortal flesh.

Beware of any hesitation to abandon to God. It is the meanest characteristics of our personality that are at work whenever we hesitate, there is some element of self-interest that won't submit to God. When we do cut the shore lines and launch forth, what happens is a great deal more than a vision of the indwelling of God; what happens is the positive miracle of the Redemption at work in us, and we have patiently to make it permeate everything. Our relationship to God is first that of personality, not of intellect; intellect comes in after to explain what has transpired, and it is the ordering of the mind that makes a man a teacher and an instructor. Be stably rooted in God and then begin to know, begin to use those rusty brains.

Beware of having an overweening interest in your own character so that you are inclined to believe in God on that account; at the same time be careful to allow nothing that would hinder your relationship to God, because any impairing of that relationship hinders Him in getting at other souls through you. Continually revise your relationship to God until the only certainty you have is not that you are faithful, but that He is. Priggishness is based on concern for my own whiteness, a pathetic whine—"I am afraid I am not faithful"; "I am afraid I shall never be what God wants me to be." Get into contact with Reality and what you feel no longer matters to you, the one terrific Reality is God.

An abiding way of maintaining our relation to Reality is intercession. Intercession means that I strive earnestly to have my human soul moved by the attitude of my Lord to the particular person I am praying for. That is where our work lies, and we shirk it by becoming active workers; we do the things that can be tabulated and scheduled, and we won't do the one thing that has no snares. Intercession keeps the relationship to God completely open. You cannot intercede if you do not believe in the Reality of Redemption, you will turn intercession into futile sympathy with human beings which only increases their submissive content to being out of touch with God. Intercession means getting the mind of Christ about the one for whom we pray, that is what is meant by filling up "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ"; and that is why there are so few intercessors. Be careful not to enmesh yourself in more difficulties than God has engineered for you to know; if you know too much, more than God has engineered, you cannot pray, the condition of the people is so crushing that you can't get through to Reality. The true intercessor is the one who realises Paul's meaning when he says, "for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit [Himself] maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered" (Romans 8:26).

7. The Holy Spirit

(a) The Holy Spirit and Revelation Purpose

... holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. (2 Peter 1:21)

Bear in mind that there is a twofold attitude to be maintained in dealing with the Self-revelation of God—first, its historic setting; second, its value to me personally. It is essential to have an historic basis for our Christian faith: our faith must be centred in the Life and Death of the historic Jesus. Why is it that that Life and Death have an importance out of all proportion to every other historic fact? Because there the Redemption is brought to a focus. Jesus Christ was not a Man who twenty centuries ago lived on this earth for thirty-three years and was crucified; He was God Incarnate, manifested at one point of history. All before looked forward to that point; all since look back to it. The presentation of this fact produces what no other fact in the whole of history ever could produce, viz.: the miracle of God at work in human souls. The death of Jesus was not the death of a martyr, it was the revelation of the Eternal heart of God. That is why the Cross is God's last word; that does not mean God is not speaking still, it means that He is saying nothing contrary to the Cross.

The tendency abroad to-day is to do away with the historic setting of the revelation of God in Christ in the Gospels, to do away with what the apostles wrote, and say, "All that is needed is to receive the Holy Spirit and we will have a 'private interpretation' of our own." But "no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men . . spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." That makes it incumbent upon us to be reverent to a degree with what the apostles wrote. The Epistles are not the cogitations of men of extraordinary spiritual genius, but the posthumous work of the Ascended Christ and they have therefore a peculiar significance in the programme of Redemption. The Holy Ghost used these men, with all their personal idiosyncrasies, to convey God's message of salvation to the world. Our Lord, so to speak, incarnated Himself in them the message of God must always be incarnated, but it remains the message of God. The Epistles are the exposition of why God became "manifest in the flesh," and when by submissive reception I commit myself to that revelation, the Holy Ghost begins to interpret to me what Jesus Christ did on the Cross.

"Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on Me through their word" (John 17:20). Everyone who believes on Jesus, believes on Him "through their word." In the experience of salvation all are alike; in the matter of authoritative inspiration the apostles stand alone; their word is as final as Jesus Christ's. We have no counterpart to that. The inspiration the Holy Ghost gives us is not for revelation purposes, but for insight into the revelation already given. Apostolic inspiration is not an experience, it is as great a miracle as the Incarnation. The one great need is for the Holy Spirit to be received, because He will open up to us not only our own salvation, and the whole of the New Testament revelation, He will open up the treasures of the Old Testament—"even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to His saints: . . . which is Christ in you, the hope of glory" (Colossians 1:26–27).

(b) The Holy Spirit and Redemptive Preaching

For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness.... It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. (1 Corinthians 1:18, 21)

We are nowhere told to preach salvation, or sanctification, or Divine healing; we are told to lift up Jesus, who is the Redeemer, and He will produce His redemptive results in the souls of men. If I preach only the effects of the Redemption, describe in persuasive speech what God has done for me, nothing will happen. It is only when I am humble enough, and stupid enough, to preach the Cross that the miracle of God takes place. The "preaching of the Cross" creates that which enables a man to believe in God, because the Cross is the manifestation of the Redemption. The Cross "condemns men to salvation." The "foolishness of preaching" is the way God has chosen to make the Redemption efficacious in human lives. You can't persuade a man to believe in God; belief in God is not an act of the intellect, it is a moral creation produced by the interaction of God's Spirit and my spirit in willing obedience; intellect comes in afterwards to explain what has happened. In preaching the Cross we use our intellect, not to prove that Jesus died, but to present the fact of His death. The danger is to give expression to subjective experiences we have had; but that will never produce the same experiences in others, it is personal testimony and has its right place, but it is not "preaching" the Cross. The bedrock permanent thing in Christian experience is not the accidental bits of God's particular manifestation of it in you and me, the bedrock permanent thing is the Redemption, and our particular experiences of it, slight or profound, are simply meant to introduce us to that Reality.

(c) The Holy Spirit and Revealing Power Howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth. . . . He shall glorify Me. (John 16:13–14)

If an expositor has never realised the need to receive, recognise and rely on the Holy Spirit, he takes little account of the Cross but says, "Let us come to the teachings of Jesus." Our Lord never placed the emphasis on what He taught, neither do the apostles; they place all the emphasis on the Cross. Why? Because they were shrewd and intelligent? No, because the Holy Ghost inspired them to put the emphasis there. "But God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." Our Lord is not the great Teacher of the world, He is the Saviour of the world and the Teacher of those who believe in Him, which is a radically different matter. His teaching is of no use saving to agonise mankind with its unattainable ideals until men are made anew through the Cross. Unless I am born from above (RV mg) the only result of the teachings of Jesus is to produce despair. People say that Jesus Christ came to teach us to be good; He never did! All the teaching in the world about a man having a pure heart won't make it pure. Our Lord's teaching has no power in it unless I possess His nature. When I am born from above it is the Conscientious relationship between my individual life and Jesus Christ that keeps my conduct right. Once I am brought into contact with Reality I begin to experience the power of the Redemption as it applies to every phase of life.

For He shall receive of Mine, and shall shew it unto you. (John 16:14)

The spirit of antichrist is that spirit which "dissolves by analysis" (RV mg) the person of Jesus— "someone unique, but not what the New Testament claims." To preach the Jesus of the Gospels at the expense of the Christ of the Epistles is a false thing, such a false thing that it is antichrist to the very core, because it is a blow direct at what Jesus said the Holy Spirit would do, viz.: expound Him to the disciples, and "through their word" to innumerable lives to the end of Time. If I say "Of course God would never convey a right interpretation of Himself through a handful of men like the disciples," I am casting a slur on what Jesus said, telling Him that His reliance on God's promise of the Spirit was without justification; that His basis of confidence on the Holy Spirit's revelation of Himself to the disciples was misplaced. When our Lord told the disciples they would do "greater works," His reliance was not on them, but on the gift of the Spirit which He was to receive from the Father and shed forth on them. Everything Jesus said the Holy Spirit would do, He has done and the New Testament is the revelation of it.

(d) The Holy Spirit and Revealed Proclamation He gave some, apostles . . . for the edifying of the body of Christ. (Ephesians 4:11–12)

Our Lord gave the disciples the gift of the Holy Spirit as their equipment for proclaiming the Gospel to the world; in the same way the Holy Spirit comes into my personal life to bring me out of my individual narrowness into the universal purpose of God. When I want to translate all God's redemptive work into the consciousness of being saved, I become a pious humbug. God does not save me in order that I may feel saved, but to take me up into His redemptive purpose. Christian experience must be expounded as it emerges in its most extraordinary and tragic form, not in order to make that form the standard, but as giving the basis to which every experience is to be traced. You say, "I have never had such profound conviction of sin, such depth of repentance, as the apostle Paul, therefore I can't be a true Christian." We are not meant to imitate Paul in his experience, but to remember that that profound experience gives us the right direction for tracing where our own experience comes from. Paul never says, "Follow my way of getting into Christ," because no two people ever come the same way into Christ, yet they must follow the same ways in Christ. Experience is simply the doorway into Reality, if I stick in the doorway I get cold and die, die away from Reality; I must go through the doorway, and in the classic experiences we get the door widest open.

"For the edifying of the body of Christ." The New Testament is the product of the Holy Ghost, we are literally fed into the Body of Christ by its words. "Feed My sheep," said Jesus, and all down the ages the words of the New Testament have fed the children of God; if we try to nourish ourselves in any other way we produce abortions, what the writer to the Hebrews calls "bastards." The point for me is not simply that I appreciate with my mind what the New Testament declares, but that I am brought into such a relationship with God that His words become serviceable through me to others. It sounds pathetic to talk about "drawing on the life of Jesus" to keep the needs of my physical life supplied; but that is not His meaning; it is drawing on the life of Jesus through His word that He might serve out nourishment to others through me.

8. Natural and Personal Life

Never run away with the idea that you are a person who has a spirit, has a soul and has a body; you are a person that is spirit, soul and body. Man is one; body, soul and spirit are terms of definition. My body is the manifest "me." Some of us are so dominated by the body that our spirit lives only in the physical domain, instead of the physical being slowly taken into the spiritual by a series of moral choices. Our spirit goes no further than we bring our body. One of the best means of spiritual progress is to learn to deny the body in a great number of unnecessary ways (cf. 1 Corinthians 9:27).

First Corinthians 15:46 ("Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual") lays down the fundamental basis of the way God deals with man all through—first the natural, then the spiritual. The whole purpose of a human personality is to turn the natural life into a spiritual life by sacrifice. The Bible never speaks of the natural life as sinful, it contrasts it with the spiritual, e.g., "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: . . . neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. But he that is spiritual [discerneth] all things" (1 Corinthians 2:14–15).

Adam, the Federal Head of the human race, was designed by God to take part in his own development, that is, he was intended to turn the natural into the spiritual by a series of choices, which would mean moral progress. The natural life is the "lamb" for sacrifice. It is not fanaticism, but the sacrificing of what is absolutely legitimate and right and making it spiritual by obedience. That is the only way personality is exhibited in its true form. It has nothing to do with sin; there would have been sacrifice whether there had been sin or not because of God's design of man. It was not a sin for our Lord to have a human body, it was not a sin for Him to eat, but it would have been sin for Him to eat during the forty days in the wilderness because His Father's will was otherwise. Our Lord stands as the presentation of God's normal Man, and when by regeneration His life is formed in us we have to transform the natural life into a spiritual life by obedience to the will of God, letting Him engineer our circumstances as He will. We are not fundamentally free, external circumstances are not in our hands, they are in God's hands, the one thing in which we are free is in our personal relationship to God. We are not responsible for the circumstances we are in, but we are responsible for the way we allow those circumstances to affect us; we can either allow them to get on top of us, or we can allow them to transform us into what God wants us to be. If we go under in circumstances we are held responsible because God has promised an absolutely overcoming Spirit to any man who will receive Him. If you are at a loss to know how to get at what God wants you to be, listen to the Lord Jesus. He says, "If you ask God He will plant in you the very Spirit that is in Me" (Luke 11:13). If you receive the Holy Spirit you find that circumstances will never have power to do anything but give you the chance of sacrificing the natural to the spiritual and proving you are a son or daughter of God.

"And the LORD God . . . breathed into his nostrils the breath of life" (Genesis 2:7), i.e., God breathed into man that which became man's spirit, that is the indestructible factor in every human being. Man is, and he will never be un-created. Man has kinship with God as no other creation of God has; his true kinship is with God and nowhere else. When I receive the Holy Spirit He lifts my personality back into its primal relationship with God. Holy Spirit coming into my spirit never becomes my spirit; He energises my spirit and enables me "to will and to do of His good pleasure."

God has put man in an experimental sphere and if he refuses to turn the natural into the spiritual he will find himself dominated by the body, it will chain him down and make him a slave. The personality of a man apart from the Spirit of God becomes enslaved to the desires of the flesh. The marvel of the life of God in a man is that he never need be dominated by anything other than spirit—"Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh" (Galatians 5:16). But if you don't sacrifice your natural inclinations and impulses to the will and the word of God, you are likely to be tripped up by any of the things Paul mentions: "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these. . . . " It will test a man to the limit to take his stand on the Redemption and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit and prove in actual life what God has put in him by regeneration. We are taken up with the "soul-saving" line instead of the line of character-building on the basis of the Redemption, consequently you get people who are gloriously saved but they have never gone on to sacrifice the natural to the spiritual—never put the knife to the throat of an appetite, never recognised pig-headed obstinacy, never got on the track of that green-eyed monster, envy. "But those things can't be in me now that I am saved"—and they are painted in glaring colours! When the Holy Spirit begins to unearth the works of the flesh in you, don't temporise, don't whitewash them; don't call suspicion, discernment of the spirit, or ill-temper, righteous indignation; bring it to the light, come face to face with it, confess it and get it cleansed away.

"And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." When a man is saved his human nature is not altered; human nature is marred by sin, but it is not bad. Deliverance from sin does not mean deliverance from human nature. By regeneration a man is perfectly adjusted to God, now he is required to do a man's bit, viz.: to take his human nature and make it serve the new disposition. The honour of Jesus Christ is at stake in my bodily life, and if I walk in the Spirit I will be ruthless to the things that won't submit to Him. To crucify the flesh "with the affections and lusts" is not God's business, it is man's.

"And afterward that which is spiritual." We are made partakers of the Divine nature through the promises (see 2 Peter 1:4), the inherent tendency of the Divine nature is implanted in us through regeneration and we become children of God; we become, that is, not only what we are by nature, creations of God, but sons and daughters of God, with a strong family likeness to Jesus. The true conception of Man is our Lord. Man got out of God's order, and we are brought back not merely into the original order, but into a much better position through our Lord, viz.: we are to be "conformed to the image of His Son." We look at the things that are expressed externally; God looks at the tendency born in us. He knows, apart from all our pious phrases and pretences, whether we have been regenerated, He sees what the life will become. Browning puts it as no other writer outside the Bible:

All I could never be,
All, men ignored in me.
—This, I was worth to God

9. Discovering God

(a) Evangelical v. Eclectic Expression

The effort is on an individual and philanthropic scale, not on a world scale, an evangelical scale—it is unequal to the world crisis.... It is the climax of a generation of genial and gentle religion, with the nerve of the Cross cut, which therefore breaks in our hands at a great historic crisis for lack of the moral note—tonic, radical, and redemptive.

Forsyth⁸

Evangelical—the belief that God was "manifested in the flesh" (RV) in the Person of His Son in order that through His death on the Cross men might be redeemed. The Apostle Paul sums up evangelical belief when he says—"For He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him": that is, Jesus Christ takes my heredity of sin, and gives me His own heredity of holiness, and I show the alteration through my skin. The emphasis is apt to be put on one phase only, viz.: justification by faith; the real centre of the action of the Redemption has to do with a man's ruling disposition. If a man takes the rational commonsense line he despises the evangelical view, but when he gets down to things as they are he finds that the rational view is on the fifteenth storey and the evangelical view is at the basis. The rational view misses out the fact that there is an hiatus between God and man; things are wild, there is a tragedy, something irrational not rational, at the heart of life and the way out is not by reason, but only through the Cross of Christ. These things are fundamental, they come straight home to the problems of a man's own heart and life. The point for me is, Do I agree with God in what He condemns in the Cross? That is where most of our Christianity is proved to be humbug. We believe in what we call the plan of salvation, but we don't do much else. We ought to be busy thinking as Christians. Up to the time of the war religious people were taken up, not so much with the fundamental revelation of the Redemption as with expounding a certain type of saintliness, a particular presentation of the Gospel, consequently when the war struck they were not able to grasp the providential order of God at all, they were found enervated, "unequal to the world crisis."

(b) Temperamental v. True Portrayal

God so loved, so unsparingly, as to do His Son's body and soul the injury of the Cross. That is the principle on which God's love dealt with the vast evil of the world. He reserved for Himself what He forbade Abraham to do.

Forsyth

Temperamental—the way a man looks at life. My temperament is an inner disposition which influences my thoughts and actions to a certain extent, i.e., I am either pessimistic or optimistic according to the way my blood circulates. It is an insult to take the temperamental line in dealing with a human being—"Cheer up, look on the bright side"; there are some types of suffering before which the only thing you can do is to keep your mouth shut. There are times when a man needs to be handled by God, not by his fellow men, and part of the gift of man's wisdom is to know how to be reverent with what he does not understand.

To take the temperamental view of Jesus Christ will mean that I do not make the revelation of the Bible my guide, I portray Him as one who lived beyond His age and suffered in consequence; all He did was to leave us a good example which we must try to follow, so that when a man makes the supreme sacrifice and lays down his life, he thereby redeems his own soul. A more hopeless misunderstanding of the Redemption could not be. When a man lays down his life, it takes God to expound what he has done. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." The love of God is seen in that He laid down His life for His enemies. The Redemption is God's "bit." "None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him: (for the redemption of their soul is costly, and must be let alone for ever)" (Psalm 49:7–8 RV).

What Forsyth is pointing out is that the temperamental view ignores the fact that God deliberately paid the price of dealing with sin. It is easy if I reason from the logical common-sense point of view, to say that God created the man who became a sinner, and then condemns him to hell because he sinned. The Bible says nothing of the sort. The Bible says that God Himself accepted the responsibility for sin; the Cross is the proof that He did. It cost Jesus Christ to the last drop of blood to deal with "the vast evil of the world." The true portrayal is that the Cross is not the cross of a man, but the Cross of God. The tragedy of the Cross is the hurt to God. In the Cross God and sinful man merge; consequently the Cross is of more importance than all the world's civilisations.

"He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" What does that mean? It means that I can receive a new disposition the second I see my need—"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" It is so simple that the majority of us blunder over it, we won't come the bairn way; but when a man is up against things the words of Jesus become the deepest philosophy in life—"Come unto Me"; "Believe also in Me." My relation to things proves whether or not I do believe in Jesus. The life of a child of God is always the life of a child, simple and open-hearted, no ulterior motive. The Bible makes more of the death of Jesus than of His life and His teaching, because the teaching of Jesus does not apply to you and me unless we have received His Spirit. What is the good of telling me to love my enemies? I hate them! to be fathomlessly pure in heart? to have no unworthy motive? The teaching of Jesus is for the life He puts in, and I receive that life by means of the Cross.

^{8.} Peter Taylor Forsyth (1848–1921), British Congregationalist minister and theologian. Chambers read many of Forsyth's books and valued his insights.

^{9.} World War I (1914-18).

(c) Dogmatic Creed v. Deity of Christ

No man begins his Christian life by believing a creed. The man with a dogmatic creed says, "You must believe this and that." Jesus says, "Do the will," i.e., "commit yourself to Me." Truth is not in a particular statement; Truth is a person, "I am . . . the Truth." It is a mistake to attempt to define what a man must believe before he can be a Christian; his beliefs are the effect of his being a Christian, not the cause of it. Immediately you lose sight of the central, majestic Figure of Jesus Christ you are swept off your feet by all kinds of doctrine, and when big things hit you find your religion does not stand you in good stead because your creed does not agree with the Truth.

The revelation of the Deity of Christ does not come first to a man's intellect, but to his heart and life, and he says with amazement, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." The great point of the Bible revelation of God is not only that God was in Christ, but that Jesus Christ is God. If Jesus Christ is not God, then the only God we have is an abstraction of our own minds. I know no other God in Time or Eternity than Jesus Christ; I have accepted all I know of God on the authority of the revelation He gave of Him. "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father."

We never discover God until we come to a personal need for Him, and that drives us to Jesus. The whole meaning of life is that a man discovers God for himself. It is not sin that keeps us away from Jesus, but our own goodness. "I am not come to call the righteous," Jesus said, but sinners to repentance." We don't seem to need God until we come up against things. The basis for thinking with most of us is our ordinary logical common-sense, but when a man comes up against things he has to go deeper down than his common-sense, to fall back on something else, either fatalism or God. The Christian thought is not fatalistic, it is based on the revelation of God given by Jesus Christ.

10. Common Christian Thinking (a) The Divine Unction of Christian Teaching But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things. (1 John 2:20)

The Apostle John in these verses does away with the idea that there are specialists in Christian thinking as there are specialists in other domains; he says, No, the Holy Spirit is the one Teacher, and the teaching He imparts is common to us all, consequently there is no excuse for any of us, no room for saying, "I haven't had a good education"; "I haven't had time to study." The majority of us recognise the necessity of receiving the Holy Spirit for living, but we do not sufficiently recognise the need for drawing on the resources of the Holy Spirit for thinking. Many of us don't realise that we can think, we lie all abroad in our minds, wool-gathering. When we receive the Holy Spirit He imparts the ability to see things by intuition. Spiritual intuition lives in the same sphere as natural intuition plus the Holy Spirit.

I do not like thee, Dr. Fell, The reason why I cannot tell; But this I know, and know full well— I do not like thee, Dr. Fell.

That is natural intuition, i.e., instant perception of the truth of things without reasoning or analysis. Instruction in spiritual intuition is what we need. The Holy Spirit will curb and check natural intuition until He brings it into accord with what Jesus meant when He said, "My sheep hear My voice." When you listen to a preacher, how are you going to know whether he is teaching the truth of God? Only by spiritual intuition. You may know that God has wonderfully used a man in the past, but never make that your ground for heeding what he says now, for at any minute a man may be out of touch with God (cf. 1 Corinthians 9:27). Never pin your faith to a man's reputation as a servant of God, always watch for the Holy Spirit. If a man is talking the truth of God those who listen will meet it again whether they like it or not; if he is not talking God's truth they won't come across it any more. Whenever the grand simple sanity of the Holy Spirit's interpretation is wanting, hold the matter in abeyance. The one stamp of the right interpretation is its "warm" natural sanity, it is not fantastic or peculiar, it doesn't twist your brain, its makes you feel, "How marvellously simple and beautiful that is!"

The Holy Spirit's anointing "abideth in you," says John. At the beginning of your spiritual life you wanted to run off to this man and that, to this book and that, until you learn that "the anointing... abideth in you." John and Paul and Peter all insist on the superb right of the humblest believer to test the teacher by the anointing which is in him. If we put teachers over against the Holy Ghost, when God removes them we go down, we mourn and say, "What shall we do now?" Watch how Paul deals with the people who say, "I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas"; he says in effect, "All teachers are yours." A teacher is simply meant to rouse us up to face the truths revealed in the Bible and witnessed to by the Holy Ghost. Watch the tendency which is in us all to try and safeguard God's truth. The remarkable thing is that God never safeguards His own truth; He leaves statements in this Book we can easily misrepresent, the only test is the Holy Spirit who leads us into all truth.

"And ye need not that any man teach you." It is here that Satan comes in as an angel of light and says, "If you are anointed by the Spirit, everything you think is right." Not at all. Only as we obey the Spirit and keep in the light does the anointing abide. Our thinking and common-sense reasoning must be rigorously subordinated to the Spirit, and if we abide true to Him He repairs the damage sin has done to conscience and mind and keeps our thinking vital and true. Notice in your own life how He works. He begins with the big general principles and then slowly educates you down to the scruple. 10

(b) The Divine Union of Christian Thinking But as the same anointing teacheth you of all things. (1 John 2:27)

We have perennially to rely on the one great Source of all teaching, viz.: the Holy Spirit; He puts us in an independent position towards all other teachers, and makes our dependence on Himself as the one Teacher the only basis of union there is, "the unity of the Spirit. . . . There is one body, and one Spirit, ... one Lord, one faith, one baptism." Be filled with the Spirit, says Paul. We have all seen the seashore when the tide is out, with all its separate pools, how are those pools to be made one? by digging channels between them? No, wait till the tide comes in, and where are the pools? Absolutely lost, merged in one tremendous floodtide. That is exactly what happens when Christians are indwelt by the Holy Spirit. Once let people be filled with the Holy Spirit and you have the ideal of what the New Testament means by the Church. The Church is a separated band of people who are united to God by the regenerating power of the Spirit, and the bedrock of membership in the Church is that we know who Jesus is by a personal revelation of Him. The indwelling Spirit is the supreme Guide, and He keeps us absorbed with our Lord. The emphasis to-day is placed on the furtherance of an organisation; the note is, "We must keep this thing going." If we are in God's order the thing will go; if we are not in His order, it won't. Think of the works that are kept on after God wanted to rule them out of the way because they have a source of inspiration apart from Himself.

"Ye shall abide in Him." The test that we are being taught by the Holy Spirit is that our lives are proving identical with the life of the Son of God. You cannot have identity without individuality. False teaching says we lose our personality; we never do. Jesus Christ emancipates personality, and He makes individuality pronounced; but it is personality absolutely free from my right to myself, free from identity with any other personality, manifesting a strong family likeness to Jesus, and the transfiguring element is love to Himself.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF FAITH I

1. The Constitution of Faith

And without faith it is impossible to be well-pleasing unto Him. (Hebrews 11:6 RV)

There is not possible a normal healthy human being apart from religious faith. Faith claims the whole man and all God's grace can make him.

Forsyth

The conception of faith given in the New Testament is that it must embrace the whole man. Faith is not a faculty, faith is the whole man rightly related to God by the power of the Spirit of Jesus. We are apt to apply faith to certain domains of our lives only—we have faith in God when we ask Him to save us, or ask Him for the Holy Spirit, but we trust something other than God in the actual details of our lives. "Faith claims the whole man and all that God's grace can make him," just as it claimed the whole of our Lord's life. Our Lord represents the normal man, not the average man, but the man according to God's norm. His life was not cut up into compartments, one part sacred and another secular, it was not in any way a mutilated life. Jesus Christ was concentrated on one line, viz., the will of His Father, in every detail of His life. That is the normal standard for each of us, and the miracle of the Gospel is that He can put us into the condition where we can grow into the same image. Our Lord lived His life not in order to show how good He was, but to give us the normal standard for our lives. The life He lived is made ours by means of His death; by the gift of the Holy Spirit and obedience to Him. We are put into the relationship to God that Jesus had—"that they may be one, even as We are one."

Faith is a tremendously active principle of trust in Jesus which is ready to venture on every word He speaks: "Lord, Thou hast said (e.g., Matthew 6:33: But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you'); it looks mad, but I am going to venture on it; I will sink or swim on Thy word." We cannot have faith in every word of Jesus whenever we think we will. The Holy Spirit brings a word of Jesus to our remembrance and applies it to the circumstances we are in, and the point is, will we obey that particular word? We may have seen Jesus and known His power and yet never have ventured out in faith on Him. Faith must be tested because only through conflict can head-faith be turned into a personal possession. Faith according to Jesus must have its object real, no one can worship an ideal. We cannot have faith in God unless we know Him in Jesus Christ. God is a mere abstraction to our outlook until we see Him in Jesus and hear Him say, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father," then we have something to build upon and faith becomes boundless.

2. Faith and Confusing Issues

Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. (James 2:17; see vv. 17–20)

An inadequate theory of faith distorts practice.

Forsyth

The Apostle James continually says, "If you have faith prove it by your life." Experience is never the ground of my faith; experience is the evidence of my faith. Many of us have had a marvellous experience of deliverance from sin and of the baptism of the Holy Ghost, not a fictional experience, but a real experience whereby we prove to our amazement every day that God has delivered us, then comes the danger that we pin our faith to our experience instead of to Jesus Christ, and if we do, faith becomes distorted. When the baptism of the Holy Ghost came upon the early disciples it made them the written epistles of what they taught, and it is to be the same with us. Our experience is the proof that our faith is right. Jesus Christ is always infinitely mightier than our faith, mightier than our experience, but our experience will be along the line of the faith we have in Him. Have we faith to bear this testimony to those who know us—that we are what we are because of our faith in Jesus? We have faith in Jesus to save us, but do we prove that He has saved us by living a new life? I say I believe that Jesus can do this and that; well, has He done it? "But by the grace of God I am what I am." Are we monuments of the grace of God, or do we only experience God's supernatural power in our work for Him? Extraordinary spiritual experiences spring from something wrong in the life, you never get the exquisite simple faith in God along any special line of experience, but only along the common line of regeneration through faith in Jesus. Be sceptical of any revelation that has not got as its source the simplicity by means of which a "babe" can enter in, and which a "fool" can express.

3. Faith and Consecrated Issues

... work out your own salvation. (Philippians 2:12)

The normal course of all religious experience is expansion followed by concentration.

Forsyth

When God gives a vision of what sanctification means or what the life of faith means, we have instantly to pay for the vision, and we pay for it by the inevitable law that "expansion must be followed by concentration." That means we must concentrate on the vision until it becomes real. Over and over again the vision is mistaken for the reality. God's great Divine anticipation can only be made manifest by our human participation, these two must not be put asunder. Every expansion of brain and heart that God gives in meetings or in private reading of the Bible must be paid for inevitably and inexorably by concentration on our part, not by consecration. God will continually bring us into circumstances to make us prove whether we will work out with determined concentration what He has worked in. If you have had a vivid religious experience of the baptism of the Holy Ghost, what are you going to do with it? We are sanctified by God's grace and made one with Jesus in order that we might sanctify our holiness to God as Jesus did. "And for their sakes I sanctify Myself" (John 17:19). There is no difficulty in getting sanctified if my will and affections have at their heart the earnest desire for God's glory. If I am willing for God to strangle in me the thing that makes me everlastingly hanker after my own point of view, my own interests, my own whiteness—if I am willing for all that to be put to death, then the God of peace will sanctify me wholly. Sanctification means a radical and absolute identification with Jesus until the springs of His life are the springs of my life. "Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it."

The great need to-day is for Christians to toe the line: "And the heathen shall know that I am the LORD, saith the Lord GOD, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes" (Ezekiel 36:23). Unless Christians are facing up to God's commands there is no use pushing forward to meet the life of our time. Jesus wants us to face the life of our time in the power of the Holy Ghost. Do we proclaim by our lives, by our thinking, by our faith in God, that Jesus Christ is sufficient for every problem life can present? that there is no force too great for Him to cope with and overcome? If our faith is not living and active it is because we need reviving; we have a faith that is limited by certain doctrines instead of being the faith of God.

The Apostle Paul is always tremendously practical, he comes right down to where we live, he says we must work out the salvation God has worked in. "All power is given unto Me," said Jesus, and by the Holy Spirit's presence we can do those things which please God—are we doing them? By the power of the indwelling

Holy Spirit we can bring every thought and imagination into captivity to the obedience of Christ, and can keep this body the chaste temple of the Holy Ghost—are we doing it? By the power of the Holy Spirit we can keep our communications with other people the exact expression of what God is working in us—are we doing it? The proof that we have a healthy vigorous faith is that we are expressing it in our lives, and bearing testimony with our lips as to how it came about.

There is no end to the life of faith; sanctification itself is only the ABC of the Christian life. The life of Jesus from Bethlehem onwards is a picture of the sanctified life, and anything that would make our souls stagnate produces a distortion. It is a continual learning, but not of the same lesson, if we have to be taught the same lesson it is because we have been very stupid. God will bring us into circumstances and make us learn the particular lessons He wants us to learn, and slowly and surely we will work out all that He works in. There is no patience equal to the patience of God.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF FAITH II

1. Faith and the Son of God

... looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith. (Hebrews 12:2 RV)

He fought the battle, He proved the possibility of victory, He shewed us the place and revealed to us the secret of the power.

Forsyth

Jesus Christ is the Captain of our faith; He has gained the victory, consequently for us Satan is a conquered foe. When we are sanctified and have become "His brethren" we are put, not in the place of the first Adam, but in the place of the last Adam, where we live by the power and might of the faith of the Son of God. We have to get rid of the idea that because Jesus was God He could not be tempted. Almighty God cannot be tempted, but in Jesus Christ we deal with God as man, a unique Being-God-Man. It was as Son of Man that "He fought the battle, and proved the possibility of victory." After His Baptism, Satan, by the direct permission of the Holy Ghost, tested the faith of Jesus: "And straightway the Spirit driveth Him forth into the wilderness" (Mark 1:12 RV). Satan broke what Adam held straight off; but he could not break what Jesus held in His person though he tested Him in every conceivable way; therefore having Himself suffered being tempted, "He is able to succour them that are tempted."

When we are born again we get our first introduction into what God calls temptation. When we are sanctified we are not delivered from temptation, we are loosened into it; we are not free enough before either morally or spiritually to be tempted. Immediately we become His "brethren" we are free, and all these subtleties are at work. God does not shield any man or woman from any requirements of a fullgrown man or woman. Luke 22:28 ("But ye are they which have continued with Me in My temptations") presents Our Lord's view of His life as Man, viz., as one of temptations, not triumphs. When we are born again the Son of God is submitted to temptations in our individual lives, are we remaining loyal to Him in His temptations in us? When temptation comes, stand absolutely true to God no matter what it costs you, and you will find the onslaught leaves you with affinities higher and purer than ever before. Temptation overcome is the transfiguration of the natural into the spiritual and the establishment of conscious affinity with the purest and best.

2. Faith and the Sons of God

Beloved, now are we the sons of God. (1 John 3:2)

Having been made sons of God does not absolve us from the lifelong task of actually making ourselves sons of God.

Forsyth

We have to take pains to make ourselves what God has taken pains to make us. You can take a horse to the trough, but you can't make him drink; you can send your child to school, but you can't make him study; and God can put a saint into a right relationship with Himself, but He cannot make him work out that relationship, the saint must do that himself. We must take the pains to make ourselves visibly all that God has made us invisibly. God alters our disposition, but He does not make our character. When God alters my disposition the first thing the new disposition will do is to stir up my brain to think along God's line. As I begin to think, begin to work out what God has worked in, it will become character. Character is consolidated thought. God makes me pure in heart; I must make myself pure in conduct. This point of working things out in actuality is apt to be lost sight of.

The business of faith is to convert Truth into reality. What do you really believe? take time and catalogue it up; are you converting your belief into reality? You say, "I believe God has sanctified me"—does your actual life prove He has? "I believe God has baptised me with the Holy Ghost"—why? Because you had cold shivers and visions and marvellous times of prayer? The proof that we are baptised with the Holy Ghost is that we bear a strong family likeness to Jesus, and men take knowledge of us, as they did of the disciples after Pentecost, that we have been with Jesus, they recognise the family likeness at once. True justification can only result in sanctification. By justification God anticipates that we are holy in His sight, and if we will obey the Holy Spirit we will prove in our actual life that God is justified in justifying us. Ask yourself—Is God justified in my justification? do I prove by the way I live and talk and do my work that God has made me holy? Am I converting God's purpose in justifying me into actual experience, or only delighting in God's anticipation? There is a great snare especially in evangelical circles of knowing the will of God as expressed in the Bible without the slightest practical working of it out in the life. The Christian religion is the most practical thing on earth. If the Holy Spirit has given you a vision in your private Bible study or during a meeting which made your heart glow, and your mind expand, and your will stir itself to grasp, you will have to pay to the last farthing in concentration along that line until all you saw in vision is made actual. During these past years there has been a terrific expansion in lives through bereavement and sorrow, everything in individual life has been altered, but there is the price to pay. The price is the same in national as in individual life.

The peculiar aspect of religious faith is that it is faith in a person who relates us to Himself and commits us to His point of view, not faith in a point of view divorced from relationship to a Person. "If you would know My doctrine," said Jesus, "do My will." Our Lord never teaches first by principles, but by personal relationship to Himself. When through His Redemption we become rightly related to Him personally, our hearts are unshakeably confident in Him. That is the Divine anticipation being participated in, the tremendous work of God's supernatural grace being manifested in our mortal flesh.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF FAITH III

1. Mental Belief

But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name. (John 1:12)

John 1:12–13 is a grand, mighty, all-embracing word—"to as many as received Him . . ." The way mental belief works is that it leads us to understand who Jesus Christ is and what He can do for us and in us. Jesus Christ is the normal Man, the Man according to God's standard, and God demands of us the very holiness He exhibited.

A spiritually minded Christian has to go through the throes of a total mental readjustment; it is a Godglorifying process, if a humbling one. People continually say, "How can I have more faith?" You may ask for faith to further orders, 11 but you will never have faith apart from Jesus Christ. You can't pump up faith out of your own heart. Whenever faith is starved in your soul it is because you are not in contact with Jesus; get in contact with Him and lack of faith will go in two seconds. Whenever Jesus Christ came across people who were free from the ban of finality 12 which comes from religious beliefs, He awakened faith in them at once. The only ones who were without faith in Him were those who were bound up by religious certitude. Faith means that I commit myself to Jesus, project myself absolutely on to Him, sink or swim-and you do both, you sink out of yourself and swim into Him. Faith is implicit confidence in Jesus and in His faith. It is one thing to have faith in Jesus and another thing to have faith about everything for which He has faith. Galatians 2:20 does not refer to the Apostle Paul's elementary faith in Jesus as his Saviour, but to the faith of Jesus. He says that the identical faith that was in Jesus Christ, the faith that governed His life, the faith which Satan could not break, is now in him through identification with the death of Jesus; the faith that characterised Him now characterises Paul.

^{11.} to further orders: ad infinitum; endlessly; the phrase, military origin, continuing present action until one receives different orders.

^{12.} ban of finality: the limitation or "curse" of having one's mind made up, unwilling to consider new information.

2. Moral Belief

Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. (Romans 6:6)

If we are honest and obedient, moral belief will follow mental belief very quickly. Am I poor enough, humble enough, and simple enough to believe in Jesus? Do I believe Him when He says that God will give me the Holy Spirit if I ask Him? If I do believe in Jesus and receive the Holy Spirit on the authority of His word, then I will have to make a moral decision about all that the Holy Spirit reveals. He will reveal to me what sin is, and He will reveal that Jesus Christ can deliver me from sin if I will agree with God's verdict on it in the Cross. Many of us do believe in Jesus, we have received the Holy Spirit and know we are children of God, and yet we won't make the moral decision about sin, viz., that it must be killed right out in us. It is the great moment of our lives when we decide that sin must die right out, not be curbed or suppressed or counteracted, but crucified. It is not done easily; it is only done by a moral wrench. We never understand the relation between a human life and the Cross of Christ until we perform a moral act and have the light of God thrown upon reality.

The transactions which tell in my life for God are moral decisions, not mental ones. I may think through everything there is in Christian doctrine and yet remain exactly the same; but I never make a moral decision and remain the same, and it is the moral decisions to which the Holy Spirit is always leading us on the basis of the Redemption. A moral decision is not a decision that takes time, one second is sufficient; what takes time is my stubborn refusal to come to the point of morally deciding. Here, where we sit, we can decide whether or not the Redemption shall take its full course in us. Once I decide that it shall, the great inrush of the Redemption takes efficacious effect immediately. There are times when the Holy Spirit does touch us, times when there are "flashes struck from midnight" and we see everything clearly, and that is where the danger comes in, because we are apt to let those touches pass off in sentimental ardour instead of making a moral decision. It is a sensible delight to feel God so near, but unless a moral decision is made you will find it much harder next time to pay attention to the touch when it comes. It is better to decide without the accompaniment of the glow and the thrill—better to decide in cold blood, when your own will is in the ascendant, deliberately swayed by the rulership of Christ.

3. Mystic Belief

For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. (Colossians 3:3)

Paul is not talking to disembodied spirits, he is talking to men and women who have been through identification with the death of Jesus and know that their "old man" is crucified with Him. If we are born again of the Holy Ghost, and have made the moral decision to obey what He reveals about sin, then we must go on to believe that God can enable us to live for His glory in any circumstances He places us in. You can always detect the right kind of belief in Jesus by a flesh-and-blood testimony. "Ye shall know them by their fruits." Other people are not likely to confuse grapes with thorns, or figs with thistles. Mystic belief means that we enter into a conscious inheritance of what the Redemption has wrought for us, and daily, hourly, manifest the marvel of the grace of God in our actual lives. The majority of us "hang on" to Jesus Christ, we are thankful for the massive gift of salvation, but we don't do anything towards working it out. That is the difficult bit, and the bit the majority of us fall in, because we have not been taught that that is what we have to do, consequently there is a gap between our religious profession and our actual practical living. To put it down to human frailty is a wiggle, there is only one word for it, and that is "humbug." In my actual life I live below the belief which I profess. We can do nothing towards our salvation, but we can work out what God works in and the emphasis all through the New Testament is that God gives us sufficient energy to do it if we will. The great factor in Christian experience is the one our Lord continually brought out, viz., the reception of the Holy Spirit who does in us what He did for us, and slowly and surely our natural life is transformed into a spiritual life through obedience.

NOTES ON LAMENTATIONS

The Lamentations are not the expression of the grief of a disappointed man, the peculiar element in Jeremiah's sorrow is that he is identifying himself with an unrepentant people (cf. Daniel 9:4–20). We suffer on account of our own wrong or the wrong of others, but that is not vicarious suffering. Jeremiah's grief personifies vicariously the grief of the whole nation. Am I prepared to be a scapegoat for the sins of others for which they are still unrepentant?

Lamentations 1—Elegy in Degradation

How doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people! . . . She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks. (Lamentations 1:1–2)

The city herself is introduced weeping, and giving expression to her sorrow over the evil determined against her on account of her sins.

"How doth the city sit solitary." Being alone is not solitariness; solitariness is loneliness that has in it an element of moral dis-esteem: "Jerusalem hath grievously sinned therefore she is become as an unclean thing: all that honoured her despise her" (Lamentations 1:8). Cain's solitariness is typical of this loneliness; so is the loneliness of the prodigal son in the far country who starved on what the pigs throve on. Man was not created to be alone. Jesus Christ was rarely alone; the times when He was alone are distinctly stated. Solitariness to be beneficial must never be sought and must never be on account of sin. If I choose solitariness, I go back into active life with annoyance and a contempt for other people, proving that my seeking solitariness was selfish.

"He hath spread a net for my feet . . ." (Lamentations 1:13). There is no choice after the choice is made, we are at the mercy of God's inexorable justice once the choice is made which leads "into the net." Our destiny is not determined for us, but it is determined by us. Man's free will is part of God's sovereign will. We have freedom to take which course we choose, but not freedom to determine the end of that choice. God makes clear what He desires, we must choose, and the result of the choice is not the inevitableness of law, but the inevitableness of God. Verse 18 gives the reason for all that is happening—"The LORD is righteous; for I have rebelled against His commandment." God will never change His character to please anyone's pleading or petulance if they have deliberately spurned His counsel.

There are irreparable losses in human life, and no amount of whining will alter it. The garden of Eden was closed, not to naughty children, but to sinners, and is never again opened to sinners. "The way of the tree of life" is guarded, preventing man getting back as a sinner; he only gets back, and thank God he does get back, in and through the Redemption. What is prophesied with regard to Jerusalem is the attitude of the Spirit of God to the human race. The attitude of those, not indwelt by the Spirit of God is that man's capabilities are a promise of what he is going to be: the Holy Ghost sees man as a ruin of what he once was. He does not delight in his natural virtues. We are being told what a splendid race of human beings we are!—we are a race of rebels, and the rebellion has got to be destroyed. When the Holy Ghost is having His way with a man the first thing He does is to corrupt confidence in virtues which belong to a ruin. Nothing is more highly esteemed among men than pride in my virtues, i.e., self-realisation, but Jesus Christ said that "that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God." If this was realised we would understand the extravagant language of Scripture about sin.

Lamentations 2—Elegy in Destruction

How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in His anger! He hath cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel. . . . (Lamentations 2:1 RV)

The prophets of God have always one burden when they deal with the judgements of God, and that is that they come not from the east, nor from the west, but are directly stamped as "from the Lord." The tendency to-day is to put the consequences of sin as natural consequences: the consequences of sin have a righteous God behind them. We have taken the Bible idea out of punishment and say, "Oh well, it is the inevitable result"; the Bible says the inevitable result is brought about by a personal God.

"The Lord is become as an enemy..." (Lamentations 2:5 RV). Deliverance comes through destruction, and for a while the soul does not know whether God is a friend or an enemy. God has one purpose in destruction, and that is the deliverance of His own. God's own is not you, but His own in you. All that is saved is the work of God in a man, nothing else. Destruction means the obliteration of every characteristic of the life that is not rooted in godliness, it never means the annihilation of the life. The judgements of God are a consuming fire whereby He destroys in order to deliver; the time to be alarmed in life is when all things are undisturbed. The knowledge that God is a consuming fire is the greatest comfort to the saint, it is His love at work on those characteristics that are not true to godliness. The saint who is near to God knows no burning, but the farther away from God the sinner gets, the more the fire of God burns him.

In verses 1–9 the wrath of God is emphasised. God's love is wrath towards wrong; He is never tender to that which hates goodness. All through the Bible reveals that when once communion with God is severed the basis of life is chaos and wrath. The chaotic elements may not show themselves at once, but they will presently. All that this Book says about corruption in connection with the flesh is as certain as God is on His throne if the life is not rightly related to God. When we speak of the wrath of God we must not picture Him as an angry sultan on the throne of heaven, bringing a lash about people when they do what He does not want. There is no element of personal vindictiveness in God. It is rather that God's constitution of things is such that when a man becomes severed from God his life tumbles into turmoil and confusion, into agony and distress, it is hell at once, and he will never get out of it unless he turns to God; immediately he turns, chaos is turned into cosmos, wrath into love, distress into peace. "Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord" we persuade men to keep in touch with Him. The world pays no attention to those who tell them how God convicted of sin and how He delivered them; the warnings of God are of no use to sinners until they are convicted of sin and the warnings become applicable to them.

"The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, they keep silence" (Lamentations 2:10 RV). When God's destructions are abroad there is no power to move, only to sit; no power to speak, only to keep silence. It is not a time for social intercourse of any kind, but for the deepest dejection.

"Mine eyes do fail with tears... for the destruction of the daughter of my people." No prophet stands so close to Jesus Christ as Jeremiah, he is the one who realises human conditions more keenly than any other and identifies himself with them. Verses 11–19 are thus lamentation over the impotence of human consolation.

"Thy prophets . . . have not discovered thine iniquity" (Lamentations 2:14). The prophet with a message based on human morality excuses sin instead of detecting it—"God knows you can't help this sort of thing"—that is a lie. "Under the circumstances you will be excused." Jeremiah was indignant with those prophets who gave a wrong application to God's message: "Sin is sin; but you don't need to imagine that that is the reason for what God is doing"; Jeremiah held to it that it was the reason.

". . . the day of the LORD's anger" (Lamentations 2:22). When God's limit is reached, He destroys into salvation; He destroys the unsaveable and liberates the saveable. Judgement days are an overflowing mercy because they separate between right and wrong. To be experimental in me the salvation of Jesus Christ is always a judgement, and it brings the understanding of God's justice even in His severest judgements. If we compare our attitude with the revelations made in God's Book we find how despicably shallow we are. Our attitude is not one of sympathy of God, not a sensitive understanding of His point of view, only an amazing sensitiveness over our own calamities and those of other people, consequently we act on the principle of giving "a pill to cure an earthquake." When God is squeezing the life of a man or of a nation in order to save the remnant, what is the use of my coming and kicking at the fingers of God and saying, "I shan't allow You to do this"? If our human sympathy with the one who is suffering under the hand of God is justified, then God is cruel. Some of us are so set on our own honour that we have no time for God's honour.

"Is this the city that men called The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth?" (Lamentations 2:15 RV). Jeremiah is referring to the desolation which, by God's own decree, has fallen on everything God made to be holy; he sees God's judgement on His own choicest things—Jerusalem ruined, the Temple destroyed. "See, O LORD, and behold, to whom Thou hast done this!" (Lamentations 2:20 RV). And Jeremiah's whole heart was in Jerusalem! God did not spare His people. His judgement on them was as unconquerably certain as it was on Babylon, and as it is on us. No amount of pleading will ever alter the judgements of God.

Lamentations 3—Elegy in Desolation

Surely against me He turneth His hand again and again all the day. . . . (Lamentations 3:3 RV)

Obedience to God will mean that some time or other you enter into desolation; if you don't obey, you won't—for a time. Jeremiah is speaking in vicarious terms of the sorrow and anguish of the people under God's chastisement; he is not cutting a cross-section through his own personal grief, not writing his own spiritual autobiography. Jeremiah is a vicarious sufferer, that is, he does not find his place in other people, he lets other people find their place in him. Our attitude too often is—"Oh, that has nothing to do with me, I have enough to bear." We will be of no use in God's service until that spirit is removed. God so loves the world that He hates the wrong in it. Do I so love men and women that I hate the wrong in them? Most of us love other people for what they are to us instead of for what God wants them to be. The distress worked in a man's heart by the Holy Ghost is never on his own account, but always on God's account.

Desperate tides of the whole great world's anguish Forced thro' the channels of a single heart.

F. W. H. Myers

Have I ever shared for a moment God's concern over people, or am I putting myself in a bandage before God and saying, "I can't stand any more"?

"Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?" (Lamentations 3:39). The judgements of God leave scars, and the scars remain until I humbly and joyfully recognise that the judgements are deserved and that God is justified in them. The last delusion God delivers us from is the idea that we don't deserve what we get. Once we see ourselves under the canopy of God's overflowing mercy we are dissolved in wonder, love and praise. That is the meaning of repentance, which is the greatest gift God ever gives a man. As long as my heart has never been broken by conviction of sin, I don't understand the psalmist when he says, "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise" (Psalm 51:17). When you get there God is the only Reality; but you only get there through heartbreak and sorrow. Holiness is based on repentance, and the holy man is the most humble man you can meet. My realisation of God can be measured by my humility.

Jeremiah's reliance on the justice of God breaks into a prayer in which is manifested his confidence that God will send help—"I called upon Thy name, O LORD, out of the lowest dungeon. Thou heardest my voice; hide not Thine ear at my breathing, at my cry" (Lamentations 3:55–56 RV).

Lamentations 4—Elegy in Dispersion

When they fled away and wandered, men said among the nations, They shall no more sojourn here. (Lamentations 4:15 RV)

"How is the gold become dim! How is the most pure gold changed!" (Lamentations 4:1 RV). It is the holiest things that are desolated. God ordained the Temple, Jerusalem was His holy city, and yet He allows them to be ruined. Flesh and blood, man's body, is meant to be "the temple of the Holy Ghost"—God's "gold," but sin renders it disreputable. The depth of possible sin is measured by the height of possible holiness. When men come under conviction of sin by the Holy Spirit their "beauty is consumed away," like as it were a moth fretting a garment. The misery which conviction brings enables a man to realise what God created him for, viz., to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever.

"For the iniquity of the daughter of my people is greater than the sin of Sodom, that was overthrown as in a moment" (Lamentations 4:6 RV). The destruction of Sodom was a sudden calamity; the destruction of Jerusalem was a terribly long, heartrending depreciation of everything of value in God's sight.

"It is because of the sins of her prophets, and the iniguities of her priests, that have shed the blood of the just in the midst of her" (Lamentations 4:13 RV). Beware of iniquity, which means conjuring yourself out of the straight; finding out reasons why you did not do what you know you should have done. The term "iniquity" is used only of the people of God. To "shed just blood" refers to more than actual murder. The Bible never deals with proportionate sin; according to the Bible an impure thought is as bad as adultery; a covetous thought is as bad as a theft. It takes a long education in the things of God before we believe that is true. Never trust innocence when it is contradicted by the word of God. The tiniest bit of sin is an indication of the vast corruption that is in the human heart. ("For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed . . ." Mark 7:21–23). That is why we must keep in the light all the time. Never allow horror at crime to blind you to the fact that it is human nature like your own that committed it. A saint is never horror-stricken because although he knows that what our Lord says about the human heart is true, he knows also of a Saviour who can save to the uttermost.

"Thine iniquity hath an end" (Lamentations 4:22 RV mg). My guilt is ended when I repent, when I stop admitting and begin confessing. Am I blaming any of my forebears for my present condition? Then my punishment will go on till I blame them no more. Am I blaming the circumstances in which I live? Then my punishment will go on till I stop blaming my circumstances. As long as I have any remnant of an idea that I can be cleared in any other way than by God through the Redemption, my punishment will go on. The instant I stop blaming everything but myself, and acquit God of injustice to me, my recognition of Him begins.

Lamentations 5—Elegy in Devotion

Remember, O LORD, what is come upon us: behold, and see our reproach. (Lamentations 5:1 RV)

What had Jeremiah done to deserve in the tiniest degree all that has come upon him? Nothing but obey God in every detail, and because of his obedience he was in the midst of the distress. The one man who has kept unspottedly right with God is in all the desolation, realising it more keenly than any of those who deserved it. A snare spirituality is to refuse to bear about "in the body the dying of Jesus," and prefer the gay hilarity which is only possible for long in the new heaven and new earth. We are here for one purpose: to "fill up . . . that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ" (RV)—spoilt for this age, alive to nothing but Jesus Christ's point of view. In this order of things it is a maimed life, and few of us will have it; we prefer a full-orbed life of infinite satisfaction which makes us absolutely crass to what is happening in "Jerusalem."

We can never be marked by the angel as those who sigh and cry for the sorrows of Jerusalem.

"Our fathers have sinned, and are not; and we have borne their iniquities" (Lamentations 5:7). These words are not to be understood as intimating that the speakers conceived themselves innocent—"Woe unto us! for we have sinned" (Lamentations 5:16 RV). The sins of the fathers are not visited on innocent children, but on children who continue the sins of their fathers (see Exodus 20:5). Distinction must be made between punishment and suffering, they are not synonymous terms. A bad man's relation to his children is in God's hand: the child's relation to the badness of his father is in his own hand. Because we see children suffering physically for the sins of their parents, we say they are being punished; they are not, there is no element of punishment in their suffering; there are Divine compensations we know nothing about. The whole subject of heredity and what is transmitted by heredity, if taken out of its Bible setting, can be made the greatest slander against God, as well as the greatest exoneration of the bitterness of a man's spirit.

"The crown is fallen from our head.... For this our heart is faint; for these things our eyes are dim" (Lamentations 5:16–17). These words convey the poignancy of penitence. Nothing will make a man's heart "cave in" and his eyes stop seeing, saving sin. Sorrow won't do it, misfortune won't do it, hardship won't do it; on the contrary these things, if there is no sin, make a man's heart strong. The "fallen crown" is the figurative expression for the honourable position of the people of God which they have now lost. Sin may make a man more desirable in the eyes of the world—"the sin which is admired of many" (Hebrews 12:1 RV mg), but what makes a man ugly physically, morally and spiritually is the discovery of sin by his own heart, and all attempts to justify himself spring from the depth of conviction of private sin.

The gathering in of God's salvation around a man means that he is checked at first by the merest zephyr touch, there is nothing so gentle as the check of the Holy Spirit; if he obeys, emancipation is at once, if he does not obey, the zephyr touch will turn into a destructive blow from which there is no escape. There is never any shattering blow of God on the life that pays attention to the checks of the Spirit, but every time there is a spurning of the still small voice, the hardening of the life away from God goes on until destruction comes and shatters it. When I realise that there is something between God and me, it is at the peril of my soul I don't stop everything and get it put right. Immediately a thing makes itself conscious to me, it has no business there.

To sum up the Lamentations would be to say that the words of this vicarious sufferer direct the grieving human heart, in its deep sorrow, to the only true Comfort.

DUTY OF THE HEART

Mark 12:28-34

And one of the scribes . . . asked Him, Which is the first commandment of all? Mark 12:28

In answering the scribe's question Our Lord does not say anything original, He takes two commandments from their place in the Old Testament, where they are obscured (see Deuteronomy 6:5, Leviticus 19:18) and brings them out into a startling light. "Think not," He said, "that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil."

1. Duty of Love for God

And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment.

Where do we find ourselves with regard to this first great duty—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart"? What does that phrase mean to us? If Jesus had said, "Thou shalt love thy lover with all thy heart," we would have known what He meant. Well, He did mean that, but the Lover is to be God. The majority of us have an ethereal, unpractical, bloodless abstraction which we call "love for God"; to Jesus love for God meant the most passionate intense love of which a human being is capable.

The writer to the Hebrews states that Jesus Christ was "perfected through sufferings," but there is any amount of suffering that "im-perfects" us because it springs from unregulated passions. This fact has made some ethical teachers say that the passions themselves are evil, something human nature suffers from. Our Lord teaches that the passions are to be regulated by this first duty of love for God. The way we are to overcome the world, the flesh and the devil is by the force of our love for God regulating all our passions until every force of body, soul and spirit is devoted to this first great duty. This is the one sign of sanctification in a life; any experience of sanctification which is less than that has something diseased about it.

If my first duty is to love God, the practical, sensible question to ask is, What is God like? Aristotle taught that love for God does not exist; "it is absurd to talk of such a thing, for God is an unknown being." The Apostle Paul met with the result of his teaching in his day—"Ye men of Athens, . . . as I passed by, and beheld your devotions [the gods ye worship, mg] I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, Him declare I unto you" (Acts 17:22–23). To-day the teaching in many of our own colleges and universities is being honeycombed with pagan philosophy, pagan ethics, consequently there is a state of mind produced that appreciates what Aristotle said, that we cannot know God. Then what a startling statement Jesus made when He said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart"!

"No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him" (John 1:18). Jesus knew God, and He makes Him known: "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Get into the habit of recalling to your mind what Jesus was like when He was here, picture what He did and what He said, recall His gentleness and tenderness as well as His strength and sternness, and then say, "That is what God is like." I do not think it would be difficult for us to love Jesus if He went in and out among us as in the days of His flesh, healing the sick and diseased, restoring the distracted, putting right those who were wrong, reclaiming backsliders—I do not think it would be difficult for us to love Him. That is to love God. The great Lover of God is the Holy Spirit, and when we receive the Holy Spirit we find we have a God whom we can know and whom we can love with all our heart because we see "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

2. Duty of Love to Man

And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

Everything our Lord taught about the duty of man to man might be summed up in the one law of giving. It is as if He set Himself to contradict the natural counsel of the human heart, which is to acquire and keep. A child will say of a gift, "Is it my own?" When a man is born again that instinct is replaced by another, the instinct of giving. The law of the life of a disciple is Give, Give, Give (e.g., Luke 6:38). As Christians our giving is to be proportionate to all we have received of the infinite giving of God. "Freely ye have received, freely give." Not how much we give, but what we do not give, is the test of our Christianity. When we speak of giving we nearly always think only of money. Money is the life-blood of most of us. We have a remarkable trick—when we give money we don't give sympathy; and when we give sympathy we don't give money. The only way to get insight into the meaning for ourselves of what Jesus taught is by being indwelt by the Holy Spirit, because He enables us first of all to understand our Lord's life; unless we do that, we will exploit His teaching, take out of it only what we agree with. There is one aspect of giving we think little about, but which had a prominent place in our Lord's life, viz., that of social intercourse. He accepted hospitality on the right hand and on the left, from publicans and from the Pharisees, so much so that they said He was "a gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!" He spent Himself with one lodestar all the time, to seek and to save that which was lost, and Paul says, "I am become all things to all men, that I may by all means save some" (RV). How few of us ever think of giving socially! We are so parsimonious that we won't spend a thing in conversation unless it is on a line that helps us!

"And who is my neighbour?" (Luke 10:29). Jesus gives an amazing reply, viz., that the answer to the question, "Who is my neighbour?" is not to be found in the claim of the person to be loved, but in the heart of the one who loves. If my heart is right with God, every human being is my neighbour. There is engrained in the depths of human nature a dislike of the general ruck of mankind, in spite of all our modern jargon about "loving Humanity." We have a disparaging way of talking about the common crowd: the common crowd is made up of innumerable editions of you and me. Ask the Holy Spirit to enable your mind to brood for one moment on the value of the "nobody" to Jesus. The people who make up the common crowd are nobodies to me, but it is astonishing to find that it is the nobodies that Jesus Christ came to save. The terms we use for men in the sense of their social position are nothing to Him. There is no room in Christianity as Jesus Christ taught it for philanthropic or social patronage. Jesus Christ never patronised anyone, He came right straight down to where men live in order that the supreme gift He came to give might be theirs—"The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach the gospel to the poor." It is only by getting our mind into the state of the Mind of Jesus that we can understand how it is possible to fulfil the royal law and love our neighbour as ourselves. We measure our generosity by the standards of men; Jesus says, "Measure your love for men by God's love for them, and if you are My disciple, you will love your neighbour as I have loved you."

HOLINESS

1. Imitated

... leaving us an example, that ye should follow His steps. (1 Peter 2:21)

For one child to imitate another child only results in a more or less clever affectation; a child imitating his parents assists the expression of inherent tendencies, naturally and simply, because he is obeying a nascent instinct. It is to this form of imitation that Peter alludes. When a saint imitates Jesus, he does it easily because he has the Spirit of Jesus in him. Pharisaic holiness, both ancient and modern, is a matter of imitation, seeking by means of prayer and religious exercises to establish, seriously and arduously, but un-regeneratedly, a self-determined holiness. The only spiritually holy life is a God-determined life. "Be ye holy; for I am holy." If our best obedience, our most spotless moral walking, our most earnest prayers, are offered to God in the very least measure as the ground of our acceptance by Him, it is a fatal denial of the Atonement.

2. Imputed

. . . unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works. (Romans 4:6)

To impute means "to attribute vicariously"; it is a theological word. The revelation made by the Apostle Paul, viz., that God imputes righteousness to us, is the great truth at the basis of all our Protestant theology; we are apt to forget this to-day. Righteousness means living and acting in accordance with right and justice, that is, it must express itself in a man's bodily life. "Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous" (1 John 3:7). Imputed righteousness must never be made to mean that God puts the robe of His righteousness over our moral wrong, like a snow-drift over a rubbish heap; that He pretends we are all right when we are not. The revelation is that "Christ Jesus . . . is made unto us . . . righteousness"; it is the distinct impartation of the very life of Jesus on the ground of the Atonement, enabling me to walk in the light as God is in the light, and as long as I remain in the light God sees only the perfections of His Son. We are "accepted in the Beloved."

3. Imparted

... not having a righteousness of mine own, ... but that which is through faith in Christ. (Philippians 3:9 RV)

The only holiness there is is the holiness derived through faith, and faith is the instrument the Holy Spirit uses to organise us into Christ. But do not let us be vague here. Holiness, like sin, is a disposition, not a series of acts. A man can act holy, but he has not a holy disposition. A saint has had imparted to him the disposition of holiness, therefore holiness must be the characteristic of the life here and now. Entire sanctification is the end of the disposition of sin, but only the beginning of the life of a saint, then comes growth in holiness. The process of sanctification begins at the moment of birth from above (RV mg) and is consummated on the unconditional surrender of my right to myself to Jesus Christ. The time that elapses between new birth and entire sanctification depends entirely on the individual. Many souls have had such a blessed vision of an entirely sanctified life during Conventions, or in times of rare communion with God, that they imagine they have the reality, and it is at this stage that that subtle heresy, "Deeper death to self" is apt to lead them astray. The vision is followed by a deep valley of humiliation, by a cross of death, before the unspeakable reality is realised. If we have reached the stage of entire sanctification and have presented our bodies to be "a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God," what are we doing with our holy selves? Jesus Christ gives us the key to the life of the saint—"And for their sakes I sanctify Myself" (John 17:19). We are sanctified for one purpose only, that we might "sanctify our sanctification," i.e., deliberately give it to God.

4. Habitual

Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind. (Romans 12:2)

Practical holiness is the only holiness of any value in this world, and the only kind the Spirit of God will endorse. If we consider what Professor James¹³ says in his scientific exposition of habit, it will be a great rebuke to our lazy neglect in finding out what we have to do to work out in actual life the holy disposition given us through the Atonement:

^{13.} William James (1842–1910): American philosopher, psychologist, and teacher, published The Principles of Psychology in 1890.

- (a) In the acquisition of a new habit, or the leaving off of an old one, we must launch ourselves with as strong and decided initiative as possible.
- (b) Never suffer an exception to occur till the new habit is securely rooted in your life.
- (c) Seize the very first possible opportunity to act on every resolution you make, and on every emotional prompting you may experience in the direction of the habits you aspire to gain.

Romans 12:2 is the apostle Paul's passionate entreaty that we should rouse ourselves out of that stagnation which must end in degeneration, in which we are ensnared by thinking because it is "all of grace" there is no need for "gumption." Grace, Grit, Glory is the graduation course. Professor James says "we must launch ourselves with as strong and decided initiative as possible": as saints have we not a strong and decided initiative? Born again of the Spirit, cleansed from all sin, sanctified to do the will of God? "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind," says

Paul. It is because we have failed to realise that God requires intellectual vigour on the part of a saint that the devil gets his hold on the stagnant mental life of so many. To be transformed by the renewing of our mind means the courageous lifting of all our problems, individual, family, social and civic, into the spiritual domain, and habitually working out a life of practical holiness there. It is not an easy task, but a gloriously difficult one, requiring the mightiest effort of our human nature, a task which lifts us into thinking God's thoughts after Him.

"That ye may prove what is the good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God." God's will is only clearly understood by the development of spiritual character, consequently saints interpret the will of God differently at different times. It is not God's will that alters, but the saint's development in character. Only by intense habitual holiness, by the continual renewing of our mind, and the maintenance of an unworldly spirit, can we be assured of God's will concerning us, "even the thing which is good and acceptable and perfect" (RV mg).

THE MATURE CHRISTIAN

Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect. Matthew 5:48 (RV)

In Matthew 5, verses 29–30 and verse 48 respectively our Lord refers to two things which are full of vital instruction. In verses 29–30 He is referring to the necessity of a maimed life: "And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee"; in Matthew 5:48 He refers to the life which is not maimed, but perfect. These two statements embrace the whole of our spiritual life from beginning to end.

"Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect" (RV). God is so almightily simple that it is impossible to complicate Him, impossible to put evil into Him or bring evil out of Him; impossible to alter His light and His love, and the nature of the faith born in me by the Holy Ghost will take me back to the Source and enable me to see what God is like, and until I am all light and all love in Him, the things in me which are not of that character will have to pass. In the beginning of Christian experience the life is maimed because we are learning. There is the right eye to be plucked out, the right hand to be cut off, and we are apt to think that is all God means; it is not. What God means is what Jesus said, "Ye shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect." When we discern that the sword that is brought across our natural life is not for destruction, but for discipline, we get His idea exactly.

God never destroys the work of His own hands, He removes what would pervert it, that is all. Maturity is the stage where the whole life has been brought under the control of God.

1. The Upward Look

Psalm 121 portrays the upward look—"I will lift up mine eyes unto the mountains: from whence shall my help come? My help cometh from the LORD, which made heaven and earth" (RV). The upward look of a mature Christian is not to the mountains, but to the God who made the mountains. It is the maintained set of the highest powers of a man—not star-gazing till he stumbles, but the upward gaze deliberately set towards God. He has got through the "choppy waters" of his elementary spiritual experience and now he is set on God. "I have set the LORD always before me"—but you have to fight for it.

2. The Forward Look

"Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty: they shall behold a far stretching land ['a land of far distances,' mg]" (Isaiah 33:17 RV). The forward look is the look that sees everything in God's perspective whereby His wonderful distance is put on the things that are near. Caleb had the perspective of God; the men who went up with him saw only the inhabitants of the land as giants and themselves as grasshoppers. Learn to take the long view and you will breathe the benediction of God among the squalid things that surround you. Some people never get ordinary or commonplace, they transfigure everything they touch because they have got the forward look which brings their confidence in God out into the actual details of life. The faith that does not react in the flesh is very immature. Paul was so identified with Jesus Christ that he had the audacity to say that what men saw in his life in the flesh was the very faith of the Son of God. Galatians 2:20 is the most audacious verse in the Bible! Paul is not referring to his own elementary faith in Jesus Christ as his Saviour, but to the faith of the Son of God, and he says that that identical faith is now in him.

Fortitude in trial comes from having the long view of God. No matter how closely I am imprisoned by poverty, or tribulation, I see "the land that is very far off," and there is no drudgery on earth that is not turned Divine by the very sight. Abraham did not always have the forward look, that is why he did a scurry down to Egypt when there was a famine in the land of promise. Why shouldn't I starve for the glory of God? Immediately I fix on God's "goods," I lose the long view. If I give up to God because I want hundredfold more, I never see God.

3. The Backward Look

And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left. (Isaiah 30:21)

The surest test of maturity is the power to look back without blinking anything. When we look back we get either hopelessly despairing or hopelessly conceited. The difference between the natural backward look and the spiritual backward look is in what we forget. Forgetting in the natural domain is the outcome of vanity—the only things I intend to remember are those in which I figure as being a very fine person! Forgetting in the spiritual domain is the gift of God. The Spirit of God never allows us to forget what we have been, but He does make us forget what we have attained to, which is quite unnatural. The surest sign that you are growing in mature appreciation of your salvation is that as you look back you never think now of the things you used to bank on before. Think of the difference between your first realisation of God's forgiveness, and your realisation of what it cost God to forgive you; the hilarity in the one case has been merged into holiness, you have become intensely devoted to God who forgave you.

PERFECT LOVE

But whoso keepeth His word, in him verily is the love of God perfected. 1 John 2:5

If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and His love is perfected in us. 1 John 4:12

1. In Abandoned Indwelling (Romans 5:5)

There is only one Being who loves perfectly, and that is God, yet the New Testament distinctly states that we are to love as God does; so the first step is obvious. If ever we are going to have perfect love in our hearts we must have the very nature of God in us. In Romans 5:5 the Apostle Paul tells us how this is possible; he says, "the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." He is speaking not of the power to love God, but of the very love of God itself which is "shed abroad"—a superabounding word, it means that the love of God takes possession of every crook and cranny of our nature. The practical question to ask therefore is, Have I received the Holy Spirit? has it ever come to an issue with me? There is nothing on earth like the love of God when once it breaks on the soul, it may break at a midnight or a dawn, but always as a great surprise, and we begin to experience the uniting of our whole being with the nature of God. Everything in that moment becomes easy, no command of Jesus is difficult to obey. It is not our power to love God that enables us to obey, but the presence of the very love of God in our heart which makes it so easy to obey Him that we don't even know we are obeying. As you recall to your mind the touchings of the love of God in your life they are always few—you will never find it impossible to do anything He asks.

When the love of God has been shed abroad in our hearts we have to exhibit it in the strain of life; when we are saved and sanctified we are apt to think that there is no strain, but Paul speaks of the "tribulation" which "worketh patience." I mean by strain, not effort, but the possibility of going wrong as well as of going right. There is always a risk, for this reason, that God values our obedience to Him. When God saves and sanctifies a man his personality is raised to its highest pitch of freedom, he is free now to sin if he wants to; before, he is not free, sin is impelling and urging him; when he is delivered from sin he is free not to sin, or free to sin if he chooses. The doctrine of sinless perfection and consequent freedom from temptation runs on the line that because I am sanctified, I cannot now do wrong. If that is so, you cease to be a man. If God put us in such a condition that we could not disobey, our obedience would be of no value to Him. But blessed be His Name, when by His redemption the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, He gives us something to do to manifest it. Just as human nature is put to the test in the actual circumstances of life, so the love of God in us is put to the test. "Keep yourselves in the love of God," says Jude, that is keep your soul open not only to the fact that God loves you, but that He is in you, in you sufficiently to manifest His perfect love in every condition in which you can find yourself as you rely upon Him. The curious thing is that what we are apt, too apt, to restrain is the love of God; we have to be careless of the expression and heed only the Source. Let our Lord be allowed to give the Holy Spirit to a man, deliver him from sin, and put His own love within him, and that man will love Him personally, passionately and devotedly. It is not an earning or a working for, but a gift and a receiving.

2. In Abandoned Identification

Love suffereth long, and is kind. (1 Corinthians 13:4 RV; see 1 Corinthians 13:4-7)

For the love of Christ constraineth us. (2 Corinthians 5:14)

The Holy Ghost sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts and in 1 Corinthians 13 we see how that perfect love is to be expressed in actual life. "Love suffereth long, and is kind. . . . " Substitute "the Lord" for "love," and it comes home. Jesus is the love of God Incarnate. The only exhibition of the love of God in human flesh is our Lord, and John says "as He is, even so are we in this world" (RV). God expects His love to be manifested in our redeemed lives. We make the mistake of imagining that service for others springs from love of others; the fundamental fact is that supreme love for our Lord alone gives us the motive power of service to any extent for others—"ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake." That means I have to identify myself with God's interests in other people, and God is interested in some extraordinary people, viz., in you and in me, and He is just as interested in the person you dislike as He is in you. I don't know what your natural heart was like before God saved you, but I know what mine was like. I was misunderstood and misrepresented; everybody else was wrong and I was right. Then when God came and gave me a spring-cleaning, dealt with my sin, and filled me with the Holy Spirit, I began to find an extraordinary alteration in myself. I still think the great marvel of the experience of salvation is not the alteration others see in you, but the alteration you find in yourself. When you come across certain people and things and remember what you used to be like in connection with them, and realise what you are now by the grace of God, you are filled with astonishment and joy; where there used to be a well of resentment and bitterness, there is now a well of sweetness.

God grant we may not only experience the indwelling of the love of God in our hearts, but go on to a hearty abandon to that love so that God can pour it out through us for His redemptive purposes for the world. He broke the life of His own Son to redeem us, and now He wants to use our lives as a sacrament to nourish others.

SACRAMENTAL CHRISTIANITY

The word "sacramental" must be understood to mean the real presence of Christ being conveyed through the actual elements of the speech and natural life of a Christian. "Every one therefore who shall confess Me before men," that is, confess with every part of me that—"Jesus Christ has come in the flesh" come, not only historically, but in my flesh.

1. Sacramental Service

But far be it from me to glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom[mg] the world hath been crucified unto me, and I unto the world. (Galatians 6:14 RV)

By the Cross of Christ I am saved from sin; by the Cross of Christ I am sanctified; but I never am a sacramental disciple until I deliberately lay myself on the altar of the Cross, and give myself over emphatically and entirely to be actually what I am potentially in the sight of God, viz., a member of the Body of Christ. When I swing clear of myself and my own consciousness and give myself over to Jesus Christ, He can use me as a sacrament to nourish other lives.

Most of us are on the borders of consciousness, consciously serving, consciously devoted to God; it is all immature, it is not the life yet. Maturity is the life of a child—a child is never consciously childlike—so abandoned to God that the thought of being made broken bread and poured-out wine no longer unseals the fountain of tears.

When you are consciously being used as broken bread and poured-out wine you are interested in your own martyrdom, it is consciously costing you something; when you are laid on the altar of the Cross all consciousness of self is gone, all consciousness of what you are doing for God, or of what God is doing through you, is gone. It is no longer possible to talk about "my experience of sanctification"; you are brought to the place where you understand what is meant by our Lord's words, "Ye shall be My witnesses" (RV). Wherever a saint goes, everything he or she does becomes a sacrament in God's hands, unconsciously to himself. You never find a saint being consciously used by God; He uses some casual thing you never thought about, which is the surest evidence that you have got beyond the stage of conscious sanctification, you are beyond all consciousness because God is taking you up into His consciousness; you are His, and life becomes the natural simple life of a child. To be everlastingly on the look-out to do some work for God means I want to evade sacramental service—"I want to do what I want to do." Maintain the attitude of a child towards God and He will do what He likes with you. If God puts you on the shelf it is in order to season you. If He is pleased to put you in limited circumstances so that you cannot go out into the highways of service, then enter into sacramental service. Once you enter that service, you can enter no other.

2. Sacramental Fellowship

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. (John 12:24)

If you are wondering whether you are going on with God, examine yourself in the light of these words. The more spiritually real I become, the less am I of any account, I become more and more of the nature of a grain of wheat falling into the earth and dying in order that it may bring forth fruit. "He must increase, but I must decrease." I only decrease as He increases, and He only increases in me as I nourish His life by that which decreases me. Am I willing to feed the life of the Son of God in me? If so, then He increases in me. There is no pathos in John's words, but delight, "Would to God I could decrease more quickly!" If a man attracts by his personality, then his appeal must come along the line of the particular work he wishes to do; but stand identified with the personality of your Lord, like John the Baptist, and the appeal is for His work to be done. The danger is to glory in men— "What a wonderful personality!" If when people get blessed they sentimentally "moon" around me, I am to blame because in my heart I lay the flattering unction to myself that it is because of my way of putting things they begin to idealise the one who should be being made broken bread and poured-out wine for them. Beware of stealing souls for whom Christ died for your own affectionate wealth.

3. Sacramental Responsibility

Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake, and fill up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for His body's sake, which is the church. (Colossians 1:24 RV)

By "sacramental responsibility" understand the solemn determination to keep myself notably my Lord's, and to treat as a subtle temptation of the devil the call to take on any responsibility that conflicts with my determined identification with His interests. God's one great interest in men is that they are redeemed; am I identifying myself with that interest? Notice where God puts His disapproval on human experiences, it is when we begin to adhere to our conception of what sanctification is, and forget that sanctification itself has to be sanctified. When we see Jesus we will be ashamed of our deliberately conscious experience of sanctification, that is the thing that hinders Him, because instead of other people seeing Jesus in me, they see "me" and not Jesus. We have to be sacramental elements in His hands, not only in word but in actual life. After sanctification it is difficult to state what your aim in life is, because God has taken you up into His purposes. The design for God's service is that He can use the saint as His hands or His feet. Jesus taught that spiritually we should "grow as the lilies," bringing out the life that God blesses.

HIS CERTAIN KNOWLEDGE

... for He Himself [saw] what was in man. John 2:25 (RV)

Our Lord seemed to go so easily and calmly amongst all kinds of men—when He met a man who could sink to the level of Judas He never turned cynical, never lost heart or got discouraged; and when He met a loyal loving heart like John's He was not unduly elated, He never overpraised him. When we meet extra goodness we feel amazingly hopeful about everybody, and when we meet extra badness we feel exactly the opposite; but Jesus "knew what was in man," He knew exactly what human beings were like and what they needed; and He saw in them something no one else ever saw—hope for the most degraded. Jesus had a tremendous hopefulness about man.

1. How Jesus Thought about Man

Everything Jesus Christ thought about man is summed up in the parable of the two sons (see Luke 15), viz., that man had a noble origin, that he sinned wilfully, and that he has the power to return if he will. Do we accept Jesus Christ's view, or do we make excuses for ourselves? "Oh well, I am trying my best, and I am getting a little better every day"—no one ever did! numbers of us get a little worse every day. "I didn't mean to go wrong." It was not only our great forerunner who sinned wilfully, there is a wilful element in every one of us, we sin knowing it is sin. Socrates' notion was that if you tell a man what is right, he will do it, but he neglected the big factor that a man's innermost instinct is not God. There is a potential hero in every man—and a potential skunk

Jesus Christ's thought about man is that he is lost, and that He is the only One who can find him. "For the Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost" (RV). Salvation means that if a man will turn—and every man has the power to turn, if it is only a look towards the Cross, he has the power for that—if a man will but turn, he will find that Jesus is able to deliver him not only from the snare of the wrong disposition within him, but from the power of evil and wrong outside him. The words of Jesus witness to His knowledge that man has the power to turn—"Come unto Me." "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out." As soon as a man turns, God finds him. The Cross of Christ spells hope for the most despairing sinner on the face of the earth. "... the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins."

2. How Jesus Treated Men

Jesus Christ treated men from the standpoint of His knowledge of them. He is the supreme Master of the human heart. Recall what He said—"For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts. . . . " consequently He was never surprised, never in a panic. When He met the rich young ruler an upright-living, splendid young man, we read that "Jesus beholding him loved him," but He knew that at the back of all his morality was a disposition which could sin wilfully against God. "If thou wilt be perfect . . ." then come the conditions. Again, when Jesus met Nicodemus, a godly man, a ruler of the synagogue, He told him he must be made all over again before he could enter the kingdom of God. Or think how Jesus treated Peter. Peter loved Jesus, he declared that he was ready to lay down his life for Him, and yet he denied Him thrice. But Jesus never lost heart over him, He had told him beforehand—"... but I made supplication for thee, that thy faith fail not: and do thou, when once thou hast turned again, stablish thy brethren" (RV). Sin never frightened Jesus; the devil never frightened Him. Face Jesus Christ with all the power of the devil: He was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil. Are you being tripped up by the subtle power of the devil? Remember, Jesus Christ has power not only to release you, but to make you more than conqueror over all the devil's onslaughts.

"For He Himself knew what was in man" (RV)—consequently He never trusted any man whether it was John, or Peter, or Thomas; He knew what was in them: they did not. How wonderfully the Apostle Paul learnt this lesson! Read his Epistles—"Don't glory in men, glory only in Jesus Christ and in His work in you." The Holy Spirit applies Jesus Christ's knowledge to me until I know that "in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing," consequently I am never dismayed at what I discover in myself, but learn to trust only what the grace of God does in me.

How does Jesus Christ treat me? Let me receive the Holy Spirit and I will very soon know. He will treat me as He treats every man—mercilessly with regard to sin. We say, "O Lord, leave a little bit of pride, a little bit of self-realisation." God can never save human pride. Jesus Christ has no mercy whatever when it comes to conviction of sin. He has an amazing concern for the sinner, but no pity for sin.

3. How Jesus Thought about Himself

"For in that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succour them that are tempted. . . . [He] was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin" (Hebrews 2:18; 4:15). These verses reveal that it was in His temptation our Lord entered into identification with our need. He took upon Him our human nature, our flesh and blood, and the Spirit drove Him into the wilderness to be tempted by the subtle power of the antagonist of God. Having "suffered being tempted" He knows how terrific are the onslaughts of the devil against human nature unaided; He has been there, therefore He can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. God Almighty was never "tempted in all points like as we are," Jesus Christ was. God Almighty knows all that Jesus Christ knows; but, if I may say it reverently, God in Christ knows more, because God in Christ "suffered being tempted," and therefore He is "able to succour them that are tempted."

Those of you who have been saved by God's grace, have you accepted Jesus' thought about men and are you learning to treat them as He did? or has your soul been rushed into a moral panic as you faced a difficult case? If so, you have never begun to think in Christ's school. If you are rightly related to God there is no excuse for indulging in panic; the Holy Spirit will safeguard you from alarm at immorality, and put you in the place where you can fill up that which remains behind of the afflictions of Christ. If you suffer from panic, you hinder the Holy Spirit working through you. It is easy to be shocked at immorality, but how much education in the school of Christ, how much reliance on the Holy Spirit, does it take to bring us to the place where we are shocked at pride against God? That sensitiveness is lacking to-day.

"And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." The portrait of many of us was sketched in these words of Jesus. Think of the worst man you know, not the worst man you can think of, because that is vague, have you any hope for him? Does the Holy Spirit begin to convey to your mind the wonder of that man being presented perfect in Christ Jesus? That is the test as to whether you have been learning to think about men as Jesus thought of them. The Holy Spirit brings us into sympathy with the work Jesus has done on behalf of men in that He is "able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him."

HOW THE APOSTLE PAUL RETURNS THANKS

But I have all, and abound: I am full, having received of Epaphroditus the things which were sent from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, wellpleasing to God. Philippians 4:18

The Apostle Paul refused to take money-help from any of the Churches he founded and over which he watched so carefully, and his reasons for this are expounded in 1 Corinthians 9 (see also a significant reference in Acts 20:34), the one exception being the Church at Philippi. Paul's imprisonment had revived their affectionate interest, and he writes to thank them for a further gift through Epaphroditus, as, "even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity." The Epistle is a letter of gratitude for these gifts, and along with his thanks Paul combines solicitations and teaching, and deals with some of the grandest, most fundamental truths, e.g., chapter 2.

The letter is addressed to "all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi" from "Paul and Timothy, servants of Jesus Christ" (RV). This is a wonderfully courteous touch, Paul does not call himself here "an apostle of Jesus Christ," but by a name that embraces Timothy, because he was with him when the Church was founded—bond-servants (RV mg) of Christ Jesus.

Philippians 1

But I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel. (Philippians 1:12)

The fortune of misfortune! That is Paul's way of looking at his captivity. He does not want them to be depressed on his account, or to imagine that God's purpose has been hindered; he says it has not been hindered, but furthered. The very things that looked so disastrous have turned out to be the most opportune, so that on this account his heart bounds with joy, and the note of rejoicing comes out through the whole Letter.

"Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will" (Philippians 1:15). Paul was severity itself in dealing with those in Galatia who preached the Gospel from the wrong motive (see Galatians 1:7–8; 2:4–5, 8; 5:4–5); here, he deals with the matter more gently, what is the reason for the difference? In the first case false brethren had insinuated themselves into the Church with the set purpose of unsettling the believers and bringing them into bondage; in this case the motive, he says, was "to raise up affliction for me in my bonds" (RV). Whenever harm is being done to the flock of God it must be tracked out and dealt with rigorously; personal injury is another matter. "Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also," said our Lord, and Paul exhibits that spirit when he says, "What then? notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice."

This brings us up against a big problem, a problem our Lord refers to in Matthew 7:21-23. Because God honours His word no matter how preached or by whom, we naturally infer that if His word is blessed, souls saved, demons cast out, mighty works done, surely the preacher must be a servant of God. It does not follow by any means. An instrument of God and a servant of God ought to be identical, but our Lord's words and Paul's are instances where they are not. It does not impair the inspiration of the Gospel to have it preached by a bad man, but the influence of the preacher, worthy or unworthy, apart altogether from his preaching, has a tremendous effect. If I know a man to be a bad man the sinister influence of his personality neutralises altogether the effect of God's message through him to me; but let me be quite sure that my intuition springs from my relationship to God and not from human suspicion.

Fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. (Philippians 2:2)

In verses 1–4 Paul is arguing—"If you are rightly related to God in Christ, the life of the Son of God in you makes you identical with Him, so that the same 'comfort of love,' the same fellowship of the Spirit, the same 'mercies' that marked Him, mark you." How we water down the amazing revelation made in the New Testament, that we are made one with Christ! "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (Philippians 2:5). We are not given a fully formed reasoning Christian mind when we are born again, we are given the Spirit of Jesus, but not His mind, we have to form that. The "mind" Paul urges the Philippian Christians to form is not the mind of Almighty God, but the mind of Christ Jesus, "who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God ['not a thing to be grasped,' RV mg]." This was the central citadel of the temptation—"You are the Son of God, assert your prerogative; You will bring the world to Your feet if You will remember who You are and use Your power." The answer Jesus made was, "I did not come to do My own will, although I am the Son of God, I am here in this order of things for one purpose only, to do the will of My Father." When we are sanctified the same temptation comes to us—"You are a child of God, identified with Jesus, presume on it, think it something to be grasped, to be proud of." We are saved and sanctified for one purpose, that God's will might be done in us as it was in our Lord.

". . . work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure" (Philippians 2:12-13). These verses combine all we understand by the great efficacious work of grace of God in salvation and sanctification. "You are saved," says Paul, "now work it out: be consistent in character with what God has worked in." The only estimate of consistent Christian character is the life of Jesus made manifest in our mortal flesh. People talk a lot about their "experience" of sanctification and too often there is nothing in it, it doesn't work out in the bodily life or in the mind, it is simply a doctrine; with Paul it was the mainspring of his life. "For it is God which worketh in you to will. . . . "It is nonsense to talk about a man's free will, a man's will is only fundamentally free in God, that is, he is only free when the law of God and the Spirit of God are actively working in his will by his own choice.

". . . that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world" (Philippians 2:15)—that means on this earth, not in heaven. We have to shine as lights in the squalid places of earth; we can't shine in heaven, our light would be put out in two seconds. "That ye may be blameless"—if ever we are to be blameless, undeserving of censure in the sight of God who sees down to the motive of our motives, it must be by the supernatural power of God. The meaning of the Cross is just that—I can not only have the marvellous work of God's grace done in my heart, but can have the proof of it in my life. "The Higher Christian Life" 14 phraseology is apt to be nothing in the world but the expression of a futile and sorrowful struggle, adoring God for what we are in His Divine anticipation but never can be in actuality. It is only when I realise that God's anticipations for me are presented as participations through the power of the Holy Spirit, that I become that peculiarly humble person, a disciple of the Lord Jesus.

"Yea, and if I am poured out as a drink-offering [RV mg] upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all" (Philippians 2:17). Paul's conception of the altar of sacrifice is spending and being spent for the sake of the elementary children of God. He has no other end and aim than that—to be broken bread and poured-out wine in the hands of God that others might be nourished and fed (cf. Colossians 1:24). The great Saviour and His great apostle go hand-in-hand: the Son of God sacrificed Himself to redeem men; Paul, His bondservant, sacrificed himself that men might come to know they are redeemed, that they have been bought with a price and are not their own; it was no false note when Paul said, Christ liveth in me.

Philippians 3

... as touching the law, a Pharisee. (Philippians 3:5)

Saul of Tarsus did easily what all other Pharisees did, but his conscience would not allow him to be a hypocrite easily. His ardent nature tried to make his inner life come up to the standard of the law, and the tragedy of his failure is portrayed in Romans 7. No one was ever so introspective, so painfully conscious of weakness and inability to keep the law, as Paul, so when he says, "Christ is the end of the law unto righteousness" (RV) he is making an intensely practical statement. He is stating the fact that Jesus Christ has planted in him as a sheer gift of God's grace the life that enables him now to fulfil all the law of God-"not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith." "Imputed" means imparted with Paul.

"If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more" (Philippians 3:4). In verses 4–6 Paul catalogues the things that used to be "gains" to him, the things which were a recommendation to him in the eyes of the world (cf. Galatians 1:13–14); but, he says, "I fling them all overboard as refuse, that I may win Christ." The whole of Paul's life has been redetermined by regeneration, and he estimates now from an entirely different standard. The things from which we have to loose ourselves are the good things of the old creation as well as the bad, e.g., our natural virtues, because our natural virtues can never come anywhere near what Jesus Christ wants.

"That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection and the fellowship of His sufferings . . ." (Philippians 3:10). Paul talks more about suffering than any of the apostles, but any suffering that is less than "fellowship with His sufferings" he treats very lightly—"our light affliction." Jesus suffered according to the will of God, and to be made a partaker of His sufferings destroys every element of self-pity, of self-interest, of self-anything.

"... not as though I... were already perfect" (Philippians 3:12). "Let us therefore, as many as be perfect..." (Philippians 3:15). Nothing but wilful perversion would make anyone misunderstand these two "perfections." In verse 12 Paul is speaking of the perfection of consummation not attainable in this life; in verse 15 he speaks of a perfection of fitness demanded now. "Remember, though you are perfectly adjusted to God, you have attained to nothing yet." The idea is that of a marathon runner, practising and practising until he is perfectly fit; when he is perfectly fit he hasn't begun the race, he is only perfectly fit to begin. By regeneration we are put into perfect relationship to God, then we have the same human nature, working along the same lines, but with a different mainspring. "Not that I am already made perfect": that is the perfection of consummation; "I haven't got there yet," says Paul; "but I follow after, if so be that I may apprehend that for which also I was apprehended by Christ Jesus." Paul was absolutely Christ-centred, he had lost all interest in himself in an absorbing passionate interest in Christ. Very few saints get where he got, and we are to blame for not getting there. We thank God for saving and sanctifying us and continually revert to these experiences: Paul reverted to one thing only-"When it pleased God . . . to reveal His Son in me," then he never bothered any more about himself. We try to efface ourselves by an effort; Paul did not efface himself by an effort, his interest in himself simply died right out when he became identified with the death of Jesus.

"For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ" (Philippians 3:18). Why did Paul say "enemies of the cross of Christ," and not "enemies of Christ"? The test all through is true-ness to the Cross. What the enemies of the cross so strenuously oppose is identification on the part of the believer with what the death of Christ on the Cross represents, viz., death to sin in every shape and form. Look at the tremendous words Paul uses, they express the agony of his heart over those who are the enemies of that moral identification. Their god is themselves what develops "me"; not that which takes "me" right out of the road and gives the Son of God a chance to manifest Himself in me. What was it God condemned in the Cross? Self-realisation. Have I come to a moral agreement with God about that? To say that what God condemned in the Cross was social sins is not true; what God condemns in the Cross is sin which is away further down than any moral quirks.

Therefore, my brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved. (Philippians 4:1)

Notice Paul's earnest solicitation over those who have been saved through his ministry; he carried every convert on his heart to the end of his life, or of theirs.

"Be careful for nothing" (Philippians 4:6). The enemy of saintliness is carefulness over the wrong thing. The culture of the Christian life is to learn to be carefully careless over everything saving our relationship to God. It is not sin that keeps us from going on spiritually, but "the cares of the world, . . . the lusts of other things" (RV) that crowd out any consideration of God. We reverse the teaching of Jesus, we don't seek first the Kingdom of God we seek every other thing first, and the result accords with what Jesus said, the word He puts in is choked and becomes unfruitful.

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true . . . take account of [RV mg] these things" (Philippians 4:8). "Glean your thinking"—one of the hardest things to do. For instance, it is essentially difficult to think along the lines laid down in 1 Corinthians 13: "Love taketh not account of evil" (RV); apart from God we do take account of evil, we reason from that standpoint. The majority of us are not spiritual thinkers, but once we begin to think on the basis of our relationship to God through the Redemption we find it a most revolutionary thing. We are not saved by thinking, we form our nous, a responsible intelligence, by thinking, and immediately we face the application of the Redemption to the details of our lives, we find it means everything has to be readjusted bit by bit.

PROBLEMATA MUNDI

Hast thou considered My servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil? Job 1:8

The Book of Job mirrors for all time the problem of things as they have been, as they are, and as they will be until they are altered by the manifestation of a new heaven and a new earth. When things go well a man does not want God, but when things get difficult and suffering begins to touch him, he finds the problem of the world inside his own skin. The slander of men is against God when disasters occur. If you have never felt inclined to call God cruel and hard, it is a question whether you have ever faced any problems at all. Job's utterances are those of a man who suffers without any inkling as to why he suffers; yet he discerns intuitively that what is happening to him is not in God's order, although it is in His permissive will. All through, Job stands for two things: that God is just, and that he is relatively innocent. Remember, Job was never told the preface to his own story; he did not know that he had been chosen to be the battleground between God and Satan. Satan's contention was that no man loved God for His own sake—"Doth Job fear God for nought?" "Job only loves You because You bless him, let me curse his blessings and I will prove it to You." Satan's primary concern is to sneer against God, he is after disconcerting God, putting God in a corner, so to speak, where He will have to take action along Satan's proposed lines.

There are circumstances in life which make us know that Satan's sneer is pretty near the mark. I love God as long as He blesses me, saves my soul and puts me right for heaven; but supposing He should see fit to let the worst things happen to me, would I say, "Go on, do it" and love Him still? The point is that God's honour is at stake in a man who suffers as did this "perfect and upright" man. Part of the problem was that in the bargain Satan made with God, he implied that God must keep out of sight; and God did, He never once showed Himself to Job. The presentation of the controversy between God and Satan is such that Satan has everything on his side and God nothing on His, so much so that God dare not say a word to Job till he had proved himself worthy. Job cannot answer one of the charges the friends bring against him, he tears their arguments to shreds in the fervour of his pain, yet he clings to it, "I will believe God, in spite of everything that seems to be contradicting His character."

The Apostle James talks about "the patience of Job"—Job patient! He was patient, but only to God. There is nothing logical about Job, his statements are wild and chaotic, but underneath there is an implicit understanding of God's character. He is sure of God even though He seems to be doing everything to ruin him, and he draws steadily nearer God as his friends withdraw themselves from him, heaping their anathemas upon him. They slander Job while standing up for God; but in the end God says, "Ye have not spoken of Me the thing that is right, as My servant Job hath." The citadel of true religion is personal relationship to God, let come what will.

Where does our mind rest regarding suffering? The Bible makes little of physical suffering. The modern mind looks on suffering and pain as an unmitigated curse; the Bible puts something akin to purifying in connection with suffering, e.g., "for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin" (1 Peter 4:1). The thing that moves us is the pathos arising from physical suffering; the anguish of a soul trying to find God we put down to lunacy. The only way traditional belief can be transformed into a personal possession is by suffering. Look at what you say you believe, not an atom of it is yours saving the bit you have proved by suffering and in no other way.

Never run away with the idea that Satan is sceptical of all virtue, he knows God too well and human nature too well to have such a shallow scepticism; he is sceptical only of virtue that has not been tried. Faith un-tried is simply a promise and a possibility, which we may cause to fail; tried faith is the pure gold. Faith must be tried, otherwise it is of no worth to God. Think of the dignity it gives to a man's life to know that God has put His honour in his keeping. Our lives mean more than we can tell, they mean that we are fulfilling some purpose of God about which we know nothing any more than Job did. God's government of the world is not for material prosperity, but for moral ends, for the production of moral characters, in the sense of holy characters. Time is nothing to God.

"... the LORD gave Job twice as much as he had before.... So the LORD blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning" (Job 42:10, 12). The charge is made that because God gave Job back his material prosperity, therefore the whole argument of the Book falls to the ground; but the blessing of God on Job was nothing more than an outward manifestation accompanying the certainty he now possessed, viz., that he loves God and that God loves him. It is the overflowing favour of God poured out on a loved son who has come through the ordeal and won his way straight through to God.

A FATAL ERROR OF INDIGNANT INTEGRITY

And he was angry, and would not go in. Luke 15:28

We get the idea that wrong views of God and of goodness arise from a life that is wrong; the Bible shows that wrong views of God and of goodness may arise out of a life that is right. The parable of the two sons is an example of this. The younger brother was a wastrel; the elder brother was a man of integrity, there was not a spot on his character—"neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment." Everything that led him to take up the position he did was perfectly justifiable, it was the protest of an upright man, but he made the fatal error of misinterpreting his father's ways and refusing to enter into a love that was too big for this earth. Many good upright people misinterpret God's ways because they do not take into account first of all the matter of personal relationship to God. They say because we are the creatures of God, we are the sons and daughters of God; Jesus Christ taught with profound insistence that we are sons and daughters of God only by an inner disposition, the disposition of love, which works implicitly. The Bible states that "love is of God." The difficulty arises out of our individuality, which is hard and tight, segregated from others; personality is never isolated, it always merges, and is characterised by an implicit understanding of things. The attitude of the elder brother is individual entirely, he is merged into nothing of the nature of love, consequently he misunderstands his father and demands that his ways ought to be more clearly justifiable to human reason. God's ways never are, because the basis of things fundamentally is not reasonable; if it were, God would be cruel to allow what He does. Our reason is simply an instrument, the way we explain things, it is not the basis of things. The problems of life are only explainable by means of a right relationship to God. If we ask for a reasonable explanation of God's ways in Providence, such as are stated in the Book of Job, or of the puzzles of Nature referred to by Paul in Romans 8:19-23, we will end in misinterpreting God; but when we receive the disposition Jesus Christ came to give us, we find our problems are explained implicitly. There is no such thing as sin to common-sense reasoning, therefore no meaning in the Cross because that view rules out what the Bible bases everything on, viz., the hiatus between God and man produced by sin and the Cross where sin is dealt with. When commonsense reasoning comes to the Cross it is embarrassed, it looks at the death of Jesus as the death of a martyr, One who lived beyond His dispensation. According to the New Testament, the Cross is the Cross of God, not of a man. The problems of Providence, the puzzles of Nature, the paradoxes of Christianity do not bother everybody, they are the problems of men who are good and upright, but distinctly individual, and their individuality causes them to misinterpret God's ways and repudiate Christianity.

"... as soon as this thy son was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf." The elder brother is right, not wrong, according to all reasonable human standards, when he says of the prodigal, "Such a character ought not to be allowed in the home, he ought to be excluded." A bad man would have said "Oh well, it doesn't matter, he has made mistakes, we all do." Embarrassment always arises in the domain of ethics when we make the basis of Christianity adherence to principles instead of personal relationship to God. What is called Christianity, our charity and benevolence is not Christianity as the New Testament teaches it, it is simply adherence to certain principles. Jesus tells us to "give to him that asketh thee"—not because he deserves it, or because he needs it, but "because I tell you to." Ask yourself, "Do I deserve all I have got?" The teaching of Jesus revolutionises our modern conception of charity.

A false idea of God's honour ends in misinterpreting His ways. It is the orthodox type of Christian who by sticking to a crude idea of God's character, presents the teaching which says, "God loves you when you are good, but not when you are bad." God loves us whether we are good or bad. That is the marvel of His love. "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance"—whether there are any righteous is open to question. "The righteous have no need of Me; I came for the sinful, the ungodly, the weak." If I am not sinful and ungodly and weak, I don't need Him at all.

The presentation Jesus gives of the father is that he makes no conditions when the prodigal returns, neither does he bring home to him any remembrance of the far country—the elder brother does that. It is the revelation of the unfathomable, unalterable, amazing love of God. We would feel much happier in our backslidden condition if only we knew it had altered God towards us, but we know that immediately we do come back we will find Him the same, and this is one of the things that keeps men from coming back. If God would only be angry and demand an apology, it would be a gratification to our pride. When we have done wrong we like to be lashed for it. God never lashes. Jesus does not represent the father as saying "You have been so wicked that I cannot take you back as my son, I will make you a servant"; but as saying,

Bring forth quickly the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet: and bring the fatted calf, and kill it, and let us eat, and make merry: for this My son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found. (RV)

DIVINE PARADOX

There is probably no more prominent feature in Bible revelation than that of paradox. In Revelation 5 the apostle John records that in his vision he was told "the Lion of the tribe of Judah . . . hath prevailed to open the book"—and he says, "lo, in the midst of the throne . . . stood a Lamb"! We find a paradox of a similar nature in the Book of Isaiah. The prophet has been looking for some great conquering army of the Lord, and instead he sees a lonely Figure, "travelling in the greatness of his strength." If you take all the manifestations of God in the Old Testament you find them a mass of contradictions: now God is pictured as a Man, now as a Woman, now as a lonely Hero, now as a suffering Servant, and until we come to the revelation in the New Testament these conflicting characteristics but add confusion to our conception of God. But immediately we see Jesus Christ, we find all the apparent contradictions blended in one unique Person.

Drummond in his Natural Law in the Spiritual World, ¹⁵ surely makes a fundamental blunder by that very statement, and surely the contention in Butler's Analogy ¹⁶ is right—that as there is a law in the natural world so there is also a law in the spiritual world, but that they are not the same laws, the one is the complement of the other. Unless this is born in mind by the student of Scripture, and he learns to rely on the Holy Spirit to interpret the spiritual law as he relies on his own spirit to interpret the natural law, he will not only end in confusion, but will be in danger of disparaging the spiritual law in the Bible universe in favour of the natural law in the common-sense universe.

"And I saw in the right hand of Him that sat on the throne a book . . . sealed with seven seals" (Revelation 5:1). I am considering the Book in one aspect only, viz., as containing a knowledge of the future, an understanding of the Providence of God in the present, together with a grasp of the past. The deepest clamour of a man's nature once he is awake is to know the "whence" and "whither" of life—"Whence came I?" "Why am I here?" "Where am I going?" In all ages men have tried to pry into the secrets of the future, astrologers, necromancers, spiritualists, or whatever name you may call them by, have all tried to open the Book, but without success, because it is a sealed Book. "I wept much," says John, "because no one was found worthy to open the book, or to look thereon" (RV).

Because of the sealed character of the Book men become indifferent and cease to be exercised over the "whence" and "whither" of human destiny; they take no interest in Bible revelation, and are amused at our earnest solicitation on their behalf-"It is all about something we cannot know, and there is no one who can tell us." Others say, "There is nothing to know"; not, "We cannot know," but "There is nothing to know, a man lives his life, then dies, and that is all there is." The Psalmist refers to such men when he says, "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." There are others whose sensitive spirit gives them an implicit sense that there is more than this life; there are hidden deeps in their heart that human life and its friendships can never satisfy. The scenes of earth, its sunsets and sunrises, its "huge and thoughtful nights" all awaken an elemental sadness which makes them wonder why they were born, and they feel keenly because the Book is sealed and there is no one able to open it.

But would to God all men knew that there is Someone who is worthy to open the Book!

And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof. (Revelation 5:5)

Who is this Worthy One? If one may say it with reverence, realising the limitation of language, God Himself had to be proved Worthy to open the Book. In the Person of Jesus Christ God became Man, He trod this earth with naked feet, and wrought with human hands the creed of creeds In loveliness and perfect deeds.

Tennyson

By His holy life, by His moral integrity and supreme spiritual greatness, Jesus Christ proved that He was worthy to open the Book. The Book can be opened by only one Hand, the pierced hand of the Worthy One, our Saviour Jesus Christ.

The childish idea that because God is great he can do anything, good or bad, right or wrong, and we must say nothing, is erroneous. The meaning of moral worth is that certain things are impossible to it: it is "impossible for God to lie"; it is impossible for Jesus Christ to contradict His own Holiness or to become other than He is. The profound truth for us is that Jesus Christ is the Worthy One not because He was God Incarnate, but because He was God Incarnate on the human plane. "Being made in the likeness of men" (RV) He accepted our limitations and lived on this earth a life of perfect holiness. Napoleon said of Jesus Christ that He had succeeded in making of every human soul an appendage of His own—why? Because He had the genius of holiness. There have been great military geniuses, intellectual giants, geniuses of statesmen, but these only exercise influence over a limited number of men; Jesus Christ exercises unlimited sway over all men because He is the altogether Worthy One.

And I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne . . . stood a Lamb as it had been slain. (Revelation 5:6)

Jesus Christ is the supreme Sacrifice for the sin of the world; He is "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!" How the Death of Jesus looms all through the Bible! It is through His death that we are made partakers of His life and can have gifted to us a pure heart, which He says is the condition for seeing God.

"Having . . . seven eyes." The Lamb is not only the supreme Sacrifice for man's sin, He is the Searcher of hearts, searching to the inmost recesses of mind and motive. It is not a curious searching, not an uncanny searching, but the deep wholesome searching the Holy Spirit gives in order to convict men of their sin and need of a Saviour; then when they come to the Cross, and through it accept deliverance from sin, Jesus Christ becomes the Sovereign of their lives, they love Him personally and passionately beyond all other loves of earth.

And He came and took the book out of the right hand of Him that sat upon the throne. (Revelation 5:7)

Jesus Christ and He alone is able to satisfy the craving of the human heart to know the "whence" and "whither" of life. He enables men to understand that they have come into this life from a deep purpose in the heart of God; that the one thing they are here for is to get readjusted to God and become His lovers. And whither are we going? We are going to where the Book of Life is opened, and we enter into an effulgence of glory (RV) we can only conceive of now at rare moments.

In the days of His flesh Jesus Christ exhibited this Divine paradox of the Lion and the Lamb. He was the Lion in majesty, rebuking the winds and demons: He was the Lamb in meekness, "who, when He was reviled, reviled not again." He was the Lion in power, raising the dead: He was the Lamb in patience—who was "brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He openeth not His mouth." He was the Lion in authority, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, . . . but I say unto you . . .": He was the Lamb in gentleness, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me. . . . And He took them up in His arms, put His hands upon them, and blessed them."

In our personal lives Jesus Christ proves Himself to be all this—He is the Lamb to expiate our sins, to lift us out of condemnation and plant within us His own heredity of holiness: He is the Lion to rule over us, so that we gladly say, "the government [of this life] shall be upon His shoulder." And what is true in individual life is to be true also in the universe at large. The time is coming when the Lion of the Tribe of Judah shall reign, and when "the kingdoms of this world" shall become "the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ."

One remaining paradox—In Revelation 6:16 "the wrath of the Lamb" is mentioned. We know what the wrath of a lion is like—but the wrath of the Lamb!—it is beyond our conception. All one can say about it is that the wrath of God is the terrible obverse side of the love of God.

MEMORY OF SIN IN THE SAINT

. . . for that He counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry; who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious. 1 Timothy 1:12–13

... and such were some of you. 1 Corinthians 6:11

No aspect of Christian life and service is in more need of revision than our attitude to the memory of sin in the saint. When the Apostle Paul said "forgetting those things which are behind," he was talking not about sin, but about his spiritual attainment. Paul never forgot what he had been; it comes out repeatedly in the Epistles—"For I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle" (1 Corinthians 15:9); "unto me who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given" (Ephesians 3:8); "... sinners, of whom I am chief" (1 Timothy 1:15). And these are the utterances of a ripe, glorious servant of God.

If one wants a touchstone for the depth of true spiritual Christianity, one will surely find it in this matter of the memory of sin. There are those who exhibit a Pharisaic holiness, they thank God with an arrogant offensiveness that they are "not as other men are"; they have forgotten the horrible pit and miry clay from whence they were taken, and their feet set upon a rock through the might of the Atonement. Perhaps the reason they condemn others who have fallen and been restored is the old human failing of making a virtue out of necessity. Their lives have been shielded, the providence of God has never allowed them to be enmeshed in the subtle snares other men have encountered and whose fall has plunged them into an agony of remorse. May the conviction of God come with swift and stern rebuke upon any one who is remembering the past of another, and deliberately choosing to forget their restoration through God's grace. When a servant of God meets these sins in others, let him be reverent with what he does not understand and leave God to deal with them.

Certain forms of sin shock us far more than they shock God. The sin that shocks God, the sin that broke His heart on Calvary, is not the sin that shocks us. The sin that shocks God is the thing which is highly esteemed among men—self-realisation, pride, my right to myself. We have no right to have the attitude to any man or woman as if he or she had sunk to a lower level than those of us who have never been tempted on the line they have. The conventions of society and our social relationships make it necessary for us to take this attitude, but we have to remember that in the sight of God there are no social conventions, and that external sins are no whit worse in His sight than the pride which hates the rule of the Holy Ghost while the life is morally clean. May God have mercy on any one of us who forgets this, and allows spiritual pride or superiority and a sense of his own unsulliedness, to put a barrier between him and those whom God has lifted from depths of sin he cannot understand.

Holiness is the only sign that a man is repentant in the New Testament sense, and a holy man is not one who has his eyes set on his own whiteness, but one who is personally and passionately devoted to the Lord who saved him—one whom the Holy Ghost takes care shall never forget that God has made him what he is by sheer sovereign grace. Accept as the tender touch of God, not as a snare of the devil, every memory of sin the Holy Ghost brings home to you, keeping you in the place where you remember what you once were and what you now are by His grace.

"This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief" (1 Timothy 1:15)—sinners, of whom I am chief. What a marvellous humility it betokens for a man to say that and mean it! In the early days of the sterner form of Calvinism a man's belief about God and about his own destiny frequently produced a wistful, self-effacing humility; but the humility Paul manifests was produced in him by the remembrance that Jesus, whom he had scorned and despised, whose followers he had persecuted, whose Church he had harried, not only had forgiven him, but made him His chief apostle: Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ.

"Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all longsuffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on Him to life everlasting." Here is the attitude of the servant of God—"since God has done this for me, I can despair of no man on the face of the earth." Show such a servant of God the backslider, the sinner steeped in the iniquity of our cities, and there will spring up in his heart an amazing well of compassion and love for that one, because he has himself experienced the grace of God which goes to the uttermost depths of sin and lifts to the highest heights of salvation.

But where sin abounded, grace did abound more exceedingly (RV).

CELEBRATION OR SURRENDER?

We begin our Christian life by believing what we are told to believe, then we have to go on to so assimilate our beliefs that they work out in a way that redounds to the glory of God. The danger is in multiplying the acceptation of beliefs we do not make our own. Every now and again we find ourselves lost in wonder at the marvel of the Redemption; it is a wholesome initial stage, but if it is made the final stage it is perilous. The difficulty of believing in the Redemption in the sense of assimilating it is that it demands renunciation. I have to give up my right to myself in complete surrender to my Lord before what I celebrate becomes a reality. There is always the danger of celebrating what Jesus Christ has done and forgetting the need on our part of moral surrender to Him; if we evade the surrender we become the more intense in celebrating what He has done.

1. The Snare of Emotional Rapture (Mark 9:2-8)

And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here. (Mark 9:5)

Be quick to notice how God brings you rapidly from emotional rapture into contact with the sordid commonplace activities of life. There are times in the Providence of God when He leads us apart by ourselves, when Jesus reveals Himself to us and we see Him transfigured. The place apart by ourselves may be a prayer meeting, a service, a talk with a friend, a sunrise or a sunset, when we are stirred to the depths and see what we are unable to utter; the snare is to imagine that that is all God means; He means much more. "And there was a cloud that overshadowed them: and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, This is My beloved Son: hear Him"—not, "This is My beloved Son: now spend halcyon days with Him on the Mount." Beware of celestial sensuality. No matter what your experience, you may be trapped by sensuality any time. Sensuality is not sin, it is the way the body works in connection with circumstances whereby I begin to satisfy myself. Mary Magdalene was in danger of making this blunder, but Jesus said, "Touch Me not"—"Don't try and hold Me by your senses, but go and do what I say." Always thrust out into the actual, because it is there you exhibit whether your emotional rapture has seduced you, made you unfit for activities.

After a time of rapt contemplation when your mind has been absorbing the truth of God, watch the kind of people God will bring round you, not people dressed in the "castoff nimbus" of some saint, but ordinary commonplace people just like yourself. We imagine that God must engineer special circumstances for us, peculiar sufferings; He never does, because that would feed our pride; He engineers things which from the standpoint of human pride are a humiliation.

"And suddenly, when they had looked round about, they saw no man any more, save Jesus only with themselves" (Mark 9:8). Instead of its being, "no cross, no crown," spiritually, it is "no crown, no cross." We are crowned by the moment of rapture, but that is not the end, it is the beginning of being brought down into the demon-possessed valley to bear the cross for Him there. With a sudden rush we find no Moses, no Elijah, no transfiguration-glory, and we fear as we enter the cloud, till we come to the place where there is "no man, save Jesus only." As men and women we have to live in this world, in its misery and sinfulness, and we must do the same if we are disciples. Of all people we should be able to go down into the demon-possessed valley, because once we have seen Jesus transfigured it is impossible to lose heart or be discouraged.

2. The Sincerity of Experimental Realisation

Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord. . . . (Philippians 3:8)

Paul goes on to state that he not only estimated the cost, he experienced it—"for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, . . . that I may win Christ and be found in Him, not having mine own righteousness. . . ." Imagine anyone who has seen Jesus Christ transfigured saying he is sorry to find himself mean¹⁷ and ignoble! The more I whine about being a miserable sinner, the more I am hurting the Holy Spirit. It simply means I don't agree with God's judgement of me, I think after all I am rather desirable: God thought me so undesirable that He sent His Son to save me. To discover I am what God says I am ought to make me glad; if I am glad over anything I discover in myself, I am very short-sighted. The only point of rest is in the Lord Himself.

Since mine eyes have looked on Jesus, I've lost sight of all beside . . .
So enchained my spirit's vision
Gazing on the Crucified.

INTRODUCTION

These lectures were given to students in the sermon class at the Bible Training College,¹ in London, between 1911 and 1915.

Publication History

- As articles: Twenty-five articles titled "Sermon Class Notes" appeared in the BTC Monthly Journal² between April 1945 and March 1952.
- As a book: 1955.

Oswald Chambers' sermon class at the Bible Training College was a combination of lecture and practical experience. Since each student had to prepare and present a sermon before the other members of the class, no visitors were permitted. Oswald wanted everyone to be on an equal footing, as well as being sympathetic listeners, knowing their turn to speak was coming.

Because of the give and take nature of the class, Oswald's lectures were short and practical. Rather than giving a detailed process to follow in sermon preparation, he sought to motivate students to think, study, and prepare. He often stressed that the behavior and words of the person who preaches are inseparable.

From the BTC Journal articles, Mrs. Chambers selected thoughts on twenty-one topics and published them as Disciples Indeed. There is a surprising amount of material that appears here and nowhere else in the books by Oswald Chambers.

FOREWORD

Oswald Chambers was above all else a teacher of spiritual truth. Our Ascended Lord's promise was to give His Church "some to be . . . teachers; for the perfecting of the saints" (Ephesians 4:11 RV). This book contains messages spoken by such a teacher, full of wisdom and instruction in righteousness. Teachers call for learners. Some of us who heard the spoken word became humble and eager learners. Many who never saw or heard the speaker are learning from him now. In a recent letter the writer says, "It is not generally known how these books came into being, and the time seems favourable for revealing God's providence in it all." Oswald Chambers received his Home-call in 1917 when working with the Y.M.C.A. among the Troops in Egypt. It seemed like the end of a fruitful ministry. Then it was that Mrs. Chambers realised that her custom of taking down in shorthand her husband's lectures and addresses for her own profit had left her with a great store of spiritual wisdom which could be shared with the wider world by the printed page. So began a remarkable ministry of spreading in book form the original spoken words. As the writer of the above-mentioned letter says, "The whole matter is a sheer miracle, especially as the only planning has been God's."

^{1.} Residential school near Clapham Common in SW London, sponsored by the League of Prayer. Oswald Chambers was Principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers was Lady Superintendent. Known as the BTC, it closed in July 1915 because of World War I.

Disciples Indeed, the latest book to be issued, speaks for itself. Other volumes show by the outlines and headings given what careful preparation was made for every spoken message. But often the spontaneous word of a Spirit-filled man, whether the subject was Christian Doctrine, Psychology, Biblical Ethics or Homiletics, would be added, and appear in the shorthand notes. Many of these not included in the earlier publications are printed here. They touch a wide range of subjects, and take us to the heart of Oswald Chambers' message. They make this book a kind of vade mecum of sainthood.

BELIEF

The only noble sense in which we can claim to believe a thing is when we ourselves are living in the inner spirit of that thing.

I have no right to say I believe in God unless I order my life as under His all-seeing Eye.

I have no right to say I believe that Jesus is the Son of God unless in my personal life I yield myself to that Eternal Spirit, free from all self-seeking, which became incarnate in Jesus.

I have no right to say that I believe in forgiveness as an attribute of God if in my own heart I cherish an unforgiving temper. The forgiveness of God is the test by which I myself am judged.

Belief is a wholesale committal, it means making things inevitable, cutting off every possible retreat. Belief is as irrevocable as bereavement (cf. 2 Samuel 12:21–23).

Belief is the abandonment of all claim to merit. That is why it is so difficult to believe.

A believer is one whose whole being is based on the finished work of Redemption.

It is easier to be true to our convictions than to Jesus Christ, because if we are going to be true to Him our convictions will need to be altered.

Where we blunder is in trying to expound the Cross doctrinally while refusing to do what Jesus told us to do, viz., lift Him up. "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Myself" (John 12:32 RV).

We are not sent to specialise in doctrine, but to lift up Jesus, and He will do the work of saving and sanctifying souls. When we become doctrine-mongers God's power is not known, only the passionateness of an individual appeal.

God has a way of bringing in facts which upset a man's doctrines if these stand in the way of God getting at his soul.

Doctrine is never the guide into Christian experience; doctrine is the exposition of Christian experience.

The further we get away from Jesus the more dogmatic we become over what we call our religious beliefs, while the nearer we live to Jesus the less we have of certitude and the more of confidence in Him.

You cannot understand Jesus Christ unless you accept the New Testament revelation of Him, you must be biased for Him before you can understand Him.

Beware of coming to Jesus with preconceived notions of your own, come relying on the Holy Spirit "He shall glorify Me," said Jesus (John 16:14).

Once allow that Jesus Christ is all the New Testament proclaims Him to be, and you are borne on irresistibly to believe that what He says about Himself is true.

The most conspicuous thing in the New Testament is the supremacy given to our Lord; to-day the supremacy is apt to be given to phases of the truth, to doctrines, and not to Jesus Christ.

Truth is a Person, not a proposition; if I pin my faith to a logical creed I will be disloyal to the Lord Jesus.

The most fundamental heresies which split the Christian Church are those built on what Jesus Christ can do instead of on Himself. Wreckage in spiritual experience always follows.

Many a man spurns Jesus Christ in any phase other than that of his particular religious idea.

Every partial truth has so much error in it that you can dispute it, but you can't dispute "truth as it is in Jesus."

Watch the things you say you can't believe, and then recall the things you accept without thinking, e.g., your own existence.

It is impossible to prove a fact, facts have to be swallowed and the man who swallows revelation facts is no more of a fool than the man who swallows common-sense facts on the evidence of his senses. Face facts, and play the sceptic with explanations.

The "ever-learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth" stage is the cause of all spiritual epidemics; we won't realise what God has revealed.

You can't unveil Truth when you like; when the unveiling comes, beware. That moment marks your going back or your going on.

Truth is of the implicit order, you can't define Truth, and yet every man is so constituted that at times his longing for Truth is insatiable. It is not sufficient to remain with a longing for Truth, because there is something at the basis of things which drives a man to the Truth if he is honest.

When a man says he can't believe, don't argue with him on what he doesn't believe but ask him what he does believe, and proceed from that point; disbelief as often arises from temperament as from sin. Every man believes in a good character, then refer to Jesus Christ as the best character in history, and ask him to believe that what He says is likely to be true (e.g. Luke 11:13; John 3:16), and get him to transact business on that.

When once you come in contact with Jesus you are not conscious of any effort to believe in Him.

If I believe the character of Jesus, am I living up to what I believe?

The danger of pietistic movements is that we are told what we must feel, and we can't get near God because we are so hopelessly dependent on pious attitudes, consequently what is seen is not the New Testament stamp of saint, but the mixture of an insubordinate intellect along with an affected clinging to Jesus with devotion.

Whenever a Holiness Movement raises its head and begins to be conscious of its own holiness, it is liable to become an emissary of the devil, although it started with an emphasis on a neglected truth.

We must continually take stock of what is ours in Christ Jesus because only in that way will we understand what God intends us to be.

If you preach Holiness, or Sanctification, or Divine Healing, or the Second Coming, you are off the track because you de-centralise the Truth. We have to fix our eyes on Jesus Christ, not on what He does. "I am . . . the Truth."

If I am going to know who Jesus is, I must obey Him. The majority of us don't know Jesus because we have not the remotest intention of obeying Him.

Our deadliest temptations are not so much those that destroy Christian belief as those that corrupt and destroy the Christian temper.

The great paralysis of our heart is unbelief. Immediately I view anything as inevitable about any human being, I am an unbeliever.

There is a difference between believing God and believing about Him, you are always conscious of the latter, it makes you a prig. If by letting your beliefs go you get hold of God Himself, let them go.

Beware of worshipping Jesus as the Son of God, and professing your faith in Him as the Saviour of the world, while you blaspheme Him by the complete evidence in your daily life that He is powerless to do anything in and through you.

The greatest challenge to a Christian is to believe Matthew 28:18—"All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." How many of us get into a panic when we are faced by physical desolation, by death, or war, injustice, poverty, disease? All these in all their force will never turn to panic the one who believes in the absolute sovereignty of his Lord.

THE BIBLE

"The Word" is Jesus Himself (John 1:1), therefore we must have an experimental knowledge of Him before we understand the literal words of the Bible.

The danger to-day is that people are being nourished not with the Bible so much as with conceptions which ignore Jesus Christ.

Bible facts are either revelation facts or nonsense. It depends on me which they are to me.

God does not thunder His truth into our ears, our attitude of mind must be submissive to revelation facts. Each one of us brings certain prejudices, civilised pre-judgements, which greatly hinder our understanding of revelation facts.

Our attitude to the Bible is a stupid one; we come to the Bible for proof of God's existence, but the Bible has no meaning for us until we know God does exist. The Bible states and affirms facts for the benefit of those who believe in God; those who don't believe in God can tear it to bits if they choose.

People can dispute the words of the Bible as they like, but get a soul in whom the craving for God has come, and the words of the Bible create the new life in him. ". . . being born again, . . . by the word of God" (1 Peter 1:23).

If we understood what happens when we use the Word of God, we would use it oftener. The disablement of the devil's power by means of the Word of God conveyed through the lips of a servant of His, is inconceivable.

The main characteristic which is the proof of the indwelling Spirit is an amazing tenderness in personal dealing, and a blazing truthfulness with regard to God's Word.

There is no true illumination apart from the written Word. Spiritual impressions generated from my own experience are of no importance, and if I pay attention to them I will pay no attention to the words of Jesus.

The test of God's truth is that it fits you exactly; if it does not, question whether it is His truth.

Beware of bartering the Word of God for a more suitable conception of your own.

Every impulse must wed itself to the express statements of the Bible, otherwise they will lead astray.

The thing to ask yourself is, "Does the Bible say it?" not, "I don't think that is a good view of God."

Profoundly speaking, it is not sufficient to say, "Because God says it," or, "Because the Bible says it," unless you are talking to people who know God and know the Bible to be His Word. If you appeal from the authority of God or of the Bible to a man not born again, he will pay no attention to you because he does not stand on the same platform. You have to find a provisional platform on which he can stand with you, and in the majority of cases you will find that the platform is that of moral worth. If Jesus Christ is proved Worthy on the plane men are on, they will be ready to put Him as the Most Worthy One, and all the rest will follow.

Whenever human nature gets driven to the end of things the Bible is the only Book, and God the only Being, in the world.

The reason some of us are not healthy spiritually is because we don't use the Bible as the Word of God but only as a text-book.

Beware of making a fetish of a word God once spoke to you; if you stick to the word God spoke you will leave Him, and the result is harshness and stagnation, a refusal to budge from the precedent you have established.

Watch every time the Word of God is made a sacrament to you through someone else, it will make you re-tune your ears to His Word.

There are saints who are being rattled out of holiness by fussy work for God, whereas one five minutes of brooding on God's truth would do more good than all their work of fuss.

It is what the Bible imparts to us that is of value.

The Bible does not thrill, the Bible nourishes. Give time to the reading of the Bible and the recreating effect is as real as that of fresh air physically.

If I have disobeyed, the Word of God is dried up, there is "no open vision." Immediately I obey the Word is poured in.

To read the Bible according to God's providential order in your circumstances is the only way to read it, viz., in the blood and passion of personal life.

The statements of Scripture apart from the Holy Spirit's illumination are dull; it needs no spiritual insight to regard Jesus Christ as a Man who lived beyond His time, but when I am born again I have insight into the Person of Jesus, an insight that comes through communion with God by means of the Bible.

Beware of interpreting Scripture in order to make it suit a pre-arranged doctrine of your own.

Exegesis is not torturing a text to agree with a theory of my own, but leading out its meaning.

Beware of reasoning about God's Word, obey it.

An absurd thing to say is—"Give me a text to prove it." You cannot give a text to prove any one of God's revelations, you can only give a text to prove your simplification of those revelations. A text-proof is generally used to bolster up a personal spiritual affinity of my own.

We are to be servants and handmaids of the Gospel, not devotees of the Bible, then God can make us living mediums whereby His Word becomes a sacrament to others.

THE CALL OF GOD

If you only know what God can do your talk is altogether of that, a logical exposition of doctrine, but if you have heard God's call you will always keep to the one centre, the Person of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Discard any emotion or call to work which cannot find itself at home in the absolute mastery of Jesus Christ.

If I hear the call of God and refuse to obey, I become the dullest, most common-place of Christians because I have seen and heard and refused to obey.

No experience on earth is sufficient to be taken as a call of God; you must know that the call is from God for whom you care more than for all your experiences; then nothing can daunt you. You can never fag the life out of the one whose service springs from listening to the voice of God, its inspiration is drawn not from human sympathy, but from God Himself.

The Call is the inner motive of having been gripped by God—spoilt for every aim in life saving that of disciplining men to Jesus.

One man or woman called of God is worth a hundred who have elected to work for God.

It is an erroneous notion that you have to wait for the call of God: see that you are in such a condition that you can realise it (see Isaiah 6:8).

If God has called any man or woman in this College into His service, as He undoubtedly has, never allow anyone to interfere with your obedience to His call. Let God do what He likes, He knows exactly where you are and when the time is fit to make you broken bread in His hands.

We need no call of God to help our fellow men, that is the natural call of humanity; but we do need the supernatural work of God's grace before we are fit for God to help Himself through us.

If a man is called to preach the Gospel, God will crush him till the light of the eye, the power of the life, the ambition of the heart, is all riveted on Himself. That is not done easily. It is not a question of saintliness, it has to do with the Call of God.

THE CHARACTER OF GOD

"No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him" (John 1:18). A Christian accepts all he knows about God on the authority of Jesus Christ; he can find out nothing about God by his own unaided intellect.

The God I infer by my common sense has no power over me at all.

The vindication of God to our intelligence is the most difficult process. Only when we see righteousness and justice exhibited in the Person of Jesus Christ can we vindicate God.

In the face of problems as they are, we see in Jesus Christ an exhibition of where our faith is to be placed viz., in a God whose ways we do not understand.

Jesus Christ reveals, not an embarrassed God, not a confused God, not a God who stands apart from the problems, but One who stands in the thick of the whole thing with man.

When a so-called rationalist points out sin and iniquity and disease and death, and says, "How does God answer that?" you have always a fathomless answer—the Cross of Christ.

God's ways are "past finding out"! We often state the character of God in terms of brutal harshness while our motive is to glorify Him.

Never accept an explanation that travesties God's character.

There are some questions God cannot answer until you have been brought by obedience to be able to stand the answer. Be prepared to suspend your judgement until you have heard God's answer for yourself.

There is a dark line in God's face, but what we do know about Him is so full of peace and joy that we can wait for His interpretation.

God's order is clearly marked out in the first and the last; His permissive will is seen in the process inbetween where everything is disorganised because of sin. The Christian is one who by the power of the indwelling Spirit sees the final issue. The Psalmist was perplexed when he saw the prosperity of the wicked (see Psalm 73:1–12); God's final purpose is holiness, holy men and women, and He restrains none of the forces which go against that purpose.

Beware lest your attitude to God's truth reminds Him that He is very unwise. Everything worthwhile in life is dangerous, and yet we would have God such a tepid Being that He runs no risks!

Believe what you do believe and stick to it, but don't profess to believe more than you intend to stick to. If you say you believe God is love, stick to it, though all Providence becomes a pandemonium shouting that God is cruel to allow what He does.

Never attempt to explain God to an exasperated soul, because you cannot. Don't take the part of Job's friends and say you can explain the whole thing; if you think you can, you are very shallow. You have to take on the attitude of vicarious waiting till God brings the light.

Remember, each life has a solitary way alone with God. Be reverent with His ways in dealing with other souls because you have no notion, any more than Job had, why things are as they are. Most of us are much too desirous of getting hold of a line which will vindicate us in our view of God.

It is perilously possible to make our conceptions of God like molten lead poured into a specially designed mould, and when it is cold and hard we fling it at the heads of the religious people who don't agree with us.

God is true to the laws of His own nature, not to my way of expounding how He works.

We have to get out of the old pagan way of guiding ourselves by our heads and get into the Christian way of being guided by faith in a personal God, whose methods are a perpetual contradiction to our every preconceived notion.

We only see another in the light of what we think he is, it takes an amount of surgery on the inside to make us see other people as they really are, and it is the same with what we think about God; we take the facts revealed in the Bible and try to fit them into our own ideas of what God is like.

Am I becoming more and more in love with God as a holy God, or with the conception of an amiable Being who says, "Oh well, sin doesn't matter much"?

God never coerces, neither does He ever accommodate His demands to human compromise, and we are disloyal to Him if we do.

Watch the margins of your mind when you begin to take the view that it doesn't matter whether God is holy or not; it is the beginning of being a traitor to Jesus Christ.

Spiritual insight does not so much enable us to understand God as to understand that He is at work in the ordinary things of life, in the ordinary stuff human nature is made of.

Learn to give honour to God when good works are done, but also learn to discern whether or not they are done by God's servants. The most outrageous moment for the devil will be when he finds that in spite of himself he has done God's will; and the same with the man who has been serving his own ends.

Everything the devil does, God over-reaches to serve His own purpose.

Have I ever had a glimpse of this—that God would not be altered if all our civilised life went to pieces?

Over-refinement in civilisation turns God's order upside down.

God has no respect for our civilisations because He did not found them. While civilisation is not God's, it is His providential protection for men, generally restraining the bad, and affording His children the means of developing their life in Him.

When the present phase is over God won't have elbow-room, it will be all insurance and combine, and God won't be able to get in anywhere. What is true of civilisation will be true of us individually unless we remember to put God first.

In a time of calamity God appears to pay scant courtesy to all our art and culture, He sweeps the whole thing aside till civilisation rages at Him. It is the babe and the fool who get through in the day of God's visitation.

God cannot come to me in any way but His own way, and His way is often insignificant and unobtrusive.

Never accept an explanation of any of God's ways which involves what you would scorn as false and unfair in a man.

God does not act according to His own precedents, therefore logic or a vivid past experience can never take the place of a personal faith in a personal God.

God never crushes men beneath the fear of judgement without revealing the possibility of victorious virtue.

We say that God foresaw sin, and made provision for it: the Bible revelation is that "the Lamb that hath been slain from the foundation of the world" (RV) is the exact expression of the nature of God.

EXPERIENCE

Experiences are apt to be exalted out of all due measure whereas they are but the outward manifestation of the oneness with God made possible for us in Christ Jesus.

Get into the habit of chasing yourself out of the sickly morbid experiences that are not based on having been with Jesus (see Acts 4:13); they are not only valueless, but excessively dangerous.

The great bedrock of Christian experience is the outside fact of the Resurrection made inwardly real by the incoming of the Holy Spirit. "That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection . . ." (Philippians 3:10).

If your experience is not worthy of the Risen, Ascended Christ, then fling it overboard.

Whenever ecstasies or visions of God unfit us for practical life they are danger signals that the life is on the wrong track.

Our identity with Jesus Christ is immediately practical or not at all, that is, the new identity must manifest itself in our mortal flesh otherwise we can easily hoax ourselves into delusions. Being "made the righteousness of God in Him" is the most powerfully practical experience in a human life.

Insubordination characterises much of what is called "The Higher Christian Life";⁴ it is spiritual anarchy based on my intuitions, my private interpretations, my experiences, while refusing to submit to the words of the Lord Jesus.

^{4.} The Higher Christian Life teaching emphasised sanctification and personal holiness.

My experience of salvation never constitutes me an expounder of the Atonement. I am always apt to take my experience for an inclusive interpretation instead of its being merely a gateway for one into salvation.

We continually want to present our understanding of how God has worked in our own experience, consequently we confuse people. Present Jesus Christ, lift Him up, and the Holy Spirit will do in them what He has done in you.

A great deal of what we have to proclaim can never be experienced, but whenever God's standard is presented we are either exonerated or condemned by the way we ourselves carry out the dictates of the Holy Spirit.

Experience as an end in itself is a disease; experience as a result of the life being based on God is health.

Spiritual famine and dearth, if it does not start from sin, starts from dwelling entirely on the experience God gave me instead of on God who gave me the experience.

When I plant my faith on the Lord Jesus my experiences don't make me conscious of them, they produce in me the life of a child.

If my experience makes anyone wish to emulate me, I am decoying that one away from God.

"Because I have had more experience of life than you have, therefore I can discern God's will better than you can." Not at all. Whenever I put my experience of life, or my intelligence, or anything other than dependence on God, as the ground of understanding the will of God I rob Him of glory.

It is on the line of impulse that Satan leads the saints astray, in spite of Jesus Christ's warning—"so as to [lead astray, if possible, RV], even the elect." It is spiritual impulse that leads off at a tangent. Satan does not come as "an angel of light" to anybody but a saint.

Whenever we get light from God on a particular phase we incline to limit God's working to that phase forgetting that we cannot tie up Almighty God to anything built up out of our own experience.

One man's experience is as valuable as another's, but experience has nothing to do with facts. Facts pay no attention to us, facts have to be accepted, they are the real autocrats in life.

You cannot deal with facts as you like, you may object to them, but a fact is a fact, whether a commonsense fact or a revelation fact.

In spiritual experience it is not your intellect that guides you; intellect illuminates what is yours, and you get a thrill of delight because you recognise what you have been going through but could not state.

Whenever the Bible refers to facts of human experience, look to your experience for the answer; when the Bible refers to standards of revelation, look to God not to your experience.

Beware of making your religious experiences a cloak for a lack of reality.

If you have been going on with God you find He has knocked the bottom-board out of your fanaticism; where you used to be narrow and bigoted, you now exhibit His Spirit.

Would to God we got finished once for all with the experience of being adjusted to God, and let Him send us forth into vicarious service for Him!

THE HOLY SPIRIT

It is not what we feel, or what we know, but ever what we receive from God—and a fool can receive a gift. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" (Luke 11:13). It is so simple that everyone who is not simple misses it.

Beware of telling people they must be worthy to receive the Holy Spirit; you can't be worthy, you must know you are unworthy, then you will ask for the gift —"If ye then, being evil..."

The biggest blessing in your life was when you came to the end of trying to be a Christian, the end of reliance on natural devotion, and were willing to come as a pauper and receive the Holy Spirit. The humiliation is that we have to be quite sure we need Him, so many of us are quite sure we don't need Him.

It is extraordinary how things fall off from a man like autumn leaves once he comes to the place where there is no rule but that of the personal domination of the Holy Spirit.

We continually want to substitute our transactions with God for the great mystic powerful work of the Holy Spirit. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the voice thereof, but knowest not whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit" (John 3:8 RV).

By regeneration we are put into right relationship with God, then we have the same human nature, working on the same lines, but with a different driving power expressing itself, so that the "members" which were used for the wrong are now used for the good (see Romans 6:17–21).

The strenuous effort of the saint is not to produce holiness, but to express in actual circumstances the disposition of the Son of God which is imparted to him by the Holy Ghost.

Beware of seeking power rather than the personal relationship to Jesus Christ which is the grand avenue through which the Holy Spirit comes in His working power. "But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be My witnesses" (Acts 1:8 RV).

The message of Pentecost is an emphasis, not on the Holy Ghost, but on the Risen and Ascended Christ (see John 16:13–15).

The Holy Spirit takes care that we fix our attention on Jesus Christ; then He will look after the presentation given of our Lord through us.

Devotion to Jesus is the expression of the Holy Spirit's work in me.

The Holy Spirit is concerned only with glorifying Jesus, not with glorifying our human generosities.

The deep and engrossing need of those of us who name the Name of Christ is reliance on the Holy Spirit.

Jesus Christ reinstates us to the position lost through sin (see Romans 5:12); we come at this knowledge experimentally, but it is never our understanding of salvation that leads to salvation. Salvation is experienced first, then to understand it needs the work of the Holy Spirit, which is surprising and incalculable.

We "become partakers of the divine nature" by receiving the Holy Ghost who sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts (Romans 5:5), and the oneness is manifested in a life of abandon and obedience—both unconscious.

If you are being checked by the Holy Spirit over a wrong thing you are allowing in yourself, beware of only captiously seeing the limitations in other people; you will diverge further away from God if you don t recognise that it is the still small voice of God to you.

There is nothing so still and gentle as the checks of the Holy Spirit if they are yielded to, emancipation is the result; but let them be trifled with, and there will come a hardening of the life away from God. Don't quench the Spirit.

There is no room for harsh judgement on the part of a child of God. Harsh judgement is based, not on the sternness of the Holy Ghost, but on my refusal to bear someone else's burden. Beware of everything in which you have to justify yourself to yourself because the underlying fact is that you have cajoled yourself into taking a decision born of temperamental convictions instead of in entire reliance on the Holy Spirit.

The inspiration of the Holy Spirit is not an impulse to make me act but to enable me to interpret God's meaning; if I do act on the impulse of the inspiration, it is a mere physical reaction in myself. Impulse is God's knock at my door that He might come in, not for me to open the door and go out.

The salvation of Jesus Christ makes a man's personality intense; very few of us are real until the Holy Spirit gets hold of us.

The Holy Spirit does not obliterate a man's personality; He lifts it to its highest use, viz., for the portrayal of the Mind of God.

Beware of the "show business"—"I want to be baptised with the Holy Ghost so that I may do wonderful works." God never allows anyone to do wonderful works: He does them, and the baptism of the Holy Ghost prevents my seeing them in order to glory in them.

"When He ascended on high . . . He gave gifts unto men" (Ephesians 4:8 RV; cf. Acts 2:33). The only sign that a particular gift is from the Ascended Christ is that it edifies the Church. Much of our Christian work to-day is built on what the Apostle pleads it should not be built on, viz., the excellencies of the natural virtues.

Be careful to notice the difference between an offended personal prejudice which makes you feel ruffled and huffy, and the intuitive sense of bondage produced by the Holy Spirit when you are listening to something that is not God's truth.

We must distinguish between the bewilderment arising from conviction of sin and the bewilderment arising from confusion in thinking; the latter is the inevitable result in a traditionally Christian mind on first receiving the Holy Spirit; but a curious thing to note is that a heathen mind experiences no such bewilderment on receiving the Holy Spirit because there are no preconceived notions to be got rid of.

The mind that is not produced by obedience to the Holy Spirit in the final issue hates God.

If you are in danger of building on the natural virtues, which are a remnant of the former creation, the Holy Spirit will throw a searchlight and show you things that cause you to shudder. He will reveal a vindictiveness, a maliciousness, you never knew before.

Let God bring you through some midnight, when the Holy Spirit reminds you of what you once were, of your religious hypocrisies—the things the devil whispers you should forget; let God bring you to the dust before Him. This experience will always come in the path of those God is going to take up into His purposes.

The baptism of the Holy Ghost means the extinction of life-fires that are not of God, and everything becomes instinct with the life of God.

The Holy Spirit is the One who regenerates us into the Family to which Jesus Christ belongs, until by the eternal efficacy of the Cross we are made partakers of the Divine nature.

The Holy Spirit is not a substitute for Jesus. The Holy Spirit is all that Jesus was, made real in personal experience now.

There is one thing we cannot imitate: we cannot imitate being full of the Holy Ghost.

The mark of the Holy Spirit in a man's life is that he has gone to his own funeral and the thought of himself never enters.

The sign that the Holy Spirit is being obeyed by me is that I am not dominated by my sensualities. "And they that are of Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with the passions and the lusts thereof" (Galatians 5:24 RV). Sensualities are not gross only, they can be very refined.

"What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you . . . ?" (1 Corinthians 6:19). The indwelling of the Holy Spirit is the climax of Redemption.

The great impelling power of the Holy Spirit is seen in its most fundamental working whenever an issue of will is pushed. It is pleasanter to listen to poetical discourses, more agreeable to have your affinities appealed to, but it is not good enough, it leaves you exactly as you were. The Gospel appeal comes with a stinging grip—"Will you?" or, "Won't you?" "I will accept," or, "I'll put it off"—both are decisions, remember.

We have to distinguish between acquiring and receiving. We acquire habits of prayer and Bible reading and we receive our salvation, we receive the Holy Spirit, we receive the grace of God. We give more attention to the things we acquire; all God pays attention to is what we receive. Those things we receive can never be taken from us because God holds those who receive His gifts.

The fruit of pseudo-evangelism is different from "the fruit of the Spirit" (Galatians 5:22–23).

Guard as your greatest gift the anointing of the Holy Spirit, viz., the right of access to God for yourself. "And as for you, the anointing which ye received of Him abideth in you" (1 John 2:27 RV).

It is the fine art of the Holy Spirit to be alone with God.

THE MORAL LAW

It has been a favourite belief in all ages that if only men were taught what good is, everyone would choose it; but history and human experience prove that that is not so. To know what good is is not to be good.

My conscience makes me know what I ought to do, but it does not empower me to do it. "For that which I do I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I" (Romans 7:15).

To say that if I am persuaded a thing is wrong I won't do it, is not true. The mutiny of human nature is that it will do it whether it is wrong or not.

The problem in practical experience is not to know what is right, but to do it. My natural spirit may know a great many things, but I never can be what I know I ought to be until I receive the Life which has life in itself, viz., the Holy Spirit. That is the practical working of the Redemption.

"Morality is altogether based on utilitarian standards": it is not, a man's conscience will come in every time when he doesn't want it to.

Conscience resides in the essential spirit of a man, not in his reasoning faculty; it is the one thing that assists a man in his unregenerate days.

Why are men not worse than they are? The reason is the existence of the moral law of God which restrains men in spite of the impulse towards wrong, consequently you find remnants of the strivings of the moral law where you least expect it because the moral law is independent entirely of the opposition to it on the part of individual men.

When God's law is presented beware of the proud self-confidence which says, "This is good enough for me, I don't intend to soar any higher."

In dealing with the question of disease both moral and physical, we must deal with it in the light of the Redemption. If you want to know how far wrong the world has got, you learn it, not in a hospital, but at the Cross. We learn by what it cost God to redeem the world how criminally out of moral order the universe has got.

The guilt abroad to-day can never be dealt with by pressing a social ethic or a moral order, or by an enfolding sympathy for man, while pooh-poohing the demands of a holy God.

Very few of us know what love of God is, we know what love of moral good is, and the curious thing is that that leads us away from God more quickly than does a terror of moral evil; "the good is ever the enemy of the best."

Our lawlessness can be detected in relation to the words, "Come unto Me."

Liberty means ability not to violate the law; license means personal insistence on doing what I like.

If a man is not holy, he is immoral, it does not matter how good he seems, immorality is at the basis of the whole thing. It may not show itself as immoral physically, but it will show itself as immoral in the sight of God (see Luke 16:15).

Intellectual scepticism is good, but a man is to blame for moral scepticism. Every man believes in goodness and uprightness and integrity until he perverts his taste by going wrong himself. Beware of giving way to spiritual ecstasies, it disconnects you from the great ordinances of God and shakes the very basis of sane morality God has made.

There is no such thing as a wrong wrong, only a right that has gone wrong. Every error had its start in a truth, else it would have no power.

In the moral realm if you don't do things quickly you will never do them. Never postpone a moral decision.

Second thoughts on moral matters are always deflections.

It is only when a moral act is performed and light thrown on realities that we understand the relationship between our human lives and the Cross of Christ.

PERSONALITY

Nothing in connection with our personality is so disastrously enervating as disillusionment about ourselves. We much prefer our own idea of ourselves to the stern realisation of what we really are. Paul warns, Let no man "think of himself more highly than he ought to think." Watch how God has disillusioned you over yourself and see the value of it for the future.

There is a difference between the reality of personality and its actuality, the latter is continually changing; you are sensitive now where you were indifferent before, and vice versa.

Individuality can never become a sacrament, it is only personality that can become a sacrament through oneness with Jesus Christ.

You often find people in the world are more desirable, easier to get on with, than people in the Kingdom. There is frequently a stubbornness, a self-opinionativeness, in Christians not exhibited by people in the world.

If there is to be another Revival it will be through the readjustment of those of us on the inside who call ourselves Christians.

It is obvious that as we have grown physically we have developed into more useful human beings, but have we grown finer morally and spiritually? grown more pure and holy? We may have become broaderminded and yet not be so fine in perception as we used to be. It takes a lot of self-scrutiny to know whether we are evolving all the time in every domain of our being. "Therefore by their fruits ye shall know them" (RV).

The greatest test of Christianity is the wear and tear of daily life, it is like the shining of silver, the more it is rubbed the brighter it grows.

It is well to remember that our examination of ourselves can never be unbiased or unprejudiced, so that we are only safe in taking the estimate of ourselves from our Creator instead of from our own introspection, whether conceited or depressed.

The modern Pharisee is the one who pretends to be the publican—"Oh, I would never call myself a saint!" Exaggerated self-depreciation and exaggerated conceit are both diseased.

God has an alchemy of Providence by means of which our inner spirit precipitates itself—obliged to be holy if you are holy; obliged to be impure if you are impure. It is impossible to repress the ruling spirit when in the presence of the Spirit of God in another.

Crises reveal character. When we are put to the test the hidden resources of our character are revealed exactly.

We have to do more than we are built to do naturally; we have to do all the Almighty builds us to do.

The phrase "Self-mastery" is profoundly wrong although practically correct. Profoundly, a man can never be master of what he does not understand, therefore the only master of a man is not himself, or another man, but God. "Self-mastery" is correct if it means carrying out the edicts of God in myself.

Leave no subject connected with your own soul until you have landed at the door of the supernatural. Natural resources are liable to break down in a crisis, but if your life is based on the supernatural God His power will manifest itself, and turn the moment that might have been tragic into triumph.

Unity of self is difficult to describe, it is the state in which there is no consciousness of myself, only of unity in myself. A false unity is fictitious because at any moment it may fall to pieces in an agony of remorse.

How long it takes for all the powers in a Christian to be at one depends on one thing only, viz., obedience.

The reason self-interest is detected in us is because there are whole tracts of our nature that have never been fused by the Spirit of God into one central purpose.

If all Jesus Christ came to do is to produce disunity in me He had better never have come, because I am created to have such harmony in myself that I am unconscious of it.

Self-complacency and spiritual pride are always the beginning of degeneration. When I begin to be satisfied with where I am spiritually, instantly I begin to degenerate.

There is no pride equal to spiritual pride, and no obstinacy equal to spiritual obstinacy, because they are nearest to the throne of God, and are most like the devil.

It is never our wicked heart that is the difficulty, but our obstinate will.

"Show me what to do and I'll do it"—you won't. It is easy to knock down one type of pride and erect another.

The only reason I can't get to God is pride, no matter how humble I seem.

When any personal position is credited by me to myself, God's decree is that it hardens my heart in pride.

The only sacrifice acceptable to God is "a broken and a contrite heart," not a moral upright life built on pride. When I stand on the basis of penitence, God's salvation is manifested immediately.

Note the thing which makes you say, "I don't believe it," it will prove where you are spiritually. What I resent reveals who governs me.

If excellence of character is made the test, the grace of God is "made void," because a man can develop an amazing perfection of character without a spark of the grace of God. If we put a saint or a good man as the standard, we blind ourselves to ourselves, personal vanity makes us do it; there is no room for personal vanity when the standard is seen to be God Himself.

To cling to my natural virtues is quite sufficient to obscure the work of God in me.

There is a domain of our nature which we as Christians do not cultivate much, viz., the domain of the imagination. Almost the only way we use our imagination is in crossing bridges before we come to them. The religion of Jesus embraces every part of our make-up, the intellectual part, the emotional part, no part must be allowed to atrophy, all must be welded into one by the Holy Spirit.

Learn to distinguish between what isolates you and what insulates you. God insulates; sin isolates, a gloomy, sardonic standing off from everything, the disdain of superiority; only when you are closest to God do you understand that that is its nature.

The natural virtues in some people are charming and delightful, but let a presentation of truth be given they have not seen before, and there is an exhibition of the most extraordinary resentment, proving that all their piety was purely temperamental, an unexplored inheritance from ancestors.

It is an appalling fact that our features tell our moral character unmistakably to those who can read them, and we may be very thankful there are few who can; our safety is in other people's ignorance. In spite of the disguise of refinement, sensuality, selfishness and self-indulgence speak in our features as loud as a thunder-clap. Our inner spirit tells with an indelible mark on every feature, no matter how beautiful or how ugly the features may be. Let us remember that that is how God sees us.

Nothing can hinder God's purpose in a personal life but the person himself.

In this life we must forgo much in order that we might develop a spiritual character which can be a glory to God for Time and Eternity.

In His teaching about discipleship Jesus Christ bases everything on the complete annihilation of individuality and the emancipation of personality. Until this is understood all our talk about discipleship passes into thin air.

When I am baptised with the Holy Ghost my personality is lifted up to its right place, viz., into perfect union with God so that I love Him without hindrance.

Anything that partakes of the nature of swamping my personality out of control is never of God.

PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP

The essence of Christianity is a personal relationship to Jesus Christ with any amount of room for its outworking.

The appeal of the Gospel is not that it should be preached in order that men might be saved and put right for heaven, but that they might enter into a personal relationship with Jesus Christ here and now.

Discipleship and salvation are two different things: a disciple is one who, realising the meaning of the Atonement, deliberately gives himself up to Jesus Christ in unspeakable gratitude.

The one mark of discipleship is the mastership of Jesus—His right to me from the crown of my head to the sole of my foot.

"If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself" (RV), i.e., "deny his right to himself." Jesus never swept men off their feet in ecstasy, He always talked on the line that left a man's will in the ascendant until he saw where he was going. It is impossible for a man to give up his right to himself without knowing he is doing it.

Naturally, a man regards his right to himself as the finest thing he has, yet it is the last bridge that prevents Jesus Christ having His way in a life.

The approaches to Jesus are innumerable; the result of coming to Him can be only one—the dethroning of my right to myself, or I stop short somewhere.

Jesus Christ is always unyielding to my claim to my right to myself.

The one essential element in all our Lord's teaching about discipleship is abandon, no calculation, no trace of self-interest.

Is Jesus Christ absolutely necessary to me? Have I ever shifted the basis of my reasoning on to Incarnate Reason? ever shifted my will on to His will? my right to myself on to His right to me?

What is the personal history between Jesus Christ and myself? Is there anything of the nature of "the new creation" (RV mg) in me? or is what I call my "experience" sentimental rubbish placed on top of "me" as I am?

A disciple is one who not only proclaims God's truth, but one who manifests that he is no longer his own, he has been "bought with a price."

Our service is to be a living sacrifice of devotion to Jesus, the secret of which is identity with Him in suffering, in death, and in resurrection (Philippians 3:10).

It is possible to be first in suffering for the Truth and in reputation for saintliness, and last in the judgement of the great Searcher of hearts. The whole question is one of heart-relationship to Jesus.

If you remain true to your relationship to Jesus Christ the things that are either right or wrong are never the problem; it is the things that are right but which would impair what He wants you to be that are the problem.

The mark of the saint is the good right things he has the privilege of not doing. There are a hundred and one right and good things which, if you are a disciple of Jesus, you must avoid as you would the devil although there is no devil in them. If our Lord's words in Matthew 5:29–30 were read more often we would have a healthier young manhood and womanhood.

Beware of the people who tell you life is simple. Life is such a mass of complications that no man is safe apart from God. Coming to Jesus does not simplify life, it simplifies my relationship to God.

The implicit relationship tells more than the explicit, if you put the explicit first you are apt to produce sceptics.

When Jesus Christ is bringing a son to glory, He ignores the work he has done; the work has been allowed as a discipline to perfect his relationship to the Father.

The work we do for God is made by Him a means till He has got us to the place where we are willing to be purified and made of worth to Himself.

Overmuch organisation in Christian work is always in danger of killing God-born originality; it keeps us conservative, makes our hands feeble. A false artificial flow of progress swamps true devotion to Jesus.

Whenever a spiritual movement has been true to Jesus Christ it has brought forth fruit in a hundred and one ways the originator of the movement never dreamed of.

Neither usefulness nor duty is God's ultimate purpose, His aim is to bring out the message of the Gospel, and if that can only be done by His "bruising" me, why shouldn't He? We put our intelligent fingers on God's plan.

God's idea is that individual Christians should become identified with His purpose for the world. When Christianity becomes over-organised and denominational it is incapable of fulfilling our Lord's commission; it doesn't "feed His sheep," it can't (see John 21:15–17).

"I have had visions on the mount," "wonderful times of communion with God"—but is it turning you into an individual infinitely superior to your Lord and Master? one who won't wash feet, but will only give himself up to certain types of meeting?

"If I then, the Lord and the Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet" (RV): the highest motive is the only motive for the lowliest service. Where do we stand in God's sight under that scrutiny?

A false religion makes me hyperconscientious— "I must not do this, or that"; the one lodestar in the religion of Jesus is personal passionate devotion to Him, and oneness with His interests in other lives. Identify yourself with Jesus Christ's interests in others, and life takes on a romantic risk.

Christianity is not service for Jesus Christ, not winning souls, it is nothing less than the life of Jesus being manifested more and more in my mortal flesh.

Beware of allowing the historic Jesus Christ to be taken from you in any shape or form; make it the intensest concern of your spiritual life to accompany the disciples as He went in and out among them in the days of His flesh.

"What has my religion done for me I could not do for myself?" That is a question every man is forced to ask. Religion ostensibly is faith in Someone, or a form of belief in some power, I would be the poorer if I did not have, and I should be able to state in what way I would be poorer.

If my religion is not based on a personal history with Jesus it becomes something I suffer from, not a joyous thing, but something that keeps me from doing what I want to do.

Occasionally we have to revise our ways of looking at God's Providence. The usual way of looking at it is that God presents us with a cup to drink, which is strangely mixed. But there is another aspect which is just as true, perhaps more vitally true, viz., that we present God with a cup to drink, full of a very strange mixture indeed. God will never reverse the cup. He will drink it. Beware of the ingredient of self-will, which ought to have been dissolved by identification with the Death of Jesus, being there when you hand the cup of your life back to God.

PRAYER

God is never impressed with our earnestness, He promises to answer us when we pray on one ground only, viz., the ground of the Redemption. The Redemption of the Lord Jesus provides me with a place for intercession.

The only way to get into the relationship of "asking" is to get into the relationship of absolute reliance on the Lord Jesus. "And this is the confidence that we have in Him . . ." (1 John 5:14–16).

Remember, you have to ask things which are in keeping with the God whom Jesus Christ reveals. When you pray, what conception have you in your mind—your need, or Jesus Christ's omnipotence? (see John 14:12–13).

"Asking" in prayer is at once the test of three things—simplicity, stupidity and certainty of God. Prayer means that I come in contact with an Almighty Christ, and almighty results happen along the lines He laid down.

It is not that my prayers are so important, that is not the point; God has so made it that by means of intercession certain types of blessing come upon men. In Christian work that is where the "filling up" comes in; we are apt to bank much more on talking to people.

If I am a Christian, I am not set on saving my own skin, but on seeing that the salvation of God comes through me to others, and the great way is by intercession.

The Bible knows nothing about a gift of prayer, the only prayer the Bible talks about is the prayer that is able to bring down something from God to men.

How impatient we are in dealing with other people! Our actions imply that we think God is asleep, until God brings us to the place where we come on them from above.

The illustrations of prayer our Lord uses are on the line of importunity, a steady, persistent, uninterrupted habit of prayer.

God puts us in circumstances where He can answer the prayer of His Son (John 17), and the prayer of the Holy Ghost (Romans 8:26).

The reason for intercession is not that God answers prayer, but that God tells us to pray.

God never answers prayer to prove His own might.

The answers to prayer never come by introspection but always as a surprise. We don't hear God because we are so full of noisy introspective requests.

Spiritual certainty in prayer is God's certainty, not a side-eddy of sanctimoniousness.

Prayer is the vital breath of the Christian; not the thing that makes him alive, but the evidence that he is alive.

The very powers of darkness are paralysed by prayer. No wonder Satan tries to keep our minds fussy in active work till we cannot think to pray.

God is not meant to answer our prayers, He is answering the prayer of Jesus Christ in our lives; by our prayers we come to discern what God's mind is, and that is declared in John 17.

According to the New Testament, prayer is God's answer to our poverty, not a power we exercise to obtain an answer.

Intercession does not develop the one who intercedes, it blesses the lives of those for whom he intercedes. The reason so few of us intercede is because we don't understand this.

By intercessory prayer we can hold off Satan from other lives and give the Holy Ghost a chance with them. No wonder Jesus put such tremendous emphasis on prayer!

If your crowd knows you as a man or woman of prayer, they have a right to expect from you a nobler type of conduct than from others.

If I pray that someone else may be, or do, something which I am not, and don't intend to do, my praying is paralysed.

When you put God first you will get your times of prayer easily because God can entrust them to the soul who won't use them in an irrational way and give an occasion to the enemy to enter in.

Watch God's ways in your life, you will find He is developing you as He does the trees and the flowers, a deep silent working of the God of Creation. The enemy goes all he can against our communion with God, against our solitude with God, he tries to prevent us from drawing our breath in the fear of the Lord.

The greatest answer to prayer is that I am brought into a perfect understanding with God, and that alters my view of actual things.

We must steadfastly work out repentance in intercessory prayer.

Beware lest activity in proclaiming the Truth should mean a cunning avoidance of spiritual concentration in intercession.

The lost sight of God inevitably follows spiritual teaching that has not a corresponding balance of private prayer.

See that you do not use the trick of prayer to cover up what you know you ought to do.

The meaning of prayer is that I bring power to bear upon another soul that is weak enough to yield and strong enough to resist; hence the need for strenuous intercessory prayer.

Never try to make people agree with your point of view, begin the ministry of intercession. The only Being worth agreeing with is the Lord Jesus Christ. Remember 1 John 5:16.

The prayer of the saints is never self-important, but always God-important.

What happens when a saint prays is that the Paraclete's almighty power is brought to bear on the one for whom he is praying.

God does not give faith in answer to prayer: He reveals Himself in answer to prayer, and faith is exercised spontaneously.

PREACHING

A personal testimony feeds you from hand to mouth; you must have more equipment than that if you are to preach the Gospel.

The preacher must be part of his message, he must be incorporated in it. That is what the baptism of the Holy Ghost did for the disciples. When the Holy Ghost came at Pentecost He made these men living epistles of the teaching of Jesus, not human gramophones recording the facts of His life.

If you stand true as a disciple of Jesus He will make your preaching the kind of message that is incarnate as well as oral.

To preach the Gospel makes you a sacrament; but if the Word of God has not become incorporated into you, your preaching is "a clanging cymbal"

(RV); it has never cost you anything, never taken you through repentance and heartbreak.

We have not to explain how a man comes to God, instead of bringing men to God, that hinders; an explanation of the Atonement never drew anyone to God, the exalting of Jesus Christ, and Him crucified does draw men to God (see John 12:32).

Remember, you go among men as a representative of Jesus Christ.

The preacher's duty is not to convict men of sin, or to make them realise how bad they are, but to bring them into contact with God until it is easy for them to believe in Him.

No man is ever the same after listening to the truth, he may say he pays no attention to it, he may appear to forget all about it, but at any moment the truth may spring up into his consciousness and destroy all his peace of mind.

The great snare in Christian work is this—"Do remember the people you are talking to." We have to remain true to God and His message, not to a knowledge of the people, and as we rely on the Holy Spirit we will find God works His marvels in His own way.

Live in the reality of the Truth while you preach it.

Most of us prefer to live in a particular phase of the Truth, and that is where we get intolerant and pigheaded, religiously determined that everyone who does not agree with us must be wrong. We preach in the Name of God what He won't own.

God's denunciation will fall on us if in our preaching we tell people they must be holy and we ourselves are not holy. If we are not working out in our private life the messages we are handing out, we will deepen the condemnation of our own souls as messengers of God.

Our message acts like a boomerang; it is dangerous if it does not.

A good clear emotional expression contains within it the peril of satisfactory expression while the life is miles away from the preaching. The life of a preacher speaks louder than his words.

There is no use condemning sensuality or worldly-mindedness and compromise in other people if there is the slightest inclination for these in our own soul.

It is all very well to preach, the easiest thing in the world to give people a vision of what God wants; it is another matter to come into the sordid conditions of ordinary life and make the vision real there.

Beware of hypocrisy with God, especially if you are in no danger of hypocrisy among men.

Penetration attracts hearers to God, ingenuity attracts to the preacher. Dexterity is always an indication of shallowness.

A clever exposition is never right because the Spirit of God is not clever. Beware of cleverness, it is the great cause of hypocrisy in a preacher.

Don't be impatient with yourself, because the longer you are in satisfying yourself with an expression of the Truth the better will you satisfy God.

Impressive preaching is rarely Gospel-preaching: Gospel-preaching is based on the great mystery of belief in the Atonement, which belief is created in others, not by my impressiveness, but by the insistent conviction of the Holy Spirit.

There is far more wrought by the Word of God than we will ever understand, and if I substitute anything for it, fine thinking, eloquent speech, the devil's victory is enormous, but I am of no more use than a puff of wind.

The determination to be a fool if necessary is the golden rule for a preacher.

We have to preach something which to the wisdom of this world is foolishness. If the wisdom of this world is right, then God is foolish; if God is wise, the wisdom of this world is foolishness (see 1 Corinthians 1:18–25). Where we go wrong is when we apologise for God.

If you are standing for the truth of God you are sure to experience reproach, and if you open your mouth to vindicate yourself you will lose what you were on the point of gaining. Let the ignominy and the shame come, be "weak in Him."

Never assume anything that has not been made yours by faith and the experience of life; it is presumptuous to do so. On the other hand, be ready to pay the price of "foolishness" in proclaiming to others what is really yours.

People only want the kind of preaching which does not declare the demands of a holy God. "Tell us that God is loving, not that He is holy, and that He demands we should be holy." The problem is not with the gross sinners, but with the intellectual, cultured, religious-to-the-last-degree people.

All the winsome preaching of the Gospel is an insult to the Cross of Christ. What is needed is the probe of the Spirit of God straight down to a man's conscience till his whole nature shouts at him, "That is right, and you are wrong.'

It is the preacher's contact with Reality that enables the Holy Spirit to strip off the sophistries of those who listen, and when He does that, you find it is the best people who go down first under conviction.

A great psychological law too little known is that the line of appeal is conditioned by the line of attraction. If I seek to attract men, that will be the line on which my aggressive work will have to be done.

To whom is our appeal? To none but those God sends you to. You can't get men to come; nobody could get you to come until you came. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, . . . so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

Many of the theological terms used nowadays have no grip, we talk glibly about sin, and about salvation; but let the truth be presented along the line of a man's deep personal need, and at once it is arresting.

Some of us are rushing on at such a headlong pace in Christian work, wanting to vindicate God in a great Revival, but if God gave a revival we would be the first to forget Him and swing off on some false fire

"... not slothful in business," i.e., the Lord's business. Don't exhaust yourself with other things.

Beware as of the devil of good taste being your standard in presenting the truth of God.

"Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh" (2 Corinthians 5:16); that is the way we do know men—according to our common-sense estimates. The man who knows God has no right to estimate other men according to his common-sense judgement, he has to bring in revelation facts which will make him a great deal more lenient in his judgement. To have a little bit only of God's point of view makes us immensely bitter in our judgement.

Beware lest your reserve in public has the effect of God Almighty's decree to the sea—"Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further." I have no business in God's service if I have any personal reserve, I am to be broken bread and poured-out wine in His hands.

If you are living a life of reckless trust in God the impression given to your congregation is that of the reserve power of God, while personal reserve leaves the impression that you are condescending to them.

We should give instruction unconsciously; if you give instruction consciously in a dictatorial mood you simply flatter your own spiritual conceit.

Have you never met the person whose religious life is so exact that you are terrified at coming near him? Never have an exercise of religion that blots God clean out.

Remember two things: be natural yourself, and let God be naturally Himself through you. Very few of us have got to the place of being worthily natural, any number of us are un-worthily natural, that is, we reveal the fact that we have never taken the trouble to discipline ourselves.

Don't be discouraged if you suffer from physical aphasia, the only cure for it is to go ahead, remembering that nervousness overcome is power.

Beware of being disappointed with yourself in delivery; ignore the record of your nerves.

Learn to be vicarious in public prayer. Allow two rivers to come through you: the river of God, and the river of human interests. Beware of the danger of preaching in prayer, of being doctrinal.

When you preach, you speak for God, and from God to the people; in prayer, you talk to God for the people, and your proper place is among the people as one of them. It is to be a vicarious relation, not the flinging of theology at their heads from the pulpit.

Always come from God to men; never be so impertinent as to come from the presence of anyone else.

How do interruptions affect you? If you allot your day and say, "I am going to give so much time to this, and so much to that," and God's Providence upsets your time-table, what becomes of your spirituality? Why, it flies out of the window! it is not based on God, there is nothing spiritual about it, it is purely mechanical. The great secret is to learn how to draw on God all the time.

Whenever you are discovered as being exhausted, take a good humiliating dose of John 21:15–17. The whole secret of shepherding is that someone else reaches the Saviour through your heart as a pathway.

Beware of making God's truth simpler than He has made it Himself.

By the preaching of the Gospel God creates what was never there before, viz., faith in Himself on the ground of the Redemption.

People say, "Do preach the simple Gospel," if they mean by "the simple Gospel" the thing we have always heard, the thing that keeps us sound asleep, then the sooner God sends a thrust through our stagnant minds the better.

If any man's preaching does not make me brace myself up and watch my feet and my ways, one of two things is the reason—either the preacher is unreal, or I hate being better.

- A joyous, humble belief in your message will compel attention.
- Sermons may weary, the Gospel never does.

PREPARATION

It is by thinking with your pen in hand that you will get to the heart of your subject.

"The heart of the righteous studieth to answer" (Proverbs 15:28). To give your congregation extemporaneous thinking, i.e., thinking without study, is an insult—ponderous "nothings." The preacher should give his congregation the result of strenuous thinking in un-studied, extemporaneous speech.

Extemporaneous speech is not extemporaneous thinking, but speech that has been so studied that you are possessed unconsciously with what you are saying.

Never get a studied form; prepare yourself mentally, morally, and spiritually, and you need never fear.

The great thing is not to hunt for texts, but to live in the big comprehensive truths of the Bible and texts will hunt you.

To talk about "getting a message," is a mistake. It is preparation of myself that is required more than of my message.

Don't go to your Bible in a yawning mood.

As a student of the Word of God, keep your mind and heart busy with the great truths concerning God, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit, the Atonement, sin, suffering, etc.

Slay on the threshold of your mind the thing that makes you sit down mentally and say, "I can't." Why be saved and sanctified in a rusty indolent case?

In impromptu speaking, begin naturally, and the secret of beginning naturally is to forget you are religious. Many wear a crushing religious garb.

Beware of detaching yourself from your theme in order to heed the way you present it. Never be afraid of expressing what is really you.

To develop your expression in public you must do a vast amount of writing in private. Write out your problems before God. Go direct to Him about everything

Time spent on the great fundamental revelations given by the Holy Spirit is apt to be looked upon as a waste of time—"We must get to practical work."

The work we do in preparation is meant to get our minds into such order that they are at the service of God for His inspiration.

Conscious inspiration is mercifully rare or we would make inspiration our god.

Don't chisel your subject too much. Trust the reality of your nature and the reality of your subject.

The discipline of your own powers is a very precious acquirement in the service of God; it delivers you from breathless uncertainty and possible hysterics. Learn to respect the findings of your own mind.

Always check private delight in preparation. Close your preparation with prayer and leave it with God till wanted.

When you speak, abandon yourself in confidence; don't try to recall fine points in preparation.

The burning heart while Jesus talks with us and opens up the Scriptures to us is a blessed experience, but the burning heart will die down to ashes unless we keep perennially right with God.

Spiritual insight is in accordance with the development of heart-purity.

Every domain of our life which comes under the apprehension of the Spirit of God is a call to cultivate that particular domain for Him. The trouble is that we won't break up the new soil of our lives for God.

Spiritual sloth must be the greatest grief to the Holy Ghost. Sloth has always a moral reason, not a physical one; the self-indulgent nature must be slothful.

Learn to fast over your subject in private; do the mechanical work and trust God for the inspirational in delivery.

Don't memorise what you have to say or you will serve up "cauld kale het." 5

In order to expound a passage, live in it well beforehand.

Keep yourself full with reading. Reading gives you a vocabulary.

Don't read to remember; read to realise.

The speaker without notes must have two things entirely at his command—the Bible and his mother tongue.

In impromptu speaking, never try to recall, always plunge.

Let the centre of your subject grip you, then you will express its heart unconsciously.

Get moved by your message, and it will move others in a corresponding way.

Watch how God by His angels elbows you out of the hour you thought you were going to get with your Bible—only you will never call them "angels" unless you are filled with the Holy Spirit. "That objectionable person" was really an angel of God to you, saying "Get this thing worked out."

^{5.} cauld kale het: Scottish phrase. Literally, kale, a cheap vegetable with a strong taste, becomes almost inedible when reheated the day after being cooked. Metaphorically, something not fresh, something recycled that should have been thrown out.

REDEMPTION

God does not ask us to be good men and women He asks us to understand that we are not good; to believe that "none is good, save one, even God" (RV), and that the grace of God was manifested in the Redemption that it might cover the incompleteness of man.

When a man experiences salvation it is not his belief that saves him; teaching goes wrong when it puts a man's belief as the ground of his salvation. Salvation is God's "bit" entirely.

The danger is to preach a subjective theology, something that wells up on the inside. The Gospel of the New Testament is based on the absoluteness of the Redemption.

The great thing about the Redemption is that it deals with sin, i.e., my claim to my right to myself, not primarily with man's sins. It is one of the most flattering things to go and rescue the degraded, one of the social passions of mankind, but not necessarily the most Christian: it is quite another thing to tell men who are among the best of men that what Jesus Christ asks of them is that they give up the right to themselves to Him.

The great thing about the Gospel is that it should be preached. Never get distressed over not seeing immediate results. No prophet of the Old Testament, or apostle of the New (or saint of the present day), ever fully understood the import of what he said or did, hence to work for immediate results is to make myself a director of the Holy Ghost.

God is no respecter of persons with regard to salvation, but He has a tremendous respect for Christian character. There are degrees in glory which are determined by our obedience.

Salvation is a free gift through the Redemption; positions in the Kingdom are not gifts, but attainments.

There is a difference between salvation and saintliness, between being redeemed and proving myself a redeemed man. I may live a life of sordid self-seeking on the basis of the Redemption, or I may live a life which manifests the life of the Lord Jesus in my mortal flesh.

Jesus Christ did not send out the disciples to save souls, but to "make disciples" (RV), men and women who manifest a life in accordance with the life of their Redeemer.

A charge made against some methods of evangelism is that self-interest is made the basis of the whole thing: salvation is looked upon as a kind of insurance scheme whereby I am delivered from punishment and put right for heaven. But let a man experience deliverance from sin, and his rejoicing is not in his own interests, but that he is thereby enabled to be of use to God and his fellow men.

The bedrock permanent thing about Christianity is the forgiveness of God, not sanctification and personal holiness—the great abiding thing underneath is infinitely more rugged than that; it is all the New Testament means by that terrific word "forgiveness." "In whom we have our redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins" (Ephesians 1:7).

The virtue of our Redemption comes to us through the obedience of the Son of God—"though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered . . ." (Hebrews 5:8). Our view of obedience has become so distorted through sin that we cannot understand how it could be said of Jesus that He "learned" obedience; He was the only One of whom it could be said, because He was "without sin." He did not learn obedience in order to be a Son: He came as Son to redeem mankind.

Our Lord came to make atonement for the sin of the world, not by any impulse of a noble nature, but by the perfect conscious Self-sacrifice whereby alone God could redeem man.

Beware of the craze for unity. It is God's will that all Christians should be one with Him as Jesus Christ is one with Him (John 17:22), but that is a very different thing from the tendency abroad to-day towards a unity on a basis that ignores the Atonement.

Until we have become spiritual by new birth the Atonement of Jesus has no meaning for us; it only begins to get meaning when we live "in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."

Salvation is based on the revelation fact that God has redeemed the world from the possibility of condemnation on account of sin (Romans 5:12, 20–21): the experience of salvation means that a man can be regenerated, can have the disposition of the Son of God put into him, viz., the Holy Spirit.

Belief in the Redemption is difficult because it needs self-surrender first.

Do I believe that everything that has been touched by the consequences of man's sin is going to be put absolutely right by God through the Redemption?

Redemption is the Reality which alters inability into ability.

The mighty Redemption of God is made actual in my experience by the living efficacy of the Holy Ghost.

SANCTIFICATION

Beware of preaching Sanctification without knowing Jesus; we are saved and sanctified in order that we might know Him.

"But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption" (1 Corinthians 1:30). Jesus Christ is all these, they are not things He works out apart from Himself.

We cannot earn things from God, we can only take what is given us. Salvation, sanctification, eternal life, are all gifts wrought out in us through the Atonement. The question is, am I working out what God works in?

It is quite true to say "I can't live a holy life"; but you can decide to let Jesus make you holy. "I can't do away with my past"; but you can decide to let Jesus do away with it. That is the issue to push.

We use the word "consecration" before sanctification, it should be used after sanctification. The fundamental meaning of consecration is the separating of a holy thing to God, not the separating of an un-holy thing to be made holy.

". . . present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God," says the apostle Paul. You cannot separate to God what God has not purified.

If I make personal holiness a cause instead of an effect I become shallow, no matter how profound I seem. It means I am far more concerned about being speckless than about being real; far more concerned about keeping my garments white than about being devoted to Jesus Christ.

The idea that I grow holy as I go on is foreign to the New Testament. There must have been a place where I was identified with the death of Jesus: "I have been crucified with Christ..." (RV). That is the meaning of sanctification. Then I grow on holiness.

Jesus Christ can make my disposition as pure as His own. That is the claim of the Gospel.

The saints have gone to sleep, "Thank God, I am saved and sanctified, it is all right now": you are simply in the right place to maintain the life which is going to confront the world and never be subdued by the world.

"Now I am sanctified the world has no attraction for me." But remember, the world is what the Holy Spirit sees, not what you see. It is not gross sins that are the attraction, but things that are part of God's creation, things "in the land of Canaan," they creep in gradually and you begin to think according to pagan standards and only in a crisis realise you have not been standing with God.

God has staked His reputation on the work of Jesus Christ in the souls of the men and women whom He has saved and sanctified.

If we are to be of any use to God in facing present-day problems we must be prepared to run the sanctification-metaphysic for all it is worth.

The great fever in people's blood to-day is, "Do something"; "Be practical." The great need is for the one who is un-practical enough to get down to the heart of the matter, viz., personal sanctification. Practical work not based on an understanding of what sanctification means is simply beating the air.

The test of sanctification is not our talk about holiness and singing pious hymns; but, what are we like where no one sees us? with those who know us best?

It is perilously possible to credit God with all our mean little prejudices even after we are sanctified.

Pious talk paralyses the power to live piously, the energy of the life goes into the talk—sanctimonious instead of sanctified. Unless your mind is free from jealousy, envy, spite, your pious words only increase your hypocrisy.

Beware of sentimentality; it means something has been aroused in me that I don't intend to work out.

Wherever there is true teaching of the Gospel there will be both salvation and sanctification taking place.

If you are called to preach, God will put you through "mills" that are not meant for you personally, He is making you suitable bread to nourish other lives. It is after sanctification you are put through these things.

If I exalt Sanctification, I preach people into despair; but if I lift up Jesus Christ, people learn the way to be made holy. "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified" (1 Corinthians 2:2).

It is a great snare to think that when you are sanctified you cannot make mistakes; you can make mistakes so irreparably terrible that the only safeguard is to "walk in the light, as He is in the light."

When you come under the searchlight of God after sanctification, you realise much more keenly what sin is than ever you could have done before.

The deliverances of God are not what the saint delights in, but in the fact that God delivered him; not in the fact that he is sanctified, but that God sanctified him; the whole attention of the mind is on God

We are saved and sanctified not for service, but to be absolutely Jesus Christ's, the consuming passion of the life is for Him. Never try to build sanctification on an unconfessed sin, on a duty left undone; confess the wrong, do what you ought to have done, then God will clear away all the hyperconscientious rubbish.

In sanctification it has to be a valediction once and for ever to confidence in everyone and everything but God.

You can always test the worth of your sanctification. If there is the slightest trace of self-conscious superiority about it, it has never touched the fringe of the garment of Christ.

"I lay down My life," said Jesus; "I lay it down of Myself." If you are sanctified, you will do the same. It has nothing to do with "Deeper Death to Self," it has to do with the glorious fact that I have a self, a personality, that I can sacrifice with glad alacrity to Jesus every day I live.

SIN

Sin is not man's problem, it is God's.

Beware of attempting to diagnose sin unless you have the inner pang that you are one of the worst sinners

Whenever you talk about sin, it must be "my" sin. So long as you speak of "sins" you evade Jesus Christ for yourself.

Sin is the outcome of a relationship God never ordained, a relationship which maintains itself by means of a wrong disposition, viz., my claim to my right to myself. That is the essence of sin.

My right to myself is not merely something I claim, but something that continually makes me insist on my own way.

Whenever God touches sin it is independence that is touched and that awakens resentment in the human heart. Independence must be blasted clean out, there must be no such thing left, only freedom, which is very different. Freedom is the ability not to insist on my rights, but to see that God gets His.

There are people whose actual lives shock us, and there are those whose actual lives are speckless, but whose ruling disposition is "my claim to my right to myself." Watch Jesus Christ with them both, and you get the attitude we have lost.

Jesus Christ never faced men as we do; you may put before Him "publicans and sinners" and cleanliving moral men, and you find He is much sterner with the latter. To recognise this would mean a revolution in our outlook.

Original sin is "doing without God." That phrase covers sin in its beginning in human consciousness and its final analysis in the sight of God.

"For from within, out of the heart of man proceed . . ." (see Mark 7:21–23). We should get into the habit of estimating ourselves by the rugged statements of our Lord.

The thing that makes me feel I am different from "the common herd" never came from God: I am not different. Remember, the same stuff that makes the criminal makes the saint.

A saint is "a new creation" (RV mg), made by the Last Adam out of the progeny of the first Adam no matter how degraded.

"... Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners" (1 Timothy 1:15). What is a sinner? Everyone who is not one with Jesus as He is one with God.

Our Lord did not scathe sin; He came to save from it.

We are apt to put the superb blessings of the Gospel as something for a special few, they are for sinners saved by grace.

A man may be magnificently saved and appallingly backward in development, or he may be a maturely developed saint, like the apostle Paul; but neither is more than saved by God's grace.

When Jesus Christ begins to get His way He is merciless with the thing that is not of God.

As long as things are kept covered up we think God's judgement is severe, but let the Holy Ghost reveal the secret vileness of sin till it blazes out in a conspicuous glare, and we realise that His judgement is right.

The reason men enclose themselves away from the Gospel is that conviction of sin upsets the inner balance of mind, consequently of bodily health, but when once a man is convinced that holiness is of more importance than bodily health, he lets all go to get holy.

The first appeal of present-day evangelism is apt to be, not on the line of how to get rid of sin, but how to be put right for heaven, consequently men are not convicted of sin, but left with a feeling of something insufficient in life.

The only hope for a man lies not in giving him an example of how to behave, but in the preaching of Jesus Christ as the Saviour from sin. The heart of every man gets hope when he hears that.

Our Lord never sympathised with sin, He came to "proclaim liberty to the captives," a very different thing. We have to see that we don't preach a theology of sympathy, but the theology of a Saviour from sin. It is not our business to convict men of sin, the Holy Ghost alone convicts of sin (RV), our duty is to lift up the One who sets free from sin. It is not a question of something being curbed, or counteracted, or sat on, it is a radical alteration on the inside, then I have to assimilate that alteration so that it is manifested in the practical relationships of my life.

The life of the Holy Spirit in a saint is fierce and violent against any tendency to sin.

The attitude of Jesus towards sin is to be our attitude towards sins.

When conviction of sin by the Holy Spirit comes it gives us an understanding of the deeps of our personality we are otherwise not conscious of (John 16:8–11).

The forgiveness of God penetrates to the very heart of His nature and to the very heart of man's nature. That is why God cannot forgive until a man realises what sin is.

- Sin is reality; sins are actuality.
- Measure your growth in grace by your sensitiveness to sin

Many a man gets to the place where he will call himself a sinner, but he does not so readily come to the place where he says, "Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned. . . ."

Salvation from sin is frequently confounded with, deliverance from sins. A man can deliver himself from sins without any special work of God's grace. The bedrock of New Testament salvation is repentance, and repentance is based on relationship to a Person.

A great many people are delighted to hear about the life of Jesus, its holiness and sublimity, but when the Holy Ghost begins to convict them of sin, they resent it, and resent it deeply.

Conviction of sin in the beginning is child's play compared with the conviction the Holy Ghost brings to a mature saint (see 1 Timothy 1:15).

Humiliation by conviction of sin is rare today. You can never be humiliated by another human being after the conviction of sin the Holy Ghost gives.

On the threshold of the Christian life people talk a lot about sin, but there is no realisation of what sin is, all that is seen is the effects of sin.

If we are ever going to come anywhere near understanding what our Lord's agony in the Garden of Gethsemane represents, we have to get beyond the small ideas of our particular religious experiences and be brought to see sin as God sees it—"For He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him."

If we eliminate the supernatural purpose of Jesus Christ's coming, viz., to deliver us from sin, we become traitors to God's revelation.

The Cross of Christ is God's last and endless Word. There the prince of this world is judged, there sin is killed, and pride is done to death, there lust is frozen and self-interest slaughtered, not one can get through.

It was not social crimes, but the great primal sin of independence of God, that brought the Son of God to Calvary.

STUDY

Study to begin with can never be easy; the determination to form systematic mental habits is the only secret. Don't begin anything with reluctance.

Beware of any cleverness that keeps you from working. No one is born a worker; men are born poets and artists, but we have to make ourselves "labourers."

The discipline of our mind is the one domain God has put in our keeping. It is impossible to be of any use to God if we are lazy. God won't cure laziness, we have to cure it.

More danger arises from physical laziness (which is called "brain fag") than from almost any other thing.

Inspiration won't come irrespective of study, but only because of it. Don't trust to inspiration, use your own "axe" (Psalm 74:5). Work! Think! Don't luxuriate on the mount!

The demand for inspiration is the measure of our laziness. Do the things that don't come by inspiration.

It is difficult to get yourself under control to do work you are not used to, the time spent seems wasted at first, but get at it again. The thing that hinders control is impulse.

Your mind can never be under your control unless you bring it there; there is no gift for control. You may pray till Doomsday but your brain will never concentrate if you don't make it concentrate.

In the most superficial matters put yourself under control, your own control. Be as scrupulously punctual in your private habits as you would be in a Government office.

Don't insult God by telling Him He forgot to give you any brains when you were born. We all have brains, what we need is work.

It is better for your mental life to study several subjects at once rather than one alone. What exhausts the brain is not using it, but abusing it by nervous waste in other directions. As a general rule, the brain can never do too much.

You can never work by impulse, you can only work by steady patient plod. It is the odd five minutes that tells.

To learn a thing is different from thinking out a problem. The only way to learn a thing is to keep at it uninterruptedly, day after day, whether you feel like it or not, and you will wake up one morning and find the thing is learned.

Beware of succumbing to failure as inevitable; make it the stepping-stone to success.

In beginning to study a new subject you do it by repeated starts until you get your mind into a certain channel, after that the subject becomes full of sustained interest.

Beware of mental lounging. Whenever we see notebooks for study, or work of any kind waiting to be done, we either go into dreamland, or we gather everything around us in an enormously bustling style, but we never do good solid work. It is nothing in the world but a habit of nerves which we have to check, and take time to see that we do.

A subject has never truly gripped you until you are mentally out of breath with it.

We have no business to go on impulses spiritually, we have to form the mind "which was also in Christ Jesus." People say their impulses are their guide—"I feel impelled to do this, or that"—that may be sufficient indication that they should not do it.

Remember, there must always be a mechanical outlet for spiritual inspiration.

We infect our surroundings with our own personal character. If I make my study a place of stern industry, it will act as an inspiration every time I go into it; but if I am lazy there, the place will revenge itself on me.

Note two things about your intelligence: first, when your intelligence feels numb, quit at once, and play or sleep; for the time being the brain must recuperate; second, when you feel a fidget of associated ideas, take yourself sternly in hand and say, "You shall study, so it's no use whining."

Mental stodge is different. Mental stodge is the result of one of three forms of over-feeding—too much dinner, too much reading, or too much meetings.

Irritation may be simply the result of not using your brain. Remember, the brain gets exhausted when it is not doing anything.

Beware of saying, "I haven't time to read the Bible, or to pray"; say rather, "I haven't disciplined myself to do these things."

Before any habit is formed you must put yourself under mechanical laws of obedience, and the higher the emotion started by the Spirit of God, the keener must be the determination to commit yourself.

If we have no system of work we shall easily come to think we are working when we are only thinking of working, that we are busy when we are only engaged.

The more we talk about work, the less we work, and the same with prayer.

We must be willing to do in the spiritual domain what we have to do in the natural domain if we want to develop, viz., discipline ourselves.

Vision is an inspiration to stand us in good stead in the drudgery of discipline; the temptation is to despise the discipline.

Enchain your body to habitual obedience.

Beware of being haunted by a suppressed dissatisfaction with the arrangements of your actual life—get the right programme! The secret of slacking is just here.

THE TEACHING OF IESUS

Our Lord did not come to this earth to teach men to be holy: He came to make men holy, and His teaching is applicable only on the basis of experimental Redemption.

The teaching of Jesus is not first; what is first is that He came to give us a totally new heredity, and the Sermon on the Mount describes the way that heredity will work out.

A good way to find out how much stodge there is in our spiritual life is to read the Sermon on the Mount and see how obtuse we are to the greater part of what Jesus Christ taught.

There is a calm deliberation about the injunctions in the Sermon on the Mount; we are not asked to obey them until the Holy Spirit brings them to our remembrance, when He does, the question is, will I exercise the disposition given me in regeneration and react in my actual life in accordance with the Mind of Christ?

Weighing the pros and cons for and against a statement of Jesus Christ's means that for the time being I refuse to obey Him.

We are never justified in taking any line of action other than that indicated by the teaching of Jesus and made possible for us by the grace of God.

Our Lord's teaching does not mean anything to a man until it does, and then it means everything.

Make your mind sure of what our Lord taught, and then insist and re-insist on it to the best of your ability.

Distortions of belief come because principles are put in the place of Jesus Christ. I must have a personal relationship to Him first, and then let the Holy Spirit apply His teaching.

Nothing must switch the disciple's loyalty to his Lord by loyalty to principles deduced from His teaching.

There are no infallible principles, only an infallible Person.

All my devotion is an insult to God unless every bit of my practical life squares with Jesus Christ's demands.

Beware of being negligent in some lesser thing while being good in some spiritual thing, e.g., you may be good in a prayer meeting while not good in the matter of cleaning your boots. It is a real peril, and springs from selecting some one thing our Lord taught as our standard instead of God Himself.

Matthew 5:48 is the standard for the Christian: "Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect" (RV). Size yourself up with a good sense of humour—"me, perfect!" That is what Jesus Christ has undertaken to do.

The religion of Jesus is morality transfigured by spirituality; we have to be moral right down to the depths of our motives.

It cannot be too often emphasised that our Lord never asks us to do other than all that good upright men do, but He does ask that we do just those same things from an entirely different motive (see Matthew 5:20).

We should make less excuses for the weaknesses of a Christian than for any other man. A Christian has God's honour at stake.

When a man is regenerated and bears the Name of Christ the Spirit of God will see to it that he is scrutinised by the world, and the more we are able to meet that scrutiny the healthier will we be as Christians.

Civilised organisations were never more deadly opposed to the teaching of Jesus than in the present age.

Whenever an organisation begins to be conscious of itself, its spiritual power goes because it is living for its own propaganda. Movements which were started by the Spirit of God have crystallised into something God has had to blight because the golden rule for spiritual work has been departed from (see John 12:24).

"I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil" (Matthew 5:17). Our Lord was not anti anything; He put into existing institutions a ruling principle which if obeyed would reconstruct them.

If you have never been brought close enough to Jesus to realise that He teaches things that grossly offend you as a natural man, I question whether you have ever seen Him.

Immediately you get out of touch with God, you are in a hell of chaos. That is always in the background of the teaching of Jesus (cf. Matthew 5:21–26). That is why the teaching of Jesus produces such consternation in the natural man.

Whenever a truth comes home to me my first reaction is to fling it back on you, but the Spirit of God brings it straight home, "Thou art the man." We always want to lash others when we are sick with our own disobedience.

The scrutiny we give other people should be for ourselves. You will never be able to cast out the mote in your brother's eye unless you have had a beam removed, or to be removed, from your own eye (see Matthew 7:3–4).

It is perilously possible to do one of two things—bind burdens on people you have no intention of helping them lift, or placidly to explain away the full purport of our Lord's teaching (see Luke 11:46).

Divorced from supernatural new birth the teaching of Jesus has no application to me, it only results in despair.

Our Lord's teaching about the maimed life and the mature life has not been sufficiently recognised. You can never be mature unless you have been fanatical (see Matthew 5:29–30, 48).

"Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain" (Matthew 5:41). If you are a saint the Lord will tax your walking capacity to the limit.

It is a slow business teaching a community living below the Christian level, I have to act according to the Christian ethic while not ignoring the fact that I am dealing with a community which lives away below it. The fact that I live with a degenerate crowd does not alter my duty, I have to behave as a disciple of Jesus.

TEMPTATION

To be raised above temptation belongs to God only.

Wherever there is moral responsibility there is temptation, i.e., the testing of what a man holds in his own person.

The old Puritan idea that the devil tempts men had this remarkable effect, it produced the man of iron who fought; the modern idea of blaming his heredity or his circumstances produces the man who succumbs at once.

When we say a thing is "Satanic" we mean something abominable according to our standards: the Bible means something remarkably subtle and wise. Satanic temptations are not bestial, those temptations have to do with a man's own stupidity and wrongdoing.

The Holy Ghost is the only One who can detect the temptations of Satan, neither our common sense nor our human wisdom can detect them as temptations.

Every temptation of Satan is the acme of human wisdom, but immediately the Spirit of God is at work in a man the hollow mockery at its heart is recognised.

Jesus Christ deals with Satan as the manifestation of something for which man is held responsible. Man is nowhere held responsible for the devil.

The temptation in Christian work to-day is to turn our sympathy towards human beings, "Put man's needs first." No, sympathy with God first, let Him work as He will.

If you allow human sympathy to make you susceptible to the Satanic side of things, you instantly sever yourself from the susceptibility which in all temptation ought to be turned God-wards.

Our Lord's words to Peter, "But He turned and said unto Peter, Get thee behind Me, Satan: thou art an offence unto Me: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men" (Matthew 16:23) crystallise for us His authoritative view of the conclusions of man's mind, when that mind has not been formed by the Holy Spirit, viz., that it is densely and satanically incapable of understanding His form of thought.

Satan does not tempt to gross sins, the one thing he tempts to is putting myself as master instead of God.

Beware of removing our Lord into a religious wardrobe where the cast-off haloes of the saints are kept, but remember that "we have not a high priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but one that hath been in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin" (Hebrews 4:15 RV; cf. Hebrews 2:11).

How are we to face the tempter? By prayer? No. With the Word of God? No. Face the tempter with Jesus Christ, and He will apply the word of God to you, and the temptation will cease. "For in that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succour them that are tempted" (Hebrews 2:18).

The moments of severest temptation are the moments of His divinest succour.

TESTIMONY

It is never our testimony that keeps our experience right: our experience makes us testify.

To testify is part of the life of every Christian, but because you have a personal testimony it does not follow that you are called to preach.

To say what God has done for you is testimony, but you have to preach more than you have experienced—more than anyone has ever experienced; you have to preach Jesus Christ. Present the Object of your faith, the Lord Jesus, lift Him up, and then either give your testimony, or know you have one to give.

To say a thing is the sure way to begin to believe it. That is why it is so necessary to testify to what Jesus Christ has done for you.

The false mood creeps in when you have the idea that you are to be a written epistle—of course you are! but you have not to know it.

Whenever you meet a man who is going on with God you find his testimony explains your own experience. A true testimony grips everyone who is after the Truth.

It is easier to stand true to a testimony mildewed with age, because it has a dogmatic ring about it that people agree with, than to talk from your last moment of contact with God.

Am I trying to live up to a testimony, or am I abiding in the Truth?

The danger of experience-meetings when they get outside the New Testament standard is that people don't testify to anything that glorifies God, but to experiences that leave you breathless and embarrassed. It is all on the illuminated line, on the verge of the hysterical.

People are precipitated into testifying before the vision they have had is made real—"Now I have had this experience," or, "Now I have become that." What we need to do after the vision is to examine ourselves before God and see if we are willing for all that must happen before it is made real in us.

When we get the vision of what God wants us to be, we are put to the blush by what we actually are, and that humiliation is the precursor of the coming reality, a heartpanging disgust at the realisation of what I am. That is what the Holy Spirit works in me; a disgust that will end in nothing less than death, then God can begin to make the vision real.

Never give an educated testimony, i.e., something you have taught yourself to say; wait till the elemental moves in you.

Be prepared to be unreserved in personal testimony; but remember, personal testimony must never be lowered into personal biography.

You cannot bring a knowledge of Jesus Christ to another, you can only tell him what He is to you, but until he gets where you are he will never see what you see.

If my testimony makes anyone wish to emulate me, it is a mistaken testimony, it is not a witness to Iesus.

The Holy Spirit will only witness to a testimony when Jesus Christ is exalted higher than the testimony.

THINKING

"For who among men knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of the man, which is in him?" A man discovers intellectual things for himself but he cannot discover God by his intellect. ". . . even so the things of God none knoweth, save the Spirit of God" (1 Corinthians 2:11 RV).

Think of the labour and patience of men in the domain of science and then think of our lack of patience in endeavouring to appreciate the Atonement, and you see the need there is for us to be conscientious in our thinking, basing everything on the reality of the Atonement. We prefer to be average Christians, we don't mind it having broken God's heart to save us, but we do object to having a sleepless night while we learn to say "Thank you" to God so that the angels can hear us. We need to be staggered out of our shocking indolence.

We have no business to limit God's revelations to the bias of the human mind.

"I can't alter my thinking." You can. It is actually possible to identify your mind with the highest point of view, and to habituate yourself by degrees to the thinking and the living in accordance with it.

A man's mental belief will show sooner or later in his practical living.

If I make my life in my intellect I will certainly delude myself that I am as good as I think I am. "As [a man] thinketh in his heart"—that means "me," as I express my thinking in actual life, "so is he."

I can think out a whole system of life, reason it all out well, but it does not necessarily make any difference to my actual life, I may think like an angel and live like a tadpole.

Note the things your thinking does not account for.

Truth is discerned by moral obedience. There are points in our thinking which remain obscure until a crisis arises in personal life where we ought to obey, immediately we obey the intellectual difficulty alters. Whenever we have to obey it is always in something immensely practical.

Obedience is the basis of Christian thinking. Never be surprised if there are whole areas of thinking that are not clear, they never will be until you obey.

Every new domain into which your personal life is introduced necessitates a new form of responsible intelligence.

Watch what you say you don't understand—you understand only too clearly.

Learn to be glad when you feel yourself a chaos that makes you bitterly disappointed with yourself, because from that moment you will begin to understand that God alone can make you "order" and "beauty."

Young life must be in chaos or there is no development possible.

Until you get an answer that satisfies your best moods only, don't stop thinking, keep on querying God. The answers that satisfy you go all over you, like health, or fresh air. Don't shut up any avenue of your nature, let God come into every avenue, every relationship, and you will find the nightmare curse of "secular and sacred" will go.

Intellectual obstinacy produces the sealed mind— "Jesus said unto them, If ye were blind, ye would have no sin: but now ye say, We see: your sin remaineth" (John 9:41 RV).

There is no jump into thinking, it is only done by a steady determined facing of the facts brought by the engineering of circumstances. God always insists that I think where I am. Beware of that abortion of Providence—"If I were you . . ."

With regard to other men's minds, take all you can get, whether those minds are in flesh-and-blood editions or in books, but remember, the best you get from another mind is not that mind's verdict, but its standpoint. Note the writers who provoke you to do your best mentally.

Never cease to think until you think things home and they become character.

Very few of us are real as God is real, we are only real in spots—awake morally and spiritually and dead intellectually, or vice versa, awake intellectually and dead morally and spiritually. It takes the shaking of God's Providence to awaken us up as whole beings, and when we are awakened we get growing pains in moral senses, in spiritual muscles we have never used. It is not the devil, it is God trying to make us appreciative sons and daughters of His.

Our thinking is often allowed to be anti-Christian while our feelings are Christian. The way I think will colour my attitude towards my fellow-men.

Always make a practise of provoking your mind to think about what it easily accepts. A position is not yours until you make it yours through suffering.

If you have ever done any thinking you don't feel very complacent after it, you get your first touch of pessimism; if you don't, you have never thought clearly and truly.

An appalling thing is that men who ignore Jesus Christ have their eyes open in a way many a preacher of the Gospel has not. Ibsen, for instance, saw things clearly: he saw the inexorable results of sin but without any deliverance or forgiveness, because he saw things apart from the Atonement.

The first thing that goes when you begin to think is your theology. If you stick too long to a theological point of view you become stagnant, without vitality. Never try to pillory Incarnate Reason by your own petty intelligence.

"I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now" (John 16:12 RV). These words are true in our mental life as well as in our spiritual life.

Doubt is not always a sign that a man is wrong, it may be a sign that he is thinking.

Keep the powers of your mind going full pace, always maintaining the secret life right with God.

If you teach anything out of an idle intellect, you will have to answer to God for it.

Never be distressed at the immediate result of thinking on the deep truths of religion because it will take years of profound familiarity with such truths before you gain an expression sufficient to satisfy you.

God never simply gives us an answer, He puts us on a line where it is possible for Truth to break more and more as we go on.

Before the mind has begun to grapple with problems it is easy to talk; when the mind has begun to grapple with problems it is a humiliating thing to talk.

Unless you think, you will be untouched, unbroken, by the truths you utter.

A logical position is satisfying to intellect, but it can never be true to life. Logic is simply the method man's intellect follows in making things definable to himself, but you can't define what is greater than yourself.

We command what we can explain, and if we bring our explanation into the spiritual domain we are in danger of explaining Jesus away—"and every spirit which annulleth Jesus is not of God" (1 John 4:3 RV mg). We have to be intelligently more than intelligent, intellectually more than intellectual, that is, we have to use all our wits in order not to worship our wits but be humble enough to worship God.

Don't run away with the idea that everything that runs contrary to your complacent scheme of things is of the devil.

As you go on with God He will give you thoughts that are a bit too big for you. God will never leave a servant of His with ideas he can easily express, He will always express through him more than he can grasp.

It takes a long time to get rid of atheism in thinking.

WORKERS FOR GOD

The worker for God must live among the commonsense facts of the natural world, but he must also be at home with revelation facts.

Be a worker with an equal knowledge of sin, of the human heart and of God.

Never take it for granted because you have been used by God to a soul that God will always speak through you, He won't. At any second you may blunt your spiritual intuition, it is known only to God and yourself. Keep the intuitive secret life clear and right with God at all costs.

Never pray for the gift of discernment, live so much in contact with God that the Holy Spirit can point out through you to others where they are wrong.

Our confidence is to be based on the fact that it is God who provides the issue in lives; we have to see that we give Him the opportunity of dealing with men by ceasing to be impressive individuals.

Beware of allowing the discernment of wrong in another to blind you to the fact that you are what you are by the grace of God.

How do I deal with a sinful soul? Do I remember who I am, or do I deal with him as if I were God?

Never say, "That truth is applicable to So-and-so," it puts you in a false position. To know that the truth is applicable to another life is a sacred trust from God to you, you must never say anything about it. Restraint in these matters is the way to maintain communion with God.

How many people have you made homesick for God?

The value of our work depends on whether we can direct men to Jesus Christ.

"Lovest thou Me? . . . Feed My sheep." That means giving out my life-blood for others as the Son of God gave His life-blood for me.

Christian service is not our work; loyalty to Jesus is our work.

Whenever success is made the motive of service infidelity to our Lord is the inevitable result (cf. Luke 10:20).

The curse of much modern Christian work is its determination to preserve itself.

This fundamental principle must be borne in mind, that any work for God before it fulfils its purpose must die, otherwise it "abideth alone." The conception is not that of progress from a seed to full growth, but of a seed dying and bringing forth what it never was. That is why Christianity is always "a forlorn hope" in the eyes of the world.

The element of faith that enables us to experience salvation is less than the faith required to make us workers for God. We have to bring into harmony all the strayed forces of our nature and concentrate them on the life of faith.

Beware of the temptation to compromise with the world, to put their interests, their needs, first—"They have kindly become interested in our Christian work, given so much time to it, now let us winsomely draw them in"—they will winsomely draw you away from God.

We constantly ask, "Am I of any use?" If you think you are, it is questionable whether you are being used by the Holy Spirit at all. It is the things you pay no attention to that the Holy Spirit uses.

Your dead-set determination to be of use never means half so much as the times you have not been thinking of being used—a casual conversation, an ordinary word, while your life was "hid with Christ in God."

As a worker, you must know how to link yourself on to the power of God; let the one you are talking to have the best of it for a time, don't try to prove that you are in the right and he is in the wrong. If we battle for a doctrinal position we will see no further spiritually.

Never interfere with God's providential dealings with other souls. Be true to God yourself and watch.

Individual responsibility for others without becoming an amateur providence, is one of the accomplishments of the Holy Spirit in a saint.

As workers for God, feed your heart and mind on this truth, that as individuals we are mere iotas in the great purpose of God. Every evangelical "craze" is an attempt to confine God to our notions, whereas the Holy Spirit constrains us to be what God wants us to be.

The greatest service you can render God is to fulfil your spiritual destiny.

Where would you be if God took away all your Christian work? Too often it is our Christian work that is worshipped and not God.

We rush through life and call ourselves practical, we mistake activity for real life, consequently when the activity stops we go out like a vapour, it has not been based on the great fundamental energy of God.

Beware of Christian activities instead of Christian being. The reason workers come to stupendous collapses is that their work is the evidence of a heart that evades facing the truth of God for itself—"I have no time for prayer, for Bible study, I must be always at it."

The lives that are getting stronger are lives in the desert, deep-rooted in God; they always remind you of God whenever you come in contact with them.

Never shrink from dealing with any life you are brought up against, but never go unless you are quite sure God wants you to, He will guide. God's permission means there is no shadow of doubt on the horizon of consciousness; when there is, wait. God never guides by fogs or by lightning flashes, He guides naturally.

Don't insult God by despising His ordinary ways in your life by saying, "Those things are beneath me." God has no special line, anything that is ordinary and human is His line.

Any worker following Paul's advice to Timothy—"Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season..." (2 Timothy 4:2)—will be continually surprised with new discoveries of truth, and there will be a perennial freshness about the spoken word.

You cannot be too severe with self-pity in yourself or in others. Be more merciless with yourself than you are with others.

Remember, weariness in work which is attended by spiritual weakness means you have been using your vital energy without at the same time witnessing. Natural weariness in work while you witness, produces steady and wonderful rejuvenescence.

If you obey God His order may take you into a cesspool but you will never be hurt.

If my life as a worker is right with God I am not concerned about my public pose—using discreet terms that will impress people; my one concern in public and private is to worship God.

When a worker jealously guards his secret life with God the public life will take care of itself.

Remember, in estimating other lives there is always one fact more you don't know. You don't know why some men turn to God and others don't, it is hidden in the inscrutable part of a man's nature.

If we realise the intense sacredness of a human soul in God's sight we will no longer romp in where angels fear to tread, we will pray and wait.

Never talk for the sake of making the other person see you are in the right, talk only that he may see the right, and when he does see it you will be so obliterated that he will forget to say "Thank you."

Notice carefully by what you are hurt and see whether it is because you are not being obeyed, or whether it is because the Holy Spirit is not being obeyed. If it is because you are not being obeyed, there is something desperately wrong with you.

In the majority of cases we don't care a bit about a soul rebelling against Jesus Christ, but we do care about his humiliating us.

Nothing hoodwinks us more quickly than the idea that we are serving God.

The last lesson we learn is "Hands off," that God's hands may be on.

When you are brought face to face with a case of happy indifference, pray for all you are worth, but let him alone with your tongue—the hardest thing for an earnest Christian to do.

It is much easier to do Christian work than to be concentrated on God's point of view.

Beware lest human pity pervert the meaning of Calvary so that you have more compassion for a soul than for the Saviour.

As "workers together" with God we are called upon not to be ignorant of the forces of the day in which we live. God does not alter, the truths of the Bible do not alter, but the problems we have to face do alter.

Never allow anyone to confess to you unless it is for his own soul's sake, make him tell God. The habit of confessing tends to make one person dependent on another, and the one who confesses becomes a spiritual sponge, mopping up sympathy.

The judicious weighing of what you should allow other people to tell you and what not to allow them to tell you, depends on two things: your experience of life among men, and your experience of life with God.

Never give a soul the help God alone should give; hand him right on to God.

Keep your mind stayed on God, and I defy anyone's heart to stop at you, it will always go on to God. Our duty is to present God, and never get in the way even in thought.

My business as a worker is to see that I am living on the basis of the Atonement in my actual life.

When you come in contact with the great destructive sins in men's lives, be reverent with what you don't understand. God says, "Leave that one to Me."

"We then, as workers together with Him . . ." the One referred to is Almighty God, "the Creator of the ends of the earth." Think of the impregnable position it gives the feeblest saint to remember that he is a fellow-worker with God.

Publication History

- As articles: Tongues of Fire/Spiritual Life Magazine and the Bible Training Course (BTC) Monthly Journal.¹
- As a book: 1953.

During the 1930s and 1940s, Mrs. Chambers compiled and published most of Oswald's lectures and sermons that developed a single theme or expounded a passage of Scripture. This left many talks covering a wide variety of subjects unpublished in book form. God's Workmanship (1953) along with Disciples Indeed (1955) and The Servant as His Lord (1958) have preserved these miscellaneous messages. These three were among the last books compiled by Mrs. Chambers before her death in 1966.

REALITY

The existence of a truth is nothing to me until I am brought into the current of events where that particular truth is a living reality to me because it speaks the language of my conscious life. Reality must have its source outside me; my conscious experience is the sphere of Reality in me, but I must be careful never to confound the reality of my experience with Reality itself.

1. Response to God

And without faith it is impossible to be well-pleasing unto Him: for he that cometh to God must believe that He is. . . . (Hebrews 11:6 RV)

Religion confronts God, not in scrutiny or criticism, but in response, in welcome, in obedience to His visitation. Religion is only possible to revelation. Religion is not aspiration, it is not temperament, it is not subjectivity, its roots are in God moving to man more than in man moving to God.

Forsyth²

We need constantly to remember that the work of God in us is the foundation of our Christian experience and faith, and as constantly do we need to remember that we never can experience the ground and spring of our Christian experience. In other words, our faith must be in the reality of the Redemption and never in what God has done in us and for us. What is experienced in our individual lives is the efficacious working of salvation, but we never can experience the God who gives us that experience. We are delighted with our experience, it is the thing we can talk about, but unless our faith is in the God who gives us the experience it ends in pietistic jargon; I try to pack all God's tremendous redemptive energy into a side eddy—"I have got all this to myself." If you know on what ground your experience has arisen you say, like Paul did, "I know whom I have believed," not "I know what I have got."

The thing to pay attention to is the miracle created in human experience, not on the ground of my reason, but on the ground of the Redemption, and it begins exactly as our Lord describes—"The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the voice thereof, but knowest not whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit" (John 3:8 RV). Whenever I say "I want to reason this thing out before I can trust," I will never trust. The reasoning out and the perfection of knowledge come after the response to God has been made. If we would learn on the threshold of our life with God to put away as impertinent, and even iniquitous, the debates as to whether or not we will trust God, we would not remain under the delusions we do; we would abandon without the slightest hesitation, cut the shore lines, burn our bridges behind us, and realise that what has happened is the positive miracle of the Redemption at work—we know with a knowledge which passeth knowledge. The whole of the New Testament exposition in the inspiration of the Holy Spirit is in order that we might know where we have been placed by Almighty God's Redemption. Immediately we come in contact with Reality our thinking is based on revelation all the time, and as we maintain our relation to Reality we will find new revelations of truth flashing out continually from the word of God.

Faith is not a faculty; if religion were the function of one particular faculty, it would claim but one side of life. Each faculty implies the rest because it is the action of the whole person.

Forsyth

Our response to God is the response of our whole nature. To speak of faith as a faculty is unfortunate; faith is not a faculty, if we mean by that something added on to what we have already got. The result of the idea that we are a bundle of separate faculties, the faculty of faith having nothing to do with the faculty of conscience, makes it possible for a man to do the most unrighteous things in his business all the week and the most devout things on Sunday. Watch the thing you are inclined to succumb over—"That will do for a knock-up job;3 it's only that, it doesn't matter." It is never "only that," it is the same with everything you do, and is certainly what you will do in the exercise of the highest powers of your personality, viz., in your relationship to God, only it is not traced so readily there because the spiritual domain is so vast and mysterious. Bring it to the test in the ordinary everyday things of life, eating and drinking, cleaning your boots, writing an essay—is it slovenly? is it careless and indifferent? does self-indulgence come in? That little pinhole exhibits the dry rot that runs all through everything you do, and when you trust in God, you trust in a shabby way, in a way that is defective—"I will have faith in God about this matter, but not about that"; then you don't trust God at all. If we will examine ourselves in the light of the things that can be seen we will realise that that is how God sees us all through, if only we will take the humiliating gibe to ourselves.

^{2.} Peter Taylor Forsyth (1848–1921): British Congregationalist minister and theologian. Chambers read many of Forsyth's books and valued his insights.

^{3.} knock-up job: something done hastily, carelessly, or in a slipshod way.

2. Readjustment in God

The first [commandment] is . . . thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. (Mark 12:29–30; from all thy heart, etc., RV mg)

We do not know how good God's claim is till we have met it, and long lived in surrender to it, we must taste and see. We do not assent and then trust, that would reduce grace to persuasion, and faith to being talked over or argued down, and from grace and faith alike the divine element of miracle would disappear.

Forsyth

My relationship to God embraces every faculty, I am to love Him with all my heart, all my soul, all my mind, all my strength, every detail is instinct with devotion to Him; if it is not I am disjointed somewhere. Think what you do for someone you love! The most amazingly minute details are perfectly transfigured because your whole nature is embraced, not one faculty only. You don't love a person with your heart and leave the rest of your nature out, you love with your whole being, from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot. That is the attitude of the New Testament all through. In 1 Corinthians 15, the Apostle Paul has been speaking about the stupendous mystery of the resurrection, and suddenly, like a swinging lamp in a mine, he rushes it right straight down and says, "Now concerning the collection . . ." The New Testament is continually doing it—"Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into His hands . . . began to wash the disciples' feet." It takes God Incarnate to wash feet properly. It takes God Incarnate to do anything properly.

Never limit God by remembering what you have done in the past. When you come into relation with the Reality of Redemption God creates something in you that was never there before, it is the active working of the life of God in you, consequently you can do now what you could not do before. Character is always revealed in crises. There are lives that seem selfish and self-centred until a crisis occurs and they manifest the most disinterested concern and self-effacement. On the other hand, there are lives that appear unselfish and noble and when the crisis comes they are revealed as mean⁴ and despicable. In the early stages of our Christian experience we are inclined to hunt in an overplus of delight for the commandments of our Lord in order to obey them out of our love for Him, but when that conscious obedience is assimilated and we begin to mature in our life with God, we obey His commandments unconsciously, until in the maturest stage of all we are simply children of God through whom God does His will, for the most part unconsciously to us.

PARTAKERS OF GRACE

For by grace have ye been saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God. Ephesians 2:8 (RV)

No man can be saved by praying, by believing, by obeying, or by consecration; salvation is a free gift of God's almighty grace. We have the sneaking idea that we earn things and get into God's favour by what we do—by our praying, by our repentance: the only way we get into God's favour is by the sheer gift of His grace. The first thing we consciously experience is a sense of undeserving-ness, but it does take some of us a long while to know we don't deserve to be saved. "I really am sorry for what I have done wrong"; "I really am sick of myself"—if only I am sick enough of myself, I will be sick to death; I am driven to despair,

I can do nothing; then I am exactly in the place where I can receive the overflowing grace of God.

In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of His grace. (Ephesians 1:7)

Think what God's forgiveness means: it means that He forgets away every sin. Forgetting in the Divine mind is an attribute, in the human mind it is a defect, consequently God never illustrates His Divine forgetfulness by human pictures, but by pictures taken from His own creation—"As far as east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us" (Psalm 103:12); "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions . . ." (Isaiah 44:22).

^{4.} mean: ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

The reason God never uses the human illustration is that a human being is incapable of forgiving as God does until he is made like God through regeneration. We take the forgiveness of sins to mean something we can understand, it is such a tremendous thing that it takes the Holy Spirit to enable us to begin to understand what is made ours through the grace of God. The forgiveness of God means that we are forgiven into a new relationship with God in Christ so that the forgiven man is the holy man.

God is able to make all grace abound unto you. . . . (2 Corinthians 9:8 RV)

In talking to people you will be amazed to find that they much more readily listen if you talk on the line of suffering, of the attacks of the devil; but get on the triumphant line of the Apostle Paul, talk about the superconquering life, about God making all His Divine grace to abound, and they lose interest—"That is all in the clouds," a sheer indication that they have never begun to taste the unfathomable joy that is awaiting them if they will only take it. All the great prevailing grace of God is ours for the drawing on, and it scarcely needs any drawing on, take out the "stopper" and it comes out in torrents; and yet we just manage to squeeze out enough grace for the day—"sinning in thought, word and deed every day"! You don't find that note in the New Testament. We have to keep in the light as God is in the light and the grace of God will supply supernatural life all the time. Thank God there is no end to His grace if we will keep in the humble place. The overflowing grace of God has no limits, and we have to set no limits to it, but "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

HOW TO GO ON

Colossians 2:6–7 (RV)

1. How to Think of Our State

As therefore ye received Christ Jesus the Lord . . . (RV)

We all start with thinking about what we have to do; Paul goes a step further back, and says, "Think of how you stand in God's sight through receiving Jesus." It will have a tremendous influence. Have I received Christ Jesus the Lord as my Saviour? Then He is my Saviour from everything that is not of God; that I enter into this realisation is another thing. We can always claim our union with Jesus Christ in thinking: "... that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." We know that we are not perfect yet in outer manifestation, but in thinking we have to remember what we received Jesus for, to be absolute Lord, absolute Saviour. When once we bring our minds to think of our state fundamentally, everything else becomes amazingly easy. We are apt to begin by thinking of our obedience, how we are going to work it out, and we forget the first thing, viz., that we have to receive Christ Jesus the Lord. Think what that means! It means we can go straight to the very heart of God and tell Him what we want, not because we are obedient, but because we have access into the holy place by the new and living way which Jesus dedicated (RV) for us. To think of what Jesus is to us always encourages our faith; if we begin with our obedience, our faith gets paralysed. The great basis for our thinking is, what does Jesus Christ mean to me? Have I received Him as Lord and Master, as Saviour and Sanctifier? Have I thought about Him as that?

2. How to Try Our Standing so walk in Him . . .

Our right standing is proved by the fact that we can walk; if we are not rightly related to God in our thinking we cannot walk properly. Walk means character. If we have only our own energy and devotion and earnestness to go on we cannot walk at all; but if we are based on the revelation that if we receive Christ Jesus the Lord we are complete (RV) in Him, then we can begin to walk according to the perfection we have in Him. When God brings us up against difficult circumstances that reveal the inability of our human nature it is not that we may sink back and say, "Oh dear, I thought I should have been all right by now"; it is that we may learn to draw on our union with Jesus Christ and claim that we have sufficient grace to do this particular thing according to God's will. If we are vitally connected with God in our thinking we shall find we can walk; but if we have not been thinking rightly we will succumb—"I can't do this." If we are thinking along the line of God's grace, that He is able to make all grace abound unto us (RV), we will not only stand, but walk as a son or daughter of God and prove that His grace is sufficient. To be weak in God's strength is a crime.

God has to deal with us on the death side as well as on the life side. It is all very well to know in theory that there are things we must not trust in, but another thing to know it in fact. When God deals with us on the death side He puts the sentence of death on everything we should not trust in, and we have a miserable time until we learn never any more to trust in it, never any more to look anywhere else than to God. It sometimes happens that hardly a day passes without God saying, "Don't trust there, that is dead."

Then He deals with us on the life side and reveals to us all that is ours in Christ Jesus, and there comes in the overflowing strength of God, the unsearchable riches in Christ Jesus. Whether God is dealing with us on the death side or the life side, it is all in order to teach us how to walk, how to try our standing in Christ Jesus. God is teaching us to try our steps in faith, and it is a very tottering business to begin with, we clutch hold of everything; God gives us any amount of encouragement, "ribbons" of blessings, of feelings and touches that makes us know His presence; then He withdraws them and slowly we get strengthened on our feet and learn how to walk in Him.

3. How to Train Our Strength rooted and builded up in Him . . .

The strength God gives us by receiving Christ Jesus the Lord is the strength He manifested when He raised the dead body of Jesus (see Ephesians 1:19–20). We have to train our strength by building it on that unit of measurement. When we pray for other people are we demanding more power to put them right than was wrought by God when He raised Christ from the dead? That is the measure of the exceeding greatness of His power to us-ward who believe. How am I measuring the power of God in my life?

... and stablished by [mg] your faith.

Think of the things you are trying to have faith for! Stop thinking of them and think about your state in God through receiving Christ Jesus; see how God has enabled you to walk where you used to totter, and see what marvellous strength you have in Him. "I can do all things in Him that strengtheneth me" (RV), says Paul. Is that mere poetry or a fact? Paul never talked only poetry. All the great blessings of God in salvation and sanctification, all the Holy Spirit's illumination, are ours not because we obey, they are ours because we have put ourselves into a right relationship with God by receiving Christ Jesus the Lord, and we obey spontaneously. As we look back we find that every time we have been blessed it was not through mechanical obedience, but by receiving from Jesus something that enabled us to obey without knowing it and life was flooded with the power of God. We make it hard for people—"Do this and that," and they obey and nothing happens. We have left out altogether the receiving of Christ Jesus the Lord; personal relationship to Jesus Christ first, then faith comes naturally. When we are standing face to face with Jesus Christ in this way and He says, "Believest thou this?"—no matter what the "this" is for—sanctification, or something further on than sanctification—faith is as natural as breathing; we say, "Why yes, Lord," and are staggered and amazed that we were so stupid as not to trust Him before. Whenever we find it hard and difficult and strengthless, we may be certain we are at the wrong place; when we get into the right thinking state through receiving Christ Jesus the Lord, it is the easiest thing in the world to have faith.

REDEMPTION

1. Not Thought but Fact

We have to live, thought is second. We are saved in only one way, by the supernatural efficacy of the Redemption; but to be saved and never think about it is a crime. "My people doth not consider," says God; they won't think. We can never become God's people by thinking, but we must think as God's people. It is possible to understand all about the plan of salvation without being personally related to the reality of Redemption.

My reason and my intellect are the finest instruments I have, but they are not "me," I am much more than my intellect and my reason. If I am going to get at Reality I must have my conscience at work as well as my intellect and reason, otherwise I will ignore the fact of sin, ignore all the moral perplexities, ignore the fact that God became Incarnate. Intellect is meant to be the handmaid of God, not the dictator to God. The rationalist dictates to God and dictates Him off His throne, consequently we hear it asked, "What need is there for the Redemption? for concentration on the historic fact of the life and death of Jesus?" Intellect must get into the place of receptivity, which it won't ever do if it is on the throne. All the idolatrous perversions in Nature and in grace come from exalting the instrument into the place of the life. When intellect is put in the right place it receives, then the Spirit of God creates—"Wherefore if any man is in Christ, there is a new creation" (2 Corinthians 5:17 RV mg) Then intellect comes in to explain, exactly as it does in Nature. God reveals nothing in Nature. I must use my wits, my ingenuity and common-sense, in order to discover; in the spiritual domain I only penetrate by submissive obedience. Our natural make-up is to want to have dominion; in the spiritual domain that is not the procedure, it is surrender. "Commit yourself to Me," says Jesus; get into contact with Reality and the understanding will follow.

We have to work out, not our redemption, but our human appreciation of our redemption. We owe it to God that we refuse to have rusty brains. "Why should I understand?" Because God wants intelligent sons and daughters; He is bringing "sons" to glory, not mechanisms.

Thought is not the sum-total of a man's personality, it is simply the garment personality wears. Think, for instance, of the beautiful things you write in your essays, and think of the mean scrubs you are outside your essays, proving that your beautiful thinking is not the garment that fits you yet. The only way the garment will fit you will be when you are working out your thinking in actualities. The words Jesus spoke were the exact garment of His Person, they exactly revealed Him, because He spoke out of actualities all the time. "I spake openly to the world; . . . and in secret have I said nothing."

"I can't stand coming in contact with other people"—why? Because when you do you find the beautiful conceptions and thoughts you get when you are alone, don't work. Separating myself from other people is the greatest means of producing deception because there is nothing to clash against me. Immediately people clash against me I know whether my beautiful thinking really expresses "me," or is a garment that disguises the real "me." If my actual life is not in agreement with my thinking the danger is that I exclude myself from actualities which bring home to me the knowledge of what I am, in spite of what I think. "I am a Christian worker and must put on this garb!" That is sanctimonious jargon; the only thing that will hold me right is a personal relationship to Jesus, and that life is essentially simple, there is no break into secular and sacred, the one merges into the other, exactly as it did in the life of our Lord. A false mysticism is produced if we refuse to have regard to the basal principle of our make-up, viz., that the garment of our thinking is meant to fit the actualities of life.

2. Thought and Fact United

My Christian faith must be related to the historic Jesus. The one abiding Reality is the Redemption which is focused for us in the historic event of the Life and Death of Jesus. That Fact is of more value than any other historic fact because the Holy Spirit working through it creates in me what could never be produced otherwise. It is the "preaching of the cross" that produces the crisis we call New Birth. We are in danger of preaching the new birth instead of proclaiming that which produces the new birth, viz., the preaching of Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. I cannot save a soul, or sanctify a soul, but if I will preach the Cross with all the mighty emphasis of God's Spirit on it, instantly the Holy Spirit creates the very thing which the Redemption has made possible—the miracle of God in human souls, not by magic, but by surrender. We have to preach, not the explanation of how it is done, but the Fact that does it. I have to see that I manifest in my mortal flesh the fact that the Son of God is born in me, my exposition of it is the expression in testimony that He did it. The danger is that I praise Jesus Christ for all I am worth while I evade the moral and essential necessity of surrendering to Him. There must be a Fact which is not "me" to be sure of before I am real.

"It was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the thing preached [mg] to save them that believe" (1 Corinthians 1:21 RV). Those are the words of the Apostle Paul. Think of his former fiery opposition to Jesus! think of his learning, his conscientious integrity! and then tell me what power of reasoning is going to touch such a man? And by the sheer creative energy of the Spirit of God he is turned from a strong-willed intense Pharisee into a humble devoted slave of the Lord Jesus. The word of God through the Spirit is creative, not persuasive. It hinders the work of the Spirit when we try and persuade people, it puts the basis not on Redemptive Reality but on our ingenious reasoning. The Spirit of God working, by God's decree, through the historic Fact of the Life and Death of Jesus, does not convince a man's mind: He creates something in him, makes him "a new creation in Christ Jesus" (RV mg). The preaching of Christ crucified is a stumbling-block to the Jews and foolishness to the Greeks; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, it is "the power of God, and the wisdom of God." The presentation of the Fact of the Life and Death of Jesus creates the New Testament belief about it in me. Our certainty of salvation is realisable long before it is reasonable to our understanding. Beware of preaching a Redemption that is past; it is past, but it must be seen to be ever-present, and I can only make it an ever-present reality by becoming a new creation in Christ Jesus.

How is the historic Christ interpreting Himself to me? Is He to me what He undoubtedly was in His own consciousness, or something less? am I patronising Him? have I brought my curiosity, which is meant to deal with natural facts, into the domain of revelation facts and begun to let it dominate there too? I command what I can explain, and immediately I bring the natural desire to explain into the spiritual domain, I am in danger of explaining Jesus away, I "dissolve Him by analysis" (see 1 John 4:3 RV mg). There is no thinking that will explain me to myself, then how can I think to explain the Son of God? "No one knoweth the Son, save the Father" (RV), said Jesus. The only way I can begin to understand the Son of God is by receiving His Spirit through regeneration; then when I am regenerated it is my duty to think about the Son of God, that is, I must see that I put my intellect at the disposal of the Holy Spirit, who will "reveal the Son of God in me" (Galatians 1:16).

THE MINISTRY OF THE INTERIOR

I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem; they shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that are the LORD's remembrancers, take ye no rest, and give Him no rest, till He establish, and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth. Isaiah 62:6–7 (RV)

And the LORD said unto him, Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof. Ezekiel 9:4

Do I know anything experimentally about this aspect of things? Have I ever spent one minute before God in intercessory importunity over the sins of other people? If we take these statements of the prophets and turn the searchlight on ourselves, we will be covered with shame and confusion because of our miserably selfish, self-centred Christianity.

How many of us have ever entered into this Ministry of the Interior where we become identified with our Lord and with the Holy Spirit in intercession? It is a threefold intercession: at the Throne of God, Jesus Christ; within the saint, the Holy Ghost; outside the saint, common-sense circumstances and common-sense people, and as these are brought before God in prayer the Holy Spirit gets a chance to make intercession according to the will of God. That is the meaning of personal sanctification, and that is why the barriers of personal testimony must be broken away and effaced by the realisation of why we are sanctified—not to be fussy workers for God, but to be His servants, and this is the work, vicarious intercession.

One of the first lessons we learn in the Ministry of the Interior is to talk things out before God in soliloquy—tell God what you know He knows in order that you may get to know it as He does.

All the harshness will go and the suffering sadness of God's Spirit will take its place, and gradually you will be brought into sympathy with His point of view.

There is an advocacy of holiness which was never born at Calvary, it is the resuscitation of the Pharisaic spirit dressed in the garb of Pentecost—an insufferable superiority. The Spirit of God must have a deep indignation at the preaching of holiness that is not the holiness of Jesus. The holiness of Jesus is the most humble thing on earth.

When God puts a weight on you for intercession for souls don't shirk it by talking to them. It is much easier to talk to them than to talk to God about them—much easier to talk to them than to take it before God and let the weight crush the life out of you until gradually and patiently God lifts the life out of the mire. That is where very few of us go.

When God brings a burden to you, never allow it to develop into carnal suspicion. In the Ministry of the Interior all we have to do is simply to take the matter before God and be made "crushed grapes" until the Holy Spirit produces such an atmosphere that the one who is wrong cannot endure it. That is God's method, and we interfere by using our own discernment.

The knowledge of where people are wrong is a hindrance to prayer, not an assistance. "I want to tell you of the difficulties so that you may pray intelligently." The more you know the less intelligently you pray because you forget to believe that God can alter the difficulties.

"Howbeit when the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" (RV). Which one of us would God stop at and say, "That one is My remembrancer"? or would He have to say, "That one is serving a conviction of his own, he is not My servant at all"?

I INDEED . . . BUT HE

I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but He... shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. Matthew 3:11

The baptism with the Holy Ghost and with fire is Jesus Christ's own peculiar right; He is the true Baptiser. "I indeed baptize you with water," said John, "but He... shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire"—a strange and amazing and supernatural baptism.

I wonder if we have ever seen Jesus Christ, if we know who He is? Have we ever heard ringing in our souls these words, "Behold the Lamb of God!" There is a phrase used in America, "I want what I want when I want it." The way you will want the baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire is when you begin to see the Lord Jesus; when you see Him, the great hearthunger, the great longing of the life will be, "I want to be like Him." But remember, you must come to Him; it is His prerogative to baptise with the Holy Ghost. It is not a blessing we gain by faith, not a blessing we merge into by devotion and fasting, it is the supernaturally natural result of coming to Jesus as the true Baptiser. One sees lives on the right hand and on the left turning sour and cynical, seeing only the frauds and disappointments in life—if they would only look to the Lord Jesus! He baptises with the Holy Ghost and with fire, that is, He makes us like Himself.

I want to ask a very personal question—How much do you want to be delivered from? You say, "I want to be delivered from wrongdoing"—then you don't need to come to Jesus Christ. "I want to walk in the right way according to the judgement of men"—then you don't need Jesus Christ. But some heart cries out-"I want, God knows I want, that Jesus Christ should do in me all He said He would do." How many of us "want" like that? God grant that this "want" may increase until it swamps every other desire of heart and life. Oh, the patience, the gentleness, the longing of the Lord Jesus after lives, and yet men are turning this way and that, and even saints who once knew Him are turning aside, their eyes are fixed on other things, on the blessings that come from the baptism with the Holy Ghost and have forgotten the Baptiser Himself.

Do you know what this mighty baptism will mean? It will mean being taken right out of every other setting in life but God's. Are you willing for that? It will mean that sin in you is put to death, not counteracted, but killed right out by identification with the death of Jesus; it will mean a blazing personal holiness like His. Are you willing for that? Face Jesus Himself; other lights are fading since He grew bright. You are getting tired of life as it is, tired of yourself as you are, getting sour with regard to the setting of your life; lift your eyes for one moment to Jesus Christ. Do you want, more than you want your food, more than you want your sleep, more than you want anything under heaven, or in heaven, that Jesus Christ might so identify you with Himself that you are His first and last and for ever? God grant that the great longing desire of your heart may begin to awaken as it has never done, not only the desire for the forgiveness of sins, but for identification with Jesus Himself until you say, "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

Another thing about this mighty baptism—it takes you out of your individual life and fits you into God's purpose. Are some of you realising the awful loneliness of being alive? You cannot mix in with the worldly crowd you used to, and there is a great hunger and longing after you know not what. Look to the Lord Jesus and say, "My God, I want to be so identified with the Lord Jesus that I am pure with His purity, empowered with His power, indwelt with His life." Do you know what will happen? God will take your lonely, isolated, individual life and fit it into a marvellous oneness, into the mystical Body of Christ. Oh, the isolated, lonely, Christian lives! What is needed is this mighty baptism with the Holy Ghost and with fire. "I have been seeking for it, fasting for it," you say; listen, "Come unto Me," says Jesus, He is the Baptiser with the Holy Ghost, and with fire.

Have you seen Jesus as "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world"? What is the first step to take? Come to Him just as you are and ask Him to give you the Holy Spirit. As soon as you receive the Holy Spirit He begins to awaken in you the tremendous "want," overwhelming, all-absorbing, passionate in its impelling rush, to be baptised with the Holy Ghost and with fire. If you have never received the Holy Spirit, why not receive Him now? Ask God for His Spirit on the authority of Jesus, and He will lead you, as you obey Him, straight to the place where you will be identified with the death of Jesus.

Where are we in regard to the personal experience of the baptism of the Holy Ghost? If Jesus Christ had said to us, "All you need to do is to be as holy as you can, overcome sin as far as you can, and I will overlook the rest," no intelligent man under heaven would accept such a salvation. But He says—"Be ye . . . perfect"; "Love your enemies"; "Be so pure that lust is an impossibility." Instantly every heart calls back, My God, "who is sufficient for these things?" Oceans of penitential tears, mountains of good works, all powers and energy sink down till they are under the feet of the Lord Jesus, and, incarnate in John the Baptist, they all point to Him—"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!" If Jesus Christ cannot deliver from sin, if He cannot adjust us perfectly to God as He says He can, if He cannot fill us with the Holy Ghost until there is nothing that can ever appeal again in sin or the world or the flesh, then He has misled us. But blessed be the Name of God, He can! He can so purify, so indwell, so merge with Himself, that only the things that appeal to Him appeal to you, to all other appeals there is the sentence of death, you have nothing to answer. When you come amongst those whose morality and uprightness crown them the lord of their own lives, there is no affinity with you, and they leave you alone.

When you are born again of the Spirit of God the characteristic of your testimony is this—"Once I was that, now I am this, and He did it." But when you are baptised with the Holy Ghost, there is only One you see, One you love, One you live for from early morning till late at night, One you die for. Every thought is gripped and held enthralled by the Master of human destiny, the Lord Jesus Christ, and the whole life is devoted to Him. "My witnesses," wherever we are placed He is glorified, not by the testimony of the lips only, but by the whole life.

NOW DON'T HURT THE LORD

Philip saith unto Him, Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us. John 14:8

1. You Who Regarded Christ's Command

And he findeth Philip: and Jesus saith unto him, Follow Me. (John 1:43 RV)

You may have had no reluctance in obeying the Lord's command, and yet it is probable you are hurting Him because you look for God to manifest Himself where He never can "Lord, shew us the Father." We look to God to manifest Himself to His children: God manifests Himself in His children, consequently the manifestation is seen by others, not by us. It is a snare to want to be conscious of God; you cannot be conscious of your consciousness and remain sane. You have obeyed Christ's command, then are you hurting Him by asking some profoundly perverse question? I believe our Lord is repeatedly astounded at the stupidity we display. It is notions of our own that make us stupid; when we are simple we are never stupid, we discern all the time. "Lord, shew us the Father"; "Shew me Thy face"; "Expound this thing to me"; and His answer comes straight back to our heart: "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known Me?"

2. You Who Realised Christ's Character

Philip . . . saith . . . We have found Him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth. (John 1:45)

Like Philip, you know that Jesus Christ is God Incarnate, you realise His character and recognise Him in the Scriptures, then are you hurting Him by the questions you ask? Diseased, morbid questions, not the questions of a child. Jesus has said, "Let not your heart be troubled," then are you hurting Him by allowing your heart to be troubled? If your heart is troubled you are not living up to your belief. Are you trying to expound the Lord apart from Himself, bringing in ideas of your own along with your knowledge of His character? Are you taken up with considering your own perplexities, allowing some morbid question to perturb your heart? What our Lord wants is the implicit relationship to Himself which takes everything as it comes from Him.

3. You Who Recognised Christ's Claim

Philip saith unto him, Come and see. (John 1:46)

In the beginning Philip obeyed Jesus Christ readily, there was no traitorous unbelief in his heart; he realised who Jesus was, and testified of Him to others, and yet he had not perfect childlike confidence in Jesus, and it was this that hurt our Lord—"hast thou not known Me, Philip? He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." If you know only what you have experienced, you will never see Jesus. Once put conscious experience in the road and you will hurt the Lord. You can never rely on what you believe intellectually; but once have the attitude of a perfectly simple, unsophisticated child of God and there is no trouble in believing. The questions that hurt the Lord are those that are not born of devotion to Him. Am I hurting my Lord by the kind of questions I am asking to-day? They may sound all right to others, but they hurt Him.

"Lord, shew us the Father." Philip expected the revelation of a tremendous mystery, but he did not expect it in the One whom he knew. The mystery of God is now, this minute, not in what is going to be; we look for it presently, in some cataclysmic happening. What am I asking Jesus Christ to do? "Lord, shew us the Father." He has done it: "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." When once I realise that everything is in Jesus Christ, I will never allow any questions that spring from without to trouble my heart. The thing that hurts Jesus is asking Him to give us experiences—"I want to be conscious of God's presence." Get rid of the morbid idea of consciousness, be so completely in Jesus that His presence is salvation continually.

You have obeyed Jesus Christ's command and followed Him, you have realised His character and recognised His claims, then are you hurting Him by asking Him to show you things? "Show me Thy face"; there it is! "Show me the Father"; there He is! always just here or nowhere; He is here now. Once realise that and the emancipation is immediate. It is to those "babes," to "little children," "in whom is no guile," that the revelation comes. God never guides presently, He always guides now. No wonder Jesus said, "Let not your heart be troubled"!

WHAT A MAN POSSESSES V. WHAT POSSESSES A MAN

For a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. Luke 12:15

This statement of Our Lord's needs careful consideration because we dislike it strongly. The whole teaching of Jesus is opposed to the idea of civilisation, viz., possessing things for myself-"This is mine." The sense of property is connected, not with the lasting element of our personality, but with that which has to do with sin; it is the sense of property that makes me want to gratify myself. Jesus Christ had no sense of property, there was never any attempt to gratify Himself by possessing things for Himself—"the Son of man hath not where to lay His head." What was His, He gave—"I lay down My life. . . . I lay it down of Myself." The thing that leads me wrong always and every time is what I am persuaded I possess. The thing that is mine is the thing I have with the power to give it. All that I want to possess without the power to give, is of the nature of sin. God has no possessions, consequently I cannot rob God of anything, but I rob myself of God every time I stick to what I possess. Immediately I abandon to God I get that which possesses me but has no possessions with it, there is nothing to keep. Being possessed by God means an untrammelled⁵ human life.

God seems careless of His children from the standpoint of Time; when we get to the Eternal side of God's Providence we find He does not estimate a man by what he possesses; the only thing He is after is union with Himself, and He will obliterate all our possessions until He leaves only Himself. As long as I have something from God which I possess, I have not got God. God gives us possessions in order to draw us to Himself, and when we get God we are no longer conscious of our possessions, but conscious only of God. What possesses me in a yielded life to God is God Himself.

According to Jesus Christ a man's life does not consist in the abundance of the things he possesses not only in the way of goods and chattels, but in the way of a good name, a virtuous character; these things are a man's inheritance, but not his life. When the Holy Spirit begins to try and break into the house of our possessions in order to grant us the real life of God, we look on Him as a robber, as a disturber of our peace, because when He comes He reveals the things which are not of God and must go; and they are the things which constituted our life before He came in, our golden affections were carefully nested in them. The thing that hurts shows where we live. If God hurts it is because we are not living rightly related to Him, and if we say "the devil" instead of "God," it is evidence that we are living a sequestered life of our own apart from God.

Watch the opportunities of filling up "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ." When I am possessed by God it is not that He gives me power to love like He does, but that the very nature of God loves through me, just as He put up with the things in me which were not of Him, so He puts up with the things which are not of Him in others through me, and what is manifested is the love of God, the love that suffers long and is kind, the love that does not take account of evil, the love that never fails. Just as my Lord was made broken bread and poured-out wine for me, so I must be made broken bread and poured-out wine in His hands for others. What is meant by "in His hands" is seen in the kind of things that bruise me—tyrannic powers, misunderstanding people, things that ordinarily I would have resented and said, "No, I can't allow that." Is there being produced in me, through the crushing of His disguised feet, the wine that is a real quickening of other lives? A yielded life to God becomes a doormat for men. He leaves us here to be trampled on.

THE PERSON OF OUR LORD

There is a difference between being "the offspring of God" (Acts 17:28) and being "sons of God" (John 1:12). "Offspring" means that our genus originated with God; we can only become "sons" of God by a specific act of regeneration.

Jesus Christ is the "only begotten Son"; His whole personality is Son-ship.

Every Christian knows Jesus Christ as God, not as the equivalent of God; the call to proclaim Him to others means that I see Him and know Him as God. There is no God that is not Father, Son and Holy Ghost—the Triune aspect of one God, from all Eternity to all Eternity. If I am ever going to get to God as Father I must come to Him through the miraculously provided way: "I am the Way," said Jesus, "no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me."

Beware of coming to the study of the Person of our Lord with preconceived ideas, e.g., that the nature of Deity is necessarily omnipotence, etc. The ultimate display of Deity is omnipotence, but the essential nature of Deity is holiness. Deity can be limited by choice. Our Lord, as Son of Man, deliberately limited omnipotence, omniscience and omnipresence in Himself, yet to His own consciousness He was "on an equality with God" (RV): "I and My Father are one." The great revelation the Bible gives of God is the opposite of what we are apt to imagine Him to be, it is a revelation not of the majestic power of God, but of the fact that God was "manifested in the flesh" (RV); that God became Incarnate as a Baby in the Person of His Son. That is the last reach of Self-limitation.

We have to remember what our Lord presents by His life on earth: He presents the goal to which we have to attain by means of His death on the Cross, and the progress His own life went through from Childhood to Manhood represents for us the progress our spiritual life will go through after we are born again of the Spirit. Man was not so created as to be able to reach the goal by drawing the required power from his own resources, he needed the aid of continual communications of life from God, and the reason of our Lord's coming was in order that the normal development of man, which sin had interrupted, might begin afresh.

There are two kinds of incompleteness—the incompleteness which is simply that which is growing to completeness: a child is a perfect human being in the sense of all his adjustments being right, but he is not a perfected human being in the sense of full growth and maturity, therefore the effort of a child to do a thing and not succeed, is not in the same category as failure through wilfulness, it is the limitation of his growing powers that prevents him succeeding. But alongside that is an incompleteness which comes from the presence of an opposing force, something which makes me say "I won't." A man with an impulse towards God and all that is right has also an impulse towards that which is against God, he is divided in two; it is not a question of imperfect growth but of downright opposition which not only makes for incompleteness, but makes an hiatus that cannot be bridged. No power outside God can alter that "I won't" into "I will." "I won't" is not imperfect "I will," and it will never develop into "I will."

There was no incompleteness in that sense in our Lord; He "grew, and . . . increased in wisdom and stature" (Luke 2:40, 52), and when we are born again it means that Christ is "formed" in us, then we have to "grow up in all things into Him" (RV). But that will to oppose must be dealt with before I can do that; I can't develop as Jesus did unless He takes out of me that which never was in Him. If He can do that, then I can begin to understand how He is my Example; but He is not my Example unless the Redemption has been made of practical effect in me.

When Jesus Christ, the last Adam, came He entered on the same plane as the first Adam, and from that same stage of innocence He worked out the perfect life of holiness that God required, which Adam failed to do. But He had to do more, He had to put the whole human race back, not to where Adam was, but to where Adam had never been, viz., to where He is Himself, an inconceivably higher position. Through His death on the Cross Jesus Christ not only readjusts a man in conscience and heart to God, He does something grander, He imparts to him the power to do all God wants, He presences him with Divinity, i.e., the Holy Spirit, so that he is garrisoned from within, and enabled to live without blame before God. Blameless does not mean perfection, but undeserving of censure in God's sight. That is the full meaning of being baptised with the Holy Ghost. Then, and only then, does Jesus become our Example.

We are being told nowadays how like Jesus is to ourselves—thank God He is not! The revelation of Jesus in the New Testament is that He is absolutely unlike us. Never attempt dextrously to show how altogether human Jesus is; allow the facts of Bible revelation to show you the absolute difference between ourselves and Jesus Christ, and because of this difference He is able to lift us up into likeness with Himself, to conform us to His own image.

What kind of attitude have we got to Jesus Christ? Are we dictating to Him in pious phraseology what we intend to let Him do in us, or letting His life be manifested in our mortal flesh as we obey? Is my experience worth His while? If I am not a saint, it was not worth his while. I can be devout, I can put on a pious pose, religious circumspection will do all that, but has there been such an alteration in me that I know nothing at all can account for it saving the almighty grace of God working in me to will and to do of His good pleasure? The net result of the teaching of Jesus is to produce despair—if it has never produced despair in me I have not heard it aright; but that despair brings me to the place where I am willing to come, "just as I am, without one plea," and accept as an unmerited gift the Salvation wrought out by Jesus Christ.

"WHAT IS TRUTH?"

John 18:38

The Personality of Truth is the great revelation of Christianity—"I am . . . the Truth." Our Lord did not say He was "all truth" so that we could go to His statements as to a textbook and verify things; there are domains, such as science and art and history, which are distinctly man's domains and the boundaries of our knowledge must continually alter and be enlarged; God never encourages laziness. The question to be asked is not, "Does the Bible agree with the findings of modern science?" but, "Do the findings of modern science help us to a better understanding of the things revealed in the Bible?"

Again, the Bible has much to say about truth of speech, e.g., "speak ye truth each one with his neighbour" (Ephesians 4:25 RV): but this aspect, important as it is, is not what our Lord means when He says, "I am . . . the Truth." However, it is well, bearing in mind the deceitfulness and subtlety of the human heart, for us to remember that

The truth that's told with bad intent Beats all the lies you can invent.

And none of us ever gets beyond the need of the warning that "lying lips are an abomination to the LORD." But we would not have needed the Bible, or the illumination of the Holy Spirit, or our Lord Himself to come and tell us about these things, our own human wisdom and ingenuity would have taught us.

1. Truth Incarnate

"And the Word became flesh" (RV)—that means not only the expression of the Mind of God, but the expression of the Mind of God Incarnate. God gave His final revelation in Jesus Christ; then He set processes at work for the re-organisation of the whole of humanity. Jesus Christ is the Truth, an Incarnate Ideal; to be "in Christ" means that through regeneration and sanctification that Ideal can become a reality, so that in my mortal flesh there is manifested that which is easily discerned to be "the life also of Jesus." We are to be incorporated into the truth. The ideal is not a vague end into which we evolve more or less blindly, we "grow up in all things into Him." There is a danger of seeing the truth and the true clearly with our minds, while the life and character lag woefully behind. In Christian work who has not met with clearness in verbal doctrine, almost dictatorial clearness, and wrong, almost quite wrong, attitudes in life and conduct? "He that doeth truth cometh to the light" (John 3:21). "Everyone that is of the truth heareth My voice" (John 18:37). "... that we know Him that is true, and we are in Him that is true, even in His Son Jesus Christ" (1 John 5:20). These passages make it clear that being "of the truth" refers to a condition of character. Much is written about our Lord speaking so simply that anyone could understand, and we forget that while it remains true that the common people heard Him gladly, no one, not even His own disciples, understood Him until after the Resurrection and the coming of the Holy Spirit, the reason being that a pure heart is the essential requirement for being "of the truth." "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."

2. Truth Interpreted

... no prophecy of scripture is of private interpretation. (2 Peter 1:20 RV)

We are never left with a revelation without an interpretation of it. A revelation fact needs a corresponding revelation to interpret it. Just as Jesus Christ is the final revelation of God, so the Bible is the final revelation interpreting Him. Our Lord Jesus Christ (The Word of God) and the Bible (the accompanying revelation) stand or fall together, they can never be separated without fatal results. The words of the Bible apart from being interpreted by the Word of God, are worse than lifeless, they kill (2 Corinthians 3:6). But when a soul is born from above (RV mg) and lifted to the atmosphere of the domain where our Lord lives, the Bible becomes its native air, its words become the storehouse of omnipotence, its commands and prophecies become alive, its limitless horizons brace the heart and mind to a new consciousness, its comforts in Psalms and prayers and exhortations delight the whole man. And better than all, the Lord Jesus Christ becomes the altogether Lovely One, it is in His light that we see light, it is in Him that we become new creatures. He who is the Word of God unfolds to us the revelation of God until we say in sacred rapture, "I hold in my hands the Thought of God."

What is needed is a final court of appeal, and this we have in the Bible. It is not a question of the infallibility of the Bible, that is a side issue; but of the finality of the Bible. The Bible is a whole library of literature giving us the final interpretation of the Truth, and to take the Bible apart from that one supreme purpose is to have a book and nothing more; and further, to take our Lord Jesus Christ away from the revelation of Him given in the Bible is to be left with one who is open to all the irreverent slanders of unbelief.

"The Truth" is our Lord Himself; "the whole truth" is the inspired Scripture interpreting the Truth to us; and "nothing but the truth" is the Holy Spirit, "the Spirit of truth," efficaciously regenerating and sanctifying us, and guiding us into "all the truth" (RV).

AFTER OBEDIENCE—WHAT?

Mark 6:45-52

1. Constrained by Christ

And straightway He constrained His disciples to get into the ship, and to go to the other side. . . . (Mark 6:45)

We are apt to imagine that if Jesus Christ constrains us and we obey Him, He will lead us to great success; but He does not. We would have thought these men would have had a most successful time, but their obedience led them into a great disaster. If our Lord has ever constrained you, and you obeyed Him, what was your dream of His purpose? Never put your dream of success as God's purpose for you; His purpose may be exactly the opposite.

2. Consternation by Obedience

And He saw them toiling in rowing; for the wind was contrary unto them: and about the fourth watch of the night He cometh unto them, walking upon the sea, and would have passed by them. (Mark 6:48)

The obedience of the disciples led them into the greatest trouble they had known. Jesus did not go with them, a storm came, and they were at their wits' end—"the ship was in the midst of the sea, and He alone on the land." They thought they were going straight to the other aide: Jesus knew they would face a storm in the centre of the lake.

Each one of us has had similar experiences—"I did obey God's voice; I am sure He led me to do this and that," and yet these very things have led to consternation in our lives. Beware of saying the devil deceived you. It is as true for saints as for anyone else that "there is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." We have nothing whatever to do with what men call success or failure. If God's command is clear, and the constraint of His Spirit is clear, we have nothing to do with the result of our obedience. The purpose of God in calling us is not something in the future, but this very minute—"Now is the accepted time," always now; God's training is for now, not presently. The ultimate issue will be manifested presently, but we have nothing to do with the afterwards of obedience. We get wrong when we think of the afterwards, the purpose of God is our obedience. Never have a material end in your mind and imagine that God is working towards that by means of your obedience; that is man's way of looking at things. What man calls training and preparation, God calls the end. The end God has in mind is to enable us to see that He can walk on the chaos of our lives just now. "He is there!" The first time we saw Him we were terrified; the "other side" was covered with clouds, the surroundings became wild, and the wind contrary. With how many is the wind contrary these days!

There was no point of rest for the natural mind of the disciples as to what Jesus was after—it was the deep, the dark, and the dreadful: our Lord's purpose was that they should see Him walking on the sea. We have an idea that God is leading us to a certain goal; He is not. The question of getting to a particular end is a mere incident. "For I know the plans that I am planning for you, saith the Lord, plans of welfare, and not of calamity, to give you an expected end" (see Jeremiah 29:11). What men call the process, God calls the end. If you can stay in the midst of the turmoil unperplexed and calm because you see Jesus, that is God's purpose in your life; not that you may be able to say, "I have done this and that and now it's all right." God's purpose for you is that you depend upon Him and His power now; that you see Him walking on the waves—no shore in sight, no success, just the absolute certainty that it is all right because you see Him.

3. Confused by Calm

And He went up unto them into the ship; and the wind ceased: and they were sore amazed in themselves beyond measure, and wondered. (Mark 6:51)

After we have obeyed there is a sudden calm, and unless we are well taught by the Spirit of God, we are afraid of this calm and imagine it is a preparation for some tremendous strain.

"For they understood not concerning [RV] the loaves: for their heart was hardened." The way our heart is hardened is by sticking to our convictions instead of to Christ. Look back at your life with God and you will find that He has made havoc of your convictions, and now the one thing that looms larger and larger is Jesus Christ and Him only, God and God only. "And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God." Convictions and creeds are always about God; eternal life is to know Him.

"Let not your heart be troubled." When we dream of ourselves in God's service our hearts do get troubled—"I think this is what God is preparing me for." God is not preparing you for anything, obedience is its own end in the purpose of God; be faithful to Him. Never say, "I wonder what God is doing with me just now." That is no business of yours, and the Spirit of God will never give you an answer. If you are spiritual I defy you to tell anyone what God is preparing you for; the preparation is His end.

Can I see Jesus in my present circumstances? Is it an obscure farther shore, with wild waves between? can I see Him walking on the waves? Is it a fiery furnace? Can I see Him walking in the midst of the fire? Is it a placid, commonplace day? can I see Him there? If so, that is the perpetual mystery of the guidance of God, that is Eternal Life. We have to be transformed by the renewing of our mind, that we may "prove what is the will of God, even the thing which is good and acceptable and perfect" (RV mg), not the thing that is going to be acceptable, but which is good and acceptable and perfect now. If we have a further end in view we do not pay sufficient attention to the immediate minute; when we know that obedience is the end, then every moment is the most precious.

MY RELATION TO MYSELF

My Right to Myself versus My Wrong to Myself

What commandment is the first of all? . . . The first is, . . . thou shalt love the Lord thy God from all thy heart, and from all thy soul, and from all thy mind, and from all thy strength. The second is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Mark 12:28–31 (RV mg)

My self is my conscious personality, the sum-total of all I call "me" and "mine." Our Lord never taught the annihilation of self, He revealed how self might be rightly centred, viz., in love to God. Love is the highest moral issue—"God is love." The Bible makes no distinction between Divine love and human love, it speaks only of "love." The majority of us have an impersonal, ethereal, vague abstraction we call love to God; Jesus says I must love God with all my heart and soul and mind and strength, then my love for my fellow men will be relative to that centre. "For the whole law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Galatians 5:14 RV; see also James 2:8). The love of self that Jesus not only justified but distinctly enjoined, is the direct product of the indwelling Holy Spirit; its perversion is the deification of my self. How is it possible for me to love my neighbour as myself? The best example of a lover of men is Jesus Christ, and the mainspring of

His love for men was His love for God. Whenever you deal with a principle always take the best possible incarnation of it, never deal with it in the abstract. If I deify an abstraction called "love to God" I can jargon to further orders⁶ as though I really loved my fellow men, but the crucial test when it comes will prove I don't. When I disassociate myself from God I become a law unto myself, and the first thing that happens is I don't love my neighbour as myself—I am so sure I am right and everyone else is wrong. The only way I can love my neighbour as myself is by having the love of God shed abroad in my heart, then I can love others with that same love. Self is not to be absorbed into God, it is to be centred in God.

Man was created to be the friend and lover of God and for no other end, and until he realises this he will go through turmoil and upset. Human nature must rise to its own Source, the bosom of God, and Jesus Christ by His Redemption brings it back there. God is the only One who has the right to myself and when I love Him with all my heart and soul and mind and strength, self in its essence is realised. All the teaching of Jesus is woven around self; I have a moral self-love to preserve for God; not, "Oh, I'm of no account," "a worm," that would spell self-less-ness. "I hold not my life of any account, as dear unto myself," says Paul, "so that I may accomplish my course, and the ministry which I received from the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God" (RV). That is, he refused to use himself for any other interest but God's, and for what glorified God.

Fundamentally it is impossible to love a human being wrongly—it is possible to have an affection for a human being as a sop to my personal conceit: it is never possible to love a human being rightly if I love from the centre of self-interest. The love which springs from self-conceit or self-interest ends in being cruel because it demands an infinite satisfaction from another human being which it will never get. The love which has God as its centre makes no demands. Why our Lord appears to be the enemy of natural love is because we do not understand that He deals with fundamentals always. For instance, whenever He brings His challenge against the mutual relationships of life (e.g., Matthew 10:35–39; Luke 14:26), it is because the love born of those relationships is chained about by a perverted disposition which He calls sin; and where in the interests of self-love those claims are held to, He has to disillusionise me over them until the entire life is rightly related to Him. When I love Him supremely so that all other loves are hatred in comparison, then He can trust me with the hundredfold more because the interest of selflove no longer rules. Every human relationship is put by Jesus on an eternal basis, otherwise the relationships born from the centre of what we call natural love end with this life, there is nothing more to them; but when they are rooted in the nature of God they are as eternal as God Himself.

We can easily slander God by the things we say when we are really desirous of presenting His character—Because I loved the creature God took him, or her, away. That is a lie. The only way it could be true would be if I loved in order to gratify myself, then my love, which in the sight of God was lust, was hurtful because it sprang from the centre of selfgratification. It may mean the gratification of others, but if my motive in making them happy is in order to get a better state of self-complacency, I am doing harm the more good I do. But let the lowliest soul whose influence apparently amounts to nothing get rightly related to God, and out of him will flow rivers of living water which he does not see, but one day we shall find that it is those lives which have been spreading the lasting benediction. "Love is of God"; it never came from the devil and never can go to the devil. When I am rightly related to God, the more I love the more blessing does He pour out on other lives. The reward of love is the capacity to pour out more love all the time, "hoping for nothing again." That is the essential nature of perfect love.

The true import of love is the surrender of my self, I go out of myself in order to live in and for God. To be indwelt by the Spirit of Jesus means I am willing to quit my own abode from the self-interested standpoint and live only in and for God. It is not the surrender to a conqueror, but the surrender of love, a sovereign preference for God. I surrender myself—not because it is bad, self is the best thing I have got, and I give it to God; then self-realisation is lost in God-realisation. There is a subtle form of pride which is set on my holiness; in sanctification there is no pride. Go to the death of independence of God and you will never be bothered about yourself because you and God are one.

"For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and ourselves as your servants for Jesus' sake" (2 Corinthians 4:5 RV). When you are sentimentally interested in a person you are conscious of it; when you are in love with a person you are not conscious of it because the love is deeper than consciousness and is only revealed in a crisis. When you love God you become identified with His interests in other people, and He will bring around you those He is interested in—the sinners, the mean, the ungrateful, and you will soon know by your attitude to them whether you love God. The love described in 1 Corinthians 13 is impossible unless I get to the point of white-heat love for God: "Love suffereth long, . . . seeketh not its own, . . . taketh not account of evil" (RV). The discovery of whose honour I stand for is a clear revelation of who my god is. If it is my own honour that is at stake, my self is my god. The honour in the life of a saint is the honour of Jesus. When I am met by exacting and meanness, I do not say, That hurts me; I do not know it does, because I am taken up with the pain of the Holy Ghost over the hurt to Jesus. There is no greater miracle possible for a human life than that, and it can never be imitated. Our first introduction to the miracle is the realisation that we need to have it wrought in us. To "fill up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ" (RV) is the supreme calling of a saint.

The Redemption deals not only with moral imperfections, but with every phase of self-interest. Self-interest in the spiritual domain is a demoralising force, it keeps me an individual, "all elbows"; keeps me looking after my "rag rights" and if anyone drags them aside I am mortally offended. The only way self-interest can be effaced is by presenting my body to God as a "living sacrifice," that is, self-interest must be put to death, by my most deliberate wish, or it will never be put to death. As long as self-interest is there and has to be suppressed, the Holy Spirit will reveal that something else has to go. I may be under conscious apprehension for discipleship, and I go through the form of being willing to give up my right to myself, but the Holy Spirit reveals that I have never really done it—"I will spend myself for Jesus," "I will do everything He asks me to do"—but not one thing, and it is the only thing I can do, viz., give up my right to myself to Him. There is only one crisis and the majority of us have never been through it, we are brought up to it, and kick back every time, until God by His engineering brings us right to the one issue, "Deny for ever your right to yourself." It is a stubborn detachment, yielding bit by bit, not because the character is noble, but because it is despicably proud.

"Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice." Selfsacrifice may be simply a disease of the nerves, a morbid self-consciousness which is the obverse of intense selfishness. Our Lord never confounds selfishness and self. Whenever I make self-sacrifice the aim and end of my life, I become a traitor to Jesus; instead of placing Him as my lodestar I place Him as an example, One who helps me to sacrifice myself. I am not saved to sacrifice; I am saved to fulfil my destiny in Christ. It is much easier to sacrifice myself, to efface myself, than to do God's will in His way. Self-sacrifice is always eager to do things and then say, "That is God's will." There was no trace in our Lord's life of self-sacrifice being the idea—"For their sakes I sanctify Myself." These words give the key to the saint's life; I have deliberately to give God my self, my self which He has sanctified, that He might use me as His hands and His feet.

RIGHTEOUSNESS

Righteousness means "living and acting according to right and justice."

1. Righteousness of God

I will make mention of Thy righteousness, even of Thine only. (Psalm 71:16)

The righteousness of God must be the foundation of our life as Christians. It is easy to talk about God's righteousness and His justice, but too often we banish the revelation of His character into the limbo of the abstract; we accept His righteousness as a theological doctrine, but we do not believe it practically. In the Bible "theological" and "practical" stand for the same thing. The greatest demand God makes of us is to believe that He is righteous when everything that happens goes against that faith.

(a) In Creation

And God saw everything that He had made, and, behold, it was very good. (Genesis 1:31)

What God created is a satisfaction to God, but to no one less than God, consequently until we come to know Him there is a great deal in His creation we shrug our shoulders over; but when we come to understand God we are as delighted with His creation as He is Himself. A child enjoys what God created, everything is wonderful to him. When the Son of God came on to this earth "His own things" (RV

^{7.} all elbows: independent; exclusive; self-sufficient.

^{8.} rag rights: self-righteousness; see Isaiah 64:6.

mg) recognised Him—"Who then is this, that He commandeth even the winds and the water, and they obey Him?" (Luke 8:25 RV).

The constructed world of man is not the created world of God. The sin of man has polluted the material earth, and it will have to go through a cremation, out of which will emerge "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." That which God created can never finally be bad. God demands of His children the practical belief that all that stands for Creation is upheld by His righteousness. The One who made the world and who upholds all things by the word of His power, is the One who keeps His saints.

(b) In History (Isaiah 40:12-17)

Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance. (Isaiah 40:15)

Another demand God makes of His children is that they believe not only that He is not bewildered by the confused hubbub of the nations, but that He is the abiding Factor in the hubbub. The Bible conception of the righteousness of God at work in history is that of fire, intense blazing heat, in the flames of which the nations are seen to be tumbling into confusion as well as rising out of it. If you look at history through the medium of rational common-sense you do not see God, you see only confusion and the passions of men, and, at times, what we are seeing just now, the frantic contortions of war. Sin has not only infected material things, it is the common inheritance of the human race; but the time is coming when it will be impossible for sin to be on the earth any more, when the very material earth will be shot through with the glory of God's presence, and when man himself will be "conformed to the image of His Son." Meantime there is the conclusion and the agony which make men say, "There is no God." These things are the evidence that God is.

(c) In Providence

He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness. . . . (Psalm 23:3)

The word "righteousness" in this connection is instructive; it means that God leads His children "in the rightness," no matter in what providential dispensation they live, whether in personal cataclysms or national cataclysms. We have to accept God's purpose in the providential jumble of things, then He leads us in the paths of righteousness wherever we are placed, and continually restores our souls.

2. Righteousness before God

By His knowledge shall My righteous Servant justify many: and He shall bear their iniquities. (Isaiah 53:11 RV)

(a) In Christ

The wisdom of God is shown in that Jesus Christ is "made unto us . . . righteousness" (1 Corinthians 1:30). The meaning of the Redemption is that God can justify the unjust and remain righteous, and He does it through the Cross of Christ. It is not a thing to reason out, but a thing to have resolute faith in. I do not come before God and say, "Lord, I have prayed; I have obeyed": I stand before God without the tiniest excuse, and discover that Christ, the Just, suffered for the unjust; the Righteous for the unrighteous.

(b) In Concentration

"If ye keep My commandments, ye shall abide in My love" (John 15:10). Righteousness cannot be imitated. If I abide in Jesus, His righteousness is done through me. Nowadays the tendency is to switch away from abiding in Christ; it is—"Do this," and "Do that." You cannot do anything at all that does not become, in the rugged language of Isaiah, "as filthy rags," no matter how right it looks, if it is divorced from abiding in Christ. Haul yourself up a hundred times a day till you learn to abide. Ask yourself—Is this work, this activity, deflecting me from abiding in Christ? If so, then fling it overboard.

(c) In Communion

"... not having a righteousness of mine own, ... but that which is through faith in Christ" (Philippians 3:9 RV). To experience the loss of my own goodness is to enter into communion with God through Christ. Paul saw what it would mean—I must give up my right to myself, give up my boasted goodness; he estimated it exactly, and not only estimated it, but experienced it—"for whom I have suffered the loss of all things... that I may... be found in Him" (RV). If I try to be right, it is a sure sign I am wrong; the only way to be right is by stopping the humbug of trying to be and remaining steadfast in faith in Jesus Christ. "He that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as He is righteous."

GOD'S METHODS

Go ye, and stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this Life. Acts 5:20 (RV)

1. The Men of God's Method

We have to find out God's methods, not try to get God to approve our methods.

Go ye . . .

It would be an interesting study to trace out what our Lord taught in connection with the verb "to go."

The men with God's "go" in them have these three characteristics—a saving experience; the evidence of supernatural power at work, and the spiritual efficacy of success in prayer.

Unless a preacher has had a saving experience, been set free from some "prison," he has not got God's "go" in him. If this test were put to every preacher and Sunday School teacher—Has Jesus Christ done anything for you you could not do for yourself? has He set you free from the "prison" of a wrong disposition? Set you free from the tyranny of nerves? from pride? from a wrong mental outlook?—the result straightaway would be to thin the number of those who are at work for God, and those that were left would be the men of God's method. The man of God's method says—"I know I have been delivered by God; I don't know how He did it, but I know He did it."

How strongly spiritual efficacy in prayer is marked all through the Acts of the Apostles! It is the sign Jesus Christ gives that we believe in Him (see John 14:12–13). Prayer that is not saturated in the New Testament is apt to be based on human earnestness. God never hears prayer because a man is in earnest; He hears and answers prayer that is on the right platform—we have "boldness to enter into the holy place by the blood of Jesus" (RV), and by no other way. It is not our agony and our distress, but our childlike confidence in God.

2. The Manner of God's Men and stand . . .

It takes a tremendously strong man to stand—"and having done all, to stand" (Ephesians 6:13). Not fight, but stand. The men of God's method are never hustled, never enticed, they won't allow themselves to be deflected, they know what they are there for. "None of these things move me," said Paul, "you may execrate me, or praise me, it makes no difference; I am here for only one thing—to fulfil the ministry which I received from the Lord Jesus."

and speak to the people . . .

How few of us do speak! When we talk to a soul, we talk like a tract! When Jesus talked to the woman of Samaria He did not use a prescribed form of address, He told her Divine truth and made her aware of her sin. When He talked to the disciples on the road to Emmaus, their hearts burned within them. The characteristic of the man of God's method is that he can speak to a sinner and win him before the sinner knows where he is; he can speak to saints and make their hearts burn.

in the temple . . .

—i.e., the place where God ought to be honoured. The danger is to want to go into the show business. No man with his eyes on God ever went outside "the temple" to bear his testimony.

3. The Message of God's Men

... all the words of this Life.

—i.e., Jesus Christ, proclaim Him. Don't preach salvation; don't preach holiness; don't preach the baptism of the Holy Ghost; preach Jesus Christ and everything else will take its right place. The sanctification of the Bible never fixes you on the fact that you are delivered from sin: it fixes you on the One who is Sanctification. Sanctification is not something Jesus Christ gives me, it is Himself in me.

"And how shall they preach, except they be sent?" How am I to know I am sent? The only way we can be sent is by God deliberately lifting us out of any sense of fitness in ourselves; I realise I am utterly weak and powerless, and that if I am to be of any use for God, He must do it in me all the time. We talk about our utter unfitness, our overwhelming sense of unsuitability, but are they mere sentimental phrases, or the humble certainty of our souls? The Spirit of God allows us to scrutinise ourselves sufficiently till we know what Paul means when he said, "we . . . are weak in Him." The worker whose work tells for God is the one who realises what God has done in him.

"My word . . . shall not return unto Me void"—that is the perennial, unbreakable hope of the preacher; he knows the power of the word of God and he builds his confidence nowhere else but in God.

BLESSING AND BEATITUDE

Matthew 5:43-48

Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect. Matthew 5:48 (RV)

By "Blessing" we mean the great magnanimous overflowing of the heart of God to all people, whether they be good, bad, or indifferent. By "Beatitude" we mean the overflowing benediction of a life that is rightly related to God—character that lives within the frontiers where God makes Himself known. So many people think they must be right with God because He blesses them. This needs correcting, and we must get rightly related to the wonderful truths hidden in these verses.

1. The Good

In the first place, God's blessings fall, like His rain, on evil and good alike. The great blessings of health, genius, prosperity, all come from His overflowing grace, and not from the condition of the character of the recipients. For instance, if health were a sign that a man is right with God, we should lose all distinction as to what a good character is, for many bad men enjoy good health. It is humbling and illuminating to catch the profound meaning of the Apostle Paul's statement to Timothy: "If we believe not, yet He abideth faithful: He cannot deny Himself" (2 Timothy 2:13). All man's unfaithfulness, all man's sins,

... alters God no more Than our dimmed eyes can quench the stars in heaven.

There is no element of the vindictive in our great and good God. But to come more personally home to our individual spiritual lives. We get a sweet, allembracing sense and feeling of God's blessing in certain atmospheres—in churches, with certain people, in Camp meetings, in times of revival; but if we mistake that sweet sense of the blessing of God for being right with God, great harm is done to our spiritual character.

2. The Better

Or take it in the more subtle matter of private prayer. How many of us pray simply in order to feel the presence and blessing of God upon us, and mistake that for the answer? Such prayer is not transaction with God at all, it is in its final analysis an indulgence of the finer sensibilities. This idea of prayer gives rise to the thought of the present day that prayer is merely a reflex action on the life which quietens it, whereas

New Testament praying is getting hold of a personal God through the opening up of a channel whereby God can deal directly with those for whom we pray. Such prayer humbles the soul always, and gives the life the benediction of being rightly related to God.
