This aspect of things throws a great light on what is often a perplexity. At the outset of the Christian career the blessing of God is so sensible, so marked by feeling, that the Christian walks more by sight than by faith, God's caressings seem to be so upon him. But there comes a time in the life of the disciple when God withdraws these comforts, when joy in God is not what it used to be, when His presence is not so sweet, and when a strange dull grey (if one might say so) seems to fall over the spiritual life. For a time the soul gets into deep darkness; then he begins to realise that God is but teaching him the difference between walking in the light of blessings and entering into the experience of the Divine beatitudes; or, to put it more simply, God is taking the soul out of the realm of religious feeling and emotion into the realm of faith. "But without faith it is impossible to please Him."

3. The Best

One of the great marks that the blessings of God are being rightly used is that they lead us to repentance. "... not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?" Repentance in the New Testament sense means just the difference between a sanctified and an unsanctified soul. The only repentant man in the New Testament sense is the holy man, one who is rightly related to God by the Atonement of Jesus and has become a written epistle, "known and read of all men." How many of us have allowed the goodness of God to lead us to repentance? Or are we so enjoying the blessings of God, like the beasts of the field, taking them as our due and not seeing behind them the great loving hand of God, whose heart is overflowing in tremendous love?

Another practical issue: if God makes no difference in His external blessings to men, who are we that we should? One of the chief stagnating influences on spiritual character is this reasoning—"Do they deserve it?" How much do any of us deserve the blessings of God? Let us ever remember that to enter into the experience of God's beatitudes is to find ourselves able to show to our fellow-men the same unmerited mercy, the same unselfish, unmerited love that God has shown to us. Jesus told His disciples that this is indeed the test: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses" (RV).

God grant we may realise more and more, with enlightened eyes and chastened hearts, "the blessing of the LORD, it maketh rich, and toil addeth nothing thereto" (RV mg); and may this external blessing of God surround the heart that has been made pure by the blood of the Lamb, that both together may witness in a life that is a blessing and a beatitude.

THE KINGDOM

1. The Prevailing Characteristics of the Kingdom

Who shall ascend into the hill of the LORD? And who shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart. . . . (Psalm 24:3–4 RV)

The prevailing characteristics of the Kingdom Jesus represents are moral characteristics. There must be an alteration in me before I can be in the Kingdom, or the Kingdom can be in me, and that can only be by means of an inner crisis, viz., regeneration. There must be something outside me which will alter me on the inside. Forgiveness is a miracle, because in forgiving a man God imparts to him the power to be exactly the opposite of what he has been: God transmutes the sinner who sinned into the saint who does not sin, consequently the only true repentant man is the holy man.

To-day we are in danger of being caught up by the lure of wrong roads to the Kingdom—"Things must be worked out at once, we cannot wait, there must be results immediately." If to benefit mankind is the whole purpose of God, quicker results could be produced apart from the Redemption, because the Redemption works appallingly slowly, according to our human standards. If all that is necessary is this hand-to-mouth business there is no need for all the teaching of Jesus, no need for patience until God's purposes are fully worked out. To look on the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount as referring to a future dispensation is to rob the Cross of its meaning. If Jesus Christ cannot alter me now, so that the alteration shows externally in my home life, in my business life, when is He going to alter me? What is going to transform me so that I can love my enemies, can pray for those that persecute me, if I cannot do it now? No suffering or discipline on my part will make me any different; the only thing that will make me different is being born again into the Kingdom of God. To look for death to make me holy is to make out that death, which is "the last enemy," is going to do what the Atonement cannot do. The Cross of Christ alone makes me holy, and it does so the second I am willing to let it.

The Kingdom of God is latent in the Cross, but don't spiritualise the Kingdom into vagueness, and don't materialise it into non-spirituality. The essential foundation of the Kingdom is the spiritual aspect, and this is apt to be forgotten. In this dispensation the emphasis is on the Kingdom within, but in another dispensation there is to be an external manifestation of the Kingdom. To say that the Kingdom is going to be brought in by the earth being swept clean through wars and cataclysms is not true; you cannot introduce the Kingdom in that way, it is impossible. Nothing can bring in the Kingdom saving the Redemption, which works in personal lives through the Cross and in no other way.

2. The Power of the Kingdom in Present Circumstances (Luke 22:24–27)

And He said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles have lordship over them; . . . but ye shall not be so. (Luke 22:25–26 RV)

Naturally we think of a kingdom as being ruled and governed by superiors—"The kings of the Gentiles have lordship over them; . . . but ye shall not be so." The central meaning of the Kingdom is my personal relationship to my Lord. These words of Jesus reveal His mind regarding the Kingdom, and they also reveal the disciples' mind—"And there arose also a contention among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest" (RV). If the disciples' idea is the right one, our Lord's idea of the Kingdom is an impossibility. We have to interpret Jesus Christ's idea of the Kingdom from His nature, not from our own. One individual set over against another must insist on obedience, but in the Kingdom Jesus represents that is never the way to freedom; in His Kingdom absolute obedience is the only way to personal emancipation. Our use of the word "obedience" is that of an inferior submitting to a superior, in the New Testament the word is used as between equals (cf. Hebrews 5:8). Our Lord never takes means to make us obey Him; when we do obey it is through a oneness of spirit with Him. The reason things are found difficult is because we base everything on our natural independence, our natural morality and uprightness. Our Lord bases His Kingdom on none of these things but on the poverty of spirit which is willing to receive—"Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven" (Matthew 5:3). In the Higher Christian Life Movements⁹ the Cross as the centre of the heart of God and as the centre of our personal experience, is apt to be ignored; it is, "You must pray more, you must give up this and that"; anything but the need to be born again into a totally new kingdom and to enter into a oneness of spirit with Jesus Christ. We have so insisted on the individual aspect that we have lost sight of the oneness Jesus prayed for—"that they may be one, even as We are one." It is a fundamental relationship, and we don't think on fundamental lines, but only on the line of practical efficiency.

The Christian life is stamped all through with impossibility, human nature cannot come anywhere near what Jesus Christ demands, and any rational being facing His demands honestly, says, "It can't be done, apart from a miracle." Exactly. In our modern conception of Christianity there is no miracle, the emphasis is put not on the regenerating power of the Cross, but on individual consecrations, individual fasting and prayer, individual devotion. It is simply individualism veneered over with religious phraseology. There is no need for the Cross of Christ for all that kind of thing. The only entrance into the Kingdom is the Cross; then when we are born again by means of the Cross and are in the Kingdom of God, we have to live out its laws. It is not that we take the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount and try to live them out literally, but that as we abide in Christ we live out its precepts unconsciously. Being in the Kingdom, we are fit now to live out its laws, and we obey Jesus Christ's commands because of our love for Him.

Too often the Kingdom is thought of as something to which Jesus is not at all necessary. He does not stand in relation to it where the New Testament places Him, viz., as King. It is not natural to us to think of Jesus as King; in the New Testament it is the most natural view. We are much more inclined to think of Him in a sentimental way as Saviour and sympathising Friend; in the New Testament there is something much more vigorous. He is Saviour in order that He might be King. If I am going to be of any use to Jesus Christ I must spend a great deal of time with Him as my Lord and Master, then He can reveal Himself through me to others. Christianity is not being spent in the service of men, but being spent out in the service of my Lord. What we hear about to-day is devotion to causes; the Kingdom can never be established externally as a cause.

"My kingdom is not of this world . . ." (John 18:36)—"You can have no notion of My kingdom from the kingdoms of this world." It is the duty of any upright man to oppose wrong, but Jesus Christ did not come to enable us to do that. He came to put within us a new spirit, to make us members of His Kingdom while we are in this world—not against the world, and not of it, but in the world, exhibiting an otherworldly spirit. The popular evangelical idea that we are to be against the world in the sense of a pitched battle with it, is simply an expression of the spirit of the world dressed up in a religious guise. Our Lord was not against the world in that sense; He submitted to its providential order of tyranny, but there was no compromise in His spirit, and the model of the Christian's spirit is Christ Himself. There is a religious cult which courts persecution. Jesus said, "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, . . . for My sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad." It is by our spiritual choices that we maintain a right relation to the world. When a man ceases conflicting the world by spiritual choices, he succumbs to it and becomes part of the world that needs saving instead of being a saviour in the world.

DON'T THINK NOW-TAKE THE ROAD

If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself.... Matthew 16:24 (RV)

1. Recognise, but Don't Stop to Reckon

And Peter went down from the boat, and walked upon the waters, to come to Jesus. (Matthew 14:29 RV)

We are all inclined to recognise the right thing and reckon with the wrong; inclined to recognise the real thing and reckon with the actual. In the incident recorded here the wind was actually boisterous, the water was actually water, the waves were actually high, but Peter did not see any of these at first, he did not reckon with them, he simply stepped straight out in recognition of his Master and walked on the water to go to Jesus. Then he began to reckon with actual things, with the wind and the waves, and down he went instantly. Why could not our Lord have kept Peter at the bottom of the water as well as on the top of it? Only the recognition of Jesus Christ as Lord could have made either possible. If I recognise Jesus as my Lord, I have no business with where He engineers my circumstances. If He gives me the pictorial thrill of enabling me to do something ostensibly wonderful, and then suddenly alters my circumstances and puts me, so to speak, at the bottom of the ocean, what right have I to be afraid? If Jesus Christ can keep me walking on the top of the waves, He can keep me underneath them.

God often does things in order to teach us whether we are denying ourselves or only thinking about doing it. We step right out in faith on God over some matter, then self-consideration enters in and down we go. We have to learn how to rely completely on God; let actual things be what they may, we have to keep recognising Him. Whether it be walking on top of the waves or underneath them makes not the slightest difference to God, therefore it need make no difference to us. The actual things are but immediately we look at them we cannot recognise Jesus, we are overwhelmed, and the rebuke comes—"O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" Jesus Christ is educating us to the point of giving up our right to ourselves. How can I empty myself of my self? By not thinking any more about it, but by taking the road. Recognise Jesus as Lord, obey Him, and let the next thing happen as He wills.

2. Recklessly Don't Stop to Realise

So when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his coat about him (for he was naked), and cast himself into the sea. (John 21:7 RV)

If you debate for a second when God has spoken, it is all up. Never try and realise more clearly and say, "I wonder if that is the Lord?" "I wonder if He did speak?" Be reckless immediately, fling it all out to Him, and you will suddenly find it is the Lord, and that He has nourishment already prepared for you; and you may also find that He has a very searching thing to say to you. God always speaks quietly, and if you try to catch an echo of His voice you will never hear it. When the moment comes and you hear, as it were from someone else, "It is the Lord," recklessly abandon immediately. If you say, "I thought it was God's voice," but you did not recklessly obey, you will find it has gone and you will have to wait now. When God's voice will come you do not know, but whenever the realisation of God comes again in the faintest way imaginable, recklessly abandon. It is only by abandon that you find Him. Never make the mistake of thinking that God speaks unmistakably clearly; He speaks in the gentlest of whispers, so unutterably quiet that it is not easy to hear Him. We only realise His voice more clearly by recklessness.

3. Relinquish, and Don't Stop to Reason

Verily, verily I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdest thyself, ... but when thou shalt be old, ... another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not. (John 21:18)

Over and over again our convictions have to be abandoned until we learn that Jesus Christ is to be All in all. When God's word becomes clear by His Spirit making it living, relinquish your own notions instantly. You have nothing whatever to do with what sits on you, all you have to do is to relinquish and be sat on—"I know how to be abased" (RV) said the Apostle Paul. Relinquish in accordance with what Jesus Christ says; don't stop to reason, but take everything that transpires as being absolutely in accordance with God's order.

One of the last things we learn is that God engineers our circumstances; we do not believe He does, we say we do. Never look for second causes; if you do, you will go wrong. We blunder when we look at circumstances as secondary, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose."

Don't say—"Thy will be done," but see it is done.

MATTERS FOR MATURITY

Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me His prisoner: but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God. 2 Timothy 1:8

This is the message of a veteran soldier to a young soldier. Timothy was constitutionally timid, and Paul had a marvellous solicitude for him, but he never allowed him to give way to self-pity. "Be instant in season, out of season," whether you feel like it or not; whether you feel well or ill, keep at it. It is a fight which means no rest till it issues in a glorious victory for God.

1. Danger of Dereliction

Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord . . .

In Revelation 19:10 these striking words occur: "for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy," and the purpose of the antagonist of God is to destroy that testimony (see Revelation 12:17). The testimony of Jesus to Himself is being explained away to-day, men and women are swerving from the Truth. The power and vigour of the Holy Spirit in lives must go further than the threshold of the experience of being right with God; bit by bit the battle for God and for His truth must be pushed, and the only way to push it is by an experimental belief in Jesus Christ's testimony regarding Himself.

If we have been allowing the silting influence of modern tendencies to overcome us, God grant we may rouse ourselves and get back again to the moral and spiritual fighting trim, free from moral nervousness and spiritual timidity, trusting in God and going steadfastly on. A derelict ship is a danger to other ships, and a derelict in the pulpit, or in the Sunday school, or in the pew, is a desperately dangerous thing to souls on their way through life.

2. Dread of Disloyalty nor of me His prisoner . . .

Nowadays loyalty to the saints is scarcely ever thought of. The Apostle Paul is telling Timothy to be loyal to him, and he uses a remarkable phrase—"His prisoner," and yet Paul is always talking about liberty! Remaining true to Paul would be a real peril to Timothy's personal liberty. Have some of us changed our Church membership because we no longer want to know certain "out and out" people? Do we welcome the "out and out" saint as we used to, or are we a little bit shocked when we hear the straight testimony of the saints who are "in prison"?

Some saints have to be ugly in the eyes of the world for a time. The Holy Spirit makes us understand that in spiritual things it is the good that is the enemy of the best every time. Jesus said "If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee." Off goes the right arm, out comes the right eye, and for a while the life is maimed; but slowly and surely God will bring it round to the perfected relationship. When you are in contact with saints in the maimed stage, be loyal to them. Remember the way you yourself had to go.

Intercessory prayer is the test of our loyalty. When a man stands out as a "prisoner of the Lord," the saints must garrison him by prayer. If Satan can make a servant of God bow his head in shame because of "the testimony of Jesus," or because he knows a "prisoner of Jesus," he will soon succeed in making him disloyal to Christianity altogether.

3. Discipline of Disfavour but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel . . .

The Gospel of God awakens an intense craving in men and an equally intense resentment, and the tendency is to do away with the resentment. Jesus Christ claims that He can remove the disposition of sin from every man; the only testimony worthy of the Name of Jesus is that He can make a sinner a saint. The most marvellous testimony to the Gospel is a holy man, one whose living experience reveals what God can do.

4. Divine Dynamic

... according to the power of God.

What is the purpose of God? That the historic Jesus should reproduce Himself by the might of His Atonement in every one who will "close" with Him, i.e., deny his right to himself and follow Him. It is not that Jesus Christ puts a permeating influence into a man; He stands outside a man and brings him to a crisis, and by means of that crisis reproduces Himself in him (see Galatians 4:19). Thank God, it is not only Timothy who had this marvellous counsel of Paul's, we have it too; and it is not only the counsel of Paul, but of the grand order of heroes right up to the present day, men and women standing for one thing, "the testimony of our Lord."

NEW CREATION

Wherefore if any man is in Christ, he is a new creature ["there is a new creation," RV mg]. 2 Corinthians 5:17

All God's direct acts are creative.

Forsyth

The creation performed by God is what the Apostle Paul calls it—a new creation; it is not the bringing out of something already there, but the creating of something which was never there before, an entirely new creation, as unlike anything born in a man by nature as Jesus Christ is unlike anything produced by the human race throughout its history.

1. Invasion

My little children, of whom I am again in travail until Christ be formed in you . . . (Galatians 4:19 RV)

We all become Christians by a miracle, not by a verdict and not by an inference, but by a decision and an obedience.

Forsyth

It is impossible for a man to become a Christian by natural reasoning effort, which is simply the working of his own mind; a man becomes a Christian by there being wrought in him "a new creation," and that new creation is the forming of the Son of God in him. "The old things are passed away; behold, they are become new" (RV): God does not discard the old, He creates that in the old which makes the old and the new one. By "old things" Paul means much more than "the old man," he means everything that was our life as natural men before we were re-created in spirit by Christ; it involves a radical alteration until the whole life is Christ-centred and you can't be roused to any other interest. Only one thing brings a man there, and that is the deliberate faith in God which will enable Him to perform the "new creation" by means of the Redemption of Jesus.

"The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Most High shall overshadow thee: wherefore also that which is to be born shall be called holy, the Son of God" (Luke 1:35 RV). What happened to Mary, the mother of our Lord, historically in the conception of the Son of God has its counterpart in what takes place in every born-again soul. Mary represents the natural individual life which must be sacrificed in order that it may be transfigured into an expression of the real life of the Son of God. The individual life is the husk of the personal life, and because of the forming of the Son of God in me, the sword must go through it. ("Yea and a sword shall pierce through thine own soul," [Luke 2:35 RV]). It is the natural virtues that battle, not sin as we think of sin, but pride, egotism, my temperament, my affinities; all that has to have the sword run clean through it mercilessly by God, and if I stick to my natural inheritance the sword must go through me. The new creation is based on the new man in Christ (see Ephesians 4:24), not on the natural gifts of the first Adam. The natural life is not obliterated, when I come to God in the abandon of faith He creates supernaturally on the basis of His own nature, and the Spirit of God makes me see to it that my natural life is lived in accordance with the new life formed in me. Our Lord can never be spoken of in terms of the natural virtues, they don't apply to Him, and they don't apply to the new man in Christ; all that is taken knowledge of in those possessed by Christ is that they have been with Jesus, the dominating personality that tells is that of the Son of God, it is His life that is being manifested.

2. Incorporation

... Christ in you, the hope of glory. (Colossians 1:27)

... as God was in Christ historically, so He is in me now by the miracle of new birth. As God was manifest in Christ, so He is manifest in "Christ in me," which is the hope of glory, being the ultimate outer external manifestation of that inner hidden miracle.

Forsyth

Christ in me means ultimately "me" altogether in Christ. That is, Christ in me means that I am willing to let Christ grow in me. The obverse side of Christ in me is me in Christ; it is an incorporation. "That ye may be strengthened with power through His Spirit in the inward man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts through faith . . ." (Ephesians 3:16-17 RV)—how much of "me" is there? The only thing of "me" is "the inward man," all the rest is Christ. If my inward man is possessed and strengthened by the Spirit it means not only am I in union with Christ, but I am identical with Christ. Our Lord was not one with His Father by a union: the Father and the Son were identical. "I and My Father are one," said Jesus. The Apostle Paul mentions this identical oneness when he says, "I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me" (RV). What sounds mystical and impractical to anyone not born again is a glorious reality to the saint.

Our Lord always speaks in terms of personality, never of individuality, and His conception of personality is His own oneness with the Father. The characteristic of my natural individual life is the opposite, it is all independence and pride, not only independent naturally, but independent of God. Christ never triumphs in my moral triumphs because they exalt that which is my inheritance by nature—that, God can only bless through sacrifice and death. The corrupting of the natural virtues is painful because it is a blow at the deepest inheritance of the natural man. The evidence of the new creation in me is that I submit to God more and more easily, surrender to Him more and more readily. "For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure" (Philippians 2:13). God does the supernatural re-creating and the setting free of the will, I have to do the doing. It is not that I get a new point of view—you can get a new point of view through study, but it is the same "you"; when Jesus Christ gets possession of me it is another "me"; you may search for the old "me," but you cannot find it. It is not that I consecrate my natural individual life to God, I immolate it, offer it up to God. The real burnt offering God requires is "a living sacrifice," the giving back to God the best He has given me that it might be His and mine for ever.

All this is involved in "becoming a Christian by a miracle." "If only I could understand it all, it would make me a Christian"—you can only be made a Christian by a miracle, and you can stop at any point you like. "I don't intend to go through this"—and you don't need to; but it will be a terrific awakening when you see Jesus and realise that you prevented His getting glory in your life.

3. Identification

And ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's. (1 Corinthians 3:23)

"Christ is God's" in this connection is the return back to the original with that which the original never had. The original had the intention; the return back of Christ to God is the expression of the intention, and the expression of the intention is sinless humanity. That miraculous purpose is enacted in every individual saint's life who is obedient to God because what is true of the universal is true of the particular.

Forsyth

When a man follows up by obedience the performing of the new creation in him, he enters into identification with Christ. Identification is not experienceable; it is infinitely more fundamental than experience. We enter into identification by the door of obedience, but the oneness is a revelation. "Every spirit which confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God"—confess, that is, say with every corpuscle of your blood that Christ is come in your flesh and is being manifested. "And every spirit which confesseth not Jesus is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist . . ." (1 John 4:2-3 RV). We all have that in us which will connect us with the spirit of antichrist if we do not go through identification with Jesus in His death so that the life we now live proves that "old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." The miracle of becoming a Christian through the Redemption is that the Spirit of God bears us into His Kingdom, and then these things begin to be unveiled to us for our instruction; the danger is lest we refuse to "press on unto full growth" (RV mg).

The new creation is not something you can hold in your hand and say, "What a wonderful thing God has done for me"; the one indelible sign of the new creation is "My peace." It is never safe to trust in manifestations and experiences; where the miracle of the new creation touches the shores of our individual lives it is always on the line of "My peace I give unto you." That is the meaning of, "And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ."

SPASMODIC SPIRITUALITY

Your goodness is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away. Hosea 6:4

Fits of goodness may often be seen in a base character, indicating a capacity to be noble; but apart from that, all kinds of natures are conscious of moments of unusual power and insight and excellence. These moments are wonderful and delightful episodes in both intellectual and spiritual life, yet they nearly always leave the nature with a reaction. Such emotion is no more real goodness than a dewdrop is a diamond or a meteor a star. It is a perilous thing, eminently perilous, to experience "flashes struck from midnight" and not allow God to readjust the life to the level of that moment of insight. The spirituality the Spirit of God gives is entirely free from these passing episodes, the whole life is in keeping, its characteristic being persistence, which is the only sign of reality. A bird flies persistently and easily because the air is its domain and its world. A legal Christian is one who is trying to live in a rarer world than is natural to him. Our Lord said "If therefore the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed," i.e., free from the inside, born from above (RV mg), lifted into another world where there is no strenuous effort to live in a world not natural to us, but where we can soar continually higher and higher because we are in the natural domain of spiritual life. One might almost say that our every effort to be good and our every effort to be holy is a sure sign that we are neither good nor holy. A child makes no effort to be the daughter or son of its parents, and a child of God born of the Spirit makes no conscious effort to be good or to be holy; but just as a child trying to imitate someone else's mother is bound to fail, so the natural man trying to imitate God is bound to fail. When the child imitates his own mother he can do it with success, because the inherent nature of the child is like the mother; and when a Christian tries to imitate Jesus Christ he can do it easily because the Spirit of Jesus is in him. The strenuous effort of the saint is not to produce holiness, but to express in every circumstance the life of Jesus which is imparted to him by the Holy Ghost. That is Paul's meaning in Philippians 2: "Work out your own salvation. . . . For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure" (Philippians 2:12–13).

The mourning of Jehovah over Ephraim and Judah is very wistful—"O Ephraim, what shall I do unto thee? O Judah, what shall I do unto thee?" I wonder if any of us are causing the same wistful yearning to the Holy Ghost? if He has to mourn over us and say "your goodness is as a morning cloud"? "Therefore," says God, "have I hewed them by the prophets; I have slain them by the words of My mouth." The first thing that will bring an unnatural natural man to his senses before God is the word of God spoken by a man of God. I mean by an un-natural natural man, one who is trying by prayer, by effort, by Bible reading, to be a saint. In the Epistle to the Galatians Paul is writing to immature Christians, and he says, "Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?" (Galatians 4:16). They have been disenchanted by the rugged truth of the apostle's words—"Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?"(Galatians 3:3). They had been reverting back to ritual and observances, trying to perfect themselves "by the flesh." Oh the emancipation of the life that has realised the fulness of God which dwells in Christ Jesus! Then it is not only natural, but easy and right to "mount up with wings as eagles." No Christian has any right to be un-enthusiastic. "And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit." It is easy for many men to obey the first part of this injunction while they disobey the latter. We must be thrilled, and if human nature does not get its thrills from the right place, it will take them from the wrong. Enthusiasm means, to use the phrase of a German mystic, "intoxicated with God," filled to overflowing with God; no spasmodic spirituality about us, but a perennial source of freshness, making us a delight to our Lord, and a channel of blessing to all with whom we come in contact. The sad and serious lapsing of many immature Christians who have not got the life more abundant, must cause many a heartpang to our Lord. Are we "filled with the Spirit"? or is our experience one that manages to draw out of God enough grace to last the day, and at its close we say with a sigh, if we remember, "Oh well, thank God I have got through the day"? Could you imagine anything more utterly unlike the superabounding life of God the New Testament talks about? is that anything like the superconquering life Paul talks about? People say they are tired of life; no man was ever tired of life; the truth is that we are tired of being half dead while we are alive. What we need is to be transfigured by the incoming of a great and new life.

Again the old message of the Psalms and the new message of the New Testament meet together—"All my fresh springs shall be in Thee" (Psalm 87:7 PBV): "Of His fulness have all we received" (John 1:16). Are all the channels of our life open to God? are the channels of our body open for Divine health to come to us through the resurrection life of Jesus? are our hearts and imaginations and spirits open for the Divine insight and comfort and sanctification of God to come to us through the Atonement? If not, we are not only starving our own lives, but are a hindrance to the lives of others and a grief to our Lord.

God grant that His Spirit may bring everyone of us to the place where the secret is learned and enjoyed that His strength is made perfect in our weakness. The realisation that my strength is always a hindrance to God's supply of life is a great eye-opener. A man who has genius is apt to rely on his genius rather than on God. A man who has money is apt to rely on money instead of God. So many of us trust in what we have got in the way of possessions instead of entirely in God. All these sources of strength are sources of double weakness. But when we realise that our true life is "hid with Christ in God," that we are "complete in Him," in whom "dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily," then His strength is radiantly manifested in our mortal flesh. God grant that every "spasmodic" saint may turn into a real sanctified saint, whose light and life and love shine more and more unto the perfect day.

THE BIBLE

The revelation of God's will has been brought down to us in words. The Bible is not a book containing communications from God, it is God's revelation of Himself, in the interests of grace; God's giving of Himself in the limitation of words. The Bible is not a faery romance to beguile us for a while from the sordid realities of life, it is the Divine complement of the laws of Nature, of Conscience and of Humanity, it introduces us to a new universe of revelation facts not known to unregenerate commonsense. The only Exegete of these facts is the Holy Spirit, and in the degree of our reception, recognition, and reliance on the Holy Spirit will be our understanding. Facts in the natural domain have to be accepted, and facts in the revelation domain have to be accepted; our explanation of facts is always open to alteration, but you cannot alter facts. The Bible does not simply explain to us the greatest number of facts, it is the only ground of understanding all the facts, that is, it puts into the hand of the Spirit-born the key to the explanation of all mysteries.

In dealing with revelation facts the aim is not to produce "specialists," but to make practical workers in the Bible domain. The research of specialists, both in the natural world and in the revelation world, is of the very greatest value, but remember, it is essential to be born of the Spirit before we can enter the domain of Bible revelation. The only method of Bible study is to "prove all things," not by intellect, but by personal experience.

The Context of the Bible is our Lord Jesus Christ, and personal relationship to Him. The words of God and The Word of God stand together; to separate them is to render both powerless. Any expounder of the words of God is liable to go off at a tangent if he or she does not remember this stern undeviating standard of exposition, viz., that no individual experience is of the remotest value unless it is up to the standard of The Word of God.

The Bible not only tests experience, it tests truth. "I am . . . the Truth," said Jesus. Just as the words of God and The Word of God are the counterpart of each other, so the commandments of our Lord and the conduct of His saints are the counterpart of each other; if they are not, then we are "none of His." The test of Truth is the revelation of the Son of God in me, not as a Divine anticipation, but as a delightful activity now. It is perilously possible to praise our Lord as Saviour and Sanctifier, and yet cunningly blind our own hearts to the necessity of His manifesting in our mortal flesh His peculiar salvation and sanctification.

The Bible tests all experience, all truth, all authority, by our Lord Himself and our relationship to Him personally; it is the confession of conduct. "... he that confesseth Me before men," said Jesus; the word "confess" means literally that every bit of my bodily life speaks the same truth as our Lord exhibited in the flesh. It is this scriptural scrutiny that reveals the superb standard of the grace of God: Christian experience is possible only when it is the product of the supernatural grace of God at work in our hearts.

SYMPATHISER OR SAVIOUR?

(SEE ALSO LUKE 4:18–19, RV MG)

In some ages, as with some people, the tendency is strong to make an essential out of what is a mere accompaniment. In our day this tendency is marked in the emphasising of our Lord as a sympathiser, and the direct practical effect of this is to turn spirituality into sentimentality, and to make our Lord simply a kind brother-man. To picture Jesus Christ, never so beautifully, as One who sits down beside the brokenhearted and by expression of fellow-feeling and overflowing tenderness, enables him to be resigned and submissive to his lot, is not only thoroughly to misunderstand our Lord, but to prevent His doing what He came to do. He does come to the brokenhearted, to the captives bound by a cursed hereditary tendency, to the blind who grope for light, to the man bruised and crushed by his surroundings, but He does not come as a sympathiser—He binds up the brokenhearted, gives release to the captives, recovering of sight to the blind; He sets at liberty them that are bruised. Jesus Christ is not a mere sympathiser, He is a Saviour, and the only One,

"for neither is there any other name under heaven, that is given among men, wherein we must be saved" (RV). His sympathy is the accompaniment of the work He alone can do. Again, in Hebrews 4:15–16 ("For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities . . ."), the sympathy and fellow-feeling is merely the accompaniment of the deliverance wrought by coming to the throne of grace, and finding help in time of need.

Another accompaniment which is apt to be made an essential, and which even more fatally prevents men from finding Jesus Christ as Saviour, is the idea that He came to give us better social surroundings, to extend and improve our civilisations. That is a gross misreading of the Gospel our Lord said He was anointed to preach, and of the work He came to do. He did come to get things done—but what things? The things we cannot do! Social reform, political purity, progressive civilisation, is our work, not God's, and we must do it. If we don't, it will never be done. The reason we are so sluggish in the matter is because the work our Lord came to do has never been done in us. God has ordained that our work we must do, in the sweat of our brow, and through struggle and sacrifice we must work; and when the sanctified saints do the work God appoints them, then do God's work and man's work fit, and the mighty evolution with God at its heart moves on to all Eternity.

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He anointed Me to preach the gospel to the poor . . ." (RV mg). Thank God for the deep profound note of the glorious Gospel of God, that Jesus Christ as Saviour can justify ungodly men, can set them free from their sin; and as Sanctifier He can make them into sons and daughters of God, able to love others as God has loved them, able to show others the same unconditioned mercy He has showed them.

Jesus Christ is not a sympathiser, neither is He a social reformer, He is unique—the Saviour of the world. The Atonement is God speaking to men in heart-breaking agony and long-suffering patience that they might be reconciled to His way of salvation. Beware of dragging down the Atonement into the socialistic arena. The Church is called to deliver God's message and to be for the praise of His glory, not to be a socialistic institution under the patronage of God. "Christ also loved the church, and gave Himself up for it; . . . that He might present the church to Himself a glorious church, . . . holy and without blemish" (Ephesians 5:25, 27 RV).

PROFANING THE HOLINESS OF THE LORD

Ezekiel 36:20-29

1. The Searching of His People

. . . they profaned My holy name. (Ezekiel 36:20)

This was the characteristic of the people of God whenever they forgot whose they were and whom they served. Under the searchlight of God we realise that God's holy Name is profaned when we put before people what God's grace has wrought in us instead of God Himself. Whenever we go into work for God from any standpoint saving that of the dominance of God, we begin to patronise at once; unless we go as the bondservants of Jesus Christ we have no business to go at all. Jesus Christ became the towelgirt Servant of His own disciples. Never deal with people from the superior person's standpoint, God never blesses that; deal only by steadily presenting the Lord Jesus Christ. The characteristic of the holiness which is the outcome of the indwelling of God is a blazing truthfulness with regard to God's word, and an amazing tenderness in personal dealing.

There is only one thing to heed in Christian work, and that is God Himself and His programme.

The last thing we learn is that there is no chance happening in the saint's life, circumstances are God's, not ours, and by choosing our own way we profane God's holy Name, whatever our desire.

"... whither they went." It is possible to profane God's holy Name in our minds where no one sees but ourselves. Our feet carry us in secret and they carry us in public; they carry us into shops and into streets, into houses and into churches; God says, "You profane My holy Name, not because of the places you went into, but by the way you went into them." Scrutinise yourself, and let God search you, as He searched these people. We forget the minuteness of God's searching; He searches us right down to the inmost recesses.

2. The Sanctifying of His People

... and the heathen shall know that I am the LORD, saith the Lord GOD, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes. (Ezekiel 36:23)

Individual sanctification is one thing; collective sanctification is another; when Paul talks about attaining "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," he is not talking of individual saints, but of all the saints. It is the sanctification of God's people together that is required. When we isolate ourselves we hinder instead of further that end. Very few of us have got beyond the need for the searching which God gave these people. We are all too set on our own sanctification, forgetting that we are to be broken bread and poured-out wine for the lifting up of others who are not there yet. Individual sanctification has a world-wide benefit so long as the sanctified soul remains right with God. The sanctified soul keeps right with God by placing God's methods first, and God's methods are foolish to everyone who is not sanctified.

Verses 25–29 point out that purity in God's children is not the outcome of obedience to His law, but the result of the supernatural work of His grace. "I will cleanse you"; "I will give you a new heart"; "I will put My Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in My statutes"; "I will do it all." After sanctification the first thing is to stand, as it were, with our hand in God's while He recalls to us what we once were. The memory of sin does not come before sanctification, the memory of defects and blunders comes then, but sin is only remembered and known after sanctification, and it is by the recalling of the Holy Spirit that we remember it. In the absolute humility that is produced there is never any fear of spiritual pride, never any fear of forgetting that God sends us into work for His own glory; never any fear of being harsh or unjust to others, because God has shown us what we were, and we have realised it with shame.

ARE YOU DISCOURAGED IN DEVOTION?

Luke 18:23

1. Have You Ever Heard the Master Say a Hard Word?

And when he heard this . . .

Have you ever heard the Master say a hard word?—if you have not, I question whether you have heard Him say anything. Jesus Christ says a great deal that we listen to, but do not hear. When we do hear it, His words are amazingly hard. These words were so hard that His very disciples were staggered—"And they that heard it said, Who then can be saved?" Jesus did not seem the least solicitous that the rich young ruler should do what He told him. He made no attempt to keep him with Him, He simply said—"Sell all that thou hast, ... and come, follow Me." Our fuss over other souls is nearly always an evidence that we have not the slightest trust in God. Our Lord never made a fuss over anyone, and the reason He didn't could not have been that He was callous or indifferent, or that He was not tenderhearted, or that He did not understand every detail, but the fact remains that He did not make a fuss over anyone. He never pleaded, He never cajoled, He never entrapped; He simply spoke the sternest words mortal ears ever heard, and then let it alone. The rich young ruler was a clean, moral, fine, vigorous young man, with a desire for all that was noble and true, but he did not expect to hear what he did.

Have I ever heard a hard word of Jesus? Has He said something to me personally that I have deliberately listened to—not something I can expound or teach and say this and that about, but something I have deliberately heard Him say to me?

In all probability the rich young ruler was in a more wholesome state of mind towards Jesus than were His own disciples who had left all and followed Him, because they had left all and followed Jesus without hearing one word that He said, and at the end of three years they said, "What is this that He saith? . . . We cannot tell what He saith," and then "they all forsook Him, and fled." This man did understand what Jesus said, he heard it and sized it up from height to depth, and it broke his heart. He did not go away defiant or in unbelief, he went away sorrowful, thoroughly discouraged. He had come to Jesus full of the fire of earnest desire and the word of Jesus simply froze him. Instead of the word of Jesus producing an enthusiastic devotion, it produced a heart-breaking discouragement. And Jesus did not go after him, He did not plead with him, He let him go. I wonder what we would have done? We would have written him letters, given him little booklets, asked other people to look after him, meaning by it all to get him to retrace his steps. Jesus did not do any of that, and I will tell you why He did not—our Lord has a perfect understanding that when once His word is heard, it will bear fruit sooner or later. The terrible heartbreak is that some of us prevent its bearing fruit in actual life. We hear His word, some of us heard it months ago, years ago, we heard it distinctly and in enthusiasm—not realising exactly, as this man did, what Jesus said, but more after the manner of the disciples—we said, "Yes, I will follow." Then we began to size up what it was we heard, and instead of its producing a great alacrity and devotion, it produced discouragement, and the Lord has gone on His way. I wonder what we will say when we do make up our mind to be devoted to Him on that particular point? One thing is certain—He will never cast up anything at us, but we will be thoroughly ashamed that we actually weighed any other consideration in the balance when once we heard His word.

2. Have You Ever Been Expressionless with Sorrow?

... he was very sorrowful: for he was very rich.

The rich young ruler went away expressionless with sorrow, there was not a word to say; he did not go away defiant—neither did you, and neither did I; he went away sorrowful. It is a bad thing to go away cheerful from God. To say, "Oh yes, I will do it presently, God will bring His providence round," shows we have not understood anything. This man had not the slightest doubt in his mind as to what Jesus said, no debate as to what it meant, and it produced in him a sorrow that had not any words.

Have you ever got there? Has God's word come to you about something that is a very dear possession to you, something you are very rich in—temperament, personal affinity, relationships of heart and mind? Then you have very often been expressionless with sorrow, and you will be worse before you get to the end, and the Lord won't cajole, He won't caress, He won't go after you, He won't plead, He will simply repeat every time He meets you on that point, "If you mean what you say, these are the conditions . . ."

"Sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor." There is a general principle here and a particular reference. We are always in danger of taking the particular reference for the general principle and evading the general principle. The particular reference here is to selling material goods. The rich young ruler had deliberately to be destitute, deliberately to distribute, deliberately to discern where his treasure was, and devote himself to Jesus Christ. The principle underlying it is that I must detach myself from everything I possess. Many of us suppress our sense of property, we don't starve it, we suppress it. Undress yourself morally before God of everything that might be a possession until you are a mere conscious human being, and then give God that. That is where the battle is fought—in the domain of the will before God, it is not fought in external things at all. Is He sovereign Lord or is He not? Am I more devoted to my notion of what Jesus Christ wants than to Himself? If so, I am likely to hear one of His hard sayings that will produce sorrow in me. What Jesus says is hard, it is only easy when it comes to those who really are His disciples. Beware of allowing anything to soften a hard word of Jesus.

It is a terrible thing to see how we keep Jesus Christ waiting. We serve God, but there is a drawback, and it is that drawback which Jesus gets at by His talk when once we come to Him as this man did. We twist His words and debate about their meaning, we discuss His teachings and expound His Gospel, and all the time we leave Him absolutely alone because at the centre of our heart there is the gnawing grip of one of His hard sayings that keeps us sorrowful, and He waits till we come and lay it all down. All the time in between has been utterly wasted as far as Jesus Christ is concerned, no matter how active we have been, or how much we have been a blessing to others, because none of it has sprung from devotion to Him but from devotion to an idea.

I can be so rich in poverty, so rich in the consciousness that I am nobody, that I will never be a disciple of Jesus Christ; and I can be so rich in the consciousness that I am somebody that I will never be a disciple. Am I willing to be destitute of the sense that I am destitute? This is not the application of the principle to a rich man, but to those of us who are not rich men. Am I possessed of the possibility of riches on other lines? rich in the inheritance of a particular type of temperament, and has the hard word of Jesus come against that? The thing in you and in me that other people like and esteem and laud is the very thing that makes us unable to do what Jesus says. You cannot do it unless you are willing to reduce yourself to a mere consciousness, and then give that to Him. He is bringing you to the place of resigning yourself, not of resigning things or people, there might be a sense of the heroic about that. It is not giving up outside things, but making yourself destitute to yourself and that is where the discouragement comes in. It is not a question of being willing to go straight through, but of going straight through. Not a question of saying, "Lord, I will do it," but of doing it. There must be the reckless committal of everything to Him with no regard for the consequences.

Discouragement is disenchanted self-love, and self-love may be love of devotion to Jesus. My devotion to Jesus must altogether efface my consciousness of devotion to Him.

ONE OF GOD'S GREAT DON'TS

Fret not thyself, it tendeth only to evil-doing. Psalm 37:8 (RV)

It is so easy, we think, to "rest in the LORD," and to "wait patiently for Him," until the nest is upset; until we live, as many are living to-day, in tumult and anguish—is it possible then? If this "Don't" does not work then, it will not work at any time. Resting in the Lord does not depend upon external circumstances, but on the relationship of the life of God in me to God Himself. Fussing generally ends in sin. We imagine that a little anxiety and worry is an indication of how wise we really are; it may be an indication of how wicked we really are.

1. Don't Calculate without God

Let not your heart be troubled. (John 14:1)

When you reckon things up, bring God in as the greatest factor in your calculation. How are we to have an untroubled heart? When we are well, we express the "well-ness"; but when things are not right, when circumstances are twisted upside down, can this command work then? This "don't" of our Lord's must work in days of perplexity as well as in days of peace.

God seems to have a delightful way of upsetting things which we have calculated on without Him. We get into places and circumstances He never chose, and suddenly they are shaken and we find we have been calculating on them without God; He has not entered in as a living factor. Have we learned the wonderfully practical lesson of not calculating without God? Have we got this "don't" straight home? To take God into all our calculations is the one thing that keeps us from the possibility of worrying. According to the wisdom of this world, God seems to be haphazard. He is not calculable in His providence, He works in ways we cannot estimate. If we try to work things out in logical ways, we are apt to find that suddenly in the providence of God a great upheaval comes we had never calculated on. Be silent to the Lord. There are things about which we never speak to God, because we don't need to (cf. Deuteronomy 3:26).

Fretfulness springs from a determination to get my own way. Our Lord never worried, nor was He ever anxious, because He was not "out" to realise His own ideas, He was "out" to realise God's ideas. Have I learnt to calculate upon God as the greatest factor in my common-sense decisions? "There"—in the secret place of the Most High, under the shadow of the Almighty—"shall no evil befall thee." No plague can touch that dwellingplace, no matter what happens on the outside it remains perfectly secure.

2. Don't Calculate with the Evil in View

Love... taketh not account of the evil. (1 Corinthians 13:4–5 RV)

Apart from God, we do reckon with evil, we reason from that standpoint. To take no account of the evil does not mean we are ignorant of its existence; it means we do not take it in as a calculable factor.

A man ought to be a quiet citadel of the Holy Ghost for prayer for all nations. The one who is suffering according to God's will is the one who has "a heart at leisure from itself." The discipline of our lives goes on in external ways, and if we are not suffering according to the will of God, we will take care to let everyone know it. People's sympathy is awakened for us, and they say, "How distressing that person's circumstances are."

"Come unto Me," says Jesus, "and I will give you rest." Do Jesus Christ's words apply to me? Does He really know my circumstances? Fretting is sinful if you are a child of God. Get back to God and tell Him with shame that you have been bolstering up that stupid soul of yours with the idea that your circumstances are too much for Him. Ask Him to forgive you and say, "Lord, I take Thee into my calculation as the biggest factor NOW!"

3. Don't Calculate with To-Morrow in View

Take therefore no thought for the morrow. (Matthew 6:34)

When we take thought for the morrow, it becomes the dominating calculation of our life. Our Lord is not saying, "Take no anxious thought," but, "Don't make to-morrow the ruling factor in to-day's work." Most of us do. To-day is lived without the power God means us to have because taking thought for the morrow is the dominating calculation, not Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ is not telling us to be careless, but to be carefully careless about everything saving one thing, seeking first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness. Many of us have no time for God and His Kingdom, we are so busy seeking other things.

SIN

Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world... Romans 5:12

God intended that Adam should develop, not from evil to good, but from the natural to the spiritual, by obedience; it was to be a natural progress; but Adam stopped short, and sin entered in by his stopping short. The sin which has come down to us from Adam is not an act, but an hereditary disposition; the Bible nowhere says that a man is held responsible for having inherited a disposition in which he had no choice: the Redemption deals with sin. No man can be forgiven for a disposition, we are forgiven for acts of sin; the disposition of sin must be cleansed by the miracle of God's grace. The Son of God came to alter the basis of human life: the first Adam put it on a wrong basis, the basis of self-realisation; Jesus Christ makes the basis Redemptive. The Redemption means that God paid the price of sin. If you have never realised the impossibility of God dealing with sin on any other ground than that of the Redemption, you are living in a fool's paradise rationally.

Sin is a positive ¹⁰ thing, it is the enthronement of human independence, because man's pride must worship itself. Sin has nothing to do with circumstances or with temptation on the outside, it has to do with the bias on the inside; it is an opposing principle and has nothing to do with human nature as God constituted it. The diabolical nature of sin is that it hates God, it is not at enmity against God; it is enmity. When you get the nature of sin revealed by the Holy Spirit, you know that this phrase is not too strong—red-handed anarchy against God. None of us is conscious of this spirit of anarchy against God; the devil is the only being in whom sin is absolute, conscious anarchy. We would fly from sin in terror if we knew its nature, but it presents itself as a most desirable thing (cf. Genesis 3:6). We need never know in conscious experience that we are anarchists because we may receive the salvation of Jesus, any more than we need ever know what the human heart is like as Jesus diagnosed it if we will hand over the keeping of our heart to Him.

... that the body of sin might be destroyed. (Romans 6:6)

The Bible refers to two mystical bodies—the Body of Christ and the body of sin; the Head of the one is God, the head of the other is the devil. Sin in me is a disposition of self-sufficiency which connects me with the body of sin; the connection is not in my human nature, but in my claim to my right to myself, which is the essence of sin—I'll do what I like. When I am born again I am willing to go to the crucifixion of that claim. Through the Redemption we not only have deliverance from the disposition of sin which is in us, but severance from the body of sin to which we are connected by our "old man"; that is, we are absolutely and completely delivered from sin in disposition and in domination—"Being then made free from sin . . ."

For by the law is the knowledge of sin. (Romans 3:20)

Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law. (Romans 7:7)

Once conscience begins to be aroused it is aroused more and more till it reaches the terrible conviction that I am responsible before God for the breaking of His law; I know that God cannot forgive me and remain God; if He did I should have a clearer sense of justice than He has. There is nothing in my spirit to deliver me from sin, I am powerless—"sold under sin." Conviction of sin brings a man to this hopeless, helpless condition; until he gets there the Cross of Christ has no meaning for him.

It is of the mercy of God that no man is convicted of sin before he is born again; we are convicted of sins in order to be born again, then the indwelling Holy Spirit convicts us of sin. If God gave us conviction of sin apart from a knowledge of His Redemption, we would be driven insane. When conviction of what sin is in the sight of God comes home to me, language cannot support the strain of the verbal expression of its enormity; the only word that expresses it is "Calvary." If I see sin apart from the Cross, suicide seems the only fool's way out.

... being justified freely by His grace. (Romans 3:24)

But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound. (Romans 5:20)

Justification means two things—first, that God's law is just, and second, that every sinner is unjust; therefore if God is to justify a man He can only do it by vindicating the law, and by destroying the sinner out of him. We put it that Jesus Christ came to save sinners; He did not say so, He said, "I came to call sinners to repentance" (see Matthew 9:13). This phrase, "God loves the man, but hates the sinner," although not scriptural, conveys the idea. God dare not love the sinner. When God saves a sinner, profoundly speaking, and only profoundly speaking, He does not save the sinner: He saves the man who is a sinner by removing the sinner out of him. When once a man receives the humiliating conviction that he has broken God's law, and is willing to accept on God's terms the gift of forgiveness and of a new life, he will find he is brought to the place where he can live a holy life in order to vindicate God in forgiving him. This is evangelical repentance, and it is fundamentally different from the reformation which springs from remorse awakened by an overwhelming self-respect. A sinner can never stand in the presence of God; there is no justification whatever for sin in His presence, that is why a man convicted of sin has such a desperate time, he realises with the Psalmist—"Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in Thy sight." Beware of attempting to deal with sin apart from a complete reliance on the Redemption, and when you see men sinning, remember, your heart should be filled with compassion, because if you have ever had the slightest dose of conviction of sin yourself, you will know what awaits them when the recognition of sin comes home.

For He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin. . . .

Bear in mind that what makes Christ's glory is His severity, i.e., His love for God's holy law rather than His love for man: Jesus Christ stood on God's side against man. On the Cross men crucified the Son of God—and God forgave them while they did it. It is blasphemy to make little of sin. The final issue in every life is—God must kill sin in me, or sin will kill God out of me. If the Gospel is made to mean merely that "it is better being good than bad," men like to listen to it, but immediately it shows me that sin, self-realisation, self-interest, must be put to death, I resent it. If God is to be just, that is what must happen. It is the shallowest nonsense that makes people say, "God will forgive us because He is love"; once we are convicted of sin we never talk like that again. The love of God is spelt on the Cross and nowhere else; there His conscience is satisfied. God deals with every bit of sin in the light of the purest justice.

... that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him. (2 Corinthians 5:21)

The effect of being justified by God's grace is that He begins to entrust us with the realisation of what sin is. It is the saint who knows what sin is; it is the man who has been identified with the death of Jesus who begins to get the first inkling of what sin is, because the only Being who knows what sin is, is not the sinner, but God. The only One who knows what the elemental human heart is like, is not the sinner, but Jesus Christ. It takes the last reach of the Atonement—the revelation of the perfections of Jesus as He is "made unto us... sanctification," to make us know what sin is, because sin is what He faced on Calvary. We are not always in the condition to understand the Cross, but it is of vital importance that we let God bring us at times where every commonplace mood is stripped off, and we take the shoes from off our feet and stand alone for one moment while God spells out to us the A B C of what the Cross of Christ means.

For in that He died, He died unto sin once. . . . Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin. (Romans 6:10–11)

The only one who can reckon he is "dead indeed unto sin" is the one who has been through identification with the death of Jesus; when he has been through that moral transaction he will find he is enabled to live according to it; but if I try the "reckoning" business without having gone through identification with the death of Jesus, I shall find myself deceived; there is no reality. When I can say, "I have been crucified with Christ" (RV), a new page of consciousness opens before me, I find there are new powers in me, I am able now to fulfil the commands of God, able to do what I never could do before, I am free from the old bondage, the old limitations; and the gateway to this new life is the death of Jesus.

This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief. (1 Timothy 1:15)

Before you were convicted of sin you thought the saints exaggerated in what they said about themselves; when you have been convicted of sin by the Holy Spirit you will never think it possible to exaggerate. Knowledge of what sin is is evidence that I am delivered from it; ignorance of what sin on the inside is is evidence that I have never been touched by the Atonement. Knowledge of what sin is is in inverse ratio to its presence. To mistake conscious freedom from sin for having been delivered from sin through the Atonement is to make the grand error of the Christian life. "But if we walk in the light," says John, "as He is in the light"—if we walk there, with nothing folded up, no humbug, no pretence, no end of our own to serve, if we walk there, then comes the most amazing revelation God ever gave to man—"the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin," not to our consciousness; the conscious part is walking in the light, as God is in the light.

THE GREATEST EVENT IN THE WORLD

The Lord Jesus Is Coming Again

In Bible revelation there is always a Coming Age, a Coming Day, a Coming Prophet, a Coming One—a perennial Coming.

When Thought is young, life looks simple, so does History, and man's explanation is correspondingly simple and glib. "Evolution" is the name given in our day to this young and ill-considered outlook—it is all a simple and obvious method of growth and development; to talk about the Fall is absurd, and any conception that does not recognise that the world is getting better, is discarded. Evolution is the characteristic of man's work, never of God's. God works by creation. When we infer God's methods from man's, we go wrong; we continually exalt our methods and say that is how God works.

But when Thought has passed its romantic days and has been made to face Life as it is, and History as it has been recorded, and the human soul in all its tragic features and its triumphs, it is staggered, for all these forces are wild and untameable. This way of Thought then becomes dim and perilous, and the human spirit cries out, "Oh that I knew where I might find Him! that I might come even to His seat!"

The Bible revelation presents a basis of thinking quite other. Epochs and civilisations appear after a time to be flung on the scrap-heap by God in a strangely careless manner. The remarkable thing in the record of the Ages that have been, and that are, and that are going to be, is that each Age ends in apparent disaster. The saint alone knows by spiritual intuition that "He doeth all things well," he knows that God reigns, and that the clouds are but the dust of his Father's feet and he has no need to fear. He feels assured that these catastrophic occurrences are but incidental, and that a higher peace and a purer character are to be the permanent result. He knows that "this same Jesus," who trod this earth with naked feet, "and wrought with human hands the creeds of creeds," is coming again, visibly and blessedly coming to earth again, when the petition will be fulfilled, "Thy kingdom come." All that men have ever dreamed of Utopias and of Golden Ages will fade into foolish fancies beside the wonder of that blessed Age, that blessed period of Christ's reign among men. We have to remain stedfastly certain in Him, not go out of Him to see when He is coming; it is to be prophetic living as well as prophetic study. To the saint everything is instinct with the purpose of God. History is fulfilling prophecy all the time.

ENCHANTED BUT UNCHANGED

Ezekiel 33:30-32

The thirty-third chapter of Ezekiel is a striking chapter in the career of the prophet. Hitherto it has been denunciation, but now that the great terror has fallen on Jerusalem (see Ezekiel 33:21–22), Ezekiel comes with a new note, and it is with this new note the people are enchanted, but, he says, they remain unchanged.

1. Pose but Not Penitence

And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as My people, and they hear thy words, but do them not. (Ezekiel 33:31 RV)

There are many to-day who like to hear the word of God spoken straightly and ruggedly, they listen to, and are delighted with, the stern truth about holiness, about the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and deliverance from sin; they say to one another, "Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the LORD." They take up a pose of religion, but they are not penitent; they change the truth God requires into a mere attitude. God not only requires us to have a right attitude to Him, He requires us to allow His truth to so react in us that we are actively related to Him. These people flocked to Ezekiel like disciples to a teacher, they looked exactly like God's children, the difference was not on the outside but on the inside, and it would take the penetration of God to see it; but it was all pose, they were not real. The real attitude of sin in the heart towards God is that of being without God; it is pride, the worship of myself, that is the great atheistic fact in human life.

I wonder if any of us are among the enchanted but unchanged crowd? We follow any man or woman who speaks the truth of God; in fact, we are so enchanted that we say, "If you come and hear this man or woman, you will hear the word of God." But has it ever altered us into an active, living relationship with God, or is it altogether pose? If any of us have got the pose of the people of God but are not real, may God deal with us until He brings us into a right relationship to Himself through the Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Sympathetic but Sinful

For with their mouth they shew much love, but their heart goeth after their gain. (Ezekiel 33:31 RV)

They had the right pose, the right religious attitude, but they had no desire to be changed—"they hear thy words, but do them not." "They come and listen to you as to one who is amazingly skilful in playing on an instrument, but they don't do what you say," says God; they are enraptured, but still sinful. Penitence has never struck them, the awakening of God's Spirit has never gone straight home.

This attitude is spreading amongst us to-day amazingly, people are enchanted with the truth, sympathetic with the truth of God, but remaining in sin. "Repentance" is not in their vocabulary, only regret; there is no confession of sin, only admitting. Religion is turned into education, and the Christian life is made to mean a happy life instead of a new life.

Has God been convicting us of spiritual pose before Him? Have we taken the great passion of the Atonement and made it simply mean that we must have a right attitude to God? We have to have much more than a right attitude; we have to get into an active, living relation to God, the inspiration of which is a great deep true penitence. Have we forgotten all about penitence these days? Has penitence ever rung down to our very soul, or have we only known regret? Have we ever known what it is to confess our sin, to unfold our life before God until there is nothing folded up, and God's penetrating truth has its way? If not, we shall find, as these verses reveal, that it is perilously easy to have amazing sympathy with God's truth and remain in sin.

3. Public Conformity and Private Criticism

Then said I, Ah Lord GOD! they say of me, Is he not a speaker of parables? (Ezekiel 20:49 RV)

The people indulged in unfriendly criticism, they heard the message, but their criticism of the speaker was made an excuse for not obeying the truth. "Why, he talks in parables! It is all so enigmatical and puzzling." This is not superficial criticism, but the deep subtlety of the hearers trying to get out of obeying God's truth because of the form in which it is put—"It is too puzzling," consequently they exonerate themselves from obeying it because it is put so obscurely, so confusingly.

I do not think there is any distress to equal the distress expressed by the prophet here, viz., that people are enchanted by the truth of God, but unchanged by it. The great difficulty to many a worker and handmaid of the Lord is this very thing—"and they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as My people, they hear thy words, but do them not," says God. You go to God over and over again about it, you examine your own soul and say, "I know I spoke the truth of God." In our work for God we have on the one hand the enchanted but unchanged crowd, and on the other the indifferent crowd. Have you ever realised that God challenges the saints to a tremendous conflict, the conflict of believing the Gospel in the face of an indifferent world? It is easy to say we believe in God as long as we remain in the little world we choose to live in; but get out into the great world of facts, the noisy world where people are absolutely indifferent to you, where your message is nothing more than a crazy tale belonging to a bygone age, can you believe God there? Christian Science is a specimen of the way people garrison themselves around within a little world of their own. The teaching of Christian Science makes its followers deny that there are such things as sin and disease and death—they are all imagination; and they shut themselves in a little world of their own and say, "It is so easy to believe in the goodness of God"; of course it is! But let the house of their creed be taken and battered in by the gales of God; let them be driven out of the little enclosures of their preconceived notions, out into the big indifferent world, driven clean out to face the facts of sin and disease and death, and where does their belief in the goodness of God go? It cannot stand the test. The marvellous thing is that Jesus Christ prayed, not that we should be taken out of the world, but that we should be kept from evil.

God saves us and sanctifies us and places us in the circumstances He chooses, and whether it is among the enchanted but unchanged crowd, or the indifferent crowd, we have to face them, not with dismay, but with the determination to obey God, and by our faith in God to so conflict against the indifference and the sin that we produce the character that glorifies God, and the result will be that God will gain amazing glory to His own Name; enchantment will be changed by transactions with God into a changed life, and through penitence the pose will become the real life hid with Christ in God, and we shall be built up on our most holy faith.

SHOWERS OF BLESSING

For as the rain cometh down and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, and giveth seed to the sower and bread to the eater; so shall My word be that goeth forth out of My mouth: it shall not return unto Me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it. Isaiah 55:10–11 (RV)

". . . giveth seed to the sower." God's word is as a seed. The "seed-thought" idea is one that preachers and evangelists need to remember. We imagine we have to plough the field, sow the seed, reap the grain, bind it into sheaves, put it through the threshing machine, make the bread—all in one discourse. "For herein is the saying true, One soweth, and another reapeth" said our Lord (RV). Let each one be true to the calling given him by God. The truth is we don't believe God can do His work without us. We are so anxious about the word, so anxious about the people who have accepted the word; we need not be, if we have preached what is a word of God it is not our business to apply it, the Holy Spirit will apply it. Our duty is to sow the word, see that it is the word of God we preach, and not "huckster" it with other things, and God says it will prosper in the thing whereto He sends it. In some cases it will be a savour of life unto life, in others a savour of death unto death; but rest assured that no individual and no community is ever the same after listening to the word of God, it profoundly alters life. The force and power of a word of God will work and work, and bring forth fruit after many days. Hence the necessity of revising much of what we preach and what we say in meetings. God has not said that the relating of my experiences, of my insight into the truth, will not return to Him void; He says "My word . . . shall not return unto Me void." Every temptation to exalt the human, human experiences, human interests and blessings, will fall short; the only thing that prospers in God's hands is His own word.

"As the rain cometh down . . . from heaven, . . . so shall My word be." Thank God for the sweet and radiant aspect of the falling of rain from heaven, after a time of drought it is almost impossible to describe its beauty, so when a word of God comes to a soul after a time of difficulty and perplexity, it is almost impossible to tell the ineffable sweetness of that word as it comes with the unction of the Holy Ghost.

IS HE REALLY LORD?

Jesus knowing... that He was come from God,... He riseth from supper,... and took a towel,... and began to wash the disciples' feet. John 13:3–5

Jesus Christ riddles us from all unreality. What He did shocks all affectation, pious fraud, religious pretence, sanctimoniousness, and religiosity always.

1. What Do You Know about Yourself?

Jesus knowing . . . that He was come from God . . .

Do you know you have received the Holy Spirit, know you are a child of God—are you going to be greater than Jesus Christ? Are you going to be disdainful?—"What a humiliating thing to do!" Jesus, knowing Who He was, took a towel and washed the disciples' feet; and He says, "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." To shout "Hallelujah" is humbug unless it is genuine.

Jesus never tells you to shout "Hallelujah": He says— "Do as I have done to you." How much long-suffering mercy has God shown you?

2. Where Do You Place Yourself?

He riseth from supper, . . . and took a towel . . .

Do you regard yourself as a highly respectable, dignified Christian? Are you religiously self-important, placing yourself where you fancy you ought to be placed, in stately surroundings? If so, you are not following Jesus Christ's example. If you cannot do ordinary things and live as nobody anywhere, you are not a saint. Jesus left heaven and lived nowhere of any importance all His earthly life. There is a religiosity that is inspired by the devil, that gathers its skirts around it and says, "No, I cannot be in ordinary places, or in ordinary avocations; I am a servant of God." Then you will be found nowhere but in the very commonest of common places. You say you are called to be a missionary, a minister, a Christian worker: you are called to be a disciple of Jesus Christ, other things are etceteras. Jesus Christ did not move among transfigured things; He moved amongst prosaic, un-noteworthy things, among the most common-place things imaginable, and it was those things that He transfigured; He lived amongst them as the Servant of men, and He says, "If you are My disciple, you will do the same."

3. What Do You Do with Yourself?

... and began to wash the disciples' feet.

Water, a basin, feet, a towel—there is nothing Divine about those things, they are the most ordinary, common-place things one can conceive. The Lord of heaven and earth washed the feet of His disciples, He did it Himself; one of them protested, but it made no difference. "So after He... was set down again, He said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you? ... I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." When the testimony and the "Hallelujah" are followed by the following of His steps in example, then comes the tremendous flow of the power of God wherever you go.

"I will make the place of My feet glorious" among the poor, the devil-possessed, the mean, 11 the decrepit, the selfish, the sinful, the misunderstanding—that is where Jesus went, and that is exactly where He will take you if you are His disciple.

"I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." Your lips have called Him "Master," and "Lord," are you prepared to take this lesson home to yourself? What do you know about yourself? You know you have received the Holy Spirit, you know you are a child of God; then let God's providence place you where He wills, don't put yourself in special conditions. Where do you place yourself? In the common round and trivial tasks of ordinary life supper times and ordinary people, with no pretence about it. What do you do with yourself? Exactly what Jesus did for you. He came to your house, He found your bodily temple a very unkempt and disgraceful place to come into, but He came into it and cleaned it up and is keeping it clean; now He says, "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet."

THE STAND OF THE SAINTS

Ephesians 6:11-20

Put on the whole armour of God. . . . And, having done all, to stand. Ephesians 6:11, 13

Paul is writing from prison; he knows all about the Roman soldier whose armour he is describing, for he was chained to one of them. "I am an ambassador in chains" (RV) he says.

These verses are not a picture of how to fight, but of how not to fight. If you have not put on the armour, you will have to fight; but having put on the whole armour of God, then "stand," says Paul. There are times when God's servants are sent out to attack, to storm the citadel, but the counsel given here is as to how we are to hold the position which has been gained. We need to learn this conservation of energy, "having done all, to stand," manifesting the full power of God.

"For we wrestle not against flesh and blood"—if we do, we are "out of it"; our warfare is against "the spiritual hosts of wickedness" (RV) which the world does not see. We are apt to forget that the enemy is unseen and that he is supernatural (cf. Daniel 10:12—13). "Don't make any mistake," says Paul, "you are not wrestling against flesh and blood, you are wrestling against tremendous powers you will never be able to withstand unless you put on the whole armour of God. When you see men doing terrible things, remember you are not wrestling against them, they are the cat's-paw of the rulers of the darkness of this world." We are to be taken up with a much more difficult wrestling, viz., the wrestling against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places which prevent us from seeing God. If Satan in his malice and cunning can slander God to His own children, he will do it because that is his whole aim. Our wrestling is to be against the thoughts suggested to our mind which press down on us and make us say, "What is the good of asking God to bring peace to a brokenhearted woman? of asking God to sustain people whose lives are ruined?" If I try to describe to my own heart a bereaved home and let the sorrow of it weigh with me, instantly my faith in God is gone;

^{11.} mean: ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

I am so overcome with sympathy and fellow-feeling for them that my prayer is nothing more than a wail of sympathy before God. The telepathic influence of my mind on another, whether I speak or not, is so subtle that the prince of this world will use it to prevent my getting hold of God; whereas if I remain confident in God I lift the weight off lives in a way I shall never realise till I stand before Him. We have to pray that the enemy shall not exact upon the hearts and minds of God's children and make them slander Him by worry and anxiety. As the Lord's remembrancers we are to hold off the exactings of Satan, not add to them.

Do I expect God to answer prayer? The first thing that will stagger our faith in God is the false sentiment arising out of a sympathetic apprehension of the difficulties. "Peter therefore was kept in the prison: but prayer was made earnestly of the church unto God for him" (RV): the church prayed, and God did the impossible thing, and Peter was delivered. We have to pray with our eyes on God, not on the difficulties.

"Praying always... for all saints." It is not always a time of triumph; there are not only times of taking strongholds by storm, but times when spiritual darkness falls, when the great powers in the heavenlies are at work, when no one understands the wiles of Satan but God; at such times we have to stand steadily shoulder to shoulder for God. How often the Spirit of God emphasises the "together-ness" of the saints!

"And for me," says Paul. Prayer is God's ordained way, the insignificant way of prayer.

SOLIDARITY OF SIN

Luke 11:21-22 (RV)

"Solidarity"—a consolidation or oneness of interests.

I mean by "sin," not sin in a particular sense, but in the big general sense, viz., a violation or neglect of the moral law. God's Book all through shows a wonderful discrimination as to the nature of sin; it reveals that there is in the threefold aspect of sin—the world, the flesh and the devil—a oneness of interest with the prince of this world. Paul refers to the same thing, the supernatural inspiration of sin, in Ephesians 6:12: "For our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world-rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places" (RV). We have to beware of the flood of teaching abroad which makes out that sin is a disease, a defect in the finite; in the final analysis, it is red-handed rebellion against God.

Our Lord makes it clear in this parable that "the strong man" is Satan, he is the prince of this world, and he is "fully armed" (RV). The "strong man" idea is the one that appeals to men, the strong man physically, morally, strong in every way; the kingdoms of men are to be founded on strong men and the weakest are to go to the wall. ¹² History proves, however, that it is the strongest that go to the wall, not the weakest.

When the strong man fully armed guardeth his own court . . . (RV)

Satan guards on two sides—he guards from the breaking out into external sins, and from the incursion of the Spirit of God. It is not that a man guards himself, it is Satan guarding him; nothing is allowed to come into his court to disturb it. When men go into external sins and upset their life, Satan knows perfectly well that they will want a Saviour, and as long as he can keep men in peace and unity and harmony apart from God, he will do it. The greatest number of men are moral, not immoral; a clean moral life which is sufficient for itself apart from God that is the evidence of the guarding of Satan, and we all know as workers for God the difficulty, the almost insuperable difficulty, there is in presenting the Gospel to a good-living worldling, not because his mind is obtuse or because he is insensitive, but because he is supernaturally guarded by a "fully armed strong man."

his goods [i.e., the souls of men] are in peace . . .

Psalm 73 gives a picture of the souls of men as guarded by Satan: "They are not in trouble as other men.... Their eyes stand out with fatness: they have more than heart could wish." It is necessary to keep in mind that this is the Bible view of the man of the world, and our Lord's parable is an amazing analogy. The analogy generally presented is that the worldling is miserable, but no one could be described as being "in peace" who had not got his heart's desire; he is satisfied with the world as it is, satisfied with the morality he has got. According to our Lord that kind of peace is no sign of being right with God. We talk glibly about Jesus being "the Prince of Peace," but when He comes into the world that is peaceably ruled by Satan, He comes to send a sword, not peace.

but when a stronger than he shall come upon him . . .

Satan is overcome not in a battle, but by the easy might of a power greater than his own coming upon him, and that power is none other than our Lord Himself. Every now and again when you look at life from a certain angle it seems as if evil and wrong and legalised iniquity are having it all their own way and you feel that everything must go to pieces; but it doesn't, around it is the sovereignty of God, "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further." Blessed be the Name of God, evil shall not ultimately triumph! Let evil do its worst, let the arrogance of self-interested iniquity in all shapes and forms surge as it may, but "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision." The Spirit of God shatters every power of the world, the flesh and the devil, every power of sin and the domination of Satan. "The stronger than he" is Our Lord Himself. The power of Jesus rests on His holiness. No man ever successfully contends with Satan saving in the power of the Highest. We can open men's eyes by the power of the Spirit, but not all the opening of men's eyes will ever accomplish what the Spirit accomplishes, because He leads us to the Highest, our Lord Himself, and enables us to realise that it is He who has overcome.

... he taketh from him his whole armour wherein he trusted.

Satan is not partially overcome, he is absolutely overcome, every bit of his armour wherein he trusted is taken from him. The presence of Jesus means the total expulsion of Satan. When we are born again the Holy Spirit brings to us the realisation of what Jesus Christ has done, and the great emancipating point of personal experience is not that we have power to overcome, but that He has overcome; then the Holy Spirit instructs us all along the line how we can successfully battle against the encroachments of Satan. When by God's grace we enter into the amazing liberty of salvation and sanctification, then comes the responsibility of walking in the light, and as we keep in the light we are able to identify ourselves with Jesus Christ's victory in such a way that it is manifested in us; but this depends on our keeping in the light.

In Luke 11:24–26 Our Lord shows that a moral victory may be realised, emancipating and definite, a man recognises it, he is proud of the victory gained, and Satan recognises it too; but in that condition it is almost impossible to bring him anywhere near Jesus. To use a moral victory aright a man ought eagerly to ask for the Holy Spirit to come in, for He will bring the presence of the One who is stronger than Satan. Unless a moral victory in a man's heart means that Jesus has got right of way there, he will find that what He says is true, "the last state of that man becometh worse than the first" (RV). A man may for a shorter or longer period be master of himself, but sooner or later his will must bow to a power greater than himself.

We have to develop a saintly character by fight. Jesus Christ fits us to be overcomers. Through the forces that are against him God is making a finer type of man than the first Adam, a man more worthy to be His son. That is the meaning of His marvellous Redemption. Everything that Satan and sin have marred is going to be reconstructed and readjusted.

THINKING

... being ready always to give answer to every man that asketh you a reason concerning the hope that is in you. 1 Peter 3:15 (RV)

To give "a reason concerning the hope that is in you" is not at all the same thing as convincing by reasonable argument why that hope is in us. The work of the Spirit of God in us transcends reason, but never contradicts it, and when a Christian says "the reason I am so-and-so is because I have received the Holy Spirit," or, "I have received from God something which has made this possible," it does not contradict reason, it transcends it, and is an answer concerning the hope that is in you. The line we are continually apt to be caught by is that of argumentative reasoning out why we are what we are; we can never do that, but we can always say why the hope is in us.

Reason is the faculty of mind by which man draws conclusions. Every man is always striving after a true expression of what he is. When a man is born again, his personality becomes alive to God as the Source of inspiration. Paul's words, "I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me" (RV), are the expression of the only worthy rationalism.

The great snare is to make reason work in the circle of our experience instead of in the circle of God. As long as we use the image of our own salvation, our experience, the image of our feelings, or answers to prayer, we shall never begin to understand what Paul meant when he said, "Christ liveth in me." The exercise of man's essential reason is drawing on God as the source of life.

Those of us who have never had visions or ecstasies ought to be very thankful. Visions, or any emotions at all, are the greatest snare imaginable to spiritual life, because we are apt to build these things round our reasoning and go no further. Over and over again we find sanctified people stagnate, they do not go back and they do not go on; they get stiller and stiller, and muddier and muddier—spiritually, not morally—until ultimately there comes a sort of scum over the spiritual life, and you wonder what is the matter with them. They are still true to God, still true to their testimony, but they have never exercised the God-given reason in them and got beyond the image of experiences and gone on to draw their life from God, which transcends all we call experience. Never forget that the Almighty is a great deal bigger than our experience of Him; that the Lord Jesus Christ is a great deal bigger than our experience of Him. People won't go through the labour of thinking, consequently snares get hold of them, and remember, thinking is a tremendous labour. We have to labour to bring "every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ" (RV).

NOW ARE YOU SAFEGUARDED?

Hold Thou me up, and I shall be safe. Psalm 119:117

"Kept by the power of God"—therefore you are all right now. There is no other time than now with God, no past and no future. Is your life safeguarded? If it is not, you will go under no matter what your experience is. In the Bible the men who fell, fell on their strong points, not on their weak ones, because on their strong points they were unguarded.

1. Can You See the Highest?

He sent from on high, He took me; He drew me out of many waters. (Psalm 18:16 RV; see also Ephesians 2:6; Colossians 3:2)

The Lord Jesus Christ is the Highest. Is there anyone higher to you than He is? Your life is never safeguarded until Jesus is seen to be the Highest. Past experience will not keep you, neither will deliverance from sin; the only safeguarding power is the Highest. If there is a breath of confidence anywhere else, there will be disaster, and it is by the mercy of God that you are allowed to stumble, or be pain-smitten, until you learn that He does it all—He keeps you from stumbling (RV), He raises you up and keeps you up, He sends from above and delivers you.

Whenever there is a complication in your circumstances, do nothing until you see the Highest, not sometimes, but always (cf. Isaiah 1:10). Can you see the Lord in your thinking? If not, suspend your judgement until you can. Can you see the face of Jesus in your affections? If not, restrain them until you can. Can you see God in your circumstances? If not, do nothing until you can. Our Lord can trust anything to the man or woman who sees Him.

"Set your affection on things above," i.e., gather in your stray impulses and fix them. The spiritual life is not impulsive; we are impulsive when we are not spiritual. In every experience the safeguard is the Lord Himself, and He was not impulsive. The one thing Jesus always checked was impulse. Impulse has to be trained and turned into intuition by discipline.

Is your mind set on Jesus Christ, or have you only a principle at stake? The great simplicity of the Christian life is the relationship to the Highest. Reckless confidence in God is of far more value than personal holiness, if personal holiness is looked upon as an end in itself. When once you take any one of the great works of God as an end, or any one of the truths which depend on Jesus Christ, as the truth, you will go wrong, you are outside the guard of God. The safeguard is the Highest—"I am . . . the Truth." "I, if I be lifted up . . ." Allow nothing to take you away from Jesus Himself, and all other phases of truth will take their right place.

2. Are You Strengthened from the Highest?

Thou hast enlarged my steps under me, and my feet have not slipped. (Psalm 18:36 RV; see also Ephesians 6:15)

When first we experience the grace of God, we have the feeling that if ever we should become what Jesus Christ wants us to be, He would have to take us straight to Heaven! But when by God's grace we get there, we find we are not on a perilous mountain peak, but on a broad plateau, with any amount of room to walk—as safe and as eternal as the hills. "Thou hast enlarged my steps under me." The great note of strength is to "walk and not faint"; to "mount up with wings" is exceptional. Everywhere your foot treads; at home or abroad, should bring a preparation of the gospel of peace. Sometimes when you put down a prepared foot for God it is anything but peace! It is disturbance and upset, but that is the way God prepares for the coming of His peace. Jesus is the Prince of Peace, yet He said, "I came not to send peace, but a sword."

Are you strengthened from above mentally, physically, morally, spiritually, and "circumstantially"? Do you know how to draw on the resurrection life of Jesus? The guidance in work for God is to notice where you are exhausted without recuperation. We take on a tremendous amount of stuff which we call work for God, and God puts the sentence of death on it for we are exhausted by it without being recuperated, because our strength is drawn from somewhere other than the Highest. The sign that what we are doing is God's work is that we know the supernatural recuperation. Are we strong enough to be abject failures in the eyes of the world, or are we set upon success? Our work for God is not of any value saving as it develops us; the one thing of value in God's sight is our relationship to Jesus Christ. The branch knows nothing about its fruit, it only knows the pruningknife (see John 15:2). "Am I a blessing?" No, certainly not, if you are looking at the outflow. Keep rightly related to the Highest, and out of you will flow "rivers of living water."

3. Are You Succoured by the Highest?

Comfort ye, comfort ye My people, saith your God. (Isaiah 40:1; see also Philippians 2:1-2)

The things that discourage and hurt us show from whence we get our succour. Jesus Christ was never discouraged because He was succoured by the Highest. Until a worker knows the succour of God he is in danger of becoming a stumbling-block to other souls. If we are not being succoured by the Highest, of what use can we be to folks who are crushed by sorrows of which we know nothing? "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit," broken beyond any patching up, but— "He hath sent Me to bind up the broken-hearted." The heart which has been bound up and succoured by the Lord Jesus Christ will never be caught in the train of self-interest, there is no selfishness left in it. "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." That is the most powerful thing God can do for us. The great note of the life which is comforted by God is-"For my Lord I live; by my Lord I am strengthened, and in my Lord I am succoured."

FRONTIERS OF THE WORKER'S LIFE

2 Corinthians 11:3

There must be two centres to our mental life as workers: the first is personal faith in Jesus Christ; the second, personal reliance on the human reason that God made. Most of us think from one centre only, the centre of human reason, consequently all that Jesus Christ stands for beyond the reach of human reason is ignored. "I fear," says Paul, "lest . . . your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." Beware of making simple what the Bible does not. The line of our simplicity is in Christ—"I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." The way the simplicity that is in Christ is corrupted is by trying to live according to a statement made by men's heads. It must be the relationship of a child all through (see Matthew 11:25). To be able to state explicitly in words what you know by faith is an impossibility; if you can state it in words, it is not faith.

The way the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety was by enticing her away from personal faith in God to depend on her reason alone. Confusion comes when we are consistent to our convictions instead of to Christ. The error of the modern standard is that it begins at the wrong end, viz., with human reason. How much do we understand? The conceit of modern life is that it does understand. It reconstructs human society—and leaves out rebellion against God. It reconstructs the world by human sympathy—and leaves out love for wrong. "Canst thou by searching find out God?" (Job 11:7). We must be prepared to be led, and the way we come to an understanding is by the relationship of our personal life to the Person of Jesus Christ, then bit by bit we begin to understand.

Never have the idea that you are going to persuade men to believe in God; you can persuade them of His standard. You have to force an issue of will; but remember, along with your faithful preaching comes a thing you cannot intellectually state, the working of the Spirit of God (see John 3:8). The thing that staggers the worker is that men will not believe. How can they believe, when every spring of life is impure? The great need is to have a channel through which the grace of God can come to men and do something in their unconscious life, then slowly as that breaks into the conscious life there will come an expression of belief, because they see Jesus; but the way they see Him is through the worker who is a sacramental personality (see Acts 26:18). Christian workers rarely face men in this way. You cannot argue men into coming to Jesus, or socialise them into coming; only one thing will do it, and that is the power of the Gospel drawing men by the constraint of God's grace.

The centre of life and of thinking for the Christian worker is the Person of Jesus Christ. We get deadly respectable when we face only the problems we have been used to facing; but if we will obey the Holy Spirit He will bring us to face other problems, and as we face them through personal relationship to Jesus Christ we shall go forth with courage, confident that whether it be in the domains of heathendom or in our own land, Jesus Christ is never nonplussed, never worsted.

"I AM THE DOOR" John 10:9

1. The Condition of Daily Salvation

By Me if any man enter in, he shall be saved . . .

This is a picture of the life we are to live as God's children—entering in by our Lord, who is the Door, not once for all, but every day, for everything. Is there trouble in the physical domain? enter in by the Door and be saved. Trouble in mental matters? enter in and be saved. A thousand and one things make up life as it is and in them all we have to learn to enter in by the Door. Entering in, in the Name of Jesus, is the condition of daily salvation, not salvation from sin only, but a salvation that keeps us manifestly the Lord's sheep.

Are you experiencing daily salvation, or are you shut out from Jesus Christ just now in your bodily life, in your mind, in your circumstances? is there any fog, any darkness, any weariness, any trouble? Every day there are things that seem to shut the way up, but you can always enter in by the Door and experience salvation. In the East it is the body of the shepherd himself that is the door of the fold.

2. The Condition of Daily Sonship

and shall go in and go out . . . (RV)

We are apt to have the idea that salvation is a kind of watertight compartment and if we enter in all our liberty will be destroyed. That is not our Lord's conception; He says we "shall go in and go out." Are we entering in by the Door for our daily work or only at a devotional meeting? The going in and out is our Lord's picture of the freedom of a son. A servant cannot go in and out as he likes, but Jesus says, "Henceforth I call you not servants; . . . but I have called you friends." Nothing is closed to you once you enter in by the Door.

3. The Condition of Daily Support

... and shall find pasture. (RV)

"I can't get any food out of God's Book," you say; the trouble is not in the Book, but in you. "I can't get time alone with God"—this answers the problem: "By Me if any man enter in, he shall . . . find pasture." Some people find physical nourishment in everything, air and water seem to nourish them; and there are people spiritually who get nourishment out of everything. That is our Lord's picture of the daily support of the life that is right with Him. There is no calling of any description where you cannot find ample pasturage once you learn to enter in by the Door.

Are you starving spiritually just now? have you entered in by the Door? "Nothing in my hands I bring"—don't try to be consistent to a doctrine or a creed, the Lord Jesus is the only One to whom you have to be consistent. You will find He will not allow you to have freedom in certain places, though He will always give you pasturage. There is wonderful liberty and freedom experienced among God's children, but if you try to have this freedom among those who are not God's children, He will check.

If God were to ask you "How are you?" what would you say—"I don't feel very well"? or, "I feel worried"; Or, "I feel as if I had not got hold of God"? Our Lord wants us to be filled with His life, and the only way for that is to enter in by the Door. The simplicity of it will save us from false emotion in prayer. It is easy to pray as we think we ought to pray, but we have to pray out of our personal condition. You never need to say—"But I am not in a fit condition to see my Father," the freedom is that of a child. Is there any part of your life where you are not getting nourished, not finding pasturage? Then enter in by the Door. Have you been trying to make prayer, or faith, or the Bible, or experience, the Door? These may be ornaments about the Door, but the Door is the Lord Jesus Himself. Be absolutely loyal to Him.

"By Me if any man enter in, he shall be saved." It is an almighty salvation, salvation from darkness and dryness, from limitation and death, salvation from all that hinders you from being a healthy child of God. Can you go in and out, or are you in fear of your life when you do things, always questioning whether you should do this or that? Whenever you are in doubt as to what you should do it is because you have not entered in by the Door. Learn to enter in by the Door until it becomes the ordinary attitude of your life and you will find pasture without hunting for it, it is there. It is never a confined place, but always a door. The world, the flesh and the devil cannot imprison you, it is a life of absolute freedom.

DIVINE SACRIFICE AND DEDICATION OF THE SAINTS

I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd layeth down His life for the sheep. . . . I lay it down of Myself. John 10:11, 18 (RV)

There is an unfamiliar element in the sacrifice of Jesus compared with the sacrifices made amongst men. A man may perform a mighty act in a moment of heroism—but there is the possibility that he may escape. Our Lord pictures here the issue He is facing, "the good shepherd layeth down His life for the sheep": He deliberately laid down His life without any possibility of deliverance. There was no compulsion, it was a sacrifice made with a free mind; nor was there anything of the impulsive about it, He laid down His life with a clear knowledge of what He was doing. Jesus understood what was coming, it was not a foreboding, but a certainty; not a catastrophe which might happen, but an ordained certainty in the decrees of God, and He knew it.

Have we begun to let the Spirit of God interpret the sacrifice of Jesus to us? We have too pathetic an idea of it because we take our ideas from martyrdom, but Jesus Christ was not a martyr. There is no room for the pathetic in our Lord's attitude; it is we who take the pathetic view and look at His sacrifice from a point of view the Spirit of God never once uses. The Spirit of God never bewitches men with the strange pathos of the sacrifice of Jesus: the Spirit of God keeps us at the passion of the sacrifice of Jesus. The great passion at the back of His heart and mind in all Jesus did was devotion to His Father.

"I lay it down of Myself"; It was the sacrifice of a free personality. Jesus had the power in His own Person to prevent every evil thing that came against Him, but He never used that power. He could have performed miracles at will, but He did not. He could have asked His Father to send Him more than twelve legions of angels, but He refused to (see Matthew 26:53). The angels must have stood around Him at the end, unseen, amazed that they could not come through and minister to Him as they had done after the temptation in the wilderness, and in the Garden of Gethsemane. Finally, our Lord gave Himself up into the hands of those who tried to seize Him, yet could not (see John 18:6): "He was crucified through weakness."

How does our dedication as saints compare with the dedication of our Lord and Master? When we are identified with Jesus Christ the Spirit of God would have us sacrifice ourselves for Him, point for point, as He did for His Father. We pray and wait, and need urging, and want the thrilling vision; but Jesus wants us to narrow and limit ourselves to one thing—clearly and intelligently knowing what we are doing, we deliberately lay down our lives for Him as He laid down His life for us in the purpose of God. This is the underlying meaning of Paul's passionate pleading in Romans 12:1—"I beseech you, . . . present your bodies a living sacrifice." We want to do it in an ecstasy; Jesus Christ wants us to do it without the ecstasy. Brood on what Jesus Christ came to do, and then in the full possession of your mind, not in the excitement of a revival moment, nor in the enthusiasm of a great spiritual ecstasy, but in the calm quiet knowledge of what you are doing, say-"My life to Thee, my King, I humbly dedicate."

Jesus Christ never blinds us into devotion to Himself, never startles and staggers us. Satan as an angel of light uses the things that captivate men against their will, he uses ecstasies, visions, excitement, the things that make for unholiness, for the aggrandisement of self, for insanity; but Jesus never does. He comes to us along the line of His own dedication—"I have power to lay it down." Are we hindering the purpose of God in our life by seeking spiritual ecstasies in our devotions, seeking great manifestations of God's Spirit? God wants us to dedicate ourselves to Him with quiet calm intelligence, with the deep fervent passion behind of knowing what we are doing. Have we the self-dedication of that moral passion? There are a great many passions that are not moral, enthusiasms that never sprang from God. We have to hold our emotions in check and let the Spirit of God bring us into one master-worship. The one love in the Bible is that of the Father and the Son; the one passion in the Bible is the passion of Jesus to bring men into the relationship of sons to the Father, and the one great passion of the saint is that the life of the Lord Jesus might be manifested in his mortal flesh.

"This commandment received I [RV] of My Father." The great centre around which the life of Jesus moved was the will of His Father and devotion to Him. It is easy to work ourselves up into a passion of sacrifice, but that is not the true element in dedication. As a saint I have power to refuse to give my sanctification to God; I can use that sanctification for my own selfish ends, with unutterable ruin to my own soul and to others. Our only guide is our Lord Himself: "For their sakes I sanctify Myself." In full possession of His powers Jesus dedicated Himself to God, and His call to those of us who are His disciples is to dedicate ourselves to Him with a clear knowledge of what we are doing, free from the plaintive, the sad, and the emotional. Can we only serve God when He thrills us? Can we only speak for Him when we feel His conscious touch? Cannot we have all the deep passion of our heart and spirit ablaze for God, our whole personality under control for one purpose only—to dedicate ourselves to the Lord Jesus Christ as He dedicated Himself to His Father?

Let Him make our lives narrow; let Him make them intense; let Him make them absolutely His!

"WILL YE ALSO GO AWAY?"

John 6

Five thousand men fed with five loaves and two fishes! The fame of the miracle-worker spreads like wildfire and the crowds blaze with enthusiasm, men and women hasten eagerly from afar to come to Him, scrambling over land and scudding over sea. "And when they had found Him on the other side of the sea, they said unto him, Rabbi, when camest Thou hither? Jesus answered them and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek Me, not because ve saw signs, but because ye ate of the loaves, and were filled. . . . I am the Bread of Life. . . . The Jews therefore murmured at Him, because He said, I am the bread which came down out of heaven" (RV). The enthusiasm begins to abate—"It is most offensive presumption." "Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? how is it then that He saith, I came down from heaven?" "And the bread that I will give is My flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. . . . The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, How can this man give us His flesh to eat?" "Listen to Him; how can He claim such impossible things?" "Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink His blood, ye have no life in you. . . . Many therefore of His disciples when they heard this, said, This is an hard saying; who can hear it? When Jesus knew in Himself that His disciples murmured at it, He said unto them, Doth this offend you? . . . From that time many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him." The crowds have passed now, you are alone with your Lord, and He bends through the gloom of your weakness and blindness and says "You are not going away too, are you?"

Men are still offended at Jesus; they hear gladly His "Follow Me" and enthusiastically leave all to follow, but when the way becomes narrow, and to follow costs shedding of blood, they begin to waver. As long as it means peace and joy we will follow Jesus, but when it costs us dear we are tempted to go back and walk no more with Him.

1. The Offence

"Blood" was, and is, the offence. "You Christians wallow in blood," it is objected, "could no other word be used?" There is something so offensive in the word "blood." "And why talk so much about sin? Sin is but a defect, slowly being outgrown in the evolution of man." "Blood," the vital life-stream—offensive! Is there nothing offensive in sin, that devastating thing which poisons the very fountain of life, which makes the world a howling wilderness and our cities unendurable to thought—a defect! The evolutionary idea sounds all right; it is the thinker himself who is wrong. Sin has alienated man from God, and the story of the ages is an accumulation of wrongdoing and of judgement days; there is an utter hopelessness in any attempt to meet the righteousness of God; but let a man begin to realise what sin is, then, "the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin," will be a holy word to his soul. "The Cross" and "the blood of Jesus" are indeed names for profound mysteries, but when a soul shattered by the crushing sense of his guilt believes that through the blood of Jesus there is forgiveness for sins, he receives a new life-energy, he is purged from his old sins, and with the Spirit of Jesus in him, he begins to work out his own salvation. Then begins the true evolution of a man's soul.

2. The Offended

It is a serious thing to be offended with Jesus; it means stagnation of character. Jesus Christ can never save an offended man, because the man who is offended with Jesus shuts up his nature against Him; he will not see in Him, the Son of God, his Saviour; he will not hear His words of life. God has so constituted human nature that the man who will not, ultimately cannot, but every man who is willing to come to Jesus and is not offended in Him, is saved and receives forgiveness.

"Though all men shall be offended because of Thee, yet will I never be offended." Do you recall the time when you talked like that? Do you recall how Jesus met you after that night of bitter despairing? Do you remember most of all how He pressed the kiss of forgiveness on your brow, you feel it yet, glowing like a radiant star, and how He spoke strong words of comfort, "And when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren"?

"Blood" is an offence not only at the beginning of the Christian career, but in the midst of it. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink His blood, ye have no life in you. . . . Doth this offend you?" said Jesus: Except you are crucified with Christ until all that is left is the life of Christ in your flesh and blood, you have no life in you. Except your self-love is flooded away by the inrush of the love of Jesus so that you feel your blood move through you in tender charity as it moved through Him, you have no life in you. Except your flesh becomes the temple of His holiness, and you abide in Christ and He in you, you have no life in you.

3. The Offender Is Jesus Himself

"He is despised and rejected of men." Jesus offended many; His own home-folk were the first to be offended. "And when His friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on Him: for they said, He is beside Himself"—"He assumes too much for His humble position." When He preached in the synagogue, they were astonished, but—"Is not this the carpenter? . . . And they were offended at Him." The Jews were offended at Jesus because they looked for a warrior king in their coming Messiah, and the carelessness of Jesus over temporal positions and honour did not commend itself to them. The Pharisees were offended at Him because His teaching showed up the hollow emptiness of their profession. His own disciples were offended at Him-"All ye shall be offended in Me this night" (RV)—they all forsook Him, and fled; one betrayed Him; and another denied Him.

Why did Jesus offend so many, and why does He offend so many to-day? Because men are half-blind by sin; the offence comes through their short-sightedness. Jesus offends men because He lays emphasis on the unseen life, because He speaks of motives rather than of actions; He reveals men to themselves, and because that revelation means hopelessness they turn away from Him who is their only hope. He offended men because He taught that they were lost and could only be saved through Him—"For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Finally, He offended men because His own life was blameless, and His very presence disturbed their low-level contentment.

The word "blood," which offends so many, speaks of forgiveness of sins. The Carpenter, who offended so many, is the disguised Son of God, full of majestic power and condescension. We marvel, not that He performed miracles, but rather that He performed so few. He who could have stormed the citadels of men with mighty battalions of angels, let men spit upon Him and crucify Him. The faithful few, who are an offence to our great organisations, are the disguised citizens of the Kingdom of God, their step is strong with coming triumph, they walk, a mighty concourse of the redeemed; angels are their servants, the Almighty is set for their defence; Jesus Himself walks with them day by day, a constant Friend. From the East and from the West shall come multitudes who, passing through great tribulation, have "washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

PERSON NOT PLACE

Seek ye Me, and ye shall live. Amos 5:4

The danger of seeking places of blessing is very prevalent. Beth-el, for instance, was the place of Divine blessing historically; it was there Abraham built an altar to the Lord, there Jacob had visions of God-what place could be more suitable to seek than Beth-el, there to have the spirit of communion revived and quickened by sweet and divine meditation? And yet God says, "But seek not Beth-el, nor enter into Gilgal." Gilgal was the place of the first encampment of the children of Israel after crossing the Jordan; what could be better after sanctification than to return in memory to the place of our first encampment in the promised land? Yet God says "nor enter into Gilgal, and pass not to Beersheba." Beer-sheba was the place of wonderful refreshing; Abraham dwelt there; Hagar was relieved there; Jacob was comforted there. What could be better than a pilgrimage back to our "Beershebas," the place where outcasts have been received, the discouraged encouraged, the failures revived and made successes? Yet God says, "and pass not to Beer-sheba."

At first reading of these verses one might wonder what their message is when applied spiritually, and yet very little attention will reveal that it is the old story that it is the Lord Himself and not the places of blessing the children of God are to seek. The place of former victories for God, the place that was heaven on earth in days gone by, will be places of defeat and failure if you persist in going there as a means of reviving. The message of God is "Seek ye Me, and ye shall live." It is the message that runs all through God's Book and all through the experiences of the saint's life. I wonder how many of us are trying to haunt places instead of seeking the Lord? There are places of revival to which the people of God take pilgrimages and spend hours and days and weeks there, trying to get a jaded life back again into communion with God, trying to revive by meditation and the power of association what can never be made alive apart from the living presence of God Himself. God is not confined to places, and where He once blessed, He may not bless again, it depends on the motive in seeking it.

"Seek ye Me, and ye shall live." Oh the joy of that life with God and in God and for God! It takes a sharp discipline for many of us to learn that "my goal is God Himself, not joy, nor peace, nor even blessing, but Himself my God."

THIS EXPERIENCE MUST COME

2 Kings 2:12-23

And he saw him no more. 2 Kings 2:12

"And he saw him no more"—in the way of leadership. If you have been learning a truth with a man or woman of God, there comes a time when you see him or her no more, not necessarily physically, but in your spiritual experience they stand no more to you as your guide and leader because God does not intend they should. That is the time you accuse God of making blunders—"I can't go on without Elijah." God says you must.

1. Alone at Your Jordan (2 Kings 2:13–14)— Your Seal

Your "Jordan" is some type of separation in which no one can have any fellowship with you, and no one can take the responsibility for you; you have to put to the test what you learned when you were in communion with your "Elijah." As a saint in God's work, your experience is that you have been to Jordan over and over again with your Elijah, he taught you wonderfully how God did things, and you saw how God worked through him, but now you are up against it alone. There is no use saying you cannot go on without him, this experience has come and you must.

What did Elisha do? He took up the mantle and did exactly what he had seen Elijah do. In the discipline of fellowship God always makes us go first as apprentices. He gives us comrades and leaders and guides whom we depend upon up to a certain stage, then there comes the experience of going alone. It is not wrong to depend on Elijah so long as God gives him to you, take all you can get from him, but remember the time will come when he will have to go. Beware then that you don't look for Elijah, don't look for any assistance, but call on God and He will give you your seal. "The spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha" (2 Kings 2:15). There is no sentiment here, but reality. If you want to know whether God is the real God you have faith to believe He is, then go through your Jordan alone. Jordan is taken to mean death, but here it means the threshold of life. We have to go through our Jordan as men and women who have really learned of God.

2. Alone at Your Jericho (2 Kings 2:16–22)— Your Sin.

Jericho is the place where you have seen your Elijah do great things. There are times in your life when Redemption and rationalism come into conflict, and your faith in God seems the most feeble and ludicrous thing there is. If you have learned well of your Elijah, you will never trust your reason, or wits, or anyone else's wits, you will remain true to what you learned with Elijah, and you will get the sign that God is with you; but you must go there alone. When you are up against your Jericho, you have a strong disinclination to take the initiative and trust in God, you want someone else to take the responsibility. While you are with your Elijah he takes the responsibility, but you come to the place where Elijah is no more use. Whether it be your Jordan or your Jericho, stand true to what you learned with your Elijah, and don't side with the clamour of the educated prophets.

3. Alone at Your Beth-El (2 Kings 2:23)— Your Sacrament

"And he went up from thence unto Beth-el." Beth-el stands for the house of God, the place where God revealed Himself to Jacob. Elisha had been with Eliigh to all these places—"and they two went on," and now Elisha goes alone, and at Beth-el he is slandered and treated as a hypocrite. At your Beth-el you will find yourself at your wits' end and at the beginning of God's wisdom. When you get to your wits' end and feel inclined to succumb to panic, don't. In spiritual matters never do what you feel inclined to do naturally. If you knuckle down to the tyranny of physical conditions, it is all up with learning God's lesson at that particular Beth-el. Stand steadfastly true to God, and God will bring His truth out in a way that will make your life a sacrament, i.e., the abiding presence of God will come through the simple elements of your life, but you must wait for Him.

Perhaps this experience has come in your life, not in a sentimental way that makes you interested in yourself, but in reality, and you are up against it. The only thing to do is to put into vogue what you learned with your Elijah—use his cloak and pray; determine to trust in God and don't look for Elijah any more. When God removes His servants He never allows any time to mourn over them. "Moses My servant is dead; now therefore arise. . . ."

A SOUND WORKMAN

Do your utmost to let God see that you at least are a sound workman, with no need to be ashamed of the way you handle the word of the Truth. 2 Timotheus 2:15 (MOFFATT)

This advice of the Apostle's puts a sacredness on work that nothing else does.

As workers, remember that we have to be "approved unto God," not logical in our interpretation of the facts of revelation or the facts of life. Revelation transcends reason and confuses logic.

There is no royal road to becoming a worker for God. The only way is to let God in His mighty providence lift the life by a great tide, or break it from its moorings in some storm, and in one way or another get the life out to sea in reckless abandon to God. When once God's purpose is begun He seems to put His hand on the life and uproot and detach it in every way, and there is darkness and mystery and very often kicking. We can be impertinent to God's providence the moment we choose; there is no punishment, we have simply chosen not to be workers for God in that particular. We say, "Let me get back to the 'duck pond,' to its limitations, where all is so simple and placid and easy to understand." We may go back to our "duck pond" and be a success there, but God wants to launch us out into the ocean. Numbers have come within sight of an understanding of the great doctrines and have stopped short. There is no pioneer but God into the meaning of His great doctrines.

Never make an experience produced by your faithfulness to God the ground of your Christian teaching, but find in your personal experience the assurance of your relation to the Christian doctrine you have to teach. It is always easier to be a hand-to-mouth evangelist than to be a worker for God rightly expounding the evangel to the saints.

The value to God of one man or woman right out in supreme sanctification is incalculable. The value of a life can only be estimated by its spiritual relationship to God. "Every branch that beareth fruit, He cleanseth it, that it may bear more fruit" (RV). Do you feel the knife? If so, that is a sign that you are bearing fruit. The greatest service we can render God is to fulfil our spiritual destiny. It is the despised crowd God is counting on, insignificant but holy.

WHAT DO YOU SEE IN YOUR CLOUDS?

Behold, He cometh with clouds. Revelation 1:7

In the Bible clouds are always connected with God. Clouds are those sorrows or sufferings or providences without or within our personal lives which seem to dispute the empire of God. If there were no clouds we would not need faith. Seen apart from God, the clouds or difficulties are accidents, but by those very clouds the Spirit of God teaches us to walk by faith. Faith must have an autobiography; until we know God, we have no faith. Faith is the spontaneous outgoing of my person to another person whom I know.

"Behold, He cometh with clouds"—the clouds are the very sign that God is there. What a revelation it is to know that sorrow, bereavement and suffering are clouds that come along with God! God does not come near in clear shining, He comes in the clouds. "If I had not come . . . , they had not had sin." The sign that Jesus Christ has come to us is the sense of our utter unworthiness.

It is not true to say that God wants to teach us something in our trials. In every cloud He brings, God wants us to *un*learn something. God's purpose in the cloud is to simplify our belief until our relationship to Him is exactly that of a child. God uses every cloud which comes in our physical life, in our moral or spiritual life, or in our circumstances, to bring us nearer to Him, until we come to the place where our Lord Jesus Christ lived, and we do not allow our hearts to be troubled.

Christianity does not add to our difficulties, it brings them to a focus, and in the difficulties we find Jesus Himself. We must get out of the habit of misinterpreting God by saying He wants to teach us something, it is not a New Testament idea, but an idea that is as unlike the God whom Jesus revealed as could be. God is all the time bringing us to the place where we *un*learn things.

We ought to interpret all the clouds and mysteries of life in the light of our knowledge of God. In everything that happens we should be un-learning that which keeps us from a simple relationship to God. Sometimes we have to leave certain forms of religious activity and testimony alone until our relationship to God is simplified—God and my own soul, other people are shadows. Until other people become shadows, clouds and darkness will be ours every now and again. Is your relationship to God becoming simpler? The proof that it is, is that you do not bother God about yourself so much as you used to because you know Him better.

There is a connection between the strange providences of God and all that we know of God Himself. Unless we can look the darkest, blackest fact full in the face without damaging God's character, we do not know God. There are no such things as "calamities" or "accidents" to God's children—"all things work together for good." Sin and evil and the devil are not God's order; they are here by the direct permission of His providence. If we governed the universe we would clear them all out at once, but God does not work in that way. He did not work in that way with us—think how patient God has been with us! When the world, the flesh and the devil do their worst, it is for us to understand where our true life is to be lived, not in the outer courts, but "hid with Christ in God." Whatever happens, happens by God's permission.

What is your cloud just now? Is it something you cannot see through, something foggy and indefinite and perplexing that makes you shiver with fear? Are there clouds of thinking which make you afraid as you enter them? The revelation in God's Book is that the clouds are but "the dust of His feet." Then thank Him for them.

"They feared as they entered the cloud"; "Suddenly . . . they saw no man any more, save Jesus only with themselves." Have you anyone "save Jesus only" in your cloud? If you have, it will get darker. You must come to the place where there is "no man, save Jesus only," all others are shadows. Spiritual education is to know God, and nothing simplifies our life more than learning to see in the clouds the goings of His feet.

THE SUFFERING OF THE SANCTIFIED

Forasmuch then as Christ suffered in the flesh, arm ye yourselves also with the same mind; for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin. 1 Peter 4:1

There is suffering that is preventable, but there is an inevitable suffering that is essentially God's will for us. We do not know the preface to our own story any more than Job did; we suffer, and God alone knows why. It is beside the mark to say that it is because we deserve to suffer; Job did not deserve to suffer for he was a man "perfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil." Neither is it at all satisfying to say that suffering develops character. There was more in Job's suffering than was required to develop his character, and so it is with the sanctified soul. The preface to Job's story lets in the light from the revelation point of view, viz., that God's honour was at stake, and the issue fought out in this man's soul vindicated God's honour.

This point of view does not deny that we receive whippings from our Father for being wilful and stupid, or that we are chastened to purity; or that any of the obvious or beautiful and sentimental things that are said and known about suffering are not true. They are true, but there is a deeper suffering in connection with sanctification that cannot be exhausted by any or all of these views.

The picture of God in the Bible is of One who suffers, and when the mask is torn off life and we see all its profound and vast misery, the suffering, sorrowing God is the only One who does not mock us. "He was despised, and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief" (Isaiah 53:3 RV).

The Cross of Christ pronounced final and irrevocable judgement against the prince of this world (see John 12:31). The cross of sanctification is not the Cross of God in the sense that the Cross of Jesus Christ was. The inevitable suffering of the sanctified is that they side with the Cross of God, and with His way against the way of the prince of this world. The prince of this world defies God at the Cross, his insidious temptation is—"Save Thyself: if Thou art the Son of God, come down from the cross." Suffering was inevitable to our Lord before God could make His Saviourhood a fact; He "learned obedience by the things which He suffered" (RV). Jesus Christ is not our Example, He is the Captain of our salvation; His position is unique. We do not suffer in order that we may become saviours; we suffer in order to enable God to fulfil His idea of saintship in us (see Colossians 1:24).

The evident indifference on the part of the saints in the New Testament, and since, to the experience of suffering is accounted for, not on the ground of insensitiveness or by trampling on the finer feelings, but by "the expulsive power of a new affection." When we are saved and sanctified through the Atonement we are led out into the fulfilment of the ideas of God under the Lordship of Jesus Christ. Every other aim falls into insignificance, and through earth's heart-breaks, sorrows and griefs, the sanctified soul treads calm and unwavering, unafraid even of death itself, summing up all as "our light affliction, which is for the moment . . ." (RV).

The sufferings of the sanctified are caused by growing into the idea of the will of God. God did not spare His own Son, and He does not spare His sanctified ones from the requirements of saintship. A child is a perfect specimen of the genus homo, so is a man. The child as it develops, suffers; it is a false mercy that spares a child any requirements of its nature to complete the full stature of manhood, and it is a false mercy that spares the sanctified child of God any of the requirements of its nature to complete "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." We do not evolve into holiness, it is a gift—we evolve in it, attainment after attainment, becoming sons and daughters of God, brothers and sisters of the Lord Jesus. That is Paul's meaning in Philippians 3:13-14, "reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark. . . . "

A child in the natural world is not fit for life unless it is perfectly healthy; sanctification is spiritual health, "perfect soundness."

May the God of peace sanctify us wholly so that we are no longer sickly souls retarding His purposes, but perfected through suffering. Oh, that from every heart may rise the yearning longing, as from the Apostle Paul:

Then as I weary me and long and languish,

Nowise availing from that pain to part,—

Desperate tides of the whole great world's anguish

Forced thro' the channels of a single heart.

Oh to save these! to perish for their saving, Die for their life, be offered for them all!

VOWS. VISIONS AND VOICES

1. The Vices and Virtues of Vowing

When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for He hath no pleasure in fools: pay that which thou vowest. (Ecclesiastes 5:4 RV)

At New Year time we hear much of vowing. Solomon's advice is—"Don't vow; because if you make a vow, even in ordinary matters, and do not fulfil it, you are the worse for it." To make a promise may simply be a way of shirking responsibility. Never pile up promises before men, and certainly not before God. It is better to run the risk of being considered indecisive, better to be uncertain and not promise, than to promise and not fulfil. "Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay" (Ecclesiastes 5:5).

The vices of vowing outweigh the virtues, because vowing is built on a misconception of human nature as it really is. If a man had the power to will pure will it would be different, but he has not. There are certain things a man cannot do, not because he is bad, but because he is not constituted to do them. We make vows which are impossible of fulfilment because no man can remain master of himself always; there comes a time when the human will must yield allegiance to a force greater than itself, it must yield either to God or to the devil.

Modern ethical teaching bases everything on the power of the will, but we need to recognise also the perils of the will. The man who has achieved a moral victory by the sheer force of his will is less likely to want to become a Christian than the man who has come to the moral frontier of his own need. It is the obstinate man who makes vows, and by the very fulfilment of his vow he may increase his inability to see things from Jesus Christ's standpoint. When a man is stirred, either by joy or sorrow, or by the seasons of the year, he is apt to make vows which are beyond the possibility of human power to keep.

Jesus Christ bases the entrance to His Kingdom not on a man's vowing and making decisions, but on the realisation of his inability to decide. Decisions for Christ fail because the bedrock of Christianity is ignored. It is not our vows before God that tell, but coming to God exactly as we are, in all our weakness, and being held and kept by Him. Make no vows at this New Year time, but look to God and bank on the Reality of Jesus Christ.

2. The Direction of Vision (Acts 26:19)

It was no passing emotion that came to Paul on the road to Damascus, the vision had very clear and emphatic direction for him, and he says, "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." Paul was not given a message or a doctrine to proclaim, he was brought into a vivid, personal, overmastering relationship to Jesus Christ: "I have chosen him" (MOFFATT). There are pietistic movements started by certain forms of vision which are characterised by fasting and times of prayer and devotion, but they are the antipodes of everything Jesus Christ taught. Jesus Christ taught absolute abandonment to Himself and identification with His aims. The test of all spiritual vision is, "That I may know Him."

Recall the time when you knew without any doubt that the Spirit of God spoke to you and brought you to see what God wanted you to do; if you obeyed the vision, it has led on to emancipation in your life; but remember, every enlargement of vision has to be paid for by increased concentration. We all have moments when

The spirit's true endowments Stand out plainly from its false ones, And apprise it if pursuing Or the right way or the wrong way, To its triumph or undoing.

Robert Browning

We are inclined to be ashamed of the vision we get because it marks us out as being different from other people, and we are afraid of being considered "speckled birds." The vision will mark you out as different, but if you take your direction from the vision, you will not only make a straight path for yourself but for others also.

3. The Inspiration of Voices

And I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send? (Isaiah 6:8)

The call of God is best heard when the soul is in a state of obedience to the known will of God, when, as it were, God's soliloquy is overheard—"Whom shall I send, and who will go for Us?" and the ready response is, "Here am I; send me." The call of God is difficult to state, it is implicit, not explicit. The call of God does not come to everyone, it comes only to the man who has the nature of God in him. For every man who is true to the call of God, there are many who are true to the call of a creed or doctrinal evangelism. There are voices that are not true to the character of Jesus Christ (see Matthew 24:23–24); the inspiration of these voices is not to glorify Jesus, but to glorify something which He does. Give time to heed the call of God. The voice of God never contradicts the character of God.

THE DISCIPLINE OF SPIRITUAL TENACITY

Psalm 46

The world as it is, is not good enough to be true. We ought not to be satisfied with it. God has prepared some better thing. But it by no means follows that what God has prepared is what we should now choose. There may be heavy sorrows and disappointments in store for us, if so it will mean that our hopes need purifying.

Forsyth

Tenacity is more than endurance, it is endurance which has at its heart the absolute certainty that what we look for is going to transpire. Spiritual tenacity is the supreme effort of the Spirit of God in a man refusing to believe that his "Hero" is going to be conquered. The greatest fear a man has is not that he will be damned, but that Jesus Christ will be worsted; that the things He stood for—love and justice, forgiveness and kindness among men, won't win out in the end. Then comes the call to spiritual tenacity, not to hang on and do nothing, but to work deliberately and tenaciously with the certainty that God is not going to be worsted.

1. In the Wildness of Nature (Psalm 46:1-3)

There is a wildness all through Nature and we are suddenly struck with its brutality and ask, "Why, if God is a beneficent Creator, does He allow such diabolical things to happen?" Has the Bible anything to say about this, any revelation that explains it? The Bible explanation is that Nature is in a disorganised condition, that it is out of gear with God's purposes, and will only become organised when God and man are one (see Romans 8:19).

We all have our problems, something about which we say, "Now, why is it?" Never take an explanation which is too slight.

A materialistic explanation or an evolutionary explanation cannot be final. The great thing is to remain absolutely confident in God. "Be still, and know that I am God."

2. In the Whirlwind of Nations (Psalm 46:4–7)

According to the Bible, the nations as we know them are the outcome of what ought never to have been. Civilisation was started by a murderer, and the whole of our civilised life is based on competition. There are grand ingredients in civilised life, but the basis is not good. In the whirlwind of nations such as is on just now, many a man has lost, not his faith in God (I have never met the man who had lost his faith in God), but belief in his beliefs. When a man's belief in his beliefs suffers a severe blow, for a while he thinks he is disbelieving in God; in reality all he has lost is the conception of God that had been presented to him and he is coming to a knowledge of God along a new line. There are those who have maintained their faith in God, and the only language they can use to express it is—"I know God is God, although hell seems on top all round."

3. In the Weariness of Nemesis (Psalm 46:8–11)

A man may sin magnificently, but he is punished drearily. The whole of our prison system is a day after day nemesis which makes men wish they had died rather than that the gates of paradise had clanged behind them.

We are apt to make the mistake of looking for God to put things ostensibly right immediately. If we dwell much on the Second Coming without having a right spiritual relationship to God, it will make us ignore the need for spiritual tenacity. Just now, Jesus says, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: . . . for lo, the kingdom of God is in the midst [mg] of you" (RV). When our Lord does come, He will come quickly, and we will find He has been there all the time. One of the greatest strains in life is the strain of waiting for God. "Because thou didst keep the word of My patience" (RV). God takes the saints like a bow which He stretches and at a certain point the saint says, "I can't stand any more," but God does not heed, He goes on stretching because He is aiming at His mark, not ours, and the patience of the saints is that they "hang in" until God lets the arrow fly.

If your hopes are being disappointed just now it means that they are being purified. There is nothing noble the human mind has ever hoped for or dreamed of that will not be fulfilled. Don't jump to conclusions too quickly; many things lie unsolved, and the biggest test of all is that God looks as if He were totally indifferent.

Remain spiritually tenacious.

INSIDIOUS INDIFFERENCE

And I think it right, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance. 2 Peter 1:13 (RV)

Insidious means "advancing imperceptibly." Are you as spiritually alive and enthusiastic as you once were? Are you finding it expedient not to have so keen an edge on your discipleship as you used to have? Are you a little more inclined to sit complacently to the fashions and customs of that form of worldliness which you used to avoid with horror? Then may this word of the Apostle Peter's stir you up and preserve for you a vivid apprehension of the truth.

1. Knowledge of the Truth

Wherefore I shall be ready always to put you in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and are established in the truth which is with you. (2 Peter 1:12 RV)

These words indicate that the warning is addressed to those who know the truth and are established in it. This may be a little startling, but it ought to prove very profitable. You are a Christian, perhaps a prominent worker, your testimony is outspoken on every occasion, you are fearless in your stand for the truth, and yet it is to such as you that these words are spoken. You would be surprised and incredulous if you were told that you were threatened with insidious indifference, and that on this enchanted ground you may sleep the fatal sleep.

Beware of your testimony when you can give it without thinking. The more decided our testimony, the more decided and growing should our thinking be. When we use the words "salvation," "sanctification," "Holy Spirit," or any of the great words, do we think more about them than we used to? or have we used them so often that we heed them little because we are established in the truth? Bear in mind that unwilled attention soon flags, but willed observation gives discernment.

2. Knowledge of Failure

For he that lacketh these things is blind, seeing only what is near, having forgotten the cleansing from his old sins. (2 Peter 1:9 RV)

Another cause of insidious indifference is from a different source, viz., the knowledge of having failed. Perhaps you have not grown in grace, you are not "stablished in the faith," you have been lazy and self-indulgent, and you have slowly become what you know you are to-day—blind, you have become "unfruitful" in your knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. If this is your portrait, let these words rouse you out of your fatal sickness. Thank God it is not yet too late. Rouse up now! Add diligence to your faith, and by the grace of God you will soon begin to "add" the other things also.

3. Knowledge of Being Kept

... who by the power of God are guarded through faith unto a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time. (1 Peter 1:5 RV)

Insidious indifference is begotten not only by a knowledge of the truth, and by a knowledge of failure, but also by a knowledge of being kept. The sublime truth of the security of being kept may degenerate into a lazy drift towards destruction. The keeping power of God is a grand eternal fact; but beware of going to sleep on the decrees of God and saying, "In God's good time," when in your heart and by your habits you really mean, "In my bad time."

Let such considerations as these stir up our minds by way of remembrance. It is as if the voice of Our Master called to us saying, "BE saved!" "BE sanctified!" "BE renewed in the spirit of your mind!" taking the word "BE" to mean a steady growth "in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (RV).

THE PRICE OF EXPANSION

Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgement. Ecclesiastes 11:9 (RV)

Every expansion of mind, or heart, or emotion has to be paid for by additional concentration. The price is the same in national and individual life. During these years there has been a terrific expansion in lives through bereavement and sorrow, everything in individual life has been altered, but there is the price to pay. The majority of us are inclined to make little of what we feel most; it is a good thing to be inarticulate, but at the same time it is well to get an expression because others have the same experience. Up to thirty years of age life is full of promise; after that, life holds out no more promise, it holds out the test as to whether we are going to live up to what we saw in vision. The danger is to abandon the vision and say we are getting more sensible; we are, rather, getting more sordid, we have lost the moral vim, the effort to pay the price of the expansion. It is a question of "hanging in" in the dark to what we saw in the light. "While we have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light" (John 12:36).

1. Reaction of Formation (Luke 11:24–26)

Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more evil than himself; and they enter in and dwell there. (Luke 11:26 RV)

There is an idea in regard to a revival that the thing is done suddenly, by a magic pill. Some things in a man's life are done suddenly, but there is always the price to pay afterwards; he has to set his face to it. To-day people are crying out for a revival and an awakening, but we have to remember that we must lay our account with the inevitable reaction. Reaction means the way I answer back to anything which impinges on me; physical health, moral and spiritual health, are all maintained by reaction. A converted man is not necessarily one God's Spirit has touched; a man may reform himself by sheer strength of will, but reaction is inevitable and unless he is willing to pay the price of the expansion, he will end worse than he began. Our Lord is not talking about the man who suddenly collapses because he has gone on in some secret sin; He is describing the man who has turned the devil out and made his heart clean by sheer will—"swept and garnished" but empty, and He says that "the last state of that man becometh worse than the first" (RV).

Our Lord's attitude to the human will is not that frequently presented to-day; He never says that a man must make vows and decisions. "Decisions for Christ" fail, not because men are not in earnest, but because the bedrock of Christianity is left out. The bedrock of Christianity is not strength of will, but the realisation of my inability to decide: if I am ever going to be what Jesus Christ wants me to be, He must come in and do it, I am an abject pauper morally and spiritually. Fundamental free will is never possible, if it were our vowing would be omnipotent, we could do as we liked.

2. The Danger of Drifting from Ideals

Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For My yoke is easy, and My burden is light. (Matthew 11:28–30)

We generally look upon an ideal as something to live up to; it is rather something to live in the inspiration of. A boy in his teens has clearer and purer ideals than at any future time; then when he begins to find a divorce between what he is and what he sees he ought to be, he experiences an agony of mind. We can all see visions and dream dreams, but they are not woven into the texture of our life, and unless we are willing to pay the price of expansion we will drift from our ideals. Immediately you are prepared to live in the inspiration of your ideals, you become a "speckled bird." Many a man is kept back from Jesus Christ by a sense of honour to his own crowd—"No, they will think I am becoming a superior person," and a man often chooses to drift from his ideals rather than seem disloyal to his crowd. If he goes on, ultimately his crowd will go with him, but it will test his moral calibre to the utmost.

3. The Natural Law of Emotion (Colossians 3:5-10)

Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth. . . . (Colossians 3:5)

If I allow an emotion and refuse to act it out on its right level, it will react on a lower level, and the higher the emotion the deeper the reaction. The most unwholesome people spiritually are those who like to have their emotions stirred by prayer meetings and devotional readings, but they never act them out. In the natural world the one who is used to having things played before his emotions apart from actual life is as a rule the most callous, heartless person at home. My guide as to what emotion I am going to allow is to ask myself—Suppose I allow this emotion, what is its logical outcome? If it has to do with sin and Satan, then cut it clean out, allow it no more way; if it is an emotion to be generous, then be generous, work it out on its right level and your moral life will be tremendously benefited. The place for discipline in both natural and spiritual life lies just here. When the Spirit of God stirs you, make as many things inevitable as possible, let the consequences be what they will. It is in such crises in spiritual life as these that Jesus says, "Come unto Me . . . and I will give you rest." He will make a man able to work out in actual life what he sees by the power of vision.

PERFECTING HOLINESS

2 Corinthians 7:1

"Having therefore these promises"—what promises? "I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be My people" (2 Corinthians 6:16)—"let us cleanse ourselves"—no "excusing the sins we're most inclined to while condemning those we've no mind to"; there must be no moral partiality in the saint—"from all defilement of flesh and spirit" (RV)—nothing contrary to God's nature: "the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin"-"perfecting holiness in the fear of God." It is perilously possible to cultivate a spurious, unhealthy holiness not "in the fear of God." There is a subtle form of carnal pride that is set on my holiness; it is unscriptural and morbid and ends in experience rather than in character, in taking myself more and more seriously and God less and less seriously. The cultivation of holiness is impossible without the spiritual concentration which the Holy Spirit enjoins.

"I beseech you . . . to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God" (RV). Practical holiness is the only holiness of any value in this world, and the only kind God will endorse. Romans 12:1-2 is a passionate entreaty to rouse ourselves out of that stagnation in which we are ensnared by thinking that because it is all of grace there is no need for "gumption"; whereas the tremendous initiative given us to sanctification ought to rouse us to determined activity until we are transformed by the renewing of our mind and able to make out the will of God. This mental renewing means the strenuous and courageous lifting of the problems of the world, individual, family, and social, into the spiritual domain, and habitually working out a life of practical holiness. It is not an easy task, but a heroically difficult one, requiring the mightiest effort of our human nature; a task which by the grace of God lifts us into thinking God's thoughts after Him until they become our unconscious inheritance. The secret of spiritual otherworldliness is not found in adhering to a set of rules, but lies deep down in a hidden spring of life and thought which the saint continually obeys.

A MEDITATION

Job 19:25-27

For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God. . . . Job 19:25–26

When a man is agitated by the Spirit of God he utters words from which he takes comfort for himself and others can do the same, but the treasure contained in the words can never be exhausted. Job did not understand all the meaning of these words, yet he took a meaning of great preciousness to himself out of them. So with us, it is never possible for us to understand what we utter when we get a glimpse of God, or to express the rapture that sweeps our soul at such times. If a man's words spoken in the power of the spirit have such inexhaustible value, who can estimate the value of The Word of God, our Lord Jesus Christ Himself, who expresses to us the very thoughts of God?

God never reveals Himself in the same way to everyone, and yet the testimony of each one who has had a revelation of God is the same, viz., that God is love. If a man doubts God, he is not able to express the doubt, his lips are dumb with the pain: if a man can say he doubts God, the doubt is not worth heeding. Job's faith is wavering under the blows of the providence of God and the stinging cruelty of his friends; the breakdown of all his traditional belief seems like the breakdown of God, and from the delirium of his perplexity he pleads, "Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye my friends; for the hand of God hath touched me." And with the utterance of his plea a new confidence seems to creep in, the Spirit of God moving through all his incoherent sadness begins to lift him to a higher plane; his consciousness of innocence is confirmed within him as God reveals Himself in a more majestic and mysterious way, there is a growing assurance that he will yet be justified in the eyes of those who now accuse him, and he repeats to himself his confidence—"though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself." The darkness, which comes from excess of light, is transformed by the never-to-beexplained rapture of his growing realisation of God. Whenever God reveals Himself to a man he instantly finds the limitation of human language and reasoning—"It is impossible! yet it shall be!"

Why is it that our faith gets contradicted by what we go through in our experience? Because of ourselves we can know nothing, we only know by God revealing Himself to us. We are in danger of taking each stage of our development in spiritual growth as final, and when a fuller flood as from God's own great life comes, overwhelming all the old traditional belief, we close down our soul over the earlier revelations—"I have the truth now," consequently we stagnate because we cut ourselves off from God. There is no limit to what God can make us are we but willing. His great love is ever overshadowing us and He waits to visit us with His saving life.

"For I know that my Redeemer liveth." Job is assured that his Redeemer (his Vindicator) will arise and will put right the wrong; and every upright soul will likewise one day be vindicated, never fear. But Job's words convey to us as Christians a deeper, more glorious truth; they mean that our Redeemer, the Lord Jesus Christ, will one day stand upon this earth and will clear His Name from reproach and slander! The people of God cry, "O God, how long shall the adversary reproach? shall the enemy blaspheme Thy name for ever?" The enemies of Christ are triumphant, Christianity is a failure, they say; and the Church of God herself looks on in pain at the shortcomings in her midst. But lo, at length from the very heart of the shadows appears the majestic Figure of Jesus; His countenance is as the sun shineth in his strength, around those wounds in Brow and Side and Hands and Feet—those wounds which shelter countless thousands of broken hearts—are healing rays; in that glorious Figure meets every beauty inconceivable to the imagination of man. O Christians, dry your eves! Be not downcast, for I know that my Redeemer liveth! He is nearer than you think. Oh the speechless rapture of it, that suddenly He will appear to us! "Yea: I come quickly. Amen: come, Lord Jesus" (RV).

INTRODUCTION

Source

The lectures on the Holy Spirit were given in the Christian doctrine class at the Bible Training College, London, during April and May 1915. Many of the other chapters in this volume are talks given to British Commonwealth soldiers in Egypt between 1915 and 1917. Where possible, they are identified by date and location. The YMCA camp at Zeitoun² was located six miles northeast of Cairo. After Oswald Chambers' death in November 1917, a number of these messages were printed as leaflet sermons and distributed widely among troops during 1918 and 1919.

Publication History

- As articles: In Spiritual Life magazine and the Bible Training Course (BTC) Monthly Journal.³
- As a book: 1946.

In all of these messages, the terms "the Great War" and "this war" refer to World War I (1914–18).

FOREWORD

It is my privilege to have been asked to write a brief Foreword to this book, the latest addition to the treasurehouse of the Oswald Chambers literature. The idea of a Foreword is surely that some fact may be brought to light, the telling of which shall induce others to read and so share in the life-giving truth.

The writer enjoyed a close friendship with "O. C.," and there came to his own life fresh spiritual impetus and vision as he not only listened to the exposition of truths, but as he saw those same truths practised and lived out in everyday contact with men and affairs. It was indeed a life lived in abandon to God.

The whole story of the "O. C." literature is an outstanding witness of the gracious hand of God. Oswald Chambers spent the last two years of his life in YMCA work out in the desert in Egypt, in the thick of it with the men, every evening being devoted to a meeting for spiritual instruction on some vital theme. This book in particular is compiled largely from these talks, as well as from sermons delivered on Sundays. Then in November 1917 came his Home-call into God's immediate presence, and a leaflet was printed and scattered among the men in Egypt and Palestine in time for Christmas. There was little thought at the time of the number of books to which this leaflet, entitled "The Place of Help," was to be the forerunner. Other publications quickly began to follow, and each one was printed simultaneously in Egypt and in England. I have had the joy and privilege of being associated with the publishing from those early days right on until now; and with the growing demand for all the books, and for their translation into a number of languages, one feels confident that God will unfold yet more of His purpose in this great work.

So read and study and enjoy this new book, and find for yourself that "The Best is yet to be," as "O. C." so frequently reminded us.

THE ADVENT OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

Howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, . . . He shall glorify Me. John 16:13–14

There are two descents of the Holy Spirit mentioned in the Bible: the first is at the baptism of our Lord, the second on the Day of Pentecost, when the Paraclete came to this earth. The power of the Holy Spirit and His personal presence are not the same; the power of the Holy Spirit was mightily present in the world before His personal advent. In this dispensation we not only have the power of the Holy Spirit, but His personal presence moving amongst us.

1. The Peace of God

And the Holy Spirit descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon Him, and a voice from heaven, which said, Thou art My beloved Son; in Thee I am well pleased. (Luke 3:22)

The first descent of the Holy Spirit was upon the Son of Man—that is, the whole human race represented in one Person, and that Person the historic Jesus Christ who was God Incarnate. It was at His baptism that the Holy Spirit descended upon Him, and we must never forget that His baptism was a baptism of repentance. It was at His baptism that Jesus Christ definitely took upon Him His vocation, which was to bear away (RV mg) the sin of the world.

John the Baptist must not be regarded as a mere individual; Jesus said of him that he was the greatest prophet that had been born of woman, and he is the last of the line of prophets. After four hundred years of absolute silence there came this lonely, mighty voice, "Prepare . . ." Jesus said to John, "for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." That could only be done by Our Lord as the Son of man accepting His vocation to bear away (RV mg) the sin of the world. Jesus is the "Prince of Peace" because only in Him can men have God's good-will and peace on earth. Thank God, through that beloved Son the great peace of God may come to every heart and to every nation under heaven, but it can come in no other way. None of us can ever have good-will towards God if we won't listen to His Son. Have we despised what the Father said about Jesus Christ at His baptism? the Mount of Transfiguration He said the same thing. The only way to peace and salvation and power, and to all that God has in the way of benedictions and blessings for us individually and for the whole world, is in the Son of Man.

2. The Power of God

And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire. (Acts 2:3)

The second mighty descent of the Holy Spirit was on the Day of Pentecost, when the power of God came in Person. The record says that they who heard were devout Jews from every nation under heaven, and the great miracle is stated "how hear we every man in our own tongue?" The Holy Spirit came not as a dove, but in cloven tongues of fire. The disciples had been told to tarry until they were endued with power from on high. As soon as Jesus Christ was glorified, the personal Holy Spirit descended, and in the decrees of God the fullness of time was reached when the Son of Man, on whom the Holy Spirit had descended as a dove ascended to the right hand of the Father and sent forth the mighty Holy Spirit. In Genesis 11 we read that God caused confusion of tongues; on the Day of Pentecost He caused a fusion of understanding by the tongues of fire, the manifestation accompanying the personal advent of the Holy Spirit. It was a far-reaching, mighty testimony to the fact that sin had been judged on the Cross.

It is one thing to believe that the Holy Spirit is given individually, but another thing to receive the revelation that He is here. He is here in personal presence in all the plenitude of His power, but His power will only work as a manifestation of what Jesus Christ has done. The Holy Spirit works in no other way than to glorify Jesus Christ. Anyone who receives the Holy Spirit receives life from the glorified Jesus, and receives also an understanding of the teaching of Jesus and complete security, provided he abides in the light the Holy Spirit sheds.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father" (John 14:12). It was this mighty Person, the Holy Spirit, who inspired the apostles to write the New Testament. The New Testament is the posthumous writing of Jesus Christ; He departed, and the Holy Spirit used these men as His pens to expound His teaching.

3. The Patience of God

For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body. (1 Corinthians 12:13)

The baptism of the Holy Spirit delivers us from independent individuality. The one thing the Holy Spirit awakens and brings into communion with God is what is meant by personality. Individual self-assertiveness is the husk, personal identity with the Lord is the kernel. The Holy Spirit builds us into the Body of Christ.

All that Jesus Christ came to do is made experimentally ours by the Holy Spirit; He does in us what Jesus did for us. The gifts of the Spirit are not for individual exaltation, but for the good of the whole Body of Christ. The Body of Christ is an organism, not an organisation. How patient God is in forming the Body of Christ.

Our Lord's words in John 16:14 sum up the personal passion of the Holy Spirit, "He shall glorify Me." The word "passion" has come down in the world; it is generally taken to mean a distemper from which human nature suffers, but when the phrase "the Passion of our Lord" is used it means the transfiguration of peace and power and patience.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT—I

1. "The Beyond That Is Within"

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. (John 3:3)

This title⁵ will serve as a comment on Our Lord's words to Nicodemus. The power to see is within; what is seen is without, otherwise it is hallucination. When the Holy Spirit comes in there is a new power of perception—"And their eyes were opened, and they knew Him. . . . Then opened He their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures" (Luke 24:31, 45). The Holy Spirit regenerates my personal spirit, that is, I receive a quickening life which puts the "beyond" within, and immediately the "beyond" has come within it rises up to the "above," and I enter the domain where Jesus lives.

"Nicodemus saith unto Him, How can a man be born when he is old?" Nicodemus's question was not captious, it was a sensible, profound question arising out of the tremendously sweeping statement Jesus had made—"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." The phrase "born again" was not new to Nicodemus, for the Rabbis spoke of a convert from heathenism as being "born again"; but the application Jesus made of it was absolutely amazing. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be"—not developed, not educated, but "born again"—"fundamentally made all over again, before you can see the kingdom of God and enter into it."

Remember, Jesus is not talking to one whom men would call a sinner, there is no mention of sin; He is talking to a religious man, to "the teacher of Israel"; it is to him Jesus says, "Ye must be born again." If you define sin as external wrongdoing, you miss out this class of men, men like the rich young ruler ("Master, all these have I observed from my youth"); men like Saul of Tarsus ("touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless")-men who do not need saving from external wrongdoing, they are not guilty of any. Talk about "Broken Earthenware," about going to the slums to save men and women, and every one's sympathy is with you; but Nicodemus was not "broken earthenware," he was not an outcast of society; he was a cultured Pharisee, an honoured member of the Sanhedrin, and here stands a young Nazarene Carpenter and says to him, quietly and calmly, "Ye must be born again." No wonder Nicodemus was absolutely bewildered—"I can understand how by education, religious and otherwise, I can make myself a little better; how by careful training I can keep out of sight the ugly things in my disposition; but what you say about being made all over again, I cannot understand at all."

Jesus Christ's salvation deals not only with the outcast and downtrodden, it deals with clean-living, upright, sterling men and women, and immediately you present the Gospel as Jesus presents it, it is this class you clash with. Jesus Christ came to do what no man can do for himself, viz., alter his disposition. "How can a man be born when he is old?" By receiving the gift of the Holy Spirit and allowing Him to do in him what Jesus did for him. The mighty sovereign power of God can re-make a man from within and readjust him to God. The Holy Spirit is God Himself working to make the Redemption efficacious in human lives. No wonder men leap for joy when they get saved in the New Testament way!

"Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." Our Lord is talking about a momentous practical experience, viz., being born from above (RV mg) while we live in the below. The conception of new birth in the New Testament is not of something that springs out of us, what modern psychology calls "a subliminal uprush," but of something that comes into us. Just as Our Lord came into the world from the outside, so He must come into us from the outside. The "washing of regeneration" comes consciously to our personal lives in and through the words of the New Testament-"... being born again ... by the word of God" (1 Peter 1:23). There is no authentic impulse of the Holy Spirit that is not wedded to the words of the Bible. To recognise this is the only way to be safe from dangerous delusions. To-day our beliefs are being rationalised, men are denying the supernatural element, that the Spirit of God comes in and does something which transcends human reason. A Christian is an impossible being unless a man can be made all over again. Everything hangs on this one central statement of Jesus—"Ye must be born again." We have lost sight of it, and we have got to get back to it.

2. The Within That Is Above

If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give Me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water. (John 4:10)

The idea of receiving anything as a gift from God is staggeringly original; we imagine we have to earn things by prayer and obedience. We cannot earn or win anything from God, we must receive it as a gift, like a pauper, or do without it. In this verse Our Lord is describing the essential nature of the gift—"He would have given thee living water"—a living, amazing reality. There is nothing profounder in the whole of the New Testament than this interview, it is full of the great meaning of the Gospel of God; we do not sufficiently grasp its profundity. In it we see Almighty God Incarnate stooping down to lift up a sinful woman, as a symbol of the way His salvation is at work among men.

Our Lord did not use means to attract the woman, she happened to be there—"and He must needs go through Samaria." Watch the method of His procedure, it is amazing. Our Lord does not begin by telling the woman she is a sinner, He begins by asking her to give Him something—"Give Me to drink." There is no condescension in grace, a sinner is never afraid of Jesus; the Pharisees hated Him, that is why He said to them—"Verily I say unto you, That the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you" (Matthew 21:31). The woman was surprised at His request not because of His personality, but because of His nationality, it was a perplexity on the surface of things. "How is it that Thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans." "Thou, being a Jew, . . . a woman of Samaria"—both titles were absurdly insufficient. In the sight of God the woman is representative of the whole world—Jesus Christ is Almighty God Incarnate.

"If thou knewest the gift of God, . . . He would have given thee living water." The Gift of God is the Son of God; the gift from the Gift of God is the Holy Spirit. Jesus did not talk about "the gift of God" to the Master of Israel; to him He talked about the need to be born again; He talked about the gift of God to a poor, ignorant, sinful woman. To her He did not say, "Ye must be born again"; He spoke of a gift which would regenerate her, i.e., become in her "a well of water springing up into everlasting life." Our Lord gave the exposition of His salvation, not to Nicodemus, a man of sterling character, but to a sinful woman, and she understood without knowing that she did. She was plainly confused, and yet she trusted Him and asked for the gift, "Sir, give me this water. . . . " Instantly reproof followed on her request (John 4:16-18). That is always the method of the Holy Spirit; we usurp the place of the Holy Spirit when we try to convict a man of sin first.

Our Lord never talked in stages of experience, that is, He does not talk to our heads, He instructs us in our relationship to Himself. Here, He is leading a woman into the grace of God, the overflowing favour of God, it is so overflowing that we trample it under foot; it seems so humble and gentle that we ignore it. Jesus is dealing with the grace of God towards sinners, and the characteristic of the grace of God is that it wells up into everlasting life, "a fountain of living water—not merely a clean heart, but a full one, being kept clean.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT—II

John 7:37-39

Generally speaking, Our Lord does not deal with the experimental stages of salvation, He deals with the great revelation facts; the Holy Spirit expounds the experimental stages. Our Lord makes no divisions such as conversion, regeneration, sanctification, He presents the truth in nugget form and the apostles beat out the nuggets into negotiable gold, it is in their writings that we have the stages of experience worked out. Always view the Epistles as the posthumous work of the ascended Christ; don't say, "That is only what Paul says." In the Epistles we have not got Paul's ideas or Peter's ideas; we have the ideas of the Holy Ghost, and the "pens" happen to be Paul or Peter or John. ". . . holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter 1:21).

1. Christ's Infinite Patience and Human Destitution

In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink. (John 7:37)

Our Lord begins where we would never begin, at the point of human destitution. The greatest blessing a man ever gets from God is the realisation that if he is going to enter into His Kingdom it must be through the door of destitution. Naturally we do not want to begin there, that is why the appeal of Jesus is of no use until we come face to face with realities; then the only One worth listening to is the Lord. We learn to welcome the patience of Jesus only when we get to the point of human destitution. It is not that God will not do anything for us until we get there, but that He cannot. God can do nothing for me if I am sufficient for myself. When we come to the place of destitution spiritually we find the Lord waiting, and saying, "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink." There are hundreds at the place of destitution and they don't know what they want. If I have been obeying the command of Jesus to "go . . . and make disciples" (RV), I know what they want; they want Him. We are so interested in our own spiritual riches that souls that are white unto harvest are all around us and we don't reap one for Him.

Some men enter the Kingdom of heaven through crushing, tragic, overwhelming conviction of sin, but they are not the greatest number; the greatest number enter the Kingdom along this line of spiritual destitution—no power to lay hold of God, no power to do what I ought to do, utterly poverty-stricken. Then, says Jesus, blessed are you, because you have come to the place where you can receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. We are told by some that it is foolish to tell people to ask for the Holy Spirit because this is the dispensation of the Holy Spirit. Thank God it is! God's mighty Spirit is with all men, He impinges on their lives at all points and in unexpected ways, but the great need is to receive the Holy Spirit. There stands the promise for every one who will put it to the test: "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" The bedrock in Jesus Christ's Kingdom is poverty, not possession; not decisions for Christ, but a sense of absolute futility—"I can't begin to do it." That is the entrance; and it does take us a long while to believe we are poor. It is at the point of destitution that the bounty of God can be given.

2. Christ's Infinite Promise and Human Dependence

He that believeth on Me, as the Scripture hath said, out of [him] shall flow rivers of living water. (John 7:38)

To the woman of Samaria, Jesus talked of the benefits to the individual personal life of the living water—"the water that I shall give him shall become [RV] in him a well of water springing up into eternal life" (4:14). Here, He is talking not of the benefits to the individual life at all, but of the rivers of living water that will flow out of the individual life. Jesus did not say, "He that believeth on Me, shall experience the fulness of the blessing of God"; but, "he that believeth on Me, out of him shall escape everything he receives." It is a picture of the unfathomable, incalculable benediction which will flow from the one great sovereign source, belief in Jesus. We have nothing to do with the outflow; we have to see to it that we are destitute enough of spiritual independence to be filled with the Holy Ghost and then pay attention to the Source, Our Lord Himself. You can never measure what God will do through you if you are rightly related to Jesus. The parenthesis in 7:39 does not apply to us: the Holy Ghost has been given; Jesus is glorified; the rivers of living water are there, and, unspeakable wonder! the sacrament may flow through our lives too. All that the one out of whom the rivers of living water are flowing is conscious of is belief in Jesus and maintaining a right relationship to Him; then day by day God is pouring the rivers of living water through you, and it is of His mercy He does not let you know it.

3. Christ's Infinite Power and Human Devotion

But this spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe in Him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified. (John 7:39)

The abiding vital meaning of Pentecost is not that "there were added unto them about three thousand souls"; what happened at Pentecost was that Our Lord was glorified, and that He shed forth from above the Holy Ghost in the plenitude of His power. "Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear" (Acts 2:33). The gift of the Holy Spirit is the impartation of a personal Spirit that blends the historic Son of God and the individual believer into one, and the characteristic of the life is devotion to God, so much so that you don't even know you are devoted to Him until a crisis comes. When you have become united to Jesus it is impossible to talk about your experiences or to pray for yourself because you have been brought into a oneness with Him even as He was one with the Father. The "Higher Christian Life"6 type of teaching is apt to lead us not to worshipping God and to being devoted to Jesus, but merely to pietistic experiences. The snare of experiences is that we keep coming back to the shore when God wants to get us out into the deeps. The one great thing about the salvation of Jesus is that the more you experience it the less you know what you experience; it is only in the initial stages that you know what you experience. The danger is lest we mistake the shores of our experience for the ocean. The experimental aspect of the baptism of the Holy Ghost is not defined by the historic Pentecost, but by Our Lord's words in Acts 1:8—"But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto Me." The spirit that comes in is not that of doing anything for Jesus, but of being a perfect delight to Him.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT—III

The Greatest Day Yet

And when the day of Pentecost was now come [was being fulfilled, mg]. . . . Acts 2:1 (RV)

What an unspeakably wonderful day the Day of Pentecost was! There is only one Bethlehem, one Calvary, one Pentecost; these are the landmarks of Time and Eternity, everything and everyone is judged by them.

Beware of thinking of Pentecost in the light of personal experience only. The descent of the Holy Ghost can never be experimental, it is historical. The reception of the Holy Ghost into our hearts is experimental. Those who insist on the experimental line are in danger of forgetting the revelation and of putting all the emphasis on experience, while those who emphasise the revelation are in danger of forgetting the practical experience. In the New Testament the two are one; the experimental must be based on and regulated by the revelation. We imagine that we have the monopoly of the teaching about the Holy Spirit when we deal with His work in individual lives, viz., His power to transform men on the inside—the most important phase to us, but in God's Book the tiniest phase of the work of the mighty Spirit of God.

1. The Accomplishment of the Promise of the Son

(John 14:26; 15:16; 16:7–15; cf. Matthew 3:11)

These verses are the testimony of Jesus to the Holy Ghost, whom He calls "the Comforter," "the Paraclete." Our Lord told His disciples that it was expedient for them that He should go away because the Paraclete would not come until His work was completed. ". . . if I go, I will send Him unto you" (RV). We know the Holy Spirit first of all through the testimony of Jesus to Him, and then through the conscious enjoyment of His indwelling presence—"for He abideth with you, and shall be in you" (RV).

John 20:22 ("... He breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost") and Acts 2:33 ("Being therefore by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the ^{6.} The Higher Christian Life emphasized sanctification and personal holiness.

Holy Ghost, He hath poured forth this, which ye see and hear" RV) do not refer to the same thing. When Jesus breathed on the disciples what they received was the quickening of new life from the Risen Lord: Pentecost stands for something unrepeatable in the history of the world, viz., the personal descent of the Paraclete. The Holy Ghost came into this world on the Day of Pentecost, and He has been here ever since. He is here, but indiscernible, as Jesus was saying to the few who had the revelation that He was God Incarnate. Have we received the revelation of who the Holy Ghost is?

"Howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth is come, . . . He shall glorify Me." We lose the marvel of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit by thinking of Him as some power that does things. The most rarely recognised aspect of the Holy Spirit's work is that He causes us to do honour to Our Lord. The human spirit uninspired by the Holy Spirit only honours Jesus if He does things. It is easier to dishonour Jesus than we are apt to think because He never insists on being honoured. The Holy Ghost is the One who honours Jesus, and therein lies the essential necessity of receiving Him. "He shall glorify Me," said Jesus. The Holy Spirit does not glorify Christ-likeness, because Christ-likeness can be imitated; He glorifies Christ. It is impossible to imitate Jesus Christ.

2. The Accomplishment of the Promise of the Father (Luke 24:49; Acts 1:8)

And behold, I send forth the promise of My Father upon you. (RV)

Do you say "I am waiting for my Pentecost"? Who told you to wait? "Oh, I am waiting as the disciples did in the upper room." Not all the waiting on earth will ever gain you the baptism with the Holy Ghost. The baptism with the Holy Ghost is the infallible sign that Jesus has ascended to the right hand of God and has received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost. We too often divorce what the New Testament never divorces: the baptism with the Holy Ghost is not an experience apart from Christ, it is the evidence that He has ascended. It is not the baptism with the Holy Ghost that changes men, it is the power of the ascended Christ coming into men's lives by the Holy Ghost that changes them.

". . . but tarry ye in the city, until ye be clothed with power from on high" (RV). "Power from on high"the words have a fascinating sound in the ears of men; but this power is not a magical power, not the power to work miracles; it is the power that transforms character, that sanctifies faculties. "But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Ghost is come upon you" (RV), said Jesus to the disciples, and they did—the power that made them like their Lord (Acts 4:13). It is easy to have the idea that we receive the Holy Spirit as a sort of magical power all to ourselves; the reception of the Holy Spirit is for the purpose of quickening us into identification with Our Lord. We live in utter unadulterated lovalty to the Son of God by reason of the fact that we have received His testimony regarding the Holy Ghost and have received Him into our hearts. People come piously together and ask God to baptise them with the Holy Ghost, but they forget that the first thing the Holy Ghost does is to illuminate the Cross of Christ. The emphasis in the New Testament is always on the Cross. The Cross is the secret of the heart of God, the secret of the Person of the Son of God, the secret of the Holy Ghost's work. It is the Cross alone that made it possible for God to give us the gift of eternal life, and to usher in the great era in which we live—the dispensation of the Holy Ghost.

". . . and ye shall be My witnesses" (RV). The historic Pentecost made these men the incarnation of the Holy Ghost. The apostles became written epistles, i.e., the expression of what they preached. When a man experiences salvation the note of testimony is what Jesus has done for him; when he is baptised with the Holy Ghost he becomes a witness, which means much more than a testifier to blessings received. A witness means that just as Jesus was made broken bread and poured-out wine for our salvation, so we are to be broken bread and poured-out wine in sacrificial service. The baptism with the Holy Ghost is Jesus putting the final seal on His work in you, His seal on your regenerated and entirely sanctified soul, and is your inauguration into service for Him. The Holy Spirit always works through human instrumentality, and there is never any possibility of pride when the Holy Spirit uses us. We are empowered into union with Christ by the Holy Ghost.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT—IV

The Spirit's Cathedral

Ephesians 2:19–22

1. The Habitation of the Holy Ghost in the Mortal Christian

What? Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost . . . ? (1 Corinthians 6:19)

It is one thing to have participated in regeneration and sanctification and quite another thing to enjoy the knowledge that your body is "the temple of the Holy Ghost." That is not an experience, it is a revelation, and a revelation which takes some believing, and then some obeying. Many even in the experience of entire sanctification are ignorant what the Apostle Paul is talking about. As saints our brains ought to be used to systematise and make our own the great revelations given in God's word regarding His purpose for us. People say, "I have received the Holy Spirit, therefore everything I want to do is inspired by Him." By no means; I have to see that I instruct myself regarding these revelations which are only interpreted to me by the Holy Ghost, never by my natural wisdom. There are some saints who are ideally actual, i.e., instructed as well as sanctified and living in unsullied communion with God, and there are others who are like Ephraim, "a cake not turned." Once let it dawn on your mind that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost and instantly the impossible becomes possible; the things you used to pray about, you no longer pray about, but do. As in the natural world, so in the spiritual, knowledge is power. All we need to experience is that we have "passed out of death into life" (RV): what we need to know takes all Time and Eternity. "And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God . . . " (John 17:3). Begin to know Him now, and finish never!

"... in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit" (Ephesians 2:22). The conception in these verses is wonderful in its illuminating power, viz., God is building us for Himself. He does not explain why He takes us certain ways, but this passage explains it: He is building a habitation for Himself.

I am his house—for him to go in and out. He builds me now—and if I cannot see At any time what he is doing with me, 'Tis that he makes the house for me too grand.

George MacDonald

2. The Habitation of the Holy Ghost in the Mystic Christ (1 Corinthians 12:13-27)

For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body. . . . (1 Corinthians 12:13)

God is the Architect of the human body and He is also the Architect of the Body of Christ. There are two Bodies of Christ: the Historic Body and the Mystical Body. The historic Jesus was the habitation of the Holy Ghost (see Luke 3:22; John 1:32-33), and the Mystic Christ, i.e., the Body of Christ composed of those who have experienced regeneration and sanctification, is likewise the habitation of the Holy Ghost. When we are baptised with the Holy Ghost we are no longer isolated believers but part of the Mystical Body of Christ. Beware of attempting to live a holy life alone, it is impossible. Paul continually insists on the "together" aspect-"God . . . hath quickened us together, . . . and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together . . . " (Ephesians 2:4-6). The "together" aspect is always the work of the Holy Ghost.

After the Resurrection we read that Our Lord breathed on the disciples and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost": i.e., He imparted to them the Holy Ghost who quickened them. On the Day of Pentecost we read that "there appeared unto them tongues distributing themselves [mg], like as of fire" (RV)—and the disciples were baptised by the personal Holy Ghost: the quickening became an equipment. "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you" (Acts 1:8). The baptism of the Holy Ghost is the complete uniting of the quickened believer with Christ Himself.

"For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." The baptism with the Holy Ghost is not only a personal experience, it is an experience which makes individual Christians one in the Lord. The only way saints can meet together as one is through the baptism of the Holy Ghost, not through external organisations. The end of all divisions in work for God is when He changes fever into white-heated fervour. Oh, the foolish fever there is these days! Organising this, organising that; a fever of intense activity for God. What is wanted is the baptism with the Holy Ghost which will mean Our Lord's prayer in John 17 is answered—"that they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us" (John 17:21).

3. The Habitation of the Holy Ghost in the Militant Church

... and gave Him to be the head over all things to the church, which is His body. (Ephesians 1:22)

The habitation of the Holy Ghost in the Church is not yet mature, it is easy to despise or ignore it. "The habitation of God through the Spirit" refers to the Christian community as it is in this dispensation, and it is an amazing mix-up! But Christ loves the Church so patiently that He will cleanse it from every blemish, and "present it to Himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing . . . " (Ephesians 5:27).

The different offices of the Church are ordained of God and are based, not on the natural gifts of man, but on the spiritual gifts which Christ gave after He ascended "... and He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers . . . for the edifying [building up, RV] of the body of Christ" (Ephesians 4:11–12); consequently the only sign that a particular gift comes from the risen Christ is that it edifies the Church. Nothing else is of any account, no flights of imagination, no spiritual fancies, only one thing is of account, viz., the building up of men and women in the knowledge of the Lord. One essential difference between before Pentecost and after Pentecost is that from God's standpoint there are no great men after Pentecost. We make great men and women, God does not. No one is called now to be an isolated lonely prophet; the prophets are a figure of the whole Christian Church which is to be isolated collectively from the world.

There is a time coming when this earth will be the habitation of God, at present it is usurped by the world systems of men; when these disappear, then God's "new heaven and new earth" will emerge (Revelation 21:1).

THE GLORY OF THE LORD'S DISCIPLES

Acts 1:7-8

1. The Passing of Intellectual Christianity "It is not for you to know..."

Intellect is never first in spiritual life. We are not born again by thinking about it, we are born again by the power of God. Intellect comes second both in nature and in grace. The things we can express intellectually are the things that are old in our experience; the things that are recent and make us what we are, we cannot define. People say, "You must believe certain things before you can be a Christian." It is impossible. A man's beliefs are the effect of his being a Christian, not the cause of it. The evangelism which bases itself simply on justification by faith produces a hard type of mind, and when it becomes aggressive it produces the "soul-saving" type. It is impossible to locate the "soul-saving" idea in the New Testament. The glory of the Lord's disciples is not the saving of souls; but the "soul of salvation" expressed in personal lives. It is God's work to save souls: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples" (Matthew 28:19 RV). Have we been doing it? The New Testament emphasis is on living justly on the basis of salvation, i.e., expressing in our individual lives the things we believe.

2. The Power of Incarnate Christianity

But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be My witnesses. (RV)

In the New Testament the emphasis is not on believing, but on receiving. The word "believe" means to commit—a commitment in order to receive. Have I ever received anything at all from God? The bedrock of Christianity is not decision for Christ, for a man who decides banks on his decision, not on God. It is the inability to decide—"I have no power to get hold of God, no power to be what I know He wants me to be." Then, says Jesus, "Blessed are you." "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

'and ye shall be My witnesses"—not witnesses of what Jesus can do or of His gospel, but witnesses unto Him, that is, He is perfectly satisfied with us wherever we are. The baptism of the Holy Ghost does not mean signs and wonders, but something remarkably other—a life transfigured by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit and the realisation of the Redemption in personal experience. (See Acts 4:13; Galatians 4:19.) Historically, the baptism of the Holy Ghost added nothing to the apostles' doctrine, it made them the incarnation of what they preached. The great idea is not that we are at work for God, but that He is at work in us; not that we are devoted to a cause and doing aggressive work for God, but that He is working out a strong family likeness to His Son in us. "My witnesses"—the witness may or may not lead to martyrdom, but the indwelling of the Holy Ghost in us and the baptism of the Holy Ghost upon us, makes an expression of the life of Jesus that perfectly satisfies Him wherever we are.

3. The Programme of Identified Christianity . . . both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth. (RV)

God does the arranging of our programme. At certain stages of spiritual experience we feel we could do a lot if we could arrange the scene of our own martyrdom, but the Spirit of God reminds us that we do not choose the place of our offering (Deuteronomy 12:13–14). God has the setting of the saint's life. Everyone who is born from above (RV mg) wants to be a missionary, it is the very nature of the Spirit they receive, viz., the Spirit of Jesus, and the Spirit of Jesus is expressed in John 3:16, "God so loved the world . . ." God keeps open house for the universe. "Lovest thou Me . . . ?" said Jesus, "Feed My lambs." We prefer to build up converts to our own point of view. Are we prepared to be the disciples of the Lord Jesus in whom the glory of God is manifested? Can God see the manifestation of His Son's life in us? "Every one therefore who shall confess Me before men . . ." (RV). It is easy to be priggish and profess, but it takes the indwelling of the Holy Spirit to so identify us with Jesus Christ that when we are put in a corner we confess Him, not denounce others. "No, I cannot take part in what you are doing because it would imperil my relationship to Jesus Christ." We are afraid of being "speckled birds" in the company we belong to. Jesus says, "Don't be ashamed to confess Me."

"But ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost . . ." (Acts 1:5). Why do we want to be baptised with the Holy Ghost? All depends on that "why." If we want to be baptised with the Holy Ghost that we may be of use, it is all up; or because we want peace and joy and deliverance from sin, it is all up. "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost," not for anything for ourselves at all, but that we may be witnesses unto Him. God will never answer the prayer to be baptised with the Holy Ghost for any other reason than to make us witnesses to Jesus. To be consciously desirous of anything but that one thing is to be off the main track. The Holy Ghost is transparent honesty. When we pray, "Oh Lord, baptise me with the Holy Ghost whatever it means," God will give us a glimpse of our self-interest and self-seeking until we are willing for everything to go and there is nothing left but Himself. As long as there is self-interest and self-seeking, something has to go. God is amazingly patient. The perplexity is not because of the hardness of the way, but the unwilling pride of sin, the stubborn yielding bit by bit, when it might be done any second. The acceptance of the Divine nature involves in it obedience to the Divine precepts. The commands of God are enablings. God banks entirely on His own Spirit, and when we attempt, His ability is granted immediately. We have a great deal more power than we know, and as we do the overcoming we find He is there all the time until it becomes the habit of our life.

The baptism with the Holy Ghost is the great sovereign work of the personal Holy Ghost; entire sanctification is our personal experience of it.

THE BEST IS YET TO BE

John 4

"The best is yet to be" is really true from Jesus Christ's standpoint. There is nothing noble the human mind has ever hoped for or dreamed of that will not be fulfilled, and a great deal more.

1. In Emancipating Vision

But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; and it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of My Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on My servants and on My handmaidens I will pour out in those days of My Spirit; and they shall prophesy. (Acts 2:16–18)

The vision of the agnostic, the socialist, the imperialist, or the Christian is the same; they all see the thing that is right—a time of peace on earth, a state of goodwill and liberty at present inconceivable. There is nothing wrong with the vision, and there is no difference in the vision, because its source is the Spirit of God. The thing to be criticised is not the vision, but the way in which the vision is to be realised. "Your sons and daughters" refers to the men and women who have no concern about the redemptive point of view. The Spirit of God sways men who do not know Him, and they talk God's mind without a knowledge of Him personally. "My servants and My handmaidens" are those who not only see the vision but have become personally related to Jesus Christ.

2. In Haphazard Ways

And He must needs go through Samaria. (John 4:4)

One great thing to notice is that God's order comes to us in the haphazard. We try to plan our ways and work things out for ourselves, but they go wrong because there are more facts than we know; whereas if we just go on with the days as they come, we find that God's order comes to us in that apparently haphazard way. The man who does not know God depends entirely on his own wits and forecasting. If instead of arranging our own programmes we will trust to the wisdom of God and concentrate all our efforts on the duty that lies nearest, we shall find that we meet God in that way and in no other. When we become "amateur providences" and arrange times and meetings, we may cause certain things to happen, but we very rarely meet God in that way; we meet Him most effectively as we go on in the ordinary ways. Where you look for God, He does not appear; where you do not look for Him, there He is—a trick of the weather, a letter, and suddenly you are face to face with the best thing you ever met. This comes out all through the life of Jesus Christ; it was the most natural thing for Him to go through Samaria.

"And we know that to them that love God all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to His purpose" (Romans 8:28 RV). It is not faith to believe that God is making things work together for good unless we are up against things that are ostensibly working for bad. God's order does come in the haphazard, but only to those who love God; the only way in which God's order is recognised in our lives is by being what Jesus calls "born from above" (RV mg). God's order comes to us in the ordinary haphazard circumstances of life, and when we are in touch with Him the sacrament of His presence comes in the common elements of Nature and ordinary people. The real meaning of the word "sacrament" is that the Presence of God comes through the common elements of the bread and the wine. If you are of a religious nature you will be inclined to put store on the symbol, but beware lest you put the symbol in the place of the thing symbolised; it is easy to do it, but once you mistake the symbol for what it symbolises, you are off the track. "Consider the lilies of the field," said Jesus; we consider motor-cars and aeroplanes, things full of energy. Jesus never drew His illustrations from these things, but always from His Father's handiwork. A lily grows where it is put and does not fuss; we are always inclined to say "I would be all right if only I were somewhere else." If our spiritual life does not grow where we are, it will grow nowhere.

3. In Exuberant Vitality

If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water. (John 4:10)

Jesus Christ never preached down to the level of His audience; He did not rely on human understanding, but on the interpreting power of the Holy Spirit in a human mind. The disciples frequently misunderstood what Our Lord said, but He banked everything on the work of the Holy Spirit. "Howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He shall guide you into all the truth" (RV).

Jesus surprised the woman of Samaria by His extraordinary generosity of mind—"How is it that Thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans." Our Lord knew who the woman was, but He did not talk with the smile of a superior person, "My poor ignorant woman, when will you understand what I say?" He let her talk about what she knew, and she talked with a growing wonder behind it. The first thing Jesus did was to awaken in her a sense of need of more than she had, and until she got the length of asking—"Sir, give me this water," He did not say a word about her sin. We don't take Jesus Christ's way, our first aim is to convict people of sin; Jesus Christ's aim was to get at them where they lived. No man can stand the revelation of what he really is in God's sight unless he is handled by Jesus Christ first. Jesus Christ takes a Saviour's view of what is wrong, not a sentimental view. He gently and firmly handles what is wrong in order to remove it.

"If thou knewest the gift of God, . . . thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water." Jesus is referring to the gift of the Holy Spirit. Unless I receive a totally new Spirit, all the believing and correct doctrine in the world will never alter me; it is not a question of believing, but of receiving. The symbol Jesus uses is that of a well of water, springing up into everlasting life." "Everlasting life" is the gift of God Himself; it springs up and expresses itself in a strong family likeness to Jesus. The great sign that a man has received the Holy Spirit is that he begins to manifest the fruits of the Spirit. Life manifests itself as life, not as nervous hysterics. "I am come that they might have life," said Jesus, "and that they might have it more abundantly." This "well of water" is full of the ease and power of God which never exhausts itself, but continually recuperates us as we spend it out.

The message of the Gospel is not that God gives a man a clean heart, but that He gives him a pure heart. Jesus never says, "Decide for Me," but "Come to Me in your absolute emptiness and let Me fill you." Christianity is not a clean heart empty, which means a collapse sooner or later, but a life passionately full of personal devotion to Jesus Christ, and a determined identification with His interests in other men. "For the Father seeketh such to worship Him."

APRIL 8, 1917, ZEITOUN, EASTER SUNDAY, SUNDAY MORNING SERVICE

THE UNTENANTED UNIVERSE OF EASTER

He appeared to me also. 1 Corinthians 15:8 (RV)

Very few of us come to realise what is ours through the resurrected Lord, viz., that we can really draw on Him for body, soul and spirit now. We do not trust in a Christ who died and rose again twenty centuries ago; He must be a present Reality, an efficacious power now. One of the great words of God in our spiritual calendar is NOW. It is not that we gradually get to God, or gradually get away from Him; we are either there now or we are not. We may get into touch with God instanter if we will, not because of our merit, but simply on the ground of the Redemption; and if any man has got out of touch with God in the tiniest degree he can get back now, not presently; not by trying to recall things that will exonerate him for what he has done, but by an unconditional abandon to Jesus Christ, and he will realise the efficacious power of the resurrected Lord now.

To use the New Testament as a book of proof is nonsense. If you do not believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, the New Testament will not convince you that He is; if you do not believe in the Resurrection, the New Testament will not convince you of it. The New Testament is written for those who do not need convincing. After the Resurrection our Lord appeared to those only who knew Him in the days of His flesh. How many people recognised that the Carpenter of Nazareth was God Incarnate? Very few bothered their heads about Him; He was totally ignorable. The relationship to our Lord is a purely spiritual one, and the Resurrection brought out the personal relationship of each one—of Peter and John, Mary and Thomas (see John 20 and 21); and here the marvellously personal note is brought out—"He appeared to me also" (RV). Our Lord never sent out His disciples to proclaim the Gospel on the ground that He had done something for them, but only on the ground that they had seen Him: "But go unto My brethren, and say to them . . ." (RV). Mary Magdalene was not sent on the ground that Jesus had cast seven demons out of her, but on the ground of the Resurrection. She knew now who Jesus was; before she only knew what He could do.

1. The Last Word about Myself and that He appeared to Cephas . . . (1 Corinthians 15:5 RV)

Cephas was the man who but a little while before denied that he knew Jesus; he saw Him on the cross dead, and the last memory in his mind would be, "Yes, and I did not stand by Him, I denied Him with oaths and curses." Think of the agony of Peter's mind, and then think of this—"He appeared to Cephas." Jesus came to His heart-broken disciple after His resurrection, no record is given of what took place; all we know is that Jesus reinstated Peter in public (see John 21:15–17). But read Peter's Epistles, they are full of the kindness of the Good Shepherd to the sheep.

The great essential bedrock of relationship to the resurrected Lord is that we know the last word about ourselves. Do I really know that I am a pauper spiritually? Then Jesus says, "Blessed are you." "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." The Easter message is that the Lord "appeared to me also." I know Him personally for myself.

Supposing I have been delivered from sin, would that necessarily assure me that I should know Jesus if I saw Him? Not the tiniest bit. Mary Magdalene had had seven demons cast out of her, but when she saw Jesus after the Resurrection she was blinded by grief and personal sorrow and she mistook Him for the gardener. I, too, may mistake Him for "the gardener." But the Eternal Resurrected Christ may touch me through the gardener. He may touch me through a child, through a flower. If I am in living personal relationship to Jesus the things that make the common affairs of life become conveyors of the real presence of God.

If you have come to the last word about yourself, watch for the Lord; He is there all the time, and He will come to you in some supernatural way. "Lo, I am with you all the days" (RV mg). It is not an effort of faith, but a marvellous realisation.

2. The Least Witness to the Lord

And last of all, as unto one born out of due time, He appeared to me also. (RV)

"To me also"—the most unlikely! It is easy to pretend to be "less than the least" without being it, easy to be false in emotion before God, but Paul is not a pretentious humbug, he is not simply speaking out of the deep modesty of his soul, he is speaking what he believes. One of the greatest revelations is that Jesus does not appear to a man because he deserves it, but out of the generosity of His own heart on the ground of the man's need. Let me recognise I need Him, and He will appear. I believe many a man keeps away from Jesus Christ through a sense of honour—"I don't deny that God can forgive me, but I know what I am, and I don't want to let Him down." Once let that man realise that Christianity is not a decision for Christ, but a complete surrender to let Him take the lordship, and Jesus will appear to him. He will do more, He will put into him a totally new heredity, the heredity that was in Himself. That is the amazement of regeneration. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" (Luke 11:13).

3. The Living Way before the Lord

Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. (Matthew 16:16)

It is a marvellous thing to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, but a more marvellous thing to know that He is the Son of God in me. "But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by His grace, to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood" (Galatians 1:15–16). My relationship to Jesus is not on the ground of Christian evidences, that I can pass an examination on the doctrine of the Person of Christ, but suddenly by the great surprise of the indwelling Spirit of God I see who Jesus is, the Son of the Living God, absolute Lord and Master. The basis of the Christian life is an inner illumination that reveals to me who Jesus is, and on that revelation and the public confession of it, Jesus says He will build His church (Matthew 16:15–18).

The searching point is—Has Jesus appeared to me also? not simply am I saved and turned into another man, but do I know Him? Is He evidencing His marvellous presence in me? Can I bank on Him not by an effort of faith, but by a real influx of His resurrection life? One of the greatest indications as to the way the Spirit of God deals with us is to notice where we are exhausted without recuperation. When by overenergy on our part, or over-calculation of our own, we undertake more than God has sanctioned, there is the warning note of weariness. If spiritual people would only take heed, they would find God's gentle warning always comes—"Not that way; that must be left alone, this must be given up; this is the course for you."

The Living Way before the Lord is to keep in personal touch with Jesus Christ. Never take Jesus Christ as the Representative of God: He is God or there is none. If Jesus Christ is not God manifest in the flesh, we know nothing whatever about God; we are not only agnostic, but hopeless. But if Jesus Christ is what He says He is, then He is God to me.

Christianity is a personal history with Jesus. "And ye shall be My witnesses" (RV). The baptism of the Holy Ghost does not mean that we are put into some great and successful venture for God, but that we are a satisfaction to Jesus wherever we are placed. It is not a question of service done, but that our living relationship to Him is a witness that satisfies Him.

UNCENSORED TRUTH

The twilight that I desired hath been turned into trembling unto me. Isaiah 21:4 (RV)

The Bible never deals with the domains our human minds delight to deal with. The Bible deals with heaven and hell, good and bad, God and the devil, right and wrong, salvation and damnation; we like to deal with the things in between. The Bible pays no attention to our susceptibilities. "The twilight that I desired . . ." In the Bible there is no twilight, but intense light and intense darkness.

1. The Desired Neutrality

"He that gathereth not with Me scattereth abroad" (Matthew 12:30). Neutrality in religion is always cowardice—"I don't want to take sides." God turns the cowardice of a desired neutrality into terror: "The twilight that I desired hath been turned into trembling unto me." Our Lord makes everything depend upon a man's relationship to Himself, not upon a man's goodness or badness. Twilight is a desirable time—not too strong a light and not too dark a dark; details are not too clearly manifested, ugly lines are not visible, everything looks wonderful. We like to get into the sentimental domain of twilight spiritually.

"Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as He is righteous" (1 John 3:7). The Apostle John won't allow "twilight" in a child of God. There is no such thing as being neutral, we are either children of God or of the devil; we either love or we hate; the twilight is torn away ruthlessly. We are secretly unrighteous before God, not before men, we do not wish our secret sins dragged into the light of God's countenance; we object to the intense light of dawn, and desire twilight. When God's searching comes it is that kind of unrighteousness that is revealed, and we cannot say a word. We realise we have ignored God and have indulged in unrighteousness before Him.

2. The Sudden Conviction of Nemesis

"He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning" (1 John 3:8). Nemesis means retributive justice, something it is impossible to escape. We recoil when we realise the inevitable things in life, and it is the things we call inevitable that make us disbelieve in God. We are not conscious anarchists against God, we worship Him to a certain point, but immediately the Spirit of God begins to point out something in us that is wrong, we are offended (cf. Matthew 11:6; John 6:66).

As long as Jesus Christ will remain the "meek and mild and gentle Jesus" I will listen to Him, but immediately He sets His face against my particular sin, my un-righteousness, my self-indulgence, I am going to have no more of Him; then the nemesis comes, and I realise that I am siding with the forces which are against Jesus Christ. Immediately God touches me or mine, I realise that I have the disposition of the devil in spite of all my religion and morality. There is a disposition in us that does not belong to human nature but to the devil, the spirit of unloving, unrighteous hatred. "Develop your deepest instinct and you will find it to be God"; Jesus says, "For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed . . ." If we live in the twilight we say, "Those things are not in my heart." The right attitude to the truth is, "Lord, Thou knowest"; otherwise we shall find to our cost that what Jesus said about the human heart is true. We are all possible saints or possible devils. "Not as Cain, who was of that wicked one, and slew his brother" (1 John 3:12). The spirit of Cain is jealousy, spite and envy. There is no hatred on earth like the hatred of a middling good man for the good man. The first civilisation was founded by a murderer. There is something worse than war, and that is the average run of commercial business life in piping times of peace; it does not destroy a man's body, but it almost damns his soul, it makes a cultured detester of the one who competes against him.

3. The Secret Condition of the Divine Nature

"In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil" (1 John 3:10). Lovingkindness is the purest, rarest evidence of the indwelling of the Spirit of God—no more neutrality, no more dread of the nemesis, just the Divine nature, beautiful, pleasant beneficence, all summed up in the word "Love." When the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts it means that we identify ourselves with God's interest in other people, and God is interested in some strange people! Âre we prepared to waive all our predilections and identify ourselves entirely with God's interests in other people? Is the Divine nature getting its way in us? Our actual conduct among men has to be moulded by the conduct of our Heavenly Father. When we think of the grudge we owe someone, let the Spirit of God bring back to our memory how we have treated God, and then begin to be His children. "He is kind toward the unthankful and evil" (Luke 6:35 RV). That is the actual practical climax of the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount. Never testify with your lips what your life does not back up.

NOVEMBER 19, 1916, ZEITOUN, SUNDAY MORNING SERVICE

THE LORD AS OUR "DEAR DREAD"

Then said Jesus, "It is for judgement that I have come into this world, to make the sightless see, to make the seeing blind." John 9:39 (MOFFATT)

That is one of the stiff things Jesus said. It is either nonsense, or what we believe it to be—the very wisdom of God. There is no contradiction in that verse and John 12:47—"For I came not to judge the world, but to save the world"; Jesus Christ did not come to pronounce judgement, He Himself is the judgement; whenever we come across Him we are judged instantly.

1. In the Unerring Directness of His Presence

One of the most remarkable things about Jesus Christ is that although He was full of love and gentleness, yet in His presence every one not only felt benefited, but ashamed. It is His presence that judges us; we long to meet Him, and yet we dread to. We have all known people like that; to meet them is to feel judged, not by anything they say—we are rarely judged by what people say, but by their character.

(a) The Judgement of His Language

People realised His judgement in His words, not in His pronouncements such as Matthew 23, but in His casual language, judgement came straight home. So with our friends, some casual word, a word not necessarily addressed to us at all, judges us and we feel our meanness, that we have missed the mark. Jesus did not stand as a prophet and utter judgements; wherever He went the unerring directness of His presence located men. We are judged too by children, we often feel ashamed in their presence; they are much more our judges than we theirs, their simplicity and attitude to things illustrates our Lord's judgements.

(b) The Judgement of His Labours

The sense of judgement was brought home in the wonderful things Jesus did. When He told Peter to put out into the deep, and the multitude of fishes was so great that the boats began to sink, "Simon Peter . . . fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord." What Jesus did judged Peter absolutely. He did not say, "You should have done what I told you without any demur," He was simply ineffably and extraordinarily kind, and that drove the judgement home.

(c) The Judgement of His Looks

It is not sentimental to say that the photograph of some people brings a sense of judgement; in certain moods we feel rebuked when we meet the look direct of someone we love, or look at their photo. If that is true of human beings, what must it have been of the looks of Jesus? "And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. . . . And he went out, and wept bitterly" (RV). I do not think there was any rebuke in His look—"How dare you do such a thing," but a look of absolute God-likeness, and it brought the judgement home (cf. Mark 10:21; 3:5).

It is not simply the things Jesus says to us directly, or what He does in the way of judgement particularly; it is Himself entirely, wherever He comes we are judged.

(d) The Judgement of His Life

If you look at a sheep in the summer time you would say it was white, but see it against the background of startling virgin snow and it looks like a blot on the landscape. If we judge ourselves by one another we do not feel condemned (see 2 Corinthians 10:12); but immediately Jesus Christ is in the background—His life, His language, His looks, His labours, we feel judged instantly. "It is for judgement that I have come into this world" (MOFFATT). The judgement that Jesus Christ's presence brings makes us pronounce judgement on ourselves, we feel a sense of shame, or of missing the mark, and we determine never to do that thing again. If Jesus Christ was only like a man, with a lynx eye for seeing everything that was wrong, we might be defiant. When someone with fiendish penetration unearths all we are, it does not bring judgement home to us, it awakens resentment and we glory in our badness; but when we come across the unerring directness of Jesus Christ's presence we feel as Peter felt—"Depart from me, . . . O Lord." He felt unfit to be anywhere near Jesus.

2. In the Unexpected Discovery of His Presentations

(a) The Blindness of Human Judgement

Jesus said some astounding things. This is one of them—"I have come . . . to make the seeing blind" (MOFFATT). "For man looketh on the outward appearance . . ." As long as we deal with things theoretically, we think that the best thing to do. I see certain facts in your life, you see certain facts in mine, and we pass judgement on one another. Jesus says that our judgement is blind, it does not see.

(b) The Blunders of His Judges

"Who do men say that the Son of man is? And they said, Some say John the Baptist; some, Elijah; and others, Jeremiah, or one of the prophets" (Matthew 16:13–14 RV). "He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils He casteth out devils" (Mark 3:22). "Behold, a gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!" (Luke 7:34). These are some of the blunders of the human judgements of Jesus.

(c) The Astonishment of His Judgements

For instance, take Our Lord's judgement of Peter—"Thou art Simon the son of John: thou shalt be called Cephas (which is by interpretation Peter)" (John 1:42 RV), that is, "Rock or Stone"(mg). Any ordinary common-sense person would say it was absurd to call Peter a rock, he was the most impulsive, the most unreliable of all the disciples: and yet the judgement of Jesus proved to be correct. Again, Jesus saw Nicodemus alone, and although he was a cowardly disciple, He spoke the most vital truth He ever spoke to him. Again, He talked to a sinful woman about worshipping God and about the gift of the Holy Spirit.

We are apt to think the judgements of Jesus are wrong, but when they come straight home in our personal lives we judge in the same way. At first we are certain that our common-sense is wise, that we see and understand; when Jesus comes. He makes that seeing blind. The first coming of Jesus into a life brings confusion, not peace (see Matthew 10:34). When we receive the Holy Spirit the immediate manifestation is not peace and joy, but amazement, a sense of division instead of order, because we are being re-related to everything and seeing things differently: we had been seeing in a blind way. Before we received the Holy Spirit we used to have very clear and emphatic judgements, now in certain matters we have not even ordinary common-sense judgement, we seem altogether impoverished. The way Jesus judges makes us know we are blind. We decide what is the most sensible common-sense thing to do, then Jesus comes instantly with His judgement and confuses everything, and in the end He brings out something that proves to be the perfect wisdom of God. The judgements of Jesus are always unexpected; unexpected in every way, e.g., Matthew 25:37-40.

3. In the Unceasing Deliberateness of His Power

It is for judgement that I have come into this world.
(MOFFATT)

Jesus says the Father ". . . hath given Him authority to execute judgement also, because He is the Son of man" (John 5:27). The first of His judgements and the last, are Himself—His presence, His words, His labours, His looks, His life; these judge us all through, and it is to be the same in the end. "Judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come." Our Lord is unceasingly deliberate, the beginning and the end of His judgement is the same; He will not pass a hasty judgement on us. When He comes He will judge us straightaway, and we shall accept His judgement.

There is no vindictiveness in Our Lord's judgements; He passes judgement always out of His personal love. To my mind the thought of the last judgement is a superb comfort, because we know who is to be the judge: Jesus is to be the judge. He will not pass a judgement that scathes, we can give ourselves over to Him knowing perfectly well that there are certain things in us which must go, and we are only too willing for them to go, but they cannot go without our feeling the pain and the shame of ever having held to them.

When we have wronged someone we love, the hard thing is not that he says something against us, but that he does not. That is the way our Lord judges, by His kindness (cf. Luke 15:21–24).

No! I dare not raise One prayer, to look aloft, lest it should gaze On such forgiveness as would break my heart.

H. S. Sutton

"... not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance" (Romans 2:4). Some passages in the New Testament are taken to refer to the Second Coming of Our Lord, but their real meaning is His presence (e.g., 1 Thessalonians 2:19; 3:13; 5:23; 1 John 2:28). He may come at any minute into our minds, or into our circumstances, and suddenly we feel a sense of shame. He is a "dear dread," we long to see Him and yet we are afraid to, because we know His presence will bring judgement on the things that are wrong.

"For every one that doeth ill hateth the light, and cometh not to the light, lest his works should be reproved" (John 3:20 RV). You instantly know when you are away from the light by the lust of vindication in yourself—"I know I am right," and you may dispute it right up to the threshold of the Lord's coming, but when He comes, instead of vindicating yourself, you will feel like Peter, "Depart from me, . . . O Lord."

"If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His" (Romans 8:9). When we have a ban of finality about our views, we do not exhibit the Spirit of Jesus, but the spirit of the Pharisee. We pronounce judgements, not by our character or our goodness, but by the intolerant ban of finality in our views, which awakens resentment and has none of the Spirit of Jesus in it. Jesus never judged like that. It was His presence, His inherent holiness that judged. Whenever we see Him we are judged instantly. We have to practise the presence of Jesus and work on the basis of His disposition. When we have experienced the unfathomable forgiveness of God for all our wrong, we must exhibit that same forgiveness to others.

^{9.} ban of finality: the limitation or "curse" of having one's mind made up, unwilling to consider new information.

THE MIRACLE OF JOY

Joy is the great note all through the Bible. We have the notion of joy that arises from good spirits or good health, but the miracle of the joy of God has nothing to do with a man's life or his circumstances or the condition he is in. Jesus does not come to a man and say "Cheer up," He plants within a man the miracle of the joy of God's own nature. "Then will I go unto the altar of God, unto God my exceeding joy" (Psalm 43:4). The stronghold of the Christian faith is the joy of God not my joy in God. It is a great thing for a man to have faith in the joy of God, to know that nothing alters the fact of God's joy. God reigns and rules and rejoices, and His joy is our strength. The miracle of the Christian life is that God can give a man joy in the midst of external misery, a joy which gives him power to work until the misery is removed. Joy is different from happiness, because happiness depends on what happens. There are elements in our circumstances we cannot help, joy is independent of them all.

That My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. (John 15:11)

What was the joy of Jesus? That He did the will of His Father, and He wants that joy to be ours. Have I got the joy of Jesus, not a pumped-up ecstasy? The joy of Jesus is a miracle, it is not the outcome of my doing things or of my being good, but of my receiving the very nature of God. In every phase of human experience apart from Jesus, there is something that hinders our getting full joy. We may have the fulfilment of our ambitions, we may have love and money, yet there is the sense of something unfulfilled, something not finished, not right. A man is only joyful when he fulfils the design of God's creation of him, and that is a joy that can never be quenched.

... who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame. (Hebrews 12:2)

What was the joy set before Jesus? The joy of bringing many sons to glory, not saved souls. It cost Jesus the Cross, but He despised the shame of it because of the joy that was set before Him. He had the task of taking the worst piece of broken earthenware and making him into a son of God. If Jesus cannot do that, then He has not succeeded in what He came to do. The badness does not hinder Him, and the goodness does not assist Him.

Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full. (John 16:24)

"Ask in My Name," says Jesus, i.e., "in My nature." How can I have the nature of Jesus? By being born from above (RV mg), by the Holy Spirit coming into me on the ground of the Redemption and putting into me the disposition of Jesus. It is all done by the miracle of God's grace. "For the Father Himself loveth you," it is the wonder of a complete communion between you and the Father.

There are crushing, unspeakable sorrows in this world. To any man with his eyes open, life is certainly not worth living apart from Jesus Christ. If it is worth living, it is because he is blind (see 2 Corinthians 4:3–4). Am I going to live in a fool's paradise, or let God open my eyes?

The joy of God remained with Jesus, and He said, "I want My joy to be in you." The wonder of communion is that I know and believe that Jesus Christ has redeemed the world; my part is to get men to realise it and then devote themselves to Jesus. Am I willing to forgo every other interest and identify myself with Jesus Christ's interests in other people? "... that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." The people who influence us are those who have stood unconsciously for the right thing, they are like the stars and the lilies, and the joy of God flows through them all the time.

"Thou wilt show me the path of life: in Thy presence is fulness of joy; at Thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore"—an eternity of gratitude. Am I grateful to God for showing me the way of life? "I am the Way," not creed, nor church, nor doctrine, but Jesus Christ. God can take any man and put the miracle of His joy into Him, and enable him to manifest it in the actual details of his life.

HIS VOICE

And the sheep follow him: for they know his voice. John

We do not use our ears to hear in the particular way our Lord means, we use them to listen to what our disposition wishes us to decipher, either from fear or desire, as the case may be. When we desire a thing we shut ourselves off from every other thing and concentrate on our desire, but the hearkening our Lord indicates springs from neither fear nor desire, but from an intense humility. When we are born again we are no longer muddled by idiosyncrasies, and we begin to listen irrespective of our disposition.

1. The Distractions of Individuality

And they heard the voice of the LORD God . . . : and Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the LORD God. (Genesis 3:8)

In this verse the identification of voice with personality is clear. When individuality comes into contact with God's voice, it desires not to hear it. Adam, in taking his right to himself, made individuality lord it over personality: communion with God was lost and he became tyrannical over himself and would allow no intimation from personality. Adam and Eve are not now saying of God's voice, "Cause me to hear it"; they are hiding from His presence in fear. They have taken individuality, which is the God-created husk of personality, and made it god, and when the Creator, who speaks only in the language of personality, came, they were afraid. It is now self-realisation, not Godrealisation. Self-realisation is based on individuality which is entrenched in human nature through sin, and it effectually distracts us from wanting to hear God's voice. Anything that makes for the realisation of individual relationships, individual well-being and development—that is the thing we want to hear. When the voice of God comes it disregards all that, and it produces terror. We don't want God to cause us to hear His voice, we want God to establish and deify the voices that characterise our individuality, our notions of what we ought to be. Wherever there is self-realisation, the voice of God is a continual embarrassment. Individuality ignores Jesus Christ; when He speaks our individual concerns make too much noise for us to hear His voice. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." Are we distracted from hearing God's voice by any form of individuality? If God says something not in accordance with my individual attitude to things, do I really want to hear His voice? Jesus Christ deals always with our personal relationship to Him; He totally disregards individuality; it does not come into His calculations and He has no consideration for it, because individuality is simply the husk, personality is the kernel.

2. The Delight of Intimacy

Thou that dwellest in the gardens, thy companions hearken for thy voice: cause me to hear it. (RV)

The companions of God, i.e., the angels and the saints, hear His voice. In God's garden God Himself is the cultivator and the producer, the refiner of its atmosphere and flowers, of its human and animal life, and everything.

(a) The Detachment of Transfiguration

"And this voice we ourselves heard come out of heaven ..." (2 Peter 1:18 RV). When we are really detached from individuality, detached from every form of selfrealisation, we experience something which corresponds to Peter's experience on the Mount, and it is then that God says to us, "This is My beloved Son: hear ye Him" (RV). Not only do we hear God say, "This is My beloved Son: hear ye Him," but we have.

(b) The Devotion of Trustfulness
"And the sheep hear his voice. . . . And the sheep follow him: for they know his voice" (John 10:3-4). Trustfulness is based on confidence in God whose ways I do not understand; if I did, there would be no need for trust. There are many ways of following the Lamb whithersoever He goeth because we know His voice. His voice has no tone of self-realisation in it, nor of sin, but only the tone of the Holy Ghost. His voice is essentially simple; it is "a still small voice," totally unlike any other voice. The Lord is not in the wind, not in the earthquake or in the fire, but only in "a sound of gentle stillness" (RV mg).

If we have had a personal touch from Jesus it manifests itself in the desire of inspiration.

(c) The Desire of Inspiration

Our whole life is desirous of saying "Cause me to hear it." We discern not by faith, but by love, by intimacy with God. The Old Testament makes much of faith; the New Testament makes everything of the relationship of love; "Lovest thou Me? . . . Feed My sheep." ". . . the greatest of these is love" (RV).

That is why our Lord placed Mary of Bethany's act so high; it was not an act of faith, but of absolute love. The breaking of the alabaster box revealed the unconscious sympathy of her spirit with Jesus Christ.

Have I this delight of intimacy, or am I trying to bend Almighty God to some end of my own? Am I asking Him to make me a particular type of saint? If through my love for Him I am discerning His voice, it is a proof that individuality has been effaced in the oneness of personal relationship. The real enemy to the delight of intimacy with Jesus is not sin, but individual relationships (cf. Luke 14:26). Distraction comes from intimacy with those who are not intimate with Jesus.

We can always know whether we are hearkening to God's voice by whether we have joy or not; if there is no joy, we are not hearkening. Hearkening to the voice of God will produce the joy that Jesus had. "... that My joy may be in you, and that your joy may be fulfilled" (RV). A life of intimacy with God is characterised by joy. You cannot counterfeit joy or peace. What is of value to God is what we are, not what we affect to be.

Is your life truly "hid with Christ in God"? If it is, your continual request is—"Cause me to hear Thy voice." Can we hear the voice in which there is no self-realisation, no self-interest, no individual preference? Spiritual muddle comes because we have other interests and loyalties, and these loyalties break our intimacy with Jesus Christ. When there is the clash of self-realisation, and individual preferences come in and compete, we have to put them on one side and remain loyal to our Lord and to nothing and no one else.

There is darkness which comes from excess of light as well as darkness which is caused by sin. There are times when it is dark with inarticulateness; there is no speech, no understanding, no guide, because you are in the centre of the light. Stedfastly endure the trial and you will get direction from it. "What I tell you in the darkness, that speak ye in the light" (RV). Darkness is the time to listen, not to speak; if you do speak, you will speak in the wrong mood; you will be inclined to criticise God's providential arrangements for other lives and to tell Him He has no business to allow these things. As long as you are in the dark you do not know what God is doing; immediately you get into the light, you discover it. "Because thou hast kept the word of My patience . . ." The test always comes along the line of patience.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE GREAT HOUR

When it was yet dark . . . John 20:1

There is twilight before night, and an infinitely deeper dark before dawn; but there are hours in spiritual experience darker than either of these, when the new day looks like disaster, and light and illumination have not yet come. There is no possible progress in personal life or national life without cataclysms, big crises, breaks. In our ordinary life we have the idea that things should gradually progress, but there comes a time when there is a tumble-up, a mixture of God and man and fiends, of crime and abomination, and all our idea of steady progress is done for, although there may be progress in individual lives. In the Bible there is the same idea. For instance, take what our Lord says about new birth— "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:3). Some teachers make new birth a simple and natural thing, they say it is necessary, but a necessity along the line of natural development. When Jesus Christ talks about it He implies that the need to be born again is an indication of something radically wrong-"Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." It is a crisis. We like to talk about the light of God coming like the dawn, but it never does to begin with, it comes in a lightning flash, in terrific upheaval. Things do not go unless they are started, and the start of everything in history and in men's souls proves that the basis of things is not rational but tragic; consequently there must be a crisis.

1. The Dark of the Darkest Dawn

The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark.... (John 20:1)

Can you imagine anything more completely dark than that? Mary Magdalene had had a wonderful history with Jesus Christ, He had absolutely delivered her: "and certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene, out of whom went seven devils, . . ." then she saw Him crucified before her eyes, and now she has come to mourn the biggest disaster of her life. "When it was yet dark"—no light or illumination.

Many may be going through this experience. The testimony they used to give, which was quite genuine, is not working now, they are in other conditions and it is no good; they work for all they are worth, but there is neither life nor power in it. The weakness of many a testimony is that it is based on what the Lord has done—"I have to testify to what God has done for me in order that other people may have the same thing done for them." It sounds all right, but it is not the New Testament order of testimony. Jesus Christ never sent out a disciple on the ground that He had done something for him, but only because he had seen the Lord after He had done something for him (see John 9:35-38). People testify to conversion and to the grace of God in their lives, but plainly they do not know Him. There is no question about His having emancipated them from sin and done a mighty work in them, but the great passion of the life is not Jesus Christ; their personal experience is not marked by Paul's words—"that I may know Him."

2. The Desolation of the Glorious Day

But Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping. (John 20:11)

Mary was standing weeping in absolute distress; it was the most desolating dawn she had ever known, and yet it was the dawn of the most glorious day she was ever to know. "And as she wept, she stooped down and looked into the sepulchre. . . ." It is a good thing to stoop as well as weep; there is more pride in human grief and misery than in joy and health; certain elements in human sorrow are as proud as the devil himself. There are people who indulge in the luxury of misery, they are always talking of the agonising and distressing things—"No one ever suffered as I do; there is a special element in my suffering, it is isolated." At the back of it is terrific pride, it is weeping that will not stoop.

"and seeth two angels in white. . . ." Mary was not at all surprised when through her tears she saw angels; there was only One whom she wanted and that was her Lord and Master. "... she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus." Mary is standing face to face with Jesus Christ and yet she does not know Him; the obsession of her grief makes her mistake Him for the gardener. Mary had had a wonderful history with Jesus, but now in her desolation she does not know Him. We only see along the line of our prejudices until the surgery of events alters our outlook. We may have had an experience of what Jesus Christ can do and yet not have known Him. Suddenly at any turn He may come-"Now I see Him." It takes all time and eternity to know God.

3. The Direction from the Great Divide

Jesus saith unto her, Mary. (John 20:16)

In the midst of her grief, Jesus said one word which had in it all her personal history with Him—"Mary." If Mary had had no past history with Jesus Christ she would not have detected Him when He spoke that word. If you have had a past history with Jesus Christ, if He has delivered and emancipated you, when He speaks, He speaks with the volume of that intimacy of personal acquaintance and you know, not by hearing only, but implicitly all through you—"It is the Lord! No one else could speak like that to me."

"She turned herself, and saith unto Him, Rabboni; which is to say, Master." Mary thought that Our Lord had come back to the old relationship—"He is back again!" But Jesus said, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to My Father"—"You can no longer hold Me under the evidence of your senses, no longer hold Me as a possession of your own individual life as before; the relationship now is one you cannot begin to conceive as yet—a relationship of identity with Me through the indwelling Spirit of God, and I am going to the Father to make that possible." ". . . but go to My brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto My Father, and your Father; and to My God, and your God."

The direction from "The Great Divide" is that it is connected instantly with the verb "to Go," never to stay and moon. As soon as we see Jesus and perceive who He is by His Spirit, He says "Go"—"Go out into actual life and tell My brethren, not what I have done for you, but that I am risen."

No one can tell another about Jesus until he has seen Him as He really is, the One who imparts His own life, i.e., Holy Spirit, an impartation from the Lord Himself.

Darkness is not synonymous with sin; if there is darkness spiritually it is much more likely to be the shade of God's hand than darkness on account of sin; it may be the threshold of a new revelation coming through a big break in personal experience. Before the dawn there is desolation; but wait, the dawn will merge into glorious day—". . . the light of dawn [mg], that shineth more and more unto the perfect day" (RV). If you are experiencing the darkness of desolation on individual lines, go through with it, and you will find yourself face to face with Jesus Christ as never before. "I am come that they might have life,"—life in which there is no death—"and that they might have it more abundantly."

APRIL 25, 1916, ZEITOUN, EGYPT GENERAL MISSION SERVICE

DESERT DAYS

Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you. . . . 1 Peter 4:12

We have no faith at all until it is proved, proved through conflict and in no other way. There are things in life equivalent to the desert. This war¹⁰ is a "fiery trial," it has come out against our faith in God's goodness and justice. Are we going to remain steadfast in our faith in God until we see all that contradicts our common sense transfigured into exactly what our faith believes it should be?

1. The Decree of the Desolating Desert

And unto Adam He said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. (Genesis 3:17)

In actual life there is a desolating desert, and it is there by the decree of God; the Bible knows nothing about what we call natural law. Back of the origin of the desert is the decree of God. The desolating desert is not a distress to God, it is completely within His grasp, although not within ours. The Moslems have a fine phrase for the desert—"The Garden of Allah." One characteristic of the desert is its fierce, cruel, unshielding light. "The sun shall not smite thee by day . . ." Another characteristic of the desert is its storms; these are never beneficial, they are of the sirocco order, blighting, fierce and pitiless. Jeremiah describes them—"At that time shall it be said to this people and to Jerusalem, A dry wind of the high places in the wilderness toward the daughter of My people, not to fan, nor to cleanse" (Jeremiah 4:11). The sun as seen in the desert is not a benediction, the storms are not beneficial storms; and night in the desert is a desperate thing. It is all very well to think of the night in our own land, but night in the desert is appalling. Little bits of the desert are fascinating, but the real thing is terrible—"that great and terrible wilderness" (Deuteronomy 1:19).

The characteristics of the desert are the characteristics of God to a man when he tastes life as it is. Ibsen saw very clearly the desolating desert of life, i.e., the terrific penalty of sin, and he also saw God as He appears to a man awakened to the facts of existence. We are apt to say that Ibsen was pessimistic, but every man whose thinking has not been interfered with by his temperament is a pessimist. To think fair and square is not to see goodness and purity everywhere, but to see something that produces despair. When a man sees life as it really is there are only two alternatives—the Cross of Jesus Christ as something to accept, or suicide. We are shielded by a merciful density, by a curious temperament of hopefulness that keeps us blind to the desolating desert.

The reason the desert came is that man ate of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. God placed the tree in the garden, but He did not intend that man should eat of its fruit; He intended man to know evil only by contrast with good, as Our Lord did. It is by the decree of God that the man who knows good by contrast with evil shall find life a desolating desert. When the cosmic order of earth and the moral nature of man are in touch with God, the order of the earth is beauty, and the order of human life is love. Immediately a man gets out of touch with God, he finds the basis of things is not beauty and love, but chaos and wrath.

The first Adam, the federal head of the race, swung the race on to the basis of wrath, and Jesus Christ, the Last Adam, swung the human race back on to the basis of love. The terms "in Adam," "in Christ," are not mystical terms, but actual revelations of man's condition. When we are "in Adam" we get down to the desolating desert aspect of life. Take love—the most abiding thing about love is its tragedy; or life, the most desolating thing about life is its climax, death. When we are "in Christ" the whole thing is reversed. We read that "Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and men"(RV)—He never ate of the fruit of the tree of good and evil, He knew evil only by contrast with good. When a man is born from above (RV mg) the desolating desert aspect of life goes. There is no sadness now in natural love, it ends nowhere but in the heart of God; "in Christ" life knows no death, it goes on more and more fully. If you want to know God's original design for man, you see it in Jesus Christ; He was easily Master of the life on the earth, in the air and in the sea, not as God, but as Man; it was the human in Jesus that was master.

2. The Devil and the Divine in the Desert

And immediately the Spirit driveth Him into the wilderness. (Mark 1:12)

In the Bible the devil is represented as the antagonist of Deity; Satan represents the self-interest of humanity. Our Lord's words "Get thee hence, Satan" (Matthew 4:10; see also Matthew 16:23), refer to the interests of humanity in conflict with God's interests. In the temptation the devil antagonised the same thing that he antagonised in the first Adam, viz., oneness with God. Our Lord's unvarying answer was, "I came down from heaven, not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me"—the very thing the first Adam refused to do. "Man shall not live by bread alone," said Jesus, "but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." As long as civilisation prevents us noticing the desert and the basis of wrath, we do not need anything other than bread, and what bread means. The claim of Satan to our Lord was, "You will get your Kingship of men if You give them bread" (see John 6:15). Jesus Christ's first obedience was to the will of His Father, and it is by the obedience of Jesus Christ as Son of Man that the whole human race is swung back again to God. It was there, in the desert, that Our Lord bound the strong man and overcame him. The strong man represents the whole of humanity vested in a personal presence enthroned as God. When the strong man rules, his "goods," i.e. the souls of men, are in peace; but when "a stronger than he" comes, He upsets that rule, and "taketh from him his whole armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils" (Luke 11:22 RV).

Jesus Christ is the One who upsets the humanitarian reign. That is why in certain moods of individual as well as national experience, Jesus Christ is considered the enemy of mankind. "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matthew 10:34).

3. The Direction in the Desert (Luke 3:2; Galatians 1:15-17)

The word of God came to John in the desert—"The word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness"; and to Paul—"But when it was the good pleasure of God . . . to reveal His Son in me . . . I went away into Arabia" (RV). The nutriment of a man's life comes when he is alone with God; he gets his direction in the desert experiences. The Psalmist says, "Before I was afflicted I went astray." King Hezekiah came face to face with death and the experience made just that kind of difference to him—"I shall go softly [as in a solemn procession, RV mg] all my years in the bitterness of my soul" (Isaiah 38:15). Men learn in these ways that "man doth not live by bread alone"; there are factors in life which produce terror and distress.

4. The Divine Departure of the Desert (Isaiah 35:1-2)

The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. (Isaiah 35:1 RV)

The Divine recovers the desert for man as a Garden. The sin of man has polluted the material earth and it will have to be disinfected (Isaiah 24:1), and there will be "a new heaven and a new earth." The actual conditions of life will surpass all that Utopian dreamers have ever dreamed. "And death shall be no more; neither shall there be mourning, nor crying, nor pain, any more" (RV)—here-after, without the desert; no tears, no darkness, no sinful defect, no haunting thought, no sickness, no sorrow. It has not entered into the heart of man to conceive "the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

IS HUMAN SACRIFICE REDEMPTIVE?

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. John 15:13

But God commendeth His own love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Romans 5:8 (RV)

There is a vast difference between human sacrifice and Divine sacrifice. John 15:13 refers to human sacrifice, the highest height to which a human being can get; Romans 5:8 refers to Divine sacrifice, that which God has done for the human race and which no man can ever do. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." It has nothing to do with a man's religion; a pagan will lay down his life for his friend, so will an atheist, and so will a Christian; it has to do with the great stuff human nature is made of, there is nothing Divine about it. We find men who have been the greatest scamps in civil life doing the most heroic things in war.

The love of God is other than that—God laid down His life for His enemies, a thing no man can do. The fundamental revelation made in the New Testament is that God redeemed the human race when we were spitting in His face, as it were. We can all be stirred by high, noble, human sacrifice; it is much more thrilling than Calvary. Calvary is an ignoble thing, against all the ideas of human virtue and nobility; it is far more thrilling to talk about men fighting in the trenches. God's love is not in accordance with our human standards in any way.

In the generality of our thinking the Bible does not mean anything to us, other things are of more practical use, and we are apt to discard what the Bible says until we come up against things. The Bible speaks about the Redemption, viz., what God has done for the human race, not about what we can get at by our common sense. The great fundamental revelation regarding the human race is that God has redeemed us. Redemption is finished and complete; but what does it mean in our personal lives? The fact of Redemption amounts to nothing in my actual life unless I get awakened to a sense of need. It is a matter of moonshine¹¹ to me whether Jesus Christ lived or died until I come up against things-either sin in myself or something that ploughs deeply into me, then I find I have got beyond anything I know, and that is where the revelation of Jesus Christ comes in; if I will commit myself to Him, I am saved, saved into the perfect light and liberty of God on the ground of Redemption.

The Redemption is a revelation, not something we get at by thinking, and unless we grant that Redemption is the basis of human life we will come up against problems for which we can find no way out. I can no more redeem my own soul and put myself right with God than I can get myself upstairs by hanging on to my shoestrings—it is an impossibility; but right at the basis of human life is the Redemption. The Redemption means that God has done His "bit": men are not going to be redeemed, they are redeemed. "It is finished," said Jesus on the Cross. But the way the Redemption works in my actual life depends on my willing attitude to the revelation. Every man is redeemed, and the Holy Spirit is here to rouse us up to the fact that we are redeemed. Once that realisation dawns, the sense of gratitude springs up in a man and he becomes of use to God in practical life.

Human sacrifice can never be redemptive. How can a man, noble or ignoble, get me nearer God? He may stir and move me till I say, "That is a magnificent deed," but he tells me no more about God. Many a man without any knowledge of God has laid down his life in the same noble manner that a Christian has done. That is the greatest love of man. The love of God is that He laid down His life for His enemies in order that He might make the basis of life redemptive. We have to reason on that basis, viz., on what God has done for the human race. Think of the worst man or woman you know; can you say to yourself, with any degree of joyful certainty, "That man, that woman—perfect in Christ Jesus"? You will soon see how much you believe in Christ Jesus and how much in common sense.

The Gospel is not good news to men, but good news about God, viz., that God has accepted the responsibility for creating a race that sinned, and the Cross is the proof that He has done so. The basis of human life is the Redemption, and on that basis God can perform His miracles in any man, i.e., He can put a new disposition into me whereby I can live an entirely new life. Think of the relief that the Gospel brings to a man's mind, and then think of the abortion that is called the Gospel and is preached to men as good news!

The test of our religious faith is not that it does for 12 us, but that it does for the worst blackguard we can think of. If the Redemption cannot get hold of the worst and vilest, then Jesus Christ is a fraud, but if this Book means anything it means that at the wall of the world stands God, and any man driven there by conviction of sin finds the arms of God outstretched to save him. God can forgive a man anything but despair that He can forgive him.

THE LIE IN THE GREATEST FEAR OF LIFE

For He must reign, till He hath put all enemies under His feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. 1 Corinthians 15:25–26

The greatest fear in life is not personal fear for myself, but fear that after all God will be worsted. We do not state it in that way until we come to one of the rare, lucid moments in our experience. The phrase "He must reign" indicates our greatest fear, viz., the fear that in the end Jesus Christ will not come out triumphant, that evil and wrong will triumph. We reveal our fear by intense assertions that of course He will win through. That is the curious way we are built; we speak as intensely of a position about which we are fearful as we do of a position we are sure of. Whenever this particular fear assails us, we assert most definitely—"Oh, yes, there is no doubt that He will get through," while our real fear is that He will not. We are familiar with it along other lines—in reading a book we turn to the end to see whether the hero gets through. Fears are facts; there is a danger of saying that because a thing is wrong, therefore it does not exist; fear is a genuine thing, there is no courage without fear. The courageous man is the one who overcomes his fear. There are things in personal experience and in national life that make us hold our breath; then in faith we look on to the end.

1. The Fearful Hour

Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away? (John 6:67)

John describes the disappointment Jesus Christ was to men. The crowd on the outside gathered to Him because He did wonderful things and they would have made Him king (John 6:15), but He disappointed them. "The Jews therefore murmured concerning Him, because He said, I am the bread which came down out of heaven" (John 6:41 RV). Then there was the smaller crowd on the inside who came because they were religious and had the intellect of the time, and they listened, until He said things that offended them—"Many therefore of His disciples, when they heard this, said, This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" (John 6:60 RV). Then there was the little crowd of disciples, and of these we read—"Upon this many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him" (John 6:66); and Our Lord forecast the fearful hour of His being left by everybody—left by the crowd, by the Pharisees, and by the disciples, and He turns to the handful left and says, "Will ye also go away?" and Peter replies, in effect, "We have gone too far." The hearts of these disciples must have feared, not for their own sakes, but—"After all, are we mistaken in this Man? We have left our homes and our fishing, we have been thrilled by Him, He has done wonderful things, but will He win through after all?"

The question comes to us personally: "Will ye also go away?" and we say, "I believe Jesus Christ will get through," but at the same time the forces are so awful and so intense that we wonder. At the heart of the fear there is a lie, and the lie comes in because we estimate Jesus Christ in the way we would estimate any other man, viz., by success. It is significant that Jesus Christ told His disciples not to estimate themselves by success (see Luke 10:19-20). According to the ordinary standards of men Our Lord Himself is as a corn of wheat falling into the ground and becoming futile. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit" (John 12:24). Look at the history of every vigorous movement born spontaneously of the Holy Ghost, there comes a time when its true spiritual power dies, and it dies in correspondence to the success of the organisation. Every denomination or missionary enterprise departs from its true spiritual power when it becomes a successful organisation, because the advocates of the denomination or of the missionary enterprise after a while have to see first of all to the establishment and success of their organisation, while the thing which made them what they are has gone like a corn of wheat into the ground and died. One of the greatest snares of modern evangelism is this apotheosis of commercialism manifested in the soul-saving craze. I do not mean God does not save souls, but I do believe the watchword "A passion for souls" is a snare. The watchword of the saint is "A passion for Christ." The estimate of success has come imperceptibly into Christian enterprise and we say we must go in for winning souls; but we cannot win souls if we cut ourselves off from the source, and the source is belief in Jesus Christ (John 7:37). Immediately we look to the outflow, i.e., the results, we are in danger of becoming specialists of certain aspects of truth, of banking on certain things, either terror or emotionalism or sensational presentations—anything rather than remaining confident that "He must reign." If we stand true to Jesus Christ in the midst of the fearful hour we shall come to see that there is a lie at the heart of the fear which shook us. We are not called to be successful in accordance with ordinary standards, but in accordance with a corn of wheat falling into the ground and dying, becoming in that way what it never could be if it were to abide alone. After the corn is garnered into the granary it has to go through processes before it is ready for eating. It is the "broken-bread" aspect which produces the faithfulness that God looks upon as success; not the fact of the harvest, but that the harvest is being turned into nutritious bread.

2. The Forlorn Hope

And when He rose up from prayer, and was come to His disciples, He found them sleeping for sorrow. (Luke 22:45)

The disciples had given up everything for Jesus; they had followed Him for three years; now He talks to them in a significant way about buying swords (Luke 22:36), and Peter and the other disciples imagine that this is the time when He will break through and introduce His kingdom; and instead of watching and praying, they make up their minds where the struggle is to be. But what happened was the worst they had feared; instead of Jesus Christ showing any fight, He gives Himself up, and the whole thing ends in humiliating insignificance. Peter never dreamt he was going to see Jesus Christ give Himself up meekly to the power of the world, and he was brokenhearted and "followed Him afar off." To call Peter a coward for following Jesus afar off is an indication of how we talk without thinking. Peter and all the disciples were brokenhearted, everything they had hoped for with regard to Jesus Christ had deliberately failed—"We trusted in Him and were perfectly certain He would win through," and now their worst fears were realised and "they all forsook Him and fled." Many a Christian since the day of Peter has suffered complete heartbreak, not because he fears anything personally, but because it looks as if his Lord is being worsted; the lie at the heart of the fear is almost succeeding.

The presentation of the spiritual aspect of things is that it is a forlorn hope always, and designedly so, in this order of things. We are apt to forget that we must go far enough back to find the basis on which things erect themselves. For instance, if civilised life is right and the best we can know, Christianity is a profound mistake; but if you turn back to the Bible you find that its diagnosis of civilisation is not that it is the best we know, it is on an entirely wrong basis. Civilised life is based on the reason at the heart of things; Jesus Christ's teaching is based on the tragedy at the heart of things, and consequently the position of true spiritual life is that of the forlorn hope. It is of the nature of the earth on which we tread—The meek shall inherit the earth, not the "world," because the world, according to the Bible, is the system of civilised things that men place on God's earth. In the meantime God's earth is like the earth we are on now; we can do what we like with it, shovel rubbish on it, mine it and turn it into trenches; we can score it, and make it the foundation for the erections of human pride; but Jesus Christ says. "the meek . . . shall inherit the earth." There is a time coming when the earth itself shall be the very garment of God, when the systems of the world and those that represent them shall call on the mountains and the rocks to hide them, but at that time the earth won't shelter them.

3. The Faith That Triumphs

Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen Me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. (John 20:29)

Thomas was not an intellectual doubter, he was a temperamental doubter; there was not a more loyal disciple than Thomas, he was a loyal, gloomyhearted man. He had seen Jesus killed; he saw them drive the nails through His hands and His feet, and he says, "Except I shall see . . . , I will not," I dare not, "believe." This is a man with a passionate desire to believe something over which he dare not allow himself to be deceived. Seeing is never believing: we interpret what we see in the light of what we believe. Faith is confidence in God before you see God emerging, therefore the nature of faith is that it must be tried. To say "Oh, yes, I believe God will triumph" may be so much credence smeared over with religious phraseology; but when you are up against things it is quite another matter to say, "I believe God will win through." The trial of our faith gives us a good banking account in the heavenly places, and when the next trial comes our wealth there will tide us over. If we have confidence in God beyond the actual earthly horizons, we shall see the lie at the heart of the fear and our faith will win through in every detail.

DISCOVERY BY DEVOTION

And I set my face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications. Daniel 9:3

1. The Determination to Concentrate

And I set my face . . .

We discern spiritual truth not by intellectual curiosity or research, but by entreating the favour of the Lord, that is, by prayer and by no other way, not even by obedience, because obedience is apt to have an idea of merit. If we are not concentrated we affect a great many attitudes; but when we set our faces "unto the Lord God" all affectation is gone—the religious pose, the devout pose, the pious pose, all go instantly when we determine to concentrate; our attention is so concentrated that we have no time to wonder how we look. "This one thing I do . . ." says Paul; his whole attention was fixed on God. Is my mind fixed entirely on God or on service for God? If I am only fixed on the service of God my attention is not held, I am taken up with affectation; but in a great crisis, as in this of Daniel, there is the determination to concentrate. When I set my face and determine to concentrate I am not devoted to creeds or forms of belief or to any phase of truth, not to prayer or to holiness, or to the spreading of any propaganda, but unto God. We never turn to God unless we are desperate, we turn to common sense, to one another, to helps and means and assistances, but when we do turn to the Lord it is always in desperation (see Psalm 108). The desperation of consecration is reached when we realise our indolence and our reluctance in coming to God.

2. The Desecration of Consecration unto the Lord God . . .

Belief is not that God can do the thing, but belief in God. If I believe in God I pray on the ground of Redemption and things happen; it is not reasonable, it is Redemptive. Where reason says "There is a mountain, it is impossible," I do not argue and say "I believe God can remove it," I do not even see the mountain; I simply set my face unto the Lord God and make my prayer, and the mountain ceases to be (see Matthew 17:20). As long as we reason and argue and say "It is not sensible," we do not turn to the Lord but try to bolster up some conviction of our own.

Through the desperation of consecration we not only reach the limit of reason but we get a line of recognition which is other than reasonable, i.e., we discern Jesus Christ in the most ordinary people and things. "Jesus stood on the shore: but the disciples knew not that it was Jesus." He appeared to be an ordinary fisherman, but John discerned that it was the Lord (John 21:7). When we are concentrated on God we enter on a life of revelation, we begin to penetrate and discover things. "To him that overcometh . . ." Life is given as we overcome—overcome the tendency to indolence, above all the tendency not to do what we know we should, and instantly we get a revelation.

3. The Discipline of Consciousness to seek by prayer and supplications . . .

It is easy to create a false emotion in prayer, nothing easier than to work ourselves up until we imagine we are really concerned about a thing when we are not because it has never been brought to our mind by the Holy Spirit. That kind of prayer is not natural, we let our emotions carry us away. Prayer is not only to be about big things, but talking to God about everything—"Let your requests be made known." If we try to recall something by our own effort in praying, instantly we get an atmosphere of rebuke about another person. When we concentrate on God that spirit is not present, there is no irrelevant emotion to deflect our attention and we pray about the things the Spirit of God brings most naturally to our minds. "Ye shall ask what ye will. . . . "We do not ask what our will is in, we develop false emotions, consciousnesses that are not really our own. A false emotion is one we have at rare times. What is ours is the circumstances we are in just now, the people we are with; we have to learn to school our emotions into relationship to God in all these things. The seeking by prayer is determined by the circumstances we are in and by the life we habitually live; we have to concentrate on the ordinary obvious things we are in all the time. We cannot talk to God unless we walk with Him when we are not talking. The Son of God revealed in me and the epistle of Christ written in my life day by day will give me an expression before God; if I am not walking with God I have to borrow other people's phrases when I pray. "If any man is in Christ there is a new creation" (RV mg), everything becomes amazingly simple, not easy, but simple with the simplicity of God.

LOSING OURSELVES

He that findeth his life [soul] shall lose it: and he that loseth his life [soul] for My sake shall find it. Matthew 10:39

"We are what we are interested in."

"Soul" refers to the way a personal spirit reasons and thinks in a human body. We talk about a man exhibiting "soul" in singing or in painting, that is, he is expressing his personal spirit. "If you are going to be My disciple," says Jesus, "you must lose your soul, i.e., your way of reasoning, and acquire another way." When the Holy Spirit energises my spirit, my way of reasoning begins to alter, and Jesus says unless I am prepared for that, I cannot be His disciple. It takes a long time to acquire a new way of reasoning, the majority of us who are inclined to be earnest Christian people simply deal with the fact of spiritual experience without any spiritual reasoning. We have to acquire the new soul with patience (Luke 21:19).

1. The Undiscovered Territory of Conscious Realisation

He that findeth his life . . .

There is nothing more highly esteemed among men than self-realisation, but Jesus says that "that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God." We are apt to have the notion that all Jesus Christ came to do was to deliver morally corrupt people from their corruption. A man is largely responsible for the corruption of his actual life; Jesus Christ does not deal with my morality or immorality, but with "my right to myself." Whenever our Lord talked about discipleship He always said "IF"—"If any man will be My disciple, let him deny himself," not deny himself things as an athlete does, but "let him give up his right to himself to Me." If I am going to know Jesus Christ as Lord and Master I must realise what I have to forgo, viz., the best thing I know, my right to myself. It is easy to say, "Yes, I am delighted to be saved from hell and put right for heaven, but I don't intend to give up my right to myself." Apart from Jesus Christ, conscious selfrealisation is the great thing—the desire to develop myself. My natural self may be noble, but it is a moral earthquake to realise that if I pursue the conscious realisation of myself it must end in losing my ideal of life. It is a tremendous revelation when I realise that self-realisation is the very spirit of antichrist. Selfrealisation is possible in the spiritual domain as well as the natural. Much of the "Higher Spiritual Life" teaching is simply self-realisation veneered over with Christian terms. For a man to be set on his own salvation, on his own whiteness, to want to be "the one taken," is not Christian. The great characteristic of our Lord's life is not self-realisation, but the realisation of God's purposes.

Self-realisation may keep a man full of rectitude, but it is rectitude built on a basis that ultimately spells ruin, because man is not a promise of what he is going to be, but a magnificent ruin of what human nature once was. If we go on the line of conscious self-realisation, there will be an aftermath of bitterness.

2. The Untraceable Troubles of Consecrated Renunciation shall lose it: and he that loseth his life . . .

In certain stages of spiritual life God is dealing with us on the death side and we get the morbid conception that everything we have, we must give up—"the everlasting 'No." In the Bible the meaning of sacrifice is the deliberate giving of the best I have to God that He may make it His and mine for ever: if I cling to it I lose it, and so does God. We come to our renunciations in the same way that Abraham came to his. God told Abraham to offer up Isaac for a burnt offering, and Abraham interpreted it to mean that he was to kill his son; but on Mount Moriah Abraham lost a wrong tradition about God and got a right insight as to what a burnt offering meant, viz., a living sacrifice (Romans 12:1–2). It looks as if we had to give up everything, lose all we have, and instead of Christianity bringing joy and simplicity, it makes us miserable; until suddenly we realise what God's aim is, viz., that we have to take part in our own moral development, and we do this through the sacrifice of the natural to the spiritual by obedience, not denying the natural, but sacrificing it.

Christianity is a personal relationship to Jesus Christ made efficacious by the indwelling Holy Spirit. We take Christianity to be adherence to principles. Conscience is not peculiarly a Christian thing, it is a natural asset, it is the faculty in a man that fits on to the highest he knows. Our convictions and conscientious relationships have continually to be enlarged, and that is where the discipline of spiritual life comes in. A man who is on the grousing line has no brightness or joy, no time for other people, he is taken up with the diseases of his own mind.

3. The Unhindered Triumphs of Christ-Realisation

... for My sake shall find it.

The characteristic of Christianity is abandon, not consciously setting myself on my own whiteness; the one thing that matters is, is Jesus Christ getting His way? The Christianity of the New Testament is not individual, it is personal, we are merged into God without losing our identity—"that they may be one, even as We are one." Individuality is the husk of the personal life, it cannot merge; personality always merges.

Am I prepared to lose my soul, lose the miserable self-introspection as to whether I am of any use? I am never of any use so long as I try to be. If I am rightly related to Jesus Christ, He says, Out of you "shall flow rivers of living water." The people who tell are those who don't know they are telling, not the priggish people who worship work.

Am I prepared to go through death to my right to myself, to have "a white funeral" and abandon myself to Jesus Christ—"for My sake"? If I am, I shall find my soul. The Holy Spirit coming into my personal spirit manifests itself in my soul, in the way I reason, consequently all my previous calculations are upset and I begin to see things differently. In the initial stages of discipleship you get "stormy weather," then you lose the nightmare of your own separate individuality and become part of the Personality of Christ, and the thought of yourself never bothers you any more because you are taken up with your relationship to God.

THE IMMENSE ATTENTION OF GOD

And when he opened the seventh seal, there followed a silence in heaven about the space of half an hour. Revelation 8:1 (RV)

If we are ever going to understand the Book of the Revelation we have to remember that it gives the programme of God, not the guess of a man. "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter." The Apostle is writing what the Spirit revealed to him—that is the origin of the Book. Apocalyptic literature is never easy to understand, its language is either a revelation or fantastic nonsense. We study it and worry over it and never begin to make head or tail of it, while obedience will put us on the line of understanding. Spiritual truth is never discerned by intellect, only by moral obedience. God brings His marvels to pass in lives by means of prayer, and the prayers of the saints are part of God's programme.

The presentation of Christianity which is not based on the New Testament produces an abortion—that a man's main aim is to get saved and put right for heaven; New Testament Christianity produces a strong family likeness to Jesus Christ and a man's notions are not centred on himself. The great aim of the Holy Spirit is to get us abandoned to God.

God allows the prayers of the saints, those who have entered into an understanding of His mind and purpose, to be brought to Him. We are busy praying that our particular phase of things may succeed, that men's souls may be saved; but what is meant by "a saved soul" is frequently determined by our doctrine of salvation and not by a personal relationship to Jesus Christ. We are devotees of one tiny phase of what Jesus Christ came to do: He came not only to save men's souls, but to bring "many sons unto glory." We have lost out on that line altogether, we who are the saved souls—where has been the production of disciples? That is not our line, it has no success, it cannot be tabulated. There has been no silence in heaven over our prayers, they have not entered into the programme of God, they have not been based on the Redemption; we have had no concern for the revelation of Jesus Christ, only for a particular phase of our own.

The whole idea of the prayers of the saints is that God's holiness, God's purpose and God's wise ways may be brought about irrespective of who comes or goes. The notion has grown almost imperceptibly that God is simply a blessing machine for men—"If I link myself on to God He will see me through"; instead, the human race is meant to be the servant of God, a different thing altogether. If some of us are ever going to see God we shall have to go one step outside our particular relationship to things, religious or otherwise, and step into the revelation that Jesus Christ is our Lord and Master as well as our Saviour.

^{13. &}quot;white funeral": a passage from one stage of life to another; leaving the past behind and moving into the future; spiritually, death to self.

God is using us in His own purposes, we have to remain true to His honour. "Though He slay me, yet will I wait for Him" (Job 13:15 RV)—that is the true nobility of the saint. Are we praying on the authority of the Redemption or on the ground of a preconceived notion of our own? Do we really believe that the basis of human life is Redemption? If we do, we shall no longer look for logical results, we shall look for God to work His own results, and His results work within certain moral frontiers (e.g., John 5:44). If we are outside those frontiers, we cannot see God; inside the frontiers we see Him at once. The prayers of the saints either enable or disable God in the performance of His wonders. The majority of us in praying for the will of God to be done say, "In God's good time," meaning "in my bad time"; consequently there is no silence in heaven produced by our prayers, no results, no performance.

Have our prayers demanded the immense attention of God? Have they been linked on to the basis of Redemption, or are we praying, for instance, on the line that God must bless the Allies in this war because they are in the right?

The result of the war will not be simply a national result. Men have not enlisted "For King and Country," but for a deeper reason, and in the final issue our prayer should be that the British Empire may be God's servant as well as His instrument.

Are we adding to the prayers of the saints or becoming sulky with God if He does not give us what we want, so taken up with the "nobility of man" that we forget what our calling is as saints? As saints we are called to go through the heroism of what we believe, not of stating what we believe, but of standing by it when the facts are dead against God. It is easy to say "God is love" when all is going well, but face a woman who has gone through bereavement and see if you find it easy to say it. There is suffering which staggers your mind as you watch it, and yet those who go through it are sustained in a way we do not understand. Every day lives are passing by us, how much of the silence of heaven have we broken up by our prayers for them? How much of our praying is from the empty spaces round our own hearts and how much from the basis of the Redemption, so that we give no thought for ourselves or for others, but only for Jesus Christ? Inarticulate prayer, the impulsive prayer that looks so futile, is the great thing God heeds more than anything else because it is along the line of His programme. A prayer offered by the humblest and most obscure saint on the ground of the Redemption of Jesus Christ demands the complete attention of God and the performance of His programme.

APRIL 2, 1917, ZEITOUN, COMMUNION SERVICE

HIS FACE IN THE RIDDLE OF THE UNIVERSE

But we see Jesus, . . . crowned with glory and honour. Hebrews 2:9

Supposing there was a certain region of earth about which you knew nothing and you received a communication from someone who said "I have never been to the country but this map is a sure guide"; and you also received a communication from someone who sent you no map but who said, "I have been to this country myself and if you will trust yourself to me I will guide you straight there"; how absurd it would be to trust to the information which was not firsthand and not go with the one who had been there and knew the way. In all the problems of life there are any number of "maps," all more or less guesswork, but Jesus says, "I am the Way." There are people who tell us they have "maps" of what is beyond this seclusion of earth, but Jesus Christ is the only One who has not only been on this earth, but beyond it, consequently He alone is our guide. Have we confidence in Jesus, or have we only a "map"? The "maps" lead astray, Jesus Christ is the only One who knows; any number of things may confuse us, but nothing confuses Him.

1. Un-Made or Made by the Grave Seclusion (2 Corinthians 5:1-4)

We are shut up to this physical world; other planets may be inhabited, we are shut up to this one—shut up to our five senses and to this earth. Some minds are un-made when they realise this seclusion, other minds are made because they see God's purpose in it. "We that are in this bodily frame [RV mg] do groan," says Paul, "earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven. . . . " "I would rather be away from this body," he says, "but yet to abide in the flesh is more needful for your sake, so I remain with joy because it is God's will." When people get fanatical it is the barriers they go against, the barriers placed by birth and death, the barriers of sex. If we try to get out of the body by spiritualistic means or by suicide we shall have no guide; but if we get out of it in the providence of God and by faith in Jesus, there is no darkness or desperation-"O death, where is thy sting?" "Death is swallowed up in victory." When people are puzzled by the grave seclusion they are in and try to push away the barriers, they get out into the open before they are ready and are likely to become unhinged in mind; but if "we see Jesus," there is no perplexity. Regarding the hereafter, He has said, "Let not your heart be troubled.... I go to prepare a place for you." Can we see Jesus in everything concerning ourselves, or are we trying to defy the barriers, wasting our time wishing we were somewhere else? The only way not to evade the problems of our grave seclusion in the body is by seeing Jesus and being devoted to Him.

The way we see the world outside us depends entirely upon our nervous system, and the marvel of God's construction of us is that we see things outside us as we do. For instance, the existence to us of beauty and colour and sound is due entirely to our nervous system: there is no colour to me when my eyes are shut, no sound when I am deaf, no sensation when I am asleep. If you want to know the most marvellous thing in the whole of creation, it is not the heavens, the moon and the stars, but-"What is man that Thou art mindful of him? . . . Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of Thy hands." The whole of creation was designed for man, and God intended man to be master of the life upon the earth, in the air and in the sea; the reason he is not master is because of sin, but he will yet be (see Romans 8:19-22). Paul indicates that the problems of the grave seclusion we are in are accounted for by sin, yet it remains true that our nervous system is not a disease, but is designed by God to be the temple of the Holy Ghost. The greatest proof of this is that Jesus Christ became the inhabiter of a nervous system like our own; He took upon Him the likeness of man and dwelt upon the earth. "If any man is in Christ, he is a new creature" (RV); that is, he has a totally new way of looking at things because he has a new disposition and begins to see things differently. Take two men in the desert, in the same regiment—one is in love, the other has committed sin; to the one the desert blossoms as the rose, to the other there is no beauty in anything. The difference is not in external setting, but in the ruling disposition. One day we shall be changed, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," and the things which we see by means of our nervous system will suddenly take on another guise.

2. Un-Daunted or Daunted by the Great Scheme (2 Peter 3:8–13)

The great scheme is the scheme of civilised life upon this earth. The apostle says, "Seeing that these things are all to be dissolved . . ." (RV); he does not say "destroyed," but "dissolved." What men have built upon the earth without any regard for God will be destroyed. The great scheme is that the physical universe which we see will be transfigured, i.e., become translucent with light. When our Lord was transfigured we read that His garments became glistering, transfigured by indwelling light, and Peter indicates that the earth will go through its transfiguration and only what is holy will be able to live upon it. Now, we are limited to our body; then, we shall be transfigured in it. The way Jesus manifested Himself after the Resurrection is an indication of what we will be like when everything is related to God, we shall do things which seem miracles to us now. Jesus Christ was master of the elements because of His relation to God as Man, and in Him we see God's original design for man.

Nevertheless we, according to His promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."! The Apostles were not daunted by the great scheme of things because they were looking for something else, the coming of the Day of God. If you think of the great scheme apart from seeing Jesus, you will be daunted by it. When civilised life goes into the crucible, as it is doing just now, men lose their wits, Jesus said they would; but to His disciples He said, "And ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars: see that ye be not troubled." The revolution is proving that the revelation given by Jesus Christ is true. Men are finding the "maps" which they have taken as their guide are useless, they do not touch the basis of things, and as long as men refuse to take the direction of Jesus Christ wars and upheavals cannot be prevented; if they will take Him as their Guide they will find that things are slowly and definitely working toward the great scheme of "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Never look at actual things as if they were all; look at actual things in the light of the real, i.e., in the light of Jesus Christ.

3. Un-Demented or Demented by the Grand Society (Revelation 3:20; John 14:23)

The way we get demented, off our balance, is by dreaming of what is yet to be—the Utopian vision of the grand state of society when all men are going to be brothers. It is not the vision that is wrong, it is right, what is wrong is the way men are trying to bring it about, and if they don't look to Jesus Christ they easily get unbalanced. Think what the Bible says is going to be! "Death shall be no more, neither shall there be any mourning, nor crying, nor pain, any more" (RV); no more anything accursed; "but God Himself shall be with them, . . . and He shall wipe away every tear from their eyes" (RV). Meantime there are tears, and sorrow and sighing, but though "we see not yet all things put under him. But we see Jesus, . . . crowned with glory and honour." Tears are not going to be wiped away by our receiving pettings from God; the revelation is that through the marvel of the Redemption God is going to make it impossible for there to be any more crying or sorrow, all will be as satisfactory as God Himself.

The writers of the New Testament look forward to the grand society, but they do not become unbalanced because they are based on the Redemption. The aim of the grand society is not to be good, but to become the associates of God—"We will come unto him, and make our abode with him"; and the crown is—"they shall walk with Me in white: for they are worthy." We are to see God's face and confer with Him: "and His servants shall do Him service; and they shall see His face."

CLIMATE AND SPIRITUAL LIFE

And He awoke, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. And the wind ceased and there was a great calm. Mark 4:39 (RV)

This verse is a picture of our own spiritual life; there are occasions, such as this war, when it looks as if God were asleep, as if all our prayers were of no use; there are breakers ahead and it looks like destruction. But when He awakes in us, He calms the storm and rebukes our unbelief.

The life of Our Lord exhibits the influence of character on climate. It is easy to make this absurd, but looked at from the attitude of the Spirit of God you find there is an amazing connection between the storm and distresses and wild confusion of the earth just now and the waywardness and wrong of man; when the waywardness of man ceases and the sons of God are manifested, then "the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God."

The Bible reveals that there is a close connection between character and climate. Ruskin is almost the only writer who recognises it, and in this respect he is akin to the great prophets. The reason for the connection is fundamental. According to the Bible revelation, God created man a mixture of dust and Deity, and when the Redemption comes to its full scope, the whole earth is going to partake in it. Because man's body and his earthly setting have been affected by sin, we are apt to think that being made of the dust of the ground is his shame; the Bible implies that it is his chief glory, because it is in that body that the Son of God was manifested.

1. The Way of God and the Dawn

And in the morning, a great while before day, He rose up and went out, and departed into a desert place, and there prayed. (Mark 1:35 RV)

Specific times and places and communion with God go together. It is by no haphazard chance that in every age men have risen early to pray. The first thing that marks decline in spiritual life is our relationship to the early morning. It is significant that before nations have been gripped by civilisation they always began their day early. (An American on visiting England after a lapse of years made this significant remark—"One thing that strikes me is the difference in the time people get up; twenty years ago everybody used to be astir early, but now I notice they rise much later.") When we are in touch with the earnestness of things, we begin soon.

(a) The Devotion of Our Lord

And it came to pass in those days, that He went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God. And when it was day, He called unto Him His disciples. (Luke 6:12–13)

It is not a haphazard thing, but in the constitution of God, that there are certain times of the day when it not only seems easier, but it is easier, to meet God. If you have ever prayed in the dawn you will ask yourself why you were so foolish as not to do it always: it is difficult to get into communion with God in the midst of the hurly-burly of the day. George Mac-Donald said that if he did not open wide the door of his mind to God in the early morning he worked on the finite all the rest of the day-"stand on the finite, act upon the wrong." It is not sentiment but an implicit reality that the conditions of dawn and communion with God go together. When the day of God appears there will be no night, always dawn and day. There is nothing of the nature of strain in God's Day, it is all free and beautiful and fine. "And there shall be night no more" (RV).

(b) The Difference of Administration

Now late on the sabbath day, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene. . . . (Matthew 28:1 RV)

Mary Magdalene thought that this dawn would be like an ordinary one, but it was the dawn of the greatest day, not only for Mary Magdalene but for the whole world. Our Lord told her that there would be a different administration—"Till now you have known Me as God manifest in the flesh, now it is to be a knowledge after the Spirit; I will be in you, an indwelling Presence." Penetration into truth comes when we choose the times God has chosen for us. All through the Old Testament the "first" is dedicated to God; whenever that was neglected the prophets rebuked the people (e.g., Malachi 3:8-9). We all know when we are at our best intellectually, and if instead of giving that time to God we give it to our own development, we not only rob God, but rob ourselves of the possibility of His life thriving in us. We heard it said that we shall suffer if we do not pray; I question it. What will suffer if we do not pray is the life of God in us; but when we do pray and devote the dawns to God His nature in us develops, there is less self-realisation and more Christ-realisation.

(c) The Direction of Our Lord

But when day was now breaking, Jesus stood on the beach.... And He said unto them, Cast the net on the right side of the boat, and ye shall find. (John 21:4, 6 RV)

We have special times and days when we expect God to do things, but He usually does them when we don't expect it, e.g., when we are coming back in the early morning from fishing, it is then that God gives us direction. It is not simply that it is easier to get direction in the early morning, it is a profound revelation that that is the time when direction comes.

2. The Wilderness of Temptation—The Devil and the Divine

And Jesus, full of the Holy Spirit, returned from the Jordan, and was led by the Spirit in the wilderness during forty days, being tempted of the devil. (Luke 4:1–2 RV)

When artists or poets of earlier days wanted to depict a particular type of man they painted or described in words the climatic and geographical setting agreeing with that type. For instance, if they wanted to portray a man in an angry temper, they put in the scenery of a thunderstorm. Dante does it in the "Inferno" and Milton in "Paradise Lost." The outward is the symbol of the inner, according to the Bible: there is a closer connection between them than we imagine. When our supreme temptation comes, the setting we are in, whether it is a city or the actual desert, brings us into contact with the foundation of things as God made them. According to Genesis, the basis of physical material life is chaos, and the basis of personal moral life, wrath. If I live in harmony with God, chaos becomes cosmos to me, and the wrath of God becomes the love of God. If I get out of touch with God I get into hell, physically and morally; when I live in relationship to God by the inner witness of the Spirit, "Heaven above is brighter blue, earth around a sweeter green. . . ."

(a) The Desertion of a Disciple

And Satan entered into Judas who was called Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve. (Luke 22:3 RV)

There was the wilderness of temptation in the lives of the disciples; in one disciple the devil conquered absolutely and Judas became what Jesus called him, "the son of perdition." The popular idea of temptation is that it is towards evil, meaning that we can see it to be evil by our common sense, but temptation is always a short cut to good, the mind is perplexed—"I wonder if this is the way of God?" If I yield to the temptation the devil gets his way, as he did with Judas in the last extreme.

(b) The Desperation of a Disciple

And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. . . . And he went out, and wept bitterly. (Luke 22:61–62 RV)

The devil tried to get Peter where he got Judas, but he did not succeed; Satan did not "enter into" Peter; Peter got the length of denying Jesus, but in his wilderness of temptation he "struck" the Divine, Judas "struck" the devil; consequently Peter experienced a desperation producing tears, and those tears were the most amazing bitterness in his life. Peter with his impulsive heart would feel he could never forgive himself, he would have spent the rest of his days mourning, but Jesus had told him beforehand, "And do thou, when once thou hast turned again, establish thy brethren" (RV).

(c) The Defeat of the Devil

Then the devil leaveth Him. (Matthew 4:11)

Jesus Christ met the devil in the wilderness and defeated him. When you go through a time of trial, a wilderness of temptation in heart or mind or spirit, you feel inclined to get away out into somewhere like the desert. The reason for that is not haphazard, but because in the primal constitution of God man is connected with the dust of the earth: he is related to the elemental condition of things all through. When the sons of God are manifested the desolate place will alter at once. "The desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose."

^{15.} Paradise Lost, published 1667.

3. The Wall of God and the Darkness on the Deep

And it was now dark and Jesus had not yet come to them. And the sea was rising by reason of a great wind that blew. (John 6:17–18 RV)

This happens in our own lives—we are on the deep, it is dark, and Jesus is not there. It is a description of every elemental experience, such as bereavement or heartbreak, or any of the big things that beset human life, there is real speechless terror and misgiving. You may have had communion with God in the dawn, you may have continued with Jesus in temptation, but this thing makes you feel helpless—there is no way out. In times of deep sorrow it is not the people who tell you why you are suffering who are of any use; the people who help you are those who give expression to your state of mind, often they do not speak at all, they are like Nature. Nature is never heartless to the one who is bereaved, but it takes a revelation to make us know this.

(a) At the Request of Jesus

And He said unto them, Let us go over unto the other side of the lake. And they launched forth. (Luke 8:22)

"If you obey Jesus you will have a life of joy and delight." Well, it is not true. Jesus said to the disciples—"Let us go to the other side of the lake," and they were plunged into the biggest storm they had ever known. You say, "If I had not obeyed Jesus I should not have got into this complication." Exactly. The problems in our walk with God are to be accounted for along this line, and the temptation is to say, "God could never have told me to go there, if He had done so this would not have happened." We discover then whether we are going to trust God's integrity or listen to our own expressed scepticism. Scepticism of the tongue is only transitional; real scepticism is wrung out from the man who knows he did not get where he is on his own account—"I was not seeking my own, I came deliberately because I believe Jesus told me to, and now there is the darkness and the deep and the desolation."

(b) The Revelation of Jesus

But Simon Peter, when he saw it, fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord. (Luke 5:8 RV)

The revelation of Jesus comes in the way He walks on our deeps; He tells us to do something which in the light of our own discernment sounds ridiculous, but immediately we do it, we experience the judgement of Jesus. The judgement is not in what He says, it is Himself. "Depart from me, . . . O Lord," said Peter, but that was the last thing Peter wanted Him to do, it was the impulsive expression of his state of mind.

(c) At the Rebuke of Jesus

And He arose, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. . . . And He said unto them, Why are ye so fearful? how is it that ye have no faith? (Mark 4:39–40)

Our Lord rebuked the disciples for fearing when apparently they had good reason for being alarmed. The problem is—if Jesus Christ is only the Carpenter of Nazareth, then the disciples were foolish to put Him at the tiller; but if He is the Son of God, what are they alarmed about? If Jesus Christ is God, where is my trust in Him? If He is not God, why am I so foolish as to pretend to worship Him?

"And they feared exceedingly, and said one to another, What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey Him?" (Mark 4:41). Just where Jesus does not seem to be, when it looks as if the waves would overwhelm them, the Son of God comes walking on the top of those very billows. As we go on in our spiritual life we get into similar conditions, they are not symbolic, but the actual conditions of our lives. God engineers us out of our sequestered places and brings us into elemental conditions, and we get a taste of what the world is like because of the disobedience of man. We realise then that our hold on God has been a civilised hold, we have not really believed in Him at all. When we get out on to the deep and the darkness we realise what a wonderful thing the Psalmist says—"Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed. . . ." But it takes some confidence in God to say that when everything you trust in has gone.

4. The Word of God and Elemental Destruction (Matthew 7:24–27)

Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock. . . . (Matthew 7:24)

Our Lord reveals that the elemental destructions cannot touch us, neither death nor hell, nor all the forces of man and the devil put together, can prevail against the word of God if once we build on that; but if we build on our own discernment, then when the elemental destructions come, not only do we go, but our foundations go too. Our foundations must be rooted in God, then when the upheavals come we do not need to be afraid.

(a) The Cosmic Power of Discernment (Mark 13:24–27)

And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory. (Mark 13:26)

The cosmic powers belong to God, and the great changes that will take place when He establishes His Kingdom will reveal that the Son of Man and the cosmic powers are identified, "The meek . . . shall inherit the earth," not the world; the world is not God's; the world is the name given to the system of things men have placed on God's earth, and the Bible foretells the time when these shall pass away; they are going into the crucible just now. Poets talk about Nature being "the garment of God," and it will be true literally. We look for God in little ways, and He is there in all the terrific powers of Nature. We shall discern Him "in the clouds," i.e., the great elemental powers, when "the heavens shall pass away . . . and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." And there will be new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

(b) The Conscious Person and Divinity

And He was transfigured before them. And His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow. (Mark 9:2–3)

Our Lord emptied Himself of His glory when He became Incarnate, and here on the Mount the glory which He had with the Father before the world was suddenly burst through; the material part of Him was shot through with glory, that is, God and matter became one. That is what would have happened to the human race if Adam had not sinned, there would have been no death, but transfiguration. The counterpart of the Transfiguration is not the Resurrection, but the Ascension.

(c) The Comprehensive Presence and Direction

Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, ... and lo, I am with you alway. (Matthew 28:19–20 RV)

Jesus Christ teaches us to build our confidence in the abiding reality of Himself in the midst of everything. If a man puts his confidence in the things which must go, imagine his incomprehensible perplexity when they do go. No wonder Jesus said "men's hearts failing them for fear." These words describe the time we are in now. Our true life is not in the things which are passing, and if we build ourselves on God and His word, when they go, the marvel is that we are not scared. The thing to examine spiritually is, am I connected with Jesus Christ personally? If I have only a form of belief or a creed, all that may go when the elemental trouble comes and I shall have nothing to cling to, but if I build my "house" on the words of Jesus and do them, then no matter what happens I shall find I am founded upon the Rock.

DECEMBER 10, 1916, ZEITOUN, SUNDAY MORNING & COMMUNION SERVICE

THE NAME

And His name shall be called Wonderful. . . . Isaiah 9:6

In the New Testament "name" frequently stands for "nature." When we pray in the Name of Jesus the answers are in accordance with His nature, and if we think our prayers are unanswered it is because we are not interpreting the answer along this line.

1. The Expression of God's Thought

And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us. . . . (John 1:14 RV)

It is easy to get vague when we think about the thought of God; the poet talks about hearing God's voice on the rolling air, or as coming to us in the love of our friends; it sounds beautiful, but it may be all nonsense. Our sense of the beautiful has to take shape somehow, an ideal is of no use to me unless it has become incarnated. Nowhere in the Bible is there any notice taken of the worship of abstractions. We may talk about God as the Almighty, the All-powerful, but He means nothing to us unless He has become incarnated and touched human life where we touch it; and the revelation of Redemption is that God's Thought did express itself in Jesus Christ, that God became manifest on the plane on which we live.

(a) The Time-Beginning of God's Thought (Genesis 1:2)

When the mind of God thought on the chaos it was like an artist mixing the colours on his palette, and Genesis 1:2 describes the state of the "palette"—"without form, and void"; and out of that God created Cosmos; He expressed His thought in the universe we see. The earth is always spoken of in the Bible as God's. The word of God produces its own expression. And God said, Let there be light: and there was light." Our language rarely expresses us at all.

(b) The Time-Birth of God's Thought (John 1:1-3) God's Thought expressed itself not only in the universe which He created, but in a Being called "the Word," whose name to us is "Jesus Christ." John declares that God's Thought manifested itself in a Word, and that that Word became incarnated in a human life. We only know God's thought and the expression of it in Jesus Christ, and we only know the meaning of "God and man one" in Jesus Christ. Our conception of the Trinity is an attempt of the human mind to define how God manifested Himself.

(c) The Timeless Benediction of God's Thought (Philippians 2:9–11; Ephesians 1:21)

Jesus Christ not only has dominion now, but in the ages to come. God never says to man "You must"; He says, "You will ultimately come there." We may come in the right way or by breaking our neck, but we will come, not by compulsion but by absolute agreement that Jesus Christ alone is The Way. God has so decreed it that man must work together with Him and bring about agreement with His own expressed Thought. We are apt to make the mistake of thinking that God is going to coerce men; He never does. God is giving men ample time to do exactly what they like, both as individuals and as nations; He allows us to develop as we choose, but in the end we will come to agree with Him. The introduction of socialism into the history of civilisation is the next thing to be manifested, everything else has been tried, and socialism will end as every other human attempt has ended, in proving that man cannot establish himself in unity with God and ignore Jesus Christ, either in individual or in national life.

2. The Education in God's Thought

Ye are our epistle. (2 Corinthians 3:2)

You cannot prove that God is love if you have not been born from above (RV mg), because everything around you disproves it. Take the war and the ruination going on just now, it is absurd to say that it is just and reasonable; it is tragic and wrong; and yet when you are born from above you are able to discern the "arm of the Lord" behind it all, but it takes the nature of Jesus Christ to see it, human nature apart from Him is unable to do so. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again," Jesus said to Nicodemus. I must have the nature of Jesus Christ born into me, then I shall see things as He did.

(a) The Character of the Name (Matthew 1:21)

"... and thou shalt call His name Jesus: for it is He that shall save His people from their sins" (RV). The character of the Name is that Jesus Christ is Saviour, and the evidence that I belong to Him is that I am delivered from sin; if I am not, I have a name to live, but am dead. When I become a Christian Jesus Christ exhibits the character of His own Name in me.

(b) The Curriculum of the Name (Acts 4:12)

This verse is a profound utterance, the inevitable certainty that there is no salvation under heaven, saving through the Name of Jesus. The whole of our education is to bring us to this understanding. So often we are like a man crossing a moor who obstinately refuses to take any directions, and he goes on and on only to find himself hopelessly lost; then he humbly tracks back to the signpost and looking up, sees the way to go. God does not get angry with us, He simply waits until we realise that what He says is true. "And in none other is there salvation: for neither is there any other name under heaven, that is given among men, wherein we must be saved" (RV).

(c) The Comprehension of the Name (1 Corinthians 12:3)

We blunder when we tell people they must believe certain things about Jesus Christ; a man cannot believe until he knows Him, then belief is spontaneous and natural. "No man can say, Jesus is Lord, but in the Holy Spirit" (RV). You may get a parrot recital of a creed, but when a man says, with a thrill all through him, "Thou art the Christ," he is stating an intuitive revelation, not an intellectual conception; it is a committal to a Person. When I commit myself to Jesus I begin to see properly. No man believes what he sees unless he believes before he sees. "Because thou hast seen Me, hast thou believed? [RV mg] Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."

3. The Experience as God's Thought

We become incorporated into God's Thought, and then we go on to experience it. It will take all Time and Eternity to experience God's Thought—"And this is life eternal, that they should know Thee . . ." (RV)—a continual new wonder. The schooling we are going through just now is to develop us into an understanding of the Thought of God.

(a) The Charge of the Name (Matthew 10:32)

The charge of the Name means that I stand true to Jesus Christ, confessing Him wherever I am. It is easy to preach, nothing easier, but it is another thing to confess. Confessing means to say with every bit of me that Jesus Christ has come into my flesh. In practical outcome it means that if I say I have been saved by God's grace, I must show it, I have to be true to the Name in every detail. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

(b) The Charm of the Name (Revelation 2:17)

Think of the way God disciplines us into an experience of the phases of the Name; sometimes we are chastened into knowing Jesus Christ as the Way, at other times into knowing Him as the Truth, and the Life; but there is another and a grander Name yet—"a new name..., which no one knoweth but he that receiveth it" (RV).

(c) The Community of the Name (Ephesians 4:13) We attain to the fulness of Christ in one way only, through the Name. It is not individuals who attain, but humanity as a whole. One day the whole human race will be in God's sight as the Body of Christ, completely one with God. Jesus Christ was the Word of God, the expression of God's thought, and His earthly life is a symbol of what the human race will be like when it is related to God as the Son of Man was related. ". . . till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

HAVE I TO FORGIVE MY ENEMIES?

Matthew 5:43-44

Did Jesus Christ mean it when He said "Love your enemies"? If He did, we must come to the conclusion either that He was a madman, or that there is a meaning underneath His words which we do not at first see. It is impossible to do what Our Lord says if we imagine we can do it of ourselves, and we soon discover our ignorance. Jesus Christ bases all His teaching on the fundamental fact that God can do for a man what he cannot do for himself. It is an easy business to say I love my enemies when I haven't any, but when I have an enemy, when a man has done me or those who belong to me, a desperate wrong, what is my attitude as a Christian to be? Does Jesus Christ mean that I have to ignore the rugged sense of justice which is in every man, and be a sentimentalist and say, "Oh yes, I forgive you"? What we are up against just now is the danger of not making the basis of forgiveness and peace the right kind. If it is not the basis of perfect justice, it will fail. We may succeed in calling a truce, but that is not peace, and before long we will be at it again.

1. The Matter of Forgiveness. Repentance (Ephesians 1:7)

In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of His grace.

Forgiveness is the great message of the Gospel, and it satisfies a man's sense of justice completely. The fundamental factor of Christianity is "the forgiveness of sins." But what about the man who does not care whether he is forgiven or not? That is the case with us all to begin with, we do not care whether Jesus Christ lived or died or did anything at all, and to hear about God forgiving us, why, there is nothing in it. But when a man gets convicted of sin (which is the most direct way of knowing that at the basis of life there is a problem too big for him to solve), he knows that God dare not forgive him; if He did, then man has a bigger sense of justice than God. The majority of us know nothing about the Redemption or forgiveness until we are enmeshed by the personal problem—something happens which stabs us wide awake and we get our indifferent hide pierced; we come up against things and our conscience begins to be roused. When once a man's conscience is roused he knows God dare not forgive him and it awakens a sense of hopelessness. Forgiveness is a revelation—hope for the hopeless; that is the message of the Gospel.

According to the Bible the basis of things is tragic, and the way out is the way Jesus Christ made in the Redemption. Any man, whether he be Cain or Judas, or you or I, can receive absolute forgiveness from God the moment he knows he needs it: but God cannot forgive a man unless he repents. Repentance means that we recognise the need for forgiveness—"hands up, I know it." Jesus Christ did not come to fling forgiveness broadcast; He did not come to the Pharisees, who withstood Him, and said He was possessed with a devil, and say "I forgive you": He said, "How can ye escape the damnation of hell?" We may talk as much as we like about forgiveness, but it will never make any difference to us unless we realise that we need it. God can never forgive the man who does not want to be forgiven. As long as we live in the "tenth storey" we either talk sentimental stuff or else we remain indifferent to the fact of forgiveness; only when we "strike bottom" morally do we begin to realise what the New Testament means by forgiveness. Immediately a man turns to God, the Redemption is such that forgiveness is complete.

"In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins." The background of the forgiveness of God is His holiness. If God were not holy, there would be nothing in His forgiveness. The conscience of God means that He has to completely forgive and finally redeem the whole human race. Every man knows by the way he is made that there is such a thing as justice, and God forgives on the basis of His justice, viz., on the ground of Redemption. We are apt to say glibly that God will forgive us, but when we come up against the thing we know He dare not; if He did, He would cease to be God. There is no such thing as God overlooking sin. That is where people make a great mistake with regard to God's love; they say "God is love and of course He will forgive sin": God is holy love and of course He cannot forgive sin. Therefore if God does forgive, there must be a reason that justifies Him in doing it. Unless there is a possibility of forgiveness establishing an order of holiness and rectitude in a man, it would be a mean and abominable thing to be forgiven. If I am forgiven without being altered by the forgiveness, forgiveness is a damage to me and a sign of unmitigated weakness on the part of God. A man has to clear God's character in forgiving him. The revelation of forgiveness in the Bible is not that God puts snow over a rubbish heap, but that He turns a man into the standard of Himself, the Forgiver. If I receive forgiveness and yet go on being bad, I prove that God is not justified in forgiving me. When God forgives a man He gives him the heredity of His own Son, and there is no man on earth but can be presented "perfect in Christ Jesus." Then on the ground of the Redemption, it is up to me to live as a son of God. The reason my sins are forgiven so easily is because the Redemption cost God so much.

2. The Method of Forgiveness. Reaction (Matthew 6:12–15)

Jesus Christ taught His disciples to pray, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors," that is, He taught them to recognise that God's method of forgiveness is the same as our own. Jesus Christ did not say "because we forgive our debtors," but "as we forgive our debtors," that is, as children of God we are forgiven not on the ground of Redemption, but on the ground that we show the same forgiveness to our fellows that God has shown to us. "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." God's method in forgiveness is exactly the method of our forgiveness, and is according to our human sense of justice.

Peter seemed to stand on tiptoe once and try to reach to God's forgiveness—"Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven." Yet when a man has deliberately done you a wrong, it is according to the teaching of Jesus that you must not say you forgive him unless he turns; if he turns, forgiveness is to be complete. We may forgive easily because we are shallow, but when we are deeply roused, we cannot forgive unless our sense of justice is satisfied. The most marvellous ingredient in the forgiveness of God is that He also forgets, the one thing a human being can never do. Forgetting with God is a divine attribute; God's forgiveness forgets. We can never forget saving by the sovereign grace of God. God exhausts metaphors to show what His forgiveness means—"I, even I, am He that blotteth out thy transgressions for Mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins" (Isaiah 43:25); "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins" (Isaiah 44:22); "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us" (Psalm 103:12); "For Thou hast cast all my sins behind Thy back" (Isaiah 38:17); "For I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more" (Jeremiah 31:34).

When the prodigal son came back with words which meant, "I am sorry to the backbone for what I have done and am ashamed of myself," the father never said a word about the far country, about the harlots and the riotous living (the elder brother reminded him of all that); he did not cast up at him one thing he had done—sufficient for him that his son had returned. Is it conceivable to us that God will forget what we have done? He says He will; but the forgiveness of God does not work unless we turn; it cannot, any more than it does according to human justice. When we turn to God and say we are sorry, Jesus Christ has pledged His word that we will be forgiven, but the forgiveness is not operative unless we turn, because our turning is the proof that we know we need forgiveness.

3. The Message of Forgiveness. Retaliation v. Retribution (Matthew 18:15–17; 34–35)

Moreover if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. (Matthew 18:15)

It would be an immoral thing to forgive a man who did not say he was sorry. If a man sins against you and you go to him and point out that he has done wrong—if he hears you, then you can forgive him; but if he is obstinate you can do nothing; you cannot say "I forgive you," you must bring him to a sense of justice. Jesus Christ said, "I say unto you, Love your enemies," but He also said the most appallingly stern things that were ever uttered, e.g., "... neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." I cannot forgive my enemies and remain just unless they cease to be my enemies and give proof of their sorrow, which must be expressed in repentance. I have to remain steadfastly true to God's justice. There are times when it would be easier to say "Oh well, it does not matter, I forgive you," but Jesus insists that the uttermost farthing must be paid. The love of God is based on justice and holiness, and I must forgive on the same basis.

There is a difference between retaliation and retribution. The basis of life is retribution—"For with what judgement ve judge, ve shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." This statement of our Lord's is not a haphazard guess, it is an eternal law and it works from God's throne right down. Life serves back in the coin you pay. You are paid back what you give not necessarily by the same person; and this holds with regard to good as well as evil. If you have been generous, you will meet generosity again through someone else; if you have been shrewd in finding out the defects of others, that is the way people will judge you. Jesus Christ never allows retaliation, but He says that the basis of life is retribution. If my enemy turns and gives proof of his sorrow, I am not to meet him with retaliation. Christianity is not a set of principles, but relationship to a Person, Jesus Christ, while the Holy Spirit works in us a spontaneous relationship to things on the basis of God's forgiveness of us.

The distinctive thing about Christianity is forgiveness, not sanctification or my holiness, but forgiveness—the greatest miracle God ever performs through the Redemption. Forgiveness means not merely that a man is saved from sin and made right for heaven—no man would accept forgiveness on such a level; forgiveness means that I am saved from sinning and put into the Redeemer to grow up into His image. I am forgiven into a recreated relationship, i.e., into identification with God in Christ, so that the forgiven man is the holy man. The basis of human life is Redemption. There is nothing more certain in Time or Eternity than what Jesus Christ did on the Cross. He switched the whole of the human race back into right relationship to God, and any one of us can get into touch with God now, not presently.

Forgiveness is the miracle of grace; it is impossible for human beings to forgive, and it is because we do not see this that we misunderstand the revelation of forgiveness. The great characteristic of God is not that He says He will pay no more attention to what we have done, but that He forgives us, and in forgiving He is able to deal with our past, with our present and our future. Do I believe that God can deal with my "yesterday" and make it as though it had never been? By means of the Redemption God undertakes to deal with a man's past, and He does it in two ways—first, He forgives it, and then He makes it a wonderful culture for the future. When God says "Don't do that any more," He instils into me the power that enables me not to do it any more, and the power comes by right of what Jesus Christ did on the Cross. That is the unspeakable wonder of the forgiveness of God, and when we become rightly related to God, we are to have the same relationship to our fellow men that God has to us. "And be ve kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you" (Ephesians 4:32).

THE CALL OF GOD

It is difficult to define the call of God—it is an implicit thing, like the call of the sea or of the mountains. Not everyone hears the call of the sea and of the mountains, but only those who have the nature of the sea or the mountains in them. In the same way no man hears the call of God unless he has the nature of God in him and has got into the way of listening to the implicit leading of the call. The significant thing is that God did not call Isaiah. There are times when God does call a man to a special work, but in Isaiah's case God did not call him; he "[over]heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Isaiah had been brought by spiritual concentration as well as consecration inside the moral frontiers where he could hear God's voice. We need trained ears to hear. One man may hear the call of God and another hear nothing; it depends on what goes on within the man, not outside him.

"In the year that king Uzziah died, I saw the Lord..." (RV). "In the years of the Great War, I saw the Lord." That is the time when a man sees differently. It takes a crisis when the deeps are opened and life is profoundly altered before a man can say, "I saw the Lord." After Hezekiah had come face to face with death he said, "I shall go softly [as in solemn procession, RV mg] all my years, because of the bitterness of my soul" (Isaiah 38:15). There is always a difference in the man who has come face to face with certain death, when he goes through the supreme crisis the true elements come out. This war has brought tension to countless lives and people are coming to see differently because of it. When a man goes through a crisis he fears he is losing God, but instead of that he is beginning to see Him for the first time, and he sees Him as a grander, more marvellous Being than ever he imagined.

1. Comprehensiveness of the Call

The first thing that impresses us about the call of God is that it comes to the whole man, not to one part of him. The majority of us are godly in streaks, spiritual in sections; it takes a long time to locate us altogether to the call of God. We have special days and religious moods, but when we get into contact with God we are brought in touch with Reality and made all of a piece. Our Lord's life was all one reality, you could never cut it into two—shallow here and profound there. My conception of God must embrace the whole of my life. When I see the Lord truly I see Him as God of my whole being; if He is only God in sections of me, He is not God at all.

2. Consciousness of Grossness

Then said I, Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts. (Isaiah 6:5)

Isaiah's words are a confession not of sin, but of the sense of absolute grossness. "I was as a beast before Thee" said the Psalmist, not an immoral beast but— "What an incapacitated type of man I am! I have seen the Lord, but how am I going to come anywhere near His marvellous holiness?" Any man will go to God for deliverance from sin, but it is another thing to have this consciousness of grossness dealt with; it takes discipline and patience and concentration. Will I agree that I am gross—"Woe is me! for I am undone"? If so, I am coming slowly to the condition Isaiah was in. It was his consciousness of grossness that brought Isaiah into a right relationship to God, that is an illuminating point. It is never my sense of goodness that brings me into touch with God, but my sense of unworthiness: "Woe is me!" for I am undone-that brings me into the presence of God at once. When a man knows his destitution, knows he cannot get hold of God, cannot be the things he longs to be, he begins to realise what it was Jesus Christ came to do, viz., to supply what he really lacks.

There is no obstacle, nothing in the past or the present or in his heredity, that can stand in a man's way if he will only make room for Jesus Christ. Once let him realise his need—"I can't be holy, I can't be pure in heart, I can't be the child of my Father in heaven and be kind to the unthankful and evil, I can't love my enemies"—Jesus Christ claims that He can do all that for him, but it depends on the man, i.e., upon how much he has come up against the things he cannot do for himself.

3. Character of the Commission

Isaiah saw the Lord, then he saw himself; then he overheard the voice of God saying "who will go?" and he said, "Here am I; send me"; and then God gave him a staggering message to deliver. "And He said, Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and turn again, and be healed" (Isaiah 6:9-10 RV). "Unless the people turn, the truth will deepen their condemnation, but you must speak." God's condemnations as well as His promises are conditional; as long as we remain with the wrong disposition unremoved, every truth of God will harden us and ripen us for judgement.

Isaiah caught a sudden glimpse, terrible in its clearness, of his own sin and his people's sin. There is very little of that amongst us nowadays and a lot of gathering our spiritual skirts around us; instead of our repentance being social repentance and our intercession vicarious, we are vindictive and bitter in spirit. The sight of God deepens humiliation in a saint and lifts him into intercession. Repentance is needed not only for individual sins, but for social sins. There is a social repentance to-day, but it is repentance not for the honour of God but because of the sorrows and sufferings of the people. All through the Bible runs the idea of national repentance, of social sanctification, until the idea reaches its climax in a holy city.

SPIRITUAL DISENCHANTMENT AND DELIGHT

1. Disillusionment and the Furnace of Disappointment

Let no man glory in men. For all things are yours. . . . (1 Corinthians 3:21)

Enchantment in the natural realm means to be taken out of your wits by song and rhythm; spiritual enchantment comes along the line of aggressive Christian work, meetings, and the contagion of other people's joy, and it is ensnaring. If we get taken up with salvation or with holiness or Divine healing instead of with Jesus Christ, we will be disillusioned. We pin our faith to a plan of salvation that can be expressed in words and we glory in it, then we begin to find it does not work and a curious disillusionment begins. It sounds all right, but its fruit is not that which bears a family likeness to Jesus Christ, and it causes us consternation if we are conscientious and desirous of being all that God wants us to be. Many a man to-day when he is dumped down in the desert¹⁶ has found disillusionment, he is amongst men who do not care for his religion, and he finds there is not the thrill and the joy there used to be; he realises he has been fostering a religious life which is not genuine, and spiritual cynicism may be the result. A cynic spiritually is one who cuts himself off from other people because the enchantment of service and association with others instead of producing reality has been engendering priggishness, the attitude of a superior person. Paul continually warns "Don't glory in men." If you find your spiritual character is disappointing you, you are not developing a family likeness to Jesus Christ, it is because there is no inner reality. When you come to the furnace of disappointment, beware of the swing of the pendulum. Discouragement means the heart knocked out of self-love and my estimate of what God can do. We are also impatient with the things that are neither black nor white, but immensely difficult and perplexing, not easy to decipher. We are made up of a thousand and one springs and the only One who can bring the thing out right is the One who designed it. If a man has never gone through a spell of fanaticism it is because he is not prepared to cut off anything in order to get at reality. It is essential to be maimed for a while in order to develop our life with God (see Matthew 5:29-30).

2. Detachment from the Fury of Desire

For by Him were all things created, . . . and He is before all things, and by Him all things consist. (Colossians 1:16–17)

Our natural life is a fury of desire for the things we can see. That is the meaning of lust—I must have it at once, a fury of desire without any regard for the consequences. I have to be detached from the things I can see and be brought into a living relationship with the Creator of those things. If I am taken up with the created things and forget Jesus Christ I shall find that things disappoint and I get disillusioned. If my body is "bossed" by personal self-realisation I am defiling the temple of the Holy Ghost; I may be moral and upright but I have become ruler over my own life. "Give up your right to yourself to Me," says Jesus, "let Me realise Myself in you." He quenches the fury of desire by detaching us from things so that we may know Him. In this way God brings us into the fulness of life. The majority of us are not in the place where God can give us the hundredfold more. We say, "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," while God is wanting to give us the bush with all the birds in it! It is necessary to be detached from things and then come back to them in a right relationship. A sense of property is a hindrance to spiritual growth, that is why so many of us know nothing about communion with Jesus Christ.

When we are detached from things on the inside the fury of desire burns itself out. The attitude is not one born of external detachment, that is atheistic; Paul told Timothy to beware of those who teach abstinence from meats and marriage. The detachment is not to be that of an aesthete but that which springs from being in perfect communion with God. Our Lord's external life was so social that the men of His day, who were externally detached, said of Him, "Behold, a gluttonous man, and a winebibber." They were detached externally, but not in spirit; Jesus Christ was detached in His disposition, but not externally. Those of us who are spiritual are hopelessly blind to God's purpose; the Spirit of God is all the time trying to make us detached in mind in order to bring us into real communion with God. God is trying to educate us in inner martyrdom and we won't have it, we get tired of being educated spiritually.

^{16.} in the desert: Chambers was speaking to soldiers camped in Egypt.

3. Devotion to the Face of Deity

Looking unto Jesus . . . (Hebrews 12:2)

If I want to see the Face of God I must fast from other things and concentrate on God. If in my inner life I am under apprehension by Jesus Christ for the time being I am out of touch with ordinary things. To fast is not to give up food, but to cut off the right arm, and pluck out the right eye. But that is only a stage, what we are tending towards is the perfection Jesus speaks of in Matthew 5:48—"Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect" (RV); but in order to get there we have to go the longest way round. The end is a relationship to God perfect and complete in every particular, but it means going through a furnace of disillusionment, and the furnace burns hard. One of the cruellest experiences is the disappointment over what we find in other lives. The last thing we learn is not to glory in men. Jesus Christ never expected from human nature what it was not designed to give; consequently He was never bitter or cynical. Unless our human relationships are based in God they will end in frantic disillusionment. The cause of it is the demand in human nature for satisfaction. No human being can ever give satisfaction, and when I demand it and do not get it I become cruel and spiteful. When we are rightly related to Jesus Christ human love is transfigured because the last aching abyss of the heart is satisfied; but if the relationship with God is cut out our relationship to others is embittered. When once the relationship with God is right the satisfaction of human love is marvellous.

Christianity is not devotion to work, or to a cause, or a doctrine, but devotion to a Person, the Lord Jesus Christ. Christianity is a personal relationship which works spontaneously by "the moral originality of the Holy Ghost," there is a perfect gaiety of delight. You could never awaken self-pity in the Apostle Paul, you might starve him or imprison him, but you could never knock out of him that uncrushable gaiety and certainty of God. A khamseen¹⁷ wind knocks us out! Paul refused to take anything or anyone seriously but Jesus Christ. That is Our Lord's teaching in the Sermon on the Mount, viz., "Be carefully careless of everything saving your relationship to Me." We take everything else but that seriously. Our experience of spiritual delight depends upon whether we are getting to know Jesus Christ better, whether we have the power to make what we know real. If you are going through disenchantment, remember that is not the end, the end is the life which exhibits the spirit of Jesus—"I delight to do Thy will, O My God."

HOW TO USE VICTORY

And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, He went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed. Mark 1:35

This incident in the life of Our Lord occurred after what one would call a most successful day. He had endured the fierce onslaught in the wilderness, driven there for the devil to do his worst, and had come off more than conqueror, for we read that "angels came and ministered unto Him." If after a season of temptation a saint retains the power that draws the purest spirits to him, he may feel assured that the temptation has been gone through with successfully. Our Lord had called the men who were to be His disciples, and they had promptly left all and followed Him; He had had a triumphant time in Capernaum, casting out demons and setting men and women free. The fame and success of this mysterious Being grew, and we read that "all the city was gathered together at the door." It was after this time of eminent success in relieving men and blessing them that Jesus departed into a solitary place and spent the night in prayer.

Dr. George Adam Smith, ¹⁸ in a sermon on Prayer, uses the following illustration from his own experience in Switzerland. He was an ardent mountain climber, and (I quote from memory) as he neared the top of a certain mountain his guide stepped back in order to let him have the privilege of being first on the top. He said the exhilaration of the experience made him leap and jump for joy, but instantly the guide called out, "Down on your knees! It isn't safe standing up there." Dr. Smith used the illustration in the way I want to use it. After our days of successful service are we spending too much time in exuberant joy and shouting, forgetting that the only safe place is on our knees?

"And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, He went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed." I wonder what that night and early dawn hid? Our Lord went through His days with such easy power; what did He do in those solitary moments alone with God? Did He go back, in mind at least, to the glory which He had with the Father before the world was? Did He recline on the bosom of the Father and hear unspeakable words not lawful to utter? Such thoughts as these are not presumptuous but the meditation of the heart that knows what communion with God means. If that communion means so much to a human heart that has been saved and sanctified through the Atonement, what must it have meant to the Son of God? What it was Our Lord experienced is hidden from us, yet we too in our measure have had the unspeakable experience, if rare, when the dark night of Nature gives place to the dawn, when the "huge and thoughtful" silence of the night makes everything that is petty and trifling fall away, and lifts us into the larger isolation, which is no isolation but the realisation of the presence of God.

Where do we place the night of prayer and the dawn of intercession in our soul's calendar? Do we place it after a day of marvellous success in work for God? If we do not, our souls are in peril. Have we ever sufficiently realised our responsibility along the line of intercession? The Apostle Paul emphasises the tremendous importance of prayer—"Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints; and for me. . . ." When our souls have been lifted into the presence of God and we have grasped some truth with new illumination, how much time have we spent in prayer for those servants and handmaids whom God has used to bless us? We allow ourselves to imagine that it would be presumptuous on our part to pray for the "Pauls"; but this is a snare of Satan.

Notice this phrase, "He departed into a solitary place"; and notice also Our Lord's instructions regarding private prayer—"But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret." Any soul who has not that solitary place alone with God is in supreme peril spiritually. Let us ask ourselves if we have allowed the solitary places to be broken down or built over with altars that look beautiful, and people passing by say "How religious that man or woman must be." Such an altar, if there is no other in the solitary place, is an insult to the deep work of God in our souls. God grant we may learn more and more of the profound joy of getting alone with God in the dark of the night and toward the early dawn.

THE WITNESS OF SORROW

Set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof. Ezekiel 9:4

We can fathom our own natures by the things we sorrow over. In this ancient Book of Ezekiel the man clothed in linen, with a writer's inkhorn by his side, was to set a mark upon the foreheads of the men who sorrowed for the city's sin. Let us take time to wonder if such a visitant on such an errand would mark us as among the people privileged to sorrow thus. Jeremiah has been called "the weeping prophet," and in his Lamentations we find that the secret of his sorrow is Jerusalem, the city of his love. "How doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people!" (Lamentations 1:1). Instantly our minds pass on to what is recorded in Luke 19:41, "And when He drew nigh, He saw the city and wept over it" (RV), and we remember with adoring wonder that Our Lord is known throughout all generations as "a Man of sorrows."

1. Worldly Sorrow

... the sorrow of the world worketh death. (2 Corinthians 7:10)

It is a terrible thing to say, and yet true, that there is a sorrow so selfish, so sentimental and sarcastic that it adds to the sin of the city. All sorrow that arises from being baffled in some selfish aim of our own is of the world and works death. Those who sorrow over their own weaknesses and sins and stop short at that, have a sorrow that only makes them worse, it is not a godly sorrow that works repentance. Oh that all men knew that every sentiment has its appropriate reaction, and if the nature does not embrace that reaction it degenerates into a sullen sentimentalism that kills all good action.

How certain it is that the men in Jerusalem of old upon whose foreheads the mark was set, were working out the appropriate reaction of their sorrow. It is an appalling thing to mourn and sigh over the sins and iniquities of our city and do nothing about it.

2. Working Sorrow

For godly sorrow worketh repentance unto a salvation which bringeth no regret. (2 Corinthians 7:10 RV mg)

No one can be touched with sorrow for the sins of his city unless he has felt keen sorrow over his own sins. The Apostle Paul never forgot his past sins (see 1 Timothy 1:12–16). Scriptural repentance leads to positive salvation and sanctification; the only truly repentant man is the holy man. Every forgiven soul will love the world so much that he hates to death the sin that is damning men; to love the world in any other sense is to be an enemy of God: to love the world as God loves it is to spend and be spent that men might be saved from their sins. Godly sorrow not only works a positive godliness, but grants us the mark of the Cross in winning souls, an unsleeping sorrow that keeps us at it night, day and night, filling up "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ."

3. Winsome Sorrow

Behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow. (Lamentations 1:12)

The sign for the world without God is a circle, complete in and for itself; the sign for the Christian is the Cross. The Christian knows by bitter yet blessed conviction of sin that no man is sufficient for himself, and he thereby enters into identification with the Cross of Calvary, and he longs and prays and works to see the sinful, self-centred world broken up and made the occasion for the mighty Cross to have its way whereby men may come to God and God come down to men.

4. Weakening Sorrow

What, could ye not watch with Me one hour? (Matthew 26:40)

For this cause many among you are weak and sickly, and not a few sleep. (1 Corinthians 11:30 RV)

There are many to-day who are suffering from spiritual sleeping sickness, and the sorrow of the world which works death is witnessed in all directions. If personal sorrow does not work itself out along the appropriate line, it will lull us to a pessimistic sleep. For instance, when we see our brother "sinning a sin not unto death"

(1 John 5:16 RV), do we get to prayer for him, probed by the searching sorrow of his sin? Most of us are so shallow spiritually that when Our Lord in answer to some outrageous request we have made, asks us—"Are ye able to drink the cup that I drink? or to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" we say "We are able" (RV). Then He begins to show us what the cup and the baptism meant to Him-"But I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!" (Luke 12:50). "And Jesus said unto them, Ye shall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of; and with the baptism that I am baptized with a shall ye be baptized"—and there begins to dawn for the disciple the great solemn day of martyrdom which closes for ever the day of exuberant undisciplined service, and opens the patient pilgrimage of pain and joy, with "more of the first than the last.'

5. Without Sorrow

Many are in the "show business" spiritually, and the danger of this is greater than at first appears; it is a danger as old as the Book of Job, and is expressed in the character of Eliphaz who takes up the position of a superior person because of his own mysterious experience. Such an one could never have the mark set on his forehead as one who sighs and cries for the sin of his city; instead he would be an un-suffering dogmatist forgetting all about the sin of his city in his own personal experience. To-day there are in our midst many so-called Christian movements, but they bear the characteristic of being without sorrow for sin and without sympathy for suffering.

The witness of sorrow identifies us with Our Lord "who His own self bare our sins in His body" (RV); it binds us—if one may reverently put it so—into a mighty league of sin-bearers, pouring out the strenuous service of love and long-suffering akin to the love which God has shown to us. Thank God for the beauty of the Cross-crowned lives; it is the mark of the highest type of Christian life, the evidence of complete salvation.

And thus that far-off day in dim antiquity is linked with the great Day yet to be, of which it is written, "And they shall see His face; and His name shall be in their foreheads" (Revelation 22:4).

SINCERITY AND REALITY

Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee. . . . Master, say on. Luke 7:40

It is quite possible to be a sincere person, to be in earnest in proclaiming the truth of God, and yet not have one iota of reality along with it. This does not mean that the sincere person is a hypocrite or a sham, but it does mean that he has never understood that God wants him to be real.

In Luke 7 we read that "one of the Pharisees desired Him that He would eat with him. And He entered into the Pharisee's house, and sat down to meat" (RV). Simon, his host, was no doubt sincere; he kept his own counsel, and while he said nothing openly of his disapproval of the penitent woman's presence, yet he "spake within himself, saying, This man, if He were a prophet, would have perceived who and what manner of woman this is which toucheth Him, that she is a sinner" (RV). Then Jesus proved He was a prophet indeed by telling Simon aloud all he had been thinking silently, and went on to point out that his Pharisaic standards had caused him to treat Him in a neglectful manner—"thou gavest Me no water for My feet": "thou gavest Me no kiss": "My head with oil thou didst not anoint. . . . " When Our Lord enters our homes, or our churches, or social order, and says "I have somewhat to say unto thee," many of us, like Simon, answer quite sincerely, "Master, say on," although what Jesus has to say may prove just as unpalatable to us as it must have been to Simon.

Custom in spiritual matters is apt to make us peculiarly dead to much that Jesus Christ has to say—our perfectly sincere mood blinds us to the terrible fact that we are utterly un-real. What about all our sincere talk of sanctification—are we really sanctified? our sincere talk about the Holy Spirit—are we really indwelt by the Spirit? our sincere talk about the Sermon on the Mount—are we really living out its teaching? Let us examine ourselves and see whether religious "use and wont" has not resulted in our being perfectly sincere in our testimony for the Truth while we are quite un-real as regards a genuine living out of the Truth. We have to beware of the deadening of our conscience spiritually through familiarity with certain favourite passages of Scripture (e.g., Luke 11:13; John 3:16; Galatians 2:20). There is a kind of quiet smugness about a knowledge of Scripture which says, sincerely, "Thank God I know that now," while the life may be as un-real as a mirage, for "the letter killeth, but the Spirit gives life."

It may give us a surprising shock to have our spiritual customs broken into by some word of Jesus applied by the Spirit, but in this way the sensitiveness of our conscience, which is ever apt to go to sleep over the repetition of sincere religious customs, is quickened. We may think it a great thing to answer to Jesus, in all sincerity, "Master, say on," and yet it may piously mean that we only intend to listen to Him about the things over which we have made up our minds; it is quite a different matter to be willing, at all cost to spiritual pride and prejudice, to be willing to re-arrange everything under the authority of Jesus Christ, until we are real with the vivid reality which tells not only in our actions, but in the atmosphere we carry with us. May the Holy Spirit keep us full of the marvel of the statements of Jesus, and so renew us in the spirit of our minds that we more and more sensitively apprehend God's purpose in our lives.

The cure for this perilous divorce between sincerity and reality lies in the determined service of the mind. To say, "Master, say on," as a mere homage of the lips, while we are quietly determined to go on just as we have always done, is false and damaging, and this is bound to be the result in the most sincere soul among us unless we allow the Holy Spirit to continually renew our minds by concentration on The Truth. It is the spiritual interpretation of Our Lord's teaching which makes us real, and gives us the power to overcome the world and be the inspirers of many a lagging-behind soul. The strength of a real man or real woman cannot be estimated. There is always a great danger that the sentimental emotions which drift around every high and holy certainty may shift us from the courageous concentration on Christ's teaching which alone can make us and keep us real.

Let us with renewed concentration so obey Our Lord that He may find us hopeful, alert, wide-awake saints, determined to keep in sympathy with His words and His point of view.

"I have somewhat to say unto thee.... Master, say on."

^{19.} use and wont: custom; habit; familiarity.

DEVOTIONAL "WE" OR "ME"?

Matthew 23:8-10

"WE" meant to serve so much,
In daily life to help the poor and sad,
And by the tenderness of word and deed
To make them feel God's goodness, and be glad;
Should "I" serve less?

"WE" meant to love so much, To let our kindred, friends and neighbours feel That we had been with Christ and learned of Him

The gentlest ways of love to help and heal; Dare "I" love less?

Because "WE" meant so much,
Shall I with coward heart lie down and see Life's meaning and its service unfulfilled
My Father! Grant the strength and love to "me"
Not to do less!

The aspect of collective discipleship and individual discipleship is frequently brought out in the New Testament. It is so easy to talk about what "we" are going to do—"we" are going to do marvellous things, and it ends in none of us doing anything. The incident in John 6:66-71 brings clearly to light the "we" aspect as emphasised by Peter, and also Our Lord's rigorous sorting of it out to the personal element— "Would ye also go away? Simon Peter answered Him, Lord, to whom shall we go? . . . " (RV). Then Jesus says something that seems irrelevant but is not-"Did I not choose you the twelve, and one of you is a devil?" (RV). We never become disciples in crowds or even in twos; discipleship is always a personal matter (see Luke 13:23–24; John 21:21–22). We are brought together by God, not by our own selecting. Let me get my "me" rightly related to Jesus Christ and I shall find others will get related in the same way.

1. Omniscient Teacher

For one is your Teacher, and all ye are brethren. (RV)

It is necessary to haul ourselves up short and ask—Do I recognise Jesus Christ as my Teacher, or am I at the mercy of vague spiritual impulses of my own? Am I accepting someone else's conception of God, or am I bringing everything I hear, every impulse, every emotion that comes to me, into line with the teaching of Christ? The test of every spiritual impulse is, does it make Jesus Christ the supreme Teacher? Jesus said, When the Holy Spirit is come, "He shall teach you all things." The Holy Spirit is the great bond of union because He keeps us united to the one Teacher. Jesus Christ is not a great Teacher alongside Plato and other great teachers; He stands absolutely alone. "Test your teachers," said Jesus; the teachers who come from God are those who clear the way to Jesus Christ, and keep it clear. We are estimated in God's sight as workers by whether or not we clear the way for people to see Jesus.

2. Omnipresent Father

For one is your Father, which is in heaven.

George MacDonald in one of his books gives a graphic description of the wonderful simplicity a child of God has; he pictures Job opening God's private door, as it were, and flinging himself into His presence and presenting his problems. He is indicating the freedom a child of God has to come and say, "I am puzzled by this and that; why should things be so?" He is coming not to a monarch who will terrify him, but to a Father, if he is a disciple, and he can speak just like a child with perfect simplicity and freedom. Some of us seem to have the idea that we are away in a howling wilderness and we must cry and agonise before we can get God's ear. Turn to the New Testament and see what Jesus says—"Father, I thank Thee that Thou hast heard Me. And I knew that Thou hearest Me always."

"One is your Father"—your Father! Think for one minute, have you behaved to-day as though God were your Father or have you to hang your head in absolute shame before Him for the miserable, mean, unworthy thoughts you have had about your life? It all springs from one thing, you have lost hold of the idea that God is your Father. Some of us are such fussy, busy people, refusing to look up and realise the tremendous revelation in Jesus Christ's words—"Your heavenly Father knoweth...."

3. Omnipotent Master

For one is your Master, even Christ.

There is no room in Our Lord's conception of discipleship for a disciple to say, "Now, Lord, I am going to serve You." That does not come into His idea of discipleship. It is not that we work for God, but that God works through us; He uses us as He likes, He allots our work where He chooses, and we learn obedience, even as our Lord did. ". . . though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered." Jesus said, "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (RV). How did God send Jesus? To do His will. How does Jesus send His disciples? To do His will. "Ye shall be My witnesses" (RV), a satisfaction to Christ wherever we are placed.

"One is your Master, even Christ"; He is all-wise, stand true to Him and other saints will be true to you; if you stand true to someone else's teaching you will find you become segregated from the saints. "But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another. . . ." If you hide anything in your life with God, down you go, no matter what you have experienced; hide nothing.

THE MINISTRY OF THE INTERIOR

I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem; they shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that are the LORD's remembrancers, take ye no rest, and give Him no rest, till He establish, and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth. Isaiah 62:6–7 (RV)

And the LORD said unto him, Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof. Ezekiel 9:4

Do I know anything experimentally about this aspect of things? Have I ever spent one minute before God in intercessory importunity over the sins of other people? If we take these statements of the prophets and turn the searchlight on ourselves, we will be covered with shame and confusion because of our miserably selfish, self-centred Christianity.

How many of us have ever entered into this Ministry of the Interior where we become identified with Our Lord and with the Holy Spirit in intercession? It is a threefold intercession: at the Throne of God, Jesus Christ; within the saint, the Holy Ghost; outside the saint, common-sense circumstances and common-sense people, and as these are brought before God in prayer the Holy Spirit gets a chance to make intercession according to the will of God. That is the meaning of personal sanctification, and that is why the barriers of personal testimony must be broken away and effaced by the realisation of why we are sanctified—not to be fussy workers for God, but to be His servants, and this is the work, vicarious intercession.

One of the first lessons learnt in the Ministry of the Interior is to talk things out before God in soliloquy—tell Him what you know He knows in order that you may get to know it as He does. All the harshness will go and the suffering sadness of God's Spirit will take its place, and gradually you will be brought into sympathy with His point of view.

There is an advocacy of holiness which was never born at Calvary, it is the resuscitation of the Pharisaic spirit dressed in the garb of Pentecost—an insufferable superiority. The Spirit of God must have a deep indignation at the preaching of holiness that is not the holiness of Jesus. The holiness of Jesus is the most humble thing on earth.

When God puts a weight on you for intercession for a soul don't shirk it by talking to him. It is much easier to talk to him than to talk to God about him—much easier to talk to him than to take it before God and let the weight crush the life out of you until gradually and patiently God lifts the life out of the mire. That is where very few of us go.

When God brings a burden to you never allow it to develop into carnal suspicion. In the Ministry of the Interior all we have to do is simply to take the matter before God and be made "crushed grapes" until the Holy Spirit produces such an atmosphere that the one who is wrong cannot endure it. That is God's method, and we interfere by using our own discernment.

The knowledge of where people are wrong is a hindrance to prayer, not an assistance. "I want to tell you of the difficulties so that you may pray intelligently." The more you know the less intelligently you pray because you forget to believe that God can alter the difficulties.

"Howbeit when the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" (RV). Which one of us would God stop at and say, "That one is My remembrancer" (RV)? or would He have to say, "That one is serving a conviction of his own, he is not My servant at all"?

"... greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto the Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do."

"FOR CHRIST'S CROWN AND COVENANT"

For Christ's Crown and Covenant²⁰ comes nearer to the New Testament conception of loyalty to Christ than any other all down the centuries of Christianity, and what we need to do is to translate it into terms which fit our own day and generation.

1. Loyalty to His Royalty

Pilate therefore said unto Him, Art Thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest it, because I am a king. (John 18:37 RV mg)

Jesus Christ is not only Saviour, He is King, and He has the right to exact anything and everything from us at His own discretion. We talk about the joys and comforts of salvation; Jesus Christ talks about taking up the cross and following Him. Whenever Our Lord talks about discipleship He prefaces it with an "If"—"you need not unless you like." It is always easier in certain crises to be "Demas" than a devoted disciple. Very few of us know anything about loyalty to Jesus Christ. "For My sake"—that is what makes the iron saint. We look upon Jesus Christ as the best Example of the Christian life; we do not conceive of Him as Almighty God Incarnate, with all power in heaven and on earth. We make Him a comrade, One who in the battle of life has more breath than the rest of us and He turns round to lend a hand. We deal with Him as if He were one of ourselves; we do not take off the shoes from our feet when He speaks. Jesus Christ is Saviour, and He saves us into His own absolute and holy lordship.

2. Loyalty to His Lordship

Ye call Me, Master, and, Lord: and ye say well; for so I am. (John 13:13 RV)

From a dog to a man, the master makes the difference. "Pi" people have no master, they are always hole-and-corner folks. Whenever a man is mastered by Jesus Christ you have a man "with breast and back as either should be," no whimperer, no sentimentalist, no pietist, but a man of God. That can only be produced by the mastership of Jesus Christ. The curious thing about Our Lord is that He never insists on our obedience. When we begin to usurp authority and say, "You must" and "you shall" it is a sure sign that we are out of touch with the supreme Authority. If you are in a position of authority and people are not obeying you, the greatest heart-searching you can have is the realisation that the blame does not lie with them, but with you; there is a leakage going on spiritually. Get right with God yourself, and every other one will get in touch with God through you.

3. Loyalty to His Rule

I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. (Galatians 2:20)

To imagine that Jesus Christ came to save and sanctify me is heresy: He came to save and sanctify me into Himself, to be His absolute bondslave; so completely His bondslave that when He speaks there is no possibility of dispute. "I reckon on you for extreme service, with no complaining on your part and no explanation on Mine." We begin to debate and say, "Why shouldn't I do this? I'm within my rights." That idea is so foreign to Our Lord's conception that He has made no provision for it. The passion of Christianity is that I deliberately sign away my own rights and become a bondslave of Jesus Christ. Any fool can insist on his rights, and any devil will see that he gets them; but the Sermon on the Mount means that the only right the saint will insist on is the right to give up his rights. That is the New Testament idea of sanctification, and that is why so few get anywhere near the baptism with the Holy Ghost. "I want to be baptised with the Holy Ghost so that I may be of use"—then it is all up. We are baptised with the Holy Ghost not for anything at all, but entirely, as Our Lord puts it, to be His witnesses, those with whom He can do exactly what He likes.

4. Loyalty to His Calling

And we know that to them that love God all things work together for good [God worketh all things with them for good, mg], even to them that are called according to His purpose. (Romans 8:28 RV)

It is only the loyal saint who believes that God engineers circumstances. We take such liberties with our circumstances, we treat the things that happen as if they were engineered by men, although we say that we believe God engineers them. To be faithful in every circumstance means that we have only one loyalty, and that is to our Lord. Most of us are too devoted to our own ideas of what God wants even to hear His call when it comes. We may be loyal to what we like, but we may find we have been disloyal to God's calling of us by not recognising Him in either the distress and humiliation or the joy and blessing. The test of loyalty always comes just there.

Loyalty to our own ideas is always the result of disloyalty to a person. God educates us by people. Any refusal to be loyal to whatever "Elijah" God sends us is detected by pious talk about being loyal to a word of God. Loyalty to the teachers God sends ends ultimately in supreme devotion to Himself. Beware how you treat the messengers of God because there is only one aim in the true messengers of God, and that is unflinching loyalty to the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and we shall have to account to God for our heedfulness of them or our heedlessness.

CLEANSED FROM SIN

1. Where Sin Ceases. "Walk in the Light"

But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin. (1 John 1:7)

"... as He is in the light"—God has nothing to hide: have I anything to hide from God? If I try to vindicate myself, I am not in the light; if I say "I can explain that away," I am not in the light, I have something to cover up; but if I walk in the light as God is in the light, then comes the amazing revelation that so that God Almighty can see nothing to censure "the blood of Iesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin," in me. That is not a conscious experience, it is a revelation. If you make the experience of conscious freedom from sin the test, you make hypocrites. Sin enough and you will soon be unconscious of sin. The nature of sin is that it destroys the possibility of knowing that you sin. Sin ceases when I am in the light as God is in the light, and in no other way. In my experience it works with a keen poignant knowledge of what sin is (cf. 1 Timothy 1:15–16).

"If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John 1:9). Watch the difference between confessing and admitting; the majority of us are quite ready to admit, it is the rarest thing to get to the place where we will confess—confess to God, not to man. It is much more difficult to confess to God than we are apt to think. It is not confessing in order to be forgiven; confession is the evidence that I am forgiven. God does not forgive me because I confess; I realise by my confession that I am forgiven. Am I willing to be brought to the place where God draws out my confession? When the Spirit of God convicts of sin it is not like a detective convicting a criminal, it is sin finding out a man's own nature and making him say, "Yes, I recognise it." When once your sin does find you out, the exquisite pain of confessing acts like the sweetest medicine—"a broken and a contrite heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise." Beware of having anything that makes your mind accept an excuse for yourself. I can step out of darkness into the light—when God is willing? No, when I am willing. "I do want to be in living communion with God"; I don't, if I did, I could be there in one second; the reason I am not there is that I won't confess, I won't submit to God's condemnation of the thing. Immediately confession is made the Atonement of Our Lord steps in with its supernatural efficacy.

2. Where Love Invades. "Walk in Love"

And walk in love, even as Christ also loved you. . . . (Ephesians 5:2 RV)

If I want God's light to increase in me until I am a child of the light, 1 Corinthians 13 is what I must measure up to.

"Love suffereth long, and is kind . . ." (RV). Have you had to suffer anything? have you remained kind in heart? It is damnably easy to be kind in speech and cruel in heart. To "walk in love" means that the very breathing of my disposition is kindness. If I get the trick of the right expression of face and speech, I can harbour a spirit that is as unlike Jesus Christ as can be. Beware of affectation spiritually, it is the very paw of the devil over the saint.

"Love envieth not..." (RV). Envy and jealousy may remain entirely latent until competition is launched on a certain plane and I recognise someone else's superiority; there is no getting away from it, I recognise that in the particular quality on which I prided myself, the other person is superbly my superior. How do I know when I am envious, jealous of someone being what I am not? When I am secretly rather glad, though my lips say the opposite, when that one stumbles. It springs from a jealous dislike of easily recognised superiority in the very same line of things as my own. No one can be with a superior person without having a feeling of envy and jealousy unless he is a saint; the saint knows no jealousy or envy because the life of the Lord Jesus is being manifested in him.

"seeketh not her own . . ." Self is so completely effaced that the only characteristic of the life is, "in all the world, my God, there is none but Thee." Its self does not bother its self, it is altogether devoted to God's interests in others.

"is not provoked..." (RV). Was Jesus Christ ever irritable? am I? God will put me in places where it would be natural for me to be provoked so that He might magnify His grace in me.

"... taketh not account of evil" (RV). If someone has done an unkind thing to you, don't let it blot God out. Apart from God we do reckon with evil, we reason from that standpoint. To "take no account of evil" does not mean we are ignorant of its existence; it means we do not take it in as a calculable factor. When the love of God is shed abroad in my heart by the Holy Ghost there is no lurking nest of remembrance in my spirit for the evil. Always beware of suspicion, it comes from the devil and ends there. The Holy Spirit never suspects.

First Corinthians 13 is sentiment transfigured into character. Love springs spontaneously, that is, it is not premeditated: but love does not develop like that. Both naturally and spiritually love requires careful developing; love won't stay if it is not sedulously cultivated. If I am not careful to keep the atmosphere of my love right by cultivation, it will turn to lust—"I must have this thing for myself." No love of the natural heart is safe unless the human heart has been satisfied by God first. The tragedies of human lives can only be solved by an understanding of the one great fundamental truth that Jesus Christ alone can satisfy the last aching abyss of the human heart.

LEAST IN THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN

Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven. Matthew 5:19

John Wesley in expounding this passage said it meant that "whosoever shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, shall not be in the kingdom of heaven at all"; but Our Lord is warning that it is possible to be as "the least" in the kingdom of heaven. When the apostle Paul says he is "less than the least of all saints," he is not referring to this standard of measurement, but to himself in his own eyes. (See Ephesians 3:8.)

What is it exactly to be "least in the kingdom of heaven"? For one thing, the words surely point out the necessity of searching the Scriptures in order to find out what the commandments and precepts of God are. As we go on in the spiritual life, the Spirit of God educates us down to the scruple, 21 that is, He applies the commandments of God to all the ramifications of our being. We may see Christian people doing things that surprise us, and yet it would be untrue to say they were not Christians; as you watch their development in the ways of God you find they are becoming more and more careful over things they used to be careless over.

The writer to the Hebrews warns us about "the sin which doth closely cling to us" (RV mg), literally, the spirit of the age, the spirit which makes our minds obtuse to the commandments of God. There is a culture in the spiritual life not realised by all teachers and preachers, consequently they tell men that God does not hold certain things necessary. What an awakening awaits all such when they stand before God and find they have not glorified Him as they should have done, because they stood more for their own personal freedom and independent rights than for the careful searching out of Our Lord's commandments and teaching men regarding them. It is easy for those who are "out and out" for God to condemn such teachers and put them outside the kingdom; Our Lord puts them not outside, but as "least in the kingdom."

This warning should bring us to the place where we measure up and see whether we are growing in sensitiveness towards all God's commandments so that we tremble at the very approach of any defilement that might blur the clear vision of His truth. Our spiritual fighting trim becomes enervated by any compromise with the world's standards, and if we teach men by both word and precept to do the same, we run perilously near being those Our Lord warns.

To know how to maintain and develop the habits of the holy life according to the commandments of God is the sublime education of the soul. There are times of ignorance that God winks at and overlooks, but there are other times when He holds us responsible for being frivolous and light regarding His commandments. I wonder how many of us in our dealing with our fellow men have made it easy for them to break some of the commandments of God because it was so hard for us to appear unsympathetic with them?

^{21.} down to the scruple: to the smallest item.

"He shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven," says Our Lord. What need there is that the minister of the Gospel should continually face himself with his Saviour, to know how he stands before Him, lest he fail to measure up to His standard, and having preached to others should himself become a castaway.

The argument that the keeping of certain commandments is not essential to salvation is such a mean, ²² beggarly line of argument that it need scarcely be mentioned. If my love for God is so faint and poor that I will only do what is absolutely essential and not what it is my privilege to do, it is then that I deserve not only to be "least in the kingdom of heaven," but not to be in it at all. May every faculty of heart and mind and soul be roused up to be its glorious best for God all the time for the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ.

PAUL'S WAYS IN CHRIST

For this cause have I sent unto you Timothy, . . . who shall put you in remembrance of my ways which be in Christ. 1 Corinthians 4:17 (RV)

You say—"How can I follow Paul? I was not trained at the feet of Gamaliel like he was; nor have I any of his great gifts." Watch Paul's argument in this very chapter—"For who maketh thee to differ from another? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive?" (1 Corinthians 4:7). The following has nothing to do with natural gifts, or natural ability, or natural anything; Paul says, "Follow my ways which be in Christ."

1. The Way of Conversion

And he said, Who art Thou, Lord? (Acts 9:5)

When God touches a life by bereavement, or by sickness or disaster, it is always a supernatural touch. What did you do in that moment when the true attitude of your life was revealed in a flash? did you say with Saul of Tarsus, "Who art Thou, Lord?" It was not the supernatural light from heaven that made Paul tremble, but the voice that spoke to him, the voice of the despised Nazarene: "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest. . . . And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Paul was turned in one second from a strong-willed intense Pharisee into a humble devoted slave of the Lord Jesus. There was no mention of sin, that came later: it was a complete surrender to the lordship of Jesus.

2. The Way of Consecration

For I will shew him how great things he must suffer for My name's sake. (Acts 9:16)

There has been an absolute swing round in Saul's life, he has enthroned Jesus as Lord, and now Ananias comes and calls him "Brother Saul," and mentions again "the Lord, even Jesus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost." When Paul received his sight, he received a spiritual insight into the Person of Jesus Christ. Martin Luther said that Paul was intoxicated with Jesus Christ; He was never out of his waking or his sleeping moments, and all through his Epistles is stamped this certainty of his knowledge of Jesus as Lord. That is the marvellous thing about the baptism of the Holy Ghost, every other spell is gone—

Since mine eyes have looked on Jesus I've lost sight of all beside.

The baptism of the Holy Ghost makes us witnesses to Jesus, not witnesses to what He can do, that is an elementary witness, but "witnesses unto Me." The spirit that comes in is not that of doing anything for Jesus, but of being a perfect delight to Him. "For I will shew him how great things he must suffer for My name's sake." Paul gloried in his suffering, and when he sums it all up he calls it "our light affliction"! It is the triumphant phrase of a super-conqueror. You can't imagine Paul saying "Tve had such a tussle with the devil but I have got the victory"; it was the Victor who had got Paul, he was absolutely Jesus Christ's.

3. The Way of Conference

But when it pleased God... to reveal His Son in me, ... immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood. (Galatians 1:15–16)

When Paul realised the Divine call he did not confer with flesh and blood, his own or any one else's; imagine him in the desert alone with God, while the Holy Ghost worked in him those revelations which found expression afterwards in his Epistles, and you have a picture of his way of conference. When God speaks to you what do you do? go to the nearest saint and ask him about it? That is wrong. If God has spoken, confer with Him alone, rely on the Holy Spirit, and He will soon clinch the matter. "My sheep hear My voice," said Jesus. Many go astray because they will not take Paul's way of conference. Born-again souls should be thrust out to testify, not into work; they need to soak before God until they become rooted and grounded in the revelation of God, and have learned how to submit their will and intelligence to Jesus Christ.

4. The Way of Confidence

Though I might also have confidence in the flesh. (Philippians 3:4)

If any man has reason to boast in the flesh, Paul says he is that man—"an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee; concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless"; but, he says, we are those who "rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh." Paul continually counsels, "Don't glory in men." The best of men are but the best of men. Never trust the best man or woman you ever met, trust only the Lord Jesus. If when you are sanctified you turn for one second to the natural life, the sentence of death is there. Never take your guidance from the natural life, but learn to sacrifice the natural to the will of God.

5. The Way of the Cross

But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself. . . . (Acts 20:24)

Did that sound like the modern advice—"Now do be careful, don't work so hard, you must look after yourself." Paul says there is only one dear element about his life, and that is that it can be used for Jesus Christ to be glorified in. "I keep under my body," he says; "it does not dictate to me." Paul had received a ministry from the Lord Jesus, and in comparison of accomplishing that, he held nothing else of any account. "He shall testify of Me before kings," and Paul did so in the most fearless manner. Paul is so bound up with what he preaches that you cannot separate his preaching from his testimony. His Epistles are a testimony that he is determined to know nothing among men save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. He welcomed heartbreaks, tribulation, suffering, for one reason only, that these things kept him in unmoved devotion to the gospel of the grace of God.

God grant that being put in remembrance of Paul's ways in Christ, we may learn to follow those ways, to His glory.

DISCIPLESHIP

Christ ruined many careers and brought sorrow and death to many souls.

Dr. Forsyth²³ (The Christian Ethic of War, 1916)

1. The Call to Discipleship

If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me. (Luke 9:23 RV)

The call of Jesus to discipleship has a fascinating side but also a desolating side; we nearly always ignore that side of the call. There is a difference between being a disciple and being what is called "saved." It is not the bad things that are the stumbling-block to becoming a disciple, anyone will give up sin and wrong if he knows how to, but will I give up the "rightest" thing I have got, viz., my right to myself? will I crown Jesus as Lord? Whenever Our Lord talks about discipleship that is what He bases it on, the giving up of my right to myself—". . . let him deny himself." Many are called, but few prove the choice ones, that is, few of us take up the cross and follow Jesus, the reason being not that we are irreligious and bad, but we don't prefer that Jesus should be Lord. We like to hear about deliverance from hell and forgiveness of sins, but this comes a bit too close, this demands too much, and we back out. "Upon this many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him" (RV), they went back from following Jesus and never became actual disciples. If I do become a disciple my career may have to be ruined, am I prepared for it? is He worth it? "IF any man would come after Me . . ." "If" means, "You don't need to unless you like, but you won't be of any account to Me in this life unless you do." Wherever Christian experience is proving unsatisfactory it is because the Holy Spirit is still battling around this one point, my right to myself, and until that is deliberately given over by me to Jesus Christ I will never have the relationship to Him He asks for.

^{23.} Peter Taylor Forsyth (1848–1921) was a British Congregationalist minister and theologian. Chambers read many of Forsyth's books and valued his insights.

2. The Communion of Discipleship

Rabbi, . . . where abidest Thou? . . . Come, and ye shall see. (John 1:38–39 RV)

There is something so natural and yet so supernatural about Jesus. We never read that Jesus button-holed anybody; these men came to Him and asked, "Master, where do you live?" He said "Come, and ye shall see"obvious and simple, yet full of Divine power. The difference between the Christianity stamped by the Holy Ghost and that stamped by ecstasy and fanaticism is just here, the one makes the supernatural "spooky" and puts the natural nowhere; the other makes the supernatural natural. Jesus does not come to men in extraordinary ways, but in the most ordinary things—washing disciples' feet; preparing breakfast; at a wedding feast. The early disciples were not attracted to Jesus because of their sense of sin, they were religious men, in touch with the elemental forces of nature, simple and unconventional, and when they saw Jesus their spirit indicated at once—"This is the very One we have been looking for." There are plenty of men who have not lived lives of sin—has Jesus Christ any message for them?

3. The Crown of Discipleship

John did no miracle: but all things that John spake of this man were true. (John 10:41)

The crown of John's discipleship was that his disciples became the disciples of Jesus. "And the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus" (John 1:37). If in the final issue the souls of those I have taught do not turn to Jesus when they see Him, I have been a traitor. In the New Testament it is never the personality of the preacher that counts, what counts is whether he knows how to direct those who come to him to Jesus. If a man preaches on the ground of his personality he is apt to be a detractor from Jesus. The only reason for presenting Jesus is that He is All-in-all to me absolutely. Many of us only know devoteeness to a creed, to a phase of evangelical truth, very few know anything about personal devotion to Jesus.

The call to discipleship comes as mysteriously as being born from above (RV mg); once a man hears it, it profoundly alters everything. It is like the call of the sea, the call of the mountains, not everyone hears these calls, only those who have the nature of the sea or the mountains—and then only if they pay attention to the call. To hear the call of God or the call to discipleship necessitates education in understanding and discernment. Never be afraid of the thing that is vague, the biggest things in life are vague as far as expression goes, but they are realities.

"Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations . . ." (RV)—not "Go out and save souls," but "Go and make disciples." It is comparatively easy to proclaim salvation from sin, but Jesus comes and says, "What about you—if you would be My disciple, deny yourself, take up that cross daily, and follow Me." It has nothing to do with eternal salvation, it has everything to do with our temporal value to God, and most of us do not care anything about our temporal worth to God, all we are concerned about is being saved from hell and put right for heaven. There is something infinitely grander than that, and Jesus Christ gives us a marvellous chance of giving up our right to ourselves to Him in order that we might become the devoted bondslaves of the One who saves us so supernaturally.

THE WORKER'S WAY ABOUT FAITH

1. Faith and the Ancient Witness (Hebrews 11:4-40)

... And these all, having had witness borne to them through their faith ... (Hebrews 11:39)

Faith is never defined; it is described, as in Hebrews 11:1, but never defined. Definitions can only be given of things that are perfectly understood and are inferior to the mind that defines them. It is absurd to try and put God into a definition; if I can define God I am greater than God. Intellectual definition is of no use whatever in the spiritual life. Faith cannot be intellectually defined; faith is the inborn capacity to see God behind everything, the wonder that keeps you an eternal child. What is your faith to you—a wonderful thing, or a bandbox²⁴ thing? Satisfaction is too often the peace of death; wonder is the very essence of life. Beware always of losing the wonder, and the first thing that stops wonder is religious conviction. Whenever you give a trite testimony the wonder is gone. The only evidence of salvation or sanctification is that the sense of wonder is developing, not at things as they are, but at the One who made them as they are. There is no set definition of faith into which you can fit these men and women, they were heroes of faith because they "endured, as seeing Him who is invisible." The acts of faith the writer refers to were not performed by astute-minded men and women who made defined statements about God, they were not tortured for convictions' sake, but for the sake of their faith. There is no mention of salvation from sin, the one point insisted on is their faith, and God is training us to do what they did, viz., live a life of tenacious hold upon God in spite of everything that happens. Do we know anything about this life of confidence in God, or are we everlastingly hunting in our theological "wardrobes" for definitions to work to? Faith is the indefinable certainty of God behind every thing, and is the one thing the Spirit of God makes clearer and clearer as we go on.

2. Faith and the Abiding Witness

... looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. (Hebrews 12:2)

The abiding Witness is our Lord Jesus Christ, and the writer gives three characteristics of His life—joy, renunciation, and reward. The first element in the life of faith is joy, which means the perfect fulfilment of that for which we were created. Joy is not happiness; there is no mention in the Bible of happiness for a Christian, but there is plenty said about joy—". . . that they might have My joy fulfilled in themselves," said Jesus. The next element is the realisation that we have the delight of giving our lives as a lovegift to Jesus Christ. "He that loseth his life for My sake shall find it." Reward is the ultimate delight of knowing that God has fulfilled His purpose in my life; it is not a question of resting in satisfaction, but the delight of being in perfect conscious agreement with God.

3. Faith and the Alert Witness (Hebrews 12:1–3)

Let us also . . . lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us. . . . (Hebrews 12:1 RV)

Run light—nothing clings to us more closely (RV mg) than trying to live up to the ideas we have got from saintly people. We have nothing to do with saintly people, we have only to do with "looking unto Jesus." How much "cargo" are you carrying in the upper storey? how many definitions to fit your teaching into? No wonder people have nervous breakdowns! Avoid definitions as you would avoid the devil. Immediately your mind accepts a definition you will learn no more about that thing until the definition is smashed. Definition and human authority are the two things that kill faith; with Jesus Christ there are no definitions at all. Jesus Christ always taught vaguely; in the beginning of our Christian life we think He teaches definitely, and we get hold of trite definitions until we find the marvellous life of God is not there at all.

Run looking—Keep nothing in view but the vision of the Lord Jesus Christ. To rest in any experience apart from Him, even though He gave it you, is to be away from the main Centre. Jesus Christ is first, second and third; let the revelation of His life keep you full of wonder, love and praise.

Run learning—"Despise not . . . the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of Him." Never stop learning. People stagnate, not through backsliding, but because they stop learning and harden into a wrong mental poise. We learn through chastisement, because God is supplying heaven with sons and daughters, not with precious stones. Sons and daughters must grow, and God is never in a hurry with us. As you go on in the life of faith you find everything is becoming so simple that you are afraid it can't be true, it is so unlike what you had been taught. Beware of being in bondage to yourself or to other people. Oppression and depression never come from the Spirit of God. He never oppresses, He convicts and comforts. It is unconscious stubbornness that brings us into bondage. In the presence of Jesus we find how perverse and timid and unfaithful we have been, when God was going to enlarge our life we shrank back. The summing up of the life of faith is the teaching of Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount—Be carefully careless about everything saving your relationship to God.

THE CERTAINTIES OF THE KINGDOM

1. The Substratum of Certainty (Acts 17:22–29) Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, Him declare I unto you. . . . For in Him we live, and move, and have our being. (Acts 17:23, 28)

Substratum—an under stratum or layer, a fundamental element that does not appear, but on which all that does appear rests.

There is a difference between the Christian foundation and my experience of it. I can no more experience the foundation of my faith than a building can experience its foundation; but the two must be associated. Dissatisfaction in the Christian life is sure to arise if the foundations are ignored. Because men cannot experience the foundations of the Christian faith they are apt to discard them as unnecessary: they are more necessary than all the experiences which spring from them. To say "You don't need theology to save a soul" is like saying "What is the good of a foundation? What we want is a house." The good of the foundation is that when the storms come nothing can wreck the "house" that is built on the foundation (see Matthew 7:24–27).

Theology is the science of Christianity; much that is wrongly called theology is mere psychological guess-work, verifiable only from experience. Christian theology is the ordered exposition of revelation certainties. If our teaching and preaching is not based on a recognition of those things that cannot be experienced it will produce parasites, people who depend on being fed by others. We are dealing in these studies with the great fundamental certainties of the Kingdom, and it is essential to take time to soak in these certainties so that when we get out into work we find we are rooted and grounded on the right foundation. If we go into work on the ground of our experience we will soon be exhausted.

What do I know about the foundation truths which I expect to reproduce in my own experience? Experience is an effect; I must have faith in a God whom I never can experience. My experiences are accountable for only by the fact that I am based on God who is bigger than all my experiences of Him. We must take time to know Who it is we worship. We worship a Revelation, not a mystery. "Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, Him declare I unto you." How can I know God? Jesus Christ has revealed Him: "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." I do not experience God; I relate all my experiences to the revelation of God which Jesus Christ has made.

2. The Superstructure of Cultivation (1 Corinthians 3:10–15)

But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. (1 Corinthians 3:10)

Superstructure—anything erected on a foundation.

We are to be wise masterbuilders, taking care that the superstructure is built according to the foundation, and see to it that we put on the foundation only those things that will stand the fire. Self-interest cannot stand the fire, it is not of the nature of God. There is a danger in us all of ignoring the fundamental things and dealing only with the things that affect our immediate interests; what engrosses our attention actually is what we are after. The "practical" craze, anything that is efficient, is the insanity of our day—we must be at it! Do anything at all, but don't take time to sit down and think and pray, that is a waste of time; all that is required is to live right practically. If you are living right practically it is because you have not only experienced new birth, but you are being nourished on the right foundation. ". . . and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." We put on the foundation stuff built by our own human energy, consequently as soon as it is touched by the fire of the Presence of God, it fizzles up; it is not of the nature of reality, it does not belong to the foundation. In 1 Corinthians 13:1–3, the apostle Paul is referring to the white-heat of emotional energy, the height of intellectual efficiency and competence; I can do certain things and ostensibly prove I can, but, he says, it all amounts to nothing because it is not based on the foundation. The only work that will abide is that which is built on the Foundation, "which is Jesus Christ."

3. The Supremacy of Christ

Come unto Me. . . . (Matthew 11:28)

Supremacy—highest authority or power.

God never insists on our obedience; human authority does. Our Lord does not give us rules and regulations; He makes very clear what the standard is, and if the relation of my spirit to Him is that of love, I will do all He wants me to do without the slightest hesitation. If I begin to object it is because I love someone else in competition with Him, viz., myself.

Galatians 2:20 is foundation truth and experimental truth in one—"I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." These words mean the breaking of my independence and surrendering to the supremacy of the Lord Jesus. No one can do this for me, I must do it myself. There is no possibility of debate when once I am there. It is not that we have to do work for God, we have to be so loyal to Jesus Christ that He does His work through us. We learn His truth by obeying it.

"Come unto Me." It is the rarest thing for us to come to Jesus; we come to our own earnestness; we come with notions of what we want. How often have you come to God with your requests and gone away with the feeling, "Oh, well, I have done it this time"! and yet you go away with nothing, while all the time God has stood with outstretched hands, not only to take you but for you to take Him. Think of the invincible, unconquerable, unwearying patience of Jesus— "Come unto Me." The attitude of coming is that you fling yourself entirely on Him, and that is salvation, because He is salvation. Stake your all on God, and never be impertinent enough to tell Him that that is what you are doing. Come, if you are weary and heavy laden; ask, if you are evil; and everything that happens after that is of God.

The Pilgrim's Song Book

Introduction

Source

The material in The Pilgrim's Song Book is from talks given by Oswald Chambers in the Wensleydale district of Yorkshire during August and September 1915.

Publication History

- As articles: The material was published as a series of articles in Spiritual Life magazine between October 1939 and May 1940.
- As a book: The Pilgrim's Song Book was first published as a book in 1940. It was published in a combined volume with The Highest Good and Thy Great Redemption in 1965.

After Oswald volunteered for service as a chaplain and was accepted by the YMCA, the Bible Training College¹ closed at the end of the term in July 1915. For their August holiday, Oswald, Biddy, and Kathleen² stayed in a house provided by their friend and League of Prayer³ associate Jim Skidmore, in the Yorkshire village of Askrigg. During August, they hiked the moors, picnicked with friends, and Oswald fished the clear streams. They also kept an open door to a steady stream of family, friends, and former students of the Bible Training College. At their informal evening gatherings and at Sunday chapel services in the surrounding villages, Oswald spoke from the Psalms of Ascent, 120 through 134.

^{1.} Residential school near Clapham Common in SW London, sponsored by the League of Prayer. Oswald Chambers was Principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers was Lady Superintendent. Known as the BTC, it closed in July 1915 because of World War I.

^{3.} Pentecostal League of Prayer: founded in London in 1891 by Reader Harris (1847–1909), prominent barrister; friend and mentor of Oswald Chambers.

It is probable that Mrs. Chambers was unable to take notes of all Oswald's talks. Psalm 121 is not included, and the series concludes at Psalm 128. (For a 1910 message given by Oswald Chambers on Psalm 121, see The Place of Help, chapter 1.)

During September, Chambers began his ministry to soldiers in the training camps of Wensleydale.

In October 1915, he sailed for Egypt, where he was joined in December by Biddy, Kathleen, and their close friend Mary Riley.⁴

Katherine Ashe's⁵ foreword to the first edition expresses the freedom and joy of those summer days in Askrigg,⁶ despite the shadow of uncertainty and separation cast on all of them by World War I.⁷

FOREWORD TO THE FIRST EDITION

"Our own are our own for ever" has been said by one and another in differing words and in many languages. That is why time and distance are (in a sense) nothing in any human life that lives in the "Things unseen—Eternal" where St. Paul had his abiding place.

And just as the essential beauty and sweetness of a rose is what stays with us, and not the very rose itself so it is the personality of a beloved person or the spirit of a season of time (to put it like that) that abides with us for ever. In London's hurrying life; in the press of teeming humanity in a Chinese city; in the grinding monotony of a quiet countryside; on a parched soil under a burning sky; in deep Canadian winter snows, or in the peace of a leisured life—the Yorkshire Moor away up at Wensleydale, with its waters and streams, its rushing winds and stealing lovely airs, its lights and its shadows, its cliffs and rolling spaces; above all, its magnificence of space and sky, is as present to bless and renew as if Wensleydale itself were here—our very own.

It was at Wensleydale around Askrigg that, in the summer and autumn of 1915, a company of men and women gathered to spend some weeks in the most informal way of living, coming and going, alone or together, gathered with one implicit motive—that of seeking to enter more deeply into a personal relationship with the Redeemer of the world, and into a deeper understanding of Redemption. The two people who created this most natural time of simplicity and freedom, lived that summer in a tiny cottage with Kathleen, then a gay and bonnie baby of two, and Mary of the deep and loving heart, and these Psalms and their exposition were part of the evening hour in the cottage. Some were given in the little plain unadorned Chapels in the villages:

I to the hills will lift mine eyes
As the hills stand round about Jerusalem,

The sun by day, the moon by night, and always one sensed these were "Songs of Ascent," the marching, singing crowds, the hills, the stars—that and the deep, deep life of the human race in its going through the ages of time—one did not forget.

The war came into all our lives when those days ended. War, and the years that followed War—and the world was never again as we had known it. The great Earth—yes, and her glorious and most gentle loveliness and strength—but the thought and world dream of pre-war days was for ever gone. Only the stern business of holding the eternal values in the strange world dream of these new days is left us as our task.

But the pure and vigorous life of the thought and worship of that time remains—our own for ever; and the fresh strong gladness of its setting in the moors is ours for all time—for ever ours.

I to the hills will lift mine eyes; From whence shall come mine aid? My help it cometh from the Lord Who heaven and earth hath made.

PSALM 120

We can judge a nation by its songs. The minor note is indicative of a crushed, but unconquered people. In the Bible there is nothing altogether minor; nothing, that is, of the nature of despair. The Bible deals with terrors and upsets, with people who have got into despair—in fact, the Bible deals with all that the devil can do, and yet all through there is the uncrushable certainty that in the end everything will be all right.

The Songs of Ascents are the autobiography of the children of God; they reveal their inner secrets. These psalms express not the outward, but the inward condition of the children of God, when they realise that they are pilgrims. We do not immediately realise that we are pilgrims; when a child is born into the world it is welcomed and for a time it feels perfectly happy and at home. Neither when we are born again do we realise at once that we are pilgrims; rather, we feel more at home on the earth than ever; we have come into contact with the Creator of it all, and

George Robinson

But as we go on, this sense of at-home-ness disappears and ultimately we realise a deep alienation to all that the world represents, and we recognise that we are "strangers and pilgrims on the earth," that "here we have no continuing city." That mood is represented in these Psalms. God seems to delight to stir up our nests; it is not the devil who does it, but God; this is curiously unrecognised on our part.

The peace of this world can never be the peace of God. The peace of physical health, of mental healthy-mindedness, of prosperous circumstances, of civilisation—not one of these is the peace of God, but the outcome of the souls of men being garrisoned by the prince of this world (see Luke 11:21). When we are born again from above (RV mg) and realise that we belong to God, we begin to recognise the element of destruction that there is imbedded in many of our Lord's words, e.g., "Think not that I came to cast [mg] peace on the earth: I came not to cast [mg] peace, but a sword" (RV). We realise that the reasoning of the world is not in accordance with the Bible, and we find we are alien to it.

1. Direction in Distress

In my distress I cried unto the LORD, and He answered me. (Psalm 120:1 RV)

If I am a child of God, distress will lead me to Him for direction. The distress comes not because I have done wrong, it is part of the inevitable result of not being at home in the world, of being in contact with those who reason and live from a different standpoint. We blunder when we try to make out that the prosperity referred to in the Old Testament is intended for us in this dispensation. Plainly that prosperity has never yet been fulfilled in the history of the world; it is going to be fulfilled, but it does not refer to this dispensation, which is the dispensation of the humiliation of the saints, not of their glorification. One of Satan's greatest delusions is to decoy folks off on to blessings that are merely secondary. We become side-tracked if we make physical health our aim and imagine that because we are children of God we shall always be perfectly well; that there will be great manifestations of God's power, thousands saved, etc.

"In my distress..." There are elements in our circumstances if we are children of God that can only be described by the word "distress"; it would be untruthful to say it was otherwise. "Then will I go unto...God," says the Psalmist, not "with joy," but "unto God [Who is] my exceeding joy." We go to God when we have no joy in ourselves and find that His joy is our strength. Are our hearts resting in the certainty that God is full of joy although with us it is "clouds and darkness" because we are pilgrims?

"... I cried unto the LORD, and He answered me." It is one thing to cry to God and another thing to hear Him answer. We don't give God time to answer. We come in a great fuss and panic, but when all that is taken out of our hearts and we are silent before God, the quiet certainty comes—"I know God has heard me."

2. Deliverance from Deception

Deliver my soul, O LORD, from lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue. (Psalm 120:2)

One of the hardest things on earth to bear is deception, especially when it comes through our friends. We do not need the grace of God to stand the deception or slander of an enemy, human pride will stand that; but to be wounded in the house of our friends takes us unawares. Judas had "lying lips"; we read that he kissed Jesus much (RV mg). Are we honest with our lips? It is only Christians who can be frank with one another, because their disposition has been altered by God (cf. Ephesians 4:29).

What shall be given unto thee, and what shall be done more unto thee, thou deceitful tongue? (Psalm 120:3 RV)

Most of our relationships are carried on with discreet deceit. The words "shrewdness," "diplomacy," "aye keep a bittie to yersel," express an attitude essential in the life of the world, but a Christian has no time to be a dabster⁸ with his tongue, no time to profit by being clever. The teaching of the Sermon on the Mount is never to look for justice but never to cease to give it. We waste our time looking for justice; we have to see that we always give it to others. "If you are My disciple," Jesus says, "people won't play you fair; but never mind that, see that you play fair."

Sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper. (Psalm 120:4)

The Bible reveals the tongue to be the worst enemy a man has (see James 3:6–8)—"Sharp arrows of the mighty"—they never miss their mark. The same thing is true when we are born again, God sees that our words get home; but if we are not born again our words rankle and sting and annoy and spread destruction. Sarcasm is the weapon of a weak, spiteful nature, its literal meaning is to tear the flesh from the bone. The antipodes of sarcasm is irony—conveying your meaning by saying the opposite; irony is frequently used by the prophets.

3. Distraction for a Dwelling

Woe is me, that I sojourn in Meshech, that I dwell among the tents of Kedar! My soul hath long had her dwelling with him that hateth peace. (Psalm 120:5–6 RV)

Our Lord lived for thirty years in that atmosphere (see John 7:5). We sing, "There's no place like home," but the author of that song was far away from home when he wrote it. The description the Bible gives of home is that it is a place of discipline. Naturally we do not like what God makes; we prefer our friends to our God-made relations. We are undressed morally in our home life and are apt to be meaner there than anywhere else. If we have been captious and mean with our relations, we will always exhibit that spirit until we become new creatures in Christ Jesus. That is why it is easier to go somewhere else, much easier often to go as a missionary than to stay at home. God alters the thing that matters.

4. In a Dilemma by the Disputers

I am for peace: but when I speak they are for war. (Psalm 120:7)

There is nothing more terrible than for people to take what you say and to turn it into dispute (cf. Psalm 109:4). We are not to keep things back, but we realise that if we stand for God there will be the dilemma of dispute. "They say: What say they? Let them say." Paul says the same thing—"But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgement: yea, I judge not mine own self" (1 Corinthians 4:3).

^{8.} dabster: proficient; expert; adept.

^{9.} mean: ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

In a crisis we are always in danger of standing true to something that is acclaimed by this world rather than standing absolutely loyal to God. Had our Lord been a patriot, He would have been a traitor to His country in submitting to the Roman dominance; He ought to have led an insurrection—"This dominance is wrong; we must break it." Instead of that, He bowed His head to it. He submitted to the providential order of tyranny knowing that through it God was working out His purposes. "Knowest thou not that I have power to release Thee, and have power to crucify Thee? Jesus answered him, Thou couldest have no power against Me, except it were given thee from above" (John 19:10–11 RV).

PSALM 122

1. Gladness of Comradeship

I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the LORD. (Psalm 122:1)

God begins with us individually in the experience of conscious salvation, then He unites us to one another. Notice the "altogetherness" of the saints all through the Epistles—"till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, . . . unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (RV). None of us individually can reach the "fulness of Christ"; we reach that standard all together. "I have called you friends," said Jesus. The idea is that the presence of Jesus is the arena in which we live. A friend is one who makes me do my best.

2. Goings of a Community

Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem. (Psalm 122:2)

The gifts of our ascended Lord—apostles, prophets, evangelists—are "for the perfecting of the saints." If you should be in advance of the rest of the community, God will take you into "the ministry of the interior." Spiritual insight is not for the purpose of making us realise we are better than other people, but in order that our responsibility might be added to. If we neglect to go to God about our communities, our ministers, we become criticising centres instead of ministers of the interior. God expects us to be intercessors, not dogmatic fault-finders, but vicarious intercessors, until other lives come up to the same standard. Locusts in their flight over a stream may drown by the million, but others keep coming until there is a way for the live ones to go over their bodies. God uses His saints in the same way. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church." There are prominent names in works of faith, such as Müller¹⁰ and Quarrier, 11 but there are thousands of others whose names are not known. It is the same truth our Lord uttered regarding Himself, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." The work in a community to begin with may be a wondrous delight, then it seems to die out, and if you do not know the teaching of our Lord you will say it is dead; it is not, it has fallen into the ground and died in its old form, but by and by it will bring forth fruit which will alter the whole landscape.

3. God's Own City

Jerusalem is builded as a city that is compact together. (Psalm 122:3)

For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. (Hebrews 11:10)

And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. (Revelation 21:2)

What a curious anomaly—a city of God! We could have understood if it had been the country of God, but a holy city is inconceivable to us. The city of Jerusalem, like the Temple, was ordained of God, that is why the Children of Israel were so certain the prophets were wrong in saying that God would ever leave Jerusalem; but God did leave it, He left it desolate on account of the sins of the people.

^{10.} George Müller (1805–98) was a founder of Christian orphanages in Bristol, England, which were supported by faith and complete reliance on God.

^{11.} William Quarrier (1829–1903) was a founder of the Orphan Homes of Scotland; he was noted as a great man of faith and prayer.

There is a time coming when we shall live in God's own city: Abraham looked for it; John saw it coming down out of heaven. Our present-day communities are man's attempt at building up the city of God; man is confident that if only God will give him time enough he will build not only a holy city, but a holy community and establish peace on earth, and God is allowing him ample opportunity to try, until he is satisfied that God's way is the only way.

4. Gathering of the Clans

. . . whither the tribes go up, the tribes of the LORD, unto the testimony of Israel, to give thanks unto the name of the LORD. (Psalm 122:4)

The prophets look forward to the time when all the tribes will meet together in harmony. It is a symbol of what happens in this dispensation of grace; there is absolute harmony in Christ Jesus, no matter what the difference of nationality may be. The Bible is the Charter of the city of God, and all sorts and conditions of people have communion with one another through it. There is a gathering of the clans of all who belong to the race of the twice-born—"Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." The saints find their closest unity in communion with God, but we have to be put through a great deal of discipline before the oneness for which Jesus prayed in John 17 is realised. You will find that God introduces you to teachers and friends who are just beyond you in attainment in order to keep you from stagnation.

5. Christ's Own Crown

For there are set thrones of judgement, the thrones of the house of David. (Psalm 122:5)

When our Lord stood before Pilate and he asked Him, "Art Thou a King then?" Jesus answered, "I am a King, but My Kingdom is not of this world, else would My servants fight." The Kingship of Jesus consists in the entire sanctification of individuals. "For Christ's Crown and Covenant" was the motto of the Scottish Covenanters. Am I eager to be saved and sanctified so that Jesus Christ is crowned King in my life? "Ye call Me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am"—but is He? Is He Lord and Master of our sentiments with regard to this war? of our passions and patriotic pride? We may think He is until we are brought into a crisis, and then we realise that there are whole domains over which He is not Lord and Master. This is true in individual life and in national life.

6. Generosity of Community

Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee. (Psalm 122:6)

"Pray for the peace of the city" because it will be better for us as saints if the city is in peace. It is true that in times of war people are driven to God, but the distraction of war upsets the harmony and peace which are essential conditions for the worship of God. Are we set on praying for the peace of Jerusalem only because it will bring prosperity with God to souls?

7. Goodwill in Concentration

Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces. For my brethren and companions' sakes, I will now say, Peace be within thee. (Psalm 122:7–8)

In times of prosperity we are apt to forget God, we imagine it does not matter whether we recognise Him or not. As long as we are comfortably clothed and fed and looked after, our civilisation becomes an elaborate means of ignoring God.

"God bless Jerusalem"—for Jerusalem's sake? No, for my companions' sake. "God bless the world with peace"—because it is deserving of peace? No, because of the Christians in it. Because God's House is here, we pray "God bless Askrigg." Because of the saints in Britain, we pray "God bless Britain."

But remember God's blessing may mean God's blasting. If God is going to bless me, He must condemn and blast out of my being what He cannot bless. "Our God is a consuming fire." When we ask God to bless, we sometimes pray terrible havoc upon the things that are not of God. God will shake all that can be shaken, and He is doing it just now.

8. Graciousness in Compensation

Because of the house of the $\hat{L}ORD$ our God I will seek thy good. (Psalm 122:9)

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." This is not the judgement of Christians, but of the nations who have never heard of Jesus. They are amazed at the magnanimity of His words—"Lord, when saw we Thee an hungred, and fed Thee?" If that is God's attitude to the nations who do not know Him, what is His attitude toward us? We are never told to walk in the light of conscience, but to walk in the light of the Lord. If Jesus Christ has taught me to be "as He is . . . in this world," then in every particular in which I am not like Him, I shall be condemned. God engineers circumstances to see what we will do. Will we be the children of our Father in heaven, or will we go back again to the meaner, ¹⁴ common-sense attitude? Will we stake all and stand true to Him? "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." The crown of life means I shall see that my Lord has got the victory after all, even in me.

^{12.} Chambers used "For Christ's Crown and Covenant," the battle cry of the Scottish Covenanters (1638) who refused to honor the head of state as the head of the church, as the motto for the Bible Training College.

^{13.} Scottish Covenanters (1638) refused to honor the head of state as the head of the church.

III

PSALM 123

This Psalm represents the inner biography of faith. It is not easy to have faith in God, and it is not meant to be easy because we have to make character. God will shield us from no requirements of His sons and daughters any more than He shielded His own Son. It is an easy business to sit in an armchair and say, "Oh yes, I believe God will do this and that"; that is credulity, not faith. But let me say, "I believe God will supply all my needs," and then let me "run dry," no money, no outlook, and see whether I will go through the trial of my faith, or sink back and put my trust in something else. It is the trial of our faith that is precious. If we go through the trial, there is so much wealth laid up in our heavenly banking account to draw upon when the next test comes.

1. Direction of Aspiration

Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes, O Thou that dwellest in the heavens. (Psalm 123:1)

"Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes"—we have to make the effort to look up. The things that make it difficult to look up are suffering, or difficulty, or murmuring. If you are suffering, it is intensely difficult to look up. The command to the Children of Israel when they were bitten by the fiery serpent was, "Look to the brazen serpent." We cannot look up if we are murmuring; we are like the child who does not want to do what he is told, and the father comes and says, "Now look up," but the child won't. We behave like that with God; our circumstances are hard, we are not making progress in life, and the Spirit of God says, "Look up," but we refuse and say, "I'm not going to play this game of faith any more." The counsel given by the writer to the Hebrews is based on the effort of the saint—"let us lay aside every weight"; "let us run with patience the race that is set before us"; "looking unto Jesus"; "Consider Him" (Hebrews 12:1–3).

2. Description of the Attention

Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress; so our eyes wait upon the LORD our God, until that He have mercy upon us. (Psalm 123:2)

God intends our attention to be arrested, He does not arrest it for us. The things Jesus tells us to consider are not things that compel our attention— "Consider the lilies of the field," "Behold the fowls of the air." The Spirit of God instructs us to be attentive. Are our eyes so fixed upon God that we have spiritual discernment and can see His countenance in the dreadful cloud of war? Most of us are at our wits' end, we have no inkling of what God is doing because our eyes have not been waiting upon Him. We are apt to pay more attention to our newspaper than to God's Book, and spiritual leakage begins because we do not make the effort to lift up our eyes to God. "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory" (2 Corinthians 3:13). That is a description of entire reliance on God. Be careful of anything that is going to deflect your attention from God. It is easier to rely on God in big things than in little things. There is an enormous power in little things to distract our attention from God; that is why our Lord said that "the cares of this world," "the lusts of other things," would choke the word and make it unfruitful.

3. Distraction of Annoyance

Have mercy upon us, O LORD, have mercy upon us: for we are exceedingly filled with contempt. Our soul is exceedingly filled with the scorning of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud. (Psalm 123:3–4)

^{14.} mean: ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

The thing to heed is not so much damage to our faith in God as damage to our temper of mind. "Therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously" (Malachi 2:16). The temper of mind if it is not right with God is tremendous in its effects, it is the enemy that penetrates right into the soul and distracts us from God. There are certain tempers of mind we never dare indulge in; if we do, we find that they distract us from God, and until we get back into the quiet mood before God our faith in Him is nil and our confidence in human ingenuity the thing that rules.

Spiritual leakage comes not so much through trouble on the outside as through imagining you have "screwed yourself a bit too high." For instance, you came to a particular crisis and made a conscientious stand for God and had the witness of the Spirit that everything was all right; but the weeks have gone by, and the months, and you are slowly beginning to come to the conclusion that you had been taking a stand a bit too high. Your friends come and say, "Now don't be a fool, you are only an ordinary human being; when you talked about this spiritual awakening we knew it was only a passing phase; you can't keep up the strain, God does not expect you to"; and you say, "Well, I suppose I was a bit too pretentious." It sounds wise and sensible, but the danger is that you do not rely on God any longer; reliance on worldly opinion has taken the place of reliance on God. We have to realise that no effort can be too high, because Jesus says we are to be the children of our Father in heaven. It must be my utmost for His highest all the time and every time.

"Have mercy upon us, O LORD, . . . for we are exceedingly filled with contempt." As God's children we have to see that we keep looking in the face of God, otherwise we shall find our souls in the condition of being filled with contempt and annoyance, with the result that we are spiritually distracted instead of spiritually self-possessed. This is true in individual circumstances as well as national crises. It is not always the cross mood that leads to the cross speech, but the cross word that makes the cross mood. If in the morning you begin to talk crossly, before long you will feel desperately cross. Take to God the things that perturb your spirit. You notice that certain people are not going on spiritually and you begin to feel perturbed; if the discernment turns you to intercession, it is good; but if it turns to criticism it blocks you in your way to God. God never gives us discernment of what is wrong for us to criticise it, but that we might intercede.

"Unto Thee lift I up mine eyes" (Psalm 123:1). The terrible thing is that we are likely to get to the place where we do not miss the consciousness of God's presence; we have gone on so long ignoring the lifting up of our eyes to Him that it has become the habit of our mind and it never bothers us. We go on depending on our own wits and ingenuity until suddenly God brings us to a halt and we realise how we have been losing out. Whenever there is spiritual leakage, remedy it immediately. It does not matter what you are doing, stop instantly when there is the realisation that you are losing out before God; lift up your eyes to Him and tell Him you recognise it-"Lord, this thing has been coming in between my spirit and Thee, I am not resting in faith." Get it readjusted at once. There is always a suitable place to pray, to lift up your eyes to God; there is no need to get to a place of prayer, pray wherever you are. Confess before God that you have been distracted away from faith in Him; don't vindicate yourself. The lust of vindication is a state of mind that destroys the soul's faith in God—"I must explain myself"; "I must get people to understand." The remarkable thing about our Lord is that He never explained anything to anybody. Nothing ever distracted Him out of His oneness with God, and He prays "that they may be one, even as We are one."

PSALM 124

1. Alternative Danger

If it had not been the LORD who was on our side, now may Israel say . . . (Psalm 124:1)

Facing an alternative is not to deal in supposition, but part of wisdom and understanding; supposition is wisdom gone to hysteria. In estimating the dangers which beset us we have to remember that they are not haphazard, but things that will happen. Our Lord told His disciples to lay their account with peril, with hatred, in fact He tells them to leap for joy "when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake" (Luke 6:22–23). We are apt to look at this alternative as a supposition, but Jesus says it will happen and must be estimated. It is never wise to under-estimate an enemy. We look upon the enemy of our souls as a conquered foe, so he is, but only to God, not to us.

(a) Estimate of Antagonism

If it had not been the LORD who was on our side, when men rose up against us: then they had swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us. (Psalm 124:2-3)

We have to lay our account with the antagonism of men, it is a danger that is always with us. "... when men rose up against us"—not tendencies, not the moods of men, but men themselves. All that makes life either honourable or terrible is summed up in the word "men." In estimating the forces against us we are slow to believe in this antagonistic element, we look at them too haphazardly, not realising that they are dead set against us. "But beware of men"—it is the last thing we do. The reason our Lord tells us to beware of men is that the human heart is "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," and if we put our trust in men we shall go under, because men are just like ourselves, and none of us in our wits before God would ever think of trusting ourselves; if we do it is a sign that we are ignorant of ourselves.

At heart men are antagonistic to the lordship of Jesus Christ. It is not antagonism to creeds or points of view, but antagonism encountered for My sake. Many of us awaken antagonism by our way of stating things; we have to distinguish between being persecuted for some notion of our own and being persecuted "for My sake." We are apt to think only of the bad things as being against Jesus, but it is the refined things, the cultured things, the religious things which are dead against Jesus Christ unless they are loyal to Him. It was the religious people of our Lord's time who withstood Him, not the worldly. "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you" (John 15:18). These are the deliberate words of our Lord to His disciples. In the measure in which we are loyal to Jesus Christ the same thing happens to us; we are at a loss to understand why people should have the most apparently absurd antipathy to us. Their anger is strangely unaccountable; it is not irritation, but an inspired working against.

(b) Estimate of Agony

Then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our soul. (Psalm 124:4)

One element in the alternative danger that attends the saints of God is the agony it produces. It is strange that God should make it that "through the shadow of an agony cometh Redemption"; strange that God's Son should be made perfect through suffering; strange that suffering should be one of the golden pathways for God's children. There are times in personal life when we are brought into an understanding of what Abraham experienced. "Get thee out of thy country. . . ." It is not so much that we are misunderstood, but that suffering is brought on others through our being loyal to God, and it produces agony for which there is no relief on the human side, only on God's side. Then we pray "Thy Kingdom come" we have to share in the pain of the world being born again; it is a desperate pain. God's servants are, as it were, the birth-throes of the new age. "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you" (Galatians 4:19). Many of us receive the Holy Ghost, but immediately the throes begin we misunderstand God's purpose. We have to enter into the travail with Him until the world is born again. The world must be born again just as individuals are.

(c) Estimate of Annihilation

Then the proud waters had gone over our soul. (Psalm 124:5)

The ultimate result of the danger is annihilation, our Lord leaves us in no doubt about that; He always estimated things in the final analysis. Our Lord teaches that the forces against us work for our annihilation, "And ye shall be hated of all men for My name's sake." Nowadays we do not catch the drift of these words. It is not the question of a law of nature at work, but a law of antagonism, everything that is not loyal to Jesus Christ is against us. "And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord. . . ." Saul of Tarsus was spending all his educated manhood to annihilate those who were "of the Way" (RV). It is that spirit we have to estimate in the danger that besets us if we are true to God.

2. Appreciated Deliverance

Blessed be the LORD, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth. (Psalm 124:6)

The reason some of us are so tepid spiritually is that we do not realise that God has done anything for us. Many people are at work for God, not because they appreciate His salvation, but because they think they should be doing something for other people. Our Lord never called anyone to work for Him because they realise a need, but only on the basis that He has done something for them. The only basis on which to work for God is an esteemed appreciation of His deliverance, that is, our personal history with God is so poignant that it constitutes our devotion to Him. God's deliverance makes us His absolute debtors. Have we taken into account what God has done for us? Estimate the alternative danger, and then begin to call on your soul to bless God for His deliverance. ". . . to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little."

(a) Entire Escape

Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped. (Psalm 124:7)

God does not deliver us gradually, but suddenly, it is a perfect deliverance, a complete emancipation. When the deliverance is realised, it is realised altogether, from the crown of your head to the sole of your foot, and your devotion to God is on account of that deliverance. It is a good thing to begin prayer with praising God for His attributes, and for the way those attributes have been brought to bear on our personal salvation. Let your mind soak in the deliverance of God, and then praise Him for them.

(b) Eternal Element

Our help is in the name of the LORD, who made heaven and earth. (Psalm 124:8)

Our help is not in what God has done, but in God Himself. There is a danger of banking our faith and our testimony on our experience, whereas our experience is the gateway to a closer intimacy with God. Our help is in the Name of the One who delivers. The dangers that beset us are real dangers, and if we estimate them we shall appreciate God's deliverance. Why our Lord said that self-pity was of the devil is that self-pity will prevent us appreciating God's deliverance. When we begin to say "Why has this happened to me?" "Why does poverty begin to come to me?" "Why should this difficulty come, this upset?" it means that we are more concerned about getting our own way than in esteeming the marvellous deliverance God has wrought. We read of God's people of old that "They soon forgot His works," and we are in danger of doing the same unless we continually lift up our eyes to God and bless Him for His deliverances.

1. The Fastnesses of the Godly

They that trust in the LORD shall be as mount Zion which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever. (Psalm 125:1)

The security of the eternal God is what we are to have confidence in, and the Psalmist likens that security to the mountains, because a mountain is the most stable thing we know. There is nothing so secure as the salvation of God; it is as eternal as the mountains, and it is our trust in God that brings us the conscious realisation of this. The one thing Satan tries to shake is our confidence in God. It is not difficult for our confidence to be shaken if we build on our experience; but if we realise that all we experience is but the doorway leading to the knowledge of God, Satan may shake that as much as he likes, but he cannot shake the fact that God remains faithful (see 2 Timothy 2:13), and we must not cast away our confidence in Him. It is not our trust that keeps us, but the God in whom we trust who keeps us. We are always in danger of trusting in our trust, believing our belief, having faith in our faith. All these things can be shaken; we have to base our faith on those things which cannot be shaken (see Hebrews 12:27).

Our consciousness of God is meant to introduce us to God, not to our experience of Him. Jesus said, "... no man is able to pluck them out of My Father's hand" (John 10:29). No power, however mighty, is able to pluck us out of the hand of God, so long as that power is outside us. Our Lord did not say, however, that His sheep had not power to take themselves out. The devil cannot take us out, neither can man; we are absolutely secure from every kind of enemy, saving our own wilfulness. God does not destroy our personal power to disobey Him; if He did, we would become mechanical and useless. No power outside, from the devil downward, can take us out of God's hand; so long as we remain faithful, we are as eternally secure as God Himself.

2. The Frontiers of God

As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the LORD is round about His people from henceforth even for ever. (Psalm 125:2)

There are margins beyond which the Spirit of God does not work. Nightingales will not sing outside certain geographical areas, and that is an exact illustration of the frontiers of God. There is a place where God reveals His face, and that place has moral frontiers, not physical. We can blind our minds by perverse thinking; blind our moral life by crooked dealing in business, or by sin. We can never get away from God geographically, but we can get away from Him morally. The writer to the Hebrews mentions the moral frontier, "let thy conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have" (Hebrews 13:5). Outside that moral frontier, God does not reveal His face. Let me become impatient, let me fix my heart on gain, and I do not see God. If I enthrone anything other than God in my life, God retires and lets the other god do what it can. The majority of us do not enthrone God, we enthrone common-sense. We make our decisions and then ask the real God to bless our god's decision. We say, "It is common-sense to do this thing," and God leaves us, because we are outside the frontier where He works. Keep yourself from the love of money, and be content. Think of the imperative haste in our spirit to wish we were somewhere else! That danger is always there, and we have to watch it. When I wish I was somewhere else I am not doing my duty to God where I am. I am wool-gathering, fooling with my own soul; if I am God's child I have no business to be distracted. If I keep myself from covetousness, content with the things I have, I remain within the frontiers of God. If I have the spirit of covetousness in my heart I have no right to say, "The Lord is my helper"—He is not, He is my destroyer. I have no right to say I am content and yet have a mood that is not contented. If I am ill-tempered, set on some change of circumstances, I find God is not supporting me at all; I have worried myself outside the moral frontier where He works and my soul won't sing; there is no joy in God, no peace in believing. We have to watch that we are not enticed outside the frontier of our own control, just as soldiers have to watch. If they get outside the frontier of their strategy they will probably be killed, and so we have to watch that we are not enticed outside God's frontier. Remember, no man can take us outside, it is our own stupidity that takes us out. When we realise that we have got outside the moral frontier, the only thing to do is to get back again and realise what the Apostle Paul says in Philippians 4:11–13.

3. The Faithfulness of Godliness

For the rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous; lest the righteous put forth their hands unto iniquity. (Psalm 125:3)

The rod means two things—it is used in counting in the sheep, and it is used to destroy the wild beast that suddenly springs out on the sheep (see Psalm 23:4). The man of sin will have his rod, he will do clever tricks, he will put the mark of the beast on every business system that he sanctions, and those who do not have that mark on them can never do business under the regime of the man of sin. Suppose you find that the people who are "counted in" under the mark of the beast succeed, and you do not succeed, you may be tempted to negotiate the thing and say, "Well, I don't know, if I did this thing it would save me; I had better just compromise a bit." We must never do that. "The rod of the wicked shall not rest on the righteous," God says. There is no need to fear, if we keep within the moral frontiers of God we can say boldly, "The Lord is my helper." We do not need to mind how the wicked bluster and say, "If you don't do this and that, you will starve." Be faithful, make holiness your aim, holiness in every relationship—money, food, clothes, friendship—then you will see the Lord in all these domains.

4. The Fitness of Goodness

Do good, O LORD, unto those that be good, and to them that are upright in their hearts. (Psalm 125:4)

Our Lord warned the disciples that they would be put out of the synagogue, and be killed (see John 16:2), but He says, "Don't mind about that, beware only of not doing your duty according to My commandments, because that will destroy both soul and body in hell" (see Matthew 10:28; Revelation 2:10). We are apt to make salvation mean the saving of our skin. The death of our body, the sudden breaking-up of the house of life, may be the salvation of our soul. In times of peace "honesty may be the best policy," but if we work on the idea that it is better physically and prosperously to be good, that is the wrong motive; the right motive is devotion to God, remaining absolutely true to God, no matter what it costs.

5. The Futility of Godlessness

But as for such as turn aside unto their crooked ways, the LORD shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity. (Psalm 125:5 RV)

There is no reference in the Bible to natural law. We talk of certain things as the inevitable result of what a man does: the Bible says, God. The Psalmist says, "the LORD shall lead them forth." God is active in every relationship; it is not natural law or mathematical logic, but God working all through. No man has a fate portioned out to him; a man's disposition makes what people call his fate. The course of deliberately remaining independent of God ends in damnation, by God's direct decree, not as an inevitable happening; and the course of dependence upon God ends in heaven, by God's decree, not by chance. Either course has God behind it. It is the glorious risk of the Christian life. The Apostle Peter gives the warning, "Beware lest, being carried away with the error of the wicked, ye fall from your own stedfastness" (2 Peter 3:17 RV). God does not save us from facing the music, or shelter us from any of the requirements of sons and daughters (see 1 John 4:4). As long as we remain within the moral frontiers of God, watching our hearts lest we give way to ill-content, to covetousness, or self-pity, the things which take us outside God's frontier, then God says, "I will in no wise fail thee, neither will I in any wise forsake thee" (RV).

VI

PSALM 126

1. The Emotion of Deliverance

When the LORD turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream. (Psalm 126:1)

Religion is never intellectual, it is always passionate and emotional; but the curious thing is that it is religion that leads to emotion, not emotion to religion. If religion does not make for passion and emotion, it is not the true kind. When you realise that you are saved, that God has forgiven your sins, given you the Holy Spirit, I defy you not to be carried away with emotion. Religion which makes for logic and reason is not religion, but to try to make religion out of emotion is to take a false step. Our Lord bases everything on life as it is, and life is implicit. For instance, you cannot explicitly state what love is, but love is the implicit thing that makes life worth living. You cannot explicitly state what sin is, but sin is the implicit thing that curses life. You cannot explicitly state what death is, all the scientific jargon in the world cannot define death; death is the implicit thing which destroys life as we know it. A child is a good illustration of the implicit, you cannot imagine a child without emotion, always logical, reasonable and wellbalanced, he would not be a child but a prig.

Emotion is not simply an overplus of feeling, it is life lived at white-heat, a state of wonder. To lose wonder is to lose the true element of religion. Has the sense of wonder been dying down in your religious life? If so, you need to get back to the Source. If you have lost the fervour of delight in God, tell Him so. The old Divines used to ask God for the grace of trembling, i.e., the sense of wonder. When wonder goes out of natural love, something or someone is to be severely blamed; wonder ought never to go. With a child the element of wonder is always there, a freshness and spontaneity, and the same is true of those who follow Jesus Christ's teaching and become as little children.

People have the idea that Christianity and Stoicism are alike; the writings of the stoics sound so like the teaching of Jesus Christ, but just at the point where they seem most alike, they are most divergent. A stoic overcomes the world by making himself indifferent, by passionlessness; the saint overcomes the world by passionateness, by the passion of his love for Jesus Christ.

2. The Excitement of Delight

Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing: then said they among the heathen, The LORD hath done great things for them. (Psalm 126:2)

They were carried completely off their feet with amazement and delight over what God had done (cf. Genesis 17:17; Isaiah 60:5). A man will say, "I do not doubt that God can forgive sin, that He can give the Holy Spirit and make men holy, but it cannot possibly mean me! When I come before God I remember all my blunders and sins." When he realises that it does mean him, then comes this moral hysteria—"It is too good to be true!" With God a thing is never too good to be true; it is too good not to be true.

Ruskin says that early in life he could never see a hedgerow without emotion, then later on when problems of heart and life were busy with him he saw nothing in Nature; but as soon as the inner turmoil was settled, not only did he get the old joy back, but a redoubled joy. If we have no delight in God it is because we are too far away from the childlike relationship to Him. If there is an internal struggle on, get it put right and you will experience delight in Him.

3. The Ecstasy of His Doings

The LORD hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad. Turn again our captivity, O LORD, as the streams in the south. (Psalm 126:3–4)

Whenever God brings His deliverances they are so supernatural that we are staggered with amazement. It is one of the most helpful spiritual exercises to reckon what God has done for us already. When God wanted to make His ancient people realise what manner of God He was, He said, "Remember the crossing of the Red Sea," and in the New Testament Paul says, "Remember, it is the God Who raised Jesus from the dead. . . ." These two things are the unit of measurement of God's power. If I want to know what God can do, He is the God Who made a way through the sea; if it is a question of power for my life, the measurement of that is the Resurrection of Jesus.

"Turn again our captivity, O LORD...." I call upon my soul to remember what God has done and it makes me bold to entreat Him to do it again. It is a crime to give way to self-pity, to be weak in God's strength when all this God is ours. We have to build ourselves up on our most holy faith. Robert Louis Stevenson asked God to forgive him if he had "shown no morning face"; and Dante places in the lowest circles of Hell those who have been gloomy in the summer air.

4. The Enlightenment of Drudgery

They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him. (Psalm 126:5–6)

We make the blunder of wanting to sow and plough and reap all at the same time. We forget what our Lord said, that "one soweth, and another reapeth." "They that sow in tears . . ."—it looks as if the seed were drowned. You can see the seed when it is in the basket, but when it falls into the ground, it disappears (see John 12:24). The same thing is true with regard to Sunday School work or meetings, it looks as if everything were flung away, you cannot see anything happening; but the seed is there. "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." The seed is the word of God, and no word of God is ever fruitless. If I know that the sowing is going to bring forth fruit, I am blessed in the drudgery. Drudgery is never blessed, but drudgery can be enlightened. The Psalmist says, "Thou hast enlarged me . . . in distress"; the enlargement comes through knowing that God is looking after everything. Before, when I came to a difficult bit of the way I was staggered, but now through the affliction and suffering I can put my foot down more firmly (see Romans 8:35–39).

PSALM 127

1. Direction by Countenancing God

Except the LORD build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the LORD keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain. (Psalm 127:1)

For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that. (see James 4:13–15)

Do I countenance God like that? not have my face towards Him, but my whole person directed by that dominating thought? One of the greatest evidences that we are born again of God is that we perceive the kingdom of God. When I am born from above (RV mg) I countenance God; the arm of the Lord is revealed and I see God as the Architect, as the One Who is doing all things. God is never away off somewhere else; He is always there. It is this fact that needs to be taken into consideration. Do I countenance the fact that God is engineering my bodily life and all that I come in contact with? I mention the body because that is the physical case in which our spirit works. If I do not countenance God in that, my faith is jargon. If I enthrone common sense as God, there are great regions of my life in which I do not countenance God.

"Except the LORD build the house . . . ," the house of the mind or heart. God is building us for Himself not for ourselves. Do I realise that my body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, or am I educating myself for myself? I have an ambition, just where that ambition rules I do not countenance God, I cannot, because my ambition rules and I won't allow God to thwart it. If I do not countenance God in every relationship of my life I shall end in disaster. We get the life of God all at once, but we do not learn to obey all at once; we only learn to obey by the discipline of life.

2. Distracted Man

It is vain for you that ye rise up early, and so late take rest, and eat the bread of toil: for so He giveth unto His beloved sleep. (Psalm 127:2 RV)

This verse describes an amateur providence. We are all amateur providences, until we learn better; we are most impertinent toward God, we tell Him there are certain things we will never allow to happen in other lives, and God comes and says, "Don't interfere with that life any more." Are you rising up early and sitting up late to try and unravel difficulties? You cannot do it. It is a great thing to get to the place where you countenance God and know He rules. It is not done by impulse but by a settled and abiding conviction based on God's truth and the discipline of life. I know that God rules; and He gives me power to perceive His rule. There is no use sitting up late or rising up early, I must do the work that lies before me, and avoid worry as I would the devil. "It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late. . . . " If I take time from sleep, God's punishment rests on me; or if I take time in sleep when I should be working, He punishes me. Sloth is as bad as being a fussy workman in God's sight. We have no business to be distracted.

I wonder if we have ever considered the Bible implications about sleep? It is not true to say that sleep is simply meant for physical recuperation; surely much less time than God has ordered would have served that purpose. The Revised Version suggests a deeper, profounder ministry for sleep than mere physical recuperation. "For so He giveth unto His beloved in sleep" (mg). The deepest concerns of our souls, whether they be good or bad, are furthered during sleep. It is not merely a physical fact that you go to bed perplexed and wake clear-minded; God has been ministering to you during sleep. Sometimes God cannot get at us until we are asleep. In the Bible there are times when in the deep slumber of the body God has taken the souls of His servants into deeper communion with Himself (e.g. Genesis 2:21, 15:12). Often when a problem or perplexity harasses the mind and there seems no solution, after a night's rest you find the solution easy, and the problem has no further perplexity. Think of the security of the saint in sleeping or in waking, "Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day." Sleep is God's celestial nurse who croons away our consciousness, and God deals with the unconscious life of the soul in places where only He and His angels have charge. As you retire to rest, give your soul and God a time together, and commit your life to God with a conscious peace for the hours of sleep, and deep and profound developments will go on in spirit, soul and body by the kind creating hand of our God.

3. Disregarded Munificence

Lo, children are an heritage of the LORD: and the fruit of the womb is His reward. As arrows in the hand of a mighty man, so are the children of youth. (Psalm 127:3–4 RV)

Things go by threes in the Bible: Father, Son and Holy Ghost; God, Church, converts; husband, wife, children. It is God's order, not man's. Whenever one of the three is missing, there is something wrong. If you have a house, the next thing the Bible counsels is hospitality—"given to hospitality" (Romans 12:13); "pursuing hospitality" (RV mg); give your whole mind to it. "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares" (Hebrews 13:2). That is the way the blessing comes. When we begin to try to economise, God puts dry rot in us instantly. I don't care what line the economy takes, it produces dry rot. When we have the lavish hand, there is munificence at once. "There is that scattereth, and increaseth yet more; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth only to want" (Proverbs 11:24 RV). It is the "third" element being recognised. Have I got three factors in my thinking, or only two? Is it God and myself? then I am wrong. It is God and myself for God's purposes. Do I want to be saved that I may be right with God, or that God may get His purpose through me?

4. Delivering Manoeuvres

Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them: they shall not be ashamed, when they speak with their enemies in the gate. (Psalm 127:5 RV)

It is the element of the "third" that makes a man wealthy. ". . . trained men, born in his house" (Genesis 14:14 RV). Have I been able to reproduce my own kind spiritually? If so, in a time of difficulty I will be brought through magnificently victorious; but woe be to the spiritual man who has never produced his own kind, when the difficulties come there is none to assist, he is isolated and lonely. It is the production of the "third" that returns to you in victory. When we are right with God, Jesus says, out of you will flow "rivers of living water." Immediately you are in difficulties a thousand and one come to assist in prayer; they face the enemy in the gates. That is the great basal truth of the League of Prayer, the clustering together of the children of God. It is those you have been the means of blessing who keep you from the onslaughts of the enemy. We shall be amazed to find how much we are indebted to people we never think about, simply because they were introduced to God through us, and in our difficulties they come to our aid. There is the wire of communication when the manoeuvres take place, and we are happily delivered. The kingdoms of this world are founded on strong men, consequently they go. Jesus Christ founds His Kingdom on the weakest link, a Baby. God made His own Son a Babe. We must base our thinking on the rugged facts of life according to God's Book, and not according to the finesse of modern civilisation. Let us not be so careful as to how we offend or please human ears, but let us never offend God's ears.

PSALM 128

1. Seemliness of Sanctity

Blessed is every one that feareth the LORD; that walketh in His ways. (Psalm 128:1)

The remarkable thing about fearing God is that when you fear God you fear nothing else, whereas if you do not fear God you fear everything else. "Blessed is every one that feareth the LORD"; the writer to the Hebrews tells us to fear lest haply there should be any promise of God's of which we come short. (Hebrews 4:1). Are we alert enough along this line? "... that walketh in His ways." The word walk breathes character, it is the symbol for seemly behaviour. John "looked upon Jesus as He walked" (RV)—not in a moment of ecstasy and transfiguration but "as He walked, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God!" "Walk worthily" (RV), says the Apostle Paul, worthily, that is, towards God, not towards man, because man's standards are not God's. When a man says he is sanctified the charge is often made, and there is no reply to it, "Remember, you are not perfect." A saint is required to be perfect towards God. "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect"; the standard of judgement is not man's standard, but God's. Our conduct before men will be judged by whether we walk in the seemliness of sanctity before God. That means conduct according to the highest we know, and the striking thing is that the highest we know is God Himself. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

There is something in human nature that enables it to go through a big crisis, but we do need help from God to walk worthily the sixty seconds of every minute. Am I behaving myself in God's sight in the seemliness of sanctity to those who are nearest to me? in my letterwriting? in my study? Is the one great lodestar of my life walking "in His ways"? The thing we have to guard against is wanting to be somewhere else. Have I sufficient of the grace of God to behave myself as His child where I am? It is one thing to feel the sufficiency of God in a prayer meeting and in times of delight and excitement, but another thing to realise His sufficiency in whatever setting we may be—in a thunderstorm or on a calm summer day, in a cottage or a College, in an antique shop or on a moor.

2. Satisfaction in Strenuousness

For thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands: happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee. (Psalm 128:2)

This verse reveals the connection between the natural creation and the regenerated creation. We have to be awake strenuously to the fact that our body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, not only in the spiritual sense, but in the physical sense. When we are born from above (RV mg) we are apt to despise the clay of which we are made. The natural creation and the creation of grace work together, and what we are apt to call the sordid things, labouring with our hands, and eating and drinking, have to be turned into spiritual exercises by obedience, then we shall eat and drink, and "do all to the glory of God." There must be a uniting in personal experience of the two creations. It cannot be done all at once, there are whole tracts of life which have to be disciplined. "Your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost," it is the handiwork of God, and it is in these bodies we are to find satisfaction, and that means strenuousness. Every power of mind and heart should go into the strenuousness of turning the natural into the spiritual by obeying the word of God regarding it. If we do not make the natural spiritual, it will become sordid; but when we become spiritual the natural is shot through with the glory of God.

3. Security of the Saint

Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine by the sides of thine house: thy children like olive plants round about thy table. Behold, that thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the LORD. (Psalm 128:3–4)

To-day people are altogether ignoring the fact that God has anything to do with human relationships. If we get out of any setting of natural life which God has decreed we shall not be blessed. Take the commandment to "honour thy father and mother," and apply it spiritually. I believe that many a life is hindered from entering into sanctification through not being properly related in disposition to father and mother. It is one of the most practical tests. Am I allowing inordinate affection in any relationship? or envy, or jealousy? If so I am certainly not finding blessing, it is getting dried up. I must maintain the spirit and disposition of my Lord and Master in all the ordinary relationships of life, then I shall realise the marvellous security of the saint.

4. Supremacy of Sincerity

The LORD shall bless thee out of Zion: and thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life. (Psalm 128:5)

Sincerity means in the straight. Am I straight in my relationship to God and to other people? If I am the Lord says He will bless me. "And thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life." It is righteous behaviour that brings blessing on others, and the heart of faith sees that God is working things out well.

5. Surroundings of Sanity

Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children, and peace upon Israel. (Psalm 128:6)

It is in ordinary surroundings and among commonplace things that the blessing of God is to dwell and reveal itself. "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city" (Revelation 22:14). Have I entered in through the gates? There is a time when the exceptional has to rule and the "right arm" has to go, but that is only a phase. Our Lord was brought up so much in ordinary surroundings that the religious people of His day said that He was "a gluttonous man, and a winebibber." His life was unassuming in its naturalness. Read the records of the forty days after the Resurrection, they bear the mark of superb sanity. The test is not the success of a revival meeting, that may be questionable, but the success of living in the commonplace things that make life what it is, letting God carry out His purposes as He will.

The Highest Good

Introduction

Source

The Highest Good is comprised of lectures in Oswald Chambers' Christian ethics class at the Bible Training College, London, between 1911 and 1915.

Publication History

- As articles: The lectures were published as articles in the BTC Monthly Journal¹⁵ from October 1936 through March 1937.
- As a book: The Highest Good was first published in 1938. It was published as part of a combined volume with The Pilgrim's Song Book and Thy Great Redemption in 1965.

In Chambers' Christian ethics class at the Bible Training College, he used as a text James Stalker's book, The Ethic of Jesus according to the Synoptic Gospels (1909). Thus, the frequent use of quotes from Stalker in these lectures. James Stalker (1848–1927) was a Scottish scholar and pastor who served as professor of church history at the United Free Church College, Aberdeen, from 1902 to 1926.

Other material from Chambers' teaching on ethics is found in Biblical Ethics (1947) and The Moral Foundations of Life (1936).

SUMMUM BONUM

In speaking of the Highest Good as the theme of Ethics, Aristotle observes: "Every art and every kind of inquiry, and likewise every act and purpose, seems to aim at some good; and, since there are many kinds of actions, and many arts and sciences, it follows that there are many ends also. . . . And, if in what we do there be some end which we wish for on its own account, choosing all the others as means to this, this will evidently be the best of all things. And surely from a practical point of view it much more concerns us to know this good; for then, like archers shooting at a definite mark, we shall be more likely to attain what we want."

—The Ethic of Jesus According to the Synoptic Gospels Stalker¹⁶

All books on Ethics talk about the "Summum Bonum," i.e. the Greatest Good is the Highest End. In practical life we do not begin by thinking, we begin as common-sense beings without thinking; we live first, and do things right and wrong and mixed up anyhow. The first practical thing we have to face in life is duty, and the Bible begins where common sense begins, viz., in the practical domain. We have to get at what Jesus Christ taught was the Highest Good, then we can understand why He did not accept the standard of life that we accept, and why He plays havoc with all our lesser "goods" until we get to the supreme Good He had in mind.

When we are born again we see things from a totally new perspective and we think we see all, then we go on a bit further, and when we get to the top of that peak there are regions beyond we never dreamed of, and so on. When we have got exhausted with the vistas before us we are prepared to hear Jesus say, "This is life eternal, that they should know Thee the only true God" (John 17:3 RV).

Evolution is simply a working way of explaining the growth and development of anything. When evolution is made a fetish and taken to mean God, then call it "bosh"; but evolution in a species, in an idea, in teaching, is exactly what our Lord taught: born of the Spirit and going on "till we all attain . . . unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (RV). To understand means we can reconstruct a thing mentally and leave no element out. When we come to try and understand the Highest Good of our Lord, we must take it in His language, and it will take all time and eternity to understand what that Good is. Whether we live for the Highest Good does not depend on our understanding, but on whether we have the life of the Highest Good in us.

1. The Greatest Good Is the Highest End (Matthew 7:4-14; 18:8-9; 19:16; 25:46)

When Aristotle and the ancient thinkers spoke of the Highest Good, their meaning was that, in this earthly life of ours, there is for everyone a single supreme attainment, which if missed, will render life a failure, but, if gained, will render it a success.

Stalker

The Shorter Catechism states, in answer to the question, "What is man's chief end?" that "Man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever." It is not what man puts into his body or on his body, but what he brings out of his body (cf. Matthew 15:17-20), and what he brings out of what he puts on his body, viz., his money, that reveals what he considers his chief end. A great many people imagine they have glorified God when they have given two halfpennies for a penny, or have saved a halfpenny. The highest good to them is to keep economic relations right, the highest Good from Jesus Christ's standpoint never dawns on them. The craze to-day is that the highest good is what a man has to live on: feed him, keep his body healthy, and his moral and religious life will be all right. That is the highest good according to the standard of many. As Christians it is more important to know how to live than what to live on. The attitude of the Christian is not, "I'm but a stranger here, heaven is my home," but rather "I'm not a stranger here." A stranger is exonerated from many things for which God holds us responsible. Jesus asked His Father to treat His disciples not as strangers but as inmates¹⁷ of the world and to keep them from the evil (John 17:15). We have to live in the heavenly places while here on earth.

^{16.} James Stalker (1848–1927) was a Scottish scholar and pastor who served as professor of church history at the United Free Church College, Aberdeen, from 1902 to 1926. Chambers used Stalker's book, The Ethic of Jesus According to the Synoptic Gospels (1909), as a text to teach Christian ethics at the Bible Training College.

^{17.} inmates: people living under one roof as members of a family or group. Not used to mean those who are institutionalised or imprisoned.

2. The Greatest Good Is the Highest Evangel (Matthew 4:23; 9:35; 11:5; 24:14; 26:13)

In the teaching of Jesus the term "The Greatest Good" is embodied in its most comprehensive sense in His use of the word "Gospel." Our Lord in no way means what we commonly mean when we say "Gospel," viz., salvation by faith in Jesus. The Bible never gives definitions, the Bible states facts, and the Gospel that Jesus brought of good news about God is the most astounding thing the world ever heard, but it must be the Gospel that Jesus brought. Whenever the Gospel of Jesus loses the note of unutterable gladness, it is like salt that has lost its savour. We are apt to think of the Gospel on the lines of spring-cleaning. We have conceived of the kingdom of God in the time of the Millennium only, consequently when we come to the parables we are confused. The kingdom of God in this dispensation is the rule of God discerned by individuals alone (see John 3:3). "Unless you are born from above [RV mg]," Jesus says, "you will never see the rule of God." It is not seen by the intellect. The rule of God which individual saints see and recognise is "without observation" in this dispensation. There is another dispensation coming when the whole world will see it as individuals have seen it.

"The kingdom of God is within you" (Luke 17:21). The blessedness of the gospel of the kingdom of God in this dispensation is that a man is born from above (RV mg) while he is below, and he actually sees with the eyes of his spirit the rule of God in the devil's territory. You will see how far we have got away from Jesus Christ's teaching. We bring in all kinds of things, we talk about salvation and sanctification and forgiveness of sins; Jesus did not mention these things to Nicodemus (He mentioned them later to the disciples), He said, "Be born from above and you will see the rule of God." It is an attitude of essential simplicity all through. Preaching what we call the Gospel, i.e. salvation from hell does not appeal to men; but once get Jesus Christ to preach His own Gospel and the Spirit of God to expound it, then men are hauled up at once.

Consideration of Several Beatitudes

The drift of the Beatitudes has often been misunderstood. They have been supposed to describe the characteristics of true Christians, pronouncing those blessed who possess such-and-such qualities. But the structure is much more complex. . . . For example, one of the Beatitudes says, "Blessed are they that mourn": and, if we stop there, the statement is almost equivalent to the absurd saying, "Happy are the unhappy." The addition, however, of the words, "for they shall be comforted," makes all the difference. . . . And the same principle applies to all the Beatitudes. . . . Thus, mourning, hungering, persecution are not in themselves and by themselves, desirable, but the reverse; yet, taken along with what is given by Jesus to those thus circumstanced, they are blessedness itself.

Stalker

"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." The gift here is the heritage of the earth by being fool enough to let other people have it at present. Jesus Christ taught that any one who possesses property of any nature has got to go through a baptism of bereavement in connection with it before he can be His disciple. The rich young ruler is a good specimen of possession (see Luke 18:22-23). The craze nowadays for those of us who have no property is to take the liberty of hauling to pieces those who have; but Jesus Christ turns it round the other way—"Do you possess anything, any property of pride, any sense of goodness, any virtue, any gift? Then you will have to go through intolerable bereavement before you can ever be My disciple." Intellectually that is inconceivable; spiritually it is clear to everyone who is rightly related to the Lord. This is where the obstinacy is revealed all through in us as disciples; we come up against this stone wall, and it produces obstinacy. The one great enemy of discipleship to Jesus Christ is spiritual obstinacy, the emphatic "I won't" which runs all through. Jesus says, "If you are to be My disciple this and that must go"; we are at liberty to say, "No, thank you," and to go away, like the rich young ruler, with fallen countenances and sorrowful because we have great possessions, we are somebodies, we have opinions of our own, we know exactly what we intend to do.

"Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy." As soon as we get right with God we are going to meet things that are contrary, we are going to meet un-merciful good people and un-merciful bad people, un-merciful institutions, un-merciful organisations, and we shall have to go through the discipline of being merciful to the merciless. It is much easier to say, "I won't bother my head with them"; then we shall never know the blessedness of obtaining God's mercy. Over and over again we will come up against things, and in order to get the eternal blessedness Jesus Christ refers to we shall have to go through the unhappiness of doing something that the standards of men will be contemptuous over.

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." How are we going to be pure in heart? We shall have to go through the humiliation of knowing we are impure. If you want to know what a pure heart is, read the life of the Lord Jesus Christ as recorded in the New Testament. His is a pure heart, anything less is not. Do you know the real panging misery of repentance? Think of the times (they are rare) when you have been in conscious touch with God—the moments when the simplicity of your heart-relationship to God, not your head, was undeterred by a sense of property or possession on your part—that was the time and place to see God.

3. The Greatest Good Is the Healthiest Equity (Luke 6:20–23)

When we try to understand Jesus Christ's teaching with our heads we get into a fog. What Jesus Christ taught is only explainable to the personality of the mind in relation to the personality of Jesus Christ. It is a relationship of life, not of intellect. That is why Jesus said, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Our conception of things has to be torn to shreds until we realise that what makes a man a Christian is a simple heart-relationship to Jesus Christ, not intellectual conceptions.

This conception enlarges our horizon and enables us to understand why it took God's Son to preach the Gospel, and why Jesus said, "The poor have the gospel [mg] preached unto them" (Matthew 11:5 RV). Why not the rich? The rich did not want it. "But if our gospel be hid," says Paul, "it is hid" from the publicans? No; "it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not." That is the class for whom the Gospel of Jesus has no meaning. A healthy-hided moral man does not want Jesus Christ; a ritualist does not want Jesus Christ; a rationalist does not want Jesus Christ. It is along this line we begin to understand why Jesus said, "I am not come to call the righteous," i.e. the whole and the healthy, "but sinners to repentance." I am come to those who mourn, to those who are afflicted, to those who are in a condition of insatiable thirst." Nothing will ever satisfy a man who is awakened but the supreme Good, viz., the Gospel of God. The social worker who goes into work without this supreme Good ends in heartbreak and disaster because all he succeeds in doing even while he satisfies lesser cravings is to render more intense the craving for something other, viz., the one supreme Good.

"Blessed are ve, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for My sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad." That is the mark of a Christian from our Lord's standpoint. Many of us are persecuted because we have crotchety notions of our own, but the mark of a disciple is suffering "for My sake." Have you ever suffered anything for His sake? If we are foolish enough in the eyes of the world to order our life according to the rule of the kingdom of heaven, the only virtue will be, says Jesus, that men will hate you as they hated Me. Try and work your home life or your business life according to the rule of Jesus Christ and you will find that what He said is true, you will be put out of court as a fool, and we don't like to be thought fools. That is the persecution that many a man and woman has to go through if they are true to Jesus Christ, a continual semi-cultured sneering ridicule; nothing can stand that but absolute devotion to Jesus Christ, a creed will never stand it. Christianity is other-worldiness in the midst of this-worldliness. To apply the rule of the kingdom of God to our daily life is done not by our heads but by the obedience of our hearts. "If you are ever going to get the true blessedness," says Jesus, "it must be by living your life according to the rule of God." How are we going to discern the rule of God? Jesus told Nicodemus: "If you are born from above [RV mg] you will see the kingdom of God, and enter into it" (John 3:3, 5). Then after we have entered into the kingdom of God, are we going to apply its rule to our bodily life, our mental life, our spiritual life? We are at liberty to stop short at any point, and our Lord will never cast it up at us; but think what we shall feel like when we see Him if all the "thank you" we gave Him for His unspeakable salvation was an obstinate determination to serve Him in our own way, not His.

RIGHTEOUSNESS

Bear in mind that our human life viewed from a moral standpoint is a tragedy, and that preaching precepts while we ignore the Cross of Jesus Christ is like giving "a pill to cure an earthquake," or a poultice for a cancer. Our attempts to face the problems of human life apart from Jesus Christ are futile. It is good for us to use our common sense and not live tragically, but remember, immediately you touch the moral problem you find that things are damnably wrong, the Book says so; they are so far wrong that it takes the Cross of Jesus Christ to put them right, and we live in a fool's paradise if we ignore the terrific tragedy at the bottom of everything.

Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled. (Matthew 5:6)

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. (Matthew 5:10)

Most people use righteousness as a term for the behaviour of man to man; and it includes this; but, when Christ speaks of hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and of being filled with it, there can be little doubt that, in accordance with the usage of His race, the prize He has in view is the favourable verdict of God on a man's character and conduct.

Stalker

The majority of us know nothing whatever about the righteousness that is gifted to us in Jesus Christ, we are still trying to bring human nature up to a pitch it cannot reach because there is something wrong with human nature. The old Puritanism which we are apt to ridicule did the same service for men that Pharisaism did for Saul, and that Roman Catholicism did for Luther; but nowadays we have no "iron" in us anywhere; we have no idea of righteousness, we do not care whether we are righteous or not. We have not only lost Jesus Christ's idea of righteousness, but we laugh at the Bible idea of righteousness; our god is the conventional righteousness of the society to which we belong.

The claim that our Lord was original is hopelessly wrong, He most emphatically took care not to be; He states that He came to fulfil what was already here but undiscerned. "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil." That is why it is so absurd to put our Lord as a Teacher first, He is not first a Teacher, He is a Saviour first. He did not come to give us a new code of morals: He came to enable us to keep a moral code we had not been able to fulfil. Jesus did not teach new things; He taught "as one having authority"—with power to make men into accordance with what He taught. Jesus Christ came to make us holy, not to tell us to be holy: He came to do for us what we could not do for ourselves.

The great tendency to-day is that we are looking for another teacher. The world is sick of teachers and of ideals, the point is, have we ever lived up to any of our ideals? It is not more ideals we want, but the power to live up to what we know we ought to and don't. It is shallowness, not ability, that makes people say we want more teaching and higher ideals—model Sunday School classes, model Bible classes; it is all model. "Do this and don't do that," but where is it being carried out? Jesus Christ does not add one burden to the lives of men; He imparts the power to live up to what we know we ought, that is the meaning of His salvation.

For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven. (Matthew 5:20)

The sympathy of Christ with the training imparted by the Old Testament, and with the passion for righteousness thereby generated, is expressed very distinctly in the Sermon on the Mount, before the Preacher proceeds to the exposition of His own ideal; the motive underlying this declaration being a fear lest His subsequent references to the Old Testament should be understood as disparaging to its authority. In order to avoid this danger, He prefaced His exposition with the statement: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil."

Stalker

Jesus Christ contrasts His conception of righteousness with the one already familiar to His hearers. It is not a new gospel we need, that is the jargon of the hour; it is the old gospel put in terms that fit the present-day need, and for one man or one book that does that there are hundreds who tell us that what we want is a new gospel. What we want is men who have the grace of their Lord to face the presentday problems with the old Gospel. What is the good of my talking to the crowd of to-day about the conceptions men had in Luther's day? The thing is, can I make the Gospel I have meet the problems they are facing, and can I show them where other solutions are wrong? If not, I had better keep quiet, I have not been called of God to preach. The majority of us have our own idea of what the Gospel is, but we live aloof from the time we belong to and what we preach is altogether apart from the lives of the folks we talk to.

Our Lord followed the simple line which the prophets took, He took the conceptions He knew men had and compared His own interpretation with theirs and made them judge, with what result? Absolute despair for everybody. Have we ever got hold of the idea that if Jesus Christ was only a Teacher, He was the most tantalising Teacher that ever came to this earth? If Jesus Christ came to interpret to us a standard infinitely more profound than the one we already have, what is the good of it? He tells us that if we want to see God we must be pure in hearthow are we going to begin? He tells us to love our enemies, to bless them that curse us, to do good to them that hate us, to pray for those who despitefully use us, and persecute us—how can we begin to do it? If He is a Teacher only, then He is a most cruel Teacher, for He puts ideals before us that blanch us white to the lips and lead us to a hell of despair. But if He came to do something else as well as teach—if He came to re-make us on the inside and put within us His own disposition of unsullied holiness, then we can understand why He taught like He did.

It is by facing our lives with the conceptions of Jesus that we understand the meaning of His Cross. One of the most despairing things of our day is the shallow dogmatic competence of the people who tell us they believe in the teachings of Jesus but not in His Atonement. The most unmitigated piece of nonsense human ears ever listened to! Believe in the teachings of Jesus—what is the good of it? What is the good of telling me that I have to be what I know I never can be if I live for a million years—perfect as God is perfect? What is the good of telling me I have to be a child of my Father in heaven and be like Him? We must rid our minds of the idea that is being introduced by the modern trend of things that Jesus Christ came to teach. The world is sick of teachers. Teachers never can do any good unless they can interpret the teaching that is already here.

For I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven. (Matthew 5:20 RV)

Having thus cleared the ground, the Great Teacher proceeds, in the Sermon on the Mount, to expound His conception of righteousness; and, in so doing, He adopts a method frequently resorted to by every expositor who knows his business: He contrasts the conception of the subject in His own mind with one already familiar to His hearers. . . . The righteousness of the scribes was external; that of Jesus is internal. Theirs was a righteousness in words and actions; His flows out from the innermost thoughts and feelings. Theirs was conventional—that is to say, it was intended for the eyes of society; His was a righteousness of the conscience having regard only to God.

Stalker

"Except your righteousness shall exceed"—not be different from but "exceed," that is, we have to be all they are and infinitely more! We have to be right in our external behaviour, but we have to be as right, and "righter," in our internal behaviour. We have to be right in our words and actions, but we have to be as right in our thoughts and feelings. We have to be right according to the conventions of the society of godly people, but we have also to be right in conscience towards God. Nominal Christians are often without the ordinary moral integrity of the man who does not care a bit about Jesus Christ; not because they are hypocrites, but because we have been taught for generations to think on one aspect only of Jesus Christ's salvation, viz., the revelation that salvation is not merited by us, but is the sheer sovereign act of God's grace in Christ Jesus. A grand marvellous revelation fact, but Jesus says we have got to say "Thank you" for our salvation, and the "Thank you" is that our righteousness is to exceed the righteousness of the most moral man on earth.

Jesus not only demands that our external life is above censure but that we are above censure where God sees us. We see the meaning now of saying that Jesus is the most tantalising Teacher: He demands that we be so pure that God Who sees to the inmost springs of our motives, the inmost dreams of our dreams, sees nothing to censure. We may go on evolving, and evolving, but we shall never produce that kind of purity. Then what is the good of teaching it? Listen: "If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." That is the Gospel; Jesus Christ claims that He can take a man or woman who is fouled in the springs of their nature by heredity and make them as pure as He is Himself. That is why He teaches what He does, and it is His standard we are to be judged by if we are His disciples. No wonder the disciples when they heard Jesus speak, said, "Who then can be saved?" The greatest philosophy ever produced does not come within a thousand leagues of the fathomless profundity of our Lord's statements, e.g., "Learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart" Matthew 11:29). If Jesus Christ cannot produce a meekness and lowliness of heart like His own, Christianity is nonsense from beginning to end, and His teaching had better be blotted out.

The crucial point of the whole matter is our personal relationship to Jesus Christ. It is far more honest to discard Him absolutely than to play the fool with your own soul and pretend you agree with His teaching while you despise the very central part of it. No wonder Jesus said to a fine godly old man, "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." If we cannot be made all over again on the inside and indwelt by the Spirit of God, and made according to the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount, then fling your New Testament away, for it will put before you an ideal you cannot reach.

The only way to get out of our smiling complacency about salvation and sanctification is to look at Jesus Christ for two minutes and then read Matthew 5:43–48 and see Who He tells us we are to be like, God Almighty, and every piece of smiling spiritual conceit will be knocked out of us for ever, and the one dominant note of the life will be Jesus Christ first, Jesus Christ second, and Jesus Christ third, and our own whiteness nowhere. Never look to your own whiteness; look to Jesus and get power to live as He wants; look away for one second and all goes wrong.

"When the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" We all have faith in good principles, in good management, in good common sense, but who amongst us has faith in Jesus Christ? Physical courage is grand, moral courage is grander, but the man who trusts Jesus Christ in the face of the terrific problems of life is worth a whole crowd of heroes.

MISSING IT

Anything Jesus Christ revealed may be missed. The disbelief of the human mind always wastes itself in the sentimental idea that God would never let us miss the greatest good. Jesus says He will, that is why we don't like Him, and that is why the teaching of to-day is not the teaching of the Jesus Christ of the New Testament.

1. What If a Man Gain the Whole World? (Mark 8:34–35)

(a) His Point of View

Whosoever will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for My sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it.

However the end of life may be conceived—whether as Blessedness, or as the Kingdom of God, or as Righteousness—one thing is indubitable in the entire teaching of Jesus—that He looks upon the end of life as capable of being missed.

Stalker

The word translated "soul" or "life" may be equally well translated "himself," and the verses mean just what they say. Jesus is not defining the great fundamental doctrine of personality, He is talking about the man himself, the person who lives, and with whom we come in contact. Jesus says if a man gains himself, he loses himself; and if he loses himself for His sake, he gains himself.

Beware of introducing the idea of time; the instant the Spirit of God touches your spirit, it is manifested in the body. Do not get the idea of a three-storied building with a vague, mysterious, ethereal upper story called spirit, a middle story called soul, and a lower story called body. We are personality, which shows itself in three phases—spirit, soul and body. Never think that what energises the spirit takes time before it gets into the soul and body, it shows itself instantly, from the crown of the head to the soles of the feet.

Jesus says that men are capable of missing the supreme good and His point of view is not acceptable to us because we do not believe we are capable of missing it. We are far removed from Jesus Christ's point of view to-day, we take the natural rationalistic line, and His teaching is no good whatever unless we believe the main gist of His gospel, viz., that we have to have something planted into us by supernatural grace. Jesus Christ's point of view is that a man may miss the chief good; we like to believe we will end all right somehow, but Jesus says we won't. If my feet are going in one direction, I cannot advance one step in the opposite direction unless I turn right round.

(b) His Preaching from That Point of View

When He speaks of Blessedness, He at the same time utters woes which will be the portion of some instead of blessedness; when He speaks of the Kingdom, He distinctly thinks of some that will not be able to enter into it; and when He speaks of righteousness, He glances at many who are living in unrighteousness. In short, there is a considerable portion of the words of Christ occupied with the description and denunciation of sin.

Stalker

We have, as Christian disciples, to continually recognise that much of what is called Christianity to-day is not the Christianity of the New Testament; it is distinctly different in generation and manifestation. Jesus is not the fountainhead of modern Christianity; He is scarcely thought about. Christian preachers, Sunday School teachers, religious books, all without any apology patronise Jesus Christ and put Him on one side. We have to learn that to stand true to Jesus Christ's point of view means ostracism, the ostracism that was brought on Him; most of us know nothing whatever about it. The modern view looks upon human nature as pathetic: men and women are poor ignorant babes in the wood who have lost themselves. Jesus Christ's view is totally different, He does not look on men and women as babes in the wood, but as sinners who need saving, and the modern mind detests His view. Our Lord's teaching is based on something we violently hate, viz., His doctrine of sin; we do not believe it unless we have had a radical dealing with God on the line of His teaching.

Remember that a disciple is committed to much more than belief in Jesus; he is committed to his Lord's view of the world, of men, of God and of sin. Take stock of your views and compare them with the New Testament, and never get tricked into thinking that the Bible does not mean what it says when it disagrees with you. Disagree with what our Lord says by all means if you like, but never say that the Bible does not mean what it says.

(c) His Procedure and Others'

This is the point at which the ethical teaching of Jesus differs most widely from the similar teaching of philosophy. The ethics of the philosophers bear a considerable resemblance to the teaching of Jesus in so far as the setting up of an ideal of character and conduct is concerned; but little or nothing is said by philosophers about the inability of men to attain to the standard, or of the manifold forms of failure exhibited in actual experience.

Stalker

People say, "Oh yes, the Sermon on the Mount is very beautiful, our ideals must be better than we can attain, we shall drift into the Lord's ideals in time somehow or other"; but Jesus savs we won't, we will miss them. "The manifold forms of failure exhibited in actual experience" is ignored by other ethical teachers. They say it is never too late to mend—it is; that you can start again-you cannot; that you can make the past as though it had never been—it is impossible; that anyway you can put yourself in such a condition that what you have done need not count-you cannot and our Lord is the only One who recognises these things. We think because we fail and forget it, therefore it is overlooked by God—it is not. Jesus Christ's standard remains, and the entrance into His kingdom and into a totally new life is by Regeneration, and in no other way. The teachings and standards of Jesus, which are so distasteful to modern Christianity, are based on what our Lord said to Nicodemus: "Marvel not that I said unto thee, ye must be born again"; otherwise our Lord was a dreamer. The reason we do not see the need to be born from above (RV mg) is that we have a vast capacity for ignoring facts. People talk about the evolution of the race. The writers of to-day seem to be incapable of a profound understanding of history, they write glibly about the way the race is developing, where are their eyes and their reading of human life as it is? We are not evolving and developing in any sense to justify what is known as evolution. We have developed in certain domains but not in all. We are nowhere near the massive, profound intellectual grasp of the men who lived before Christ was born. What brain to-day can come near Plato, or Socrates? And yet people say we are developing and getting better, and we are laying the flattering unction to our souls that we have left Jesus Christ and His ideas twenty centuries behind. No wonder Jesus said that if we stand by Him and take His point of view, men will hate us as they hated Him.

In spite of his tendency to self-satisfaction, every man is aware some time or other of his own broken bones, and he knows that there must be death before there is any prospect of climbing the heights of moral attainment.

Stalker

Have you ever noticed that in some moods you have battled bitterly against the position you know to be right, and all your tirade against it is born of a fear lest after all it might be wrong? That is the real attitude of men and women, they will accept any amount of subterfuges, but right down underneath they have a superb contempt for anything less than that which goes to the root of the matter, and the only One Who does is the Lord Jesus Christ. Sooner or later every human heart flings away as chaff the idea that we are developing and growing better.

2. What If a Man Lose Himself? (Mark 8:36–37)

(a) The Possibility of the Question

For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

Jesus habitually saw with the mind's eye the spiritual development which those around Him might have attained had their desire been fixed more steadily on the true end of life.

Stalker

The idea seems to be, that, even though it does not come to absolute loss, yet if gaining the world involve damage to the self, the moral personality—taint, lowering of the tone, vulgarising of the soul—we lose much more than we gain.

Bruce¹⁸

In the training of art students, the master does not merely tell them what is wrong in a design, he puts the right design beside the wrong and lets them judge for themselves, and that is exactly what Jesus Christ did all through the Sermon on the Mount.

Do I accept the possibility that I may miss the highest good? There is a sentimental notion that makes us make ourselves out worse than we think we are, because we have a lurking suspicion that if we make ourselves out amazingly bad, someone will say, "Oh no, you are not as bad as that"; but Jesus says we are worse. Our Lord never trusted any man, "for He knew what was in man"; but He was not a cynic for He had the profoundest confidence in what He could do for every man, consequently He was never in a moral or intellectual panic, as we are, because we will put our confidence in man and in the things that Jesus put no confidence in. Paul says, "Don't glory in men; don't say, I am of Paul, or I am of Apollos, and don't think of yourself more highly than you ought to think, but think according to the measure of faith, that is, according to what the grace of God has done in you." Never trust (in the fundamental meaning of the word) any other saving Jesus Christ. That will mean you will never be unkind to anybody on the face of the earth, whether it be a degraded criminal or an upright moral man, because you have learned that the only thing to depend on in a man is what God has done in him. When you come to work for Jesus Christ, always ask yourself, "Do I believe Jesus Christ can do anything for that case?" Am I as confident in His power as He is in His own? If you deal with people without any faith in Jesus Christ it will crush the very life out of you. If we believe in Jesus Christ, we can face every problem the world holds.

(b) Property and Perdition

Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. (Luke 12:15)

What He thought of most frequently as impeding the growth of true manhood was the pursuit of wealth and property.

Stalker

How many people do you know who have their godliness incarnated in economy? Are you one of them? If we can save and do justly with money, we are absolutely certain we are right in the sight of God. The thing about our Lord and His teaching which puts Him immeasurably away from us nowadays is that He is opposed to all possessions, not only of money and property, but any kind of possession. That is the thing that makes Him such a deep-rooted enemy to the modern attitude to things. The two things around which our Lord centred His most scathing teaching were money and marriage, because they are the two things that make men and women devils or saints. Covetousness is the root of all evil, whether it shows itself in money matters or in any way.

(c) Poverty and Perdition

But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. (Matthew 6:33)

But Jesus was hardly less sensible of the danger to which the poor were exposed of missing the prize through an opposite cause—on account, not of the glamour of riches, but the pressure of poverty. . . . His was not a gospel of meat and drink, of loaves and fishes, of better clothes and better houses.

Stalker

Jesus Christ nowhere stands with the anti-property league. It is an easy business for me to mentally satirise the man who owns land and money when I don't. It is easy for me to talk about what I could do with a thousand pounds if I had it; the test is what I do with the $2^{1}/2d^{19}$ I have got. It may be hard for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven, but it is just as hard for a poor man to seek first the kingdom of God. It is not eternal perdition, it is the perdition of losing the soul for this life. Jesus thought as much of the possibility of losing the highest good through poverty as through riches. His own followers were poor, yet He said to them, "Seek ye first"—bread and cheese? money? a new situation? clothing? food? No, "the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Did He know what He was talking about, this poor Carpenter Who had not a pillow of His own and never enough money to pay a night's lodging and yet spoke like that, and Who also said that "the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful"?

Have I ever tried to practise one thing that Jesus taught in the Sermon on the Mount? Tolstoi blundered in applying the Sermon on the Mount practically without insisting on the need to be born again of the Spirit of God first; but I am taking for granted that we are born again, now try putting into practice something Jesus said, and if what He said does not prove true, say so, but try it. For instance, "Give to him that asketh thee." "Yes," you say, "and be surrounded at once with a crowd of beggars!" Is the Almighty absolutely powerless? We argue like pagans and jargonise like saints. The sentimental jargon in our prayer meetings is exactly like the New Testament language, while in practice we are pagans as if Jesus had never said a word. What man who has never allowed God to lift him up would dare to stand before his fellow creatures and lift up the standard of God? There would be deep condemnation in every message he gave.

Our Lord based a man's self-realisation on his spiritual relationship to God. Carlyle²⁰ estimated human beings by their brains and came to the conclusion that half the human race were fools. Fancy measuring a man by the amount of grey matter in his cranium! You cannot judge a man by his head, but only by his character. One of the greatest disasters in human life is our wrong standards of judgement, we will judge men by their brains, Jesus never did. Jesus judged men and women by their relationship to His Father, an implicit relationship. The brain is nothing more than a marvellous machine for expressing a man's conception of things, and when our hearts and lives are right with God, our brains are a means of expressing a particular conception which comes from our Lord. Never partake of the cynical view of life. Jesus Christ estimates that a man's real soul life is his relationship to God and nothing else, and Paul said, "Let no man by his philosophy beguile you away from this simplicity"—the simplicity of the life "hid with Christ in God."

IRRESPONSIBILITY

Every Christian worker has to decide this question, viz., Is Jesus Christ's mind infallible, or is the modern Western mind infallible? The tendency abroad to-day is to think ourselves infallible, and the Bible a jumble up of the most extraordinary stuff, good stuff, but we cannot be expected to accept all its views. That means, we believe ourselves more likely to be infallible than Jesus Christ. We would repudiate this statement if made baldly, but we all act as if it were true, we all take for granted that Jesus Christ's teachings are nonsense; we treat them with respect and reverence, but we do not do anything else with them, we do not carry them out.

For the past three hundred years men have been pointing out how similar Jesus Christ's teachings are to other good teachings. We have to remember that Christianity, if it is not a supernatural miracle, is a sham.

1. This Life's Use Wasted

For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? (Mark 8:36)

The most literal meaning of losing one's life is, of course, dying by accident; . . . if a man loses his life by accident, what is the whole world to him?

Stalker

Jesus says that life is the opportunity God gives to man to do his life work; that means that God has no respect whatever for our programmes and machinery. Our Lord insists on one thing only, God's purpose for Him; He pays not the remotest attention to civilised forces, He estimates nothing but one standard. According to our standards He was idle; for three years He walked about saying things. It is only by putting these violent contrasts before our minds that we understand how different our Lord's standpoint to life is compared with ours. We bend the whole energy of our lives to machinery, and when an accident happens and the machinery breaks up we say, What a disaster. Probably it was the emancipation of the man's life. We make nests here and there, competences here and there, but God has no respect for any of them; at any minute He may send a wind and over goes the whole thing. The one thing God is after is character.

Not only has the Creator appointed to every human being, in the constitution of his manhood, a certain stature to which he may and ought to attain; but He has appointed a corresponding task for him to fulfil, determined by the providential circumstances in which he is placed. In fact, this is his life; and not to fulfil this God-appointed purpose of his existence is to lose his life.

Stalker

It is along these fundamental lines that we understand why the Bible says, "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death"; why Solomon said, "God made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions" (RV); and why he further said, "Trust in the LORD with all thine heart, and lean not upon thine own understanding" (RV); and why our Lord said, "Let not your heart be troubled." The characteristic of a man who is not based on the issue of his life is an incessant cunning, crafty, commercial worry. Our Lord was absolutely devoid of that. What we call responsibility our Lord never had, and what He called responsibility men are without. Men do not care a bit for Jesus Christ's notion of their lives, and Jesus does not care for our notions. There is the antagonism. If we were to estimate ourselves from our Lord's standpoint, very few of us would be considered disciples.

This idea lay near to the heart of Jesus, first of all, in relation to Himself. He thoroughly realised, from first to last, that He had a work to do, so accurately arranged and fitted to the length of His life that every hour had its own part of the whole to clear off, and He was not allowed either to anticipate or lag behind.

Stalker

To-day we hold conferences and conventions and give reports and make our programmes. None of these things were in the life of Jesus, and yet every minute of His life He realised that He was fulfilling the purpose of His Father (e.g. John 9:4). How did

He do it? By maintaining the one relationship, and it is that one relationship He insists on in His disciples, and it is the one we have lost in the rubbish of modern civilisation. If we try and live the life Jesus Christ lived, modern civilisation will fling us out like waste material; we are no good, we do not add anything to the hard cash of the times we live in, and the sooner we are flung out the better.

In St. John's Gospel this aspect of our Lord's life is more elaborately worked out than anywhere else. It is indicated in the other Gospels (see Luke 2:49; 13:32; 12:50). Jesus knew He was here for His Father's purpose and He never allowed the cares of civilisation to bother Him. He did nothing to add to the wealth of the civilisation in which He lived, He earned nothing, modern civilisation would not have tolerated Him for two minutes.

It will be remembered how frequently He represented this life as a trust or stewardship (see Luke 19:13). On one occasion Jesus manifested extraordinary irritation . . . at the sight of a tree that was barren (Mark 11:12–14); but this was a manifestation of an impatience, which beset Him always, with objects that were not answering the end of their existence.

Stalker

In our Lord's mind any created thing which fails in making anything of its purpose is contemptible (see Luke 13:6-9). Jesus' attitude to Roman and Grecian civilisation was one of superb contempt. Our attitude to Greece and Rome is one of un-bonneted reverence, with not so much as the cast of an eye for Jesus Christ. Our Lord followed life from His Father's standpoint, to-day we are caught up in the shows of things. Take the Bible attitude to men on the whole, civilisations are despatched at a minute's notice, armies come together and annihilate one another and God seems to pay no attention. His attitude is one which makes us blaspheme and say that He does not care an atom for human beings. Jesus Christ says He does, He says He is a Father, and that He, Jesus, is exactly like His Father. The point is that Jesus saw life from God's standpoint, we don't. We won't accept the responsibility of life as God gives it to us, we only accept responsibility as we wish to take it, and the responsibility we wish to take is to save our own skins, make comfortable positions for ourselves and those we are related to, exert ourselves a little to keep ourselves clean and vigorous and upright; but when it comes to following out what Jesus says, His sayings are nothing but jargon. We name the Name of Christ but we are not based on His one issue of life, and Jesus says, "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world"—and he can easily do it—"and lose his own soul?"

2. This Soul's Way Missed

Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? (Mark 8:37)

The attitude of our Lord's mind is this, that the eternal condition of a man's spirit is determined by his soul life in this order of things.

The loss of oneself in missing one's opportunities of moral and spiritual development . . . may end in the loss of the "soul" in the awful sense of being cast away for ever. On this solemn subject the teaching of our Lord is extraordinarily copious; indeed, it is to Him that the popular conceptions about a Day of Judgement and the retributions of a future existence are due.

Stalker

The modern Christian laughs at the idea of a final judgement. That shows how far we can stray away if we imbibe the idea that the modern mind is infallible and not our Lord. To His mind at least the finality of moral decision is reached in this life. There is no aspect of our Lord's mind that the modern mind detests so fundamentally as this one. It does not suit us in any shape or form. The average modern mind reads such passages as Luke 16:23-24 and says our Lord was only using figurative language. If the picture is so dreadful figuratively, what must the reality be like? The things our Lord talks about are either arrant nonsense or they are a revelation of things that the common sense of man can never guess. The attitude of Jesus is outside our standards in every way. We must face the music nowadays as we have never faced it. Christianity is a complete sham or a supernatural miracle from beginning to end; immediately we admit it is a miracle we are responsible for walking in the light of what we know Jesus Christ to be.

To our Lord's mind the definiteness of the finality of punishment was as clear as could be, and nothing but lack of intelligence ever makes us say He did not put it in that way, and if those of us who take Him to be Lord and Master, take Him to mean what He says, where ought we to be in regard to these questions? The majority of us are apologetic about the teachings of Jesus, we are much too easily cowed by modern good taste. The modern mind is the infallible god to the majority of us. A man like Blatchford, who simply puts Jesus Christ on one side, is in a much more wholesome state. It is far better to do that than accept Jesus and leave out what we don't like. That is to be a traitor and a deserter.

The parables in the 25th chapter of St. Matthew are three aspects of the Divine estimate of life. Beware of being an ingenious interpreter. You will always find at the basis of our Lord's parables and illustrations a fundamental consistency to His revelation.

The parable of the ten virgins reveals that it is fatal from our Lord's standpoint to live this life without preparation for the life to come. That is not the exegesis, it is the obvious underlying principle.

The parable of the talents is our Lord's statement with regard to the danger of leaving undone the work of a lifetime.

And the description of the last judgement is the picture of genuine astonishment on the part of both the losers and the gainers of what they had never once thought about.

To be accustomed to our Lord's teaching is not to ask, "What must I do to be good?" but, "What must I do to be saved?" How long does it take us to know what the true meaning of our life is? One half second.

Oh, we're sunk enough here, God knows! But not quite so sunk that moments, Sure tho' seldom, are denied us When the spirit's true endowments Stand out plainly from its false ones, And apprise it if pursuing Or the right way or the wrong way, To its triumph or undoing. There are flashes struck from midnights, There are fire-flames noondays kindle, Whereby piled-up honours perish Whereby swollen ambitions dwindle, While just this or that poor impulse, Which for once had play unstifled, Seems the sole work of a life-time That away the rest have trifled.

Robert Browning

There never was anyone who did not have one moment when all the machinery tumbled away and he saw the meaning of his life. God pays not the remotest attention to our civilised cultures and our attitude to things, because that is not what we are here for. We are here for one thing—to glorify God. That is where we join issue with the Lord Jesus Christ to-day, and we look at every other thing as life—"What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" Our Lord came for one purpose only, to reveal God, and to get men to be spiritually real.

If we would have the blunt courage of ordinary human beings and face the teachings of Jesus, we would have to come to one of two conclusionseither the conclusion His contemporaries came to, that He was devil-possessed, or else to the conclusion the disciples came to, that He is God Incarnate. Jesus Christ will not water down His teaching to suit our weakness in any shape or form; He will not allow us to cringe in the tiniest degree. Whenever there is a trace of cringing or whining, or wanting something different from what He wants, it is the stern front of the Son of God uncloaking sin every time we look at Him; but if we come as paupers, what happens? Exactly the opposite. He will lift us up and wash us whiter than snow, and put the Holy Ghost in us and place us before the Throne of God, undeserving of censure, by the sheer omnipotence of His Atonement.

What we have to get hold of in our moral lives is that Jesus Christ demands that we live His holy life out naturally. Despair is always the gateway of faith. "If Thou canst! All things are possible to him that believeth" (RV). So many of us get depressed about ourselves, but when we get to the point where we are not only sick of ourselves, but sick to death, then we shall understand what the Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ means. It will mean that we come to Him without the slightest pretence, without any hypocrisy, and say, "Lord, if You can make anything of me, do it," and He will do it. The Lord can never make a saint out of a good man, He can only make a saint out of three classes of people—the godless man, the weak man, and the sinful man, and no one else, and the marvel of the Gospel of God's grace is that Jesus Christ can make us naturally what He wants us to be.

THE BASE IMPULSE

But, ah, through all men some base impulse runs The brute the father, and the men the sons Which if one harshly sets himself to subdue, With fiercer indolence it boils anew, He ends the worst who with best hopes began, How hard is this, how like the lot of man!

Experimentally the meaning of life is to attain the excellency of a broken heart, for that alone entails repentance and acceptance, the two great poles of Bible revelation. "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit"—why, we do not know, but God has made it so. The one thing we are after is to avoid getting brokenhearted.

The base impulse revealed itself in the time of our Lord in three great types of sin—the sin of the publicans, the sin of the Pharisees and the sin of the Sadducees.

In every country there is a lost class, a class that has given way to the sins of the flesh till its sin can no longer be concealed. What others do by stealth, they do openly. Such a class existed in our Lord's day in Palestine, and the popular names for them in that day were publicans and sinners, or publicans and harlots, or the lost sheep of the house of Israel. . . . The attitude of Jesus to this class was one of the most singular and characteristic features of His career, and, when fully understood, reveals more clearly perhaps than any other circumstance the secret of His mission.

Stalker

It is remarkable how little Jesus directed His speech against carnal and public sins, though He showed plenty of prophetic indignation against the sins of a wholly different class, He preached His grandest sermon to a bad, ignorant woman (John 4:10-14), and one of His most prominent disciples was a publican named Matthew. The one man He ever said He wanted to stay with was another publican called Zacchaeus, and some of the most fathomless things He said were in connection with a notoriously bad woman (Luke 7:36-50). It is along this line that we can understand why the Pharisees were sick to the heart and disgusted with Jesus Christ, why they called Him "a friend of publicans and sinners!" We would have done exactly the same to-day in spite of all our religious sentiments. We gloss over our Lord's actions with our civilised conceptions and destroy the meaning of His Gospel.

Our Lord's conduct was not due to any insensibility to the wickedness of open and carnal sins, nor that He was lenient to those sins: He drew near to those sins to make them for ever impossible in the lives of those guilty of them. Jesus roused the conscience of the very worst of them by presenting the highest good. We are apt to forget that our Lord's parables in Luke 15 say just what they do. Never take the fifteenth chapter of St. Luke as an exposition of the Gospel first; it is our Lord's apologia; He is explaining to the Pharisees why He is here.

1. The Pharisaic Invincibility

In interpreting our Lord's teaching, watch carefully who He is talking to; the parable of the prodigal son was a stinging lash to the Pharisees. We need to be reminded of the presentation of Jesus in the New Testament for the Being pictured to us nowadays would not perturb anybody; but He aroused His whole nation to rage. Read the records of His ministry and see how much blazing indignation there is in it. For thirty years Jesus did nothing, then for three years He stormed every time He went down to Jerusalem. Josephus says He tore through the Temple courts like a madman. We hear nothing about that Jesus Christ to-day. The meek and mild Being pictured to-day makes us lose altogether the meaning of the Cross. We have to find out why Jesus was beside Himself with rage and indignation at the Pharisees and not with those given over to carnal sins. Which state of society is going to stand a ripping and tearing Being like Jesus Christ Who drags to the ground the highest respected pillars of its civilised society, and shows that their respectability and religiosity is built on a much more abominable pride than the harlot's or the publican's? The latter are disgusting and coarse, but these men have the very pride of the devil in their hearts.

Ask yourself, then, what is it that awakens indignation in your heart? Is it the same kind of thing that awakened indignation in Jesus Christ? The thing that awakens indignation in us is the thing that upsets our present state of comfort and society. The thing that made Jesus Christ blaze was pride that defied God and prevented Him from having His right with human hearts. Sin is the independence of human nature which God created turning against God. Holiness is this same independence turning against sin. Sin is not doing wrong things, it is wrong being. Sins are wrong acts: sin is an independence that will not bow its neck to God, that defies God and all He presents, that will not go to the excellency of a broken heart. It is that class who stand for independence in art and culture; it is not for them a question of right or wrong, but of pleasing the senses. The greatest pillars of art and culture are erected on these lines and Jesus Christ pulls down the whole temple, because we cannot build temples of art on this earth at all; they will be built in heaven when the foundations are pure. The refinements of art and culture are all in opposition to the tumbling in crisis of God in the Incarnation.

2. The Pride of Integrity

The conspicuous point of view in which the Pharisees always figure in the Gospels is incapable of repentance. Self-knowledge is the first condition of repentance. Watch Jesus Christ whenever there is the tiniest sign of repentance, He is the incarnation of forgiving and forgetting, and He says that is God's nature. "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." Remember, that kind of statement hits the Pharisees to the very core of their being. Could they listen patiently to a Man like that? Jesus was killed for His words, He would not have been crucified if He had kept quiet. It was the ruthless way He went straight to the very root of Pharisaism that enraged them until they became the devil incarnate and crucified the Son of God. "Calvary" means "the place of a skull," and that is where our Lord is always crucified, in the culture and intellect of men who will not have self-knowledge given by the light of Jesus Christ.

3. Sensible Rationalism

The Sadducee is the type of person who in all ages destroys the treasure of the spirit; he is a commonsense individual.

There are some people to whom it is never safe to show any valued possession. . . . Now and then someone with the bump of destruction will push his way into our holy of holies, and deface what he considers our idols and leave us sad. . . . Unfold a scheme, a dream, a theory, a long-cherished recollection within the reach of a man who loves destruction, and he will reduce it to nothing. Even a book, that treasure which stands half-way between the tangible and the intangible, is not safe with him, he will turn its pages into ridicule, and give it back with half its charm destroyed.

Thomas Carlyle utterly destroyed the early faith of his wife and never gave her anything in its stead, and Mrs. Carlyle's letters, gifted with the most amazing literary ability and mentality, are wilted and sad, like her face, because he destroyed in the true spirit of the Sadducee her holy of holies and gave her nothing in its place. This line of thought makes us understand our Lord's attitude to the Sadducees, and why He said, "Don't cast your pearls before swine." There are some things we must never show to anyone. Like children, we all think that we ought to show our cherished possessions, we ought not; there are Sadducees everywhere. You rarely find them people of uncouth speech, but rather the opposite.

We have all met people who act like an east wind, our mental horizon gets lower and we feel unmitigatedly mean²¹ and despicable. When Jesus Christ came near men, He convicted them of sin, but He convicted them also of this, that they could be like He was if they would only come to Him.

The Sadducees were the anti-Pharisaic party, and they went as far in believing too little as the Pharisees in the direction of believing too much. They were the sceptical religious party. Their beliefs lacked warmth and conviction. The weakness of the religious sentiment in them was partly the cause and partly the effect of another characteristic, viz. worldliness. The spiritual and eternal stirred them but faintly, consequently they had a more tenacious hold on the concerns of this present life.

Stalker

Watch the difference between the faces marred by sin and those marred by coming in contact with the Sadducees, who have all their inner shrines destroyed and nothing given in their place; the latter give a look of withered, mean sanity. Sin does not produce it, it is the effect of the presence of this monster—the rational, healthy-minded Sadducee; this "monster" has been inside the Christian Church for the past twenty centuries, and is one of the problems that has to be faced. There are comparatively few Pharisees to-day, the greater number are Sadducees, who back up their little bits of common sense against all that Jesus Christ said and against everything anyone says who has had a vision of things differing from common sense.

4. Sensible Ruling

The Sadducees were the ruling class and the priestly party from the date of the Babylonian exile. Such priests have continually emerged in the affairs of God, and they are much more interested in the affairs of the visible world and but faintly tinged with the hope or spirit of the world invisible.

Stalker

This is the type that perfectly exhibits the Sadducee of our Lord's day. It is not the brutal sceptic who is the Sadducee, he does not destroy anybody's shrines, it is the religious man or woman with particularly bright conceptions of their own, but who are far more concerned with the visible success of this world than with anything else. You go to them with some insurgent doubt in your mind, and they smile at you, and say, "Oh, don't exercise your mind on those things, it is absurd." That is the Sadducee who has done more to deface in modern life what Jesus Christ began to do than all the blackguardism and drunkenness in our modern civilisation. The subtle destruction of all that stands for the invisible is what is represented by the Sadducee.

It is necessary to get the historical atmosphere and setting of our Lord's life in order to understand the historical exegesis of His teaching. Most of us only know the spiritual exegesis, we come with our spiritual illumination and take incidents out of the Bible—"I don't care about their historic exegesis, I simply take them as expressing my own spiritual condition." That is not the thing for a student to do; a student has to rightly divide the word of truth, and to find out the historic background of Jesus Christ's teaching.

In Luke 16:19–31 we get a good picture of our Lord's attitude to the Sadducees. The rich man lived to dine and to wear sumptuous clothing, neither bestowing on the poor any generosity commensurate with his means nor remembering that he was an heir of eternity, and herein is the great moral principle, viz. that of not doing being as guilty as doing, and that the Judge will accept no excuse for a life not marked by unselfishness up to the means of its opportunity.

Stalker

If we know that we have received the unmerited favour of God and we do not give unmerited favour to other people, we are damned in that degree. The best and most spiritual people to-day turn Jesus Christ's teaching out of court. They say He could never have meant what He said, and, we have to use common sense. If we apply common sense we run the risk of being Sadducees. What common sense person would carry out the Sermon on the Mount? It is the Sadducee who withers up the true spirit of devotion to God in our life by a "squirt" of common sense, because the common sense comes from a background of infidelity against God's rule. We are measured by what we do according to what we have. Some people only give to the deserving, because they imagine they deserve all they have. Our Lord says, Give, not because they deserve it, but because I tell you to.

Jesus reveals in the parable of the rich man (Luke 12:16–21) that his mind and heart have been entirely absorbed with property. About his soul and eternity he has manifested no concern, he heaped up treasure but was not rich towards God.

Stalker

Treasure in heaven is the wealth of character that has been earned by standing true to the faith of Jesus, not to the faith in Jesus. Our Lord's advice to the rich young ruler was, "Sell all that thou hast and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow Me." That is, have faith for the things Jesus Christ stood for, and anybody who is fool enough to conduct his life with Jesus Christ as absolute Master will realise what Jesus said, "Men shall... separate you from their company... and cast out your name as evil." Many of us are saved by the skin of our teeth, we are comfortably settled for heaven, that is all we care for, now we can make a pile on earth. There are plenty of people who give their testimony all right in meetings, but they are Sadducees to the backbone.

The cynicism of the official who feared not God nor regarded man, administered justice in our Lord's instance from mere annoyance. For him justice had no majesty and the misfortune of the widow had no sacredness. That which he could not be got to do, either for the fear of God or out of regard to man, he yet hastened to do merely to save himself from annoyance; and this is a thoroughly Sadducean trait.

Stalker (See Luke 18:1–8)

The spirit of "I do not wish to be annoyed" is frequently the inspiration of the administration of justice in private cases. It works into our intercession also: I want that bad person saved—because he is of so much value in the sight of God? No, because he is an annoyance to me, I cannot live my life properly with him. That spirit cannot live anywhere near Jesus Christ, because Jesus had only one point of view—His Father's will.

In any work I do for God is my motive loyalty to Jesus, or do I have to stop and wonder where He comes in? If I work for God because I know it brings me the good opinion of those whose good opinion I wish to have, I am a Sadducee. The one great thing is to maintain a spiritual life which is absolutely true to Jesus Christ and to the faith of Jesus Christ.

THE BASE IMPULSE

Lord, Lord, when we are dead, remember not All our lost sorrows and our soul's endeavour, Better to bear the burden of our lot, Firmer to stand how strong the storm so-ever, Only remember all the agony Thou bearest in the Garden silently.

And when the soul by death is freed again, Thou wilt not let the rapture of her wings Be marred by memory of this life's pain, But lift our hearts above our sufferings. Lord, let our soul's life after all these years Rise stronger, wiser, cleaner for its tears.

1. The Low Man with a Little Thing to Do

The base impulse is the way sin works into our minds and gives us a totally wrong view of God. If the base impulse does not show itself in flesh and blood sins, it will show itself in mean-mindedness. Try and imagine what Jesus meant when He said, "Preach the gospel to every creature"; He keeps "an open house" for the whole universe. It is a conception impossible of human comprehension.

(a) Moral Distinctions

We are interested in other men's lives because of a career, a profession, or an ideal we have for them, but God does not seem to care an atom for careers or professions, He comes down with ruthless disregard of all gifts and geniuses and sweeps them on one side; He is interested only in one thing, and that thing was exhibited in the life of our Lord, viz., a balanced holiness before God. Our Lord's character is the fullorbed expression of God's ideal of a man. We can never take any one virtue and say Jesus Christ was the representative of that virtue; we cannot speak of Jesus Christ being a holy Man or a great Man or a good Man; Jesus Christ cannot be summed up in terms of natural virtues, but only in terms of the supernatural. If we can describe a man by any one virtue, he ceases to be God's idea of a man, and the characteristic of the Spirit of God in us is that He brings us "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

(b) Money Matters and the Master's Mind

Money is the sign and symbol of all earthly possessions; it is earthly pleasure in a solid condition, only requiring to be melted to assume any of its more volatile and usable forms; and the pursuit of it easily becomes an absorbing passion even with those who have forgotten how to turn it into these equivalents. On this subject the language of Jesus is astonishingly severe.

Stalker

Jesus saw in money a much more formidable enemy of the Kingdom of God than we are apt to recognise it to be. Money is one of the touchstones of reality. People say, "We must lay up for a rainy day." We must, if we do not know God. How many of us are willing to go the length of Jesus Christ's teaching? Ask yourself, how does the advocacy of insurance agree with the Sermon on the Mount, and you will soon see how un-Christian we are in spite of all our Christian jargon. The more we try to reconcile modern principles of economy with the teachings of Jesus, the more we shall have to disregard Jesus. Whenever we read anything that is very plain in our Lord's words, we either say that we cannot understand it or that it has another meaning. Common sense is the best gift we have, but it must be under the dominant rule of God. We enthrone common sense, we do not enthrone God. Men must reason according to their god, and the god of to-day is common sense; that is why Jesus Christ's teaching is ruled out of court. If we try and apply the principles of the Sermon on the Mount to ordinary business life to-day, we shall see where we are. Civilisation was founded by a murderer, and the very soul and genius of civilisation is competition. What we are trying to do to-day is to Christianise civilisation, and our social problems exist because Jesus Christ's teaching is being ruled out.

2. The High Man with a Great Thing to Do

Profound as is His sense of the wickedness of the world and the lostness of the individual, the ground-tone of His preaching is not despair, but hope; and the final and enduring impression left on the mind by the prolonged and sympathetic study of all His words is, that there is an essence of divine dignity and immeasurable value, which it is the task of the Saviour and of all who are inspired with His aims to rescue from the dangers to which it is exposed and to redeem to a destiny of blessedness and immortality.

Stalker

(a) Solidarity of Sin

Solidarity means oneness of interest. We are familiar with the phrase "the solidarity of the human race," but there is also a solidarity of sin (a oneness of interest in sin), and a solidarity of salvation (a oneness of interest in salvation). I mean by sin, not sin in a particular sense, but in the great big general sense which means a violation or neglect of the laws of morality or religion, and God's Book shows that there is a oneness of interest in all sin. The Psalms show a wonderful discrimination about sin (e.g. Psalms 32, 51); they refer to the same thing the Apostle Paul refers to in Ephesians 6:12, the supernatural inspiration of sin.

We have considered the three great sins of our Lord's day—the sin of the publican, of the Pharisee, and of the Sadducee, and now we must look to the fact that our Lord considered men as evil. "If ye then, being evil . . ." (Luke 11:13). Jesus Christ is made to teach the opposite of this by modern teachers; they make out that He taught the goodness of human nature. Jesus Christ revealed that men were evil, and that He came that He might plant in them the very nature that was in Himself. He cannot, however, begin to do this until a man recognises himself as Jesus sees him,

We start with the idea that some people are good and some bad; but we are all bad, everyone of us needs saving by Jesus Christ. Imagine that being believed to-day! We can hear Christendom saying, "Nonsense, human nature is not evil." The feature of to-day is the love of man that hates God. We are alienated from the standpoint of Jesus, we have become incarnated by a leaven that never came from His point of view, and if we are going to stand for Him we shall find that what He said is true: "They will turn you out of the synagogues"—not because we denounce sin, a socialist denounces sin as much as a preacher of the Gospel. The difference between a Christian worker and one who does not know Jesus Christ is just this—that a Christian worker can never meet anyone of whom he can despair. If we do despair of anyone, it is because we have never met Jesus Christ ourselves. The social worker who does not know what Jesus Christ came to do will end in absolute despair before long, because the social worker more than anyone else begins to see the enormous havoc that sin has made of human nature, and if he does not know the Saviour from sin, all his efforts will meet with as much success as attempting to empty the Atlantic Ocean with a thimble.

(b) Saviour from Sin

The great challenge in personal work is—What relationship have I to Jesus Christ? It is not simply that we realise the power of Jesus to save, but that we recognise the possibilities for evil in our own heart, discerned in us by the Holy Spirit, and know that Jesus can save unto the uttermost. Let a man be a murderer, or an evildoer, or any of the things Jesus said men could be, it can never shake our confidence if we have once been face to face with Jesus Christ for ourselves. It is impossible to discourage us because we start from a knowledge of Who Jesus Christ is in our own life. When we see evil and wrong exhibited in other lives, instead of awakening a sickening despair, it awakens a joyful confidence—I know a Saviour who can save even that one. One worker like that is of priceless worth, because through that one life the Son of God is being manifested.

It is not only necessary to have an experience of God's grace, we must have a body of beliefs alive with the Spirit of Jesus, then when we have learned to see men as He sees them, there is no form of disease or anguish or devilishness that can belch up in human life that can disturb our confidence in Him; if it does disturb us, it is because we don't know Him.

The sense of sin is in inverse ratio to its presence, that is, the higher up and the deeper down we are saved, the more pangingly terrible is our conviction of sin. The holiest person is not the one who is not conscious of sin, but the one who is most conscious of what sin is. The one who talked most about sin was our Lord Jesus Christ. We are apt to run off with the idea that a man in order to be saved from sin must have lived a vile life himself; but the One who has an understanding of the awful horror of sin is the spotlessly holy Christ, Who "knew no sin." The lower down we get into the experience of sin, the less conviction of sin we have. When we are regenerated and lifted into the light, we begin to know what sin means. There is no mention of sin in the Apostle Paul's apprehension by Christ, yet no one wrote more about sin than the Apostle Paul years after in his Epistles, because by the marvellous working of God's grace and his own repentance, he was lifted into the heavenly places where he saw what sin really was. The danger with those of us who have experienced God's perfect salvation is that we talk blatant jargon about an experience instead of banking on the tremendous revelation of God the Holy Ghost. The purer we are through God's sovereign grace, the more terribly poignant is our sense of sin. It is perilous to say, "I have nothing to do with sin now"; you are the only kind of person who can know what sin is. Men living in sin don't know anything about it. Sin destroys the capacity of knowing what sin is. It is when we have been delivered from sin that we begin to realise by the pure light of the Holy Ghost what sin is. We shall find over and over again that God will send us shuddering to our knees every time we realise what sin is, and instead of it increasing hardness in us towards the men and women who are living in sin, the Spirit of God will use it as a means of bringing us to the dust before Him in vicarious intercession that God will save them as He has saved us. Beware of the metallic, hard, un-Christlike stamp of some testimonies to sanctification, they are not stamped by the Holy Ghost. The testimony to sanctification that is of God is dipped and saturated in the blood of the Son of God, and that blood sprang from the broken heart of God on account of sin. When once the soul realises what sanctification is, it is a joy unspeakable, but it is a joy in which there is the tremendous undercurrent of a chastening humiliation. Beware of any experience that is not built absolutely on the atoning merit of Jesus Christ; and remember, the measure of your freedom from sin is the measure of your sense of what sin is.

FOREWORD

Writing in the War years²⁴ (1917) Oswald Chambers said, "Through this war there will emerge new restatements of God and of Christ. To me there emerge two or three grand facts: First, Fathomless Redemption as the basis of human life; absolute God-like Forgiveness of Sin; with a liberty to reject that basis on the part of man. Second, That God's Name is Jesus Christ; not that He is a revelation from God, but that He is God. That means that God became the weakest thing in His creation—a Babe. Third, That He can introduce into any man the heredity of the Son of God by New Birth, in which His Nature becomes operative in human nature, along with a series of educational developments." These articles on Redemption contribute to that very end. "Everything that has been touched by sin and the devil has been redeemed; we are to live in the world immovably banked on that faith." What sure ground for our feet we have in that glorious truth as we stand for Jesus Christ, witnesses unto Him. But the in-working of Redemption in personal life is grandly brought out in these living messages. I quote another sentence, "Immediately I accept the Cross of Christ as the revelation of Redemption I am not, I must not be, the same man; I must be another man, and I must take up my cross for my Lord." So we see Redemption working inwardly, with our reactions to it, and with the resultant issues regarding sin and righteousness and judgement. The book is more than worth its weight in gold.

REDEMPTION

1. Redemption in Realised Revelation (John 19:30)

We can never expound the Redemption, but we must have strong unshaken faith in it so that we are not swept off our feet by actual things. That the devil and man are allowed to do as they like is a mere episode in the providence of God. Everything that has been touched by sin and the devil has been redeemed; we are to live in the world immovably banked in that faith. Unless we have faith in the Redemption, all our activities are fussy impertinences which tell God He is doing nothing. We destroy our souls serving Jesus Christ, instead of abiding in Him. Jesus Christ is not working out the Redemption, it is complete; we are working it out, and beginning to realise it by obedience. Our practical life is to be moulded by our belief in the Redemption, and our declared message will be in accordance with our belief. If we say we believe "It is finished" we must not blaspheme God by unbelief in any domain of our practical life.

We must make a distinction in our minds between the revelation of Redemption and conscious participation in it. When we are born again we consciously enter into participation of the Redemption. We do not help God to redeem the world: we realise that God has redeemed it. Redemption is not dependent on our experience of it. The human race is redeemed; we have to be so faithful to God that through us may come the awakening of those who have not yet realised that they are redeemed.

2. Revelation and Redemption in Relation (2 Corinthians 5:18–21)

A sinner knows what the Redemption has wrought in him, but it is only long afterwards that he begins to grasp the revelation of how that Redemption was made particularly and in detail possible in him. It is one thing to be saved by God's grace, but another thing to have a clear revelation as to how God did it. Our Lord Jesus Christ is the Revelation complete; the Bible is the revelation come down to the shores of our life in words. The grace of God can never alter; Redemption can never alter; and the evidence that we are experiencing the grace of God in Redemption is that it is manifestly working out in us in actual ways. When the words of the Bible come home to us by the Holy

^{25.} David Lambert (1871–61): Methodist minister and friend of Oswald Chambers. Assisted Mrs. Chambers with OC publications from 1917–61.

Spirit, the supernatural essence of the Redemption is in those words and they bring forth new life in us. If you have been saved from sin, say so; if you have been sanctified by God's grace, say so. Don't substitute some other refinement in its place. By using other words you are not testifying to God, but compromising with the atmosphere of those to whom you are talking.

The religion of Jesus Christ is not a religion of ethical truth, but of Redemption. The teachings of Iesus have not made so much difference to the world as the teachings of Socrates and Plato, but to those who are born from above (RV mg) they make all the difference. The thing that tells is not that the actual life is lived rightly, but that the motive underneath is right. The characteristic of the Redemption when it works out subjectively in accordance with Scripture is that act of devotion of Mary of Bethany. It was not useful, nor was it her duty; it was an extravagant waste, but the motive of it was the spontaneous originality which sprang from a personal passionate devotion to Jesus Christ. When a man has been profoundly moved in his spirit by the experience of Redemption, then out of him flow rivers of living water. Stop the concern of whether you are of any use in the world. "He that believeth on Me," said Jesus, out of him "shall flow rivers of living water"; whether we see it or not is a matter of indifference. Heed the Source.

3. Redemption in Objective Form (Luke 24:44–47)

The disciples after the Resurrection received into themselves an influx from the risen Christ—"their eyes were opened, and they knew Him" (Luke 24:31); and their minds were opened, "that they might understand the Scriptures" (Luke 24:45 RV). The characteristic of being born again is that we know Who Jesus is. The secret of the Christian is that he knows the absolute Deity of the Lord Jesus Christ. When we are saved by God's grace our minds are opened by the incoming of the Holy Spirit and we understand the Scriptures. The test of regeneration is that the Bible instantly becomes the Book of books to us.

The objective form of the Redemption comes to us through the Person of the Lord Jesus Christ, and works itself out in saving judgements. The bedrock of Christianity is repentance. There is a certain type of badness that exhausts itself, and the nature is righted by ordinary hereditary reactions, and that is frequently mistaken for the regenerating work of God. If it is the work of the Spirit of God, repentance is its basis. We can only test the experimental working of Redemption by the fruits the New Testament has taught us to expect. "Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of [your] repentance" (Luke 3:8).

REDEMPTION

The Christian's Greatest Trust

1. The Cross and the Father's Heart (John 12:28; Galatians 6:14)

We can understand the attributes of God in other ways, but we can only understand the Father's heart in the Cross of Christ. The Cross of Christ is not the cross of a martyr, it has become the symbol of the martyr; it is the revelation of Redemption. The Cross is the crystallised point in history where Eternity merges with Time. The cry on the cross, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" is not the desolation of an isolated individual: it is the revelation of the heart of God face to face with the sin of man, and going deeper down than man's sin can ever go in inconceivable heartbreak in order that every sin-stained, hell-deserving sinner might be absolutely redeemed. If the Redemption of Christ cannot go deeper down than hell, it is not redemption at all.

It is always the tragic note that is struck when once the Spirit of God gets hold of a man. The reason we are so shallow and flippant in our presentation of the Cross is that we have never seen ourselves for one second in the light of God. When we do see ourselves in the light of God, there is only one of two refuges—suicide or the Cross of Christ. The great condemnation of much of our modern preaching is that it conveys no sense of the desperate tragedy of conviction of sin. When once the real touch of conviction of sin comes, it is hell on earth—there is no other word for it. One second of realising ourselves in the light of God means unspeakable agony and distress; but the marvel is that when the conviction does come, there is God in the very centre of the whole thing to save us from it. That is the meaning of the Cross of Christ as experimentally applied to us. We have to face ourselves with the revelation of the Redemption, mirrored and concentrated in the Cross of Jesus Christ as it is presented in the New Testament, before we get the shallow, pious nonsense shaken out of our religious beliefs. To be saved by God's grace is not a beautifully pathetic thing; it is a desperately tragic thing.

2. The Cross and the Saviour's Mind (Matthew 16:24; Galatians 2:20)

The evidence that I have accepted the Cross of Christ as the revelation of Redemption is that the regenerating life of God is manifested in my mortal flesh. Immediately I accept the Cross of Christ as the revelation of Redemption I am not, I must not be, the same man, I must be another man, and I must take up my cross from my Lord. The cross is the gift of Jesus to His disciples and it can only bear one aspect: "I am not my own." The whole attitude of the life is that I have given up my right to myself. I live like a crucified man. Unless that crisis is reached it is perilously possible for my religious life to end as a sentimental fiasco. "I don't mind being saved from hell and receiving the Holy Spirit, but it is too much to expect me to give up my right to myself to Jesus Christ, to give up my manhood, my womanhood, all my ambitions." Jesus said, If any man will be My disciple, those are the conditions. It is that kind of thing that offended the historic disciples, and it will offend you and me. It is a slander to the Cross of Christ to say we believe in Jesus and please ourselves all the time, choosing our own way.

Our salvation is one of unspeakable freedom for heart and mind and body, but do we sufficiently brood on what it cost God to make it ours? At certain stages of Christian experience a saint has no courtesy towards God, no sense of gratitude; he is thankful for being delivered from sin, but the thought of living for Jesus, of being recklessly abandoned to Him, has not begun to dawn on him yet. When we come to the Cross we do not go through it and out the other side; we abide in the life to which the Cross is the gateway, and the characteristic of the life is that of deep profound sacrifice to God. Social service that is not based on the Cross of Christ is the cultured blasphemy of civilised life against God, because it denies that God has done anything, and puts human effort as the only way whereby the world will be redeemed.

RELATIVE REDEMPTIVE REACTIONS

An abiding snare in dealing with Christian doctrine arises from the tendency to bend the attention exclusively either to the objective or the subjective side. If we deal only with the objective, it produces the type of practical life that contradicts the creed believed in; and to deal only with the subjective side produces the moody, sickly introspective type of life, its eyes fixed on its own whiteness. The wholesome antidote to either tendency is the New Testament, which embraces both the objective and the subjective through the miracle of regeneration. Belief in the New Testament is always practical and positive, that is, it instantly manifests itself. I do not "gull" myself into believing something has happened, it is a fact; I am not only right with God but am actually proving that I am in my life. If my faith in the Redemptive work of Christ does not react in a practical life which manifests it, the reason is a wrong temper of mind in me.

How ought life from the ascended Lord to react in me? By reaction is meant not a reaction of nerves but the essential nature of the life. The danger of dealing only with the objective side is that it blinds our minds to the fact that we have to receive something which must have a reaction, "to open their eyes, . . . that they may receive" (Acts 26:18). That means the will of the individual is willing to receive. Not only has Jesus Christ been seen and believed in, but accepted, and the reaction in the life is as radical as the stupendous miracle that made it possible.

1. Sympathies—Humanitarian or Evangelical (Galatians 3:6)

If I feel sympathy with anyone because he cannot get through to God, I am slandering God; my fundamental view is not the evangelical one, but a point of view based on mere human sympathy. Trace where your sympathies arise, and be sympathetic with God, never with the soul who finds it difficult to get through to God. God is never to blame. "Remember the people." Don't! Remember the Christ Who saves you. We are not here to woo and win men to God; we are here to present the Gospel which in individual cases will mean condemnation or salvation. "Where you get the most faithful preaching, you get the most hardened sinners" (Thos. Guthrie). ²⁶ It is perilous to listen to the truth of God unless I open my will to it. We have not to rouse people's sympathies and humanitarian conceptions—"How beautiful and dignified man is!" We have rigorously to push an issue of will, and when the issue is put you find the obstruction; men resent it, and that is the barrier to God. Immediately that barrier is down God comes in like a torrent, there is nothing to keep Him back; the one thing that keeps Him back is anarchy and rebellion, the essential nature of Satan—I won't give up my right to myself; I won't yield, and God is powerless. Immediately a man removes the barriers it is as if God romped into his soul with all His almightiness, it is a flood of blessing quite overwhelming.

2. Strenuousness—Holy or Evangelistic (2 Corinthians 6:1–2)

Jesus Christ is not an individual Who died twenty centuries ago; He is God and mankind centred in His Cross. The Cross is the revelation of the deepest depth in Almighty God. What should be the reaction of that in my life? Holiness, rugged, fierce holiness in every detail of the life. That is the meaning of New Testament repentance. The only truly repentant man is the holy man, he has been made holy through the incoming of God by his willing reception of Him. Evangelistic effort must never forget the source from which it springs; it often does, and all that is presented is the objective side which has no practical outcome in the life.

3. Sacrifices—Homely or Extraordinary (Luke 14:26–27, 33)

These are extraordinary sacrifices, they cut clean across everything we believe naturally. We must have the marks in our hands and feet that are exactly like Our Lord. There must be the crucified love of grasp for myself; the crucified love of wandering in my own ways; the crucified love of the world; the wounded pride of intellect. There is no bigger word and no word made more shallow than "surrender." To say "I surrender all" may be blethering sentiment, or it may be the deep passionate utterance of the life.

4. Strongholds—Honest or Exceptional (Acts 20:24)

Actions that spring from obedience to Jesus Christ can never be explained on any other ground. This is where the "shame" of testifying comes in. Testimony is not a hard protestation that I have done something better than others, nor is it first a means of helping others; it means that I have ventured out on God and have no one to rely upon but Him. I have staked my all in obedience to Jesus Christ in this matter, and it is sink or swim. Try and explain why you did a certain thing, if it sprang from obedience to Christ, and you find you cannot. It is not the logical working out of a principle, and that is why the other relationships of life do not see it. "If any man cometh unto Me, and hateth not his own father, and mother, . . . he cannot be My disciple" (RV). Remember, the crisis may never come to you, and instead of the claims of father or mother clashing with the commands of Jesus Christ, you may be clashing with commands of His coming to you through them. But if the crisis does arise, it must be prompt obedience to Jesus Christ at every cost.

"THE LORD GOD OMNIPOTENT REIGNETH"

To believe that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth and redeemeth is the end of all possible panic, moral, intellectual or spiritual. We say we believe God, and give the lie to it with every breath we draw. For a man to believe in the Redemption means that no crime nor terror nor anguish can discourage him, no matter where he is placed. God is not saving the world; it is done, our business is to get men and women to realise it, and we cannot do it unless we realise it ourselves.

1. Redemptive Sanctuary (Jeremiah 17:12)

What needs doing is all less than has been done. What has to be done for the world is already done in God.

Dr. Forsyth²⁷

We can do nothing for the redemption of the world; we have to do in the world that which proves we believe it is redeemed; all our activities are based on that unshakeable knowledge, therefore we are never distressed out of that sanctuary. God makes us go a solitary way until we get there, but through one life that is there, comes all the force of the Redemption. The thing that makes our hearts fall is the profound disbelief on the part of Christian workers that God has done anything, and the wearing out of life to do what is already done. All the fuss and energy and work that goes on if we are not believing in Jesus Christ and His Redemption, has not a touch of the almighty power of God about it; it is a panic of unbelief veneered over with Christian phrases. As long as we pretend to be believers in Jesus Christ and are not, we produce humbugs, and people say, "Do you call that Christianity?" "There is nothing in it!"; or what is worse, we produce frauds, and the worst type of fraud is the religious fraud. The greatest type of reality is the Christian believer—one who has been totally readjusted on the basis of his belief. When you come across a believer in Jesus, his very presence alters your outlook. It is not that you have come to someone with amazing intelligence, but that you have come into a sanctuary which is based on a real knowledge of the Redemption. When once a man really believes that the world is redeemed, his belief will manifest itself in every detail, and that is what constitutes the heroism of a believer in Jesus Christ. Our scepticism arises from the fact that we have no experimental knowledge of Redemption.

2. Redemptive Secret (Philippians 3:13–14)

Our Christian destiny is to fulfil "the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." When a soul comes face to face with God, the eternal Redemption of the Lord Jesus is concentrated in that little microcosm of an individual life, and through the pinhole of that one life other people can see the whole landscape of God's purpose. The point is, am I realising the Redemption in my home circle, amongst my friends, in the pecuniary circumstances I am in? It is not heroism that makes us sacrifice ourselves, but cowardice; we can't stand being considered cads for not sacrificing ourselves. That is the basis of much of the sacrifice made in the world. The believer is one who bases all on Jesus Christ's sacrifice, and is so identified with Him that he is made broken bread and poured-out wine in the hands of his Lord. "Witnesses unto Me," a satisfaction to Jesus Christ wherever we are placed. When once we get to the right centre of energy, the omnipotence of God is at work all the time.

3. Redemptive Satisfaction (John 3:16)

We reason in this way: "God is so loving that I know He will forgive me." God is so holy that it is much more likely He will say I must be damned. Unless God can alter me He dare not forgive me; if He did I should have a keener sense of justice and right than He has. The realisation of the nature of God's love produces in me the convulsions of repentance, and repentance fully worked out means holiness, a radical adjustment of the life. Do I know God has saved me? Have I the satisfaction of that salvation? I can easily know whether the Redemption has been made efficacious in me by the Holy Spirit by the fact that I am at one with God. The Redemption is worked out in an at-one-ment with God, in every calculation He is the One Who dominates everything.

The assurance of faith is a certainty more certain than certainty, and it always comes with an experimental knowledge of the Redemption. Belief in the Redemption is difficult because it needs surrender first. I never can believe until I have surrendered myself to God. "If any man willeth to do His will" (RV)—what is His will? "That ye believe on Him Whom He hath sent."

THE RULING ISSUES OF REDEMPTION

And He, when He is come, will convict the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgement. (RV)

The word "convict" means moral conviction, not logical conviction. When the Holy Spirit is come, He will convict a man with a power of moral conviction beyond the possibility of getting away from it. Whenever the Holy Spirit gets us into a corner, He never convinces our intellect; He is busy with the will which expresses itself in our intellect. It is never safe to do much introspection, but it is ruinous to do none. Introspection can never satisfy us, yet introspection is not wrong, it is right, because it is the only way we discover that we need God. It is the introspective power in us that is made alert by conviction of sin.

1. The Issue Regarding Sin

Of sin, because they believe not on Me.

Note what causes you the deepest concern before God. Does social evil produce a deeper concern than the fact that people do not believe on Jesus Christ? It was not social evil that brought Jesus Christ down from heaven, it was the great primal sin of independence of God that brought God's Son to Calvary. Sin is not measured by a law or by a social standard, but by a Person. The Holy Spirit is unmistakable in His working: "and He, when He is come, will convict the world in respect of sin, . . . because they believe not on Me" (RV). That is the very essence of sin. The Holy Spirit brings moral conviction on that line, and on no other. A man does not need the Holy Spirit to tell him that external sins are wrong, ordinary culture and education will do that; but it does take the Holy Spirit to convict us of sin as Our Lord defined it-"because they believe not on Me." Sin is not measured by a standard of moral rectitude and uprightness, but by my relationship to Jesus Christ. The point is, am I morally convinced that the only sin there is in the sight of the Holy Ghost, is disbelief in Jesus?

2. The Issue Regarding Righteousness Of righteousness, because I go to the Father. (RV)

If I am not morally convinced with regard to sin, I won't bother my head about Jesus Christ going to the Father and having all power in heaven and on earth; but once I am convicted of sin and have accepted deliverance from unbelief in Jesus, I know beyond the shadow of a doubt that Jesus Christ is the Righteous One. The wisdom of God is shown in that Jesus Christ was made unto us righteousness (1 Corinthians 1:30). That means that God can justly justify the unjust and remain righteous. In the Cross of Calvary Our Lord is revealed as the Just One making men just before God. God never justifies men outside Christ. No man can stand for one second on any right or justice of his own; but as he abides in Christ, Jesus Christ is made righteousness unto him (see Philippians 3:8–9). Nowadays the tendency is to switch away from "the righteousness which is of God by faith," and to put the emphasis on doing things. You cannot do anything at all that does not become, in the rugged language of Isaiah, "as filthy rags," if it is divorced from living faith in Jesus Christ. If we have the tiniest hankering after believing we can be justified by what we have done, we are on the wrong side of the Cross. To experience the loss of my own goodness is the only way to enter into communion with God in Christ (2 Corinthians 5:21).

3. The Issue Regarding Judgement

Of judgement, because the prince of this world is judged.

Have I come to judgement at the foot of the Cross? Do I accept God's verdict on sin given there? What one longs to see more often is a soul shattered under the convicting blast of the Holy Ghost. It means that Jesus Christ has seen of the travail of His soul in that one, and it is one of the rarest sights. Most of us are smugly satisfied with praising Jesus Christ without ever having realised what the Cross means. We say, "O Lord, I want to be sanctified," and at any moment in answer to that prayer the Holy Ghost may rip and tear your conscience and stagger you dumb by conviction of sin, and the question is, will you accept God's verdict on sin on the Cross of Christ, or will you whine and compromise? The only test of spirituality is holiness, practical, living holiness, and that holiness is impossible unless the Holy Ghost has brought you to your "last day," and you can look back and say "That was the day when I died right out to my right to myself, crucified with Christ." That is the day from which many a rich young ruler and many a Mary of Bethany goes away sorrowful, with countenance fallen, for they have great possessions of self-respect, great possessions in the way of ideas as to how they want to serve God. The "last day" is when a soul, gripped by the power and light of the Holy Ghost, sees the meaning of the Cross of Christ, and goes to death like a sentenced criminal. To every soul who has gone through that experience, there is no more condemnation (Romans 8:1).

LECTURE: DECEMBER 18, 1914

THE CHARACTER OF REDEEMED EXPERIENCE

By Redeemed Experience is meant eternal life manifested in the fleeting moments of temporal life. What is not meant is the consciousness of feeling good, or the consciousness of the presence of God. If we mistake these feelings for eternal life, we shall be disillusioned sooner or later. When we are being initiated into a new experience we are conscious of it, but any sane person is much too wise to mistake consciousness of life for life itself. It is only the initial stages of new experiences which produce consciousness of themselves, and if we hug the consciousness of God's blessings and of His presence we become spiritual sentimentalists. God began to introduce us to life, and we would not go through with it.

1. The Unique Character of This Life (John 6:47)

What is eternal life? "And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God" (John 17:3). "Eternal" has reference to the quality of the life. Our Lord says very distinctly what eternal life is not—e.g. Matthew 4:4; Luke 12:15. Whenever Our Lord speaks of "life" He means eternal life, and He says, "Ye have not [this] life in yourselves" (John 6:53 RV). Men have natural life and intellectual life apart from Jesus Christ.

The life which Jesus Christ exhibited was eternal life, and He says—anyone who believes in Me, i.e. commits himself to Me, has that life. To commit myself to Jesus means there is nothing that is not committed. Belief is a twofold transaction—a deliberate destroying of all roads back again, and a complete surrender to Our Lord Himself. God comes in with a rush immediately a soul surrenders to the Lord Jesus Christ. The only barrier to God's love is unbelief working sentimentally, i.e. brooding around the shores of an experience which produces consciousness of itself; the life is not there.

2. The Upward Character of the Life (John 11:41-42)

The upward look towards God of eternal life is an indication of the inherent nature of the life; that is, it is not attained by effort. Natural characteristics, natural virtues and natural attainments have nothing to do with the life itself. A blackguard and an upright man both commit themselves to Jesus Christ and receive eternal life; will the latter have freer access to God? No! Eternal life works the same in both. There is no respect of persons with God. The manifestation of eternal life is, however, a different matter.

3. The Outward Character of the Life (John 3:16)

This verse gives the outlook man-ward of eternal life as exhibited in Our Lord. The only way to react rightly on men around is to let eternal life react through you, and if you want to know how eternal life will react you will see it in Jesus Christ. Our Lord was in no wise a hard worker; He was an intense reality. Hard workers are like midges and mosquitoes; the reality is like the mountain and the lake. Our Lord's life was one of amazing leisure, and the presentation of His life as one of rush is incorrect. The three years of public life are a manifestation of the intense reality of life (Acts 10:38). When the passion for souls obscures the passion for Jesus Christ you have the devil on your track as an angel of light. Our Lord was never in a hurry, never in a panic. "There are no dates in His fine leisure." Our Lord's life is the exhibition of eternal life in time. Eternal life in the Christian is based on redemptive certainty; he is not working to redeem men; he is a fellow worker with God among men because they are redeemed.

4. The Downward Character of This Life (2 Corinthians 5:21)

The downward look of eternal life is manifested by Our Lord—a fearless, clear-eyed, understanding look at sin, at death, and at the devil—that is the unmistakable characteristic of the downward look of Our Lord. The devil's counterfeit is no sin, no hell and no judgement.

THE MAGNITUDE OF REDEMPTION

1 Thessalonians 5:23

We cannot be deeply moved by "nothing"; neither can we deeply move ourselves by anything we say, unless something profound has first of all entered into us. For example, it takes a great deal of realising what the Bible reveals about Redemption to enable us to walk out into our daily lives with that astonishing strength and peace that garrisons us within and without.

1. The Working of Redemptive Security

And the God of peace Himself sanctify you wholly . . . (1 Thessalonians 5:23 RV)

The working of Redemptive security in our actual practical life is the realisation that "God is my Father, I shall never think of anything He will forget—why should I worry?" When you can say that from the ground of being profoundly moved, you are astonished at the amazing security. "My peace I give unto you" (John 14:27). The peace of Christ is synonymous with His very nature, and the "type" working of that peace was exhibited in Our Lord's earthly life. "The peace of God, which passeth all understanding . . ." (Philippians 4:7). The Redemption at work in my actual life means the nature of God garrisoning me round; it is the God of peace Who sanctifies wholly; the security is almighty. The gift of the peace of Christ on the inside; the garrison of God on the outside, then I have to see that I allow the peace of God to regulate all that I do, that is where my responsibility comes in—"and let the peace of Christ [RV] rule," i.e. arbitrate, "in your hearts," and life will be full of praise all the time.

2. The Working of Redemptive Strength and may your spirit and soul and body . . . (RV)

The degree in which God will work depends on me, not on God; if I refuse in any part of my being to let God work, I not only limit Him, but I begin to criticise the Redemption. The working of Redemptive strength means that "all spiritual blessings in heavenly places" are mine when I am "at home" with God. Take up your dwelling in that word "all," then do some hunting through the Bible for spiritual blessings and say, "That is mine." If you remain on the outside and say, "Lord, bless me with this spiritual blessing," He cannot do it; the only result is to make you feel miserable; but get inside Christ, and all spiritual blessings in heavenly places are yours. It is not a question of experiencing them, you don't experience what is your life; you experience gifts given to your life. Experiences are always on the threshold of the life, they are never the real centre. Life is fullness of maturity, and there is no seeking for experiences. Beware of not seeing that experiences are nothing other than gateways home. "Saved and sanctified"-Paul says, "Go on! Get into the heavenly places in Christ Jesus." You will be so hidden with Christ that you never think of anything but Him, there will be none of the things that keep the life impoverished.

3. The Working of Redemptive Safety be preserved entire, without blame . . . (RV)

"He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." Dwelling under that shadow I am in the heart of Almighty God; where I dwell He manifests Himself all the time. It is an essentially natural life. When I am dwelling under the shadow of the Almighty, my life is the will of God; it is only through disobedience that I begin to ask what is the will of God. Any interest that would induce me away from the shadow of the Almighty is to be treated as a snare. Resolutely treat no one seriously but God. "The LORD is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my strong rock . . . my shield, and the horn of my salvation, my high tower" (Psalm 18:2 RV). Note the "my's" here, and laugh at everything in the nature of misgiving for ever after!

4. The Working of Redemptive Sight

... be preserved entire, without blame at the coming [presence, mg] of our Lord Jesus Christ. (RV)

The working of Redemptive sight gives me the habit of an elevated mood whereby God gives the vision of Himself. "Blessed are the pure in heart," literally, "Blessed are the God in heart," i.e. in whom the nature of God is. God's nature in us reveals His features in our life. "Man shall not see Me and live" (RV). When I see God I have to die; when I am in God I have died, and the nature of God works through me transparently all the time. "We know that, if He shall be manifested, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him even as He is" (RV).

The only way to maintain perception is to keep in contact with God's purpose as well as with His Person. I have to place myself in relation to facts—facts in nature and facts in grace. If I refuse to do this my perception will be wrong, no matter how right my disposition may be; but the two together will produce a life perfectly in accordance with the life of the Son of God when He walked this earth.

"God is able to make all grace abound toward you." Have you been saying, "I cannot expect God to do that for me"? Why cannot you? Is God Almighty impoverished by your circumstances? Is His hand shortened that it cannot save? Are your particular circumstances so peculiar, so remote from the circumstances of every son and daughter of Adam, that the Atonement and the grace of God are not sufficient for you? Immediately we ask ourselves these things, we get shaken out of our sulks into a simple trust in God. When we have the simple, childlike trust in God that Jesus exhibited, the overflowing grace of God will have no limits, and we must set no limits to it.

ACTUALLY BORN INTO REDEMPTION

John 3:4

The abiding reality is God, and He makes known His order in the fleeting moments. Redemption partakes of God's character, therefore it is not fleeting; but we have the power and the privilege of exhibiting the Redemption in the fleeting moments of our actual life. This is the real meaning of being born from above (RV mg). Civilisation is based on principles which imply that the passing moment is permanent. The only permanent thing is God, and if I put anything else as permanent, I become atheistic. I must build only on God (John 14:6). "Because God spoke to me once, I stick to that." You are a fool if you do. Stick to the God Who spoke to you. He is speaking the word all the time; it is only as we are trained by obedience that we can understand Him (see John 6:63).

1. The Standard of Actual Redemption

The standard of actual redemption simply means the manifestation of the life of God in the actual fleeting moments of my life. The eternal reality of God's Redemption is there all the time, being born from above (RV mg) means that I am partaking in it. Nicodemus' question, "How can a man be born when he is old?" (John 3:4), is an exhibition of cultured stupidity, which is denser than ignorant stupidity because it won't be enlightened. Immediately I ask "how can?" I evade the "you must." God never debates or argues.

"We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not" (1 John 5:18). The life of God in me does not sin (see 1 John 3:9). If I am based on the Redemption, this standard will manifest itself in the actual moments of my life, viz., I must not sin. It is not something I set myself to do, but something I know I never can do, therefore I let God do it. "I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing" (Romans 7:18). Born from above (RV mg), I realise that the life of God has entered into me. God gives me "Himself": "The gift of God is eternal life" (Romans 6:23), and "eternal life" consciously in me is to know God (John 17:3). The life of God cannot commit sin, and if I will obey the life of God, which has come into me by regeneration, it will manifest itself in my mortal flesh. It is only when I disobey the life of God that I commit sin; then I must get back again into the light by confession (1 John 1:9). If I walk in the light as God is in the light, sin is not.

Actual Redemption is as positive as real Redemption. We never enter into the Kingdom of God by having our head questions answered, but only by commitment.

2. Statement of Actual Recognition

Christ has to unsettle the certainty of a man's pagan mind; the wind of the Spirit touches him across the fleeting moments of his life, and he gets disturbed. The need, then, is for someone sure of Christ, and sure of His Word, to patiently watch for that soul, and that kind of watching is the meaning of intercession. The Holy Spirit imparts the energy of the Redemption into human hearts by means of actual words, and it is to this that Peter refers in his Epistle: "Having been begotten again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, through the word of God . . ." (1 Peter 1:23 RV). Redemption comes to the shores of our human lives in actual words. "You must get a word from God." "Be sure you get the witness that this is so." The assurance is more positive than intellectual knowledge. The Spirit of God always works with the word of God.

3. Substance of Active Realisation

When a man is actually born from above (RV mg), he knows that the Redemption is as eternal as Almighty God. The disturbance by the Spirit of God opens a man's eyes and he turns from darkness to light, from the authority of Satan unto God; then he is ready to receive the Holy Spirit Who conveys to Him "forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified ... " (Acts 26:18). Receiving necessitates conscious poverty (cf. Matthew 20:22; Mark 14:50; John 20:22). Receiving in its elementary and in its complete stages is described in John 1:12-13, "But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name, ..." because to receive Jesus even intellectually, means that I commit myself. If I really receive Jesus Christ with my mind, I am given the right to become a son of God. The Holy Spirit makes that right an actual possession, and I receive sonship. To receive power to become a son of God means that I realise I am not a son; if I think I am a son already, I will patronise God. The At-one-ment means being made actually one with God through the Redemption of our Lord. This is to receive a Kingdom which cannot be shaken.

DIMENSIONS OF EFFECTIVE REDEMPTION

John 3:16; Ephesians 3:18-19

By the "dimensions of effective Redemption," understand the Redemption of God expressing itself in individual experience; but beware of limiting the Redemption to our individual experience of it.

1. Breadth

For God so loved the world . . .

The world embraces things material and things evil, things suffering and sinning. Think how narrow and bigoted the love of God is made when it is tied up in less than His own words; we make God out to be exactly the opposite of all Jesus Christ said He was. The breadth of the love of God, the agony of that love, is expressed in one word, "so." If you can estimate the "so," you have fathomed the nature of God. Our love is defective because we will not get down low enough. We must get down lower than hell if we would touch the love of God; we will persist in living in the sixteenth storey when the love of God is at the basement. We speculate on God's love, and discourse on the magnificence of the Redemption, while all the time it has never been made effective in us.

The love of God is broader Than the measures of man's mind.

—it embraces the whole world. Compare John 3:16 with Our Lord's prayer in John 17. Our Lord did not pray that the world might be saved, but "that the world may know that Thou hast . . . loved them." Our Lord prays for those in whom His Redemption is at work that they may live in effective contact with God—"that they may be one, even as We are one."

The same thing with regard to sin and misery. In the Bible you never find the note of the pessimist. In the midst of the most crushing conditions there is always an extraordinary hopefulness and profound joy, because God is at the heart. The effective working of Redemption in our experience makes us leap for joy in the midst of things in which other people see nothing but disastrous calamity. When the Redemption is effectually at work it always rises to its source, viz., God.

2. Length that He gave His only begotten Son . . .

When the supreme love of God in the giving of Himself has got hold of me, I love myself in the power of His love; that means a son of God being presented to God as a result of His effectual Redemption "bringing many sons unto glory . . ." (Hebrews 2:10). That is a gratification to God because it is the returning back to Himself of His love in expressed reality. When the Redemption is effective in me, I am a delight to God, not to myself. I am not meant for myself, I am meant for God.

3. Depth that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish . . .

The love of God rakes the very bottom of hell, and from the depths of sin and suffering brings sons and daughters to God. To introduce the idea of merit into belief, i.e. that I have done something by believing, is to annul my belief and make it blasphemous. Belief is the abandonment of all claim to desert; that is why it is so difficult to believe in Jesus. It requires the renunciation of the idea that I am someone—"I must have this thing explained to me"; "I must be convinced first." When the Spirit of God gets hold of me, He takes the foundation of the fictitious out of me and leaves nothing but an aching cavern for God to fill. "Blessed are the poor in spirit."

We love the lovely because it is flattering to us to do so. We love our kith and kin because it is the economy of pride to do so. God loves the un-lovely, and it broke His heart to do it. The depth of the love of God is revealed by that wonderful word, "whosoever." The Bible reveals God to be the Lover of His enemies (Romans 5:6–10). We will stick to our "rag rights," until by God's engineering of our circumstances, every "rag right" is blown from us and we are left with nothing; we become abject paupers, and say, "It's all up," and we find ourselves in heaven! We will persist in sticking to the thing that must be damned.

Not by wrestling, but by clinging Shall we be most blessed.

^{28.} rag rights: self-righteousness; see Isaiah 64:6.

4. Height

... but have everlasting life.

The Redemption of Jesus Christ effectively at work in me puts me where He was, and where He is, and where we shall for ever be (John 14:23; 16:23, 26). It is the terrific lift by the sheer, unaided love of God into a precious oneness with Himself, if I will only let Him do it. It is not a magic-working necromantic thing, but the energy of His own life. The "realest" thing is the love of God by means of the effective working of Redemption. On the human plane we may have love real, but low: my love, i.e. the sovereign preference of my person for another person, is in order that my purpose may be fulfilled; and when Jesus Christ comes into the life, it looks as if He were the dead enemy of that love. He is not; He is the dead enemy of the low-ness. When the love of God is realised by me, the sovereign preference of my person for God enables Him to manifest His purpose in me.

To realise the dimensions of the love of God, its breadth, and length, and depth, and height, will serve to drive home to us the reality of God's love, and the result of our belief in that love will be that no question will ever profoundly vex our minds, no sorrow overwhelm our spirits, because our heart is at rest in God, just as the heart of our Lord was at rest in His Father. This does not mean that our faith will not be tested; if it is faith, it must be tested, but, profoundly speaking, it will be supremely easy to believe in God.

Lectures on biblical philosophy given at the Bible Training College, London, from January to July 1912.

Publication History

As articles: First published as articles in the *Bible Training Course (BTC) Monthly Journal*² from October 1937 through October 1938.

As a book: First published as a book in 1939. Mrs. Chambers had planned to title it Spiritual Philosophy but bowed to David Lambert's³ suggestion to use Jesus' words to the rich young ruler in Matthew 19:21—"If thou wilt be perfect."

Always a voracious reader of wide-ranging taste, Chambers included the writings of many philosophers in his personal study. During Oswald's student days at the University of Edinburgh (1895–96), he very likely studied Metaphysics and the History of Philosophy under Professor Andrew Seth and Moral Philosophy under Professor Henry Calderwood. In addition, he may well have attended Dr. Alexander Whyte's⁴ Young Men's Classes, held every Sunday evening following the service at Free St. George's Church. When Chambers arrived in Edinburgh, Dr.

Whyte was dealing with "The Mystics," including Tauler and the book, Theologia Germanica, which are both quoted throughout If Thou Wilt Be Perfect.

In 1900, Chambers was teaching philosophy at Dunoon College,⁵ a small theological school across the Firth of Clyde from Glasgow, Scotland. When his students, most of whom had no university training, expressed their difficulty in making sense of existing textbooks, Chambers compiled and published his own Outlines for the Study of Historical Philosophy as a guide for his classes.

Of his lecture series on Biblical Philosophy at the Bible Training College in 1912, Chambers said: "The Ethics and Philosophy classes have taken a great stride in advance, and this is all the more surprising as the Bible Philosophy class is anything but a popular subject as commonly conceived; yet the numbers attending this class grow."

One of Chambers' recurring themes was the critical necessity for every Christian to think. "The reason why the average Christian worker is only the average Christian worker," Oswald told his students, "is that he or she will remain grossly ignorant about what he does not see any need for. All of you have intelligence, and you must use it for God."

FOREWORD

On Tauler and on Theologia Germanica

Two names are mentioned in this book, one is a man, Tauler, and the other a volume, Theologia Germanica. Quotations are made from them. Both belong to pre-Reformation times. John Tauler was born in Strasbourg about 1300. He was a Dominican monk and had already achieved honour and reputation as a preacher when a great change occurred in his spiritual outlook. An unknown layman, after hearing him preach, was moved to tell him that he was allowing himself to be "killed by the letter," and was yet in darkness, and had not tasted the sweetness of the Holy Ghost. The preacher took the words in a spirit of meekness and was ready to receive helpful counsel from his unknown friend. "You must," he said, "take up your cross and follow our Lord Jesus Christ and His example in utter sincerity, humility and patience, and must let go all your proud reasoning." He advised him to cease his preaching for a while and in quiet contemplation examine his life in the mirror of our Lord's. Tauler was nearly fifty, but he took the place of abasement and self-surrender, and for nearly two years was a seeker of God's way, praying that God's life might be brought forth in him. His former friends thought him demented. When the clear light came and he knew the time had come to bear his witness in public, he found it not easy to begin, but soon wisdom and grace from the Holy Spirit were bestowed in abundant measure. So began years of wonderful work for God. In those days when salvation by simple faith in Jesus Christ was so largely hidden beneath ceremonial worship, he taught many that the way to God was by a New Birth that brought men into a vital relation to the Living God. His sermons greatly influenced Luther. They have ministered to many in many countries. A volume of his sermons has been published in English under the title, The Following of Christ.

The book, Theologia Germanica, belongs to the same period. Its author is unknown. That also prepared for the Reformation, as it lays stress on the Holy Spirit's application of Christ's work to the heart of a believer. God never leaves Himself without a witness, and in that bedimmed period these lights were shining and have been shining ever since.

John Wesley complained to William Law⁶ that when he was an earnest inquirer he had been directed to the mystic writers, and so had missed the basic truth of salvation by faith in Jesus Christ. We all need to know the initial experience of Christ as the Propitiation for our sins, and as the One who has brought to a world of sinners the abundance of grace and the gift of righteousness. Afterwards we may find, as Wesley did, much light in such writers as the above upon how God works in us to will and to do of His good pleasure, and how we can work out our own salvation (Philippians 2:12–13).

The quotations made by Oswald Chambers are themselves of great value, and the expository words that follow are full of luminous and practical teaching for us to-day.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF PERFECTION

But when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away. 1 Corinthians 13:10 (RV)

"That which is perfect" is a Being, who hath comprehended and included all things in Himself and His own Substance, and without whom, and besides whom, there is no true Substance, and in whom all things have their Substance.

That Which Is Perfect

The Bible reveals that "that which is perfect" is a Being. God is the only Perfect Being; no human being is perfect apart from God. We make the blunder of applying to human beings terms which the Bible applies to God only. Our Lord in replying to the rich young ruler, who used the term "Good Master," said, "None is good save One, even God" (RV). There is only one Being to whom the term "good" can be applied, and that is the Perfect Being, the term cannot be applied to good men. In the Sermon on the Mount our Lord places God as the model for Christian character; He does not say, "Be good as a man is good," but—"Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect" (RV). We are to be perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect, not by struggle and effort, but by the impartation of that which is Perfect. We are accustomed to the use of the word "perfect" in connection with our relationship to God (e.g. Philippians 3:12–15), but here the word is used in a bigger sense, viz., perfect as God is perfect.

"Love" is another term we are apt to apply wrongly. We emphasise perfect love towards our fellow-men; the Bible emphasises perfect love to God. Love is an indefinable word, and in the Bible it is always used as directly characteristic of God—"God is love." Romans 5:5, Paul says that "the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts," not the power to love God, but the love of God.

Or take Truth. The Truth is our Lord Himself, consequently any part of the truth may be a lie unless it leads to a relation to the Truth. Salvation, sanctification, the Second Coming are all parts of the Truth, but none is the Truth; and they are only parts of the Truth as they are absorbed by the Truth, our Lord Himself. We are not told to expound the way of salvation, or to teach sanctification, but to lift up Jesus, i.e. to proclaim the truth.

That Which Is in Part

If any man thinketh that he knoweth anything, he knoweth not yet as he ought to know. (1 Corinthians 8:2 RV)

God wants us to lose our definitions and become rightly related to Himself, the Perfect One. If we try and state before God where we are in experience, we find we cannot do it, though we know with a knowledge "which passeth knowledge." The purpose of God is to get the part into the whole; if we remain in the part by sticking to our convictions, to that which we know, we shall fizzle off. An experience that is true and vivid cannot be stated in words, the lines of definition are gone. Our experience is only part of the Perfect. Jesus Christ is much more than we have experienced Him to be.

But "that which is in part," or the imperfect, is that which hath its source in, or springeth from the Perfect, just as a brightness or a visible appearance floweth out from the sun or a candle, and appeareth to be somewhat, this or that. And it is called a creature, and of all these "things which are in part," none is the Perfect.

Are we resting in our experience of the Truth, or in the Truth? The part has its source in the Perfect. The experiences of salvation and sanctification spring from the perfect Source, and it is this that gives the devil his chance to come as an angel of light and make us seek experiences instead of Christ. Do we lift up Jesus, or are we busy carefully defining our religious experiences, having this measuring-rod for the Almighty and that measuring-rod for the saints, which if they do not come up to we say they are wrong? There is always a danger of doing this so long as we walk by convictions. If our experiences come from the true Source and are untouched, they will lead to one place only—to the fulness of the life of God; but if they are tampered with they will lead away from God. Satan does not tempt saints to tell lies or to steal or drink, he does not come to them in that way; he comes along the line of their experiences, he seeks to separate Christian experience from the Lord Jesus and make us want to hug a certain type of experience for ourselves.

When we have part of the Perfect nature in us and are walking in the light of the Holy Spirit, He will take us surely and certainly to the Source from which the experience sprang, viz., God—unless we prefer to stay in our experience. Are we living in the light of our convictions, prescribed and confined, or are we living the life hid with Christ in God?

To those who have had no spiritual experience it sounds absurd to talk about being one with God in Christ, absurd to talk about being guided by the Spirit, they are impatient with it; of course they are, they must be made part of the Perfect (i.e., be born from above, RV mg) before they can understand the language of the Perfect in experience.

Jesus Christ must always be much more than any Christian experience. This throws a flood of light on experiences. That which is Perfect is God, that which is part is the creature experience. The creature experience has its source in God, but if looked at in itself it is apart altogether from God; when looked at in God it takes us straight to God Himself. When God ceases a way of guiding, when He removes the symbols of His presence, when answers to prayer do not come, it is because He is bringing us to the place where the part is merged in the Perfect, and we in our degree are becoming what Jesus wants us to be.

There is only one way to understand the Perfect and the part in relation to it, and that is by receiving the Holy Spirit; God will give us the Holy Spirit if we ask Him (Luke 11:13). We need to receive the Holy Spirit, not only for Christian experience but to bring us into perfect union with God.

That Which Is Perception (1 Corinthians 2:11-16; 1 John 2:27)

Perception means the power of discernment. "To whom hath the arm of the LORD been revealed?" (RV). We all see the common occurrences of daily life, but who amongst us can perceive the arm of the Lord behind them? who can perceive behind the thunder the voice of God? The characteristic of the man without the Spirit of God is that he has no power of perception, he cannot perceive God's working behind ordinary occurrences. The events of ordinary days and nights present facts we cannot explain, the only way to explain them is by receiving the Spirit of God Who will impart to us an interpretation that will keep the heart strong and confident in God, because it gives us an understanding of God Who is behind all things; but to the one who is not there, the explanations seem absurd.

Perception in the natural world is called intuition—I know I know, although I do not know how I know. In the spiritual world this knowledge is the "anointing" the Apostle John alludes to. When the Holy Spirit is in us He will never let us stop at the part experience. He will cause our part experience to keep us always one with the Perfect and will reveal God to us. If ever we imagine that the Spirit of God gives us an illumination apart from the written Word, Satan is twisting the truth, and it is this kind of passage that he distorts most.

The things which are in part cannot be apprehended, known and expressed; but the Perfect cannot be apprehended, known and expressed by any creature as creature.

Peter tells us to be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason concerning the hope that is in us. He did not say give reasonings, but a reason. We can give a reason for that we know, but we cannot reason it out with the man who has not the same spirit. We can state that we are right with God because we have received His Spirit on the word of Jesus, but our reasonings are nonsense to the man who has not accepted the Holy Spirit.

The Coming of the Perfect (John 17:22; Psalm 86:11)

Now when that which is Perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. But when doth it come? I say, when as much as may be, it is known, felt and tasted of the soul. . . . So also God who is the Highest Good, willeth not to hide Himself from any, wheresoever He findeth a devout soul, that is thoroughly purified from all creatures. For in what measure we put off the creature, in the same measure are we able to put on the Creator, neither more nor less.

"That they may be one"—in experience? No, "that they may be one, even as We are one." That is infinitely beyond experience, it is a perfect oneness not only in adjustment but in realisation. In our spiritual experience it means knowing that—"In all the world there is none but Thee, my God, there is none but Thee." Other people have become shadows, the creature we used to rely upon has proved a broken reed, the spiritual experience we built upon has deserted us, the methods of guidance that used to bless our souls starve us now. This is illustrated in the purifying of Abraham's faith, the purification went on until Abraham was lost in God. He did not lose his identity, he reached his identity in God. The hymns that are full of absorption in God are true of deepest spiritual experience, but only true in the fundamental sense, in the surface sense they are in error.

The Psalmist prayed, "Unite my heart to fear Thy name"—the whole spirit, soul and body so united with God that the soul does not think separately of body, soul or spirit, but only of God. There are false unities possible in a man's experience whereby man's spirit, soul and body are brought into harmony. Paul calls these things idolatry, because idolatry is the uniting of body, soul and spirit to the wrong god.

If we are despising the chastening of the Lord and fainting when rebuked of Him, it is because we do not understand what God is doing; He is weaning us from creatures to Himself, from the things we have been united to instead of being united to Him only. When God is weaning a soul from creatures, from Christian experience, from teachers and friends, then is the time that the devil begins the advocacy of self-pity. Satan tried to make Jesus realise Himself apart from God (see Matthew 16:23), but He would not—"For I am come down from heaven, not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me" (RV). When we are filled with the Holy Spirit He unites us body, soul and spirit with God until we are one with God even as Jesus was. This is the meaning of the Atonement—at-one-ment with God.

The one perfect Personality is our Lord. When we separate ourselves from Jesus we are in part, we are not perfect but when the life of Jesus comes into us we no more think of the separating of spirit, soul and body, we think of Jesus only. Remember, we are not sanctified for our sakes, but for God's sake. How many of us are trying to exploit God with the diplomacy which the world uses? We try to exploit God when we pray—"O Lord, give me this gift, this experience." That is the spirit which springs from the devil, we are trying to ape being devout souls, trying to be like Christians, but wanting a relation to God on our own lines. We can only get rightly related to God through Jesus Christ. The coming of the Perfect means that we are made one with God by Jesus. Immediately we are rightly related to God, perfectly adjusted to Him, the Perfect life comes to us and through us.

The Conversion of the Part

... it is impossible to the creature in virtue of its creature-nature and qualities, that of which it saith "I" and "myself" to be perfect. For in whatsoever creature the Perfect shall be known, therein the creature-nature and qualities, I, the Self and the like, must all be lost and done away.

Our Lord told the rich young ruler to fling away all he had, to think of himself as possessing nothing—"Be a mere conscious man and give that manhood to Me. Lose altogether the sense of yourself as one who wants to be blessed and be related to God in Me" (see Matthew 19:21).

So long as we think much of these things, cleave to them with love, joy, pleasure or desire, so long remaineth the Perfect unknown to us.

If we seek the baptism of the Holy Ghost in order that God may make us great servants of His, we shall never receive anything. God baptises us with the Holy Ghost that He may be All in all.

Numbers of people say, "I have asked God to sanctify me and He has not done it." Of course He has not! Do we find one word in the Bible which tells us to pray, "Lord, sanctify me"? What we do read is that God sanctifies what we give. An unconditional "give up" is the condition of sanctification, not claiming something for ourselves. This is where unscriptural holiness teaching has played so much havoc with spiritual experience. We receive from God on one condition only, viz., that we yield ourselves to Him and are willing to receive nothing. Immediately we state conditions and say, "I want to be filled with the Holy Spirit," "I want to be delivered from sin," "I want to be the means of saving souls"—we may pray to further orders, 7 but an answer will never come that way. That is all the energy of the flesh, it has no thought of the claims of Jesus on the life. Are we willing to be baptised into His death? How much struggle is there in a dead man? How much assertion of "I" and "me" and "mine"—"I have had such a wonderful experience"? The Spirit of God will never witness to testimonies along that line, they are not true to the genius of the Holy Ghost, not true to the nature of Jesus. "Whosoever shall confess Me before men," said Jesus. If there is a tightness and a dryness in our experience it is because we have begun to take the advice of someone other than God, have begun to try and make our experience like someone else said it should be. "But they, . . . measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves with themselves, are without understanding" (RV).

That which hath flowed forth from it, is no true Substance, and hath no Substance except in the Perfect, but is an accident, or a brightness, or a visible appearance, which is no Substance, and hath no Substance except in the fire whence the brightness flowed forth, such as the sun or a candle.

"Without Me ye can do nothing." If we are not spiritual we will say that is not true, but if we are spiritual we know it is true. Our Lord said many things that are only true in the domain in which He spoke them. For instance, He said, "Ye have not life in yourselves" (John 6:53 RV). We have life, but not in the domain Jesus means. We are alive physically, alive morally and intellectually without Jesus, but we are not alive spiritually. "Ye have not this life in yourselves." "If any man willeth to do His will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it be of God, or whether I speak from Myself" (RV). What is God's will? That we should receive His Spirit, and God will give us the Holy Spirit if we ask. If we put ourselves in the condition of paupers and waive all right to the gift and are willing to receive, then Jesus said, God will put into us the Spirit that is in Him. When we have received the Holy Spirit we begin to realise that what Jesus said is true, "without Me ye can do nothing"—in the spiritual life. If some of us are asked to give our testimony, to speak in the open air, to take a meeting, we faint because we have not learned the lesson of drawing on the Perfect life, of drawing on Jesus. "Without Me"-nothing; but-"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

Have we ever come to the place of saying, "Lord, do in me all Thou dost want to do?" We ask God to do much less than this and think we are asking for tremendous things; we have to come to the place of saying, "Lord, I ask that Thy will may be done in me." The will of God is the gladdest, brightest, most bountiful thing possible to conceive, and yet some of us talk of the will of God with a terrific sigh—"Oh well, I suppose it is the will of God," as if His will were the most calamitous thing that could befall us.

Are we learning to think and perceive and interpret Christian experience along this line? When people come to us, are we so relying on the Holy Spirit that He can easily lead them to Jesus, or are we trying to make their square lives fit into our round experience, trying to fit their broad experience into our poor narrow waistcoat-pocket experience? We are off our territory on those lines; we are here for one purpose only, to be taken up with Jesus.

The Principle of Sin (1 John 5:8–12)

The Scripture and the Faith and the Truth say, Sin is nought else, but that the creature turneth away from the unchangeable Good and betaketh itself to the changeable; that is to say, that it turneth away from the Perfect to "that which is in part" and imperfect, and most often to itself.

This is the principle of sin. Anything in spiritual life or in sensual life that makes us draw our life from anything less than God is of the essence of sin. God made man to have dominion over the life of the sea and air and earth, but God was to have dominion over man. Adam sinned by taking his claim to his right to himself. This claim to my right to myself works in those who are born again, and it is called "the carnal mind." It expresses itself like this—"I want the baptism of the Holy Ghost; I want to be sanctified; I want to be filled with the Spirit; I want to be used of God." All that springs from the wrong source, it is not drawing its life from the right place. When we receive and recognise and rely on the Holy Spirit, all that stops for ever. We have to "walk in the light, as He is in the light," the light that Jesus walked in (see John 6:38; 14:10).

The Presence of Sin (John 5:30-32; Romans 1:25)

When the creature claimeth for its own anything good, such as Substance, Life, Knowledge, Power, and in short whatever we should call good, as if it were that, or possessed that, or that were itself or that proceeded from it—as often as this cometh to pass, the creature goeth astray.

The one characteristic of love is that it thinks of nothing for itself, it is absorbed in God. "Love suffereth long, and is kind; love envieth not . . . love taketh not account of the evil." We cannot live as Jesus lived by trying to imitate Him. "Jesus called a little child to Him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Except ye . . . become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." Our Lord was not setting up a child as an ideal, but as a fact. A child does not work from a conscious ambition, it obeys the law of the life that is in him without thinking. When we are born again and rightly related to God we will live the right kind of life without thinking. Immediately we begin to think about it, we fix our eyes on our own whiteness and go wrong. Much of the holiness teaching of to-day makes people fix their eyes on their own whiteness, not on Jesus Christ—"I give up this and that, I fast here, I do this and the other, I will give up anything and everything to possess a perfect life." We will never get it in that way, but only by the passion of an absolute devotion to Jesus and that is only possible by receiving the Holy Spirit and obeying Him.

The Propagation of Sin (1 John 3:4–8; Isaiah 14:12–13; 2 Thessalonians 2:4; Colossians 2:20–23)

What did the devil do else, or what was his going astray and his fall else, but that he claimed for himself to be also somewhat, and would have it that somewhat was his, and something was due to him? This setting up of a claim and his "I" and "me" and "mine," these were his going astray, and his fall. And thus it is to this day.

John's argument is not to do with an act of sin, but with the disposition of sin. It is this that the devil propagates in human beings. Why don't we realise what God's Book says? We talk about chopping off this, and doing that, and having times of consecration to God. The only test of holiness is that the life of Jesus is being manifested in our mortal flesh, and that we are not appealed to on the lines He was not appealed to on; nothing springs up in us and says, "Now that is mine." The perfect love is given to us freely by the grace of God, and we can hinder it when we like, no matter what our experience has been, if we cease drawing on the life of God. Anything we possess as our own, as a possession of our own personality, is the very essence and principle of sin at work. "If any man will come after Me," said Jesus, "let him deny himself"; literally, let him give up his right to himself to Me, "and take up his cross daily, and follow Me." Our Lord said this over and over again, but we have come to the conclusion that He did not mean what He said and we piously and reverently pass it over.

Chapter II

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE FALL—I

Boundless Inheritance of Covetousness

What shall we say then? Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet. (Romans 7:7)

It is said, it was because Adam ate the apple that he was lost, or fell. I say, it was because of his claiming something for his own, and because of his I, Mine, Me and the like. Had he eaten seven apples, and yet never claimed anything for his own, he would not have fallen: but as soon as he called something his own, he fell, and would have fallen if he had never touched an apple.

What is true of Adam is true of every man and woman, and "not all mankind could amend his fall, or bring him back from going astray." This inheritance of covetousness is the very essence of the Fall, and no praying and no power of man, singly or banded together, can ever avail to touch it; the only thing that can touch it is the great Atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ. Lust and covetousness are summed up in the phrase, "I must have it at once and for myself." It is an absolute flood in the nature of man, it overtakes his spirit, it overtakes his soul and body. In some natures the spirit of covetousness works through the body and is seen in sordid ways; sometimes it is kept back and only in man's reason is it manifested; and sometimes it is held still further back and suppressed, but it is there. The background of the whole thing is the lust of possessing according to my affinities.

(a) Birth of Death

"For in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Genesis 2:17). Death is the inheritance of the whole human race; since Adam, no man has ever been alive to God saving by the supernatural act of re-birth. Do not get the idea that because man did not die suddenly physically, he is not dead. The manifestation of death in the body is simply a matter of time, "For in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The birth of death was in that moment; not the birth of death for one man, but the birth of the death of the whole human race. God's attitude revealed in the Bible towards men is that they are "dead in trespasses and sins"; no touch with God, not alive towards God at all, they are quite indifferent to God's claims.

(b) The Bye-Law of Death

"For if by one man's offence death reigned by one . . ." (Romans 5:17). A bye-law is a supplementary regulation, and the bye-law of death is a supplementary regulation on account of disobedience. "For I was alive without the law once," said the Apostle Paul, "but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died. And the commandment, which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death" (Romans 7:9-10). We are all alive apart from God in our own consciousness, and when preachers talk about being dead in trespasses and sins, good worldly-minded men and women are amused at our being so stupid as to tell them they are dead. They say, "I am alive, my body is alive; my mind and heart and soul and spirit are alive; what do you mean by being dead?" But immediately a soul comes into contact with Jesus Christ's standard, instantly the realisation comes of what death means.

(c) Branded by Death

"For the wages of sin is death" (Romans 6:23). Every natural virtue is death-branded, because the natural virtues are remnants of a ruined humanity, they are not promises of an evolving perfection. Take the life of the intellect or of the spirit, where does it end? "He that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow." Love produces such pain (apart from a knowledge of God) that it makes the sensitive soul wonder if it is worthwhile to love. Death is everywhere, on the attainments of the mind, of the heart and spirit. When you try to approach God in prayer and draw near to Him, you find the curse of this disposition of covetousness-"I must have this for myself, I want to be right with God for my own sake"—and it saps the energy out of devotion, out of communion with God and Christian service, until the soul is almost wrung to despair. It is that kind of thing which made the Apostle Paul say— "sold under sin." We have to get down to this aspect of sin which is not familiar to us as a rule.

Talk about conviction of sin! I wonder how many of us have ever had one five minutes' conviction of sin. It is the rarest thing to know of a man or woman who has been convicted of sin. I am not sure but that if in a meeting one or two people came under the tremendous conviction of the Holy Ghost, the majority of us would not advocate they should be put in a lunatic asylum, instead of referring them to the Cross of Christ. We are unfamiliar nowadays with this tremendous conviction of sin, which Paul refers to as being "sold under sin," but it is not a bit too strong to say that when once the Spirit of God convicts a man of sin, it is either suicide or the Cross of Christ, no man can stand such conviction long. We have any amount of conviction about pride and wrong dealing with one another, but when the Holy Ghost convicts He does not bother us on that line, He gives us the deep conviction that we are living in independence of God, of a death away from God, and we find all our virtues and goodness and religion has been based on a ruinous thing, viz., the boundless inheritance of covetousness. That is what the Fall means. Let it soak into your thinking, and you will understand the marvel of the salvation of Jesus Christ which means deliverance from covetousness, root and branch. Never lay the flattering unction to your soul that because you are not covetous for money or worldly possessions, you are not covetous for anything. The fuss and distress of owning anything is the last remnant of the disposition of sin. Jesus Christ possessed nothing for Himself (see 2 Corinthians 8:9). Right through the warp and woof of human nature is the ruin caused by the disposition of covetousness which entered into the human race through the Fall, and it is this disposition which the Holy Spirit convicts of.

Beatific Incarnation (Romans 5:1–11)

But how shall my fall be amended? It must be healed as Adam's fall was healed, and on the self-same wise. . . . And in this bringing back and healing, I can, or may, or shall do nothing of myself, but just simply yield to God, so that He alone may do all things in me and work, and I may suffer Him and all His work and His divine will.

The Atonement means that in the Cross of Jesus Christ God redeemed the whole human race from the possibility of damnation through the heredity of sin. Jesus Christ never applied the words "children of the devil" to ordinary sinners, He applied them to religious disbelievers. Nowhere is it taught in the Bible that we are by nature children of the devil; Paul says we "were by nature the children of wrath." How many men and women do we know who have seen what Jesus Christ came to do, who really knew He came to save them from sin and who have deliberately said, "No, I won't let Him"? The majority of men are sheep, as Jesus said, and the bias of the Fall leads them astray.

(a) Ruined Race

"And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel" (Genesis 3:15). The prophecy here does not refer to the destruction of sin in the individual, but to the destruction of what the Apostle Paul calls "the body of sin," symbolised in the first incarnation of the devil as a serpent. The body of sin stands as the counterpart of the Mystical Body of Christ. The fountain head of the body of sin is the devil; the Fountain Head of the mystical body of Christ is God. The disposition of covetousness which entered in at the Fall, connects me with the body of sin; in the personal experience of sanctification this disposition of covetousness is identified with the Cross of Christ "that the body of sin might be destroyed." The more people there are who enter into sanctification through Jesus Christ, the more is Satan's dominance ruined. The body of sin is maimed and paralysed by every being who enters into the Mystical Body of Christ through His salvation. "The carnal mind," which is "enmity against God," is my connection with the body of sin; but the body of sin is something infinitely greater than the carnal mind, it is the mystical body of sin with the devil at its head, which Jesus Christ came to destroy (1 John 3:8), and in His sanctified children is manifested the bruising of Satan and the enfeebling of the body of sin, until at the final wind-up of everything, the body of sin and the devil are absolutely removed, not only in the individual saints but from the presence of the saints. Satan is not removed now from the presence of the saints, but the saint is still kept in the world where the evil one rules, consequently the saint is continually being badgered by the evil one. Jesus prayed, not that we should be taken out of the world, but that we should be "kept from the evil one" (RV)

(b) Realised Right of Saved Souls (Romans 6:12-14)

"Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof" (Romans 6:12). Paul is strong in urging us to realise what salvation means in our bodily lives; it means that we command our bodies to obey the new disposition. That is where you find the problems on the margins of the sanctified life. Paul argues in Romans 6:19, "You are perfectly adjusted to God on the inside by a perfect Saviour, but your members have been used as servants of the wrong disposition; now begin to make those same members obey the new disposition." As we go on, we find every place God brings us into is the means of enabling us to realise with growing joy that the life of Christ within is more than a match not only for the enemy on the outside but for the impaired body that comes between. Paul urges with passionate pleading, that we present our bodies a living sacrifice, and then realise, not presumptuously, but with slow, sure, overwhelming certainty that every command of Christ can be obeyed in our bodily life through the Atonement.

(c) Restricting Remains of Sin

"What then? Shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid. Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" (Romans 6:15-16). A partial realisation on the part of a child of God of the salvation of Jesus Christ is the very thing Satan delights in, because it leaves within that one the remains of the sinful disposition. In regeneration a twofold experience ought to be ours: the introduction into a new kingdom by the incoming of the Holy Spirit and the realisation of forgiveness of sins; and then being borne on to a moral identification with the death of Jesus whereby we know that "our old man is crucified with Him." Impaired lives, impaired judgements and experiences—all that makes us limp and compromising, comes about because we have realised only partially what Jesus Christ came to do, and the great rouser up out of that sleep of indifference is the Apostle Paul. Read his Epistles, rely on the Spirit of God, and let Him drive home these truths to you.

Freedom for God

I am the LORD: that is My name: and My glory will I not give to another. (Isaiah 42:8)

If I call any good thing my own, as if I were it, or of myself had Power or did or knew anything, or as if anything were mine or of me, or belonged to me, or were due to me or the like, I take unto myself somewhat of honour and glory, and do two evil things: First, I fall and go astray as aforesaid; Secondly, I touch God in His honour and take unto myself what belongeth to God only. For all that must be called good belongeth to none but to the true eternal Goodness which is God only, and whoso taketh it unto himself committeth unrighteousness and is against God.

The subtlety of Satan as an angel of light comes just here, and we hear the saints, unwittingly and without any intention of doing it, taking the glory to themselves. To say a thing is the sure way to thinking it. That is why it is so necessary to testify to what Jesus Christ has done for us. A testimony gets hold of the mind as it has hold of the heart; but the same thing is true of the opposite, if we say a wrong thing often enough we begin to think it. The only way to be kept from taking glory to ourselves is to keep steadfastly faced by our Saviour and not by the needs of the people. Did you ever notice how God lets you go down when you trust good people? The best of men and women are but the best of men and women, the only good is God, and Jesus Christ always brings the soul face to face with God, and that is the one great thought we have to be soaked with. The spirit of covetousness is a flood, and when the Apostle Paul talked about the Spirit, his idea is of a flood, "Be [being] filled with the Spirit," invaded by the personal passionate Lover of God until we realise there is only one Good, and we have no time or inclination for any other kind of goodness. "In all the world there is none but Thee, my God, there is none but Thee." Are we there?

We will deal treacherously with the Bible records if we are not soaked in the revelation that God only is good. We will put the saints on the throne, not God. There is only one unshakeable goodness, and that is God. It takes time to get there because we will cling to things and to people. Those of us who ought to be princes and princesses with God cling to the shows of God's goodness instead of God Himself. The only influence that is to tell in a servant of God is God. Let people think what they like about you, but be careful that the last thought they get is God. When we have gone from them, there must be no beauty or fascination in us that makes them long for us, the only remembrance left must be, "That woman was true to God"; "That man was true to God."

Chapter III

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE FALL—II

By the Fall man not only died from God, but he fell into disunion with himself; that means it became possible for him to live in one of the three parts of his nature. We want to live a spiritual life, but we forget that that life has to work out in rational expression in our souls; or we want to live a clear life in the soul and forget altogether that we have a body and spirit; or else we want to live the life of a splendid animal and forget altogether the life of the soul and spirit. When a man is born again of the Spirit of God he is introduced to life with God and union with himself. The one thing essential to the new life is obedience to the Spirit of God Who has energised our spirits; that obedience must be complete in spirit, soul and body. We must not nourish one part of our being apart from the other parts.

Margins of the Spirit (Galatians 5:19-24)

The margins of our spirit retain the damage done by the Fall, even after sanctification, and unless we are energised by the Spirit of God and continually draw our life from God, Satan will come in as an angel of light and deceive us, and the first way he does it is by habits of ecstasy.

(a) Habits of Ecstasy

Habits of ecstasy, that is, the tendency to live a spiritual life before God apart from the rational life of our soul and the physical life of our body. In many a life the idea that creeps in slowly is that we must develop a spiritual life altogether apart from the rational and the physical life. God is never in that type of teaching. There are people we call naturally spiritual people who devote all their time to developing the spirit, forgetting altogether the rational life and the physical life. When we look at them or read about them they seem all right, spiritual and fine, but they lack the one marvellous stamp of the religion of Jesus Christ which keeps spirit, soul and body going on together. God never develops one part of our being at the expense of the other; spirit, soul and body are kept in harmony. Remember, our spirit does not go further than we bring our body. The Spirit of God always drives us out of the visionary, out of the excitable, out of the ecstasy stages, if we are inclined that way. This blind life of the spirit, a life that delights to live in the dim regions of the spirit, refusing to bring the leadings of the Holy Spirit into the rational life, gives occasion to supernatural forces that are not of God. It is impossible to guard our spirit, the only One Who can guard all its entrances is God. Never give way to spiritual ecstasy unless there is a chance of working it out rationally, check it every time. Nights and days of prayer and waiting on God may be a curse to our souls and an occasion for Satan. So always remember that the times we have in communion with God must be worked out in the soul and in the body.

(b) Habits of Election of Days (Galatians 4:8–11)

The habits Paul refers to here are superstitious habits in which the mind fixes on "days, and months, and seasons, and years" (RV)—on certain days God will bless us, on other days He won't; if I am careful about this and that, it will bring me into the presence of God. The days, and months, and seasons, and years are appointed by God, but the Galatians were fixing on them altogether apart from God, and Paul says, "I am afraid of you, lest by any means I have bestowed labour upon you in vain" (RV). Nowadays superstition is growing again, and people are held in bondage to it. Are we in danger of fixing on means other than God for maintaining our spiritual life? Do we put the means of grace in the place of grace itself? If we make devotional habits the source from which we draw our life, God will put us through the discipline of upsetting those times. You say, "God does not upset them in other lives, why should He in mine?" Because you are putting them in the place of God. When you put God first you will easily get your times of communion, because God can entrust them to the soul who does not use them in an irrational way and give occasion to the enemy to enter in. When our spirit is awakened by God we must bring ourselves into subordination to the Spirit of God and not fly off at a tangent, fixing on days and seasons and ritual, thus giving a chance to the mysterious background of our life that we know nothing about but which the Bible reveals, and which Satan is on the watch for all the time.

The only soul Satan cannot touch is the soul whose spiritual life and rational life and physical life is hid with Christ in God; that soul is absolutely secure.

(c) Habits of Enervation by Dreaming (Jude 8)

Ecstasy of spirit leads to external ritual in the rational life, and makes the bodily life spend its time in dreaming. The lassitude that creeps over an unhealthy soul produces the physical madness of hysteria. All animal magnetism, all the power of one person over another, and all the hysterics of self-pity that makes some people absolutely useless unless they are in the presence of certain other people, all spring from this source. It begins in a wrong relationship to God first; a real life with God was started, but instead of drawing the whole life from God and working it out through the body, the bodily life is spent in dreams, in fastings, in prayings, and slowly there develops a madness of the nerves, which is what hysteria really is. Hysteria is a physical morbid craving for sympathy from other people, which can go to such an extent that people cannot live apart from certain other people. There is no power of God in such lives. Hysteria is the actual nervous manifestation of fundamental self-pity, consequently it has been regarded for long by the medical world as a psycho-physical disease; it is more a disposition than a disease. In this domain we get the sympathy cures of Christian Science, i.e. a stronger personality coming in contact with a soul that has got out of touch with God through disobedience can soothe the hysteria of the nerves and inject a cure by its sympathy which has nothing to do with God or with the devil, but entirely to do with the influence of a strong personality over a weak one. Animal magnetism does not come from the devil, but remember that animal magnetism always gives occasion to the devil. In reading the records of French physicians, who used hypnotism in operating in the past more than they do now, case after case is recorded where a good-living physician used hypnotism but always stated his dread and dislike of it, simply because he found that he could never be sure what would happen to the person after the cure had been effected. And to-day we find over and over again that cures are genuine, the disease disappears, but there is a derangement in the life towards God and towards men. In every case of healing by God it comes through a child-like trust in Jesus Christ.

Any man or woman who is inclined to spend their time dreaming when they should be working out actually through the finger-tips what the Spirit of God is working in, is in danger of degenerating into those who "in their dreamings defile the flesh." God never allows a Christian to carry on his life in sections—so much time for study and meditation and so much for actual work; the whole life, spirit, soul and body must progress together.

Are you forming habits of ecstasy? Beware. Are you forming habits of ritual? habits of physical dreaming, wanting to get away from the active rush of things? Beware. When we get into the healthy life of God all the margins of spirit and soul and body are merged in a complete oneness with God. "... that ye may be filled unto all the fulness of God" (Ephesians 3:19 RV).

(d) Habits of Envy (Proverbs 27:4)

Spiritual envy starts from having got something from God in the way of quickening and then trying to use it in our way, not God's. Spiritual envy is a terrible evil of the soul, and will always follow the tendency to develop a spiritual life apart from the rational life and the bodily life. All kinds of sour distempers will be ours spiritually, we shall be envious of people who are growing in their life with God in ways we are not, and we will have almost diabolical suggestions about them, suggestions we would never have got through our own unaided spirit. Spiritual envy is an awful possibility to any soul who does not obey the Spirit of God (cf. 1 Corinthians 13:4).

(e) Habits of Emotions of Dread (Colossians 2:18)

If we separate the life of the spirit from the rational life, we experience emotions of dread, forebodings and spiritual nightmares in the soul, which are not imaginary but real. The cause is not always to be found in the physical condition, but in the margins of our spirit life. Remember that through the Fall man fell into dis-union, spirit, soul and body were separated from one another, that means we are liable to influences from God or from the devil. It is only when we get full of dread about life apart from God that we leave ourselves in His hands. Immediately we try to live a spiritual life with God and forget our soul and body, the devil pays attention to our body, and when we pay attention to our body he begins to get at our spirit, until we learn there is only one way to keep right—to live the life hid with Christ in God, then the very life and power of God garrisons all three domains, spirit, soul and body, but it depends on us whether we allow God to do it. God cannot garrison us if we try to live a spiritual life on a life of our own, or if we go off on emotions in our rational life. God never garrisons us in bits. Whenever marrings come to our lives it is because we have got twisted off somewhere, we are not living in simple, full, childlike union with God, handing the keeping of our lives over to Him and being carefully careless about everything saving our relationship to Him; keep that right, and He will guard every avenue. "Kept by the power of God."

(f) Habits of Exceptional "Drugging" (Jude 12–13) There are hidden perils in our life with God whenever we disobey Him. If we are not obeying God physically we experience a craving for drugs, not only physical drugs out of a bottle, but drugs in certain types of meetings and certain types of company anything that keeps away the realisation that the habits of the bodily life are not in accordance with what is God's will. If in the providence of God, obedience to God takes me into contact with people and surroundings that are wrong and bad, I may be perfectly certain that God will guard me; but if I go there out of curiosity, God does not guard me, and the tendency is to "drug" it over-"I went with a good idea to try and find out about these things." Well, you plainly had no business to go, and you know you had no business to go because the Spirit of God is absolutely honest. The whole thing starts from disobedience on a little point. We wanted to utilise God's grace for our own purposes, to use God's gifts for our own reasoning out of things in a particular way.

(g) Habits of Enmity (Romans 8:7)

The carnal mind is a dangerous power alongside the Spirit of God in our personality before identification with Jesus Christ in His death and resurrection is reached. When a man has received the Holy Spirit, the watching of Satan is keen, his whole desire is to split up the personality. "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; for these are contrary the one to the other" (Galatians 5:17 RV). The carnal mind is enmity against God, and it is the carnal mind which connects us with the body of sin of which Satan is the head, and of which there is ultimately to be a new manifestation (see 2 Thessalonians 2:3). Every soul who enters into the experience of entire sanctification limits the body of sin, consequently the great yearning eagerness of the preaching of the Gospel is to get God's children to the place of sanctification where spirit, soul and body are one, one personality absolutely ruled by God, where the life of the spirit is instantly manifested in the life of the soul and body (see 1 Thessalonians 5:23). If this place of entire sanctification is not reached, there is always that in us which has a strong affinity with the devil, and this is the remarkable thing, we never knew it before we were introduced into the kingdom of God by the initial experience of regeneration; but we find after a while the strong lustful hate of something in us against what the Spirit God has put in, and the lust is for one thing—I want to dominate this personality.

(h) Habits of Earnest Devotions (Colossians 2:20–23)

Have we any helps to keep us living a godly life? That is the risk. Slowly and surely God will purify our lives from props that separate us from Him. Immediately the means of grace are taken to be grace itself, they become a direct hindrance to our life with God. The means are simply scaffolding for the time being, and as long as they are in their right place they are an assistance, immediately we put them as the source, we give occasion to the enemy. Have we helped ourselves in work for God from any other source than God? "Ye are complete in Him" (Colossians 2:10).

(i) Habits of Extraordinary Defying (2 Thessalonians 2:9–12)

A spiritual man or woman going astray can use the extraordinary powers awakened by the Spirit of God against God. The only safeguard, and it is an absolute safeguard, is to live the life hid with Christ in God. The life that steadily refuses to think from its right to itself, that steadily refuses to trust its own insight, is the only life that Satan cannot touch. Watch every time you get to a tight feeling spiritually, to a dry feeling rationally, to a hindered feeling physically, it is the Spirit of God's quiet warning that you should repair to the heavenly places in Christ Jesus. There is never any fear for the life that is hid with Christ in God, but there is not only fear, but terrible danger, for the life unguarded by God. "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High"—once there, and although God's providence should take you into hell itself, you are as safe and secure as Almighty God can keep you.

Chapter IV

THE PHILOSOPHY OF DISCERNMENT

A philosopher is a lover of wisdom, and spiritual philosophy means the love of wisdom not only in our heart life, but in our heads—the last place a Christian gets to. Usually we leave our heads barren, we simply use our brains to explain our heart's experience. That is necessary, but we have to let our brains be guided by the Holy Spirit into thinking a great many things we have not experienced. That is, we are committed to Jesus Christ's view of everything, and if we only allow our brains to dwell on what we have experienced, we shut ourselves off from a great deal we ought to be exercised in. Our heart experience always outstrips our head statement, and when the experience begins to be stated explicitly, our heart witnesses to it—"Why I know that, but I never realised before how it worked." Discernment is the power to interpret what we see and hear.

The Path of Discernment

For without Me ye can do nothing. (John 15:5)

... man's knowledge should be so clear and perfect that he should acknowledge of a truth (that in himself he neither hath nor can do any good thing, and that none of his knowledge, wisdom and art, his will, love and good works do come from himself, nor are of man, nor of any creature, but) that all these are of the eternal God from whom they all proceed.

Have I learned to think what the testimony of my heart makes me state? We all say this kind of thing-"I know that in me . . . dwelleth no good thing," but do we think it? Do we really think what Jesus has taught us to know in our hearts, that apart from Him we can do nothing? We all believe it, but do we think it? Over and over again God has to take us into desert places spiritually where there is no conscious experience at all. We have probably all had this in our experience—we have had a grand time of living communion with God, we know we are sanctified, the witness of the Spirit has proved it over and over again, then all of a sudden there falls a dearth, no life, no quickness; there is no degeneration, no backsliding, but an absolute dearth. This may be the reason—the Lord is wanting to take us to a desert place apart that we may get to this path of discernment. All the noisy things that fret our lives when we are spiritual come because we have not discerned what we know in our hearts.

(a) The Discipline of Negatives (1 Corinthians 4:7) Paul is talking about natural gifts as well as spiritual. "What hast thou that thou didst not receive? but if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it?" (RV). Have we learned to think when we see someone endowed with natural gifts, such as a fine voice, or a good brain, or any of the gifts of genius, that every one of those gifts has been received, therefore they cannot be consecrated? You cannot consecrate what is not yours. In thinking we do not really go along the scriptural lines our hearts go on. Watch your heart in relationship to God, you recognise that you cannot consecrate yourself to God: you give yourself to God, and yet in thinking we go along the line of consecrating our gifts to God. We have to get rid altogether of the idea that our gifts are ours, they are not, gifts are gifts, and we have to be so given over to God that we never think of our gifts, then God can let His own life flow through us. The discipline of negatives is the hardest discipline in the spiritual life, and if you are going through it you ought to shout "Hallelujah," for it is a sign that God is getting your mind and heart where the mind and heart of Jesus Christ was.

Spiritual gifts must be dealt with in the same way as natural gifts. Spiritual gifts are not glorified gifts, they are the gift of the Spirit. "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit." None of the gifts Paul mentions in 1 Corinthians 12:8–11 are natural gifts. The danger is to say, "How highly favoured I must be if God gives me this great gift"; "what a wonderful person I must be." We never talk like that, but the slightest thought that looks upon the gifts of the Spirit as a favour to us is the first thing that will take us out of the central point of Jesus Christ's teaching. Never look at the work of God in and through you; never look at the way God uses you in His service; immediately you do, you put your mind away from where Jesus Christ wants to get it. Gifts are gifts, not graces.

(b) The Development of Nobility (2 Corinthians 3:5–6)

Paul is calling his own mind to a halt in order to explain to the Corinthian Church why what he says and does comes with authority. "Our sufficiency is from God; Who also made us sufficient as ministers of a new covenant" (RV). If you are right with God, you will be amazed at what other people get in the way of real spiritual help out of what you say; but never think about it. The temptation comes all along to say, "It is because I brooded that God gave me that thought." The right attitude is to keep the mind absolutely concentrated on God and never get off on the line of how you are being used by Him. Even in the choicest of saints there is the danger. Whenever you feel inclined to say, "Well, of course that was not me, that was God," beware! you ought never to be in the place where you can think it. The teaching of Jesus is, "Be absorbed with Me, and out of you will flow rivers of living water." If we are paying attention to the Source, rivers of living water will pour out of us, but immediately we stop paying attention to the Source, the outflow begins to dry up. We have nothing to do with our "usability," but only with our relationship to Jesus Christ, nothing must be allowed to come in between.

Have we allowed this path of discernment to be trodden by our feet? Are we beginning to see where we are being led, viz., to the place where we are rooted and grounded in God? The one essential thing is to live the life hid with Christ in God.

The Pain of Deliverance

And Jesus called a little child unto Him . . . and said, . . . Except ye . . . become as little children . . . (Matthew 18:2–3)

For when the ain imagination and ignorance are turned into an understanding and knowledge of the truth, the claiming of anything for our own will cease of itself.

A healthy man does not know what health is: a sick man knows what health is, because he has lost it; and a saint rightly related to God does not know what the will of God is because he is the will of God. A disobedient soul knows what the will of God is because he has disobeyed. The illustration Jesus gives to His disciples of a saintly life is a little child. Jesus did not put up a child as an ideal, but to show them that ambition has no place whatever in the disposition of a Christian. The life of a child is unconscious in its fullness of life, and the source of its life is implicit love. To be made children over again causes pain because we have to reconstruct our mental ways of looking at things after God has dealt with our heart experience. Some of us retain our old ways of looking at things, and the deliverance is painful. Paul urges that we allow the pain—"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus"; "bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." It is hard to do it. In the beginning we are so anxious—"Lord, give me a message for this meeting," until we learn that if we live in the centre of God's will, He will give us messages when He likes and withhold them when He likes. We try to help God help Himself to us; we have to get out of the way and God will help Himself to our lives in every detail. Have we learned to form the mind of Christ by the pain of deliverance till we know we are drawing on Him for everything? Are we sacrificing our holy selves to the will of Jesus as He did to the will of His Father? Are we beginning to speak what God wants us to speak because we are submitting our intelligence to Him? "The Son can do nothing of Himself." Our Lord never allowed such a thought as, "I have done that," in His mind. Have we spiritual discernment like that? If not, remember what the Apostle James says, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

(a) The Plunge into God (1 Corinthians 13:8-10)

Now when a man duly perceiveth these things in himself he and the creature fall behind, and he doth not call anything his own, and the less he taketh this knowledge unto himself the more perfect doth it become. So also is it with the will and love, and desire, and the like. For the less we call these things our own, the more perfect and noble and Godlike do they become, and the more we think them our own, the baser and less pure and perfect do they become.

The only way to learn to swim is to take the plunge, sink or swim; that is exactly the idea here. Will I cut loose from all moorings and plunge straight into God? It is what the New Testament is continually urging—"Let go." Life goes on in a series of coveting the best gifts, but, Paul says, "a still more excellent way shew I unto you" (RV)—take an absolute plunge into the love of God, and when you are there you will be amazed at your foolishness for not getting there before. It is not the question of the surrender of a soul for sanctification, but the unreserved surrender of a sanctified soul to God. We are so reserved where we ought to be unreserved, and so unreserved where we ought to be reserved. We ought never to be reserved towards God but utterly open, perfectly one with Him all through. After the experience of sanctification we have to present our sanctified self to God, and one of the greatest difficulties in doing this is considering the conditions other people say we have to observe. "They themselves, . . . comparing themselves with themselves, are without understanding" (RV). Watch how tied up we are with other people's notions of what we should be. The only way to get rid of it all is to take this plunge into the love of God. We have to form the mind of Christ until we are absorbed in Him and take no account of the evil done to us. No love on earth can do this but the love of God.

(b) The Participation in Godliness (Philippians 3:7–8)

We must cast all things from us, and strip ourselves of them; we must refrain from claiming anything for our own.

"... for Whom I suffered the loss of all things" (RV). To experience the loss of all things for anyone but Jesus Christ is mental suicide. Read what Our Lord said to the rich young ruler—"Sell whatsoever thou hast, . . . and come, follow Me"—"Reduce yourself until you are a mere conscious man, and then give that manhood to Me"; and we read that "his countenance fell at the saying, and he went away sorrowful: for he was one that had great possessions" (RV). Do you possess a reputation as a Christian worker? That will be in the way when the Lord speaks to you. Are you rich in the consciousness that you are somebody spiritually? That will be in the way. You must first estimate and then experience the loss of all things and cast yourself on Jesus, then participation in godliness will be yours as it never has been.

When we do this, we shall have the best, fullest, clearest and noblest knowledge that a man can have, and also the noblest and purest love, will and desire; for then these will be all of God alone. It is much better that they should be God's than the creature's.

The oneness Jesus Christ prayed for in John 17 is the oneness of identity, not of union. "I and My Father are one," and by the Atonement our Lord brings us into identity with Himself—"that they may be one, even as We are one."

The Plane of Delight (2 Corinthians 4:16–18) While we look . . . at the things which are not seen. (2 Corinthians 4:18)

But if our inward man were to make a leap and spring into the Perfect, we should find and taste how that the Perfect is without measure, number or end, better and nobler than all which is imperfect and in part, and the Eternal above the temporal or perishable, and the foundation and source above all that floweth or can ever flow from it.

When we think of being delivered from sin, of being filled with the Spirit, we say, "Oh, I shall never get there, it is only for exceptional people like the Apostle Paul"; but when by God's grace we get there we find it is the easiest place to live; it is not a mountain-peak, but a flat tableland of delight with plenty of room for everyone. "And I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless"—that is not the life we are to live hereafter, but the life God would have us live now; most of us are far too diffident about getting there.

(a) The Altitude of Love

... the greatest of these is love. (1 Corinthians 13:13 RV)

A Master called Bætius said, "It is of sin that we do not love that which is Best." He hath spoken the truth. That which is best should be the dearest of all things to us.

Is it? Sometimes we crave for something less than the best, beware! We ought to love the most what is best. The spirit of God in us can teach us how to love the best, through faith, through knowledge, through everything till we are altogether in love with God, in absolute harmony with Him, absorbed in the one great purpose of God.

And in our love of it, neither helpfulness nor unhelpfulness, advantage nor injury, gain nor loss, honour nor dishonour, praise nor blame, nor anything of the kind should be regarded.

1 Corinthians 13 is not an ideal, it is an identification which makes the ideal possible. Never put the ideal where the Spirit of God does not put it. The ideal comes after the identification.

(b) The Atmosphere of Life

But the fruit of the Spirit is love. . . . (Galatians 5:22)

Now that creature in which the Eternal Good, most manifesteth itself shineth forth, worketh, is most known and loved, is the best, and that wherein the Eternal Good is least manifested is the least good of all creatures.

In days gone by we all used to love the creatures that exhibit reflections of the Eternal Good—honour and courage and strength, but when we are made one with Jesus Christ we find we love the creatures that exhibit the fruit of the Spirit. A great alteration has come over our outlook; God is altering the thing that matters.

Therefore when we have to do with the creatures and hold converse with them, and take note of their diverse qualities, the best creatures must always be the dearest to us, and we must cleave to them, and unite ourselves to them.

"What communion hath light with darkness?" The education God puts His children through in life is, "first that which is natural; then that which is spiritual," until we are rooted and grounded in Him, then there is no danger evermore to that life. It is always better further on—through the natural to the spiritual. No wonder the counsel of the Spirit through the writer to the Hebrews is "Ye have need of patience."

Chapter V

THE PHILOSOPHY OF FOLLOWING OUR LORD

First, man must consider the teaching and the life of Jesus Christ, for He hath taught poverty and lived it. And a man should follow the teaching and the life, if he wisheth to be perfect, for He saith, "Whoso loveth Me keepeth My commandments and My counsels, and heareth My word."

In every profession under heaven the great ambition of the natural heart is to be perfect. When Jesus Christ was faced with a splendid specimen of a young man, He said, "If you would be perfect, I will tell you what to do."

"If a man love Me, he will keep My words: and My Father will love him, and We will come unto him, and make our abode with him." The whole outcome of following Jesus is expressed for us in these words, viz., that the Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, will come and make Their abode with the man who loves Jesus and keeps His word. As long as the devil can keep us terrified of thinking, he will always limit the work of God in our souls.

The Way of the Follower Negative

If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me. (Luke 9:23)

The word "deny" embraces what the Apostle Paul meant when he said "mortify therefore," or, make dead, "your members which are upon the earth" (Colossians 3:5).

(a) Infirmity-Sins

For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. (Romans 8:13)

It might now be said, What is man in his selfhood, that he must deny, if he wisheth to follow after Christ? Man's selfhood consisteth in four things. First, his frailty, and that he falleth into sins; and this he must needs set aside; he must die to his defects and sins, and mortify himself.

The disposition in us is either implanted naturally through the first Adam, or implanted supernaturally through the last Adam by regeneration and sanctification. We breed our temperament out of the disposition that is in us. If we are going to follow Jesus, we must do to death infirmity-sins. God cannot do it, we have to do it ourselves. Satan takes occasion of the frailty of the bodily temple and says, "Now you know you cannot do that, you are so infirm, you cannot concentrate your mind," etc. Never allow bodily infirmities to hinder you obeying the commands of Jesus. Paul says, "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection." "I buffet [bruise, mg] my body, and bring it into bondage" (RV). Through the Atonement God deals with the wrong disposition in us, then He gives us the glorious privilege of making our bodies "instruments of righteousness unto God."

(b) Inordinate Affection

Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; . . . inordinate affection. . . . (Colossians 3:5)

Secondly, he is inclined to creatures. For man is inclined by nature to his like, and he must kill nature, and must withdraw from creatures, for God and creatures are opposites. And therefore he who wisheth to have God must leave creatures. For the soul is so narrow that God and the creature cannot dwell together in her; and therefore if God is to dwell in thy soul, the creature must remain without.

In Colossians 3:5 Paul is describing an unsanctified man, but the same man sanctified is inclined to creatures rather than to the Creator. Watch the hard things Jesus says about father, mother, wife, children, our own life (see Luke 14:26); He says if we are going to follow Him, these must be on the outside of the central citadel. The central citadel must be God and God alone. When once we are willing to "do to death" our clinging to creatures, which in certain supreme calls comes between ourselves and God, Jesus says we will receive an hundredfold, because immediately we are rightly related to God He can trust us with creature-relationships without fear of inordinateness. With the majority of us these relationships are cut off, not by our own doing, God has to do it for us; He has to come with strange providences and cut them off, because we have professed that we are going to follow Jesus. We forget that sanctification is only the beginning; the one purpose of sanctification is that Jesus might be "marvelled at in all them that believed."

(c) Inveterate Luxury

But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway. (1 Corinthians 9:27) The third point is, that man to part from selfhood should drop all sensual delight, for he must die to this and kill it in himself if he wisheth to have God's comfort. As St. Bernard saith, "The comfort of God is so noble that no one receiveth it who seeketh comfort elsewhere."

The natural life in a sanctified man or woman is neither moral nor immoral, it is the gift God has given the saint to sacrifice on the altar of love to God. Jesus Christ had a natural body, it was not a sin for Him to be hungry, but it would have been a sin for Him to satisfy that hunger when God had told Him not to, and Satan came to Him when He had fasted forty days and forty nights, and was an hungred, and said, "Satisfy that hunger now." The body we have is not sinful in itself; if it were, it would be untrue to say that Jesus Christ was sinless. Paul's words have reference to the fact that our body has been ruled by a sinful disposition, a disposition which simply means I am going to find my sustaining in creature comforts. After we are sanctified we have the same body, but it is ruled by a new disposition, and we have to sacrifice our natural life to God even as Jesus did, so that we make the natural life spiritual by a series of direct moral choices.

(d) Intellectual Intemperance

And lest I should be exalted above measure . . . through the abundance of the revelations . . . (2 Corinthians 12:7)

The fourth thing a man must let go if he wisheth to follow Christ, is spiritual natural comforts, which are generated in man, by detecting the distinction between spiritual and natural knowledge. . . . Whoever tarries by this natural rational delight, hinders himself from the supernatural delight which God in His grace imparteth to the soul.

Intellectual intemperance is a great snare to a saint. Bodily fasting is child's play compared to the determined fasting from the intellectual apprehension of the teachings of Jesus that goes beyond what we are living out. The characteristic of many spiritual people today is intellectual intemperance, fanatical intoxication with the things of God, wild exuberance, an unlikeness to the sanity of Jesus in the very ways of God. There is a danger in the enjoyment of the delights and the power that come to us through Jesus Christ's salvation without lifting the life into keeping with His teaching, especially in spiritual people whose minds have never been disciplined and they wander off into all kinds of vagaries. That accounts for the distinction we find between spiritual sincerity and spiritual reality.

All this is the negative side of following our Lord. Have we told Jesus we will follow Him? Are we prepared to do our part in keeping under the body for one purpose only, that we may learn the fellowship of following? Are we beginning to realise that until we are born again the teachings of Jesus are simple; after we are born again they become growingly difficult, and we find clouds and darkness are round about the things we thought we knew perfectly well once, and following our Lord is one of these things?

The Way of the Fellowship Positive

And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after Me, is not worthy of Me. He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for My sake shall find it. (Matthew 10:38–39)

It is possible to be grossly selfish in absorbing the salvation of Jesus, to enjoy all its benedictions, and never follow Him one step. So Jesus says, "If any man would follow Me, this is the way"— "let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me."

(a) Working Virtue from God

... for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness. (Romans 6:19)

First, man should kill sin in himself through virtue; for just as man is removed from God by sin must he be brought nigh again unto God by virtue... but let no one believe that he is free from sins, unless he hath taken unto himself all the virtues.

The positive side is this—that we work all the virtues of Jesus in and through our members, but this can only be done when all self-reliance has come to an end (cf. 2 Corinthians 1:9). Our natural virtues are remnants of what God created man to be, not promises of what he is going to be. The natural virtues cannot be patched up to come anywhere near God's demands, and the sign that God is at work in us is that He corrupts our confidence in the natural virtues. It is simply an amplification of the old Gospel hymn—

Nothing in my hand I bring, Simply to Thy Cross I cling!

(b) Willing Poverty for God

For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through His poverty might be rich. (2 Corinthians 8:9)

The second thing that man must shun is the love for creatures. Poverty of spirit is a going out of yourself and out of everything earthly. Thereby he despiseth creatures, is despised by them, and is thus set free. A truly poor man taketh nothing from creatures, but all from God, be it bodily or spiritual. God alone will be the Giver.

To be willingly poor for God is to strip myself of all things for the sake of Jesus Christ. One of the greatest snares is built on what is really a great truth, viz., that every man has Christ in himself. The pernicious use that is made of that statement is that therefore man draws power from himself. Never! Iesus Christ never drew power from Himself: He drew it always from without Himself, viz., from His Father. "The Son can do nothing of Himself" (John 5:19, see John 5:30). Beware of being rich spiritually on earth, only be rich spiritually in heaven. Jesus said to the rich young ruler, "If you will strip yourself and have no riches here, you will lay up for yourself treasure in heaven." Treasure in heaven is faith that has been tried (cf. Revelation 3:18). Immediately we begin to have fellowship with Jesus we have to live the life of faith at all costs; it may be bitter to begin with, but afterwards it is ineffably and indescribably sweet—willing poverty for God, a determined going outside myself and every earthly thing.

(c) Watchful Purity for God

Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for His seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God. (1 John 3:9)

But who knoweth, wilt thou ask, if he have all virtues? I answer to this like John, who saith, "Whosoever is born of God cannot sin." For in the same moment in which God the Father begetteth His Son in the soul, sins and all unlikeness disappear, and all virtues are born in her in a likeness to God.

According to that statement of the Apostle John no one is free from sin unless he is possessed of all the virtues. The Apostle is not teaching sinless perfection; he is teaching perfect sinlessness, which is a different matter. If as sanctified souls we walk in the light, as God is in the light, the revelation is that through the Atonement "the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." That does not mean cleansing from all sin in our consciousness; if it did, it would produce hypocrisy. Any number of people are not conscious of sin, but it does not follow that they are cleansed from all sin. It is not our consciousness that is referred to, but the consciousness God has of us; what we are conscious of is walking in the light with nothing to hide. The outcome of following our Lord is a holiness of character so that God sees nothing to censure because the life of His Son is working out in every particular. Our main idea is to keep steadfastly in the blazing light of God so that He can exhibit the virtues of Jesus through us unhindered. "If ye love Me, ye will keep My commandments" (RV). How many of them? All of them. Then, says Jesus, "We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him"—in heaven? No, here.

(d) Wonderful Passion for God

Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin; that he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God. (1 Peter 4:1–2)

... and whoso would eat its fruit (the fruit of the holy cross) with profit must break it off from the cross by steadfast internal contemplation of the Passion of Our Lord.

All on the cross is full of fruit, and more than all tongues could in truth proclaim. Nay, angels' tongues could not describe the overflowing grace that is there hidden in the Passion of our Lord. Blessed are those who have found this treasure.

Steady contemplation of the Passion of our Lord will "do to death" everything that is not of God. It is only after a long while of going on with God and steady contemplation of the Cross that we begin to understand its meaning. "To day shalt thou be with Me in paradise" is said at only one place, viz., at the Cross.

This is not a message about our salvation and sanctification, but about the outcome of salvation and sanctification in our implicit life, i.e., where we live it and cannot speak it. Jesus said, "If any man would be My disciple..." not, "If any man would be saved and sanctified." "If any man will be My disciple—those are the conditions." Jesus Christ always talked about discipleship with an "If." We are at perfect liberty to toss our spiritual head and say, "No, thank you, that is a bit too stern for me," and the Lord will never say a word, we can do exactly what we like. He will never plead, but the opportunity is there, "If..."

After all, it is the great stern call of Jesus that fascinates men and women quicker than anything. It is not the gospel of being saved from hell and enjoying heaven that attracts men, saving in a very shallow mood; it is Christ crucified that attracts men; Jesus said so—"I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." Jesus Christ never attracts us by the unspeakable bliss of Paradise; He attracts us by an ugly beam. We talk about getting down to the depths of a man's soul: Jesus Christ is the only One Who ever did. If once a man has heard the appeal of Jesus from the Cross, he begins to find there is something there that answers the cry of the human heart and the problem of the whole world. What we have to do as God's servants is to lift up Christ crucified. We can either do it as gramophones, or as those who are in fellowship with Him.

Many of us have heard Jesus Christ's first "Follow Me"—to a life of liberty and joy and gladness; how many of us have heard the second "Follow Me"—"deny your right to yourself and 'do to death' in yourself everything that never was in Me"?

Chapter VI

THE PHILOSOPHY OF GODLINESS

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto My Father. John 14:12

The Way of the Working of God

Then said they unto Him, What shall we do that we might work the works of God? Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him Whom He hath sent. (John 6:28–29)

There are two kinds of work in God—a working within and a working outwardly. The working inward is God's being and nature, the outward working is the creature. . . . God worketh in souls that He may bring them to the first origin from which they have flowed, for by their works they cannot go in again.

These words of Jesus sum up the whole mystery of the work of grace, viz., that to "work the works of God" we must stop working and let God work. "This is the work of God, that ye believe. . . ." Un-belief is the most active thing on earth; it is negative on God's side, not on ours. Un-belief is a fretful, worrying, questioning, annoying, self-centred spirit. To believe is to stop all this and let God work.

(a) The Working Master

... work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure. (Philippians 2:12–13)

If man is to come to God, he must be empty of all work and let God work alone... Now, all that God willeth to have from us is that we be inactive, and let Him be the working Master.

Paul does not say, Work out something that will tell for your salvation; he says, Work out in the expression of your life the salvation God has worked in. If we think for a moment we shall soon know how much we are saved—What does our tongue say? what kind of things do our ears like to listen to? what kind of bodily associates do we like to be with? These things will always tell not only other people but ourselves what kind of salvation God has worked in. In regeneration God works us into relation with Himself that by our bodily expression we may prove Whose we are. If you are trying to be a Christian it is a sure sign you are not one. Fancy trying to be the daughter of your mother!

you cannot help being her daughter. But try and be the daughter of someone else's mother! Unless God has worked in us we shall hinder Him all the time by trying to be His children; we cannot, we have to be born from above (RV mg) by the will of God first, be regenerated; then our working is not working to help God, it is working to let God express through us what He has done in us so that we may prove we are the children of our Father in heaven (see Matthew 5:43–48).

So many of us put prayer and work and consecration in place of the working of God; we make ourselves the workers. God is the Worker, we work out what He works in. Spirituality is what God is after, not religiosity. The great snare in religion without genuine spirituality is that people ape being good when they are absolutely mean. There is no value whatever in religious externals, the only thing that is of value is spiritual reality, and this is spiritual reality—that I allow God to work in me to will and to do of His good pleasure, and then work out what He has worked in, being carefully careless about everything saving my relationship to God.

(b) The Workable Medium

If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered. (John 15:6)

If we were altogether inactive we should be perfect men. For all that is good is the work of God, and if God does not work it, it is not good.

I wonder how many of us are living on the virtues of our grandparents! The natural virtues are remnants of what the original creation of man once was, they are not promises of what man is going to be; what man is going to be is seen in the life of Jesus Christ. The workable medium is man. God takes as the medium of working the stuff we are made of, and all He requires is for us to be inactive and let Him work. When once we are rightly related to God through the Atonement we will be inactive and not in the way of His working in us as He worked in Jesus; consequently we shall be able to work out in our natural life all that God wills. It is the old twist, we will try to do what God alone can do, and then we mourn before God because He won't do what we alone can do. We put up sighing petitions—"I have tried to be good"; "I have tried to sanctify myself." All that is the work of God, and the best thing to do is to stop trying and let God do it.

What we have to do, and what God cannot do, is to work out what He has worked in. We try to do God's work for Him, and God has to wait until we are passive enough to let Him work in us. To believe in Jesus means retiring and letting God take the mastership inside. That is all God asks of us. Have we ever got into the way of letting God work, or are we so amazingly important that we really wonder in our nerves and ways what the Almighty does before we are up in the morning! We are so certain we know what is right, and if we don't always keep at it God cannot get on. Compare that view with the grand, marvellous working of God in the life of the Lord Jesus. Our Lord did not work for God; He said, "The Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works." Have we any faith in God at all? Do we really expect God to work in us the good pleasure of His will, or do we expect He will only do it as we pray and plead and sacrifice? All these things shut the door to God working. What we have to ask away from, to knock at, to seek through, are these pressing strivings of our own—

When we stay our feeble efforts, And from struggling cease, Unconditional surrender Brings us God's own peace.

—a doctrine easily travestied, but a doctrine God never safeguards. The whole basis of modern Christian work is the great impulsive desire to evade concentration on God. We will work for Him any day rather than let Him work in us. When a man or woman realises what God does work in them through Jesus Christ, they become almost lunatic with joy in the eyes of the world. It is this truth we are trying to state, viz., the realisation of the wonderful salvation of God.

(c) The Worker's Manner

And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity. (1 Corinthians 13:13)

How is a man to know if his work is of himself or from God? Shortly be it said; there are three supernatural divine virtues, Faith, Hope, and Love or Charity; whatever increaseth virtues is from God, but what diminisheth them is a sign that it is the work of man. . . . For what man worketh of himself, he applieth to himself and to time . . . but what God worketh, draweth a man away from himself to eternity, and this increaseth Faith, Hope, and Charity.

How much of faith, hope, and love is worked in us when we try to convince somebody else? It is not our business to convince other people, that is the insistence of a merely intellectual, unspiritual life. The Spirit of God will do the convicting when we are in the relationship where we simply convey God's word. We exploit the word of God in order to fit it into some view of our own that we have generated; but when it comes to the great calm peace and rest of the Lord Iesus, we can easily test where we are. To "rest in the LORD" is the perfection of inward activity. In the ordinary reasoning of man it means sitting with folded arms and letting God do everything; in reality it is being so absolutely stayed on God that we are free to do the active work of men without fuss. The times God works most wonderfully are the times we never think about it. When we work of ourselves we always connect things with time. "What is the good of faith, hope and love when I have to earn my living?" Compare that outlook with what Jesus says in the Sermon on the Mount—"Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." It means on our part a continual carelessness about everything but that one thing. The great curse of modern Christianity is that people will not be careless about things they have no right to be careful about, and they will not let God make them careful about their relationship to Him. Sum it up for yourself—what do you think about most, not on the surface, but in the deep centre of your centre? What is the real basal thought of your life—"what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; ... what ye shall put on"? None of us are so stupid or lacking in cunning as to say we do think of these things: but if we think of what will happen to "all these things" if we put God first, we know where we are, God is not first. If He is first you know you can never think of anything He will forget.

The Way of the Working of the Godly

Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; . . . and all things are of God. (2 Corinthians 5:17–18)

What is the divine work? It is twofold, what God worketh in the soul, one the work of grace, the other essential and divine. By the work of grace man is prepared for the essential . . . by grace God maketh man well-pleasing, it driveth him away from all defective things on to virtue, so that with it he obtaineth all virtues.

The only sign that we are new creations (RV mg) in Christ Jesus is that we know all things are of God. When we are in difficult circumstances, when we are hard up, when friends slander us, to whom do we go? If we know that "all things are of God," then we certainly are new creations in Christ Jesus. The things that upset the external life reveal where we live. If we are in Christ the whole basis of our goings is God, not conceptions of God, not ideas of God, but God Himself. We do not need any more ideas about God, the world is full of ideas about God, they are all worthless, because the ideas of God in anyone's head are of no more use than our own ideas. What we need is a real God, not more ideas about Him. Immediately we get a real God we find that "old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new"; we are so absolutely one with God that we never think of saying we are, the whole life is hid with Christ in God.

(a) The Experimental Virtue

For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God. (Ephesians 2:8)

God worketh through His grace in man, when He draweth him away from sin and leadeth him on to virtue, if man leaveth sin and exerciseth virtue, this is a grace of God.

When we are first born again of the Spirit and become rightly related to God, the whole set of our life is along God's line, other people looking at us know how marvellously God has transformed us; we do things and wonder why we do them. That is experimental virtue, but it is accidental, that is, the expression in our life is that of spiritual innocence not of spiritual holiness yet; then slowly and surely the Holy Spirit leads on to the next thing—the essence of virtue.

(b) The Essence of Virtue

My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you. (Galatians 4:19)

The second work that God worketh in the soul is essential; when man cometh to this that he hath obtained all accidental virtue, and so now arriveth at the essence of virtue, then God worketh all virtue in him in an essential way, namely, the Heavenly Father begetteth His Son in the soul, and this birth raiseth the spirit above all created things into God.

"Until Christ"—not Jesus Christ, but Christ, the Son of God, Who was Incarnate once as a Man called Jesus Christ—"until Christ be formed in you." No wonder Paul talks about "the riches of the glory of this mystery; . . . which is Christ in you, the hope of glory." This is not an innocent state, it is a holy state, the very essence of the life is holy, and as we draw on His resurrection life, the life of Jesus is manifested in our mortal flesh.

(c) The Essential Vision

But God... hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. (Ephesians 2:4, 6)

Nevertheless grace leaveth not the man, but it directeth and ordereth the forces of man and cherisheth the divine birth in the essence of the soul; . . . the spirit of man hath now passed over to the Godhead.

Being seated together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus does not mean lolling about on the mount of transfiguration, singing ecstatic hymns, and letting demon-possessed boys go to the devil in the valley; it means being in the accursed places of this earth as far as the walk of the feet is concerned, but in undisturbed communion with God.

In the historic Jesus Christ the spirit of man passed over to the Godhead and Jesus saw essentially, not experimentally, and the same thing happens when Christ is formed in us. God's grace does not leave a man after an experience of grace. The common idea of how to live the right life seems to be that it is by getting continual "bouts" of God's grace, that an insight into God's grace will last us several days. As a matter of fact it won't last us any time. That is not what God's grace means.

"... while we look not at the things which are seen"—that battle never stops. The things that are seen are not the devil, but the pressing things, the things that distract; when Christ is formed in us and the essential vision comes through looking at the things which are not seen, we find that God makes other people shadows. If my saintly friends are images of God to me, I have much further to go, yet. God alone must be my Stay and Source and everything. That is the way the godly life is lived.

What is a godly life? A life like God in my bodily edition. Imitation is the great stumbling-block to sanctification. Be yourself first, then go to your own funeral, and let God for ever after be All in all.

Chapter VII

THE PHILOSOPHY OF REASON

Essence of Reason in the Saint

... being ready always to give answer to every man that asketh you a reason concerning the hope that is in you. (1 Peter 3:15 RV)

To give an answer concerning the hope that is in us is not the same thing as convincing by reasonable argument why that hope is in us. A line we are continually apt to be caught by is that of argumentatively reasoning out why we are what we are; we cannot argue that out. There is not a saint amongst us who can give explicit reasonings concerning the hope that is in us, but we can always give this reason: we have received the Holy Spirit, and He has witnessed that the truths of Jesus are the truths for us. When we give that answer, anyone who hears it and refuses to try the same way of getting at the truth is condemned. If a man refuses one way of getting at the truth because he does not like that way, he ceases to be an honest man.

(a) The Reach of Reason

I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me. (Galatians 2:20 RV)

The reason . . . is always striving after this essential working. . . . By this act of hastening after the divine work, she empties herself of all created images, and with a supernatural light she presseth into the mystery of the hidden Godhead.

Reason always strives for a true expression. Soul is spirit expressing itself rationally, and whenever the work of God in a man's soul (as in the Apostle Paul's) is stated, it does not contradict the rational element, it transcends it. When a man is born again his personality becomes dead to earth as the source of its inspiration and is only alive to God. The great snare is to make reason work in the circle of our experience and not in the circle of God. As long as we use the image of our experience, of our feelings, of our answers to prayer, we shall never begin to understand what the Apostle Paul means when he says, "I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me" (RV). The whole exercise of man's essential reason is drawing on God as the source of life. The hindrance comes when we begin to keep sensuous images spiritually in our minds. Those of us who have never had visions or ecstasies ought to be very thankful. Visions, and any emotions at all, are the greatest snare to a spiritual life, because immediately we get them we are apt to build them round our reasoning, and our reasoning round them and go no further. Over and over again sanctified people stagnate, they do not go back and they do not go on, they stagnate, they become stiller and stiller, and muddier and muddier, spiritually not morally, until ultimately there comes a sort of scum over the spiritual life and you wonder what is the matter with them. They are still true to God, still true to their testimony of what God has done for them, but they have never exercised the great God-given reason that is in them and got beyond the images of their experience into the knowledge that "God alone is life"—transcending all we call experience. It is because people will not take the labour to think that the snare gets hold of them, and remember, thinking is a tremendous labour (see 2 Corinthians 10:5).

(b) The Reaction against Reason

Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding. (Psalm 32:9)

For what the creature chooseth instead of God is done by sensuality and not by the reason . . . and whoso chooseth the creature instead of God, is not a rational man, but is as an irrational beast.

We use the term rational when we should say "sensual." Sensuality is a word that has lost its meaning in the higher realm to us, we only talk of sensuality on the grovelling line, but sensuality reaches higher, it means that bodily satisfaction is taken as the source of life—what I possess, what I feel, that is not rationalism but sensuality, and when it is allowed to dominate it works out as Paul says—they "became vain in their reasonings, and their senseless heart was darkened" (RV; see Romans 1:18–23). If we will let reason act it will make itself so felt that a man has to say, "There is more than this"; the visible things he sees and knows awaken in him a sense that there is something more than these. Reason must not be prevented from reaching to God.

In the religious domain sensuality takes another guise, it becomes either pietistic or ritualistic, both are irrational. The pietistic tendency in this country is a much bigger curse than the ritualistic tendency, that is a mere excrescence that will be always as long as human beings are. The real peril is the sensual piety that is not based on a rational life with God, but on certain kinds of devotion, certain needs of consecration, certain demands of my personal life. When you come to the New Testament, particularly the writings of the Apostle Paul, you find that kind of piety is torn to shreds (e.g. Colossians 2:20-23). All fanaticism and the things that are foreign to the teachings of Jesus Christ start from spiritual sensuality, which means I have images in my mind of what I want to be, and what I am, and what I have experienced. These images hinder reason from working. Beware of any image at all in your mind but Jesus Christ, an image of sanctification, or devotion, or any other thing on earth will be the peril of your rational spiritual life. Have we any idea that it is our devotion, our consecration, the times we give to prayer, the service rendered, what we have given up, because we have been through this and that experience we are where we are?—every one of them is a hidden irrational snare. No wonder the Apostle Paul was so anxious we should get on this rational line. The essence of reason in the saint—what is it? The Holy Ghost in me being obeyed, revealing the things of Jesus.

(c) The Right Rational Man

... but the water that I shall give him shall become in him a well of water. . . . I am the bread of life. (John 4:14 RV; 6:35)

For the right reason seeketh God, and removes from creatures whether they be bodily or spiritual, and whoso cometh to this reason is a right, rational man, whose reason is shone through with divine light, in which you know the Godhead and forget the earthy.

The idea left in our minds by these two symbols is water measureless and bread inexhaustible. You can never be caught up by the externals of the symbols Jesus uses, He never leaves any room for sensuality, He only leaves room for the Spirit of God, consequently the symbols are uninterpretable saving to reason inspired by the Spirit of God. The Holy Spirit never swamps our personal spirit, He invades it and energises it so that the light of God in our reason gives us the power and delight of forgetting earthly things. As we take these subjects, if you are alive, your mind will say every now and again, "Oh, stop and let us think longer of this," but the Spirit of God won't stop. The reason for it is that God's Book is packed full of overwhelming riches, they are unsearchable, the more we have the more there is to have. It is a great boon to know there are deep things to know. The curse of the majority of spiritual Christians is that they are too cocksure and certain there is nothing more to know than they know. That is spiritual insanity. The more we go on with God the more amazed we are at what there is to find out, until we begin to use the power God gives us to forget earthly things, to be carefully careless about them, but never careless about our relationship to God.

Exercise of Reason in the Saint

But desire earnestly the greater gifts. And a still more excellent way shew I unto you. (1 Corinthians 12:31 RV)

Good things will always be the bane of the spiritual life until they are wedded to and lost in the best. When God begins with us He gives us good things, He showers them down (see Matthew 5:45); God does not withhold the best, He cannot give it until we are ready to receive it. Receive the Holy Spirit and let your reason be lifted out of images and out of the good, and instantly you will be lifted into the best.

Have you ever noticed the vague indefiniteness of the Bible? Unless we are spiritual we shall say, "I do wish the Bible would talk clearly; why does it not talk as clearly as some little books I have?" If it did, the Bible would be interpretable without any knowledge of God at all. The only way we can understand whether Jesus Christ's teaching of God is by the Spirit that is in Jesus (see John 7:17).

(a) The More Excellent Way (2 Peter 1:4–7) ... adding on your part all diligence. (2 Peter 1:5 RV)

For virtue is never filled up in full measure, nor followed in the highest, except man strip himself of the love of all temporal possessions till he exerciseth himself in all virtue, and lose the image of all virtue, and cometh to the faculty of no longer being able to work any virtue outwardly, but only essentially and not accidentally.

Until you have stopped trying to be good and being pleased with the evidences of holiness in yourself, you will never open the wicket gate that leads to the more excellent way. The life "hid with Christ in God" that is the more excellent way. You can never talk of Jesus Christ in the light of any one virtue, if you do, you feel you have not described Him; you can only talk of Him as the Bible does-God-Man. When we describe men we have to mention some particular virtue. People who deal with Bible characters are inclined to fix on some virtue which becomes rotten before the end of the life. When the Spirit of God has His way with us we go on till there is only one thing left—"they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus." In evangelical work it is not preaching holiness, or sanctification, or bodily healing, it is preaching Christ Jesus, "I, if I be lifted up, ... will draw all men unto Me."

Watch the corruption of the natural virtues in yourself. We have to learn that most insufferably difficult lesson that God never patches up our natural virtues, because our natural virtues can never come anywhere near what Jesus Christ wants. Over and over again men and women are so troubled at finding their natural virtues break down that they dare not say a word about it to themselves, let alone to anyone else. The reason for it is that God wants to get us out of the love of virtue and in love with the God of virtue—stripped of all possessions but our knowledge of Him.

(b) The Most Extraordinary Wonder (2 Corinthians 9:6-1)

And God is able to make all grace abound unto you. (2 Corinthians 9:8 RV)

So long as a man hath he must give, and when he hath nothing more he is free. Freedom is much nobler than giving was before. For he giveth no more in accident but in essence.

Our Lord emptied Himself (RV) and had nothing all the days of His earthly life, consequently He was free for God to lavish His gifts through Him to others. Think of the rushes with which we come in front of our Heavenly Father; whenever we see an occasion we rush in and say, "I can do this, you need not trouble God." I wonder if we are learning determinedly to possess nothing? It is possessing things that makes us so conceited—"Oh yes, I can give prayer for you; I can give this and that for you." We have to get to the place about which Jesus talked to the rich young ruler where we are so absolutely empty and poor that we have nothing, and God knows we have nothing, then He can do through us what He likes. Would that we would quickly get rid of all we have, give it away till there is nothing left, then there is a chance for God to pour through in rivers for other people.

(c) The More Exceeding Worship

I beseech you therefore . . . to present your bodies a living sacrifice, . . . which is your spiritual worship [mg]. (Romans 12:1 RV)

Therefore also a teacher saith, "It is good when a man imparts his property and cometh to the help of his fellow men; but it is far better to give all and to follow Christ in a poor life."

Worship is giving the best we have unreservedly to God. Jesus Christ was entirely merciful because He kept nothing at all. We are merciful in spots, in a fragmentary way, because we will stick to our opinionettes. Whatever makes us spiritually satisfied will twist our mercy at once, because an opinionette is attached to every spot where we are satisfied, and when anyone comes in contact with that spot of satisfaction we are merciless to them. Jesus Christ was never merciless, and it is only as we draw on His life that we are like our Father in heaven. The only safety is to live the life hid with Christ in God. As long as we are consciously there, we are not there. It is only when we are there that it never occurs to us that we are, but the evidence is strong because others are getting the blessings of God through us and are helping themselves to us, even as Jesus Christ was made broken bread and poured-out wine for us. God cannot make some of us into broken bread because there are bits of unbaked dough in us that would produce indigestion. We have to go into the furnace again to be baked properly until we are no more like Ephraim, "a cake not turned."

Expression of Resurrection Reason in the Saint

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord. (Revelation 14:13)

(a) The Matter of Death

Except a grain of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth by itself alone; but if it die, it beareth much fruit. (John 12:24 RV)

Therefore we should make ourselves poor, that we may fundamentally die, and in this dying be made alive again.

Death is God's delightful way of giving us life. The monks in the early ages shut themselves away from everything to prove they were dead to it all, and when they got away they found themselves more alive than ever. Jesus never shut Himself away from things, the first place He took His disciples to was a marriage feast. He did not cut Himself off from society, He was not aloof, so much was He not aloof that they called Him "a gluttonous man, and a winebibber!" But there was one characteristic of Jesus—He was fundamentally dead to the whole thing, it had no appeal to Him. The "hundredfold" which Jesus promised means that God can trust a man anywhere and with anything when he is fundamentally dead to things.

(b) The Manner of Devotion

If thou wouldest be perfect, go, sell that thou hast, . . . and come, follow Me. (Matthew 19:21 RV)

This selling means the self-denial of man; the giving away is virtue, the following of Jesus is fundamentally to die, so that dying completely to himself God may live perfectly in him.

Immediately that is experienced we are alive with the effulgent life of God. We use the phrase "drawing on the resurrection life of Jesus," but try it, you cannot draw on it when you like. You will never get one breath of that life until you are dead, that is, dead to any desire that you want a blessing for body or soul or spirit. Immediately you die to that, the life of God is in you, and you don't know where you are with the exuberance of it. To put it in the negative way—the bits in us that won't yield to God are the bits we cling to. We are always going back to the grave and saying, "I was always respectable here; I don't need Christ there; I always had a good view of what was right and pure." Instantly the life of God in us wilts; but when the dying is gone through with and maintained (I am not talking about dying to sin, but about dying right out to my right to myself in any shape or form), then the life of Jesus can be manifested in my mortal flesh (see 2 Corinthians 4:10–12).

(c) The Method of the Discipline of Death

For ye died, and your life is hid with Christ in God. (Colossians 3:3 RV)

Blessed is the man who can die all manner of deaths, but this dying is of such a nature that no man can rightly understand it, and he is the most rational who understandeth this dying the best. For no one understandeth it save he to whom God hath revealed it.

This secret is revealed to the humblest child of God who receives, recognises and relies on the Holy Spirit, and it leads to only one place, the effulgent life of God, while we walk in the light as He is in the light. The trouble with most of us is that we will walk only in the light of our conviction of what the light is. If you are live to God He will never take from you the amazing mercy of having something put to death. Jesus sacrificed His natural life and made it spiritual by obeying His Father's voice, and we have any number of glorious opportunities of proving how much we love God by the delighted way we go to sacrifice for Him.

Chapter VIII

THE PHILOSOPHY OF LOVE

Mark 12:29-31

The Way of the Sovereign Preference of the Heart

Lovest thou Me? (John 21:15–17)

And these are the right lovers of God, who love God with their whole heart. And they who love God with their whole heart give up all hodily things for the sake of God.

Faith, hope, love (RV), the three supernatural virtues, have a twofold aspect in the saint's life. The first is seen in the early experiences of grace when these virtues are accidental; the second, when grace is worked into us and these virtues are essential and abiding. When the work of God's grace begins, "the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost," not the power to love God, but the essential nature of God. When we experience what technically we call being born again of the Spirit of God, we have "spurts" of faith, hope, love, they come but we cannot grip them and they go; when we experience what technically we call sanctification those virtues abide, they are not accidental any more. The test of the life "hid with Christ in God" is not the experience of salvation or sanctification, but the relationship into which those experiences have led us. It is only by realising the love of God in us by His grace that we are led by His entrancing power in us whither we would not.

Love is the sovereign preference of my person for another person, and Jesus says that other Person must be Himself. Ask yourself what sort of conception you have of loving God. The majority of us have a bloodless idea, an impersonal, ethereal, vague abstraction, called "love to God." Read Jesus Christ's conception; He mentions relationships of the closest, most personal, most passionate order, and says that our love for Him must be closer and more personal than any of those (see Luke 14:26). How is it to be? Only by the work of the sovereign grace of God. If we have not realised the shedding abroad of the essential nature of God in our hearts, the words of Jesus ought to make us realise the necessity of it—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God from [RV mg] all thy heart. . . . " To love God with all my heart means to be weaned from the dominance of earthly things as a guide; there is only one dominant passion in the deepest centre of the personality, and that is the love of God.

The Way of the Soul's Passion for God

Whosoever shall lose his life for My sake shall find it. (Matthew 16:25 RV)

They also love with their whole soul; that is, when they give up their life for the sake of God; for the soul giveth life to the body, and this same life they give entirely to God.

The only way to love God with all our soul is to give up our lives for His sake, not give our lives to God, that is an elemental point, but when that has been done, after our lives have been given to God, we ought to lay them down for God (see 1 John 3:16). Jesus Christ laid down His holy life for His Father's purposes, then if we are God's children we have to lay down our lives for His sake, not for the sake of a truth, not for the sake of devotion to a doctrine, but for Jesus Christ's sake—the personal relationship all through (cf. Luke 6:22-23). Have I ever realised the glorious opportunity I have of laying down my life for Jesus? It does not mean that we lay down our lives in the crisis of death; what God wants is the sacrifice through death, which enables us to do what Jesus did—He sacrificed His life; His death comes in as a totally new revelation. Every morning we wake, and every moment of the day, we have this glorious privilege of sacrificing our holy selves to and for Jesus Christ (see Romans 12:1).

Beware of the subtle danger that gets hold of our spiritual life when we trust in our experience. Experience is absolutely nothing if it is not the gateway only to a relationship. The experience of sanctification is not the slightest atom of use unless it has enabled me to realise that that experience means a totally new relationship. Sanctification may take a few moments of realised transaction, but all the rest of the life goes to prove what that transaction means.

The Way of the Mind's Penetration into God (1 John 3:2-3)

... when He shall appear, we shall be like Him. (1 John 3:2)

They also love God with all their mind; that is, when their mind soareth above all created things, and penetrates into the uncreated good, which is God, and then loseth itself in the secret darkness of the unknown God. Therein it loseth itself and escapeth, so that it can no more come out.

To love God with all our mind we have to "soar above created things, and penetrate into the uncreated good," viz., God. When the Spirit of God begins to deal on this side of things we shall feel at sea, if we are not spiritual, as to what is meant; when we are spiritual we feel with our hearts, not with our heads—"Yes, I begin to see what it means." When anything begins to get vague, bring yourself up against the revelation of Jesus Christ, He is a Fact, and He is the Pattern of what we ought to be as Christians (cf. Matthew 5:48). How much of our time are we giving for God to graduate us in the essential life? We know all about the accidental life, about the sudden spurts that come to us, the sudden times of illumination and sweet inspiration from God's Book; what Our Lord is getting at is not a life of that description at all, but a life that has lost all sense of its own isolation and smallness and is taken up with God. Not only is the life hid with Christ in God, but the heart is blazing with love to God, and the mind is able to begin slowly bit by bit to bring every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ, till we never trouble about ourselves or our conscious life, we are taken up only with thoughts that are worthy of God.

The Way of the Strength of Stillness for God (Ephesians 3:16–19)

That He would grant you . . . to be strengthened with might . . . ; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith . . . (Ephesians 3:16–17)

They further love God with all their strength; that is, they ordain all their powers according to the highest discretion, and they direct all of them to one end, and with this effort they penetrate into God.

The whole strength of the personal life, the personal spirit, is to be so gripped by the Spirit of God that we begin to comprehend His meaning. It is always risky to use a phrase with a fringe, a phrase that has a definite kernel of meaning but a fringe of something that is not definite. The way we get off on to the fringe is by ecstasy, and ecstasies may mean anything from the devil to God. An ecstasy is something which takes us clean beyond our own control and we do not know what we are doing, whether we are being inspired by God or the devil, whether we are jabbering with angels' tongues or demons'. When you come to the words of Our Lord or of the Apostle Paul the one great safeguard is the absolute sanity of the whole thing. "... that ye ... may be able to comprehend . . . and to know"—there is no ecstasy there, no being carried out of yourself into a swoon, no danger of what the mystics of the Middle Ages called Quietism, no danger of losing the conditions of morality; but slowly and surely we begin to comprehend the love of Christ, i.e., the essential nature of God which the Holy Ghost has imparted to us, which enables us to live the same kind of life that Jesus lived down here through His marvellous Atonement. Anything that partakes of the nature of swamping our personality out of our control is never of God. Do we ever find a time in the life of the Lord Jesus Christ when He was carried beyond His own control? Never once. Do we ever find Him in a spiritual panic, crediting God with it? Never once; and the one great marvel of the work of the Holy Ghost is that the sanity of Jesus Christ is stamped on every bit of it. Jesus said we should know the work of the Holy Ghost by these signs—"He shall glorify Me"; "He shall teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance all that I said unto you" (RV), and, "He will guide you into all truth." The Spirit of God does not dazzle and startle and amaze us into worshipping God; that is why He takes such a long while, it is bit by bit, process by process, with every power slowly realising and comprehending "with all saints. ..." We cannot comprehend it alone; the "together" aspect of the New Testament is wonderful. Beware of all those things that run off on a tangent spiritually. They begin by saying, "God gave me an impulse to do this"; God never gave anyone any impulse. Watch Jesus Christ, the first thing He checked in the training of the twelve was impulse. Impulse may be all right morally and physically, but it is never right spiritually. Wherever spiritual impulse has been allowed to have its way it has led the soul astray. We must check all impulses by this test—Does this glorify Jesus, or does it only glorify ourselves? Does it bring to our remembrance something Jesus said, that is, does it connect itself with the word of God, or is it beginning to turn us aside and make us seek great things for ourselves? That is where the snare comes. Nowadays, people seem to have an idea that these ecstatic, visionary, excitable, lunatic moments glorify God; they do not, they give an opportunity to the devil. The one thing Jesus Christ did when He came in contact with lunacy was to heal it, and the greatest work of the devil is that he is producing lunacy in the name of God all over the world in the spiritual realm, making people who did know God go off on tangents. What did Jesus say? "... so as to lead astray, if possible, even the elect" (RV). Beware of being carried off into any kind of spiritual ecstasy either in private or in public. There is nothing about ecstasy in these verses: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart"—the sovereign preference of our personality for God. Can I say before God, "For in all the world there is none but Thee, my God, there is none but Thee"? Is it true? is there a woman there? is there a man there? is there a child there? is there a friend there? "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." Do you say, "But that is so stern"? The reason it is stern is that when once God's mighty grace gets my heart wholly absorbed in Him, every other love of my life is safe; but if my love to God is not dominant, my love may prove to be lust. Nearly all the cruelty in the world springs from not understanding this. Lust in its highest and lowest form simply means I seek for a creature to give me what God alone can give, and I become cruel and vindictive and jealous and spiteful to the one from whom I demand what God alone can give.

". . . and with all thy soul." What are we laying down our lives for? Why do so many Christians go a-slumming? why do so many go to the foreign field?

why do so many seek for the salvation of souls? Let us haul ourselves up short and measure ourselves by the standard of Iesus Christ. He said, "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." The mainspring of His love for human souls was His love to the Father; then if I go a-slumming for the same reason, I can never do too much of it; but if my desire for the salvation of souls is the evangelical commercial craze, may God blast it out of me by the fire of the Holy Ghost. There is such a thing as commercialism in souls as there is in business. When we testify and speak, why do we?: is it out of the accident of a poor little paltry experience that we have had, or is it because the whole life is blazing with an amazing desire, planted there by the Holy Ghost, for God to glorify Himself?

Arrived here, all the powers keep silence and rest; this also is the highest work that the powers can perform, when they are inactive and let God only work.

It is only when our lives are hid with Christ in God that we learn how to be silent unto God, not silent about Him, but silent with the strong restful certainty that all is well, behind everything stands God, and the strength of the soul is that it knows it. There are no panics intellectual or moral. What a lot of panicky sparrows we are, the majority of us. We chatter and tweet under God's eaves until we cannot hear His voice at all—until we learn the wonderful life and music of the Lord Jesus telling us that our heavenly Father is the God of the sparrows, and by the marvellous transformation of grace He can turn the sparrows into His nightingales that can sing through every night of sorrow. A sparrow cannot sing through a night of sorrow, and no soul can sing through a night of sorrow unless it has learned to be silent unto God—one look, one thought about my Father in heaven, and it is all right.

The Way of the Freedom of the Will (Romans 6:21-22)

But now being made free from sin . . . (Romans 6:22)

... Thus is the mind bound by God. To this it might be said, If this is so, the freedom of the will is taken away. I answer, the freedom of the will is not taken away but given to it, for then is the will quite free when it cannot bear anything save what God willeth.

"Thus is the mind bound by God. . . ." The complaint of a person who is not spiritual when one talks like that, is that a man's free will is destroyed. It is not, it is given to him. The only thing that gives a personality freedom of will is the salvation of Jesus Christ. The will is not a faculty, will is the whole man active—body, soul and spirit. Let a man get right with God through the Atonement and his activity becomes in that manner and measure akin to Jesus Christ. The whole of my will free to do God's will, that means a holy scorn of putting my neck under any yoke but the yoke of the Lord Jesus Christ. Where are Christians putting their necks nowadays? Why, nine out of every nine and a half of us are absolute cowards, we will only put our necks under the yoke of the set we belong to. It means—"without the camp, bearing His reproach." (See John 14:15; 15:9–10.)

The Way of Hearing the Eternal Word

If a man love Me, he will keep My words. (John 14:23)

When now man... cometh to the third degree of perfection, in which he heareth, in a silent, secret speaking, the everlasting Word which God the Father speaketh in the ground of souls...

We all know how certain verses jump out of a page of the Bible and grip us, full of infinite sweetness and inspiration; at other times they do not. That is what people mean when they say God gave them a message—by the way, do not say that unless God does, we use phrases much too glibly. God may give you the kind of message He gave Isaiah, a blistering, burning message of the altar of God. To be able to hear "the silent, secret speaking" of the Father's voice in the words of the Bible is the essential groundwork of the soul of every saint.

"The words that I have spoken unto you are spirit, and are life" (John 6:63 RV). God makes His own word re-speak in us by His Spirit. He safeguarded that; He uses the words His Son used, and the words those used who He determined should write them (see 2 Peter 1:21). The great insubordination of to-day is, "Who are the apostles? God spake through them, why can't He speak through me?" He will not unless we let the Spirit of God interpret to us what those men said, then He will talk through us, but in no other way. When once a man has learned to hear with the inner ear the word of God he "discardeth his self-hood," and the natural delight in God's word is lost in the realisation that it is God Who is speaking. Do you want to know how self-hood works out?—"I have such a fine message, it will do for such and such an audience"; "I have got a wonderful exposition of this text." Well, burn it and never think any more about it. Give the best you have every time and everywhere. Learn to get into the quiet place where you can hear God's voice speak through the words of the Bible, and never be afraid that you will run dry, He will simply pour the word until you have no room to contain it. It won't be a question of hunting for messages or texts, but of opening the mouth wide and He fills it.

The outcome of Mark 12:29–31 is God four times over—God the King of my heart, God the King of my soul, God the King of my mind, God the King of my strength; nothing other than God; and the working out of it is that we show the same love to our fellow-men as God has shown us. That is the external aspect of this internal relationship, the sovereign preference of my person for God. The love of the heart for Jesus, the life laid down for Jesus, the mind thinking only for Jesus, the strength given over to Jesus, the will working only the will of God, and the ear of the personality hearing only what God has to say.

Chapter IX

THE PHILOSOPHY OF SACRIFICING

Matthew 16:24-26

"I Wonder If I Will or If I Won't"

God does not take the wilful "won't" out of us by salvation; at any stage we may say, "No, thank you, I am delighted to be saved and sanctified, but I am not going any further." Our Lord always prefaced His talks about discipleship with an "if"; it has no reference whatever to a soul's salvation or condemnation, but to the discipleship of the personality.

We must bear in mind that Our Lord in His teaching reveals unalterable and eternal principles. In Matthew 16:25—"For whosoever would save his life shall lose it: and whosoever shall lose it for My sake shall find it" (RV)—Jesus says that the eternal principle of human life is that something must be sacrificed; if we won't sacrifice the natural life, we do the spiritual. Our Lord is not speaking of a punishment to be meted out, He is revealing what is God's eternal principle at the back of human life. We may rage and fret, as men have done, against God's just principles, or we may submit and accept and go on; but Jesus reveals that these principles are as unalterable as God Himself.

"I wonder if I will or if I won't." In sanctification the freedom of the will is brought to its highest critical point. A good many people in order to express the marvellous emancipation that comes by God's salvation make the statement, "I cannot now do the things that are wrong." It is only then we have the choice; when Jesus Christ emancipates us from the power of sin, that second we have the power to disobey, before we had not the power, we were almost obliged to disobey because of the tendency in that direction. So this principle in its full meaning, "I wonder if I will or if I won't," works on the threshold of sanctification— "I wonder if I will devote myself to Jesus Christ, or to a doctrine, or a point of view of my own." Jesus says if we are to be His disciples we must sacrifice everything to that one thing.

Innocent Light under Identification

Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me, . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls. (Matthew 11:29)

But what use doth it bring if a man alway dieth? It bringeth a fivefold use. First, man draweth nigh thereby to his first innocence. . . . They are best in this who have most died to themselves for in that death and denial of self a new delight springeth up, for the death that man suffereth thereby openeth up the hidden joy. Christ also said, "Take My yoke upon you—that is, My Passion—and ye will find rest unto your souls."

The only place we shall find rest is in the direct education by Jesus in His Cross. A new delight springs up in any saint who suffers the yoke of Christ. Beware of dissipating that yoke and making it mean the yoke of a martyr. It is the yoke of a person who owes all he has to the Cross of Christ. Paul wore the yoke when he said, "For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." "Take My yoke upon you"—it is the one yoke men will not wear.

Have I taken the yoke of Christ upon me, and am I walking in the innocent light that comes only from the Spirit of God through the Atonement? When we are born again of the Spirit of God we are made totally new creatures on the inside; that means we have to live according to the new life of innocence that God has given us, and not be dictated to by the clamouring defects of the temple into which that life has been put. The danger is to become wise and prudent, cumbered with much serving, and these things choke the life God has put in (cf. Mark 4:19).

Implicit Love under Identification

Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? (Romans 8:35)

The second use is, that in each such dying a new life ariseth to man, and with this life every time a new love, so that man is overflooded with grace, and his reason is enlightened with divine light, his will is glowing with the fire of divine love . . . so that no one can any more separate him from God.

The natural life of a saint is neither pure nor impure; it is not pure necessarily because the heart is pure, it has to be made pure by the will of the person. To delight in sacrificing the natural to the spiritual means to be overflowing with the grace and love of God, and the manner and measure of the sacrificing depends on—"I wonder if I will or if I won't." Never say, if you are a thoughtful saint, "Since I have been sanctified I have done what I liked." If you have, you are immoral in that degree. If it were true, it would be true of the holiest Being Who ever lived, but it is said of Him that "even Christ pleased not Himself" (Romans 15:3; cf. John 8:28; Hebrews 5:8). There must be something to sacrifice. Jesus says, "If you would be My disciple, you must sacrifice the natural life," i.e., the life that is moral and right and good from the ordinary standpoint of man. We cannot use the terms of natural virtue in describing Jesus Christ. If you say that Jesus was a holy man you feel at once it is not sufficient; or take the terms of intense saintliness, you can never fit them on to Jesus Christ, because there is an element of fanaticism in every saint that there never was in the Lord. There is an amazing sanity in Jesus Christ that shakes the foundations of death and hell, no panic, absolute dominant mastery over everything—such a stupendous mastery that He let men take His strength from Him: "He was crucified through weakness," that was the acme of Godlike strength.

Identity of Liberty under Identification

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. (John 3:3)

Thirdly, if a man is quite pure he is emptied of all defective accident, and receptive of God alone. God is present in all things; if you accomplish all things so, then God only remaineth to us; but this purity must be sought by dying, and if the soul is freed from everything else, she is in a condition to bring forth the Son of God within her.

Bear in mind the audience of Jesus when He said these words; Jesus said them to a mature, upright, godly man, there is no mention of sin, that will come in due course, it comes in the order Jesus said it would, by the Holy Spirit (see John 16:8–9). When the Son of God is born in us He brings us into the liberty of God. "Whosoever is begotten of God doeth no sin" (RV). The only way we can be born again is by renouncing all other good. The "old man," or the man of old, means all the things which have nothing to do with the new life. It does not mean sins, any coward among us will give up wrong things, but will he give up right things? Will we give up the virtues, the principles, the recognition of things that are dearer to the "Adam" life than the God life? The nature of the "Adam" disposition in us rebels against sacrificing natural good. Jesus says, "If you don't sacrifice natural good, you will barter the life I represent." This is the thing men resent with what Paul calls "enmity" (Romans 8:7). The preachers and teachers who have not taken on them the yoke of Christ are always inclined to exalt natural good, natural virtues, natural nobility and heroism; the consequence is Jesus Christ pales more and more into the background until He becomes "as a root out of a dry ground." Imagine a pagan who worshipped natural virtues being told that the Nazarene Carpenter was God's idea expressed in His last syllable to this order of things—it would be, as Paul said, "foolishness unto him." The same thing persists to-day.

Infusion of Likeness under Identification

If we walk in the light, as He is in the light . . . (1 John 1:7)

The fourth use ariseth if God is born in the soul, when God ravisheth the spirit from the soul and casteth her into the darkness of His Godhead, so that she becometh quite like unto God... so that the man becometh a son of grace, as he is a son of nature.

To be a son of God is to be free from the tyranny of the show of things. Adam preferred to take the show of things for the substance, that is, he preferred not to see that the "garment" was not the Person; he refused to listen to the voice of the Creator behind the garment, and when the Creator moved quickly, all Adam could do was to hang on to the skirts of the garment, clutch at the show of things, and the human race has been doing it ever since. Exactly what Jesus said, the spiritual has been bartered because we preferred the natural. The natural is only a manifestation of what is behind. If we walk in the light, not as holy men are in the light, but as God is in the light, we see behind the show of things—God. We become the sons of God by a regenerating internal birth, and when that regenerating principle inside takes its marvellous sway over the natural on the outside, the two are transformed into exactly what God intended them to be. That is the full meaning of the Redemption, but in order to get there the natural must be sacrificed. If I prefer to hug my Father's skirt, I must not be surprised at finding myself in darkness when He gives it a sudden pull; but if I let my Father take me up in His arms, then He can move His skirts as He likes—"Therefore will we not fear, though the earth do change, and though the mountains be moved in the heart of the seas" (RV). I am no longer caught up in the show of things. The saints who are alive when Jesus comes will be "changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye"; all the show of things will be changed instantly by the touch of God into reality.

Incorporation of Life under Identification

For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are sons of God. (Romans 8:14 RV; cf. Philippians 2:15)

Fifthly, if the soul be raised into God, it reigneth also with God. . . . Thus the spirit can do all things with God; he commandeth all with God, he ordereth and leadeth all with God; what God omits, he omitteth; what God doeth, he doeth with God; he worketh all things with God. This unspeakable perfection we obtain through dying.

Being born again of the Spirit is not contrary to God's original plan; for a time it has to be apparently contrary to it because Adam refused to sacrifice the life of nature to the will of God and transform it into a spiritual life by obeying the voice of God. The natural has to be sacrificed for a time, but we shall find the Redemption of Jesus works out via the natural in the end—"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth." In the meantime to be a disciple of Jesus means to be "taboo" in this order of things.

Remember, it was not the "offscouring" that crucified Jesus, it was the highest reach of natural morality crucified Him. It is the refined, cultured, religious, moral people who refuse to sacrifice the natural for the spiritual. When once you get that thought, you understand the inveterate detestation of the Cross of Christ. Where are we with regard to this barter? Are we disciples of Jesus? Who is first, or what is first, in our lives? who is the dominating personality that is dearer to us than life, ourselves or someone else? If it is someone else, who is it? It is only on such lines as these that we come to understand what Jesus meant when He said, "If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself" (RV). What He means is that He and what He stands for must be first. The enemies of the Cross of Christ, whom Paul characterises so strongly, and does it weeping, are those who represent the type of things that attract far more than Jesus Christ. Never put a false issue before men or before yourself. We begin to compare ourselves with ourselves—"Oh well, I have always had refined susceptibilities; I have always had an admiration for what is noble and true and good"; Jesus says, Die to it all. Read Philippians 3—"What things were gain to me, these have I counted loss for Christ" (RV).

"Then said Jesus unto His disciples, If any man would come after Me, let him . . . follow Me." The first "Follow Me" was a fascination for natural ideals. "Are ye able to drink the cup that I drink? . . . We are able" (RV). There is no arrogance there, only hopeless misunderstanding. We all say, "Yes, Lord, I will do anything"; but will you go to the death of that—the death of being willing to go to the death for the noble and true and right? Will you let Jesus take the sense of the heroic right out of you? will you let Him make you see yourself as He sees you until for one moment you stand before the Cross and say, "Nothing in my hands I bring"? How many of us are there to-day? Talk about getting people to hear that, they won't have it! Jesus says they won't. No crowd on earth will ever listen to that, and if under some pretence you get them and preach the Cross of Christ they will turn with a snubbing offence from the whole thing as they did in Our Lord's day (John 6:60, 66). The abominable "show business" is creeping into the very ranks of the saved and sanctified—"We must get the crowds." We must not; we must keep true to the Cross; let folks come and go as they will, let movements come and go, let ourselves be swept along or not, the one main thing is—true to the yoke of Christ, His Cross. The one thing we have to stand against is what is stated in Hebrews 12:1, "Therefore let us . . . lay aside every encumbrance [mg] and the sin which doth so easily beset us" (RV), the sin which is admired (RV mg) in many—the sin that gathers round your feet and stops you running; get stripped of the whole thing and run, with your eye on your File Leader, making "straight paths for your feet, that that which is lame be not turned out of the way" (RV).

THE PHILOSOPHY OF DISCIPLESHIP

Let no man think that sudden in a minute All is accomplished and the work is done:— Though with thine earliest dawn thou shouldst begin it Scarce were it ended in thy setting sun.

Discipleship must always be a personal matter; we can never become disciples in crowds, or even in twos. It is so easy to talk about what "we" mean to do—"we" are going to do marvellous things, and it ends in none of us doing anything. The great element of discipleship is the personal one.

The disciples in the days of His flesh were in a relationship to our Lord which we cannot imagine; they had a unique relationship which no other men have had or will have. We may use the relationship of these men to Jesus as illustrative of those who are devoted to Him but not yet born from above (RV mg), or we may take them as pointing out lines of discipleship after the work of grace has been begun. Discipleship may be looked at from many aspects because it is not a dogma but a declaration. We are using discipleship in this study as an illustration of what happens after salvation. Salvation and discipleship are not one and the same thing. Whenever our Lord speaks of discipleship He prefaces what He says with an "IF." "If any man come after Me . . ." Discipleship is based on devotion to Jesus Christ, not on adherence to a doctrine.

Potential Position by Grace

Then answered Peter and said unto Him, Lo, we have left all, and followed Thee; what then shall we have? (Matthew 19:27 RV; cf. 15:24)

Potential means existing in possibility, not in reality. By regeneration in its twofold phase of salvation and sanctification we are potentially able to perform all the will of God. That does not mean we are doing it, it means that we can do it if we will because God has empowered us (see Philippians 2:12–13). A man in whom the grace of God has begun its work—the grace of God does not respect persons, so I mean any kind of man you can think of—is potentially in the sight of God as Christ: the possibility of being as Christ is there. Whenever the grace of God strikes a man's consciousness and he begins to realise what he is in God's sight, he becomes fanatical, if he is healthy. We have to make allowance in ourselves and others for "the swing of the pendulum," which makes us go to the opposite extreme of what we were before. When once the grace of God has touched our hearts we see nothing but God, we do not see Him in relation to anything else, but only in relation to ourselves on the inside, and we forget to open the gate for gladness. Fanaticism is the insane sign of a sane relationship to God in its initial working. The joy of the incoming grace of God always makes us fanatical. It is the potential position by grace, and God leaves us in that nursery of bliss just as long as He thinks fit, then He begins to take us on another step; we have to make that possible relationship actual. We have not only to be right with God inside, we have to be manifestly rightly related to God on the outside, and this brings us to the painful matter of discipline.

Practical Path in Grace

And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed Me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of His glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones. (Matthew 19:28 RV; cf. Matthew 10:38)

To abandon all, to strip one's self of all, in order to seek and follow Jesus Christ naked to Bethlehem, where He was born, naked to the hall where He was scourged, and naked to Calvary where He died on the cross, is so great a mystery that neither the thing, nor the knowledge of it, is given to any but through faith in the Son of God.

John Wesley

The practical path in grace is to make what is possible actual. That is where many of us hang back; we say, "No, I prefer the bliss and the delight of the simple, ignorant babyhood of 'Bethlehem,' I like to be carried in the arms of God; I do not want to transform that innocence into holy character." The following in the steps of Jesus in discipleship is so great a mystery that few enter into it. When once the Face of the Lord Jesus Christ has broken through, all ecstasies and experiences dwindle in His presence, and the one dominant Leadership becomes more and more clear. We have seen Jesus as we never saw Him before, and the impulsion in us by the grace of God is that we must follow in His steps. As in the life of Mary, the mother of our Lord, a sword pierced through her own soul because of the Son of God, so the sword pierces our natural life as we sacrifice it to the will of God and thus make it spiritual. That is the first lesson in the practical path of grace. We go through bit by bit and realise that there are things Jesus says and the Holy Spirit applies to us, at which the natural cries out, "That is too hard."

The Practice of Pain in Grace

And every one that hath left houses... for My name's sake, shall receive a hundredfold. (Matthew 19:29 RV; cf. Luke 14:26–27)

"If any man come to Me, and hate not . . . , he cannot be My disciple." The word "hate" sounds harsh, and yet it is uttered by the most human of human beings because Jesus was Divine; there was never a human breast that beat with more tenderness than Jesus Christ's. The word "hate" is used as a vehement protest against the pleas to which human nature is only too ready to give a hearing. If we judge our Lord by a standard of humanity that does not recognise God, we have to put a black mark against certain things He said. One such mark would come in connection with His words to His mother at Cana, "Woman, what have I to do with thee?" Another would come in connection with John the Baptist; instead of Jesus going and taking His forerunner out of prison, He simply sends a message to him through his disciples—"Go your way, and tell John. . . . And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Me." But if we could picture the look of our Lord when He spoke the words, it would make a great difference to the interpretation. There was no being on earth with more tenderness than the Lord Jesus, no one who understood the love of a mother as He did, and if we read this into His attitude towards His mother and towards John we shall find the element of pain to which He continually alludes, that is, we have to do things that hurt the best relationships in life without any explanation. If we make our Lord's words the reply of a callous nature, we credit Him with the spirit of the devil; but interpret them in the light of what Jesus says about discipleship, and we shall see that we must sacrifice the natural in order to transform it into the spiritual. All through our Lord's teaching that comes—"If you are going to be My disciple, you must barter the natural." Our Lord is not talking about sin, but about the natural life which is neither moral nor immoral; we make it moral or immoral. Over and over again we come to the practice of pain in grace, and it is the only explanation of the many difficult things Jesus said which make people rebel, or else say that He did not say them.

Have we begun to walk the practical path in grace? Do we know anything about the practice of pain? Watch what the Bible has to say about suffering, and you will find the great characteristic of the life of a child of God is the power to suffer, and through that suffering the natural is transformed into the spiritual. The thing we kick against most is the question of pain and suffering. We have naturally the idea that if we are happy and peaceful we are all right. "I came not to send peace, but a sword," said our Lord—a striking utterance from the Prince of Peace. Happiness is not a sign that we are right with God; happiness is a sign of satisfaction, that is all, and the majority of us can be satisfied on too low a level. Jesus Christ disturbs every kind of satisfaction that is less than delight in God. Every strand of sentimental satisfaction is an indication of how much farther we have to go before we understand the life of God, it is the satisfaction of a smug self-interest which God by circumstances and pain shocks out of us as we go in the discipline of life.

Protest of Power through Grace

... ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones. (Matthew 19:28)

Physical power is nothing before moral power. A frail simple girl can overcome a brute who has the strength of an ox by moral superiority. Think of our Lord's life. The New Testament does not refer to the scene in the Garden as a miracle—"when therefore He said unto them, I am He, they went backward, and fell to the ground" (RV)—it was the inevitable protest of power of a pure holy Being facing unholy men from whom all power went. The wonder is not that Jesus showed His marvellous power, but that He did not show it. He continually covered it up.

Oh! wonderful the wonders left undone!—
And scarce less wonderful than those He wrought!
Oh, self-restraint, passing all human thought,
To have all power and be—as having none!

The great marvel of Jesus was that He was voluntarily weak. "He was crucified through weakness," and, says Paul, "we also are weak in Him." Any coward amongst us can hit back when hit, but it takes an exceedingly strong nature not to hit back. Jesus Christ never did. "Who, when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not"; and if we are going to follow His example we shall find that all His teaching leads along that line. But ultimately, at the final wind-up of His great purpose, those who have followed His steps reign with Him. Those who reign with Him are not the sanctified in possibility, in ecstasy, but those who have gone through actually. Equal duties, not equal rights, is the keynote of the spiritual world; equal rights is the clamour of the natural world. The protest of power through grace, if we are following Jesus, is that we no longer insist on our rights, we see that we fulfil our duty.

That is the philosophy of a poor, perfect, pure discipleship. Remember, these are not conditions of salvation, but of discipleship. Those of us who have entered into a conscious experience of the salvation of Jesus by the grace of God, whose whole inner life is drawn towards God, have the privilege of being disciples, if we will. The Bible never refers to degrees of salvation, but there are degrees of it in actual experience. The spiritual privileges and opportunities of all disciples are equal; it has nothing to do with education or natural ability. "One is your Master, even Christ." We have no business to bring in that abomination of the lower regions that makes us think too little of ourselves; to think too little of ourselves is simply the obverse side of conceit. If I am a disciple of Jesus, He is my Master, I am looking to Him, and the thought of self never enters. So crush on the threshold of your mind any of those lame, limping "oh I can'ts, you see I am not gifted." The great stumbling-block in the way of some people being simple disciples is that they are gifted, so gifted that they won't trust God. So clear away all those things from the thought of discipleship; we all have absolutely equal privileges, and there is no limit to what God can do in and through us.

Jesus Christ never allows anywhere any room for the disciple to say, "Now, Lord, I am going to serve Thee." It never once comes into His outlook on discipleship that the disciple works for Him. He said, "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (RV). How did the Father send Jesus? To do His will. How does Jesus send His disciples? To do His will. "Ye shall be My witnesses" (RV)—a satisfaction to Me wherever you are placed. Our Lord's conception of discipleship is not that we work for God, but that God works through us; He uses us as He likes; He allots our work where He chooses, and we learn obedience as our Master did (Hebrews 5:8).

The one test of a teacher sent from God is that those who listen see and know Jesus Christ better than ever they did. If you are a teacher sent from God your worth in God's sight is estimated by the way you enable people to see Jesus. How are you going to tell whether I am a teacher sent from God or not? You can tell it in no other way than this—that you know Jesus Christ better than ever you did. If a teacher fascinates with his doctrine, his teaching never came from God. The teacher sent from God is the one who clears the way to Jesus and keeps it clear; souls forget altogether about him because the vision of Jesus is the only abiding result. When people are attracted to Jesus Christ through you, see always that you stay on God all the time, and their hearts and affections will never stop at you. The enervation that has crippled many a church, many a Sunday School class and Bible class, is that the pastor or teacher has won people to himself, and the result when they leave is enervating sentimentality. The true man or woman of God never leaves that behind, every remembrance of them makes you want to serve God all the more. So beware of stealing the hearts of the people of God in your mind. If once you get the thought, "It is my winsome way of putting it, my presentation of the truth that attracts"—the only name for that is the ugly name of thief, stealing the hearts of the sheep of God who do not know why they stop at you. Keep the mind stayed on God, and I defy anyone's heart to stop at you, it will always go on to God. The peril comes when we forget that our duty is to present Jesus Christ and never get in the way in thought. The practical certainty that we are not in the way is that we can talk about ourselves; if we are in the way, self-consciousness keeps us from referring to ourselves. The Apostle Paul looked upon himself as an exhibition of what Jesus Christ could do, consequently he continually refers to himself—"And though I am the foremost of sinners, I obtained mercy, for the purpose of furnishing Christ Jesus with a supreme proof of His utter patience, a typical illustration of it for all who were to believe in Him and gain eternal life" (1 Timothy 1:15–17 MOFFATT).

Chapter XI

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE PERFECT LIFE

Matthew 19:16-22

The occasion of a conversation is in many respects as important to consider as its subject. The occasion of this conversation was the coming to Jesus of a splendid, upright, young aristocrat who was consumed with a master passion to possess the life he saw Jesus possessed. He comes with a feeling that there is something he has not yet, in spite of his morality and integrity and his riches, something deeper, more farreaching he can attain to, and he feels instinctively that this Jesus of Nazareth is the One Who can tell him how to possess it. It is to this type of man that Jesus presents a most powerful attraction.

The Occasion of the Conversation of Perfection

The "What" and "May" of Matthew 19:16
Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?

Never confound eternal life with immortality. Eternal has reference to the quality of life, not to its duration. Eternal life is the life Jesus exhibited when He was here on earth, with neither time nor eternity in it, because it is the life of God Himself (see John 17:3). Jesus said, "Ye have not [this] life in yourselves" (RV). What life? The life He had. Men have moral life, physical life and intellectual life apart from Jesus Christ. This rich young ruler felt the fascination of the marvellous life Jesus lived and asked how he might become possessed of the same life. His question was not asked in a captious spirit. Watch the atmosphere of your mood when you ask certain questions. "Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" The great lesson our Lord taught him was that it is not anything he must do, but a relationship he must be willing to get into that is necessary. Other teachers tell us we have to do something—"Consecrate here; do this, leave off that." Jesus Christ always brings us back to one thing—"Stand in right relationship to Me first, then the marvellous doing will be performed in you." It is a question of abandoning all the time, not of doing.

The Obedience to the Conditions of Perfection

The "Why" and "If" of Matthew 19:17–20 Why callest thou Me good? . . . If thou wilt enter into life . . .

It looks at first as if Jesus was captious, as if the young man's question had put Him in a corner; but our Lord wishes him to understand what calling Him "good" and asking Him about "good things" meant—"If I am only a good man, there is no use coming to Me more than to anyone else; but if you mean that you are discerning Who I am," then comes the condition: "but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." The commonplace of the condition must have staggered this clean-living nobleman—"All these things have I kept from my youth up." "Then Jesus beholding him, loved him. . . ." The nobility of moral integrity and sterling natural virtue was lovely in the sight of Jesus because He saw in it a remnant of His Father's former handiwork.

In listening to some evangelical addresses the practical conclusion one is driven to is that we have to be great sinners before we can be saved; and the majority of men are not great sinners. This man was an upright, sterling, religious man; it would be absurd to talk to him about sin, he was not in the place where he could understand what it meant. There are hundreds of clean-living, upright men who are not convicted of sin, I mean sin in the light of the commandments Jesus mentioned. We need to revise the place we put conviction of sin in and the place the Spirit of God puts it in. There is no mention of sin in the apprehension of Saul of Tarsus, yet no one understood sin more fundamentally than the Apostle Paul. If we reverse God's order and refuse to put the recognition of Who Jesus is first, we present a lame type of Christianity which excludes for ever the kind of man represented by this rich young ruler. The most staggering thing about Jesus Christ is that He makes human destiny depend not on goodness or badness, not on things done or not done, but on Who we say He is.

"What lack I yet?" Jesus then instantly presses another "if": "If thou wilt be perfect . . ." The second "if" is much more penetrating than the first. Entrance into life is through the recognition of Who Jesus is, i.e., all we mean by being born again of the Spirit-"If you would enter into life, that is the way." The second "if" is much more searching-"If thou wilt be perfect . . ."—"If you want to be perfect, perfect as I am, perfect as your Father in Heaven is"—then come the conditions. Do we really want to be perfect? Beware of mental quibbling over the word "perfect." Perfection does not mean the full maturity and consummation of a man's powers, but perfect fitness for doing the will of God (cf. Philippians 3:12-15). Supposing Jesus Christ can perfectly adjust me to God, put me so perfectly right that I shall be on the footing where I can do the will of God, do I really want Him to do it? Do I want God at all costs to make me perfect? A great deal depends on what is the real deep desire of our hearts. Can we say with Robert Murray McCheyne¹⁰—"Lord, make me as holy as Thou canst make a saved sinner"? Is that really the desire of our hearts? Our desires come to light always when we press this "if" of Jesus—"If thou wilt be perfect . . ."

The Obliterating Concessions to Perfection The "Go" and "Come" of Matthew 19:21

Go and sell that thou hast, . . . and come and follow Me.

After you have entered into life, come and fulfil the conditions of that life. We are so desperately wise, we continually make out that Jesus did not mean what He said and we spiritualise His meaning into thin air. In this case there is no getting out of what He meant—"If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor." The words mean a voluntary abandoning of property and riches, and a deliberate devoted attachment to Jesus Christ. To you or me Jesus might not say that, but He would say something equivalent over anything we are depending upon. Never push an experience into a principle by which to guide other lives. To the rich young ruler Jesus said, "Loosen yourself from your property because that is the thing that is holding you." The principle is one of fundamental death to possessions while being obliged to use them. "Sell that thou hast ..."—reduce yourself till nothing remains but your consciousness of yourself, and then cast that consciousness at the feet of Christ. That is the bedrock of intense spiritual Christianity. The moral integrity of this man made him see clearly what Jesus meant. A man who had been morally twisted would not have seen, but this man's mind was unwarped by moral damage and when Jesus brought him straight to the point, he saw it clearly.

"Go and sell that thou hast. . . . " "Do you mean to say that it is necessary for our soul's salvation to do that?" Our Lord is not talking about salvation, He is saying—"If thou wilt be perfect . . ." Do mark the if's of Jesus. "If any man would be my disciple . . ." Remember, the conditions of discipleship are not the conditions for salvation. We are perfectly at liberty to say, "No, thank you, I am much obliged for being delivered from hell, very thankful to escape the abominations of sin, but when it comes to these conditions it is rather too much; I have my own interests in life, my own possessions."

The Obstructing Counterpoise to Perfection The "When" and "Went" of Matthew 19:22

But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions.

"Counterpoise" means an equally heavy weight in the other scale. We hear a thing, not when it is spoken, but when we are in a state to listen. Most of us have only ears to hear what we intend to agree with, but when the surgical operation of the Spirit of God has been performed on the inside and our perceiving powers are awakened to understand what we hear, then we get to the condition of this young man. When he heard what Jesus said he did not dispute it, he did not argue, he did not say, "I fail to perceive the subtlety of Your meaning"; he heard it, and he found he had too big an interest in the other scale and he drooped away from Jesus in sadness, not in rebellion.

Our Lord's statements seem so simple and gentle that we swallow them and say, "Yes, I accept Jesus as a Teacher," then His words seem to slip out of our minds; they have not, they have gone into the subconscious mind, and when we come across something in our circumstances, up comes one of those words and we hear it for the first time and it makes us reel with amazement. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." What have we ears for?

"Go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor." Remember, Jesus did not claim any of the rich young ruler's possessions; He did not say, "Consecrate them to Me"; He did not say, "Sell that thou hast, and give it to My service"; He said, "Sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and for you, you come and follow ^{10.} Robert Murray McCheyne (1813-43): Scottish minister whose short but intense life made a great impact on Scotland.

Me, and you shall have treasure in heaven." One of the most subtle errors is that God wants our possessions; they are not any use to Him. God does not want our possessions, He wants us.

In this incident our Lord reveals His profound antipathy to emotional excitement. The rich young man's powers were in unbewitched working order when Jesus called him to decide. Beware of the "seeking great things for yourself" idea—cold shivers down the back, visions of angels and visitations from God. "I can't decide in this plain, commonplace, ordinary evening as to whether I will serve Jesus or not." That is the only way Jesus Christ ever comes to us. He will never take us at a disadvantage, never terrify us out of our wits by some amazing manifestation of His power and then say "Follow Me." He wants us to decide when all our powers are in full working order, and He chooses the moment when the world, not Himself, is in the ascendant. If we chose Him when He was in the ascendant, in the time of religious emotion and excitement, we would leave Him when the moment of excitement passed, but if we choose Him with all our powers about us, the choice will abide.

"And come and follow Me." It is not only a question of "binding the sacrifice with cords to the horns of the altar," it is a rising in the might of the Holy Ghost, with your feet on the earth but your heart swelling with the love of heaven, conscious that at last you have reached the position to which you were aspiring. How long are some of us who ought to be princes and princesses for God going to be bound up in the show of things? We have asked in tears, "What lack I yet?" This is the road and no other—"Come and follow Me," "And thou shalt have treasure in heaven"—and on earth, what? "An hundredfold of all you left for My sake."

The devotion to Jesus Christ of our person is the effectual working of the evangelical doctrine of Christian perfection.

Chapter XII

THE DISCIPLE AND THE LORD OF DESTINY

Revelation 3

His Divine Integrity

These things saith He that is holy, He that is true . . . (Revelation 3:7)

(a) Harmony with God's Character

These words suggest that our Lord's unlimited sovereignty over human souls rests upon moral fitness. In Revelation 5 this aspect is again alluded to—"Who is worthy to open the book?" The appeal made to us by Jesus Christ is that He is worthy not only in the domain of God, but in the domain of man, consequently He "hath prevailed to open the book." The disciple's Lord is in absolute harmony with the highest man knows and with the highest God has revealed. The Bible is not the authority, the Church is not the authority, the Lord Jesus Christ alone is the Authority. The tendency is strong to make the statements of the Bible simpler than God makes them, the reason being that we will not recognise Jesus Christ as the Authority. It is only when we rely on the Holy Spirit and obey His leadership that the authority of Jesus Christ is recognised. The Holy Spirit will glorify Jesus only, consequently the interpretation of the Bible and of human life depends entirely on how we understand the character of Jesus Christ. If there is anything hidden from us as disciples to-day it is because we are not in a fit state to understand it. As soon as we become fit in spiritual character the thing is revealed, it is concealed at God's discretion until the life is developed sufficiently.

(b) Holiness Supreme with Man

The disciple's Lord is the supreme Authority in every relationship of life the disciple is in or can be in. That is a very obvious point, but think what it means—it means recognising it as impertinent to say, "Oh, well, Jesus Christ does not know my circumstances; the principles involved in His teachings are altogether impracticable for me where I am." That thought never came from the Spirit of God, and it has to be gripped in a vice on the threshold of the mind and allowed no way. If as we obey God such a circumstance is possible where Jesus Christ's precepts and principles are impracticable, then He has misled us. The idea insinuates itself—"Oh, well, I can be justified from my present conduct because of—so and so." We are never justified as disciples in taking any line of action other than that indicated by the teaching of Our Lord and made possible for us by His Spirit. The providence of God fits us into various settings of life to see if we will be disciples in those relationships.

(c) Highest Authority Conceivable

The highest authority conceivable for a man is that of a holy character. The holiest character is the Lord Jesus Christ, therefore His statements are never dogmas, they are declarations. In the Epistles we find the dogmas of belief stated and formulated; but Our Lord never taught dogma, He declared. There is no argument or discussion in what He says, it is not a question of the insight of a marvellous man, but a question of speaking with authority. "He taught them as one having authority" (Matthew 7:29). The disciple realises that Our Lord's statements never spring from a personal point of view; they reveal the eternal character of God as applied to the practical details of life.

His Divine Imperialism

He that hath the key of David . . . (Revelation 3:7)

(a) Abiding Sacredness of His Inheritance

The disciple's Lord has the key to every situation in heaven above or on earth beneath. Other powers that are not of Jesus Christ claim they can open the book, but the unmeasured blight of God rests on an intellectual curiosity that divorces itself from moral and spiritual worth. It is necessary to bear that in mind, for this is a day of intolerant inquisitiveness, people will not wait for the slow, steady, majestic way of the Son of God, they enter in by this door and that, and the consequence is moral, spiritual and physical insanity. All kinds of terrible and awful evils come through men having pressed open domains for themselves. They have refused to have the only authority there is, the authority of a moral, holy character. "But I fear," says Paul, "lest by any means . . . your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ."

(b) Antagonists Scared by His Servants

The easy supremacy of the Lord Jesus Christ in and through the life of a disciple brings the blatant terror of the synagogue of Satan to bow at his feet. "Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan . . . to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee" (Revelation 3:9). This is the age of humiliation for the saints, just as it was the age of humiliation for Our Lord when He was on earth; we cannot stand the humiliation unless we are His disciples, we want to get into the "show business," we want to be successful, to be recognised and known; we want to compromise and put things right and get to an understanding. Never! Stand true to Jesus Christ, "in nothing terrified by your adversaries." We find the features of the synagogue of Satan everywhere, but if the disciple will obey, all that power will crumble down as bluff by the marvellous authority of Jesus Christ. "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." When once fear is taken out, the world is humiliated at the feet of the humblest of saints, it can do nothing, it cannot touch the amazing supremacy that comes through the Divine imperialism of the saint's Lord and Master.

(c) Alpha and Omega

"Í am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last." Jesus Christ is the last word on God, on sin and death, on heaven and hell; the last word on every problem that human life has to face. If you are a disciple, be loyal to Him; that means you will have to choke off any number of things that might fritter you away from the one Centre. Beware of prejudices being put in place of the sovereignty of Jesus Christ, prejudices of doctrine, of conviction or experience. When we go on Jesus Christ's way, slowly and steadily we find He builds up spiritual and moral character along with intellectual discernment, these develop together; if we push one at the expense of the other, we shall get out of touch with God. If our intellectual curiosity pushes the barriers further than God has seen fit to open, our moral character will get out of hand and we shall have pain that God cannot bless, suffering from which He cannot protect us. "The way of transgressors is hard."

"I am the first and the last." Is Jesus Christ the first and the last of my personal creed, the first and last of all I look to and hope for? Frequently the discipline of discipleship has to be delayed until we learn that God's barriers are put there not by sovereign Deity only; they are put there by a God Whose will is absolutely holy and Who has told us plainly, "Not that way" (cf. Deuteronomy 29:29).

His Divine Invincibility

... He that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth. (Revelation 3:7)

(a) Defied but Never Frustrated

The word "door" is used elsewhere in the New Testament for privileges and opportunities ("For a great door and effectual is opened unto me," 1 Corinthians 16:9); but here it means that Jesus Christ's sovereignty is effective everywhere; it is He Who opens the door and He Who shuts. "Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it." Behind the devil is God. God is never in a panic, nothing can be done that He is not absolute Master of, and no one in earth or heaven can shut a door He has opened, nor open a door He has shut. God alters the inevitable when we get in touch with Him. We discover the doors Our Lord opens by watching the things unsaved human nature reacts against. Everything Jesus Christ has done awakens a tremendous reaction against Him in those who are not His disciples—"I won't go that way." Insubordination is the characteristic of to-day. Men defy, but they cannot frustrate, and in the end they come to see that Jesus Christ's is the only way. The gospel gives access into privileges which no man can reach by any other way than the way Jesus Christ has appointed. Unsaved human nature resents this and tries to make out that Jesus Christ will bow in submissive weakness to the way it wants to go. The preaching of the gospel awakens an intense craving and an equally intense resentment. The door is opened wide by a God of holiness and love, and any and every man can enter in through that door, if he will. "I am the way." Jesus Christ is the exclusive Way to the Father.

(b) Divine and for Ever "Never"

Some doors have been shut by God and they will never again be opened. God opens other doors, but we find these closed doors all through the history of man. Some people believe in an omnipotence with no character, they are shut up in a destiny of hopelessness; Jesus Christ can open the door of release and let them right out. There is no door that man or devil has closed but Jesus Christ can open it; but remember, there is the other side, the door He closes no man can open.

(c) Desired Communion

In Revelation 3:20 the metaphor is changed—"Behold, I stand at the door, and knock. . . ." If it is true that no man can open the doors Jesus Christ has closed, it is also true that He never opens the door for His own incoming into the heart and life of a church or an individual. ". . . IF any man . . . open the door, I will come in to him." The experience into which Jesus Christ by His sovereignty can bring us is at-one-ment with God, a full-orbed, unworrying oneness with God.

If Ye Shall Ask is from lectures given at the Bible Training College, London (1911–15); at League of Prayer² gatherings in Britain; to British Commonwealth troops in Egypt³ during World War I.

Where known, date and place appear on the first page of each sermon.

Publication History

 As articles: Many of these chapters appeared first as articles in Tongues of Fire/Spiritual Life magazines or in the Bible Training College (BTC) Monthly Journal.⁴ • As a book: The material was first published as If Ye Shall Ask in 1937. Drawing on her store of notes from Britain and Egypt, Mrs. Chambers compiled this collection expressing the heart of Oswald's teaching on prayer and his practice of it. She selected the short prayers at the beginnings of chapters 2 through 12 from OC's personal prayer journal and from meetings at the Bible Training College.

For additional personal prayers of Oswald Chambers in this volume, see Knocking at God's Door (1957).

FOREWORD TO THE FIRST EDITION

It is with real misgiving as to any ability to worthily express my gratitude to Almighty God for bringing me into contact with His servant Oswald Chambers, that I respond to the request that I should write a foreword to this book. Mr. Chambers was the close personal friend of my mature manhood, with whom the most intimate confidences were shared. Under God. I owe to his friendship not only the opening out of a fuller apprehension of the Redemption of our Lord Jesus Christ, but also the acquirement of the mental development necessary to enable me, in some measure, to state intelligibly to others the results of the knowledge imparted to myself. Among the many axiomatic statements that fell from his lips, the following was particularly enlightening, "Always distinguish clearly the difference between God's order and God's permissive will." And in this book he shows so concisely and simply that under God's dispensational sovereignty, deliverance from sin now is His expressed will, while sickness and limitation are subject to God's sovereignty active in pre-dispensational efficacy. Talked out with God Himself until that perfect harmony between God and our own hearts is an unshakeable fact, these lines of thought enable us to arrive at a restful explanation of most of our difficulties concerning prayer. Oswald Chambers' prayer-life was one of intercession for others. Seldom did he ask specifically for anything material for himself. His whole personal attitude towards God was that of harmonious relationship, and absolute childlike dependence upon his heavenly Father. The precious gems included in this book are more in the nature of ejaculatory response to fresh gleams of light, or fresh insight into personal needs as he enjoyed that close intercourse with his beloved Master. While many other messages on prayer have already been included in some of his other books, this is confined mainly to the talks not otherwise in book form. It will be interesting to know that the first talk was one given to the soldiers at Zeitoun, and explains the significance of the outline, also showing the kind of message the men got there. I cannot wish better for all who read these God-given messages, than that they have the effect of leading them also into that real fellowship that he himself habitually enjoyed with the Lord he loved so much.

PRAYER ALTERS CIRCUMSTANCES THROUGH ME

It is only when a man flounders beyond any grip of himself and cannot understand things that he really prays. It is not part of the natural life of a man to pray. By "natural" I mean the ordinary, sensible, healthy, worldly-minded life. We hear it said that a man will suffer in his life if he does not pray; I question it. Prayer is an interruption to personal ambition, and no man who is busy has time to pray. What will suffer is the life of God in him, which is nourished not by food but by prayer. If we look on prayer as a means of developing ourselves, there is nothing in it at all, nor do we find that idea of prayer in the Bible. Prayer is other than meditation; it is that which develops the life of God in us. When a man is born from above (RV mg), the life of the Son of God begins in him, and he can either starve that life or nourish it. Prayer is the way the life of God is nourished. Our Lord nourished the life of God in Him by prayer; He was continually in contact with His Father. We generally look upon prayer as a means of getting things for ourselves, whereas the Bible idea of prayer is that God's holiness and God's purpose and God's wise order may be brought about, irrespective of who comes or who goes. Our ordinary views of prayer are not found in the New Testament.

When a man is in real distress he prays without reasoning; he does not think things out, he simply spurts it out—"Then they cried unto the LORD in their trouble, and He saved them out of their distresses." When we get into a tight place our logic goes to the winds, and we work from the implicit part of ourselves.

"Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him." Then why ask? Very evidently our ideas about prayer and Jesus Christ's are not the same. Prayer to Him is not a means of getting things from God, but in order that we may get to know God. Prayer, that is, is not to be used as the petted privilege of a spoiled child seeking for ideal conditions in which to indulge his spiritual propensities ad lib.; the purpose of prayer is to reveal the Presence of God, equally present at all times and in every condition.

A man may say, "Well, if the Almighty has decreed things, why need I pray? If He has made up His mind, what is the use of me thinking I can alter His mind by prayer?" We must remember that there is a difference between God's order and God's permissive will. God's order reveals His character; His permissive will applies to what He permits. For instance, it is God's order that there should be no sin, no suffering, no sickness, no limitation and no death; His permissive will is all these things. God has so arranged matters that we are born into His permissive will, and we have to get at His order by an effort of our own, viz., by prayer. To be children of God, according to the New Testament, does not mean that we are creatures of God only, but that we grow into a likeness to God by our own moral character.

I question whether the people who continually ask for prayer meetings know the first element of prayer. It is often an abortion of religious hysterics, a disease of the nerves taking a spiritual twist. Jesus says we are to pray in His name, i.e., in His nature, and His nature is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost when we are born from above (RV mg; see Luke 11:13; Romans 5:5). Again, Jesus did not promise to be at every prayer meeting, but only at those "where two or three are gathered together in My name," i.e., in His nature (Matthew 18:20). Jesus Christ does not pay any attention to the gift of "religious gab," and His words—"But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking," refer not to the mere repetition and form of words, but to the fact that it is never our earnestness that brings us into touch with God, but our Lord Jesus Christ's vitalising death. (See Hebrews 10:19.)

Our Lord in His teaching regarding prayer never once referred to unanswered prayer; He said God always answers prayer. If our prayers are in the name of Jesus, i.e., in accordance with His nature, the answers will not be in accordance with our nature, but with His. We are apt to forget this, and to say without thinking that God does not always answer prayer. He does every time, and when we are in close communion with Him, we realise that we have not been misled.

"Ask, and it shall be given you." We grouse before God, and are apologetic or apathetic, but we ask very few things; yet what a splendid audacity a child-like child has! and our Lord says, "Except ye... become as little children..." Jesus says, "Ask, and God will do." Give Jesus Christ a chance, give Him elbowroom, and no man ever does it until he is at his wits' end. During the war many a man prayed for the first time in his life. When a man is at his wits' end, it is not a cowardly thing to pray, it is the only way to get in touch with Reality. As long as we are self-sufficient and complacent, we don't need to ask God for anything, we don't want Him; it is only when we know we are powerless that we are prepared to listen to Jesus Christ and to do what He says.

Then again our Lord says, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will," i.e., what your will is in. There is very little our wills are in, consequently it is easy to work up false emotions. We intercede in a mechanical way, our minds are not in it. When we see a man going wrong, it is a false way to "buttonhole" him and tell him about it; Jesus Christ says, Come and tell Me, and I will give you life for him that sins not "unto death" (see 1 John 5:16).

Be yourself exactly before God, and present your problems, the things you know you have come to your wits' end about. Ask what you will, and Jesus Christ says your prayers will be answered. We can always tell whether our will is in what we ask by the way we live when we are not praying.

The New Testament view of a Christian is that he is one in whom the Son of God has been revealed, and prayer deals with the nourishment of that life. One way it is nourished is by refusing to worry over anything, for worry means there is something over which we cannot have our own way, and is in reality personal irritation with God. Jesus Christ says, "Don't worry about your life, don't fear them which kill the body; be afraid only of not doing what the Spirit of God indicates to you."

"In every thing give thanks." Never let anything push you to your wits' end, because you will get worried, and worry makes you self-interested and disturbs the nourishment of the life of God. Give thanks to God that He is there, no matter what is happening. Many a man has found God in the belly of hell in the trenches during the days of war, i.e., they came to their wits' end and discovered God. The secret of Christian quietness is not indifference, but the knowledge that God is my Father, He loves me, I shall never think of anything He will forget, and worry becomes an impossibility.

It is not so true that "Prayer changes things" as that prayer changes me, and then I change things; consequently we must not ask God to do what He has created us to do. For instance, Jesus Christ is not a social reformer; He came to alter us first, and if there is any social reform to be done on earth, we must do it. God has so constituted things that prayer on the basis of Redemption alters the way a man looks at things. Prayer is not a question of altering things externally, but of working wonders in a man's disposition. When you pray, things remain the same, but you begin to be different. The same thing when a man falls in love, his circumstances and conditions are the same, but he has a sovereign preference in his heart for another person which transfigures everything. If we have been born from above (RV mg) and Christ is formed in us, instantly we begin to see things differently—"If any man is in Christ, there is a new creation" (RV mg).

Heaven above is brighter blue,
Earth around is sweeter green!
Something lives in every hue
Christless eyes have never seen.
Birds with gladder songs o'erflow,
Flowers with deeper beauties shine,
Since I know, as now I know,
I am His, and He is mine.

George Robinson

The good of praying is that it gets us to know God and enables God to perform His order through us, no matter what His permissive will may be. A man is never what he is in spite of his circumstances, but because of them. "Circumstances," as Reader Harris⁶ once said, "are like feather beds—very comfortable to be on top of, but immensely smothering if they get on top of you." Jesus Christ, by the Spirit of God, always keeps us on top of our circumstances.

How beautiful this undisturbed morning hour is with God!

^{6.} Reader Harris (1847–1909): prominent British barrister, founded the Pentecostal League of Prayer in 1891; friend and mentor to Oswald Chambers.

O Lord, this day my soul would stay upon Thee as Creator of the world, and upon our Lord Jesus Christ as Creator of His life in me. Oh for the power of Thy Spirit to adore Thee in fuller measure!

"What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me? I take the cup of salvation..." Can I think of anything so gracious and complete in surrender and devotion and gratitude as to take from Thee? O Lord, I would that I had a livelier sense of Thee and of Thy bounties continually with me.

O Lord, this day may Thy beauty and grace and soothing peace be in and upon me, and may no wind or weather or anxiety ever touch Thy beauty and Thy peace in my life or in this place.

Chapter II

THE SECRET OF THE SACRED SIMPLICITY OF PRAYER

Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak. Matthew 26:41

These words were spoken in the supreme moment of our Lord's agony; we are immensely flippant if we forget that. No words our Lord ever spoke ought to weigh with us more than these words. We are dealing with the sacred simplicity of prayer. If prayer is not easy, we are wrong; if prayer is an effort, we are out of it. There is only one kind of person who can really pray, and that is the childlike saint, the simple, stupid, supernatural child of God; I do mean "stupid." Immediately you try to explain why God answers prayer on the ground of reason, it is nonsense; God answers prayer on the ground of Redemption and on no other ground. Let us never forget that our prayers are heard, not because we are in earnest, not because we suffer, but because Jesus suffered. It is because our Lord Jesus Christ went through the depths of agony to the last ebb in the Garden of Gethsemane, because He went through Calvary, that we have "boldness to enter into the holy place."

Let us take ourselves across Kedron to the Garden of Gethsemane. We can never fathom the agony in Gethsemane, but at least we need not mis-understand. This is not the agony of a man: this is the distress of God in Man, or rather the distress of God as Man. It is not human in any phase, it is fathomless to a human mind, but we have got several lines to go on so as not to mis-understand. Always beware of the tendency to think of our Lord as an extraordinary human being; He was not, He was God Incarnate.

The Line of the Undiscerned Word of Our Lord

Watch and pray . . .

"Tarry ye here, and watch with Me." Is my idea of prayer based on the keen watching that Jesus Christ asked of His disciples? He did not say, "pray for anything," or, "ask God for anything"; the whole of His attitude toward them was wrapped up in the words, "watch with Me." Our Lord did not say sentimental things or pious things about prayer He said practical and intensely real things, and this is one of them. This is a line of things that opens up nothing to us until it does, because we bring in our own ideas of prayer and do not take into account the Mastership of our Lord. Probably that is our biggest difficulty—that our Lord is not really Master. We use the phrase "Master," but we use it in a more or less pious way, we do not intend to make Him Master practically; we are much more familiar with the idea that Jesus is our Saviour, our Sanctifier, anything that puts Him in the relationship of a supernatural Comrade. We advocate anything that Jesus does, but we do not advocate Him.

"Sit ye here, while I go yonder and pray..." It is customary, and in one sense quite right, to take our Lord as an example of how to pray, but in the fundamental sense He is not. The relationship we have to God is not the same as Jesus Christ's relationship to His Father—especially on this occasion; His is not a relationship: it is a Redemption. So until you are sure about our Lord's Redemption—"sit here, wait." People say, "Why do you waste your time in a Bible Training College? Fancy spending all your time studying the Bible! Think of the people who need to be looked after; think of the thousand and one things there are to do!" Well, they have to be done, but that is not the point. The point is, are we prepared for our Lord to say to us, "Sit ye here, while I go yonder"?

(a) The Appropriate Place of Our Lord's Arranging

Are we prepared to give due weight to the fact that we are not our own masters? Are we devotees to a cause or disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ? He said to the disciples, "Sit ye here"; if they had been like some of us they would have said, "No, it is absurd, we must go and do something."

The more we get into the atmosphere of the New Testament the more we discover the unfathomable and unhasting leisure of our Lord's life, no matter what His agony. The difficulty is that when we do what God wants us to do, our friends say, "It is all very well, but suppose we all did that!" Our Lord did not tell all the disciples to sit there while He prayed; He told only three of them. The point is that we must take the discerning of the haphazard arrangements of our lives from God. If once we accept the Lord Jesus Christ and the domination of His Lordship, then nothing happens by chance, because we know that God is ordering and engineering circumstances; the fuss has gone, the amateur providence has gone, the amateur disposer has gone, and we know that "all things work together for good to them that love God." If Jesus says, "Sit ye here, while I go yonder and pray," the only appropriate thing we can do is to sit there.

(b) The Appointed Place of Our Lord's Associates

"And He took with Him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee . . . "Our Lord opened His sorrow to these three, as far as human beings could appreciate it. Peter may stand well for the phase of the first temptation that betook our Lord—the sensible, material side of things, for help and assistance. James may stand for the second temptation that betook our Lord—the intensely ritualistic; and John may stand for the last temptation—the temptation to compromise with everything in order to win, a great loving monopoly. These three men were taken and appointed by our Lord for one purpose—to see His agony. "Tarry ye here, and watch with Me." He did not put them there to go to sleep; He put them there to wait and watch. Remember, the twelve disciples were all He had; He knew one had gone to betray Him, and that Peter would shortly deny Him with oaths and curses, and that all of them would forsake Him and flee; but He took these three with Him to see the unveiling of His heart—and they slept for their own sorrow.

(c) The Autobiographic Place of Our Lord's Agony "... and began to be sorrowful and sore troubled." Our Lord said to these disciples what He never said to the others; in John 12:27, He said in soliloquy something similar ("Now is My soul troubled; and what shall I say?"), but here He really said to these three,

"My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Have we for one second watched Jesus pray? Have we ever understood why the Holy Ghost and our Lord Himself were so exceptionally careful about the recording of the agony in Gethsemane? This is not the agony of a man or a martyr; this is the agony of God as Man. It is God, as Man, going through the last lap of the supreme, supernatural Redemption of the human race. We ought to give much more time than we do—a great deal more time than we do—to brooding on the fundamental truths on which the Spirit of God works the simplicity of our Christian experience. The fundamental truths are—Redemption and the personal presence of the Holy Ghost, and these two are focused in one mighty Personality, the Lord Jesus Christ. Thank God for the emphasis laid by the Pentecostal League of Prayer on the efficacy of the Holy Ghost to make experimentally real the Redemption of Jesus Christ in individual lives.

Remember, what makes prayer easy is not our wits or our understanding, but the tremendous agony of God in Redemption. A thing is worth just what it costs. Prayer is not what it costs us, but what it cost God to enable us to pray. It cost God so much that a little child can pray. It cost God Almighty so much that anyone can pray. But it is time those of us who name His Name knew the secret of the cost, and the secret is here, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." These words open the door to the autobiography of our Lord's agony. We find the real key to Gethsemane in Matthew 4, which records the temptations of our Lord. Here they come again in a deeper and more appalling manner than ever before. We are not looking here (as we do when we deal with the temptations) at the type of temptation we have to go through; we are dealing here with the grappling of God as Man in the last reaches of historic Redemption.

"But these truths are so big." Why shouldn't they be? Have we to be fed with spooned meat all the time? Is it not time we paid more attention to what it cost God to make it possible for us to live a holy life? We talk about the difficulty of living a holy life; there is the absolute simple ease of Almighty God in living a holy life because it cost Him so much to make it possible. Beware of placing the emphasis on what prayer costs us; it cost God everything to make it possible for us to pray, Jesus did not say to these men, "agonise"; He said, "Watch with Me." Our Lord tried to lift the veil from before these disciples that they might see what He was going through. Think Who He wasthe Son of God: "My soul"—the reasoning Mind of the Lord Jesus Christ—"is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with Me."

^{7.} spooned meat: liquefied food that requires no chewing or effort—baby food.

The Lure of Wrong Roads to the Kingdom that ye enter not into temptation . . .

Whenever Jesus talked about His kingdom the disciples misinterpreted what He said to mean a material kingdom to be established on this earth; but Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world: if My kingdom were of this world, then would My servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews." And again He said, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation . . . for lo! the kingdom of God is within you." The only way in which we can be saved from the lure of the wrong roads to the kingdom is by doing what our Master tells us, viz., "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation." If we do not watch and pray we shall be led into temptation before we know where we are. "Howbeit when the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" said Jesus. He will find faith in individual men and women, but the general organised form of the Christian Church has slipped almost wholesale on to wrong roads to the kingdom.

(a) The Material Road of Deliverance (Matthew 4:1-4)

"If Thou art the Son of God, command that these stones become bread" (Matthew 4:3). This temptation is profoundly human. If we could only find some means of curing everybody of disease, of feeding them and putting them on a good social basis what a marvellous thing it would be. That is the way we are being told that the kingdom of God is to be established on this earth. "We do not need any more of this talk about the Atonement, and the shedding of blood; what is needed to-day is to spend ourselves for others." That is the lure of the wrong road to the kingdom, and we cannot keep out of it if we forget to watch and pray. "Watch with Me," said Jesus; "mine is the only road to the kingdom." We have to continue with Him in His temptations. "Command that these stones become bread"—"satisfy Your own needs and the needs of men and You will get the kingship of men." Was Satan right? Read John 6:15, "When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take Him by force to make Him a king . . ." Why? He had just fed five thousand of them! yes, but we read that Jesus "departed again into a mountain Himself alone"; He would not be king at that price.

(b) The Mysterious Road of Devotion (Matthew 4:5-7)

Remember, we are dealing with our Lord's presentation of His own temptation; in the most sacred matters rely only on the Holy Ghost, trust no one else.

This temptation presents a wild reach of possibility—"You are the Son of God, do something supernatural that will stagger men, and the world will be at your feet." Was Satan right? Absolutely. Is there not a lure along that road springing up to-day more than ever? There are miraculous dealings which lure to destruction, the tongues movement, the seeking for signs and wonders. Almost without exception the people who are lured on this wrong road are those who have been told to fast and concentrate for something for themselves whereby the Lord may show how marvellous He is. It does look right to human reason when it is just touched on the first outer fringe by the Holy Ghost, but it contradicts emphatically what our Lord teaches, viz., that importunity in intercession is never for ourselves but for others.

"The kingdom of God cometh not with observation": it is at work now; the manifestation of the kingdom of God externally is another thing. The disciples had still got their own ideas of the kingdom, they were blind to what Jesus Christ's kingdom meant, and they were so totally depressed that they slept for their own sorrow. "Watch with Me." How could they? They had no idea what He was after.

(c) The Mental Road of Dominion (Matthew 4:8–10)

This is the temptation to compromise—"Evil is in the world, compromise with it, work with it judiciously." "All these things will I give Thee, if Thou wilt fall down and worship me." This temptation is the most subtle of all. "Don't be so strait-laced; we have passed the day when we believe in a personal devil." May God forgive us, I am afraid we are past that stage. Will the Church that bows down and compromises succeed? Of course it will. It is the very thing that the natural man wants, but it is the lure of a wrong road to the kingdom. Beware of putting anything sweet and winsome in front of the One Who suffered in Gethsemane.

The Light of Undisciplined Vision

... the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak.

It is so easy when we see things in vision to start out and do them. We are caught up into the seventh heaven, far above all the grubby things of earth and it is magnificent for a time, but we have got to come down. After the Mount of Transfiguration comes the place where we have to live, viz., the demonpossessed valley. The test of reality is our life in the valley, not that we fly up among the golden peaks of the early morning.

(a) The Triumphant Minute

"Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona" (Matthew 16:17; cf. John 21:15-19). Peter had his triumphant minute, but he had to go through the mill after it; he went through a tremendous heart-break before he was fit to hear Jesus say, "Feed My sheep." Peter would have done anything for his Lord, the spirit was willing, but the flesh was weak. We make allowances for the flesh, but we have no business to; we have to make manifest in the flesh the visions of the spirit. Thank God we are going to Heaven when we die, but thank God we are not going before we die. We get glimpses of Heaven, then we are brought down instantly into actual circumstances. Do not go too long in the light of undisciplined vision. Thank God for the triumphant minute, but we have to walk on earth according to what we saw in vision.

(b) The Transfiguration Moment

"And He was transfigured before them" (Matthew 17:2). Put alongside that moment on the Mount, Jesus standing after the Resurrection on the sea-shore in the early morning with "a fire of coals there, and fish laid thereon, and bread." Thank God for seeing Jesus transfigured, and for the almightiness of the visions He does give, but remember that the vision is to be made real in actual circumstances; the glory is to be manifested in earthen vessels. It has to be exhibited through finger-tips, through eyes and hands and feet; everywhere where Jesus exhibited it. We are so like Peter on the Mount and say, "O Lord, let me stay here."

(c) The Transcendent Moment

"Even if I must die with Thee, yet will I not deny Thee" (Matthew 26:35). Peter meant it every bit, it was a transcendent moment to him, he would have done anything for Jesus Christ; and yet he denied with oaths and curses that he ever knew Him. Peter was no hypocrite, but he did not watch and pray. Peter based his declaration on the keen generosity of his own heart, but he did not understand that he needed to be on another basis altogether, the basis of Redemption.

Thank God for the heroic moments of life! It is comparatively easy to live in the heroic moments. We can all have haloes at times; if we stand in the right place, with stained-glass windows behind us, and have the right kind of dress on, it is not at all difficult to look remarkably fine; but there is nothing in it, not only is there nothing in it, but excessive dangers arise out of it. Beware of the transcendent moment that is a pose. A humorous sense of criticism is wholesome. Some people get to a transcendent moment and someone tells them they look remarkably fine, and everlastingly afterwards they try to live in that transcendent moment. We have to get down to the level where the reality works out, and the whole counsel comes back to this, "Watch and pray"—the secret of the sacred simplicity of prayer. Prayer imparts the power to walk and not faint, and the lasting remembrance of our lives is of the Lord, not of us.

O Lord, unto Thee do I come that I might find grace to praise and worship Thee aright. Lord lift up the light of Thy countenance upon us; send power and majestic grace.
O Lord, how good it is for me to know Thee; how essentially necessary it is for me to draw nigh to Thee. How can I falter when Thou art my Life!
Lord, our God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ,

Lord, our God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of Whom Jesus is the very image, I look to Thee and make my prayer. Bless me this hour with the feeling of Thy presence and the glow of Thy nearness, for I do trust Thee and hope only in Thee.

Chapter III

THE SECRET OF THE SACRED STRUGGLE FOR PRAYER

Ephesians 6:12-19

Paul takes the illustration of battle and applies it at once to what goes on in a saint's life; the whole meaning of taking the armour of God is for prayer. Prayer is the position the devil is struggling for; the struggle is around the position of prayer and the simplicity of prayer. Prayer is easy to us because of what it cost God to enable us to pray. It is the Redemption of God, the agony of our Lord, that has made our salvation so easy and prayer so simple. When we put the emphasis on the line of prayer being a cost to us, we are wrong. The cost to us is nothing, it is a supreme and superb privilege marked by supernatural ease because of what it cost God. The tendency nowadays is to worship prayer, stress is put on nights of prayer and the difficulty and cost of prayer. It is not prayer that is strenuous, but the overcoming of our own laziness. If we make the basis of prayer our effort and agony and nights of prayer, we mistake the basis of prayer. The basis of prayer is not what it costs us, but what it cost God to enable us to pray.

The Lord's Own Continuously in Practice (Ephesians 6:12–13)

It is all very well to have vision, but we must be in continual practice so that when we find ourselves in a tight place we are perfectly fit to meet the emergency. One of the greatest difficulties in time of war is to find a man who can keep his head when everyone else is losing theirs. It is only done by steady practice. "Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God "-not to fight, but to stand. We are not told to attack, to storm the forts of darkness; we are told to stand, unpanicky and unbudged, more than conquerors. A conqueror is one who fights and wins, a "more than conqueror" is one who easily and powerfully overcomes. The struggle is not against flesh and blood, it is against principalities and powers. We cannot touch them by intellect or organisation, by courage or foresight or forethought, we cannot touch them at all unless we are based on the Redemption.

"Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God." It is not given, we have to take it; it is there for us to put it on, understanding what we are doing. We have the idea that prayer is for special times, but we have to put on the armour of God for the continual practice of prayer, so that any struggling onslaught of the powers of darkness cannot touch the position of prayer. When we pray easily it is because Satan is completely defeated in his onslaughts; when we pray difficult-ly it is because Satan is gaining a victory. We have not been continuously practising, we have not been facing things courageously, we have not been taking our orders from our Lord. Our Lord did not say, "Go" or "Do"; He said, "Watch and pray."

If we struggle in prayer it is because the enemy is gaining ground. If prayer is simple to us, it is because we have the victory. There is no such thing as a holiday for the beating of your heart. If there is, the grave comes next. And there is no such thing as a moral or spiritual holiday. If we attempt to take a holiday, the next time we want to pray it is a struggle because the enemy has gained a victory all round, darkness has come down and spiritual wickedness in high places has enfolded us. If we have to fight, it is because we have disobeyed; we ought to be more than conquerors.

". . . and having done all, to stand"— a mental state as regards confidence, no panic. What is it puts us into a panic? The devil is a bully, but he cannot stand for a second before God. When we stand in the armour of God he pays no attention to us, but if we tackle the devil in our own strength we are done for. If we stand in God's armour with the strength and courage of God, he cannot gain one inch of way, and the position of prayer is held, as far as we are concerned, untouched by his wiles. Confidence in the natural world is self-reliance, in the spiritual world it is God-reliance. We run away when we have not been practising, when we have not been doing anything in private, then when there is a new onslaught of the wiles of the devil we lose heart instantly. Instead of standing we scuttle, and others have to fill the gap until we are sufficiently ashamed to come back. We cannot stand against the wiles of the devil by our wits. The devil only comes along the lines that God understands, not along the lines we understand, and the only way we can be prepared for him is to do what God tells us, stand complete in His armour, indwelt by His Spirit, in complete obedience to Him. We have not to wait for some great onslaught of the enemy, he is here all the time and he is wily. The secret of the sacred struggle for prayer lies in the fact that we must stand in the armour of God, practising what God would have us do, then we can hold the position of prayer against all the attacks of the devil.

If we are struggling in prayer it is because the wiles of the enemy are getting the upper hand, and we must look for the cause of it in the lack of discipline in ourselves. There are some things we have not been strenuously practising—we used to pray in the morning, do we now? We used to commune with God over the Bible, do we now? We used to be in contact with God wherever we went, are we now? Put on the whole armour of God and keep continuously practising, then the wiles of the devil cannot get you unawares.

The Lord's Own Courageously in Preparation (Ephesians 6:14–17)

"Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth"—all active, sensible work is symbolised by girt loins—"and having on the breastplate of righteousness;" no inordinate fear, no questionable affinities, no tampering with winsomeness; all that breaks the armour down. Righteousness means "rightness" in my relationship to other people and their best interests.

"... and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." What kind of shoes do you wear? How many can say of us, "As soon as I heard your step I felt better"? Or do they say, "It was when your step came into my life that all went wrong; it was when the step of your friendship began with me that I began to lose out with God"? Put on the armour of God, keep the heart right with God, and wherever you go, you will shed the preparation of the gospel of peace. Wherever the saint goes there is the shedding of the benediction of the blessing of God, or there is the coming of the conviction of the Spirit of God.

"Above all, taking the shield of faith." Faith is unbreakable confidence in the Personality of God, not in His power. There are some things over which we may lose faith if we have confidence in God's power only. There is so much that looks like the mighty power of God that is not. We must have confidence in God over and above everything He may do, and stand in confidence that His character is unsullied. Faith stands under all tests—"Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." When we take the shield over-all of faith, none of these things can get through without breaking the shield, we are protected by the covering shield.

"And take . . . the sword of the Spirit." The Spirit brings to our remembrance what the Lord Jesus has said. In every onslaught of the enemy around us, that is the position he is struggling for. In order to be able to wield the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, we must obey, and it takes the courageous heart to obey. If we try to apply the teaching of our Lord apart from the imparted nature of our Lord to our souls, we will make a muddle. It is not that we take the Sermon on the Mount as precepts and try to live up to them, but that when the Spirit of God brings some word of God back to our remembrance in certain circumstances—will we obey it? It will take courage, but as we obey, the wiles of the devil are withstood all the time and we stand.

The Lord's Own Competently in Place (Ephesians 6:18-19)

That is, the place where God puts His soldiers, clad in His armour, and indwelt by His Spirit. Can we pray in prayer, or are we being beguiled by the devil? Have we been lured into a judicious winsomeness? Are we not quite so intense as we used to be? Have black and white become a neutral grey? Are we no longer so intense about sin as we used to be? Then we are out of place, we are exactly in the relationship of traitors, we can make known the position that can easily be taken by the devil unawares.

"Watch and pray," said Jesus in the centre of His own agony. If we don't, we shall slip into the lure of wrong roads without knowing it. The only way to keep right is to watch and pray. Prayer on any other basis than that on which it is placed in the New Testament is stupid, and the basis of prayer is not human earnestness, not human need, not the human will, it is Redemption, and its living centre is a personal Holy Ghost. A child can pray. Through His own agony in Redemption, God has made it as easy to pray as it sounds. There is nothing a rationally-minded being can ridicule more easily than prayer. "Praying always"—the unutterable simplicity of it! No panic, no flurry, always at leisure from ourselves on the inside.

"... watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints." It is all very well to have prayer meetings, but are we continually practising in the armour of God, keeping our hearts stout in the courage of God's Spirit and taking our orders from Him? Or are we making an ingenious compromise? There is only one service that has no snares, and that is prayer. Preaching has snares to the natural heart; so has public service. Prayer has no snare because it is based on the Redemption of the Lord Jesus Christ made efficacious all the time by the Holy Spirit.

"... and for me, that utterance may be given unto me...." We naturally suppose it is no use praying for "Paul," for prominent people, God will look after them all right. The prominent people for God are marked for the wiles of the devil, and we must pray for them all the time; God gives us every now and again an alarming exhibition of what happens if we don't.

know that Thou care for sparrows and numberest the hairs of our head! Lord, breathe on me till I am in the frame of mind and body to worship Thee.

O Lord, I would seek Thy face now, but what avail is my seeking if Thou revealest not Thyself? Show me Thy face, O Lord. Keep me ever seeing Thee.

Lord God Omnipotent, how my soul delights to

O Lord, to praise Thee aright is a great desire of mine, created and fostered by Thy Spirit and grace. This morning, O Lord, I praise Thee for all the past—so wayward on my part, so wonderful and gracious and long-suffering and forgiving and tender and inspiring on Thine.

Chapter IV

THE CURRICULUM OF INTERCESSION

I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what He will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved. And the LORD answered me, and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. Habakkuk 2:1–2

Inspired Waiting

I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the

How steadily all through the Old and New Testament God calls us to stand on the watch and wait for His indications, and how often God's answers to our prayers have been squandered because we do not watch and wait. My brother or sister, are you thoroughly perplexed over God's way?—you cannot reconcile God's clear way as revealed in His Book with the way He is leading you. Take the line of this prophet during his perplexity, stand and watch to see what God will say—watch at the right place.

There is a difference in the prayers of the Old and the New Testament. In chapter 3 the prophet bases his prayer on the character of God, and appeals to God's great mercies. In the New Testament, prayer is based on a relationship with God through Jesus Christ: "When ye pray, say, Our Father." There is another difference—the prayers in the Old Testament have to do with an earthly people in an earthly setting; the prayers in the New Testament have to do with a heavenly state of mind in a heavenly people while on this earth. We are continually being reminded that we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers and the rulers of this world's darkness. The first thing to remember is that we watch at the right place, i.e., the place God has put us in. Watch for God's answer to your prayers, and not only watch, but wait. When God calls upon you to pray, when He gives the vision, when He gives an understanding of what He is going to do through you in your Sunday-school class, in your Church, or home-watch. How many of us have had to learn by God's reproof, by God's chastisement, the blunder of conferring with flesh and blood. Are you discouraged where you are, worker? Then get upon this tower with God, and watch and wait. The meaning of waiting in both the Old and New Testament is "standing under," actively enduring. It is not standing with folded arms doing nothing; it is not saying, "In God's good time it will come to pass"—that often means in my abominably lazy time I let God work. Waiting means standing under, in active strength, enduring till the answer comes.

Never make the blunder of trying to forecast the way God is going to answer your prayer. When God made a tremendous promise to Abraham, he thought out the best way of helping God to fulfil His promise and did the wisest thing he knew according to flesh and blood common-sense reasoning. But for thirteen years God never spoke to him until every possibility of his relying on his own intelligent understanding was at an end. Then God came to him and said, "I am God Almighty"—El Shaddai—"walk before Me, and be thou perfect" (RV). Over and over again God has to teach us how to stand and endure, watching actively and wondering. It is always a wonder when God answers prayer. We hear people say, "We must not say it is wonderful that God answers prayer"; but it is wonderful. It is so wonderful that a great many people believe it impossible. Listen!—"Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do." Isn't that wonderful? It is so wonderful that I do not suppose more than half of us really believe it. "Every one that asketh receiveth." Isn't that wonderful? It is so wonderful that many of us have never even asked God to give us the Holy Spirit because we don't believe He will. "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of My Father which is in heaven." Isn't that wonderful? It is tremendously wonderful. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." Isn't that wonderful?

Christian worker, you have had visions of how wonderfully God can answer prayer, are you watching to-day for Him to answer prayer along His line? Are you on your tower, watching stedfastly every sign of God's goings? Or are you coming under the bitter blight that came on Meroz? When the Spirit of the Lord came on Deborah, the prophetess of the Lord, what was her cry? "Curse ye Meroz, . . . curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; because they came not to the help of the LORD . . . against the mighty." The first chapter of Habakkuk speaks of the tremendous devastations that are to come upon Israel (see vv. 1–11); apply it spiritually to our own day. The majority of us as saints are sound asleep to the devastation going on, and we shall come under the bitter curse of Meroz if we do not rouse ourselves up and stand with God against the mighty—spiritualism, supernaturalism, Christian Science, Millennial Dawnism⁸—all terribly wide-spread, sweeping, devouring errors. Are we thoroughly awake and watching, or are we crying in a cowardly way, "Tell us the thing that leaves us as we are; tell us the things that please us, that rouse us up and kindle us on our own lines; don't tell us about the perplexities you have as a prophet or handmaid of God regarding His work"? God grant that every child of His may get on the watch-tower and stand and watch. Immediately a difficulty comes on the horizon and clouds gather, where is the intense watching? We sulk and turn aside, we turn our backs on God and on His messengers, and say, "Thou hast not brought us into a land that floweth with milk and honey." God grant that in times of perplexity we may get back again to the watch-tower, back again to inspired waiting, back again to the wide-eyed wonder of a child at God's answers to our prayers.

Intelligent Witnessing

and will look forth to see what He will speak with me . . . (RV)

I do not think we have sufficiently the wondering spirit that the Holy Ghost gives. It is the child-spirit. A child is always wide-awake with wonder at the things it sees, and some of us as we get older are apt to forget that a child's wonder is nearer the truth than our older knowledge. When through Jesus Christ we are rightly related to God, we learn to watch and wait, and wait wonderingly. "I wonder how God will answer this prayer." "I wonder how God will answer the prayer the Holy Ghost is praying in me." "I wonder what glory God will bring to Himself out of the strange perplexities I am in." "I wonder what new turn His providence will take in manifesting Himself in my ways."

The child-wondering Mind of the Holy Ghost, if I may say so reverently, was exhibited in the Lord Jesus Christ, everlasting wonder and expectancy at His Father's working. "For I have not spoken of Myself"; and, "the Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works." Our Lord said that when the Holy Ghost is come, "He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak." The Lord Jesus spoke and worked from the great big Child-heart of God. God Almighty became Incarnate as a little Child, and Jesus Christ's message is, You must "become as little children." God always keeps the minds of His children open with wonder, with open-eyed expectancy for Him to come in where He likes. I wonder how many of us have been getting our ideas and convictions and notions twisted. Thank God for the confusion if it is going to drive us straight to the watch-tower with God where our doctrines and creeds are going to be God's, not doctrines and creeds out of God's Book twisted to suit our preconceived ideas, but the doctrines of God woven into the flesh and blood tissues of our lives by the indwelling Holy Ghost—watching, waiting, wondering and witnessing.

Take all the Old Testament prophets, God never spoke with them without a corresponding wonder on their part. Over and over again the prophets were staggered with wonder at the strange things God did, and if they leaned to their own intelligence without sufficiently relying on the tremendous power of God, there was instant confusion. We have to "receive, recognise and rely on the Holy Ghost," and never get beyond that stage. God grant we may have the wonder of the child-heart which the Holy Ghost gives, and that He may keep our minds young and vigorous and un-stagnant, never asleep, but always awake with child-eyed wonder at the next wonderful thing God will do. "The LORD reigneth; let the earth rejoice"!

God grant we may get to the place where the only thing we take seriously is the place God has put us in, watching, waiting stedfastly for God's goings. Never take anything that is said by any man or woman, or in any book, without waiting and watching before God. "Try the spirits," test them, see if they be of God. I want you to beware of a mistake I have made over and over again in days gone by, of trying to interpret God's plan for other lives along the way He has led me. Never! Keep open-eyed in wonder. My brother, my sister, can God do what He likes in your life? Can He help Himself liberally to you? Can He take you up and put you down? Can He introduce His schemes through you, and never tell you the reason why? Can He make you a spectacle to men and angels, as He did Job, without giving you any explanation? Can He make you a wonder to yourself and to others, while He gives you the implicit childlike understanding that somehow or other things are working out all right?

Inviolable Walking

. . . Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it.

No longer watching and waiting, but actively set towards the Divine goal to which God is calling.

Have you ever noticed the "wondering-ness" (if I may coin a word) of the people who go on with God? They never seem to be over-anxious or overconcerned, and they always seem to be getting younger. What is the characteristic of the people of this world who have not got the child-heart? They are always sighing; they have mental and spiritual rheumatism and neuralgia, moral twists and perversities, and nothing can rouse them. Why? They want the child-spirit, the Spirit that was given to the disciples after the Resurrection, and in its fullness at Pentecost, then nothing will turn them aside. After Pentecost there was the sword and great persecution and they were all scattered abroad, but nothing could stop them preaching the word. There was a hilarious shout all through these men's lives because of the mighty baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire. There was running then! No power on earth or heaven above or hell beneath could stop the tremendous strength of the child-life of the Holy Ghost in them. Have you got the wonder in your heart to-night, my brother, or are you sighing, "Thank God I have managed to squeeze enough grace out of God to last through this day"? Blessed be the Name of God, all the unsearchable riches of Christ are at your disposal!

Thank God for every life that is running in the strength of the tremendous vision. Keep your eyes on your file Leader, Jesus only, Jesus ever, "and make straight paths for your feet." Watch for His goings. When He stands and hides Himself in a cloud—stand, watch and wait. When the meaning is clear, then you will run. A vision puts enthusiasm into you, a thrilling understanding of God's Word and you soar above in a tremendous ecstasy; then you come down and run without being weary, and then you come to the grandest days and walk without fainting.

"For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry" (Habakkuk 2:3). "I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" That is a wonderful point—"Who will go for us?" "Lord, there is Mrs. Soand-so, she is ready, send her." Is that the answer you give "O Lord, I know there ought to be a movement in my Church, and there is Mr. So-and-so, he's just the one, send him." If you have been watching, waiting and wondering, you will say; "Here am I; send me." If God came to you to-night, would you say, "Here am I"? Do you know where you are? Some men live in a fog, they don't know where they are, but if you know anything about waiting on God and walking before Him, you will say, "Here am I, do what You like with me."

O Lord, explore down to the deepest springs of my spirit where Thy Spirit works, and read my deepest prayers I cannot pray in expression. Lord, touch my body, it is Thy temple, shine out in and through it, O Lord.

O Lord, lift Thou up the light of Thy countenance upon us this day, and make us to fit in with Thy plans with great sweetness and light and liberty, and a lilt to Thee all day

.....

O God my Father, the clouds are but the dust of Thy feet. Let me discover in every cloud of providence or nature or grace no man save Jesus only after the fear, till there be no fear.

Chapter V

AFTER GOD'S SILENCE—WHAT?

Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus. When He had heard therefore that he was sick, He abode two days still in the same place where He was. John 11:5–6

The Absence of Audible Response

Jesus stayed two days where He was without sending a word. We are apt to say—"I know why God has not answered my prayer, it is because I asked for something wrong." That was not the reason Jesus did not answer Martha and Mary—they desired a right thing. It is quite true God does not answer some prayers because they are wrong, but that is so obvious that it does not need a revelation from God to understand it. God wants us to stop understanding in the way we have understood and get into the place He wants us to get into, i.e., He wants us to know how to rely on Him.

God's silences are His answers. If we only take as answers those that are visible to our senses, we are in a very elemental condition of grace. Can it be said of us that Jesus so loved us that He stayed where He was because He knew we had a capacity to stand a bigger revelation? Has God trusted us with a silence, a silence that is absolutely big with meaning? That is His answer. The manifestation will come in a way beyond any possibility of comprehension. Are we mourning before God because we have not had an audible response? Mary Magdalene was weeping at the sepulchre—what was she asking for? The dead body of Jesus. Of Whom did she ask it? Of Jesus Himself, and she did not know Him! Did Jesus give her what she asked for? He gave her something infinitely grander than she had ever conceived—a risen, living impossible-to-die Lord. How many of us have been blind in our prayers? Look back and think of the prayers you thought had not been answered, but now you find God has answered them with a bigger manifestation than you ever dreamed. God has trusted you in the most intimate way He could trust you, with an absolute silence, not of despair but of pleasure, because He saw you could stand a much bigger revelation than you had at the time. Some prayers are followed by silence because they are wrong, others because they are bigger than we can understand. Jesus stayed where He was—a positive staying, because He loved them. Did they get Lazarus back? They got infinitely more; they got to know the greatest truth mortal beings ever knewthat Iesus Christ is the Resurrection and the Life. It will be a wonderful moment for some of us when we stand before God and find that the prayers we clamoured for in early days and imagined were never answered, have been answered in the most amazing way, and that God's silence has been the sign of the answer. If we always want to be able to point to something and say, "This is the way God answered my prayer," God cannot trust us yet with His silence. Here is where the devil comes in and says, "Now you have been praying a wrong prayer." You can easily know whether you have—test it by the word of God. If it has been a prayer to know God better, a prayer for the baptism of the Holy Ghost, a prayer for the interpretation and understanding of God's word, it is a prayer in accordance with God's will. You say, "But He has not answered." He has, He is so near to you that His silence is the answer. His silence is big with terrific meaning that you cannot understand vet, but presently you will. Time is nothing to God. Prayers were offered years ago and God answered the soul with silence; now He is giving the manifestation of the answer in a revelation that we are scarcely able to comprehend.

The Attitude of Awful Repose

Picture Martha and Mary waiting day after day for Jesus to come, yet not till Lazarus's body had been in the grave four days does Jesus Christ appear on the scene. Days of absolute silence, of awful repose on the part of God! Is there anything analogous to it in your life? Can God trust you like that, or are you still wanting a visible answer? "Every one that asketh receiveth." If God has given you a silence, praise Him. Think of the things you prayed to God about and tried to hold and, because of His love, He dare not let you hold them and they went. For a time you said, "I asked God to give me bread and He gave me a stone"; He did not, and you find to-day He gave you the bread of life. You prayed that you might keep the thing that seemed to make your life as a Christian possible, you asked that it might always be preserved by God, and suddenly the whole thing went to pieces. That was God's answer. After the silence of God, if we are spiritual and can interpret His silence, we always get the trust in God that knows prayers are answered every time, not sometimes. The manifestation of the answer in place and time is a mere matter of God's sovereignty. Be earnest and eager on the line of praying. One wonderful thing about God's stillness in connection with your prayers is that He makes you still, makes you perfectly confident, the contagion of Jesus Christ's stillness gets into you—"I know He has heard me"—and His silence is the proof He has heard.

The Answer's Amazing Revelation

Could the answer that Jesus Christ gave ever have entered into the heart of Martha and Mary—a raised brother, the manifestation of the glory of God, and the understanding of Jesus Christ in a way that has blessed the Church for twenty centuries!

Remember that Jesus Christ's silences are always signs that He knows we can stand a bigger revelation than we think we can. If He gives you the exact answer, He cannot trust you yet. "... if two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of My Father which is in heaven." That is stated for people who are not spiritual. Our Lord's revelations about prayer in Luke 11 and Luke 18 are for those who are spiritual—remain in confidence in prayer. Because Jesus Christ keeps silence it does not mean that He is displeased, but exactly the opposite, He is bringing us into the great run of His purpose, and the answer will be an amazing revelation. No wonder our Lord said, ". . . greater works than these shall he do. . . . And whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do" (John 14:12–13). That is what prayer means, not that God may bless us. As long as we have the idea only that God will bless us in answer to prayer, He will do it, but He will never give us the grace of a silence. If He is taking us into the understanding that prayer is for the glorifying of His Father, He will give us the first sign of His intimacy—silence. The devil calls it unanswered prayer; in the case of Martha and Mary the Spirit of God called it a sign that He loved them, and because He loved them and knew they were fit to receive a bigger revelation than ever they dreamed of, He stayed where He was. God will give us the blessings we want if we won't go any further, but His silence is the sign that He is bringing us into this marvellous understanding of Himself.

O Lord, for the power of Thy Spirit to adore Thee in fuller ways. Keep my spirit brightly infused by Thy Holy Spirit, O Lord, that thus energised, my Lord Jesus Christ and His perfections may be manifested in my mortal flesh.

O Lord, breathe in me till I am one with Thee in the temper of my mind and heart and disposition, unto Thee do I turn. How completely again I realise my lost-ness without Thee.

......

O Lord, I have no inkling of Thy ways in external detail, but I have the expectancy of Thy wonders soon to be made visible. Lord, I look to Thee, how completely at rest I am, yet how free from seeing Thy way. Thou art God and I trust in Thee.

Chapter VI

NOW THIS EXPLAINS IT

As Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us. John 17:21

The Submissions of Life (Luke 2:51; John 19:11)

We are not built for ourselves, but for God, not for service for God, but for God; that explains the submissions of life.

"And He went down with them, . . . and He was subject unto them." An amazing submission! For thirty years Jesus lived at home with brothers and sisters who did not believe in Him, and when He began His ministry they said He was mad. "As He is, so are we in this world." We say, "When I was born again I thought it would be a time of great illumination and service, and instead of that I have had to stay at home with people who have criticised me and limited me on the right hand and on the left; I have been misunderstood and misrepresented." "The disciple is not above his master." Do we think our lot ought to be better than Jesus Christ's? We can easily escape the submissions if we like, but if we do not submit, the Spirit of God will produce in us the most ghastly humiliation before long. Knowing that Jesus has prayed for us makes us submit.

God is not concerned about your aims and mine. He does not say, "Do you want to go through this bereavement, this upset?" He allows these things for His own purpose. We may say what we like, but God does allow the devil, He does allow sin, He does allow bad men to triumph and tyrants to rule, and these things either make us fiends or they make us saints, it depends entirely on the relationship we are in towards God. If we say, "Thy will be done," we get the tremendous consolation of knowing that our Father is working everything according to His own wisdom. If we understand what God is after, we shall be saved from being mean⁹ and cynical.

The things we are going through are either making us sweeter, better, nobler men and women, or they are making us more captious and fault-finding, more insistent on our own way. We are either getting more like our Father in heaven, or we are getting more mean and intensely selfish. How are we behaving ourselves in our circumstances? Do we understand the purpose of our life as never before? God does not exist to answer our prayers, but by our prayers we come to discern the mind of God, and that is declared in John 17, "That they may be one, even as We are one." Am I as close to Jesus as that? God will not leave me alone until I am. God has one prayer He must answer, and that is the prayer of Jesus Christ. It does not matter how imperfect or immature a disciple may be, if he will hang in, that prayer will be answered.

The Solitarinesses of Life (Luke 4:1-2; 22:42)

There was nothing to mark our Lord out from ordinary men saving that He was insulated within. He did not choose the solitary places, He was driven by the Spirit of God into the wilderness. It is not good for a man to be alone. Evil will make a man want to be alone. Jesus Christ does not make monks and nuns, He makes men and women fit for the world as it is (see John 17:15). We say, "I do wish Jesus did not expect so much of me." He expects nothing less than absolute oneness with Himself as He was one with His Father. God does not expect us to work for Him, but to work with Him.

Every man carries his kingdom within, and no one knows what is taking place in another's kingdom.

^{9.} mean: as used here, something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

"No one understands me!" Of course they don't, each one of us is a mystery. There is only One Who understands you, and that is God. Hand yourself over to Him.

Are you being subjected in this internal kingdom to tremendous temptations? Jesus was tempted of the devil, perhaps you are also, but no one guesses it. There is never any comrade for your soul when you are tempted. Temptation is the testing of the thing held; we hold from God the possibility of the answer to our Lord's prayer, and that is the line along which the temptation will come. This explains it—Jesus has prayed "that they may be one, even as We are one." Think of being one with Jesus, one in aim and purpose! Some of us are far off from this, and yet God will not leave us alone until we are one with Him, because Jesus has prayed that we may be. There is a risk in discipleship because God never shields us from the world, the flesh and the devil. Christianity is character, not a "show-business."

If you are going through a solitary way, read John 17, it will explain exactly why you are where you are. Now you are a disciple you can never be as independent as you used to be. Jesus has prayed that you might be one with the Father as He is; are you helping God to answer His prayer, or have you another end for your life?

The Sublimity of Life (John 17:22)

And the glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them.

The glory of our Lord was the glory of a holy life, and that is what He gives to us. He gives us the gift of holiness, are we exercising it?

"The hope of His calling" is revealed in John 17, and it is the great light on every problem. God grant that we may remain true to that calling. "We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him," the triune God abiding with the saint. What does a man need to care after that!

O Lord, when I awake I am still with Thee. Quicken my mortal body with Thy mighty resurrection life; rouse me with a gracious flooding of Thy Divine life for this day.

Lord, so much activity, so many things, so numberless the people, and yet Thou remainest! Bless today with largeness of heart and beauty of character for Thy glory. O Lord, unto Thee do I look up. Enlighten me, cause me to be radiant with Thy countenance. I praise Thee for Thy grace and for seeing a little of Thy marvellous doings; enable me more and more to manifest the life hid with Christ in God.

Lord, through the dimness, come with dawning and drawing light. Breathe on me till I am in a pure radiant frame of body and mind for Thy work and for Thy glory this day.

Chapter VII

PRAYING IN THE HOLY GHOST

Praying in the Holy Ghost. Jude 20

Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit. Ephesians 6:18

Praying in the Holy Ghost means the power given to us by God to maintain a simple relationship to Jesus Christ, and it is most difficult to realise this simple relationship in the matter of prayer.

Prayer Pervaded by Pentecost

We have to pray relying upon what has been revealed by the Sent-down Holy Ghost, and the first revelation is that we do not know how to pray (see Romans 8:26). We have to learn to draw on our relationship to Jesus Christ, and as we do, we realise that the Holy Ghost keeps us in simple relationship to our Lord while we pray. When we pray in the Holy Ghost we are released from our petitions. "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him." Then why ask? The whole meaning of prayer is that we may know God. The "asking and receiving" prayer is elementary, it is the part of prayer we can understand, but it is not necessarily praying in the Holy Ghost. Those who are not born again must ask and receive; but when we have received and have become rightly related to God, we must maintain this simplicity of belief in Him, while we pray, Our minds must be saturated by the Pentecostal revelation of prayer until we learn in every detail to pray in the Holy Ghost. Prayer is not an exercise, it is the life.

Peculiar Sense of Need

A great many people do not pray because they do not feel any sense of need. The sign that the Holy Ghost is in us is that we realise, not that we are full, but that we are empty, there is a sense of absolute need. We come across people who try us, circumstances that are difficult, conditions that are perplexing, and all these things awaken a dumb sense of need, which is a sign that the Holy Ghost is there. If we are ever free from the sense of need, it is not because the Holy Ghost has satisfied us, but because we have been satisfied with as much as we have. "A man's reach should exceed his grasp." A sense of need is one of the greatest benedictions because it keeps our life rightly related to Jesus Christ.

Permeating Sense of Restraint

When we learn to pray in the Holy Ghost, we find there are some things for which we cannot pray, there is a sense of restraint. Never push and say, "I know it is God's will and I am going to stick to it." Beware, remember what is recorded of the children of Israel: "He gave them their request; but sent leanness into their soul" (Psalm 106:15). Let the Spirit of God teach you what He is driving at and learn not to grieve Him. If we are abiding in Jesus Christ we shall ask what He wants us to ask, whether we are conscious of doing so or not (see John 15:7).

Profound Sense of Christ's Work

When we pray relying on the Holy Ghost, He will always bring us back to this one point, that we are not heard because we are in earnest, or because we need to be heard, or because we will perish if we are not heard; we are heard only on the ground of the Atonement of our Lord (see Hebrews 10:19).

The efficacy of the atoning work of Christ is the one thing that the Holy Ghost works into our understanding, and as He interprets the meaning of that work to us we shall never bank on our own earnestness, or on our sense of need, nor shall we ever have the idea that God does not answer, we shall be so restfully certain that He always does.

The Holy Ghost will continually interpret to us that the only ground of our approach to God is "by the blood of Jesus," and by no other way. As we learn the spiritual culture of praying in the Holy Ghost, we shall find that the common-sense circumstances God puts us in, and the common-sense people His providence places us amongst, are used by Him to enable us to realise that the one fundamental thing in prayer is the atoning work of Jesus Christ.

Apprehension of God's Resources

When we pray in the Holy Ghost we begin to have a more intimate conception of God; the Holy Ghost brings all through us the sense of His resources. For instance, we may be called to a definite purpose for our life which the Holy Ghost reveals and we know that it means a decision, a reckless fling over on to God, a burning of our bridges behind us; and there is not a soul to advise us when we take that step saving the Holy Ghost. Our clingings come in this way—we put one foot on God's side and one on the side of human reasoning; then God widens the space until we either drop down in between or jump on to one side or the other. We have to take a leap, a reckless leap, and if we have learned to rely on the Holy Ghost, it will be a reckless leap on to God's side. So many of us limit our praying because we are not reckless in our confidence in God. In the eyes of those who do not know God, it is madness to trust Him, but when we pray in the Holy Ghost we begin to realise the resources of God, that He is our perfect heavenly Father, and we are His children.

Always keep an inner recollectedness that God is our Father through the Lord Jesus Christ.

Atmosphere for Work

Praying in the Holy Ghost gives us a true insight into why Paul said we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, against spiritual wickedness in high places.

If the Holy Spirit is having His way in us, He will charge the atmosphere round about us. There are things that have to be cleared away by the Holy Ghost. Never fight; stand and wrestle. Wrestling is not fighting, it is closing with the antagonist on your own ground, and maintaining a steady, all-embracing "stand" and "withstand." How many of us succumb to flesh and blood circumstances—"I did not sleep well"; or, "I have indigestion"; or, "I did not do quite the right thing there." Never allow any of these things to be the reason to yourself why you are not prevailing in prayer. There are hundreds of people with impaired bodies who know what it is to pray in the Holy Ghost.

In work for God never look at flesh and blood causes; meet every arrangement for the day in the power of the Holy Ghost. It makes no difference what your work is or what your circumstances are; if you are praying in the Holy Ghost He will produce an atmosphere round about you, and all these things will redound to the glory of God.

Apostolic Habit

"Pray without ceasing." Keep the child-like habit of continually ejaculating in your heart to God, recognise and rely on the Holy Ghost all the time. Inarticulate prayer, the impulsive prayer that looks so futile, is the thing God always heeds. The habit of ejaculatory prayer ought to be the persistent habit of each one of us.

Attitude of Daily Reaction

The way we react during the day will either hinder or help our praying. If we allow a state of reaction not born of a simple relationship to Jesus Christ, we shall have so much wilderness waste to get through before we can come to God, mists and shadows which come between our conscious life and the interceding Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost is there all the time, but we have lost sight of Him by allowing things that have not sprung from our simple relationship to Jesus Christ. Anything that is so continually with us, even our religious life itself, that we never really pray in the Holy Ghost, may be a hindrance. The only one who prays in the Holy Ghost is the child, the childspirit in us, the gay spirit of utter confidence in God. When we pray in the Holy Ghost, we bring to God the things that come quite naturally to our minds, and the Holy Ghost Who "maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God" enables God to answer the prayer He Himself prays in your bodily temple and mine. ". . . that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." The Holy Ghost cannot delight in our wisdom; it is the wisdom of God He delights in.

Have we recognised that our body is the temple of the Holy Ghost? If so, we must be careful that we keep it undefiled for Him. "My house shall be called a house of prayer," said Jesus.

Lord, how I desire to see Thee, to hear Thee, to meditate on Thee and to manifestly grow like Thee! And Thou hast said, "Delight thyself also in the LORD, and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart."

O Lord, I know Thy blessing and I praise Thee, but it is the indescribable touch and enwheeling as Thy servant that I seek for—I know not what I fear for, but Thou knowest. How I long for Thee!

.....

Lord, I still move and live in a dim world, feeling Thee near by faith, but I will not presume. I would hide in Thee in security and patience until I am as Thou wouldst have me to be.

Chapter VIII

ST. PAUL'S INTERCESSION FOR INSTANTANEOUS INSISTENT SANCTIFICATION

1 Thessalonians 5:23-24

All through the Bible the separation of a people by God is revealed, and the individual members of that people have to separate themselves to God's service. We are set apart that we may set ourselves apart. God Who requires the separation requires also that the person be sanctified intrinsically too.

Two ideas are brought out in regard to our Lord: first, the Father separating Jesus for His redemptive work, "Say ye of Him, Whom the Father sanctified, and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest; because I said, I am the Son of God?" (John 10:36); second, Jesus sanctifying Himself for the work of God, "And for their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth" (John 17:19). But our Lord was holy, why did He say "I sanctify Myself"? To coin a phrase, Jesus Christ "sanctified His sanctification," that is, He determinedly sacrificed His holy Self to His Father. Jesus Christ separated, or sanctified, Himself by sacrificing His holy Self to the will of His Father; He sanctified His intelligence by submitting His intelligence to the word of His Father, and He sanctified His will by submitting His will to the will of His Father. As the sanctified children of God we need to hear in mind that after the experience of sanctification we have to separate our holiness to God. We are not made holy for ourselves, but for God, there is to be no insubordination about us.

The majority of us are too indifferent, too religiously sentimental, to be caught up into the sweep of the Apostle Paul's intercession. Have we a lesser idea than that God should do in us what He wants to do? Are we prepared to pray with Murray McCheyne, ¹⁰ "Lord, make me as holy as Thou canst make a sinner saved by grace"?

Some people pray and long and yearn for the experience of sanctification, but never get anywhere near it; others enter in with a sudden marvellous realisation. Sanctification is an instantaneous, continuous work of grace; how long the approach to it takes depends upon ourselves, and that leads some to say sanctification is not instantaneous. The reason why some do not enter in is because they have never allowed their minds to realise what sanctification means. When we pray to be caught up into God's purpose behind this intercession of the Apostle Paul, we must see that we are willing to face the standard of these verses. Are we prepared for what sanctification will cost? It will cost an intense narrowing of all our interests on earth, and an immense broadening of our interest in God. In other words, sanctification means an intense concentration on God's point of view—every power of spirit, soul and body chained and kept for God's purpose only. Sanctification means being made one with God, even as the Lord Jesus Christ was one-"that they may be one, even as We are one." That is much more than union, it is one in identity; the same disposition that ruled in Jesus rules in me. Am I prepared for what that will cost? It will cost everything that is not God in me. Am I prepared for God to separate me for His work in me, as He separated Jesus, and after His work is done, am I prepared to separate myself to God even as Jesus did? It is this settling down into God's truth that is needed.

The type of sanctified life is the Lord Jesus Christ, and the characteristic of His life was subordination to His Father. The only way to get right with God is to soak in the atmosphere of the life of the Lord Jesus.

The one mark of spiritual people to-day is insubordination. We have wild spiritual impulses that would give an opportunity to Satan as an angel of light to switch the very elect, if it were possible, away from God's plan. If you want to know the result of spiritual insubordination, read 1 Corinthians 12. There you will see a portrait of spiritual lunacy, absolute insubordination to the dominant sanity of the Spirit of God. The characteristic of the Holy Ghost in a man is a strong family likeness to Jesus and freedom from everything unlike Jesus.

The best of us are all too shallow and flippant in our attitude to this tremendous secret of sanctification. Are we prepared to let the Spirit of God grip us and put us under His searchlight, and then do a work in us that is worthy of God? Sanctification is not our idea of what we want God to do for us, sanctification is what God does for us, and He has to get us into the right relationship, the right attitude of mind and heart, where at any cost we let Him do it. Are we prepared to concentrate on the Holy Spirit's ministration?

The Apostle Paul is not talking about scientific truth, or intellectual truth, he is talking about spiritual truth, and the only way we can prove spiritual truth is by experience. People say, "I don't understand this doctrine of sanctification." Well, get into the experience first. You only get home by going there. You may think about getting there, but you will never get there till you go. Am I prepared to do what Jesus said—

"Come unto Me"? Am I prepared to let God make me real? Reality is the proof in my own experience that this thing is true. God grant that every worker may see the peril of not applying this spiritual logic—
"Prove it." Every time we give a message that we have no experience of, the Spirit of God will bring it back to you—"Where are you in regard to this matter?"

The Value of Calm

And the God of peace Himself . . . (RV)

It is wonderful that by the guidance of the Holy Spirit, Paul puts the subsiding of suspicion in the first place. The very nature of the old disposition is an incurable suspicion that Jesus Christ cannot do what He came to do. Have you the tiniest suspicion that God cannot sanctify you in His Almighty way? Then you need to let the God of peace slip His great calm all through your insidious unbelief till all is quiet and there is one thing only—God and your soul; not the peace of a conscience at rest only, but the very peace of God which will keep you rightly related to God. "My peace I give unto you," said Jesus. When once you let the God of peace grip you by salvation and squeeze the suspicion out of you till you are quiet before Him, the believing attitude is born, there is no more suspicion, you are in moral agreement with God about everything He wants to do.

One of the things which we need to be cured of by the God of peace is the petulant struggle of doing things for ourselves—"I can sanctify myself; if I cut off this and that and the other I shall be all right." No, Paul says "the very God of peace sanctify you wholly," Has the God of peace brought you into a calm, or is there a clamour and a struggle still? Are you still hanging on to some obstinate conviction of your own?—still struggling with some particular line of things you want? "The God of peace Himself sanctify you wholly." If we are to be sanctified, it must be by the God of peace Himself. The power that makes the life of the saint does not come from our efforts at all, it comes from the heart of the God of peace. America has a phrase—"Pray through." What we have to "pray through" is all our petulant struggling after sanctification, all the inveterate suspicion in our hearts that God cannot sanctify us. When we are rid of all that and are right before God, then God lets us see how He alone does the work.

When we stay our feeble efforts, And from struggling cease, Unconditional surrender Brings us God's own peace.

The great mighty power of the God of peace is slipped into the soul under the call for supreme sanctification. Some of us are far too turbulent in spirit to experience even the first glimpse of what sanctification means. People noisy in words are not always turbulent in spirit; excessively quiet people who have nothing to express in joy and shouting, may be suspicious in heart.

Value of Massive Truth

sanctify you wholly . . .

When once we get calm before God and are willing to let Him do what He chooses, He gives us an outline of some of His massive truths. "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly" preserve you in unspotted integrity. Integrity is the unimpaired state of a thing, unblameable, undeserving of censure in God's sight. Paul's intercession is for an instantaneous and insistent sanctification that will preserve a man in unspotted integrity "unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." The majority of us have never allowed our minds to dwell as they should on these great massive truths; consequently sanctification has been made to mean a second dose of conversion. Sanctification can only be named in the presence of God, it is stamped by a likeness to Christ.

"Wholly"—every detail, mystical, moral, material.

(a) Mystical

And I pray God your whole spirit . . . be preserved blameless . . .

The word "spirit" here is not the same as in verse 19. "Your whole spirit," i.e., the personality of a man imbued by the Spirit of God, the two never become identical, they become identified. A man's spirit is imbued with the Spirit of God till all the highest mystical reaches of his personality are living in God. Where are our imaginations? where are all the fancies that break through language and escape? where do they live? where are our dreams that make us afraid of ourselves? The modern psychological phrase is subconscious, super-conscious, beyond the range of what we are able to grasp. The great mystic work of the Holy Ghost is in those dim regions of personality where we cannot go. If you want to know what those regions are like, read Psalm 139. The Psalmist implies—"Thou art the God of the early mornings, the God of the late-at-nights, the God of the mountain peaks, the God of the sea; but, my God, my soul has further horizons than the early mornings, deeper darkness than the nights of earth, higher peaks than any mountain, greater depths than any sea can know. My God, Thou art the God of these, be my God! I cannot reach to the heights or depths, there are motives I cannot touch, dreams I cannot fathom, God search me, winnow out my way."

When God gives His calm, do we realise the magnitude of sanctification through His omnipotent might? Do we believe that God can garrison our imaginations, can sanctify us far beyond where we can go? Have we realised that if we walk in the light, as God is in the light, the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses us from all sin? If that means cleansing from sin in conscious experience only, God Almighty have mercy on us! The man who has become obtuse through sin is unconscious of sin. Being cleansed by the blood of Jesus means cleansing to the very heights and depths of our spirit if we walk in the light as God is in the light. None of us soak sufficiently in the terrific God-like revelation of sanctification, and many a child of God would never have been led astray by the counterfeits of Satan if they had allowed their minds to be bent on that great conception of Paul's, "your whole spirit"—from the vague beginnings of personality known only to God, to the topmost reach, preserved entire, garrisoned by the God of peace.

(b) Moral

Your whole . . . soul preserved blameless . . .

There are those who want to form religion on mysticism—live according to your temperament. Every sanctified soul is a mystic, but he does not live in that region only, he is soul and body as well as spirit, and what is true in the mystical sphere is true in the moral sphere. Soul is man's spirit becoming rational in the body, explaining itself. When a little child wants to say something and has not a vocabulary, it speaks through gesticulations and facial workings, it has not the power of soul to express itself in words. Paul says not only "your whole spirit preserved blameless," but "your whole soul." Are we forming the mind of Christ? A man has the Spirit of Jesus given to him, but he has not His mind until he forms it. How are we to form the mind of Christ? By letting His Spirit imbue our spirit, our thinking, our reasoning faculties, then we shall begin to reason as Jesus did, until slowly and surely the very Spirit that fed the life of Jesus will feed the life of our soul.

Sanctification covers not only the narrow region where we begin the spiritual life, but the whole rational man, sanctified wholly in imagination and reasoning power. How do you read history? Do you discern the arm of the Lord behind it? How do you sum up the circumstances of your own life? "The sun shall no more be thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory." The light on the inside will guide you, a reasoning soul, to understand the facts revealed by common days and nights you cannot understand otherwise. A humble, ignorant man or woman depending on the mind of God has an explanation for things that the rational man without the Spirit of God never has.

(c) Material

... Your whole ... body preserved blameless.

Man is not only mystical and moral, but material; never say because you have a body you cannot progress. According to the Apostle Paul the body is unutterably sacred. The Bible does not say that the body is a curse and a hindrance, it says it is "the temple of the Holy Ghost." "What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?" It is only when garrisoned by the God of peace that the stupendous sanctity of the Holy Ghost preserves a man, spirit, soul and body, in unspotted integrity, without blame, unto the coming of Jesus. Our whole body is preserved as we come into contact with all the different relationships of life. In the beginning of spiritual education we are apt to pay too much attention to one of these spheres and Satan gets his chance with the others. If we pay attention to the spiritual, Satan will pay attention to the nerves.

Sanctification is an instantaneous, continuous work of God; immediately we are related rightly to God it is manifested instanter in spirit, soul and body. The reason the Church as a whole does not believe it is because they will not soak in the massive truths of God, consequently every now and again in the history of the Church, God has had to raise up some servant of His to emphasise afresh this intense, vivid, sanctification of the whole spirit, the whole soul, and the whole body, preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

O Lord, my approach to Thee is dulled because of my physical dimness, but my spirit and heart rejoice in Thee and my flesh shall rest in hope. Touch me bodily, O Lord, till I answer in thrilling health to Thy touch.

Insulate me, O Lord, from the things of sense and time, and usher me into the presence of the King.

O Lord, I am distressed at my slow manifestation of any of the beauty of holiness that might express my unspeakable gratitude for Thy salvation, such lack of the winsome. O Lord, cause me by looking to Thee to be radiant (RV).

.....

O Lord, I would bless and praise Thee. How hard I find it to praise Thee when I am not physically fit, and yet why should it—that means that I praise Thee when it is a pleasure to me physically. O Lord, that my soul were one continual praise to Thee.

Address at Autumnal Gathering, League of Prayer, London, November 6, 1912

Chapter IX

THIS DAY IS THAT DAY

And in that day ye shall ask Me nothing. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name, He will give it you. John 16:23

Unperplexed Realisation

That "day" extends from Pentecost to the day of our Lord's return. Our Lord had just been telling His disciples that He is going to His Father, and explaining to them what this going meant. It meant, as far as He was concerned, that He would be omnipresent, omnipotent and omniscient. Recall how the disciples had questioned our Lord Jesus Christ up till then, but Jesus said, "In that day ye shall ask Me no question" (RV). The day our Lord was referring to was the day we know in the annals of the Church as the Day of Pentecost, that is, the Day of the Spirit of God. What a wonderful day to live in!

Unquestioned Revelation

After the Resurrection our Lord breathed on these questioning, perplexed, confused, loyal disciples, and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost"; if you read the accounts in St. John and St. Luke you will find it recorded that their eyes were opened and they knew Him; their understandings were opened and they knew the Scriptures; their inner consciences were opened and they knew that they had received from their Risen Lord the very Spirit that ruled Him.

Is it possible to sit down unperplexed while lives are being blasted in the most terrible way right in our very cities? Does it mean that we are to sit with folded hands and ask no questions? No, it means something much more sublime and practical than that. It means that in the profound regions of our lives we know that God is at work, the Holy Spirit has revealed

Him, and He is taking us slowly into His counsels. "Whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak: and He will shew you things to come" (John 16:13).

Undeflected Reflection

This does not mean that the soul who has received the Holy Spirit can demand that God tell him His secrets, it means that he is lifted to the privilege of entering into God's counsels with Christ Jesus. Great darkness, exasperating providences, but the inner secret of the Lord is with those who have His Spirit.

Read John 16 and you will find our Lord did not mean that life would be free from external perplexities, because He says, "They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service" (v. 2). Through it all comes the unquestioning revelation that as Christ knew His Father's mind and heart, by the mighty baptism of the Holy Ghost Jesus can lift any soul into the heavenly places with Him so that the counsel and understanding of God's mind might be revealed.

If we have been going on with Jesus Christ we have come to the day of unquestioning revelation, that is, we know what John meant when he said, "But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things," and, "the same anointing teacheth you of all things." The meaning of that is very practical and sane—Test all you hear, all you read, by this inner anointing, by the indwelling Spirit; He will test all the truth of God.

Undisturbed Relation

Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name . . .

That day is not only a day of unquestioning revelation, but a day of undisturbed relationship between God and ourselves. Just as Jesus stood unsullied in the presence of His Father, so by the mighty efficacy of the indwelling Holy Ghost we can be lifted up into the same relationship. "That they may be one, even as We are one." "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name"—i.e., in My nature—"He will give it you."

When we are born of the Holy Ghost, when we are related to God and bear the same family likeness to God that Jesus bore—which, blessed be the Name of God, we may do by the wonderful Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ made living and efficacious in us by this mighty Spirit of God—in that day we, too, can have this undisturbed relation to God.

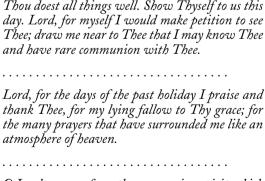

Undisguised Recognition

... He will give it you.

Jesus said that God will recognise our prayers. What a challenge! Had Jesus any right to say it? Have we faced it for one moment? Is it possible that the Lord Jesus Christ means that by His Resurrection power, by His Ascension power, by the power of the Sent-down Holy Ghost, He can lift us into such a relationship with God that we are at one with the perfect sovereign will of God by our free choice as Jesus was? Does He mean what He says?

"Hitherto have ye asked nothing in My name"—How could they ask anything in His name when He had not yet sent forth that marvellous Holy Spirit? "Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." Now we begin to understand why Jesus said, "Ye shall ask Me no question" (RV), because the Holy Spirit in that day glorified Jesus and revealed Him to them, and brought back to their remembrance His words and led them into their meaning.

Thank God, when clouds are around, the saint knows that they are but the dust of the Father's feet, and when the shadows are dark and terrible and the soul seems to fear externally as it enters the cloud, he finds "no man any more, save Jesus only with themselves." In that wonderful position, placed there in that Day, this day, we can pray to God in the nature of Jesus Christ, gifted to us by the Holy Ghost, and Jesus Christ's sovereign character is tested by His own statement, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name, He will give it you."

O Lord, Thou art God, Holy and Almighty, and

O Lord, save us from the murmuring spirit which with the majority of us is merely skin deep, but it is harmful, hurting the bloom of spiritual communion. Keep our life hid with Christ in God.

Chapter X

INTERCESSION

Genesis 18:23-33

And the LORD went His way, . . . and Abraham returned unto his place. Genesis 18:33

The great difficulty in intercession is myself, nothing less or more. The first thing I have to do is to take myself to school. My first duty is not to assert freedom, but to find an absolute Master. We think that to be without a master is the sign of a high type of life; insurgent, impertinent human beings have no master, noble beings have. I must learn not to take myself too seriously. Myself is apt to be my master, I pray to myself. We are all Pharisees until we are willing to learn to intercede. We must go into heaven backwards, that phrase means we must grow into doing some definite thing by praying, not by seeing. To learn this lesson of handling a thing by prayer properly is to enter a very severe school. A Christian's duty is not to himself or to others, but to Christ. We think of prayer as a preparation for work, or a calm after having done work, whereas prayer is the essential work. It is the supreme activity of everything that is noblest in our personality. We won't bring down to earth what we see in vision about our Master, we "moon" around it in devotional speculations, but we won't bring it straight down to mother earth and work it out in actualities.

The Strength and Self-Limitation of Intercession

If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and He shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it. (1 John 5:16)

How are we going to know when a man has sinned a sin unto death and when he has not? Only through intercession. If we make our own discernment the judge, we are wrong. We base it all on an abstract truth divorced from God, we pin our faith on what God has done and not on the God Who did it, and when the case begins to go wrong again, we do not intercede, we begin to scold God. We get fanatical, we upset the court of heaven by saying, "I must do this thing." That is not intercession, that is rushing in where angels fear to tread. It is fanatical frenzy, storming the throne of God and refusing to see His character while sticking true to our assertions of what He said He would do. Beware of making God run in the mould of His own precedent, that means, because

He did a certain thing once, He is sure to do it again, which is so much of a truth that it becomes an imperceptible error when we subtly leave God Himself out of it. Frenzy—no strength and no self-limitation. We have taken ourselves so seriously that we cannot even see God, we are dictating to God.

The Redemption of our Lord Jesus Christ mirrored in the Atonement embraces everything. Sin, sickness, limitation and death are all done away with in Redemption; but we have to remember the Atonement works under God's dispensational sovereignty. It is not a question of whether God will sovereignly permit us to be delivered from sin in this dispensation, it is His distinct expressive will that we should be delivered. When it comes to the question of sickness and limitation, it is not a question of whether we will agree with God's will, but whether God's sovereignty is active—that predispensational efficacy of the Atonement on our behalf just now. When people come to the Atonement and say—"Now I have deliverance in the Atonement, therefore I have no business to be sick," they make a fundamental confusion, because there is no case of healing in the Bible that did not come from a direct intervention of the sovereign touch of God. When it comes to deliverance from sin, it is not a question of going to God to ask Him to deliver us from sin, it is a question of accepting His deliverance. If we forget that, we take the Lord out of the Atonement and make it an abstract statement and instantly do the Pharisaic dodge of putting burdens on people that they cannot bear. Logically they are perfectly correct, it is all in the Atonement, but if it is true that in the Atonement there should be no sickness, it is also true that there should be no death, then we have no business to die! We have no business to have any human limitations, we should be in complete unbroken communion with God, and the people who teach the present resurrection are logically consistent with the folks who say the health of the body depends entirely on our acceptance of the Atonement. To say we are in resurrection bodies now means a moral pig-sty, and makes a burlesque of the whole thing; the mistake is putting an abstract truth deduced from God in the place of God Himself. Abraham had none of the fanatical in him, he did not stand true to what God said, but to God Who said it. God said, "Offer up Isaac," and then God said, "Don't." A fanatic would have said, "I will stick to what God has said, this other voice is of the devil." Watch when some providence of God is going against what we have asserted God will always do. One of the most significant lessons is to see the rod of rebuke come on the people who insist on asserting that they know the meaning of the providential working of Christ's Atonement in the times in which we live. That God does give wonderful gifts of the Atonement before their dispensation is clear, there are innumerable cases of healing, but if I make that the ground on which God must work, I intercede no longer, I cannot, I become a dictator to God. When anyone is sick, I do not pray, I say, "They have no business to be sick," and that means I have destroyed altogether my contact with God.

The Sagacity and Submissiveness of Intercession

Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him. (Matthew 6:8)

Our understanding of God is the answer to prayer; getting things from God is God's indulgence of us. When God stops giving us things, He brings us into the place where we can begin to understand Him. As long as we get from God everything we ask for, we never get to know Him, we look upon Him as a blessing-machine, that has nothing to do with God's character or with our characters. "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him." Then why pray? To get to know your Father. It is not sufficient for us to say, "Oh yes, God is love," we have to know He is love, we have to struggle through until we do see He is love and justice, then our prayer is answered.

The nearer Abraham comes to God in his intercession, the more he recognises his entire unworthiness. There is a subtle thing that goes by the name of unworthiness which is petulant pride with God. When we are shy with other people it is because we believe we are superior to the average person and we won't talk until they realise our importance. Prayerlessness with God is the same thing, we are shy with God not because we are unworthy, but because we think God has not given enough consideration to our case, we have some peculiar elements He must be pleased to consider. We have to go to school in order to learn not to take ourselves seriously and to get the genuine unworthiness which no longer is shy before God. A child is never shy before its mother, and a child of God is not, it is conscious of its worthiness, i.e., its entire dependence.

"And he said, Oh, let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak yet but this once: Peradventure ten shall be found there. And He said, I will not destroy it for ten's sake" (Genesis 18:32). Abraham does the interceding while the angels go for the final test, after the final test, prayer is impossible. The way Abraham reached the stopping-point is indicated by the fact that he was in complete and entire communion with God through the progress of his intercession. When we come up against things in life, are we going to cave in and say we cannot understand them? We understand them by intercession, and by our intercession God does things He does not show us just now, although He reveals more and more of His character to us. He is working out His new creations (RV) in the world through His wonderful Redemption and our intercession all the time, and we have to be sagacious, not impudent.

The Shamelessness and Strenuousness of Intercession

I say unto you, Though he will not rise and give him, because he is his friend, yet because of his importunity he will rise and give him as many as he needeth. (Luke 11:8)

Strenuousness means whipping ourselves up, and jeering at ourselves till we sit down no more. Never give yourself any encouragement, only encourage yourself in God. "And He spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint" (Luke 18:1). It is a pleasant business to faint, everyone else has all the bother. "God will give it to me in His good time." He cannot until we intercede. Be at the business, use some perspiration of soul, get at the thing, and all of a sudden you will come to the place where you will say, "Now I see," but I defy you to tell anyone what you saw until they come to where you are—

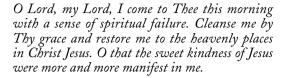

Oh could I tell, ye surely would believe it!
Oh could I only say what I have seen!
How should I tell or how can ye receive it,
How, till He bringeth you where I have been?

The point is that we have come to understand God. It is never God's will for us to be dummies or babies spiritually, it is God's will for us to be sons and daughters of God, but He does not prevent us paying the price of being sons and daughters. He makes us sons and daughters potentially, and then sends us out to be sons and daughters actually. Are we prepared to go into the shameless business of prayer? that is, are we prepared to get to the right understanding of God in this matter? We can only get it by one way, not by disputing or controversy, but by prayer. Keep at it. We have no business to remain in the dark about the character of our Father when He has made His character very clear to us. The Sermon on the Mount has more to do with prayer than anything else. It means an end of self-indulgence in the body, in the mind, in the spirit, self-indulgence in anything and everything and a strenuous determination to get to understand God in this matter.

The Sacrament and Substitution of Intercession

And He cometh unto the disciples, and findeth them asleep, and saith unto Peter, What, could ye not watch with Me one hour? (Matthew 26:40)

It is a great thing to watch with God rather than put God to the trouble of watching me in case I burn myself. We tax the whole arrangement of heaven to watch us, while God wants us to come and watch with Him, to be so identified with Him that we are not causing Him any trouble, but giving Him perfect delight because He can use us now instead of taxing some other servants of heaven to look after us.

O Lord, Thou knowest, in eager helpless trust I look up. O that in power and peace and purity and grace Thou wouldst shine forth in power, in grace and glory this day.

O Lord, the range of Thy power, the touch of Thy grace, the breathing of Thy Spirit, how I long for these to bring me face to face with Thee; Lord, by Thy grace cause me to appear before Thee.

Chapter XI

THE KEY TO SERVICE

Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into His harvest. Matthew 9:38

This is the key to the whole problem of Christian work. It is simple in words, but amazingly profound, because our Lord Jesus Christ said it.

Our Master's Orders

Pray ye therefore . . .

Prayer is usually considered to be devotional and more or less unpractical in ordinary life. Our Lord in His teaching always made prayer, not preparation for work, but the work. Thank God for all the marvellous organisation there is in Christian work, for medical missions and finely educated missionaries, for aggressive work in every shape and form; but these are, so to speak, but wards to the lock, the key is not in any of our organisations, the key lies exactly to our hand by our Lord's instruction, "Pray ye therefore."

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto My Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in My name that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son" (John 14:12–13). Have the "greater works" been done? They certainly have. The men our Lord said these words to wrote the New Testament, and the reason they wrote it is that our Lord when He was glorified sent forth the personal Paraclete, the Holy Ghost not only in His power—His power and influence were at work before Pentecost—but He sent Him forth on to this earth personally where He is to this hour, and through His might and inspiration were produced the "greater works," i.e., the New Testament.

But what does it mean for us? Have we also to do greater works than Jesus did? Certainly we have, if our Lord's words mean anything, they mean that; and the great basis of prayer is to realise that we must take our orders from our Master. He put all the emphasis on prayer, and He made prayer not preparation for the work, not a sentiment nor a devotion, but the work. There is a real danger of worshipping prayer instead of praying because we worship. It is easy to do it if once we lose sight of our Lord and the emphasis is put not on His command, but on the thing which He commands.

We pray on the great fundamental basis of Redemption, and our prayers are made efficacious by the wonderful presence of the personal Holy Ghost in the world. Prayer is simple, prayer is supernatural, and to anyone not related to our Lord Jesus Christ, prayer is apt to look stupid. It does sound unreasonable to say that God will do things in answer to prayer, yet our Lord said that He would. Our Lord bases everything on prayer, then the key to all our work as Christians is, "Pray ye therefore."

When we pray for others the Spirit of God works in the unconscious domain of their being that we know nothing about, and the one we are praying for knows nothing about, but after the passing of time the conscious life of the one prayed for begins to show signs of unrest and disquiet. We may have spoken until we are worn out, but have never come anywhere near, and we have given up in despair. But if we have been praying, we find on meeting them one day that there is the beginning of a softening in an enquiry and a desire to know something. It is that kind of intercession that does most damage to Satan's kingdom. It is so slight, so feeble in its initial stages that if reason is not wedded to the light of the Holy Spirit, we will never obey it, and yet it is that kind of intercession that the New Testament places most emphasis on, though it has so little to show for it. It seems stupid to think that we can pray and all that will happen, but remember to Whom we pray, we pray to a God Who understands the unconscious depths of personality about which we know nothing, and He has told us to pray. The great Master of the human heart said, "Greater works than these shall he do. . . . And whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do."

Not only is prayer the work, but prayer is the way whereby fruit abides. Our Lord puts prayer as the means to fruit-producing and fruit-abiding work; but remember, it is prayer based on His agony, not on our agony. "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in My name, He may give it you" (John 15:16).

Prayer is not only the work and the way fruit abides, but prayer is the battle. "Put on the whole armour of God, . . . Stand therefore, . . ." and then pray. Paul says, "Praying always . . . for all saints, and for me" (see Ephesians 6:11–19). Do we remember to pray on the ground of our Lord's orders for all who minister in His Name? If the Apostle Paul earnestly solicited prayer on his behalf that he might "make known with boldness the mystery of the Gospel, "(RV) surely it behoves us to remember that this is the key our Lord puts into our hands for all Christian work; not prayer because we are helpless, but prayer because God is Almighty.

Our Master's Ownership

the Lord of the harvest . . .

Jesus did not say, "Go into the field," He said, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest...." That does not so much mean that the harvest is the world, it means that there are innumerable people who have reached a crisis in their life, they are "white already to harvest." We find them everywhere, not only in the foreign field, but in the people living beside us, and the way we discern it is not by intellect, not by suggestions, but by prayer. Think of the countless crises in people's lives at this time; they are at the parting of the ways, "Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into His harvest."

When we read the concluding verses in St. Matthew's Gospel, we are apt to put the emphasis on the fact that Jesus said, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations," whereas the emphasis should be on "Go" because "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." Then the "going" is in perfect order, putting the emphasis where our Lord puts it. "Go ye therefore, . . . and, lo, I am with you alway," that He may work His mighty works through us.

Our Master's Option

... that He will send forth labourers into His harvest.

There is only one field of service that has no snares, and that is the field of intercession. All other fields have the glorious but risky snare of publicity; prayer has not. The key to all our work for God is in that one word we are apt to despise—"Pray." And prayer is "labourer" work.

The reason prayer is so important is, first because our Lord told us that prayer on the ground of His Redemption is the most mighty factor He has put into our hands, and second, because of the personal presence of the Holy Ghost in the day in which we live. We receive our knowledge of the Holy Ghost not by experience first, but by the testimony of the Lord Jesus Christ. The testimony of Jesus Christ regarding the Holy Ghost is that He is here, and the real living experience the Holy Spirit works in us is that all His emphasis is laid on glorifying our Lord Jesus Christ. We know the Holy Spirit first by the testimony of Jesus, and then by the conscious enjoyment of His presence.

"Pray ye therefore." Prayer is labour, not agony, but labour on the ground of our Lord's Redemption in simple confidence in Him. Prayer is simple to us because it cost Him so much to make it possible to us. God grant that we may work His victories for Him by taking His way about it.

O Lord, this morning disperse every mist, and shine clear and strong and invigoratingly. Forgive my tardiness, it takes me so long to awaken to some things.

Lord God Omniscient, give me wisdom this day to worship and work aright and be wellpleasing to Thee. Lord, interpret Thyself to me more and more in fulness and beauty.

Dark and appalling are the clouds of war and wickedness and we know not where to turn, but, Lord God, Thou reignest.

Chapter XII

THE UNREALISED LOGIC OF PRAYER

Romans 8:26-28

Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit. Ephesians 6:18

Praying in the Holy Ghost. Jude 20

Ephesians 6:18 and Jude 20 are not quite identical with Romans 8:26. In the former it is man praying in the atmosphere produced by the Holy Spirit indwelling and surrounding him; in the latter the Holy Spirit Himself is praying in man. The similarity is obvious, but the point of difference is often missed in thinking about prayer. We realise that we are energised by the Holy Spirit for prayer, we know what it is to pray in the atmosphere and the presence of the Holy Spirit; but we do not so often realise that the Holy Spirit Himself prays in us with prayers that we cannot utter.

The Unrealised Philosophy of Prayer (Romans 8:26)

The great thought which we do not realise sufficiently is the interchanging action of the Divine Spirit and the human spirit. This interchanging action of the Divine and human at every stage of our religious life is vividly expressed here. The best example of the Divine Spirit working in a human spirit is seen in our Lord Jesus Christ in the days of His flesh. According to some expositors, we are so infirm that the Spirit of God brushes aside all our infirmities and prays irrespectively of us, but we find that our Lord recognised the difference between His own Spirit and the Spirit of God, and that His mind was always in subordination to the mind of God. "I can of Mine own self do nothing."

(a) The Uncovered Truth of Our Infirmities Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities . . .

To ask how we are to get our prayers answered is a different point of view from the New Testament. According to the New Testament, prayer is God's answer to our poverty, not a power we exercise to obtain an answer. We have the idea that prayer is only an exercise of our spiritual life. "Pray without ceasing." We read that the disciples said to our Lord, "Lord, teach us to pray." The disciples were good men and well-versed in Jewish praying, yet when they came in contact with Jesus Christ, instead of realising they could pray well, they came to the conclusion they did not know how to pray at all, and our Lord instructed them in the initial stages of prayer. Most of us can probably remember a time when we were religious, before we were born again of the Spirit of God, when we could pray fairly well; but after we were born again we became conscious of what Paul mentions here, our utter infirmity—"I do not know how to pray." We become conscious not only of the power God has given us by His Spirit, but of our own utter infirmity. We hinder our life of devotion when we lose the distinction in thinking between these two. Reliance on the Holy Spirit for prayer is what Paul is bringing out in this verse. It is an unrealised point, we state it glibly enough, but Paul touches the thing we need to remember, he uncovers the truth of our infirmity. The whole source of our strength is receiving, recognising and relying on the Holy Spirit.

(b) The Unsyllabled Torment of Our Inability for we know not what we should pray for as we ought ...

The only platform from which the holiest saint on earth is ever heard is the platform mentioned in Hebrews 10:19, viz., we have "boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus." There is no other way. When we come into the presence of God, the human side of our praying makes us realise what Paul is trying to teach, that if we are ever going to approach God and pray acceptably, it must be by the "piece of God" in us which He has given us. Some of the qualities of God must be merged into us before our prayers can be fit for His acceptance. We are all familiar with Luke 11:13, but we do not always remember that our Lord spoke the words in connection with receiving the Holy Spirit for prayer. Paul in Romans 8:26 beats out into gold leaf the nugget that our Lord gives in Luke 11:13. When I realise that I cannot approach God, that I cannot see as God sees, that I am choked up with things my eyes see and my flesh wants, and the empty spaces round my heart want, then Jesus says, "If you, being evil,"—you know that is your infirmity—"if you ask God for the Holy Spirit, He will give Him to you." That is, God will be merged into me, and I can begin to think about real prayer, relying on what God has planted in me for prayer. Otherwise we could never get near Him, the crush of our infirmities would paralyse the words on our lips. We can only pray acceptably in the Spirit, that is, by the Holy Spirit in us, all the rest is being "cumbered about." The disposition of sin is removed in sanctification, there is no doubt about that; but Paul insists that the body is not changed, the body we had and which was ruled by the wrong disposition of sin still remains (see Romans 6:12-19). We have to use that body now and make it a slave to the new disposition, and we have to realise the need to do it more in prayer than in anything else.

(c) The Unutterable Tenderness of the Intercession . . . but the Spirit Itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.

The spirit of a man, whether it be energised by the Spirit of God or not, is bound to try and express itself in the body, which becomes its soul manifest; if it refuses to express itself in a rational way, it will express itself in an irrational, stupid way. When the Spirit of God comes in and energises the spirit of a man, what happens is that he is taken up into the great mystery of the Holy Ghost interceding in him along a particular line. If the Holy Spirit is allowed to dwell in the human spirit He has energised, He will express the unutterable. Think what that means. It means being quickened by the incoming of the Holy Spirit Who comes in to dwell supremely, and the amazing revelation is that He intercedes in us, for us, with a tenderness exactly in accordance with the Mind of God.

Have we ever allowed our minds to dwell on this element of prayer? "The sinner out of heart with self is nearest God in prayer." It is a mistake to interpret prayer on the natural instead of on the spiritual line, to say that because prayer brings us peace and joy and makes us feel better, therefore it is a Divine thing. This is the mere accident or effect of prayer, there is no real God-given revelation in it. This is the God-given revelation: that when we are born again of the Spirit of God and indwelt by the Holy Spirit, He intercedes for us with a tenderness and an understanding akin to the Lord Jesus Christ and akin to God, that is, He expresses the unutterable for us.

The Unrivalled Power of Prayer (Romans 8:27)

(a) The Unimagined Interest of God And He that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit... The Holy Spirit when He comes in to the hidden sphere of our life applies the Atonement to us in the unconscious realm as well as in the realm of which we are conscious, that is, He works out in us the understanding of sin that God has; and it is only when we get a grasp of the unrivalled power of the Spirit in us that we understand the meaning of 1 John 1:7, "the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." This does not refer to conscious sin only, but to the tremendously profound understanding of sin which only the Holy Ghost in us realises, and God searches our hearts to find out what the intercession of His Spirit is.

There are tremendous thoughts expressed in God's Book, and unless we have learned to rely on the Holy Spirit we shall say, "Oh, I shall never understand that," but the Holy Spirit in us understands it, and as we recognise and rely on Him, He will work it out, whether we consciously understand or not. The point for us to remember is that we must get to the right basis of thinking spiritually as well as of living. Never close down on your personal experience, never rivet your attention on the fact that you have had the experience of salvation or sanctification, or the baptism of the Holy Ghost; these experiences are simply doorways into a life. We have to make our minds realise this great revealed thought underneath, that the Holy Spirit is working out in us the Mind of God even as He worked out the Mind of God in Christ Jesus.

(b) The Undiscovered Intercession before God because He maketh intercession for the saints . . .

Who does? The Holy Spirit in us, and God searches our hearts, not to know what our conscious prayers are, but to find out what the prayer of the Holy Spirit is in and behind all our conscious praying. In the vision of Ezekiel wings are used as the symbol of aspiration in praying, "And the sound of the wings of the cherubim was heard even to the outer court, as the voice of God Almighty when He speaketh" (Ezekiel 10:5 RV). The voice of praying in the saints is exactly identical with the voice of Almighty God, and slowly and surely God discerns in the life of the individual saint what He discerned always in His Son, Who said, "I came down from heaven not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." As we rely on the Holy Spirit we learn to brood along the line of His expression of the unutterable in us.

(c) The Unsurpassed Identification with God . . . according to the will of God.

Look back over your own history with God in prayer, and you will find that the glib days of prayer are done. When we draw on the human side of our experience only, our prayers become amazingly flippant and If Ye Shall Ask familiar, and we ourselves become amazingly hard and metallic; but if along with the human element we rely on the Holy Spirit, we shall find that our prayers become more and more inarticulate; and when they are inarticulate, reverence grows deeper and deeper, and undue familiarity has the effect of a sudden blow on the face. There is something hopelessly incongruous in a flippant statement before God. We can always measure our growth in grace by what Paul is stating here. Am I growing slowly to lisp the very prayers of God? Is God gratified (if I may use the phrase) in seeing that His Spirit is having His way at last in a life, and turning that life into what will glorify His Son?

The Unrecognised Providence of Prayer (Romans 8:28)

At the first glance this verse seems to have nothing to do with the previous verses, but it has an amazingly close connection with them.

(a) The Undefiled Shrine of Consciousness And we know that to them that love God...(RV)

Do you remember how Paul never wearied of saying, "Don't you know that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost"? Recall what Jesus Christ said about the historic temple which is the symbol of the body; He ruthlessly turned out those that sold and bought in the temple, and said, "It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves." Let us apply that to ourselves. We have to remember that our conscious life, though only a tiny bit of our personality, is to be regarded by us as a shrine of the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost will look after the unconscious part we do not know, we must see we guard the conscious part, for which we are responsible, as a shrine of the Holy Ghost. If we recognise this as we should, we shall be careful to keep our body undefiled for Him.

(b) The Undetected Sacredness of Circumstances all things work together for good . . .

The circumstances of a saint's life are ordained by God, and not by happy-go-lucky chance. There is no such thing as chance in the life of a saint, and we shall find that God by His providence brings our bodies into circumstances that we cannot understand a bit, but the Spirit of God understands; He is bringing us into places and among people and under conditions in order that the intercession of the Holy Spirit in us may take a particular line. Do not, therefore, suddenly put your hand in front of the circumstances and say, "No, I am going to be my own amateur providence, I am going to watch this and guard that." "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding." The point to remember is that all our circumstances are in the hand of God. The Spirit imparts a solemnity to our circumstances and makes us understand something of the travail of Jesus Christ. It is not that we enter into the agony of intercession, it is that we utilise the common-sense circumstances into which God has put us, and the common-sense people He has put us among by His providence, to present their cases before Him and give the Holy Spirit a chance to intercede for them. We bring the particular people and circumstances before God's throne, and the Holv Spirit in us has a chance to intercede for them. That is how God is going to sweep the whole world by His saints. Are we making the Holy Spirit's work difficult by being indefinite, or by trying to do His work for Him? We must do the human side of the intercession, and the human side is the circumstances we are in, the people we are in contact with. We have to use our common sense in keeping our conscious life and our circumstances as a shrine of the Holy Ghost, and as we bring the different ones before God, the Holy Spirit presents them before the Throne all the time. The Holy Spirit does the interceding, but we must do our part; we must do the human side while He does the Divine. So never think it strange concerning the circumstances you are in.

(c) The Undeviating Security of His Calling . . . even to them that are called according to His purpose. (RV)

To talk about our intercession for another soul being the means of doing what the Bible says, "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much,' sounds utterly ridiculous until we get the basal thinking revealed through the Atonement and the indwelling Holy Ghost, then it is an amazing revelation of the marvellous love and condescension of God—that in Christ Jesus and by the reception of the Holy Spirit, He can take us, sin-broken, sin-diseased, wrong creatures, and re-make us entirely until we are really the ones in whom the Holy Spirit intercedes as we do our part. Are we making it easy for the Holy Spirit to work out God's will in us, or are we continually putting Him on one side by the empty requests of our natural hearts, Christians though we be? Are we learning to bring ourselves into such obedience that our every thought and imagination is brought into captivity to the Lord Jesus Christ, and is the Holy Spirit having an easy way through us more and more? Remember, your intercessions can never be mine, and my intercessions can never he yours, but the Holy Ghost makes intercession in our particular editions, without which intercession someone will be impoverished. Let us remember the depth and height and solemnity of our calling as saints.

Knocking at God's Door

A Little Book of Prayers

INTRODUCTION

Source

The material in Knocking at God's Door is from the prayers Oswald Chambers recorded in his personal diary.

The prayers from January through October reflect Oswald's years as principal of the Bible Training College, London (1911–15).

The prayers from November and December reflect the final two years of Chambers' life, in which he served as a YMCA chaplain to British troops in Egypt (1915–17).

Publication History

First published as a book: In 1937, Mrs. Chambers was compiling Oswald's talks on prayer for the book, If Ye Shall Ask. Mr. C. Rae Griffin, a close friend and member of her advisory council (the Oswald Chambers Publications Association), expressed his belief that there was also a great need for a book of personal, spiritual prayers. Mrs. Chambers turned to Oswald's diaries, in which he often wrote out his prayers at the beginning of each day. In 1938, she published A Little Book of Prayers, containing seventy-two of her husband's personal prayers.

 In 1957, additional prayers were added and some of the original prayers were divided to create a book with a prayer for each day of the year. It was retitled Knocking at God's Door.

The mention of "this house, students and the College" refers to the Bible Training College, London, during the years 1911–15. The prayers listed in September reflect Oswald's struggle to find God's guidance early in 1915. For a more complete chronology of these events, see Oswald Chambers: Abandoned to God, chapter 15.

These prayers, selected and arranged by the woman who knew him best, provide a unique glimpse into the spiritual heartbeat of Oswald Chambers.

^{1.} Bible Training College (BTC): a residential school near Clapham Common in southwest London, sponsored and operated by the Pentecostal League of Prayer from 1911 until it closed in July 1915 because of World War I; Oswald Chambers was principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers, his wife, was lady superintendent.

FOREWORD

Knock, and it shall be opened unto you. Matthew 7:7

This collection of prayers, though meant for no human eye, will help many others to express themselves in love and trust and petition to God. When the disciples saw their Lord praying, one of them said, "Lord, teach us to pray," (Luke 11:1). He spoke for all of them, and the Lord's answer was for them all—and for us. They felt they needed to know that secret track to God. They wanted to pray like their Lord, and so they began to be grounded in the principles and practice of true praying.

In this Little Book of Prayers we are overhearing one of God's servants at prayer. These are some of the prayers that he breathed out to God, penning the very words in exactness of his intention, in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving to let his requests be made known unto God. They can teach us much about the simplicity, the range, the power and the perseverance of Spirit-born praying, and there is no service more worthy of our deepest attention.

David Lambert²

Thy hand be on the latch to open the door at His first knock. Shouldst thou open the door and not see Him, do not say He did not knock, but understand that He is there, and wants thee to go out to Him. It may be He has something for thee to do for Him. Go and do it, and perhaps thou wilt return with a new prayer, to find a new window in thy soul.

January

- O Lord, I praise Thee for the revelation of Thy supreme Fatherhood that dawns on me through the grace of the Lord Jesus. Oh, that I may be the child of my Father in heaven!
- O Lord, enchain me to Thyself with great bonds of adoring love; enwheel me around with Thy Providence for Thy purposes; enlarge me until I am more and more capable of being of use to Thee.
- 3 "The Lord God omnipotent reigneth." Lord, the very sound of that phrase is great and inspiring. May I be full of the calm peace which comes from knowing Thou dost reign.
- 4 Lord, how easily the mind wanders when Thy domination is not in the ascendant! Keep the lordship of body and soul and spirit in Thy hands.
- 5 O Lord, grant that in sweet and gracious likeness to Thyself I might delight Thy heart this day, perfect my own life, and be an unalloyed blessing to all around me.
- 6 What a joyous life the life "hid with Christ in God" is! But, my God, I dare not for one moment think how far short of it I fall in spite of all Thy grace and patience. But Thou art making me, and I thank Thee.
- 7 "And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord"—might I be like that, waiting, eager, dutiful, alert, and full of power and presence of mind.
- 8 Lord, unto Thee do I look up. How I know that "in me dwelleth no good thing"; and how marvellous is Thy grace that I now find in my heart no motive save for Thy glory.
- 9 Lord, bring the sweetness and fullness of Thy power to bear on me this day. Oh, for the big, the generous, the gracious, the grave-gay life of God!
- 10 Send forth Thy light, O Lord, brood over this College as Thou didst brood (RV mg) over chaos; work mightily in Thy spiritual domains, and help me to erect mountain peaks of prayer that the clouds may be rent and bring themselves down in blessing.
- 11 Lord, the hilarious simplicity of trust in Thee seems almost levity until I remember Thee, and dare not not be glad! Spread joy and gladness all around us this day.

- 12 Lord, this day is peculiarly Thy day; help us to remember only Thee. Bless Thy servants and handmaidens all over the world.
- 13 O Lord, how excellent it is to commune with Thee in the early morning hours. Enable me by patience to reproduce these exalted moments of calm into the activities of the day.
- 14 "Oft shall that flesh imperil and outweary"—yet what indignation does this bear in me! As I rouse myself, meet my rousing with the inspiration of Thy Spirit.
- 15 Lord, lift up the light of Thy countenance upon me and give me peace, Thy peace, deep as the unfathomed sea, high as the unscaled heights of heaven. Touch me now, till light and life and liberty course through me.
- 16 Lord, I would worship Thee in the Psalmist's words—"Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness": O Lord, how supreme a darkness I am! therefore Thou must be the light.
- 17 Lord, unto Thee I come in helplessness, yet in hopefulness inwrought by Thy Spirit, that I might be filled with Thy love, Thy Divine un-egoistic nature, Thy passionate patience, unwounded by personal considerations.
- 18 O Lord, this day put Thou Thy touch, great and ennobling and inspiring, upon us all. Save completely our minds from panic and our spirits from undue haste.
- 19 Lord, how I realise the peril of work and activity equally with that of quiet and retirement, and that the only secure haven is Thyself. Help me to be taken up altogether with Thee.
- 20 O Lord, I look to Thee so utterly that I am worse than useless without Thee. Be made wisdom and discernment and understanding unto me today.
- 21 O Lord, this day keep us so well that we never need to think of ourselves at all, but joyously spend and be spent for Thee.
- 22 O Lord, if I am strong in any wise it is only in Thee, and this morning my soul rejoices because of the recalling of the word—"Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might."
- 23 O Lord, in simple dependence on Thy Holy Spirit indwelling in me and uniting me with Thy nature, I look to Thee; cause me to be all Thou wouldst have me be.
- 24 O Lord, lift up the light of Thy countenance upon us, let Thy great and glorious voice and - presence sweep through this College. On those of us who teach send the anointing unction and gracious insight into Thy truth.

- 25 Lord, how dim and distant and dreary my physical life seems, and is, without Thee; fill the outer courts with Thy Divine life.
- 26 O Lord, as this Thy day unfolds be our peculiar treasure in everything. Permeate us with Thy Spirit that all may be transfigured with sweet complacent spiritual power.
- 27 O Lord, unto Thee do I come; consciously and unconsciously, I draw near in uttermost need. Lift me, lead me, fill me for Thy glory, make me harmoniously one with Thy purpose and will.
- 28 O God, increase my sense of Thee and my sensible understanding of Thy Son, my Lord and Master. Grant that I may more and more realise Thy dominance and rule, and more and more rejoice in simple joy in Thee.
- 29 O Lord, Thou art ever well, and all my fresh springs are in Thee (PBV). To Thee I come; may Thy mighty life spring up in me, a veritable influx into body as well as spirit.
- 30 Lord, today let Thy praise abound, let joy and gladness resound everywhere. How I long for joy—great bounding liberating joy: joy in God, joy in the Holy Ghost, joy in life, and joy in love. Cause this to be a joyous house today, all day.
- 31 Lord, Thy ways are like Thyself—perfect: my ways are like myself—imperfect. Touch me into effectual identity with Thy consciousness, and with Thy ways for this day.

February

- 1 Lord God Almighty, Thou are holy; but more wonderful than praise can tell, Thou dost undertake to make me holy by Thy grace.
- 2 O Lord, how little I realise what it means to watch with Thee, to continue with Thee in Thy temptations. Draw me nearer this morning and insulate me by Thy mighty power until I speak and live only for Thee.
- 3 Lord, breathe on me until my frame is knit to Thy thought. Lift me until I see Thy face and trust Thine Almightiness without fear or insidious unbelief.

- 4 Lord, I praise Thee for Thy word—"In your patience possess ye your souls," and I praise Thee for Thy grace which waits while I laboriously acquire the soul Thou wouldst have me acquire.
- 5 O Lord, unto Thee do I turn, unto Thee. I am but a homeless waif until Thou dost touch me with the security of Thy peace, the sweet sense of Thy love.
- 6 Lord, Thy word comes so quietly and all-pervadingly—"If any man serve Me, let him follow Me": and, "If any man serve Me, him will My Father honour." Take me as Thy servant in this sense.
- 7 O Lord, how wholesome and grand a thing it is to be willing towards Thee. I am willing, eagerly willing for Thy will to be done, and I feel all deeply joyful at the prospect for nothing can be so glorious as just Thy will.
- 8 How I long to be so full of Thee, burning and shining and irradiating Thee, that there is no room for anything but just Thy gracious light.
- 9 O Lord, speak with power and graciousness in today's Services. Conduct me into the inner secret of fellowship with Thee that Thou mayest be able to convey Thyself aright.
- 10 O Lord, in some moods it seems so easy to slip away from Thee and Thy purposes, and yet, Lord, I do not believe it is; but I do believe it is possible to enter into Thy purposes like a beast of the field, with no discernment and no vision. Lord, I would be a son of Thine.
- 11 O Lord, how I need infilling and invigorating by Thy presence. Give me that buoyant, quiet confidence in Thee which is the witness of the Spirit.
- 12 O Lord, my soul doth praise Thee for its trust in Thee. My soul hangeth on Thy touch and smile lest any distemper of mind or imagination arise and I be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.
- 13 O Lord, I would crave more and more to put on love like a garment, that in my contact with men that is what they will most lastingly recognise.
- 14 O Lord, that the most absorbing sensing of Thee might be mine, that Thy will should be done in and through me unhinderedly.
- 15 O Lord, how I adore Thee, but how I long for more conscious adoration and communion and

^{3.} PBV: Prayer Book Version. The Book of Common Prayer of the Church of England includes a translation of the Psalter, or Psalms of David.

- God-praising-ness. Cleanse me from the defilement of distance from Thee.
- 16 Here is the day, O Lord, Thy day, cause it to shine for ever in our individual lives like a jewel.
- 17 O Lord, I do thank Thee for the condition of heart and motive Thy grace has wrought in me, but, Oh, when in my actual life shall I express before the world the beauty of Thy peace?
- 18 Guard my central life from corrosion, O Lord; keep me secretly so right with Thee that I may redound to Thy glory.
- 19 I praise Thee for that word—"Like as a father pitieth his children, so the LORD pitieth them that fear Him." How I realise that I owe nothing to Thy severity but all to Thy love. Oh, that Thy love and gentleness and patience toward me were expressed through me to others!
- 20 O Lord, one thing amazes me, and that is my almost total deficiency in letting Thee manifest Thyself and Thy beauty in my outward life. Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon me this day.
- 21 O Lord, with much dimness I draw nigh to Thee, clear the dimness away from me and flood me with the light of Thy countenance.
- 22 O Lord, I beseech Thee for sustaining strength and simple joy. Keep me humble-minded in motive and design that nothing of the superior person may be mine.
- 23 O Lord, how much of a lift I need this morning! Thou knowest. In my preaching, cause Thy glorious Voice to be heard, Thy lovely Face to be seen, Thy pervasive Spirit felt.
- 24 Cleanse me, O Lord, from all complicity of spirit, and may Thy radiant beauty be in and upon me this day.
- 25 How depressed and appalled I am at the prospect of sinking to the commonplace! Lord, help me to live purely and powerfully and fascinatedly Thine.
- 26 Oh, for one of those touches of Thy Spirit that, as the wind, quicken and awaken, loosen and inspire!
- 27 How my heart and my flesh cry out for the living God! Oh, the enervation of myself! and Oh, the refreshment and joy of the Lord!
- 28 O Lord, in complete need I turn to Thee. Come to me physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually, and cause me to effect the manifestation of Thyself that is glorifying to Thee.

29 Oh, how I long to be all taken up by Thee, all my body, soul and spirit enthused by Thee; so many lurking things of the darkness still remain. What a gracious humiliation these things are.

March

- 1 I praise Thee that all I am is Thine. Oh, that I could delight Thee as the lily does, or the tree, or even the sparrows, just living the life Thou has granted!
- 2 O Lord God, what Thou art to me I dimly begin to discern—more than morning light, more than joy and health, more than all Thy blessings. Dawn on me afresh this morning and make me light all through with Thy light.
- 3 O Lord, my soul would stay upon Thee as Creator of the world, and upon our Lord Jesus Christ as Creator of His life in me. Oh, for the power of Thy Spirit to adore Thee in fuller measure!
- 4 "And upon the top of the pillars was lily work."
 O Lord, this word is in my mind, especially how devoid I am of any "lily work," so rugged and unadorned. Cause me to be Thine in the expression of Thy grace as well as in the experience of it.
- 5 O Lord, this new day enable me by Thy grace to full feel Thy nearness and Thy might. Keep me facing Thy glory that I may be "changed into the same image from glory to glory."
- 6 How manifold are the ways I need Thee! I praise Thee Thou art there to be found. Lord, be found of me; but it is only when Thou dost come Thyself that I find Thee.
- 7 I would, O Lord, have all my thought and emotions and words redolent with love, perfect love to Thee, and through that to men.
- 8 O my God, I lie in Thy fire burning and purifying—so much dross I seem to discover today, so little of Thy sweet and lovely grace in my dealing with others' faults. Lord, forgive me.
- 9 O Lord, soften and subdue, inspire and thrill, and raise us on to the level of such glorious communion with Thee that we may catch Thy likeness.
- 10 O Lord, how wonderful and great and mighty it is to turn toward Thee. Keep me from any dominance saving Thine.
- 11 O Lord, tone me up with Thy great power. I believe I am privileged to ask this because of the Atonement of Jesus. Make me physically all I ought to be so that Thy radiance may be on me.

- 12 Ah Lord, Thy Face, Thy touch, Thy blessing, I seek today. Touch me, Lord, till every part of my being vibrates and thrills with Thy gracious and powerful well-being.
- 13 Lord, my chief desire is to be rooted and grounded in Thee—God-centred and Godabsorbed, God-enthused and God-loved. How eager my soul is to know Thee and be still!
- 14 O Lord, how wonderful are Thy ways! When I recall the way Thou has led me and borne with me, I am lost in wonder, love and praise.
- 15 Bless us here today, O Lord, so many need Thee. Go in and out amongst us, controlling and lifting with Thy saving power.
- 16 O Lord, what a wonder of perfect confidence it would create could I but hear some clear disposing word of Thine! Lord, speak it today.
- 17 O Lord, by Thy grace open my vision to Thee and Thine infinite horizons, and take me into Thy counsels regarding Thy work in this College.
- 18 O Lord, I would that I had a livelier sense of Thee and of Thy bounties continually with me.
- 19 O Lord, bless me this hour with the glow of Thy presence and sense of Thy nearness. I do trust only in Thee, yet I long for conscious delight in Thy presence, if Thou wilt vouchsafe it to me.
- 20 O Lord, may this day be right glorious with Thy presence and blessing. May we see Thee causing the place of Thy feet to be glorious.
- 21 O Lord, I do praise Thee for the mighty lines of thought that come as I think of membership in Thy Mystical Body. How I long to be quickened enough to realise the wonder of it more.
- 22 O Lord, Thou art my God, I know no God beside Thee. My sense of unworthiness is so great that I do not waste any time in telling Thee of it. It is to Thyself I come—yearningly, eagerly, completely.
- 23 O Lord, for supplies of Thy grace today, grace so Divine and mighty that many may glorify Thee through my ministry.
- 24 Lord God Almighty, who wast manifested in Jesus Christ, I come before Thee now with the unpretentiousness of a human being needing Thee absolutely and rejoicing in my need.
- 25 O Lord, when I awake, I am still with Thee. Quicken my mortal body with Thy mighty resurrection life; rouse me this hour with a gracious influx of power.

- 26 "Clouds and darkness are round about Him: righteousness and judgement are the foundation of His throne" (RV). Commune with me, O Lord, that I may know I am light in Thee.
- 27 O Lord, the "multitudes" will be coming and going today. Help me to keep, like my Master, in the lonely places and pray.
- 28 O Lord, visit with Thy tenderness every heart and life that has been experiencing the shattering which the penetration of Thy word brings.
- 29 O Lord, be such a disposer of the lot that is cast into the lap that our mouths shall be filled with laughter at what Thou wilt bring to pass!
- 30 O Lord, be very present today—the great joyous presence of the Holy Ghost permeating everywhere.
- 31 O Lord, I seem an incarnate desert before Thee, unbeautiful and arid; but, praise Thy Name, Thou canst make "the desert rejoice, and blossom as the rose."

April

- O Lord, the truth that presses its way through all else this morning is the truth about Sanctification. Forgive me if I have imperceptibly shifted from this great purpose of Thine.
- 2 O Lord, blessed be the tone and power of Thy voice, its tones of tenderness and love in Grace; its tones of power in the great gales of Nature. Lord, cause Thy glorious voice to be heard in this College, and in my soul.
- 3 Draw me, O Lord, into vital communion with Thyself. What a difference the sun makes in the natural world: and what a difference it makes when Thou dost dawn upon us! Press through till we are thrilled with Thy presence.
- 4 O Lord, how niggardly is my appreciation of Thine Atonement and perfect salvation. Lord, draw me into fuller gratitude; let me ever be a passionate lover of the Lord Jesus Christ.
- 5 O Lord, my Lord, make this day right glorious. For myself in Thy service, I ask surcease from all distracting.
- 6 O Lord, I would praise Thee for Thy mighty Redemption at the heart of all our problems. By Thy great power raise us up to newness of life this Easter Day.
- 7 O Lord, the wonder of being one with Thee as Thou art one with the Father! Grant us this one-

- ness for Thy glory, and to that end lift up the light of Thy countenance upon us and give us peace.
- 8 O Lord, cause my intellect to glow with Thy Holy Spirit's teaching.
- 9 O Lord, Thy graciousness is fresh to my soul, but how slow is my growth in Thine Almighty grace! Quicken Thou me, open my nature to grander horizons this day.
- 10 O Lord, I praise Thee for the prayers of the saints which have surrounded me like an atmosphere of heaven, and for the unspeakable grace which comes to me through Thy Redemption.
- 11 Be radiant through me, O Lord. Give me Thine approving smile and benediction, and help me to be altogether taken up with Thee.
- 12 How we need just Thee! Make it a day for ever memorable for intimacy with Thyself.
- 13 O Lord, how reluctant my nature seems to brood on the profound truths of Thy grace, and yet do not I know the power and purity of communion with Thee?
- 14 O Lord, bless us in this College. Today; save from indolence and spiritual sloth, and cause Thine undertakings to be almighty.
- 15 Lord, I make petition to see Thee, I have been pre-occupied and away from Thee in outercourt life; forgive me, and draw me near to Thyself that I may have rare communion with Thee again.
- 16 O Lord, I have a great implicit yearning for a token of Thy notice. Give just a sign that Thou art using me for something in Thy purpose.
- 17 O Lord my God, my strength, my hope, and my joy, slowly but surely I seem to be emerging into a clearer discernment of Thee. Dawn through all earth-born clouds and mists today.
- 18 O Lord, so many to pray for, so many in need of deliverance. Unto Thee how hungrily I look up.
- 19 Lord, put Thy mouth to our College life and breathe the invigorating breath of Thy recreating life through us all, putting sickness far from us.
- 20 O Lord, I do rejoice at Thy word, "as one that findeth great spoil." As I speak today put Thy words in my mouth; be so present that it shall be manifest to all that it is Thy word.
- 21 O Lord, with the coming of spring in Nature my spirit longs that Thy energising life may flow in and through me more, and still yet more. But how un-beautiful I am, how un-Christlike! and yet it is not in depression, but in amazing hope I see this.

- 22 O Lord, draw me to Thee; give me the glorious sensing of Thyself that makes a mere sinner like me worthy as Thy servant.
- 23 O Lord, "that Thine eyes may be open toward this house night and day." Keep it and guard it from all that is not in Thine order, and cause each one of us to be all that Thy secret heart desires.
- 24 O Lord, in humbled guise I pray this morning, full of adoration and worship, but full of humility when I remember how shielded my life is.
- 25 O Lord, disentangle me, I have a great longing for a simplicity of relationship with Thee that shall transfigure everything and shed blessing and benediction all around.
- 26 O Lord, restore the keen edge of all spiritual sensibilities; lift me into Thy light by Thine abounding grace through our Lord Jesus Christ. How slow I am to apprehend more of Thee and of thy ways!
- 27 O Lord, this day I have to speak in Thy Name three times, and I am un-moved and un-inspired till now. If Thou canst convey Thy mind to me in my spiritual dullness, Oh, for Jesus Christ's sake, do it.
- 28 O Lord my God, assist me to worship Thee. I praise Thee that Thou remainest evermore the same. Touch me, O Lord, and by Thy power renew me spiritually to keenness and appreciation of Thee and of Thy truth.
- 29 O Lord, dawn on us and draw us into Thyself today; begin with me. Cleanse me, O Lord, from all the imperfections which are clear to Thee though not to me.
- 30 "The LORD reigneth"; O Lord, let Thy reigning power be manifested this day in the bodies of Thy servants for Thy glory.

May

- 1 Lord, I praise Thee for this day's glad opportunity of serving Thee acceptably. I bless Thee for the revealing of the truth that Thine order comes moment by moment in the day's life.
- 2 "But when the kindness of God our Saviour, and His love toward man, appeared . . ." (RV)—O Lord, that word haunts me; yet how little of Thy kindness and Thy love do I exhibit toward others!
- 3 May the power and tone and health of God be allpervading this day. How I long for Thy generousheartedness to be realised in and through all things! Keep the sense of Thy call in me fresh and vivid.

- 4 O Lord, I praise Thee for the Throne of Grace, and that in Jesus Christ I can draw near with boldness to receive mercy, and grace for this day's glorifying of Thee.
- 5 I praise Thee, O Lord, for Thy gift of salvation; for the benefit and blessing of the prayers of the saints. But how I slip into Thy favours and slowly begin to think I merit them, or act as though I did. Forgive me, Lord.
- 6 I would, O Lord, cleanse myself from all defilement of flesh and spirit, from every coarsening of the fibre of the spiritual life, so that I may dwell in Thee in fulness of joy.
- O Lord, I do praise Thee that through Christ Jesus our Lord it is mercy and loving-kindness, graciousness and wonders, all along the way; I would I were more sensitive to Thee and Thy doings, more Christlike in my gratitude.
- 8 O Lord, by Thy grace, I see so much with my mind and speak so much—cause my heart and my conduct not only to keep pace with my mind but go far beyond it.
- 9 O Lord, I thank Thee for Thy word, "Not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the LORD of Hosts." I ask for such aid of Thy Spirit that Thou mayest be satisfied with me today.
- 10 Lord, through all the multitudinous duties of the day keep me calm; ennoble me by Thy touch and tenderness. Settle and quieten me down in Thee.
- 11 O Lord, I lift up my eyes, my hopes, and my prayers to Thee. Re-energise me from Thy heights by the indwelling of Thy Holy Spirit that the light of God may arise around and in us today. Fill up the day with sweetness and glory for Thine own delight.
- 12 O Lord, for more love, passionate, devout and earnest love to Thee to show itself in my conscious life. Oh for grace to show and to feel patience and gentleness to those around me!
- 13 O Lord, Thou art what I am longing for! "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God: when shall I come and appear before God?" Oh, for Thy touch, Thy life, Thy beauty; let it come now, Lord, even as I pray.
- 14 O Lord, how clearly Thou hast shown me that it is God, and God alone, who matters. May I never stumble any in this great realisation.
- 15 O Lord, I realise how little of the hidden life of believing in Jesus I have exercised of late, ulterior motives seem to creep in all the time. Bring

- the simplicity that is in Christ into my life and outlook in deeper ways—careful only of Thine approval.
- 16 O Lord, touch all our lives with Thine energising power and loving-kindness and beauty; make it a time of the unveiling of Thy Face. This seems to be all my prayer.
- 17 O Lord this day, cause Thy glorious voice to be heard, and heard by me. Oh speak to me, produce Thy stillness in my heart and mind and speak with thrilling power.
- 18 Lord, this Sabbath morning, insulate me from sights and sounds unusual; loosen me from the bands that bind me to the present and the recent, and fill with Thy Spirit the whole limit of this day.
- 19 "Like rain upon the mown grass"; "as the dew unto Israel"—O Lord, these phrases come to my mind this morning with sweet insistence. Be as rain and as dew unto us this day, refreshing, remoulding, and blessing us. Unto Thee do I come in great and glad expectancy.
- 20 O Lord, how complete is my need of Thee! To Thee I come, give me a gracious renewing of Thy life till my reasoning powers, my imagination, and my speaking are all of Thee. I seek Thy touch and thrilling grace today.
- 21 Lord, I would like to pour out my heart before Thee—my soul is not brilliant in experience just now, nor my intellect vigorous, both are jaded; but I adore Thee that Thou art never dull nor jaded, and that Thou knowest our frame.
- 22 O Lord, speak to me now. Inspire me for today; dullness, deep and devastating, seems to hold fast to my powers.
- 23 O Lord, how complete is my need of Thee! Come into our actual circumstances this day in the plenitude of thy power.
- 24 O Lord, how slow I am to show in my manners and ways the gracious grace of God! When shall Thy beauty be upon me for Thine honour?
- 25 Lord God Omnipotent, how my soul delights to know that Thou carest for sparrows, and numberest the hairs of our head! Lord, breathe on me till I am in the frame of mind and body to worship Thee.
- 26 O Lord, rise in grandeur into our lives and ways and goings. Be a strong presence of healing and hope and grace and beauty this day.

- 27 Breathe on me, Breath of God, until my mind and spirit are in suitable adjustment to Thyself. Shed abroad liberty and purity and power amongst and in us all.
- 28 O Lord, how all things are simple and glorious when Thou art seen! This day let me see Thy Face and be alone with Thee.
- 29 O Lord, make this a right royal day with Thee. Touch us, O Lord, that all our spiritual and material life may be attuned to Thy purposes. Just Thy touch, and all will be well.
- 30 "Whoso is wise, . . . even they shall understand the lovingkindness of the LORD." Lord, that would be beautiful! Give me this token for Thy glory. Unto Thee do I look for this day; cause the abundance of Thy bounty and beauty to be upon us.
- 31 O Lord, how essentially necessary it is for me to draw nigh to Thee. How can I falter when Thou art my life?

June

- O Lord, how I realise my need of a worthier conception of Thyself. All lesser things I would merge in this petition—that I might worthily magnify Thee.
- 2 "Light is sown for the righteous." Lord, what a harvest! How wonderful are Thy ways.
- 3 O Lord, I marvel at my slowness in praise; quicken me to praise Thee aright. Give me a due sense, a powerful realisation of Thy goodness, that I might be a joyous satisfaction to Thine own heart.
- 4 Lord, in complete dependence I look to Thee; it is good for me to feel "wandered" till Thou dost appear.
- 5 O Lord, I rejoice that the "if need be" is Thine! and I praise Thee for the counsel to "think it not strange concerning the fiery trial," but to rejoice.
- 6 O Lord, for the power of Thy Spirit to adore Thee in fuller ways. Keep my spirit brightly infused by Thy Holy Spirit that thus energised, the Lord Jesus and His perfections may be manifested in my mortal flesh.
- 7 O Lord, with what abundant relief I turn to Thee, I need Thee in unfathomable ways, and with what amazed relief and joy I find all I need is Thyself.
- 8 O Lord, this morning disperse every mist, and shine forth clear and strong and invigoratingly.

- 9 "Thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress": Oh that the thoughts of my heart were more and more a well-spring of gracious treasure without ceasing!
- 10 Lord, Thy goodness is so beyond comparison that we are "like unto them that dream," our mouth is "filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing" (RV); we praise Thee for the time when we shall come again with joy, bringing our sheaves with us.
- 11 O Lord, draw near, press into my conscious possession until I am all taken up with Thee. Make this day radiant with Thy power.
- 12 O Lord, there is no Time with Thee for "a thousand years in Thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past"; but with me it is necessarily different. How Thou hast restored the years the cankerworm hath eaten and created me a new creature in Christ Jesus! Accept my thanksgiving.
- 13 O Lord, in might and majesty prevail in many more ways today. Keep me from secularisation of soul or spirit.
- 14 O Lord, I know Thy blessing and I praise Thee, but it is the indescribable touch and enwheeling as Thy servant that I seek for—I know not what I seek for, but Thou knowest. How I long for Thee!
- 15 O Lord, this day lead me into some more of Thy gracious and wondrous doings. Put Thy loving hand of grace and power upon me this day.
- 16 O Lord, give me the disposition of mind that delights in Thee. Cleanse me from all fog and flurry and fuss, that clear-eyed I may see Thy way this day.
- 17 O Lord, I do thank Thee for the relief and inspiration, the almost effulgence of joy, that has flowed into me and visited my inner kingdom. Fill me now with Thy calm peace.
- 18 O Lord, grant that this day may end for ever the self-consciousness that enfeebles us in Thy service, and may we be conscious only of Jesus.
- 19 O Lord, how I long for Thee to bring me face to face with Thyself! My soul thirsteth for Thee, for the touch of Thy grace, the breathing of Thy Spirit.
- 20 O Lord, anoint the College to praise Thee; anoint all of us here to praise Thee. Bring the buoyant breezes of Thy Holy Spirit upon us now.

- 21 O Lord, rouse and quicken me so that my mortal flesh may indeed be the obedient, docile servant of Thy Spirit.
- 22 Lord, what an intense need of Thee I realise this morning; supply that need according to Thy riches in Christ Jesus until I am wholly transfigured by the supply.
- 23 O Lord, draw Thy powerful presence around me this day as a curtain, and be the glory in the midst.
- 24 O Lord, remove this bondage of thought, and bring peace and purity and power. Fill me this day with Thy tenderness and compassion and grace.
- 25 O Lord, breathe on me till I am one with Thee in the temper of my mind and heart and disposition. Unto Thee do I turn. Again, how completely I realise my lost-ness without Thee!
- 26 O Lord, to praise Thee aright is a great desire of mine, created and fostered by Thy Spirit and grace.
- 27 Lord, so much activity, so many things, so numberless the people! Bless today with largeness of heart and beauty of character for Thy glory.
- 28 Lord, I would bless and praise Thee, but how hard I find it to praise Thee when I am not physically fit, yet why should it be so? This means that I praise Thee only when it is a pleasure to me. I would that my soul were one continual praise to Thee!
- 29 O Lord, lift up the light of Thy countenance upon us this day and make us fit in with Thy plans with great sweetness and liberty, and a lilt to Thee all day.
- 30 Lord, how I desire to see Thee, to hear Thee, to meditate on Thee, and manifestly grow like Thee! And Thou hast said, "Delight thyself in the LORD; and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart."

July

- 1 "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you." O Lord, what a wonder these words are! The miasmas that at times lie around the margins of the mind need Thy constant care to keep them away. I look to Thee that I may be renewed in the spirit of my mind.
- 2 Keep this house,⁴ O Lord, spiritually and in all ways, "exceeding magnifical." Give us the light and illumination Thou dost delight in.
- 3 O Lord, this day prevail to bless. These students, O Lord, into Thy hands I commend them. Thou

- knowest it is with a clear definite plan of my own I meet them day by day, but I thank Thee Thou
- hast Thine own great plans; carry them out, O Lord, with power and grace.
- 4 Lord, my mind is dim in relation to _____. Lord, be Thou their strong tower; none seem to regard them or care. Prevent the enemy from exacting on them. They are as they are because of their loyalty to Thee. Lord, undertake mightily.
- 5 Lord, I bless Thee for this College, that in it Thou art proving "a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat."
- 6 O Lord, unto Thee do I come with praise and thanksgiving, but with a yearning for a deeper conscious appreciation of Thy goodness. Bless me this day with an enlarged capacity and power to praise.
- 7 "So foolish was I, and ignorant: I was as a beast before Thee." O Lord, those words express me to myself before Thee. I am ashamed of my temper of mind, so foolish, so "beast-ly," when looked at in the light of the pure and holy God-likeness our Lord demands.
- 8 O Lord, what great and glorious outlines have passed and are passing before the vision of our personal spirits about Thy plans. Lord, we do not see the way, but we know Thee and trust. Keep our minds and hearts strong and quiet in Thee.
- 9 O Lord, how much the margins of my mind are taken up with surrounding interests of late so that the surroundings seem the centre. Be Thou Thyself my strong Centre and Surrounding.
- 10 Bless us all this day, garrison minds and hearts from vague fancies and false emotions, from spectres of the imagination, and keep us wholesomely Thine.
- 11 Send us more students, O Lord, until this place is filled with men and women through whom Thou canst glorify Thyself throughout the world.
- 12 Touch my spirit till it be filled with Thee to overflowing. Think through my mind till I form the mind "which was also in Christ Jesus."
- 13 Oh, by Thy indwelling Spirit knit me together into worship and beauty and holiness. Lord, touch my body and spirit till both are sweeping in one for Thee.

^{4.} this house: the Bible Training College (BTC).

- 14 Lord, that I might see Thee, feel Thee, "faith" Thee, and fully realise Thee in the manner and measure Thou seest I am capable of. What wait I for but Thee only?
- 15 O Lord, I would thank Thee for the nameless forebodings and spectres of the mind which hover around when not sufficient time is being given to prayer. Lord, I look up to Thee now; descend, O gracious Lord, descend, and give me grace to rejoice in Thee this day.
- 16 Lord, touch with energising power and sweet loving-kindness and beauty all our lives today; make it a time of the unveiling of Thy Face and power.
- 17 "Unite my heart to fear Thy Name." My soul is all abroad because of the meanness, the self-consciousness, the less-than-the-best, which hover around and prevent me as I pray. Lord, be almighty for me!
- 18 O Lord, I do praise Thee that Thou art, and that by Thy Divine omnipotent grace I am learning to come into Thy presence. Touch my body and spirit with Thy grace and light and wisdom; bright and vivid make Thy touches.
- 19 Cause it to be light and sweetness and joy all day. Undertake with Thy easy power and might; graciously dawn on us physically and mentally and spiritually.
- 20 O Lord, that I might be brought into Thy presence, and see things from Thy standpoint. I have to speak to Thy people this morning, anoint me afresh, O Lord, with Thy gracious Spirit.
- 21 O Lord, as we consider the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah this morning, light it up with Thy glory; soften and subdue, inspire and thrill, and raise us on to the level of such glorious service that we may catch Thy likeness.
- 22 Lord, bless the Devotional Meeting today, may it break with soft beauty and sure blessing and special bounty upon us all.
- 23 O Lord, for greater sweetness and beauty of character; for the gift of spiritual energy and full-patienced life towards others. Thy sweetness, Thy beauty, manifest them, O Lord; instinct with Thee I would be indeed.
- 24 Unto Thee, O Lord, I come, may Thy beauty and grace and soothing peace be in and upon me this - day, and may no wind or weather or anxiety ever touch Thy peace in my life or in this place.

- 25 O Lord, I would seek Thy face, but what avail is my seeking if Thou revealest not Thyself? Shew me Thy Face, O Lord. Keep me ever seeing Thee.
- 26 O God, my Father, the clouds are but the dust of Thy feet! Let me discover in every cloud of Providence or Nature or Grace no man save Jesus only after the fear, till there be no fear.
- 27 Detach me, O Lord, from the things of sense and time, and usher me into the presence of the King. Keep the precincts of my mind and heart entirely Thine.
- 28 O Lord, save us from the murmuring spirit which with the majority of us is merely skin-deep, but is harmful, hurting the bloom of spiritual communion.
- 29 Lord, the range of Thy power, the touch of Thy grace, the breathing of Thy Spirit—how I long for these to bring me face to face with Thee. Forgive my tardiness—it takes me so long to awaken to some things.
- 30 This morning, O Lord, I praise Thee for all the past—so wayward on my part, so gracious and long-suffering and forgiving and tender on Thine.
- 31 O Lord, my soul lives before Thee in adoration for Thy mighty grace bestowed on me, so that my eyes see and my ears hear and my heart understands Thy goings behind all circumstances.

August

- 1 "My spirit's weather"—how aptly that describes my condition today! Do Thou control it, and help me to rise in it and above it.
- 2 Lord, call me by name that I may thrill with that wonderful calling! What a difference a little thing for Thee to do does make—a calling by name, a passing touch, and we are in ecstasy! Oh, why dost Thou not do it oftener?
- 3 Lord, this day I have to preach in Thy Name; make it radiant with Thy power. Draw out my soul into the great realisation of Thyself, keep me centralised in Thee in every deep and final sense.
- 4 Lord, how like I am to the man who had nothing to set before the friend who came to him at midnight! So many are in need of emancipation and deliverance, undertake completely. Sweep ^{5.} meanness: mean, as used here, something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

- through the whole College with Thy gracious presence.
- 5 O Lord, my God, how wonderfully and powerfully Thou hast caused me to know with a knowledge that passes knowledge that Redemption is the one great revelation Reality.
- 6 Lord, I adore Thee for the past Session. How many Thou hast allowed me to see enter gloriously into a right relationship with Thee! It is too wonderful for me to praise Thee adequately.
- 7 Lord, extricating and beautifying are the two things my soul most needs today. To Thee I come as an incarnate need of Thee as Saviour and Lord. Repair all the loss of spiritual bloom and sensitiveness to Thee that I may be the right influence for Thee here.
- 8 Lord, as I speak at the Sermon Class on "The Worker's Staying Power," bring Thy light and grace to bear upon us. May we "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things."
- 9 Lord, how completely I need Thee and ache for Thee. Return unto me in completeness, and as Thy life fills up the limits of mind and spirit and overflows, glory will be to Thy Name.
- 10 With worshipping reverence I would draw nigh Thee this morning in the consciousness that Thou art my Father, and dost fully know the patience Thou hast had with me in my unreality. But, Lord, I do not seem to care now if I am real or not because Thou Thyself art the great Reality.
- 11 Lord, I praise Thee for this place I am in; but the wonder has begun to stir in me—is this Thy place for me? Hold me steady doing Thy will. It may be only restlessness; if so, calm me to strength that I sin not against Thee by doubting.
- 12 How helpless I am in bringing forth fruit, Thy kind of fruit in the world, so ungenerous and unlike Thee am I. Forgive me, and by abiding in Jesus may I bear much fruit and so glorify the Father.
- 13 Lord, gather my powers to Thyself, save from dissipation of energy and cure all distempers with Thy perfect health. Come and make the whole limit of this bodily temple shine with Thy presence.
- 14 "Holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord": Lord, I thank Thee for that word. How awful if Thou wert not holy! How easy it would seem at times to decline into a lesser, baser life; I thank Thee for the warning.
- 15 Lord, I feel myself longing for Thee and Thy life, and I am turning to the 91st Psalm for assur-

- ance—"Surely He shall deliver thee." Lord, I am assured of it, and would thank Thee for the sweet sense of Thy protecting care.
- 16 Lord, have us all completely in Thy hand, enabling us to choose Thy leading that our "God may count us worthy of our calling."
- 17 I would, O Lord, see Thy Face and know Thy power and thrilling grace. Draw nigh my life in full recuperation, and forgive me for the neglect of Thy ways in external details.
- 18 Lord, with Thy purity permeate our minds and bodies and affections; let us realise and quickly manifest the bracing and enlivening of Thy goings. Come into our circumstances in the plenitude of Thy power.
- 19 "If ye shall ask Me anything in My Name, that will I do" (RV). It is all so mysterious, O Lord, and all so simple—I pray, and believe that Thou dost create something in answer to and by the very means of my prayer, that was not in existence before.
- 20 Lord, I praise Thee Thou hast prevented my seeking things immediately for myself, but just Thy touch I do seek, a token for good; but not if it will hinder Thy welfare in me.
- 21 Lord, touch me physically that that well-being of Thine may lave the shores of my life and I be filled with praise.
- 22 Lord, I am writing "The Discipline of Prayer," instinct and inspire me, and cause the little booklet to be all Thou dost desire it should be.
- 23 Lord, lift me as I lift myself up to Thee. Give me the light of Thy countenance that I may irradiate it back to Thee.
- 24 Lord, visit us with the manifestation of Thy life today. Cause a breath of emancipation to begin and flow on unto Thee, confirming in godliness and grace each one of us here.
- 25 Lord, so much truth revealed, so many things to say, and so little do I feel I live up to what Thou dost show me. Lord, empower me for Thy glory.
- 26 Lord, I know that Thou dost abound in grace and art always well; grant me that grace and wellbeing. Thou knowest how much our spiritual life depends on our feeling well physically.
- 27 Fill the College with Thy glorious benediction and blessing. Go in and out among us today, charging the atmosphere with Thy gracious presence.
- 28 Lord, how complete and entire and absolute is my need of Thee in every way and in all ways. I - am a vast cavity for Thee to fill; fill me to overflowing with Thy glory and beauty.

- 29 Lord, bring mighty showers of grace and glory upon all the Classes today, and for the Men's Meeting tonight, I beseech Thee make it a time of great power and blessing.
- 30 Bless the whole College with waves of health and power. Show us more love that radiantly in Thy care we may go forth this day. Bless the strangers within our gates.
- 31 Lord, unto Thee I look up, help me to worship Thee aright. I praise Thee that my nature does worship Thee, but my conscious life is slow to respond to Thee and Thy beauty as it might. Lord, help me.

September

- 1 Lord, I have decided before Thee to offer for work with the Forces; undertake and guide me in each particular. I know Thou wilt, but I am fearful of my own precipitate judgement.
- 2 O Lord, swamp me with Thy grace and glory that the ample tide of Thyself may be all in all.
- 3 Lord, be unto me a place of broad rivers, full of life and restful activity. Show each one of us more love and gentleness today, and to me, because so many are influenced directly by me.
- 4 Lord, cause Thy loving-kindness to be known by me this day by Thine inevitably powerful touches, and use me in Thy gentle almightiness for Thy purposes.
- 5 For the Devotional Meeting, make it a time, I pray Thee, of the unveiling of Thy Face. We need just Thee, and Thine ineffable sweetness and beauty.
- 6 How unrelieved my mind has been about the future, I praise Thee that this is not always so, or scarcely ever so. How there is nothing to hold to but just Thyself! Keep me from flagging and slacking.
- 7 Lord, I feel myself craving for the external sense of Thy presence, the hundredfold more of Thy joyous benediction. Lord, I leave this desire with Thee, grant it as Thou seest best.
- 8 My mind is still vague regarding the way I am to take, Lord; so much has gone beyond my own discernment in this decision. It is not that I doubt Thee, but all is so completely shrouded.
- 9 Lord, a vague desolation seems around my life, it is nebulous, I cannot define it. I have no misgiving over my decision for I have done what Thou didst

- indicate I should do, but still the sense of uncertainty remains. Touch this nebulous nimbus and turn it into a firmament of ordered beauty and form.
- 10 Lord, as we begin "Intercession for our Country" at our Morning Prayers, I ask that Thy Spirit will direct us.
- 11 Lord, Thou knowest the strangeness of the lull in the opening up of the future; nothing manifests itself. Such a great need just now for exaltation of mood and mind and manner. Bring confirmation to my mind.
- 12 My soul's horizon reports, like Elijah's servant, "There is nothing." Every door of opportunity seems closed. Keep me unhurried.
- 13 How complete must be my hold on Thee else through sheer futility I wilt and wander and am only weak. In my present mood I am inclined to give way to the feeling of having missed the mark. Lord, deal with my mind and outlook.
- 14 O Lord, I turn to Thee, nothing to perceive but just Thee. Take the elaborate and the heroic and the impulsive, and give me quietly to wait on Thee.
- 15 Lord, yesterday the Y.M.C.A. accepted me for their work in the Desert Camps in Egypt, and Thy word came this morning with great emphasis—Sent "before His face into every city and place whither He Himself was about to come."
- 16 Lord, how I praise Thee for this College. It has been four years of unique loveliness, and now I give it up because I believe I do so in answer to Thy call.
- 17 Lord, guide our hearts into Thy purposes. So many have come into the glorious, but perilous condition of open-ness towards Thee. Lord, inwork with a mighty influx of Thy power in correcting and health-giving fulness of life.
- 18 Lord, for the College, permeate it today with Thy presence and salvation from the top room to the basement. Bless with vigour and keenness mentally and spiritually.
- 19 Lord, what manner of man ought I to be! The graciousness of my life under Thy rule is so marvellous, and yet I find myself so ungenerous and ungracious. Lord, what shall I say?
- 20 Lord, come and touch all our lives and the atmosphere of the College with energising power and sweetness.

- 21 How I need to see Thee working in majesty and might and glory! We all need just that touch of Thine making all things new and wonderful, countering any influence or standard other than Thine own. Purify and empower us with Thy presence.
- 22 O Lord, the sternness, the unrelieved sternness, of my morning subject with the students [Jeremiah]. Soften the truths to our understanding, and keep us strong in Thee.
- 23 Lord, I would thank Thee for the profound and eager joy with which I find myself looking for Thy Second Coming! Oh that I might find grace in Thy sight, and behave more worthily of Thy great salvation!
- 24 O Lord, I thank Thee for the fulness of tone and health Thou dost give us these days. Continue it, O Lord. Save from all false emotion and sentimentality and sadness, and with vigour and gladness bless each one of us this day.
- 25 O Lord, for the days of this holiday I praise and thank Thee—for the majesty of this crowded isolation, the leagues of moor, the radiant air, the tonic of naturalness, and the sweet tonic of spiritual instruction as I lie fallow to Thy grace.
- 26 Lord, of late I feel a dim uncertainty as if Thou art leading me into a domain of Truth that as yet I have not entered or penetrated. Lord, lift me up till I see Thee; hold me till I fulfil Thy purpose.
- 27 Lord, this day glorify Thyself. Light up this house, my body, with Thy glory so that from all windows Thou mightest look forth unhindered and radiant.
- 28 Lord, bring me closer and nearer to Thee until I am more and more useful to Thee in Thine enterprises.
- 29 Lord, touch me again in body, soul and spirit. If my food and drink are hindering Thy ways in and through me, reveal this to me and keep me Thine, so that whether I eat or drink, or whatsoever I do, may it be to Thy glory.
- 30 Lord, when I remember all Thy goodness, thy wonders and Thy grace, I alternate between praise and apprehension. O Lord, that all Thou seekest in me should be carried out in experimental life is my prayer.

October

1 Lord, carry me into Thy counsels and use me for Thy glory. For this College, may no fever of energy obstruct Thy working. Correct us in mea-

- sure and in tenderness till we make it easy for Thee to carry out Thy plans through us.
- 2 "When He hideth His face, who then can behold Him?" There is so little sign of Thy being with us in these days of waiting. I pray not for any sign of outward success, but I do seek the sense of Thy blessing and approval.
- 3 Lord, I have no inkling of Thy ways in external details, but I have the expectancy of Thy wonders soon to be made visible. How completely at rest I am, and how free from seeing Thy way.
- 4 Lord, I praise Thee for the joy of my life here for the love of wife and child, for the students, for the favours of the Holy Spirit. What a wonder of joy and radiant blessing this place has been!
- 5 Lord God Omnipotent, give me wisdom this day to worship Thee aright and be well-pleasing to Thee. Interpret Thyself to me more and more in Thy fulness and beauty.
- 6 Lord, how wondrous is the thought of Thee! but when shall I find my willing heart all taken up by Thee? I seem to be paralysed by my own littleness and meanness and sinfulness.
- 7 But surely, Lord, I do not need more verification of the truth of Thy words concerning the human heart; if it be Thy will, I do not want to know any more along that line: I want to know more of the great and gracious Reality of Thy Redemption.
- 8 "Lo, these are but the outskirts of His ways.... But the thunder of His power who can understand?" (RV). So many homeless moods float through my soul; I have no wisdom, no understanding of things pertaining to Thee until Thou dost lighten my darkness.
- 9 Lord, the present position presses most on my consciousness this morning. Cause my mind, my emotions, my whole nature, to want what Thou has ordained for me, that thereby I may know I have done aright.
- 10 "Clear Thou me from hidden faults. Keep back Thy servant also from presumptuous sins" (RV). Oh that I could find Thee exhibiting in me Thy peace and purity!
- 11 Lord, I praise Thee for the sense of well-being which is mine this morning. How I praise Thee for the deep revelation of Redemption! Shine with unclouded ray upon us all.
- 12 Lord, Thy servant's words state my inmost prayer—

- My God, I look to Thee for tenderness Such as I could not seek from any man, Or in a human heart fancy or plan.
- 13 Lord, increase my certainty that I am taken up into Thy consciousness, and not that I take Thee into mine. "For in all the world there is none but Thee, my God, there is none but Thee."
- 14 Lord, I come to Thee this morning with a sense of spiritual failure. Cleanse me by Thy grace, and restore me to the heavenly places in Christ Jesus.
- 15 Lord, cause it to be proven that I shall be "like a tree planted by the streams of water," bringing forth its fruit in its season.
- 16 Lord, I praise Thee that Thou art, and that Thou performest Thy perfect will in and through the lives of individual men.
- 17 Lord, let me see Thee today fully and freely. Keep a clear space between Thee and me that I may see the way whereby I should go.
- 18 Lord, give me discernment and inspiration for today's Classes, especially for "The Soul of a Christian" talk this afternoon. Bless this day and make it radiant with Thy power.
- 19 O Lord, I have to preach in Thy Name today. Shall I, must I, speak on "God is love"? Am I to do it without Thy mighty inspiration and thrilling power? Nay, Lord, forbid it.
- 20 Lord, what need is mine! what weaknesses lurk in hidden places and mar my whole being. O Lord, I turn to Thee. How I need to realise that apart from Thee I can do nothing.
- 21 Lord, I thank Thee for the word this morning— "The Lord upholdeth him with His hand." Ah Lord, and Thou dost talk to me with the pressure of Thy hand.
- O Lord, restore the unique joy of Thy presence to me and make me Thine and of Thee in this place.I seem unsuited for anything but just waiting on Thee. Show me a token for good, O Lord.
- 23 "Ye shall not fear them: for the LORD your God, He it is that fighteth for you" (RV). Lord, this word came to me insistently in my reading this morning. How entirely I look to Thee!
- 24 Lord, dawn on me this day, draw me, direct me into all the beauty of Thy Divine purposes; touch my senses that I may see Thy ways and delight in them.

- 25 O Lord, unto Thee do I come with an overwhelming sense of spiritual dryness and dearth; quicken me, O Lord, for Thy Name's sake. I will not mourn before Thee, but be filled with Thy Spirit.
- 26 Lord, with praise and adoration I come to Thee this Sunday morning. I bless Thee for the inspiring association of my life and upbringing with Sunday.
- 27 Lord, this day be God, so great, so kind, so full of life and liberty; come in grace and power. I praise Thee for the beauty of the morning.
- 28 Lord, I thank Thee for the past night's sleep; I bless Thee that Thou dost neither slumber nor sleep, but dost keep us by day and by night.
- 29 Lord, unto Thee do I come. Give me a gracious incoming of Thy life till my reasoning, my imagination, and my speaking are all of Thee. How grandly Thou hast renewed my spirit and restored to me the joy of Thy salvation!
- 30 Lord, what powerful words come in "Daily Light" this morning: "Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the LORD thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest." Amen! Hallelujah!
- 31 We thank Thee that there is no Good-bye. We ask Thee that Thy Crown and Seal may be upon us every one until we see Thee face to face.

November

- 1 Lord, this day be the restraining One in the midst of these thousands of men; many of them are godless—Thou didst die for "the ungodly." Cause them to turn to Thee.
- 2 O Lord, I would beseech Thee to bring me into living union with Thy purpose for these Huts I am in charge of. Anoint me afresh for this day in all its opportunity. Let me see Thy salvation at work.
- 3 Lord, these words come with the dawning power of Thy Spirit's might—"He taketh away the first, that He may establish the second." How I praise Thee for every remembrance of the College, it is never far from my thoughts—that is "the first," and what will be "the second"?
- 4 Today, O Lord, cleanse me from flurried busyness, and keep me calmly and purely Thine. Make this Hut the house of God, and the gate of heaven to men's souls.
- 5 Lord, I do praise Thee for the inestimable privilege of this early morning communion with Thee;

- so work in me that I may both will and work (RV) for Thy good pleasure this day.
- 6 In all matters, O Lord, I would acknowledge Thee. Keep us in tune with Thee that others may catch the joyousness and gladness of God.
- 7 Lord, quicken my sense of Thee, my discernment of Thee, my concentration on Thee, so that I am carefully careless about every relationship saving that in which I stand to Thee.
- 8 Lord, be manifest in our midst today, give us the great objective certainty of Thy presence. This bungalow, make it Bethany indeed, a house beautiful with God.
- 9 O Lord, fill this Hut, our bodies, this encampment, the whole Earth, with Thy glorious Self this day. Bless with flooding tides of spiritual life all of us today, just for the delight of it!
- 10 Lord, cause this day to be filled with Thy praise. Give me release from this medley of distractions, from attentiveness of nerves to all the details that press. I praise Thee that my mind is stayed on Thee, but I do desire Thy beauty to be upon me.
- 11 Lord, bless this day with great evidence of Thy thoughts to us-ward. I praise Thee for Thy word this morning— "For I know the thoughts that I think towards you, saith the LORD, thoughts of peace, and not of evil."
- 12 Lord, lift me up to Thee so that the bloom, the radiant joy of Thy salvation, visits me and shines forth for Thy glory. Keep me in flowing intercession with Thee.
- 13 O Lord, how completely true of me is the Psalmist's word—"My soul cleaveth unto the dust." My soul is very dust-y, Lord, quicken me according to Thy word. One word made living by Thy Spirit and how exquisite is the life that comes! Lord, speak it now.
- 14 Lord, I seem to drift around, just living dimly before Thee until Thou dost spring up within me. I adore Thee that I have faith in Thy mighty Redemption, but Oh, it makes such a difference to realise Thy touch!
- 15 O Lord, be so really present here in this Hut that every man coming in may realise that it is God's house in deed and in truth.
- 16 O Lord, this sense of being choked with immediately present things is suffocating to our realisation of Thyself; come and deliver and delight us.

- 17 O Lord, I thank Thee for yesterday, and for the fleeting realisation of Thy deeps in me; enable me this day to join heart and mind to Thee in steady and constant prayer.
- 18 Lord, bless with significant blessing the opening of the Study Classes tonight. Bring keenness of interest and spiritual power to bear strongly and mightily upon us all.
- 19 Lord, I thank Thee for the counsel in the text this morning ("And let it be . . . that thou do as occasion serve thee; for God is with thee") not to fret myself into conscious usefulness, but just do as the occasion Thou hast engineered shall serve.
- 20 Lord, today give me the intuitive, instinctive inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit that I may discern Thee in all things. Fill the whole day with Thy gracious presence and peace.
- 21 "Let me hear Thy voice"—that is my prayer. I am willing beyond all my expression to hear Thee, to perceive Thee, to be thrilled with Thy presence.
- 22 Lord, this day give me the most supreme absorption in Thee—such deflections, such leakages! I would return home to Thee, living again the life of entire dependence on Thee.
- 23 Lord, how little nourishment I have been giving to the indwelling Christ in me; O Lord, forgive me. Fill me with the ample sense of Thy forgiveness that I may not only joy in Thy salvation, but be filled with Thy Spirit for the work here.
- 24 O Lord, I fully realise that "I am but a little child, I know not how to go out or come in"; give me therefore "an understanding heart," and increase my sense of Thee this day.
- 25 "Thy touch has still its ancient power"; touch me, Lord, into fellowship with Thyself till my whole being glows with Thy peace and joy.
- 26 O Lord, unto Thee do I come for this day. The degenerating tendencies of this Country are subtle to a degree of amazement! Restore the joy of life which makes all around radiant.
- 27 Lord, I am conscious of a lack of proportion things that are the merest trifles loom, and the glorious things retire. Give me a way out that I may be to Thy glory.
- 28 Lord, I do thank Thee for the touch Thou hast given me this morning—but what amazing lethargy has been mine, what un-beautifulness! Yet this is only a revelation of what I know myself to be apart from Thy life in me.

- 29 Lord, give me a fresh anointing of Thy Spirit for today, in prayer, in worship, and in work, so that in all things Thou mightest have the preeminence.
- 30 Lord, unto Thee do I come, absolutely come. I feel so entire a sense of need of Thyself that I just wait for Thee to speak to me, for what can I say to Thee? Let me lie spread out before Thee even as the desert sand beneath the sun.

December

- 1 Lord, how dense and foggy it still is on my spiritual, or rather my mental horizon, so that details take portentous dimensions and crowd out the great issues of life. Emancipate me with Thy deliverance.
- 2 O Lord, cause this "rod" to bud. Make the Study Classes in this new Marquee flourish before Thee, even as "the rod of Aaron . . . put forth buds, and bloomed blossoms" (RV).
- 3 How often I find it is the "ass" in me rather than my intelligence that "turns aside and sees the angel of the Lord." Lord, increase my spiritual sensitiveness that I may detect Thy slightest goings and drawings.
- 4 Lord, unto Thee do I come, entrench me around with Thyself as a wall of fire and be the glory in the midst. This sounds entirely selfish, but I know not how else to put it. O Lord, Thou knowest.
- 5 Lord, not with any sense of unworthiness (how can unworthiness indulge in any sense of worthiness?), not any thought of my insufficiency, nor any thought of myself at all, I come just because Thou art Thyself.
- 6 O Lord, explore down to the deepest springs of my spirit where the Spirit maketh intercession for us, and read the prayers I cannot utter.
- 7 I praise Thee, O Lord, for the word this Sabbath morning—"And when Moses went into the tent of meeting to speak with Him, then he heard the Voice speaking unto him from above the mercy-seat, . . . and he spake unto Him" (RV).
- 8 Lord, for all who are taxed physically, undertake with Thy sustaining. Prevent the exacting of the enemy, and may the joy of the Lord be their strength in a marvellous manner.

- 9 Lord, I rejoice that with Thee, the Father of lights, there can be "no variableness, neither shadow that is cast by [RV] turning." Give me to discern Thy rule and government.
- 10 Lord, in my consciousness this morning a crowd of little actual things press and I bring them straight to Thy presence. In Thy wisdom, say, "Peace, be still!" and may our ordered lives confess the beauty of Thy peace.
- 11 "But now, O God, strengthen Thou my hands"—Lord, now! Come to me, fill me with Thyself, then there will be no yearning unsatisfied.
- 12 Lord, I do praise Thee for this sense of joyful fellowship with Thee again. Give me calmness of mind and keenness of purpose; keep me Thine, undoubtedly and undeflectedly.
- 13 Lord, unto Thee do I turn, and on the ground of Thy mighty Redemption I pray great triumphing prayers with "the boldness which we have toward Him, that, if we ask anything according to His will, He heareth us" (RV).
- 14 Lord, I look to Thee, touch my body till it is all radiant with Thy life. Bless the morning Service with the men, make it right glorious with Thy presence.
- 15 Lord, I turn implicitly to Thee. Be such an atmosphere in and around us that we may be those out of whom the rivers of living water flow.
- 16 Lord, how eager is my growing desire for Thee, not in any small parochial manner, but in the glorious manner of a fuller realisation of Thy holiness
- 17 Lord, my approach to Thee is dulled because of physical dimness, but my heart is glad, and my flesh also shall rest in hope.
- 18 "Great is our Lord, and mighty in power; His understanding is infinite" (RV). How certainly all might and wisdom is Thine, and how certainly by Thy grace I am eager for Thee to have Thy way through me.
- 19 Lord, this one thing—my utterable and unutterable need of Thee. "Poor in spirit" describes my certain knowledge of myself. In entire necessity I come to Thee.
- 20 Speak, Lord, that I may hear and understand. There seems so much outwardness in my spiritual life, so little gracious power realised; quicken me until I am incandescent with Thee.

- 21 Lord, be such a reviving and refreshing Presence in our midst today that we can only rejoice as fresh hopes of Eternity walking the actual ways of Time open before our eyes.
- 22 O Lord, I thank Thee for the verse this morning—"Therefore turn thou to thy God; keep mercy and judgement, and wait on thy God continually." Fill all this vast encampment with Thy glorious presence; restrain, and inspire godliness.
- 23 Lord Jesus, in Thee dwelleth "all the fulness of God"; "all things" have been delivered unto Thee; "all power" is given unto Thee in heaven and in earth—O God, my heavenly Father, supply my every need according to Thy riches in glory in Christ Jesus.
- 24 Lord, the word that strikes me so intimately in my reading this morning is this—"Thus did Moses; as the Lord commanded him, so did he."
- 25 Lord Jesus, nineteen centuries ago Thou wast here on this earth, "manifested in the flesh" (RV). Be here again today, manifested in my flesh—"Christ in you, the hope of glory."
- 26 O Lord, my Lord and Master, may I be so consciously Thine today that I am at home with

- Thee, and joyous in my childlike delight in Thy possession of me.
- 27 Lord, fill every space around us with Thyself this day. Control everything right marvellously by Thy guiding hand; lift us up into Thy wonderful purposes, and keep us from impulsive precipitancy.
- 28 O Lord, this is Thy Day, and I beseech Thee to bless me with Thy exceeding great blessing and benediction. How wonderful it is to be able to approach Thee!
- 29 "After these things the word of the Lord came saying, Fear not, I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." O Lord, "after these things"! How I praise Thee.
- 30 It is time, O my God, for a touch from Thee, one of those great transfiguring touches in which Thou dost stand out plainly and clearly from all else, brilliant moments in which I see Thee and worship and wonder.
- 31 Lord, in this land of brooding silences, of great generating winds, and fiercely-killing sun, I seem to be brooded over by Thee—and what will be the result? Keep me watching and waiting at Thy threshold.

INTRODUCTION

The material in The Love of God is taken from lectures and sermons given during nearly two decades of Oswald Chambers' life.

Publication History

The messages in this book were originally published as articles, leaflet sermons, and individual booklets. In 1965, six booklets were combined in a single volume and published as a hardcover book titled The Love of God.

- The Love of God (1938): David Lambert¹ identifies the first two chapters as messages given during Chambers' years in Dunoon, Scotland² (1897–1906), and the final chapter "If God Is Love—Why?" as a message given to soldiers at Zeitoun, Egypt,³ in 1917. This final chapter was printed as a leaflet sermon in 1918 and distributed in Egypt and in England.
- The Ministry of the Unnoticed (1936): These are three talks that were given to students at the Bible Training College, London, between 1911 and 1915, most likely during the weekly devotional hour. They were published individually as leaflet sermons before being issued as a booklet in 1936.
- The Message of Invincible Consolation (1931): Lambert identifies the material in The Message of Invincible Consolation as "two talks given at an Annual Meeting of the League of Prayer,⁵ on 2 Corinthians 4:16–18." Also included is "The Worker and Things as They Are," likely spoken to a League audience as well.
- These appeared as articles in Spiritual Life magazine from September through November 1930.

 The Making of a Christian (1918; 1935): The Making of a Christian was used as a topic in Chambers' Bible correspondence course series, for which Oswald wrote the following introduction:

The object of these studies is to stimulate thinking along Christian lines. So many among us have a good spiritual experience, but have never thought things out on Christian lines. It is just as true that a man may LIVE a Christian life without THINKING it as that a man may THINK a Christian life without LIVING it; but to combine the two means that great help may be rendered during times of confusion, turmoil and tension like the present. Bear in mind that Christian growth is based on the regeneration of a man's soul through Redemption.

- These studies were also delivered as blackboard talks to the troops stationed at the Imperial School of Instruction, Zeitoun, Egypt, during July 1917. Chambers, ever the teacher, frequently lettered the complete outline of his lecture on a blackboard before launching into his subject. The Making of a Christian was printed in Egypt in 1918 as a small booklet and made available to the soldiers. In 1935, Mrs. Chambers published a new edition of the book, edited for reading rather than for study.
- Now Is It Possible (1934): This material is from three talks given to students at the Bible Training College, London, between 1911 and 1915.
- The Graciousness of Uncertainty (1938): Chambers preached "The Graciousness of Uncertainty" at a Sunday morning communion service, Zeitoun YMCA Camp, Egypt, on October 15, 1916. This sermon was omitted when The Love of God was printed as a paperback in 1973; it is included here, along with the foreword to the first edition.

^{1.} David Lambert (1871–1961): Methodist minister and friend of Oswald and Biddy Chambers. He assisted Mrs. Chambers with OC publications from 1917 until his death in 1961.

^{2.} Dunoon, Scotland: small town west of Glasgow; Chambers spent 1897–1906 at Dunoon Theological College as a student, then as a tutor.

^{3.} Zeitoun (zay TOON), Egypt: six miles northeast of Cairo; site of a YMCA camp, the Egypt General Mission compound, and, from 1916 to 1919, the Imperial School of Instruction, training base for British, Australian, and New Zealand troops during World War I.

^{4.} Bible Training College (BTC): a residential school near Clapham Common in southwest London; sponsored by the League of Prayer; operated from 1911 until it closed in July 1915 because of World War I. Oswald Chambers was principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers, his wife, was lady superintendent.

^{5.} Pentecostal League of Prayer: founded in 1891 in London by Reader Harris (1847–1909), prominent barrister and friend and mentor of Oswald Chambers.

The Love of God

God is Love.

God is love. No one but God could have revealed that to the world, for men, and we all indeed, see nothing but its contradiction in our own limited world of experience. It needs but little imagination to construe the life of hundreds of this great city's inhabitants into a vehement laughter at such a declaration as "God is love." From shattered, broken lives, from caverns of despair where fiends seem living rather than men, comes the existing contradiction to any such statement. No wonder the carnal mind, the merely intellectually cultured, consider us infatuated, mere dreamers, talking of love when murder and war and famine and lust and pestilence, and all the refinement of selfish cruelty is abroad in the earth. But, oh the sublimity of the Abraham-like faith that dares to place the centre of its life and confidence and action and hope in an unseen and apparently unknown

God, saying, "God is love," in spite of all appearances to the contrary; saying "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." Such faith is counted to a man for righteousness.

Look back over your own history as revealed to you by grace, and you will see one central fact growing large—God is love. No matter how often your faith in such an announcement was clouded, no matter how the pain and suffering of the moment made you speak in a wrong mood, still this statement has borne its own evidence along with it most persistently—God is love. In the future, when trial and difficulties await you, do not be fearful, whatever and whoever you may lose faith in, let not this faith slip from you—God is Love; whisper it not only to your heart in its hour of darkness, but here in your corner of God's earth and man's great city, live in the belief of it; preach it by your sweetened, chastened, happy life; sing it in consecrated moments of peaceful joy, sing until the world around you is wrought

To sympathy with hopes and fears it heeded not.

The world does not bid you sing, but God does. Song is the sign of an unburdened heart; then sing your songs of love unbidden, ever rising higher and higher into a fuller conception of the greatest, grandest fact on the stage of Time—God is Love.

But words and emotions pass, precious as their influence may be for the time, so when the duller moments come and the mind comes to require something more certain and sure to consider than the memory of mere emotions and stirring sentiments—consider this revelation, the eternal fact that God is Love, not, God is loving. God and love are synonymous. Love is not an attribute of God, it is God; whatever God is, love is. If your conception of love does not agree with justice and judgement and purity and holiness, then your idea of love is wrong. It is not love you conceive of in your mind, but some vague infinite foolishness, all tears and softness and of infinite weakness.

1. God Is Love—In His Very Nature

Some exceptionally gifted men may derive their conception of God from other sources than the Bible, but all I know of God I have got from the Bible, and those who taught me got what they taught from the Bible. In all my dreams and imaginings and visions I see God, but it is the God of the Bible that I see, and I feel Him to be near me. I see ever amid the mysteries of Providence and Grace and Creation "a Face like my face," and "a Hand like this hand," and I have learned to love God Who gave me such a sure way of knowing Him and left me not to the vain imaginations of my own sin-warped intellect.

In Creation. The love of God gives us a new method of seeing Nature. His voice is on the rolling air, we see Him in the rising sun, and in the setting He is fair; in the singing of the birds, in the love of human hearts, the voice of God is in all. Had we but ears to hear the stars singing, to catch the glorious pealing anthem of praise echoing from the hills of immortality by the heavenly hosts!

In His Wisdom. God did not create man as a puppet to please a despotic idea of His own, He created us out of the superabundant flow of overflowing love and goodness, He created us susceptible of all the blessedness which He had ordained for us. He "thought" us in the rapture of His own great heart, and lo, we are! Created in the image of God were we, innocent of evil, of great God-like capacities.

In His Power. The whole world moves but to His great inscrutable will, animate and inanimate creation, the celestial bodies moving on their orbits, the globe with all its diversified issues and accompaniments, are all subservient to this end.

Yes, God is good, in earth and sky, In ocean depth and swelling wood, Ten thousand voices ever cry, God made us all, and God is good.

In His Holiness. God walked with man and talked with him, He told him His mind, and showed him the precise path in which he must walk in order to enjoy the happinesses He had ordained for him; He rejoiced in the fulness of His nature over man as His child, the offspring of His love. He left nothing unrevealed to man; He loved him. Oh, the joy and rapture of God the Father over man His son!

In His Justice. God showed to man that compliance with His dictates would ever mean eternal bliss and joy unspeakable and life and knowledge for evermore, but that ceasing to comply would mean loss of life with God and eternal death.

That was in the world's bright morning when the morning stars sang together and all creation leapt in joy, but the wild, wild desolation of sin and disobedience and pride and selfish sinfulness entered and drave a great gulf between God's children and Himself. But, as ever, Love found a way, God came to us and for us, and we this day with chastened hearts and quivering lips and glistening eyes, yet with love deep and strong in our hearts, say all afresh with deep adoration, God is Love.

If God exhibits such glorious love in His Nature, what, oh what, shall we say of the glories of the dispensation of His Grace! That God would have walked this earth had sin never entered is very likely, yet sin did not refrain Him from graciously walking and revealing Himself in communion with men. No, still He came. But men were so blinded by sin that they saw Him not, they knew Him not, while He hewed a way back through the hard face of sin to the heavenly shores.

2. The Gift of God's Only Begotten Son

The gift of God's only begotten Son surely reveals His love in an amazing degree—"He that spared not His own Son"—till now it matters not how bad a man is, if he will but lift his eyes to the Cross he shall be saved. But yet so blinded and infatuated and imbecile has man become by sin that he can see nothing in the life of Christ save the evidence of a beautiful, good life, the best of human beings, living misunderstood, suffering, dying as a martyr. To meet this difficulty Love itself gave another gift—the gift of the Holy Spirit.

3. The Gift of the Holy Spirit

When He shines on the Historic Christ, all the great and grey outlines spring into glorious relief and colour and beauty, and the soul amazed, calls out, "My Lord and my God."

When the Holy Spirit has begun His gracious work in your soul and heart by making it tremulously expectant, you see a new light on the Cross and the "martyr" becomes the Saviour of the world. "Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed" (RV).

Though it is too difficult, nay impossible, to trace that God is love by mere unaided human intellect, it is not impossible to the intuitions of faith. Lift up your eyes and look abroad over the whole earth, and in the administration of God's moral government you will begin to discern that God is love, that over sin and war and death and hell He reigns supreme, that His purposes are ripening fast. We must by holy contemplation of all we have considered keep ourselves in the love of God, then we shall not be able to despond for long. The love of God performs a miracle of grace in graceless human hearts. Human love and lesser loves must wither into the most glorious and highest love of all, viz., the love of God. Then we shall see not only each other's faults, we shall see the highest possibilities in each other, and shall love each other for what God will yet make of us. Nothing is too hard for God, no sin too difficult for His love to overcome, not a failure but He can make it a success.

God is Love—one brief sentence, you can print it on a ring: it is the Gospel. A time is coming when the whole round world will know that God reigns and that God is Love, when hell and heaven, life and death, sin and salvation, will be read and understood aright at last.

God is Love—a puzzle text, to be solved slowly, as with tears and penitence, by prayer and joy, by vision and faith, and, last, by death.

KEEP YOURSELVES IN THE LOVE OF GOD

Jude 20-21

Keep yourselves in the love of God.

The love of God! We have lost it to-day; we have turned our back on the ocean and are looking out over barren colourless hills for the ocean's fulness. We need converting again—turning round, and there basks the ocean's fulness, whose waves sparkle and ripple on fathomless deeps and fulnesses. We are too introspective to-day, we mourn and wonder, then lifted on waves of feeling, we glow and say we love God, but again our feelings ebb and flow and we mourn. Christianity is not a thing of times and seasons, but of God and faith. Drink deep and full of the love of God and you will not demand the impossible from earth's loves, and the love of wife and child, of husband and friend, will grow holier and healthier and simpler and grander.

But there are initial stages to be considered before we come to the glorious exhortation. The love of God is not revealed by intellectual discernment, it is a spiritual revelation. What ups and downs we experience because we build not on faith but on feeling, not on the finished work of Christ but on our own work and endeavour and experience.

"But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith..." Is that what you are doing every day? Do you have family worship? Do you have private devotions? Do you read your Bible more and more? Can you answer "Yes" to these questions, or is an hesitant "No" given by your spirit to God? Family worship is so far off, so remote, you remember your father and mother who prayed and talked of sin and righteousness and judgement to come, but you have other things to heed; you, forsooth, are more enlightened, you read sceptical books, controversial books, that attack the foundations of your faith. If these things have crept in unawares into our hearts, let us get back in penitence and consider what is the foundation on which we must build our most holy faith, viz., that "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (RV). Let us get down to the Cross, to the broken heart of our God, down to the propitiation for our sins; let us put away the books that have sapped our faith; let us cut off the interests and the companionships that have weighed our lives down to the dust, and looking to Jesus, let us build ourselves up on our most holy faith.

"praying in the Holy Ghost..." That is the next step after laying the foundation of faith. Nothing is so hard as to pray aright. Do you pray for God's servants till your heart glows? Do you ask for your minister that he may be set ablaze with Divine fire? Do you pray Sunday after Sunday that souls may be converted to God? "Praying in the Holy Ghost"—have you ever asked for the Holy Spirit? We can only keep ourselves in the love of God by building up ourselves on our most holy faith and by Holy Ghost praying, and by nothing else. If we try to fight God's battles with our own weapons, in our own moral resisting power, we shall fail, and fail miserably; but if we use the spiritual weapons of implicitly trusting in God and maintaining a simple relationship to Jesus Christ by praying in the Holy Ghost, we shall never fail.

". . . keep yourselves in the love of God." We know how to keep ourselves in health, how to keep ourselves in knowledge, and so on; but to keep ourselves in the love of God is a big order, and our minds are exercised to know what Jude means by this exhortation. Does it mean by relaxing all stringency and carefulness to slip out into a broad, humanitarian spirit—"God is love": "God's in His heaven—all's right with the world"? No, it cannot mean anything so natural as that, otherwise we had no need of an inspired writer to tell us to do it, and beside, Jude strikes terrible notes of warning (see vv. 17–19). "Keep yourselves in the love of God" refers very clearly to something distinct and special, something revealed in the direct will of God; a spiritual endeavour that we must consider, and consider carefully with the Holy Spirit's help.

"Keep" means work. It is not a lazy floating, it is work. Work, or you will depart from the love of God.

Begin to trace the finger of God and the love of God in the great calamities of earth, and in the calamities that have befallen you. In sweat of brain and spirit, work, agonise at times, to keep yourself in the love of God. It is our wisdom, our happiness, our security to keep ourselves in the love of God. How do I keep myself in any sphere but by using every means to abide in it? If I wish to keep in the spiritual sphere of the love of God I must use the great organ of the spiritual realm, faith. "God loves me"—say it o'er and o'er and o'er, heedless of your feelings that come and go. Do not live at a distance from God, live near Him, delighting yourself in Him. Remove all barriers of selfishness and fear, and plunge into the fathomless love of God.

"Keep yourselves in the love of God," not "keep on loving God," none can do that. When once you have understood the truth about your own heart's sinfulness, think not again of it, but look at the great, vast, illimitable magnificence of the love of God. Oh may we be driven, driven further and further out into the ocean fulness of the love of God! only taking care that nothing entices us out again.

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" Oh, the fulness of peace and joy and gladness when we are persuaded that nothing "shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

DECEMBER 14, 1916, ALEXANDRIA, EGYPT. ALSO GIVEN AT ZEITOUN.

IF GOD IS LOVE—WHY?

It is easy to say "God is love" when there is no war and when everything is going well; but it is not so easy to say when everything that happens actually gives the lie to it. For instance, when a man realises he has an incurable disease, or a severe handicap in life, or when all that is dear has been taken from a man, for that man to say, as he faces these things, "God is love," means he has got hold of something the average man has missed.

Love is difficult to define, but the working definition I would like to give is that "Love is the sovereign preference of my person for another person, embracing everyone and everything in that preference."

Run your idea for all it is worth. When we are young we think things are simpler than they are; we have an idea for every domain. A man says he is a materialist, or an agnostic, or a Christian, meaning he has only one main idea, but very few will run that idea for all it is worth, yet this is the only way to discover whether it will work, and the same thing is true in the idea of the Christian religion that God is Love.

1. Nature of God's Love

But God commendeth His own love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. (Romans 5:8 RV)

The love of God is different from the love of everyone else. "God commendeth His own love toward us" (RV); it is not the love of a father or mother, or a wife or lover, it is of such a peculiar stamp that it has to be recommended to us, we do not believe God's love.

(a) The Foundation of God's Love

The foundation of God's love, i.e., holiness—"without which no man shall see the Lord." God's love then must be the justification of His holiness. Remember our definition—love is the sovereign preference of my person for another person, embracing everyone and everything in that preference. If God's nature is holy, His love must be holy love, seeking to embrace everyone and everything until we all become holy.

(b) The Features of God's Love

The features of God's love, i.e., the way His love as revealed in the Bible manifests itself in common life, are unfamiliar to us; the average common-sense man is completely puzzled by such a verse as John 3:16. The revelation of Christianity has to do with the foundation of things, not primarily with actual life, and when the Gospel is proclaimed it is proclaimed as the foundation. The features of God's love are that if we will commit ourselves to Him, He will impart to us the very nature of His Son. "The gift of God is eternal life."

(c) The Fact of God's Love (2 Corinthians 5:18–21) "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself" (2 Corinthians 5:19). These are subjects that have no weight with us in our ordinary way of looking at things, they do not live in the same street, because they are not in the street, but in the foundation of things. When war or some other thing hits us hard and knocks us out of the commonplace, we are prepared to listen to what the Bible has to say, and we discover the Bible deals with the foundation of things that lie behind our commonsense life. The Bible does not deal with the domain of commonsense facts, we get at those by our senses; the Bible deals with the world of revelation facts which we only get at by faith in God.

2. Nature and God's Love

For the earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God. (Romans 8:19 RV)

Does Nature exhibit the Creator as a God of love? If so, then why is Nature a scene of rapine and murder? Has the Bible anything to say about it, any revelation that explains it? Try and weave a conception of God out of Jesus Christ's presentation of Him and then look at life as it is, and you will find that God, as He is revealed in Jesus Christ, is flatly contradicted in the natural world. God is the only Being Who can afford to be misunderstood; He deliberately stands aside and lets Himself be slandered and misrepresented; He never vindicates Himself.

When we touch the cosmic force apart from the "blinkers" of intellect, there is a wild problem in it. Nature is wild not tame. Modern science would have us believe it is tame, that we can harness the sea and the air. Quite true, if we only read scientific manuals, and deal with successful experiments; but after a while we discover that there are elements which knock men's calculations on the head and prove that the universe is wild and unmanageable and yet God in the beginning created man to have dominion over it! The reason he cannot is because he has twisted the order and become master of himself, instead of recognising God's dominion over him. Jesus Christ belonged to the order of things God originally intended for mankind; He was easily Master of the life of the sea and air and earth. If we want to know what the human race will be like on the basis of Redemption, we shall find it mirrored in Jesus Christ, a perfect oneness between God and man. In the meantime there is a gap, and the universe is wild. Paul says that creation is out of gear and twisted, that it is waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God. The New Testament view of Nature is that it is subject to bondage, that it is in a disorganised condition, out of gear with God's purpose; it is twisted and will only be right when God and man are again one.

God is responsible for the established order of nature, so if God created Nature and we have not the Spirit of God, we shall never interpret the order of Nature as God does.

(a) The Indifference of Nature

"Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground ..." (Genesis 3:18-19). This needs an explanation no man can reach by common sense. The Bible says the reason Nature is indifferent is because it became disorganised through the disobedience of the Federal Head of the human race. The indifference of nature hits us sorely when our hearts are stirred by bereavement—the inscrutable sadness of nature on the human spirit. The early mornings, the late at nights, sea scenes and mountain scenes, awaken in the sensitive human spirit not in touch with God, an ineffable sadness, ages weary, ages sad, ages worn out, pointing to this very fact that God is amazingly remote from man because man has externalised himself.

(b) The Iniquity of Nature

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea" (Revelation 21:1). There is nothing more cruel than the sun, or more blasting than the desert. There is an element of twisted spite in the sea, in certain aspects of human life; a sailor's wife, for instance, has reason to have a deep fear and hatred of the sea. In the jungles of vast continents the most cruel and unspeakable horrors take place. These are some things that make it the height of impertinence to say glibly, "God is love."

(c) The Infidelity of Nature

"The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, . . . they shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea" (Isaiah 11:6, 9). Isaiah is speaking of a time when all the indifference and iniquity and infidelity of Nature will be gone, when "the wolf shall dwell with the lamb"—a relationship will exist which now is inconceivable; at present the lamb lies down inside the wolf! Earth is man's domain, but the Bible talks about a "hereafter" without the sin and iniquity, "a new heaven and a new earth." We are going to be here, marvellously redeemed, in this wonderful place which God made very beautiful, and which has been played havoc with by sin.

3. Nations and God's Love

The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever. (Revelation 11:15)

We talk about a Christian nation—there never has been such a thing. There are Christians in the nations, but not Christian nations. The constitution of nations is the same as that of a human being. There is a difference between individuality and personality: individuality is all elbows and must stand alone; personality is something that can be merged and blended. Individuality is the husk of the personal life; when personal life is emancipated, individuality goes. So with nations. The kingdoms of this world have become intensely individualistic, with no love for God, or care for one another. The insistence of nations is that they must keep the national peace—in the way they have been doing it! In the whirlwind of nations, such as is on just now many men have lost—not their faith in God (I never met a man who lost his faith in God), but their belief in their beliefs, and for a while they think they have lost their faith in God. They have lost the conception which has been presented to them as God, and are coming to God on a new line.

(a) The Origin of Nations (Genesis 11:1-9)

"And the whole earth was of one language, and of one speech. . . . Therefore is the name of it called Babel; because the LORD did there confound the language of all the earth: and from thence did the LORD scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth" (Genesis 11:1, 9). According to the Bible, nations as we know them are the outcome of what ought never to have been. Civilisation was founded on murder, and the basis of our civilised life is competition. There are grand ingredients in civilisation, it is full of shelter and protection, but its basis is not good. We each belong to a nation, and each nation imagines that God is an Almighty representative of that nation. If nations are right, which is the right one?

(b) The Object of Nations

"From whence come wars and fightings among you? . . . Ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not" (James 4:1–2). The question is on the lips of people to-day, "Is war of the devil or of God?" It is of neither, it is of men, though both God and the devil are behind it. War is a conflict of wills, either in individuals or in nations. As sure as there is will versus will, there must be punch versus punch. This is the object of nations. They will assert their rule and independence and refuse to be downtrodden. If we cannot by diplomacy make our wills bear on other people, then the last resort is war, and always will be until Jesus Christ brings in His Kingdom.

There is one thing worse than war and that is sin, the thing that startles us is not the thing that startles God. We are scared and terrorised when our social order is broken, when thousands of men are killed, and well we may be, but how many of us in times of peace and civilisation bother one iota about the state of men's hearts towards God? Yet that is the thing that produces pain in the heart of God, not the wars and devastations that so upset us.

(c) The Obliteration of Nations

"And there followed great voices in heaven, and they said [RV], The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever" (Revelation 11:15). In these last days there is an idea that we are going to dominate everything by a perfect brotherhood. Any mind that expresses its view of the future says we are heading up into a federation of religions and nations when distinctions will be obliterated and there will be a great and universal Brotherhood. The quarrels of nations make men look forward to the time when nations will be federated out of independent existence. That is a revolt which is a mental safety valve only. Peter says God is "longsuffering to us-ward." At present He is giving men opportunity to try every line they like in individual life as well as in the life of the nations at large. Some things have not been tried yet, and if God were to cut us off short we would say, "If You had left us a bit longer we could have realised our ideal of society and national life." God is allowing us to prove to the hilt that it cannot be done in any other way than Jesus Christ said, viz., by a personal relationship to God through Jesus Christ Who is God and Man—One. When sooner or later we come to the end of our tether, we hear Jesus Christ say: "Blessed are the poor in spirit"—"If you ask God, He will give you the Holy Spirit," i.e., an unsullied heredity through Jesus Christ.

That is how the love of God comes in, and why it has to be such a long way round is because He is "bringing many sons unto glory," not mechanisms, but men, full-orbed and sensible all through. Jesus Christ never used a revivalistic meeting to take a man off his guard and then say, "Believe in Me." He always puts the case to a man in cold blood, He even seemed to spurn men when they wanted to follow Him (see Luke 9:57–62). "Another convert to My cause." Not a bit. "Take time and consider what you are doing, are you ready to hear what I have to say?"

The love of God is going to embrace everyone and everything in the sovereign preference of His person, which is for His Son. God purposes that everyone of us shall partake of the very essential nature of Jesus Christ and stand in complete union with Himself, even as Jesus did. Faith in God is a terrific venture in the dark, we have to believe that God is love in spite of all that contradicts it. Every soul represents some kind of battlefield. The great point for the Christian is to remain perfectly confident in God. Paul says that when the sons of God are manifested, and everything is in a right relationship with God and expressed in devotion to Jesus Christ, all the wildness and contradiction in Nature and in nations will cease, and the Love of God will be the great Reality.

The Ministry of the Unnoticed

I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall blossom as the lily. Hosea 14:5 (RV)

The New Testament notices things which from our standpoint do not seem to count. For instance, Our Lord called only twelve disciples, but what about all those other disciples of His who were not specially called? The twelve disciples were called for a special purpose; but there were hundreds who followed Jesus and were sincere believers in Him who were unnoticed. We are apt to have a disproportionate view of a Christian because we look only at the exceptions. The exceptions stand out as exceptions. The extraordinary conversions and phenomenal experiences are magnificent specimen studies of what happens in the life of everyone, but not one in a million has an experience such as the Apostle Paul had. The majority of us are unnoticed and unnoticeable people. If we take the extraordinary experience as a model for the Christian life, we erect a wrong standard without knowing it, and in the passing of the years we produce that worst abortion, the spiritual prig—an intolerant un-likeness to Jesus Christ. The man or woman who becomes a spiritual prig does so by imperceptible degrees, but the starting-point is a departure from the evangel of the New Testament and a building up on the evangel of Protestantism.

1. The Unaffected Loveliness of the Commonplace

Blessed are the poor in spirit. (Matthew 5:3)

Literally: "Blessed are the paupers in spirit." (A pauper is exceedingly commonplace!) The average type of preaching emphasises strength of will, beauty of character—the things that can be easily noticed. The phrase "Decide for Christ" which we so frequently hear is too often an emphasis on the thing Our Lord never trusted. Our Lord never asks us to decide for Him: He asks us to yield to Him—a very different matter.

At the basis of Our Lord's Kingdom is this unaffected loveliness of the commonplace. The thing in which I am blessed is my poverty. If I know I have no strength of will, no nobility of disposition, then, says Jesus, "Blessed are you," because it is through that poverty that I enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. I cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven as a good man or woman; I can only enter the Kingdom of Heaven as a complete pauper.

(a) The Influence of Disadvantage

As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters. (Song of Solomon 2:2)

The lily Solomon refers to is as common as our daisy, but a perfume pervades it. The illustration is as if a traveller were passing a field and suddenly a fragrant aroma was wafted to him from a bush; marvelling at the sweetness, he looked into the bush and found a lily growing in its bosom. People come to a good but worldly home, and say, "What a beautiful influence comes from that home!" But begin to draw aside the ordinary commonplace things of the home, and you discover that tucked away somewhere is a mother or a daughter who is really a "lily" of the Lord. Or take it in connection with individual lives, we may see a man who is generally disadvantaged in appearance or in education, a thoroughly commonplace man, yet a marvellous influence radiates from him. Our Lord is spoken of as "a root out of a dry ground"—thoroughly disadvantaged, that is what Isaiah says the Hero of God will be like.

The true character of the loveliness that tells for God is always unconscious. Conscious influence is priggish and un-Christian. When we begin to wonder whether we are of any use, we instantly lose the bloom of the touch of the Lord. Jesus says—"He that believeth on Me," out of him "shall flow rivers of living water." If we begin to examine outflow, we lose touch with the Source. We have to pay attention to the Source and God will look after the outflow.

The same thing is true with regard to the "passion for souls," the great craze for successful service.

Our Lord told the disciples not to rejoice in successful service, but to rejoice because they were rightly related to Him (see Luke 10:18–20). The danger in all these things is that we are apt to make the effect the cause. Who are the people who have influenced us most? Certainly not the priggish men and women, but our mothers, our fathers, our sisters—the ones who had not the remotest idea that they were influencing us.

(b) The Inspiration of Detail

And the capitals that were upon the top of the pillars were of lily work. . . . (1 Kings 7:19)

The lily work added nothing to the strength of the building; many would notice the strength and the majesty of the whole building, but the inspiration of it all was in the detail, in the "lily work." In architecture it is not so much the massive strength that counts as the finely proportioned ornament, and that is never obtrusive. If we look at men and women who have been long at work for God and have been going through chastening, we notice that they have lost their individual harshness, lost a great deal of their apparent go-aheadness for God; but they have acquired something else, viz., the most exquisite "lily work" in their lives, and this after all is the thing most like Jesus Christ. It is the quiet, undisturbable Divinity that is characteristic of Jesus, not aggressiveness, and the same is true of God's children. This does not mean that Our Lord is not aggressive, or that God's children are not aggressive, but it does mean that there is a danger of making so much of the aggressive that we neglect the more important aspect, viz., the ministry of the unnoticed.

God will use any number of extraordinary things to chisel the detail of His "lily work" in His children. He will use people who are like hedgehogs, He will use difficult circumstances, the weather; He will use anything and everything, no matter what it is, and we shall always know when God is at work because He produces in the commonplace something that is inspiring.

(c) The Implicitness of Distinction Consider the lilies. . . . (Matthew 6:28)

When Our Lord described the spiritual life, He always took His illustrations from His Father's hand-iwork, never from man's work. We take our illustrations from motor-cars, or aeroplanes, or electric light, or something go-ahead and self-advertising. We illustrate by means of things which compel our attention; Jesus mentions things we are not compelled to look at, things which we would pass by. How many of us notice sparrows and daisies and grass? They are so plentiful that we ignore them, yet it is these things Jesus tells us to consider. The characteristic of each of these things is implicitness, not explicitness. Imagine a lily, if it could speak, saying, "I am going to be a lily!" A lily obeys the law of its life where it is placed, it is unconscious in its growth. In Isaiah 47:7, we read: "And thou saidst, I shall be a lady for ever." The characteristic of a lady is implicitness, not explicitness, and in the same way a Christian is one in whom the indwelling Spirit of God shines out all the time. In the Christian life the implicit is never conscious; if it becomes conscious, it ceases to have the unaffected loveliness which is the characteristic of the life of Jesus Christ. Prudery is the outcome of obedience to a principle; whereas, according to Our Lord, purity is the outcome of an implicit relationship. If we look upon purity as the outcome of obedience to a particular standard, we produce the opposite of what Our Lord intends. He said, "Except ye . . . become as little children . . ."

2. The Unconscious Light in Circumstances

If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. (John 13:14)

What were the circumstances here? A supper table, a dozen fishermen, a basin of water, a towel, and Our Lord washing the feet of the fishermen. Notice the extraordinary climax to John 13:3-"Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into His hands, and that He was come from God, and went to God . . ." Had the Transfiguration scene followed on, we would have felt it to be the right order; but—"He riseth from supper, and laid aside His garments; and took a towel, and girded Himself. After that He poureth water into a basin, and began to wash the disciples' feet." Could anything be more sordid and commonplace? But it takes God Incarnate to do the most menial task properly. We may often use a towel to exhibit a characteristic totally unlike Jesus Christ. Whatever Our Lord touched became wonderful. Some people do a certain thing and the way in which they do it hallows that thing to us for ever afterwards. When Our Lord does anything, He always transfigures it. Notice the words that Our Lord glorified. A word that was scorned when He came was the word "servant," yet Jesus said: "I am among you as He that serveth," and, "whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all." Our Lord took words that were despised and transfigured their meaning; He did things that were commonplace and sordid and ordinary and transfigured them. Our Lord was the unconscious light in the midst of the most ordinary circumstances conceivable.

Many who knew Our Lord while He was on earth saw nothing in Him; only after their disposition had been altered did they realise Who He was. Our Lord lived so ordinary a life that no one noticed Him. The disciples were first attracted to Jesus by their sense of the heroic and the holy, but it was not until they had received the Holy Spirit that "their eyes were opened, and they knew Him." Could anything more startling be imagined than for someone to point out a Nazarene carpenter and say, "That man is God Incarnate"? It would sound blasphemous to a Pharisee.

Our Lord did not say to His disciples: "I have had a most successful time on Earth, I have addressed thousands of people and been the means of their salvation; now you go and do the same kind of thing." He said: "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet." We try to get out of it by washing the feet of those who are not of our own set. We will wash the heathen's feet, the feet in the slums; but fancy washing my brother's feet! my wife's! my husband's! the feet of the minister of my church! Our Lord said "one another's feet." It is in the ordinary commonplace circumstances that the unconscious light of God is seen.

(a) The Trackless Waste Ye are the light of the world. (Matthew 5:14)

In the New Testament "world" means the system of things which has been built on God's earth, the system of religion or of society or of civilisation that never takes Jesus Christ into account. Jesus says we are to be the light there. We need to take on us the pattern and print of Jesus Christ, not the pattern and print of the world, and immediately we try to be what Jesus wants us to be, we shall find the truth of what He said—"they shall... cast out your name as evil." The "camp" to which we belong will do it, not the world. It is easier to remain true to our camp than to Jesus, easier to be loyal to our convictions than to Him.

"Ye are the light of the world." We have the idea that we are going to shine in heaven, but we are to shine down here, "in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation" (Philippians 2:15). We are to shine as lights in the world in the squalid places, and it cannot be done by putting on a brazen smile, the light must be there all the time.

"Ye are the light of the world." We ourselves are to be the light wherever we go; but if ever we became conscious of it, we should be amazed, as Mary of Bethany must have been amazed at Jesus Christ's interpretation of her act of devotion. Mary simply discharged her over-burdened heart in a demonstration of affection for Jesus Christ, and He said that "wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her."

(b) The Trifling Ways

It giveth light unto all that are in the house. (Matthew 5:15) The light is to be shown in all the trifling ways of home life. The average evangelical presentation is apt to produce a contempt for the trifling ways. A preacher of the Gospel may be a most objectionable being at home instead of giving light in the ordinary ways. Our Lord tells us to judge the preacher or the teacher "by his fruits." Fruit is not the salvation of souls, that is God's work; fruit is "the fruit of the Spirit," love, joy, peace, etc. We get much more concerned about not offending other people than about offending Our Lord. Our Lord often offended people, but He never put a stumbling-block in anyone's way.

(c) The Truthful Witness

... that they may see your good works. (Matthew 5:16)

Our Lord did not say "that you may preach the right thing." It is an easy business to preach, an appallingly easy thing to tell other people what to do; it is another thing to have God's message turned into a boomerang—"You have been teaching these people that they should be full of peace and of joy, but what about yourself? Are you full of peace and joy?" The truthful witness is the one who lets his light shine in works which exhibit the disposition of Jesus; one who lives the truth as well as preaches it.

3. The Unadvertised Life for the Community And we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. (1 John 3:16)

A mother lays down her life for her child and for her home, but there is nothing advertised in her doing it. If the mother were to tell her child what she was doing, it would be an abortion of motherhood. The child will never recognise what the mother has done until in years to come the child herself is in the same place, then she will recognise the unadvertised substitution of the mother's life and love. This is what Jesus Christ has done in His redemptive work—"Hereby perceive we the love of God, because He laid down His life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." Jesus Christ was made broken bread and poured-out wine for us, and He expects us to be made broken bread and poured-out wine in His hands for others. If we are not thoroughly baked, we will produce indigestion because we are dough instead of bread. We have to be made into good nutritious stuff for other people. The reason we are going through the things we are is that God wants to know whether He can make us good bread with which to feed others. The stuff of our lives, not simply of our talk, is to be the nutriment of those who know us.

(a) The Submissive Days

And He went down with them, . . . and was subject unto them. (Luke 2:51)

An extraordinary exhibition of submissiveness! and "the disciple is not above his master." Think of it: thirty years at home with brothers and sisters who did not believe in Him! We fix on the three years which were extraordinary in Our Lord's life and forget altogether the earlier years at home, thirty years of absolute submission. Perhaps something of the same kind is happening to you, and you say—"I don't know why I should have to submit to this." Are you any better than Jesus Christ? "As He is, so are we in this world." The explanation of it all is Our Lord's prayer—"that they may be one, even as We are one." If God is putting you through a spell of submission, and you seem to be losing your individuality and everything else, it is because Jesus is making you one with Him.

(b) The Solitary Desertions

And He was there in the wilderness forty days, tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts. (Mark 1:13)

The Divine, the desert, the devil, and utter desolation—"with the wild beasts." If Our Lord endured solitary desolation, why should we consider it strange when we are solitary externally and without comradeship internally? Thank God we have a shallow life, but we also have a solitary life, and it is in the solitary life that we prove whether we are willing to be made the unadvertised life for the community to which we belong—whether we are willing to be made bread or to be simply the advertisement for bread? If we are to be made bread, then we must not be surprised if we are treated in the way Our Lord was treated.

(c) The Substitution Devotion

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are My friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. (John 15:13–14)

For a man to lay down his life is not to lay it down in a sudden crisis, such as death, but to lay it down in deliberate expenditure as one would lay out a pound note. Not—"Here it is, take it out in one huge martyrdom and be done with it." It is a continual substitution whereby we realise that we have another day to spend out for Jesus Christ, another opportunity to prove ourselves His friends.

CAN YOU COME DOWN?

Mark 9:2-29

The test of spiritual life is the power to descend; if we have power to rise only, there is something wrong. We all have had times on the mount when we have seen things from God's standpoint and we wanted to stay there; but if we are disciples of Jesus Christ, He will never allow us to stay there. Spiritual selfishness makes us want to stay on the mount; we feel so good, as if we could do anything—talk like angels and live like angels, if only we could stay there. But there must be the power to descend; the mountain is not the place for us to live, we were built for the valleys. This is one of the hardest things to learn because spiritual selfishness always wants repeated moments on the mount.

1. The Sphere of Exaltation

And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias. (Mark 9:5)

When God gives us a time of exaltation it is always exceptional. It has its meaning in our life with God, but we must beware lest spiritual selfishness wants to make it the only time. The sphere of exaltation is not meant to teach us anything. We are apt to think that everything that happens to us is to be turned into useful teaching; it is to be turned into something better than teaching, viz., into character. We shall find that the spheres God brings us into are not meant to teach us something but to make us something. There is a great danger in asking, "What is the use of it?" There is no use in it at all. If you want a life of usefulness, don't be a Christian after Our Lord's stamp; you will be much more useful if you are not. The cry for the standard of usefulness knocks the spiritual Christian right out, he dare not touch it if he is going to remain true to his Master. Take the life of Our Lord: for three years all He did was to walk about saying things and healing sick people—a useless life, judged from every standard of success and of enterprise. If Our Lord and His disciples had lived in our day, they would have been put down as a most unuseful crowd. In spiritual matters we can never calculate on the line of—"What is the use of it?" "What is the use of being at a Bible Training College? Of learning Psychology and Ethics? Do something." Great danger lies along that line. "The good is ever the enemy of the best." The mountaintop experiences are rare moments, but they are meant for something in the purposes of God. It was not until Peter came to write his Epistles that he realised the full purpose of his having been on the Mount of Transfiguration.

2. The Sphere of Humiliation

And one of the multitude answered and said, Master, I have brought unto Thee my son, which hath a dumb spirit; And wheresoever he taketh him, he teareth him: and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth, and pineth away: and I spake to Thy disciples that they should cast him out; and they could not. (Mark 9:17–18)

The first thing the disciples met in the valley was a demon-possessed boy, and we have to live in the demon-possessed valley. God did not create Adam to live on the mountain; He made him of the dust of the earth, that was his glory. The mountaintop is an exceptional type of experience, we have to live down in the valley. After every time of exaltation we are brought down with a sudden rush into things as they are, where things are neither beautiful nor poetic nor spiritual nor thrilling. The height of the mountaintop is measured by the drab drudgery of the valley. We never live for the glory of God on the mount, we see His glory there, but we do not live for His glory there; it is in the valley that we live for the glory of God. Our Lord came down from the Mount into the valley and went on to the Cross where He was glorified; and we have to come down from the mount of exaltation into the drab life of the valley. It is in the sphere of humiliation that we find our true worth to God, and that is where our faithfulness has to be manifested. Most of us can do things if we are always at the heroic pitch; but God wants us at the drab, commonplace pitch, where we live in the valley according to our personal relationship to Him. We can all be thrilled by appeals to do things in an ecstatic way, by moments of devotion, but that is never the work of God's grace, it is the natural selfishness of our own hearts. We can all do the heroic thing, but can we live in the drab humiliating valley where there is nothing amazing, but mostly disaster, certainly humiliation, and emphatically everything drab and dull and mean?6 That is where Jesus Christ lived most of His life. The reason we have to live in the valley is that the majority of people live there, and if we are to be of use to God in the world we must be useful from God's standpoint, not from our own standpoint or the standpoint of other people.

"If Thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us" (Mark 9:22). That is our condition when we are in the valley; we do not know God, we are full of scepticism. The great point of our life with God, and of our service for Him in the world is that we get the scepticism rooted out of us, and it takes the valley of humiliation to root it out. Look back at your own experience and you will find that until you learned Who Jesus Christ was, you were a cunning sceptic about His power. When you were on the mount you could believe anything, because it was in accordance with the selfishness of your nature, but what about the time when you were up against facts in the valley, up against questions which could not be answered? You may be perfectly able to give a testimony to sanctification, but what about the thing that is a humiliation to you? If you are without something that is a humiliation to you, I question whether you have ever come into a personal relationship with Jesus Christ. We are called to fellowship with His sufferings, and some of the greatest suffering lies in remaining powerless where He remained powerless. Had our Lord been a man, He would have healed the boy at first, but He waited until the father was in the last ebb of despair— "If Thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us." Am I patient enough in my faith in Jesus Christ to allow people to get to the last ebb of despair before they see what He can do? We step in in a thousand and one ways God never tells us to; we say we cannot bear to see God appear cruel, but God has to appear cruel from our standpoint. As disciples of Jesus we have to learn not only what Our Lord is like on the Mount of Transfiguration, but what He is like in the valley of humiliation, where everything is giving the lie to His power, where the disciples are powerless, and where He is not doing anything.

3. The Sphere of Ministration

And He said unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting. (Mark 9:29)

The last time you were on the mount with God you saw that all power has been given unto Jesus in heaven and on earth, are you going to be sceptical in the valley of humiliation? You have gone to God about the thing that is perplexing you over and over again and nothing has happened, "Why could not we cast him out?" Our Lord never gives an answer to questions of that description, because the answer lies in a personal relationship to Himself. "This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting," i.e., by concentration and redoubled concentration on Me. Prayer and fasting means concentration on God. That is the one purpose for which we are in the world. Do get out of your ears the noisy cries of the Christian world we are in—"Do this and do that." Never! "Be this and that, then I will do through you," says Jesus. "If Thou canst" (RV)—Is that what you say to Me?—"All things are possible to him that believeth." At last the father got to the point of personal relationship with ^{6.} mean: as used here, something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

Jesus—"Lord, I believe; help Thou mine unbelief." We slander God by our very eagerness to work for Him without knowing Him.

We must be able to mount up with wings as eagles, but we must know also how to come down. It is the coming down and the living down that is the power of the saint. Paul said, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me"; watch the things he said he could do, they were all humiliating things. We have the idea that we are meant to work for God along the heroic line; we are meant to do un-heroic work for God in the martyr spirit. The sphere of humiliation is always the place of more satisfaction to Jesus Christ, and it is in our power to refuse to be humiliated, to say, "No, thank you, I much prefer to be on the mountaintop with God." Do I believe that God engineers my circumstances, that it is He who brings me each day into contact with the people I meet? Am I faithful enough to Him to know that all I meet with in the ordinary machinery of every day by chance or haphazard is absolutely under His dominance and rule? Do I face the humiliation which sometimes comes in my contact with people with a perfect knowledge that God is working out His own will?

You are brought face to face with difficult cases, and nothing happens externally, yet you know that emancipation has been given, because you are concentrated on Jesus Christ. Our line of service is to see that there is nothing between Jesus and ourselves. Is there? If there is you must get through it, not by mounting up, not by ignoring it in irritation, but by facing it and going clean through it straight into the presence of Jesus. Then that very thing and all you have been through in connection with it, glorifies Jesus in a way you will never know till you see Him face to face.

When we look at our lives in this way, we understand what Jesus meant when He said, "He that believeth in Me," out of him "shall flow rivers of living water." Why should we ignore what Jesus Christ says? Why should we take our stamp of Christian service from any one other than Himself? We have to maintain our personal relationship to Jesus Christ, the attitude of a child, and to maintain the same attitude in everything and to everyone, towards every individual and circumstance we meet, and never be deflected. That is the meaning of "prayer and fasting."

THE DEDICATION OF FOLLOWING

1. The Followers of God's Life

Be ye therefore followers of God. . . . (Ephesians 5:1)

The one striking thing about following is we must not find our own way, for when we take the initiative we cease to follow. In the natural world everything depends upon our taking the initiative, but if we are followers of God, we cannot take the initiative, we cannot choose our own work or say what we will do; we have not to find out at all, we have just to follow.

"Jesus saith unto him, . . . follow thou Me" (John 21:22). Everything Our Lord asks us to do is naturally frankly impossible to us. It is impossible for us to be the children of God naturally, to love our enemies, to forgive, to be holy, to be pure, and it is certainly impossible to us to follow God naturally; consequently the fundamental fact to recognise is that we must be born again. We recognise it fundamentally, but we must recognise it actually, that in spiritual matters we must not take the initiative. We must not make decisions of our own, we must "follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth," and when He does not go anywhere, then we do not.

In following Our Lord Jesus Christ we are not following His followers. When Paul said, "who shall bring you into remembrance of my ways," he was careful to add, "which be in Christ" (1 Corinthians 4:17). We are not called to follow in all the footsteps of the saints, but only in so far as they followed their Lord. The great meaning of following is that we imitate as children, not as monkeys.

"In Him was life . . ." (John 1:4). We are not left to anything vague. It does sound vague to say "be followers of God," but when we realise that Jesus Christ is the life of God, then we know where we are. He is the One Whom we have to imitate and follow, but we must first of all be born again and receive His Spirit, and then walk in the Spirit. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His" (Romans 8:9).

(a) In Joy

These things have I spoken unto you, that My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. (John 15:11)

If Jesus Christ is the life of God and we have to follow Him, we must find out what His joy was. It certainly was not happiness. The joy of the Lord Jesus Christ lay in doing exactly what He came to do. He did not come to save men first of all, He came to do His Father's will. The saving of men was the natural outcome of this, but Our Lord's one great obedience was not to the needs of men but to the will of His Father, and He says, "as My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." We are never told to consecrate our gifts to God, but we are told to dedicate ourselves.

The joy of anything, from a blade of grass upwards, is to fulfil its created purpose. ". . . that we should be to the praise of His glory" (Ephesians 1:12). We are not here to win souls, to do good to others, that is the natural outcome, but it is not our aim, and this is where so many of us cease to be followers. We will follow God as long as He makes us a blessing to others, but when He does not we will not follow. Suppose Our Lord had measured His life by whether or not He was a blessing to others! Why, He was a "stone of stumbling" to thousands, actually to His own neighbours, to His own nation, because through Him they blasphemed the Holy Ghost, and in His own country "He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief" (Matthew 13:58). If Our Lord had measured His life by its actual results, He would have been full of misery.

We get switched off when instead of following God we follow Christian work and workers. We are much more concerned over the passion for souls than the passion for Christ. The passion for Christ is the counterpart of His passion for God. The life of God is manifested in Our Lord Jesus Christ, He came to do His Father's will; then when we are following Him, it will be a matter of indifference whether God puts us in the forefront or in the back seat. When we realise this, then the joy of the Lord is ours because we are fulfilling our regenerated purpose. The passion for souls is not a New Testament idea at all, but religious commercialism. When we are taken up with this passion the joy of the Lord is never ours, but only an excitable joy which always leaves a snare behind.

God engineers our circumstances as He did those of His Son; all we have to do is to follow where He places us. The majority of us are busy trying to place ourselves. God alters things while we wait for Him. Are we fulfilling the purpose of our recreation, viz., to glorify God? The sign that we are glorifying God is not that we are happy; happiness is childish, individual and pagan. It is natural for a child to be happy because a child does not face facts, but a Christian who is merely happy is blind.

The way God's life manifests itself in joy is in a peace which has no desire for praise. When a man delivers a message which he knows is the message of God, the witness to the fulfilment of the created purpose is given instantly, the peace of God settles down, and the man cares for neither praise nor blame from anyone. That is the joy of the life of God; it is uncrushable life, and there is never life without joy.

(b) In Judgement (John 3:16–21) He that doeth truth cometh to the light. (v. 21)

In actual life we must be always in the light, and we cease to be in the light when we want to explain why we did a thing. The significant thing about Our Lord is that He never explained anything; He let mistakes correct themselves because He always lived in the light. There is so much in us that is folded and twisted, but the sign that we are following God is that we keep in the light. "I have been saved and sanctified, therefore I am all right"—that brings darkness at once.

When we are walking in the light there is never any lust of vindication, no saying before God, "I did not mean this," or, "I did not intend to do that," or, "I made a mistake there," but always coming to the light and keeping in the light all the time, with nothing folded before God. We keep in the judgement of God, consequently there is no condemnation going on in our lives. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus" (Romans 8:1) means keeping in the light all the time.

One danger is to go off in work, and another danger is to go off on doctrine. Doctrine is the mere statement of the life of God for the purposes of teaching. Always beware of following your own convictions in doctrine instead of following the life of God. Our Lord says, "Judge not," and yet Paul says, "we shall judge angels." Our Lord means, Do not judge by ordinary reasoning, or weighing up by carnal suspicion, but keep in the light. By keeping in the light we judge even angels. It is done by following God's life in judgement.

(c) In Jerusalem Behold, we go up to Jerusalem. . . . (Luke 18:31)

Jerusalem was the place in the life of Our Lord where He actually fulfilled the climax of His Father's will. He did not stay long in the villages where the people were blessed abundantly, He went steadily through everything, successful service or shame, it never affected Him, and we have to do the same. We have to fulfil the purpose of God in our lives actually. We are here to be followers of the life of God. The counterpart is taking God's life for ourselves instead of giving ourselves to God. "I want God's life for my body"—at once we are off the track. Our bodies are to be entirely at God's disposal, and not God at our disposal. God does give Divine health, but not in order to show what a wonderful being a divinely healed person is. The life of God has to be followed by us, not utilised; we must not allow the life of God to stagnate in us, or imagine that we are to be put as specimens in a showcase. If God has healed us and keeps us in health, it is not that we might parade it, but that we might follow the life of God for His purposes.

We do not know where our "Jerusalem" is, but we have to go up to it, and the only way to go up to it is not by trying to find out where it is, but by being followers of God's life.

2. The Followers of God's Love

For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. (Romans 8:38–39)

Jesus Christ is the love of God incarnated. The love of God is not to be looked for in justice, right, truth, and purity; the love of God is Jesus Christ.

(a) In Loyalty

Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and he not entangled again with the yoke of hondage. (Galatians 5:1)

Loyalty is not to be to loving God, or to the love of God, but to Jesus Christ's redemption of us. "Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry" (Colossians 3:5). "Since I have been saved and sanctified none of these things dwell in me." These things are only possible in the saint, because the saint's body is the temple of the Holy Ghost and may be utilised as an occasion to the flesh. Saints have to become absolutely loyal to the disposition of Jesus Christ in their lives. To mortify means to destroy by neglect. It is easy to detect whenever inordinacy comes in. "How then can I do this great wickedness?" (Genesis 39:9). God's love restrained him—that is Joseph's meaning.

The only way to keep following the love of God is by being loyal to the Lord Jesus Christ. If we make sin a theological question and not a question of actual deliverance, we become adherents to doctrine, and if we put doctrine first, we shall be hoodwinked before we know where we are; or if we take an actual experience and deposit that as a truth on which we rest our souls, we go wrong at once. In stating holiness doctrinally we are apt to make it appear harsh and vindictive; it is technically right, but without the love of God in it. Paul's phrase, "the holiness of truth" (RV), is the right one.

(b) In Liberty

If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. (John 8:36)

"Free indeed," i.e., free from the inside. The freedom of Jesus is never license, it is always liberty, and liberty means ability to fulfil the law of God. The law of God was fulfilled in the life of Jesus Christ, therefore He is the Expression of the love of God. If I am following God's love as exhibited in the Lord Jesus Christ and He has made me free from within, I am so taken up with following Him that I will never take advantage of another child of God.

(c) In Lowliness

But made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men. (Philippians 2:7)

In following God's love we must do so in lowliness. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus..." (Philippians 2:5). That is a command. God does not give us the mind of Christ, He gives us the Spirit of Christ, and we have to see that the Spirit of Christ in us works through our brains in contact with actual life and that we form His mind. Jesus Christ did not become humbled—"He humbled Himself." He was "in the form of God," yet He took on Him "the form of a servant." Some of us make a virtue of modesty and it becomes the worst form of pride. Self-assertive initiative has nothing to do with the love of God, and was never exhibited in the life of Jesus Christ.

We are all thrilled by high, human, noble pagan sacrifice; it is much more thrilling than Calvary, there is something shameful about that, it is against all human ideas of nobility. The love of God is not in accordance with human standards in any way.

3. The Followers of the Lamb

These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. (Revelation 14:4)

(a) In Purity

And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He is pure. (1 John 3:3)

We are to follow Jesus Christ down here in the actual world where there is any amount of impurity, but we have this hope, that "we shall be like Him," consequently we purify ourselves. The possibility of being impure means that there is some value to Jesus Christ in our being pure. God gives us His supernatural life, but we have to keep entirely free from the world with a purity which is of value to God; we have to grow in purity. Unless a man realises that when he is indwelt by the Spirit of God he must also walk according to the pattern of Jesus Christ, his flesh will take occasion to ensnare him. One of the most besmirching impurities lies in money matters; do we follow the Lamb in these matters? If we do, we shall purify ourselves "even as He is pure"; not only is the purity of the Holy Ghost in us, but we are working it out in every detail. We have to be God's workmanship, not to work for God. "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto Me" (Acts 1:8), i.e., "those in whom I am delighted."

If Jesus Christ were manifested now, would we be like Him? or would we have a hundred and one things to do before we could be as He is? We have not been taking time to purify ourselves as He is pure because we have been restless and annoyed; we have imagined that we have things to do that no one can do but ourselves. It may be true, but immediately we think it, we lose out. There is only one lodestar to the saint, the Lord Jesus Christ. We have no business to get into circumstances God does not put us into. Faith means keeping absolutely specklessly right with God, He does all the rest. We are only what we are in the dark; all the rest is reputation. What God looks at is what we are in the dark—the imaginations of our minds; the thoughts of our heart; the habits of our bodies; these are the things that mark us in God's sight.

(b) In Patience

Because thou hast kept the word of My patience. (Revelation 3:10)

Patience has the meaning of testing—a thing drawn out and tested, drawn out to the last strand in a strain without breaking, and ending in sheer joy. The strain on a violin string when stretched to the uttermost gives it its strength; and the stronger the strain, the finer is the sound of our life for God, and He never strains more than we are able to bear. We say, "sorrow, disaster, calamity"; God says, "chastening," and it sounds sweet to Him though it is a discord in our ears. Don't faint when you are rebuked, and don't despise the chastenings of the Lord. "In your patience possess ye your souls." If God has given you a time of rest, then lie curled up in His leaves of healing.

(c) In Power

For though He was crucified through weakness, yet He liveth by the power of God. For we also are weak in Him, but we shall live with Him by the power of God toward you. (2 Corinthians 13:4)

The power of God was exhibited in Jesus Christ—that insignificant Nazarene Carpenter whom Roman paganism did not notice. In the eyes of the world pagan virtues are admirable: Christian virtues are contemptible. Are we prepared to be "weak in Him"? If so, we shall be weaklings in the eyes of men, but we shall "live with Him by the power of God."

Do we "follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth"? He will take us through darkness, through the valley of the shadow, through the strange dark things—we must follow Him "whithersoever He goeth."

For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. (Revelation 7:17)

The Message of Invincible Consolation

KATHLEEN'S DAILY PRAYER

Father lead me day by day, Ever in Thine own sweet way; Teach me to be good and true, Show me what I ought to do.

In Loving Memory of Kathleen Mary Cheal Clarke⁷ From God 27th December, 1924 To God 29th September, 1930 Again I shall behold thee, daughter true;
The hour will come when I shall hold thee fast
In God's name, loving thee all through and through.
Somewhere in His grand thought this waits for us.
Then shall I see a smile not like thy last—
For that great thing which came when all was past,
Was not a smile, but God's peace glorious.

^{7.} Kathleen Mary Cheal Clarke (1924–30: daughter of Louis R. S. Clarke, a British soldier influenced by Chambers at Zeitoun. After the war ended, her father became a longtime member of the council assisting Mrs. Chambers in publishing the OC books.

For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal. 2 Corinthians 4:16–18

In these verses the Apostle Paul is interpreting the most sacred realities of a saint's life. We deal so much with the joyful and the happy and the exuberant in our experience that we are apt to forget that life externally is continually full of the things Paul mentions here. Paul's own life was one of the most distracting and tumultuous and terribly "spilt" lives ever recorded in history.

1. The Beyond Within

Wasting Outward Man—Winged Inner Man (2 Corinthians 4:16)

"For which cause we faint not [the word 'faint' is used in the sense of cowardly surrender]; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." Paul puts the great emphasis on what God has put within; he builds up his confidence in that. The perishing of the outward man is not always indicative of old age. Look at your own life; you have had the experience of sanctification and have been lifted into the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, and yet God's hand has been laid upon you. He has allowed the finger of decay to come to your body and lay you completely aside, and you begin to see what a slight hold you have on life, and the thought comes—"Well, I expect I will have to 'cave in,' I have not the strength I once had; I can never do the things I thought I would for God." This message is for you—"though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day."

The experience may not come with years but in the ordinary circumstances of life. It may come in a hundred and one ways and you realise that the outward man is wasting, that you have not the might you once had, and this is where the cowardly surrender is apt to come in—only we give it another name. The great craze to-day is—Be healthy, be sane; "a sound mind in a sound body." Very often the soundest minds have not been in sound bodies, but in very shaky tabernacles, and the word comes—"though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day."

Paul faces the possibility of old age, of decay, and of death, with no rebellion and no sadness. Paul never hid from himself the effect which his work had upon him, he knew it was killing him, and, like his Master, he was old before his time; but there was no whining and no retiring from the work. Paul was not a fool, he did not waste his energy ridiculously, neither did he ignore the fact that it was his genuine apostolic work and nothing else that was wearing him out. Michelangelo said a wonderful thing—"the more the marble wears, the better the image grows," and it is an illustration of this very truth. Every wasting of nerve and brain in work for God brings a corresponding uplift and strengthening to spiritual muscle and fibre.

A good test for a worker is to ask this question: Does my inner life wing itself higher with every wearing of the body in work for God? If we are going to walk in the experimental knowledge of sanctification and live where God wants us to live, we must be willing to spend and be spent to the last ebb. But if the outward man is perishing because of an injudicious waste of physical strength or because of wrong habits, then it will always make us faint, i.e., "cave in"; and if we give up prayer and communion with God, then the decay goes on to a terrible extent; there is no corresponding inward weight of glory, no inner winging.

The Apostle Paul continuously had external depression, he had agonies and distresses, terrible persecution and tumults in his life, but he never had the "blues," simply because he had learned the secret that the measure of the inner glory is the wasting of the outward man. The outer man was being wasted, Paul knew it and felt it, but the inner man was being renewed, every wasting meant a corresponding winging on the inside. Some of us are so amazingly lazy, so comfortably placed in life, that we get no inner winging. The natural life, apart altogether from sin, must be sacrificed to the will and the word of God, otherwise there is no spiritual glory for the individual. With some of us the body is not wearing away, our souls are stagnant, and the vision spiritually is not getting brighter; but once we get into the heavenlies, live there, and work from that standpoint, we find we have the glorious opportunity of spending all our bodily energies in God's service, and a corresponding weight of moral and spiritual glory remains all the time.

One of the most enervating things that can come across your life as a saint is the sympathy of others who do not understand the vision of your heart, and they say—"Poor woman, you do suffer; so many people misunderstand you; you are put in such awkward circumstances." The thing to realise is that God enlarges us on the inside, not externally, and that every bit of nervous energy spent by us in God's work means a grander weight of glory and spiritual insight. No matter how wearied or expended the body may be in God's work, there is the winging of the inner man into a higher grasp of God.

We have to beware of the pagan notion that our spirit develops in spite of our body, it develops with our body, and the way that spiritual insight develops in the worker is, as Paul states here, in the wasting of energy for God, because in this way the inner man is renewed. It is not a question of saying—"Oh, my body is so lazy, I must drag it up to do something," but a question of working on God's line to the last lap, spending and being spent for one purpose only, and that purpose God's. If we put the body and the concerns of the body before the eternal weight of glory, we will never have any inner winging at all, we will always be asking God to patch up this old tabernacle and keep it in repair. But when the heart sees what God wants, and knows that the body must be willing to spend and be spent for that cause and that cause alone then the inner man gets wings.

2. The Beautifying Work Balancing the Ways (2 Corinthians 4:17)

The Apostle Paul soars above the things which were wearing out his physical life, not by sublime indifference, but by realising the weight of glory which these very afflictions are working in him. Have you got hold of this secret that if you are right with God, the very thing which is an affliction to you is working out an eternal weight of glory? The afflictions may come from good people or from bad people, but behind the whole thing is God. Whenever Paul tries to state the unfathomable joy and glory which he has in the heavenlies in Christ Jesus, it is as if he cannot find words to express his meaning. In order to try to express it here he balances his words—for instance, "affliction" is matched with "glory"; "light" is matched with "weight"; and "moment" is matched with "eternal." I wonder if we balance our words like that?

In Romans 8:18 ("For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us") Paul is stating that it is the standpoint of the worker which determines everything. If you think of suffering affliction you will begin to write your own epitaph, begin to dream of the kind of tombstone you would like. That is the wrong standpoint. Have your standpoint in the heavenlies, and you will not think of the afflictions but only of the marvellous way God is working out the inner weight of glory all the time, and you will hail with delight the afflictions which our Lord tells us to expect (John 16:33), the afflictions of which James writes (James 1:2), and of which Peter writes (1 Peter 4:12). Our Lord presented truth in "nugget" form, and in the Epistles the Apostles beat out these "nuggets" into negotiable gold.

"For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory"; the apostle seems to be putting things the wrong way round. Surely the affliction is the heavy thing and the glory the light thing! No, Paul is putting it in the right way; he puts the emphasis on the weight of glory resulting from the light affliction. Again, everything is determined by the standpoint you take. Stand in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus and when the afflictions come you will praise the Lord, not with a sickly smile but with every bit of you, because you have learned the secret of the eternal weight of glory, and you know that His yoke is easy.

For our light affliction, which is but for a moment . . ." Paul seems to say—"Even if it were all tribulation it would not matter, because the glory beginning already and the glory to come would make amends for it all." This law of glory working out of decay is God's beautifying work in a saint. The soother of all affliction is the steadfast thought of the glory which is being worked out by the afflictions. Paul here beats out the nugget of truth in our Lord's rebuke to Peter: Pity thyself, Lord: this shall not be unto Thee. "But He turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind Me, Satan." Self-pity is taking the wrong standpoint, and if self-pity is indulged in, before long we will take part in the decaying thing instead of in that which grows more and more into the glory of God's presence.

3. The Blessed Vision The Watchword of Other-Worldliness (2 Corinthians 4:18)

The sanctified saint has to alter the horizon of other people's lives, and he does it by showing that they can be lifted on to a higher plane by the grace of God, viz., into the heavenly places in Christ Jesus. If you look at the horizon from the sea shore you will not see much of the sea, but climb higher up the cliff, and as you rise higher the horizon keeps level with your eye and you see more in between. Paul is seated in the heavenly places and he can see the whole world mapped out in God's plan. He is looking ahead like a watchman, and his words convey the calm, triumphant contemplation of a conqueror. Some of us get distracted because we have not this world-wide outlook, we see only the little bit inside our own "bandbox."8 The Apostle Paul has burst his bandbox, he has been lifted up on to a new plane in Christ Jesus and he sees now from His standpoint. The preacher and the worker must learn to look at life as a whole. When we are lifted up to where Jesus is, it is not as if we were standing on a high pinnacle like a spiritual acrobat, balancing on one leg for two seconds and then tumbling. God lifts us up to a totally new plane where there is plenty of room to live and to grow, and to understand things from His standpoint and we see life as a whole; we see not only the glory which now is, but the glory which is yet to be.

"While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen." The things "not seen" refer not only to the glorious reward and the life yet to be, but to the invisible things in our present life around which our Lord's teaching centres, and around which the afflictions centre. So many of us think only of the visible things, whereas the real concentration, the whole dead-set of the life, should be where our Lord put it in the huge "nugget" of truth which we call the Sermon on the Mount. There our Lord says, in effect, "Take no thought for your life; be carefully careless about everything saving one thing, your relationship to God." Naturally, we are apt to be carefully careless about everything saving that one thing. The afflictions tackle these unseen centres of our life and we have to face them in the power of the indwelling Spirit of God, and if we have been lifted up into the heavenlies we shall find that the battlings are bringing out more and more the eternal weight of glory, while we look at the things which are not seen. Do not think only of what is yet to be; think of the invisible things which are here and now. Think of the weight of glory that may be yours by means of that difficult person you have to live with, by means of the circumstances you are in, the people you come in contact with day by day. The phrase "a means of grace" comes with a wonderfully new meaning when we think of it in this light.

These words of the Apostle Paul bring to us a message of invincible consolation. If you are a child of God and there is some part of your circumstances which is tearing you, if you are living in the heavenly places you will thank God for the tearing thing; if you are not in the heavenly places you cry to God over and over again—"O Lord, remove this thing from me. If only I could live in golden streets and be surrounded with angels, and have the Spirit of God consciously indwelling me all the time and have everything wonderfully sweet, then I think I might be a Christian." That is not being a Christian! A Christian is one who can live in the midst of the trouble and turmoil with the glory of God indwelling him, while he steadfastly looks not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen. We have to learn to think only of things which are seen as a glorious chance of enabling us to concentrate on the things which are not seen. God engineers external things for the purpose of revealing to us whether we are living in this imperturbable place of unutterable strength and glory, viz., the life hid with Christ in God. If we are, then let the troubles and difficulties work as they may on the outside, we are confident that they are working out a grander weight of glory in the heavenlies.

THE WORKER AND THINGS AS THEY ARE

2 Corinthians 6:1-10

We have an idea that we have to alter things, we have not; we have to remain true to God in the midst of things as they are, to allow things as they are to transmute us. "Things as they are" are the very means God uses to make us into the praise of His glory. We have to live on this sordid earth, amongst human beings who are exactly like ourselves, remembering that it is on this plane we have to work out the marvellous life God has put in us. Holiness in a human being is only manifested by means of antagonism. Physically, we are healthy according to our power of fight on the inside; morally, we are virtuous according to our moral calibre-virtue is always acquired; and spiritually, if we are drawing on the resurrection life of Jesus, spiritual stamina comes as we learn to "score off" the things that come against us, and in this way we produce a holy character.

The life of a worker is not a hop, skip and a jump affair, it is a squaring of the shoulders, then a steady, steadfast tramp straight through until we get to understand God's way. It takes the energy of God Himself to prepare a worker for all He wants to make him. We need a spiritual vision of work as well as a spiritual vision of truth. It is not that we go through a certain curriculum and then we are fit to work; preparation and work are so involved that they cannot be separated. The Apostle Paul always comes right down to the practical. One of the outstanding miracles of God's grace is to make us able to take any kind of leadership at all without losing spiritual power. There is no more searching test in the whole of Christian life than that.

1. The Worth to God

We then, as workers together with Him . . . (2 Corinthians 6:1)

When a worker has led a soul to Christ his work has only just begun. Our attitude is apt to be—So many saved; so many sanctified, and then we shout "Hallelujah." But it is only then that the true work of the worker begins. It is then that we have to be held in God's hand and let the word of God be driven through us. It is then that we have to be put under the millstone and ground, put into the kneading trough and be mixed properly, and then baked—all in order to be made broken bread to feed God's children. "Go ye therefore, and make disciples" (RV). How many disciples have you made? Have you made one? Discipling is our work. When God's great redemptive work has issued in lives in salvation and sanctification, then the work of the worker begins. It is then that we find the meaning of being "workers together with Him," and the meaning of the Apostle Paul's agony of heart and mind over his converts-"My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you"—waiting and watching and longing and praying and working, until he can see them rooted and grounded in God. Look at the laborious way of a scientist in finding out the secrets of Nature, and then look at our own slipshod ignorance with regard to God's Book. If the worker will obey God's way he will find he has to be everlastingly delving into the Bible and working it out in circumstances, the two always run together. It requires all the machinery of circumstances to bring a worker where God wants him to be-"co-workers with God."

We are apt to say—"Now I am fitted for this particular work because of my natural temperament and I intend to work only along this line." An exclusive worker is excluded by God, because God does not work in that way. The gifts of the Spirit are divided "to every man severally as He will"; they are entirely of God and they all work together with God. The worth of a worker to God is just the worth of a man's own fingers to his brain.

2. The Wooing of God

... beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain . . .

The wooing of God is not the wooing of man. The wooing of a man's personality may often hinder the wooing of God. The Apostle Paul's pleading is caught up into the entreaty of the Spirit of God so that it is the wooing of God that is working through him-"as though God did beseech you by us." This is the entreaty that is learned at Calvary and made real in the worker by the Holy Ghost. It is not the tones of a man's speech, or the passion of a man's personality, it is the pleading power of the Holy Ghost coming through him; consequently the worker has no sympathy with things with which God's Spirit has no sympathy. We are in danger of being stern where God is tender, and of being tender where God is stern. The Apostle Paul so identifies his own beseeching and passion with the entreaty of God that the two are identical. He is afraid "lest by any means . . . [their] minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ" (2 Corinthians 11:3).

3. The World's Coarse Thumb

Giving no offence in any thing . . . (2 Corinthians 6:3)

The worldling is annoyed at the worker because the worker is always dealing with a crisis that he does not see and does not want to see. No matter what he touches on, the worker always comes back to the claim of God, and the worldling gets annoyed at this. The man of the world analyses the easy parts of life and tells you that these are all quite obvious, all the practical outcomes of life are within his reach; but when the worker begins to touch on God's message he says, "That is nonsense, you are up in the clouds and unpractical." That is why the worker's voice is always an annoyance to the worldling.

that the ministry be not blamed . . ." The world is glad of an excuse not to listen to the Gospel message, and the inconsistencies of Christians is made the excuse. "Woe unto the world because of offences!" said our Lord. "For it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!" Offence means something to strike up against, and the world is on the watch for that kind of thing. If a worker is tripped in private life, the world strikes against that at once and makes it the excuse for not accepting the Gospel. The perilous possibility of being an occasion of stumbling is always there. Paul never forgot the possibility of it in his own life—"... lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." The only safeguard is living the life hid with Christ in God, and a steady watchfulness that we walk in the light as God is in the light.

4. The Wheel of Circumstances (2 Corinthians 6:4-6)

... but in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God. (v. 4)

Read the life of the Apostle Paul and you find that he drank to the last dregs the experience of every one of the things mentioned in these verses. Paul is not indulging in oratory, he is stating the things God put him through. All his experiences called for patience. Holiness can only be worked out in and through the din of things as they are. God does not slide holiness into our hearts like a treasure box from heaven and we open the lid and out it comes, holiness works out in us as it worked out in our Lord. The holiness of God Almighty is Absolute; that is, it knows no development by antagonism. The holiness exhibited by the Son of God, and by God's children, is the holiness which expresses itself by means of antagonism.

There are some wonderful words in verses 4 and 5—"in much patience." Patience is the result of wellcentred strength; it takes the strength of Almighty God to keep a man patient. No one can remain under and endure what God puts a servant of His through unless he has the power of God. We read that our Lord was "crucified through weakness," yet it took omnipotent might to make Him weak like that. Where is the impulsive enthusiasm which was manifested at the start of the Christian life, has it all gone? No, it has been transmuted into the strength that can be weak. "in afflictions"—affliction is something that crushes like a weight until you have not a word to say. "in necessities"—the loss of liberty, confinement. A happy heart and an unpaid salary; a high head and an empty pocket! That is the way it works out in reality. "in distresses" perplexities such as sickness, the loss of friends, the inscrutable ways of God's providence; but through it all the grace of God comes, it is an inner unconquerableness. "in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings"—in all these things manifest the drawing on the grace of God that makes you a marvel to yourself and to others. Draw now, not presently. The one word in the spiritual vocabulary is NOW. Let circumstances bring you where they will, keep drawing on the grace of God. One of the greatest proofs that you are drawing on the grace of God is that you can be humiliated without manifesting the slightest trace of anything but His grace in you.

Verses 4–10 are Paul's spiritual diary, they describe the outward hardships which proved the hot-bed for the graces of the Spirit—the working together of outward hardships and inward grace. You have been asking the Lord to give you the graces of the Spirit and then some set of circumstances has come and given you a sharp twinge, and you say—"Well, I have asked God to bring out in me the graces of the Spirit, but every time the devil seems to get the better of me." What you are calling "the devil" is the very thing God is using to manifest the graces of the Spirit in you.

"By honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report." The worker learns the secret of the "camp fires" where he can recount with other Christians the great hours when the Son of God walked with him in the fiery furnace. The thing that keeps us off enchanted ground is to remember that we are on God's campaigns, that we have no certain place of abode, no nesting place here.

He fixed thee midst this dance
Of plastic circumstance,
This Present, thou, forsooth, would'st fain arrest:
Machinery just meant
To give thy soul its bent,
Try thee and turn thee forth, sufficiently impressed.

Robert Browning

The fiery furnaces are there by God's direct permission. It is misleading to imagine that we are developed in spite of our circumstances, we are developed because of them. It is mastery in circumstances that is needed, not mastery over them. We have to manifest the graces of the Spirit amongst things as they are, not to wait for the Millennium.

5. The Wine of God (2 Corinthians 6:7–10)

In these verses the Apostle Paul is giving out golden truths from his own experience. Paul's external life had been spilt and rent, and crushed and broken, then out of it came the wine of God. Wine comes only from crushed grapes, and the things Paul is mentioning here are the things which bring out the wine that God likes. You cannot be poured-out wine if you remain a whole grape; you cannot be broken bread if you remain whole grain. Grapes have to be crushed, and grain has to be ground; then the sweetness of the life comes out to the glory of God. Watch the circumstances of life; we get them fairly well mixed, and if we are getting more than enough of one kind, let us thank the Lord for it; it is producing the particular grace that God wants us to manifest.

The Making of a Christian

The ascendancy which He exercised in thus drawing men away from worldly callings and hopes into association with Himself is quite indefinite, and even in yielding to it, the disciples could have no distinct idea what it involved.

Dr. Denney⁹

1. Days of His Flesh

The Dominating Sentiment (Matthew 4:18–22; Mark 1:16–20; John 1:35–42)

The average preaching of Redemption deals mainly with the "scenic" cases, i.e. those who have gone through exceptional experiences. But none of the early disciples had these scenic experiences, nor was their dominating sentiment a desire for deliverance from sin. They were elemental men in touch with the forces of nature, and there was something about Jesus Christ that fascinated them. When He said, "Follow Me," they followed Him at once; it was no cross to them. It would have been a cross not to follow, for the spell of Jesus was on them. We have come to the conclusion nowadays that a man must be a conscious sinner before Jesus Christ can do anything for him. The early disciples were not attracted to Jesus because they wanted to be saved from sin; they had no conception that they needed saving. They were attracted to Him by a dominating sincerity, by sentiments other than those which we say make men come to Jesus. There was nothing theological in their following, no consciousness of passing from death unto life, no knowledge of what Jesus meant when He talked about His Cross. It was on the plane where all was natural, although mysterious and wonderful.

The call of God comes only to the affinity of God in a man, and is always implicit. The beginnings of moral ascension in a man's life are never definite, but always away down in the depths of his personality where he cannot trace. These early disciples were not trammelled by possessions, and when the dominating sentiment of sincerity in their own lives was met by the fascination of Jesus, they yielded at once. They did not follow Jesus because they wanted to be saved, but because they could not help following. Three years later when again Jesus said, "Follow Me," it was a different matter; many things had happened during those years. The first "Follow Me" meant an external following; now it was to be a following in internal martyrdom (see John 21:18–19).

2. Days of Our Flesh

The Dominating Sincerity (1 Peter 2:21)

The attitude of the early disciples was one of selfignorance. Jesus Christ knew perfectly well what was in them, but He did not say to John—"You will prove to be vindictive" (see Luke 9:51-55), or to Peter-"You will end in denying Me" (see Mark 14:66-72). If you had told Peter that he would deny Jesus with oaths and curses, he would have been amazed (see John 13:36–38). Jesus Christ taught the disciples the truth, and left them with the atmosphere of His own life, and slowly they began to see things differently. The disciples approached Jesus by the way of sincerity, and He put them through crises until they discovered that they could never be disciples in that way; what they needed was to have the disposition of Jesus given to them. The disciples were fascinated by Jesus; when He said, "Follow Me," they immediately left all and followed Him, and yet after three years of the closest intimacy "they all forsook Him, and fled." Their following ended in disaster.

The majority of men are attracted to Jesus on the same line as the early disciples were. The disciples were brought to a knowledge of themselves, and we have to come to a knowledge of ourselves in the same way. We have to realise that human sincerity will never stand the strain when the ideals that fascinate a man's mind come in contact with actual life. The disaster may not be external, but in his heart a man says: "I honestly tried my best to serve Jesus Christ; I did decide for Him; in all sincerity I gave all I had to the ideals He presents, but I cannot go on; the New Testament presents ideals beyond my attainment. I won't lower my ideals, although I can never hope to make them actual." Our Lord says to such a one: "Come unto Me, . . . and I will give you rest," i.e., "I will make the ideal actual." But a sense of need must arise first. As long as we deal with abstractions, we have no sense of need.

Apart from Jesus Christ there is an unbridgeable gap between the ideal and the actual; the only way out is a personal relationship to Him. The early disciples were put through crises in order to reveal them to themselves. Jesus was never in a hurry with them; He never explained; He simply stated the truth and told them that when the Holy Ghost was come, "He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." Today Jesus Christ is at work in ways we cannot tabulate; lives are being drawn to Him in a thousand and one incalculable ways; an atmosphere is being created, seeds are being sown, and men are being drawn nearer to the point where they will see Him.

П

They could do what they could not do before, because He enabled them to do it, and the sense of this is a rudimentary form of this specifically Christian consciousness.

1. Days of His Flesh

The dominating sentiment which attracted the early disciples to Jesus was not a sense of conviction of sin; they had no violent sin to turn from, and consequently no conscious need of salvation. They were not sinners in the ordinary accepted sense of the term, but honest, sincere men, and they were attracted to Jesus by something more difficult to state than the desire for deliverance from sin. The spell of Jesus was on them, and when He said, "Follow Me," they followed at once, although they could have had no idea what the following would involve. The call of God is never articulate, it is always implicit.

There was in the disciples the "one fact more" which put them in one kingdom and Jesus Christ in another kingdom. Our Lord was never impatient. He simply planted seed thoughts in their minds and surrounded them with the atmosphere of His own life. He did not attempt to convince them, but left mistakes to correct themselves, because He knew that eventually the truth would bear fruit in their lives. How differently we would have acted! We get impatient and take men by the scruff of the neck and say: "You must believe this and that." You cannot make a man see moral truth by persuading his intellect. "When He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He shall guide you into all the truth."

The Desire to Serve (Matthew 20:22)

"Jesus answered and said, . . . Are ye able to drink the cup that I am about to drink? They say unto Him, We are able" (RV). The disciples would have gone any length to prove their devotion to Jesus (cf. Matthew 26:35). It was true devotion, but it wilted because it was based on an entire ignorance of themselves. In the end they "all forsook Him, and fled," not because they wanted to, but because they did not know how to go on. Jesus put the disciples through crises to reveal them to themselves and bring them to the place of receiving the Holy Spirit. They could not see their need to receive the Holy Spirit until they found out that they were spiritual paupers. "Simon, Simon, behold, Satan asked to have you, that he might sift you as wheat" (Luke 22:31 RV). Jesus allowed Peter to go over a moral precipice and deny that he ever knew Him, before Peter realised what it was that kept him from being a disciple. It is not necessary for everyone to go through the way of Peter's sifting, but the sifting must come in some form or other. The preaching of the gospel of temperament will not do for the making of disciples; nor will Jesus shield us in the slightest degree from any of the requirements of discipleship.

The early disciples were honest, sincere, zealous men; they had given up everything to follow Jesus; their sense of the heroic was grand, but where did it all end? "They all forsook Him, and fled." They came to realise that no human earnestness or sincerity on earth can ever begin to fulfil what Jesus demands of a disciple. Then after the Resurrection, Jesus "breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ve the Holv Ghost." They had come now to the end of themselves and all self-sufficiency, and in their destitution they were willing to receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. "Their eyes were opened, and they knew Him"; their inner consciousness was opened, there was a totally new power on the inside. "They could do what they could not do before, because He enabled them to do it." But they had first of all to be brought within the moral frontier of need before they realised they were powerless to live and move in the kingdom where Jesus lived.

2. Days of Our Flesh

The Determination to Serve (Luke 10:20)

Natural devotion may be all very well to attract men to Jesus, to make them feel the fascination of His claims; but natural devotion will never make a disciple, it will always deny Jesus somewhere or other. To-day, as in the days of His flesh, men are being drawn to Jesus by their dominating sincerity, but human sincerity is not enough to make a man a disciple of Jesus Christ. There are many to-day who are sincere, but they are not real; they are not hypocrites, but perfectly honest and earnest and desirous of fulfilling what Jesus wants of them, but they really cannot do it, the reason being that they have not received the Holy Spirit Who will make them real.

The modern phrase we hear so often, "Decide for Christ," is most misleading, because it puts the emphasis on the wrong thing, and is apt to present Jesus Christ in a false way as Someone in need of our allegiance. A decision cannot hold for ever, because a man is the same after making it as before, and there will be a reaction sooner or later. Whenever a man fails in personal experience it is because he has never received anything. There is always a positive difference in a man when he has received something—new powers begin to manifest themselves. Nothing has any power to alter a man save the incoming of the life of Jesus, and that is the only sign that he is born again.

The bedrock in Jesus Christ's Kingdom is not sincerity, not deciding for Christ, not a determination to serve Him, but a complete and entire recognition that we cannot begin to do it; then, says Jesus, "Blessed are you." Jesus Christ can do wonderful things for the man who enters into His Kingdom through the moral frontier of need. Decisions for Christ fail not because men are not in earnest, but because the bedrock of Christianity is ignored. The bedrock of Christianity does not lie in vowing or in strength of will; to begin with it is not ethical at all, but simply the recognition of the fact that I have not the power within me to do what my spirit longs to do. "Come unto Me," said Jesus, not "Decide for Me." When I realise my inability to be what the New Testament tells me I should be, I have to come to Jesus "just as I am." I realise that I am an abject pauper, morally and spiritually; if ever I am going to be what Jesus wants me to be, He must come in and do it. Jesus Christ claims on the basis of His Redemption that He can put into any man who is consciously poor enough to receive it, His own disposition, i.e. the ability not only to will but to do (see Philippians 2:12–13). The knowledge of our own poverty brings us to the moral frontier where Jesus Christ works.

If you are trying to live up to a standard of belief and find you have not the power to do it, be humble enough to recognise that Jesus Christ knows more about the matter than you do. He has pledged His Father's honour to give you the Holy Spirit if you ask Him-"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" (Luke 11:13). The Holy Spirit at work in our personal lives enables us to make the ideal and the actual one, and we begin slowly to discern that we have been brought into the place where Jesus Christ tells. The beginning of spiritual life is away down where it cannot be traced; the theological explanation will emerge presently. The first thing a man needs is to be born into the Kingdom of God by receiving the Holy Spirit, and then slowly and surely be turned into a disciple. The entrance into the Kingdom of God is always through the moral frontier of need. At any turn of the road the touch may come.

III

The Holy Spirit is the missing factor in our personality, and without it we cannot be altogether as God wants us to be. An abiding gift makes an abiding change in the person to whom the gift is made.

1. In the Days of His Resurrection

Jesus put the early disciples through crises until they discovered that they could not be disciples by means of ordinary human sincerity and devotion. Human earnestness and vowing cannot make a man a disciple of Jesus Christ any more than it can turn him into an angel; a man must receive something, and that is the meaning of being born again. When once a man is struck by his need of the Holy Spirit, God will put the Holy Spirit into his spirit. In regeneration, a man's personal spirit is energised by the Holy Spirit, and the Son of God is formed in him (see Galatians 1:15–16; 4:19). This is the New Testament evangel, and it needs to be re-stated. New birth refers not only to a man's eternal salvation, but to his being of value to God in this order of things; it means infinitely more than being delivered from sin and from hell. The gift of the essential nature of God is made efficacious in us by the entering in of the Holy Spirit; He imparts to us the quickening life of the Son of God, and we are lifted into the domain where Jesus lives (see John 3:5).

Our creeds teach us to believe in the Holy Spirit: the New Testament says we must receive Him. The man who is crumpled up with sin is the one who most quickly comes to realise his need. It takes the upright man a long while to realise that his natural virtues are the remnants of a design which has been broken, and that the only way the design can be fulfilled is by his being made all over again. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." The bedrock in Jesus Christ's kingdom is poverty, not possession; weakness, not strength of will; infirmity of character, not goodness; a sense of absolute poverty, not decisions for Christ. "Blessed are the poor in spirit." That is the entrance, and it takes a long time to bring us to a knowledge of our own poverty. The greatest blessing we ever get from God is to know that we are destitute spiritually.

The Revelation of Christ (Luke 24:16, 31)

The disciples were with Jesus for three years, but they only once discerned Him, in the one intuitive flash recorded in Matthew 16, when it was revealed to Peter Who Jesus was. Our Lord never sent the disciples out on the ground that He had done something for them, but only on the ground that they had seen Him (cf. John 9:35–36; 10:14–18). Mary Magdalene had had seven devils cast out of her, but it was not until Jesus revealed Himself to her after His resurrection that He said—"Go tell My brethren. . . ." The man who has seen Jesus can never be daunted; the man who has only a personal testimony as to what Jesus has done for him may be daunted, but nothing can turn the man who has seen Him; he endures "as seeing Him Who is invisible."

Is my knowledge of Jesus born of inner spiritual perception, or is it only what I have learned by listening to others? Have I something in my life that connects me with the Lord Jesus as my personal Saviour? All spiritual history must have a personal knowledge for its bedrock.

2. In the Days of Our Regeneration

Every man has need of new birth. "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:3). Jesus did not speak these words to a man down and out in sin, but to a sterling, worthy, upright man. The conception of new birth in the New Testament is not a conception of something that springs out of us, but of something that enters into us. Just as our Lord came into human history from without, so He must come into us from without. Our new birth is the birth of the life of the Son of God into our old human nature, and our human nature has to be transfigured by the indwelling life of the Son of God. Have I allowed my personal human life to become a "Bethlehem" for the Son of God? It is not that God patches up my natural virtues, but that I learn by obedience to make room for Jesus Christ to exhibit His disposition in me. It is impossible to imitate the disposition of Jesus. Am I becoming the birthplace of the Son of God (see Luke 1:35), or do I only know the miracle of God's changing grace?

The Realisation of Christ (John 20:28)

The one great characteristic of being born from above (RV mg) is that I know Who Jesus is. It is a discernment; something has happened on the inside, the surgery of events has opened my eyes. Is Jesus Christ a revelation to me, or is He simply an historical character? How are we to get the revelation of Who Jesus is? Very simply. Jesus said that the Holy Spirit would glorify Him, and we can receive the Holy Spirit by asking (see Luke 11:13); then we too shall be in the same category with Peter, and Jesus will say, "Blessed art thou, . . . for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven." We can only know the Father through the Son (see Matthew 11:27), and regeneration means that God puts into my spirit the Spirit of His Son. Ask God on the authority of Jesus to give you the Holy Spirit, and He will do so; but you will never ask until you have struck the bottom board of your need.

When I asked God to give me the Holy Spirit, He did so, and what a transformation took place! Life became heaven on earth after being hell on earth. Never say that Jesus has done in you what you know He has not done. God comes to any man instanter when he asks, and the man will realise the difference in his actual experience; when things happen he is amazed at the change that has been wrought, not by an effort of his will, but by banking on the new power within.

When we receive the Holy Spirit, we receive the quickening life that lifts us into the domain where Jesus lives and we have the revelation of Who He is. The secret of the Christian is that he knows the absolute Deity of Jesus Christ. Has Jesus made any difference to us in our actual life? The essence of Christianity is not a creed or a doctrine, but an illumination that emancipates us—"I see Who Jesus is." It is always a surprise, never an intellectual conception. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, . . . so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

IV

It is the true nature of the Pentecostal experience to produce a congruity between the message and the messenger. The Gospel has to be proclaimed, it has to be commended, it has to be announced, but it has to be adorned. The Holy Ghost will fall on those who hear the word when it has fallen on those who speak the word.

Selby

My spiritual life is based on some word of God made living in me; when I transact on that word, I step into the moral frontier where Jesus works. He says, "Come unto Me"; "Ask, and it shall be given you" commitment is always required. An intellectualist never pushes an issue of will. Our Lord uses the word "believe" in a moral sense, not in an intellectual sense. "Commit yourself to Me." We are to believe in a Person, not to believe for something. "This is the work of God, that ye believe. . . ." Christianity is not a matter of deciding for Christ, nor of making vows, but of receiving something from God on the basis of His promise in Luke 11:13. The reception of the Holy Spirit is the maintained attitude of the believer, Be being filled with the Spirit. The way of His entrance into us is the knowledge of our own poverty.

1. In the Days of His Resurrection

The Promise of the Highest (Luke 24:49–53; Acts 1:4)

The reason the disciples had to tarry until the Day of Pentecost was not merely that they might be fitted to receive the promise: they had to wait until the Lord was glorified historically, for not until in the decrees of God the fullness of time was reached that the Son of God should be glorified and ascend to the right hand of the Father, did the personal Holy Spirit descend (see John 15:26; Acts 2:33). The parenthesis in John 7:39 ("for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified") does not apply to us. The Holy Spirit has been given; Jesus has been glorified; the waiting depends upon our fitness, not upon God's providence. The reception of the Holy Ghost depends entirely upon moral preparation. I must abide in the light which the Holy Ghost sheds and be obedient to the word of God; then when the power of God comes upon such obedience there will be the manifestation of a strong family likeness to Jesus. It is easier to be swayed by emotions than to live a life shot through with the Holy Spirit, a life in which Jesus is glorified. The Holy Spirit is absolutely honest, He indicates the things that are right and the things that are wrong.

"Tarry ye... until..." This is the New Testament conception of fasting, not from food only but from everything, until the particular thing we have been told to expect is fulfilled. Fasting means concentration in order that the purpose of God may be developed in our lives. "... until ye be endued with power from on high." There is only one "power from on high," a holy power that transfigures morality. Never yield to a power unless you know its character. Spiritualism is more than trickery; it has hold of powers that are not characterised by the holy integrity of Jesus.

Jesus Christ gives the power of His own disposition to carry us through if we are willing to obey. That is why He is apparently so merciless to those of us who have received the Holy Spirit, because He makes His demands according to His disposition, not according to our natural disposition. On the basis of the Redemption God expects us to erect characters worthy of the sons of God. He does not expect us to carry on "evangelical capers," but to manifest the life of the Son of God in our mortal flesh.

2. In the Days of Our Regeneration The Sovereign Preference (John 21:15-17)

Our Lord here is not only reinstating Peter, but laying down the basis of the apostolic office, and He bases it on love. "Lovest thou Me more than these?" There is not the slightest strand of delusion left in Peter's mind about himself; he has come to an end of all his self-sufficiency (cf. John 13:37), and the question of his Lord is a revelation to himself as to how much he does love Him-"Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love Thee." Love is the sovereign preference of my person for another person, and when the Holy Spirit is in a man, that other Person is Jesus. The only Lover of the Lord Jesus Christ is the Holy Ghost (see Romans 5:5). When a man has entered into a personal relationship with Jesus by means of the reception of the Holy Spirit, the first characteristic of that relationship is the nourishing of those who believe in Jesus. "Lovest thou Me? . . . Feed My sheep." That is what we are saved for, not to feed our converts, or to promulgate our explanation of things, but to be sent out by Christ, possessed of His Spirit, to feed His sheep. There is no release from that commission.

When we are young in grace we go where we want to go; but Jesus says, "When thou shalt be old, . . . another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not." The reference to Peter's death by crucifixion has a symbolic meaning for the real innerness of being fastened for discipline. It is this stage of spiritual experience that brings us into touch with the spirit of Jesus in that "even Christ pleased not Himself." This is the crisis of discipleship. We do not object to being delivered from sin, but we do not intend to give up the right to ourselves; it is this point that is balked. Jesus will never make us give up our right to ourselves; we must do it of our own deliberate choice. Our Lord always talks about discipleship with an "IF." "If any man will be My disciple"—those are the conditions (see Luke 14:26–27, 33).

"And when He had spoken this, He saith unto him, Follow Me." When three years before Jesus said, "Follow Me," Peter did it easily; the fascination of Jesus was upon him, and he followed without any hesitation. The one being Peter did not know was himself, and he came to the place where he denied Jesus with oaths and curses, and his heart broke. Then he received the Holy Spirit; and again Jesus says, "Follow Me." There is only one lodestar in Peter's life now, the Lord Jesus Christ; he is to follow Jesus now in the submission of his will and his intelligence to Him.

The way Jesus dealt with the disciples is the way He deals with us. He surrounded the disciples with an atmosphere of His own life and put in seed thoughts, that is, He stated His truth, and left it to come to fruition. "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now," i.e. you are not in the domain where you can understand. The disciples did not understand what Jesus taught them in the days of His flesh; but His teaching took on new meaning when once they received the Holy Spirit (see John 14:26; 16:13).

Redemption means that Jesus Christ can give me His own disposition, and all the standards He gives are based on that disposition. Jesus Christ's teaching is for the life He puts in.

The victory that overcomes the world is not human love, but Christian faith; it is not won by the natural heart, but by the re-creating cross.

1. In the Days of His Ascension

The Promise of Authoritative Lordship (Acts 1:8)

There is only one Lord of men, the Lord Iesus Christ, and yet He never insists upon His authority; He never says "Thou shalt"; He takes the patient course with us, as He did with the early disciples. When they received the Holy Spirit, He took absolute control of them, and Jesus Christ's teachings took on new meaning. Naturally we do not pay any attention to what Jesus says unless it is in agreement with our own conceptions; we come to realise that Jesus Christ does not tell outside certain moral frontiers. The teaching of Jesus only begins to apply to us when we have received the disposition that ruled Him. Jesus Christ makes human destiny depend entirely upon a man's relationship to Himself (see John 3:36). According to our Lord, the bedrock of membership in the Christian Church is a personal revelation from God as to Who Jesus is, and a public declaration of it (cf. Matthew 15:15–19).

Our Lord taught His Lordship to His disciples, and said that after He had ascended He would send forth the Holy Spirit, Who would be the Disposer of affairs, both individual and international. We have not made Jesus Christ Lord, we have not given up the right to ourselves to Him, consequently we continually muddle our affairs by our own intuitions and desires for our own ends. Both nations and individuals have tried Christianity and abandoned it, because it has been found too difficult; but no man has ever gone through the crisis of deliberately making Jesus Lord and found Him to be a failure. "God is no respecter of persons." Christianity cuts out a man's personal prejudices. A moral earthquake was required before Peter recognised that God was the same to the crowd outside as to those within (see Acts 10). We are apt to imagine that God will only work according to precedent. The Holy Ghost is world-wide. God says that He will pour out His spirit "upon all flesh" (Joel 2:28). Men who are not the servants of God may have a right vision in view for the human race, a vision of the time when men shall live as brothers. The difference does not lie in the vision, because the source of the vision is the Spirit of God; it lies in the way the vision is to be fulfilled. The servant of God knows that it can be fulfilled in only one way, viz., on the basis of Redemption. "Your sons and your daughters" refers to the men who have no concern about the Redemptive point of view.

^{10.} Peter Taylor Forsyth (1848–1921): British Congregationalist minister and theologian. Chambers read many of Forsyth's books and valued his insights.

The brotherhood of the New Testament is indeed meant to cover the race at last, but it is the brotherhood of Christian faith and love, not of mankind.

Forsyth

All men are brothers, but they are not the brothers of Christ until they have become so by a moral likeness of disposition.

As our Lord ascended He stretched forth His hands; the last the disciples saw of Jesus was His pierced hands. The pierced hands are emblematic of the Atonement. "If any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not." The declaration of the angel was that it is "this same Jesus" Who is to come again, with the marks of the Atonement on Him. The wounded hands and feet are a symbol of the Redeemer Who will come again. There are no marks of Atonement in the "Labour Christ," or the "Socialist Christ," or the "Christian Science Christ."

2. In the Days of Our Apprehension The Sacramental Personality (Ephesians 4:8–12)

Up to the time of the Transfiguration, our Lord had exhibited the normal, perfect life of a Man; after the Transfiguration everything is unfamiliar to us. From the Transfiguration onwards, we are dealing not so much with the life our Lord lived as with the way in which He made it possible for us to enter into His life. On the Mount of Ascension the Transfiguration was completed, and our Lord went back to His primal glory; but He did not go back simply as Son of God: He went back as Son of Man as well as Son of God. That means there is freedom of access now for anyone straight to the very throne of God through the Ascension of the Son of Man. At His Ascension our Lord entered Heaven, and He keeps the door open for humanity to enter.

Our Lord told the disciples that the sign of His Ascension would be that He would send forth "the promise of My Father" upon them (Luke 24:49). The Holy Spirit is not "this same Jesus," He is the Bond-servant of the Son of God, doing in human lives all that Jesus did for them. The Holy Spirit is in complete subjection to the Person of the Redeemer for the purposes of Redemption, as our Lord was in subjection to the Father (see John 5:19; 16:13).

Notice the gifts that the Apostle Paul says Jesus sent after He ascended—viz., apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers—"for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." The test of a preacher or teacher is that as we listen to him we are built up in our faith in Jesus Christ and in our intimacy with Him; otherwise he is not a gift from God. To-day we are apt to test the preacher on the ground of his personality and not by his building up of the saints. "My sheep hear My voice," said Jesus—preaching and teaching that comes from a central relationship to Himself. "Lovest thou Me? . . . Feed My sheep." Once the crisis of identification with Jesus is passed, the characteristic of the life is that we keep open house for the universe. The saint is at home anywhere on Mother Earth; he dare be no longer parochial or denominational; he belongs to no particular crowd, he belongs to Jesus Christ. A saint is a sacramental personality, one through whom the presence of God comes to others (see John 7:37–39).

"Till we all attain . . . unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Ephesians 4:13 RV). The personal Holy Spirit builds us up into the body of Christ. All that Jesus Christ came to do is made ours experimentally by the Holy Spirit, and all His gifts are for the good of the whole body, not for individual exaltation. Individuality must go in order that the personal life may be brought out into fellowship with God. By the baptism of the Holy Ghost we are delivered from the husk of independent individuality, our personality is awakened and brought into communion with God. We too often divorce what the New Testament never divorces. The baptism of the Holy Ghost is not an experience apart from Christ: it is the evidence of the ascended Christ. It is not the baptism of the Holy Ghost that changes men, but the power of the ascended Christ coming into men's lives by the Holy Ghost that changes them. "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me." This great Pentecostal phrase puts the truth for us in unforgettable words. Witnesses not so much of what Jesus Christ can do, but witnesses unto Me, a delight to the heart of Jesus, a satisfaction to Him wherever He places us.

A saint's life is in the hands of God as a bow and arrow in the hands of an archer. God is aiming at something the saint cannot see; He stretches and strains, and every now and again the saint says: "I cannot stand any more." But God does not heed; He goes on stretching until His purpose is in sight, then He lets fly. We are here for God's designs, not for our own. We have to learn that this is the dispensation of the humiliation of the saints. The Christian Church has blundered by not recognising this. In another dispensation the manifestation of the saints will take place, but in this dispensation we are to be disciples of Jesus Christ, not following our own convictions but remaining true to Him.

The great lack to-day is of people who will think along Christian lines; we know a great deal about salvation but we do not go on to explore the "unsearchable riches of Christ." We do not know much about giving up the right to ourselves to Jesus Christ, or about the intense patience of "hanging in" in perfect certainty that what Jesus says is true.

Now Is It Possible

And I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. 1 Thessalonians 5:23

We never can be faultless in this life, but God's Book brings out that we must be blameless, that is, undeserving of censure from God's standpoint, and remember what His standpoint is. He can see into every crook and cranny of my spirit and soul and body, and He demands that I be blameless in all my relationships so that He Himself can see nothing worthy of censure. The revelation is one which shows the supernaturalness of the work of sanctification. It cannot be done by praying, by devoting myself, by believing; it can only be done by the supernatural power of a supernatural God.

1. To Be Blameless in My Self Life?

I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Now where are we? Is there the tiniest element of the conviction of the Spirit of God? If so, yield to Him at once. We must distinguish between the working of our own suspicions and the checking of the Spirit of God who works as quietly and silently as a breeze. As He brings back to our mind our bodily life in this past week in public and in private, in eating and drinking, have we been blameless in our self life? Sanctification means that God keeps my whole spirit and soul and body undeserving of censure in His sight.

Take the soul—how have we been conducting our imaginations, our motives, our fancies, and all the working of our reasoning life; is there anything for the Spirit of God to check and censure? We must not say because we are sanctified we are sure to be right. The seal of sanctification in the practical life is that it is blameless, undeserving of censure before God. Blamelessness is not faultlessness; faultlessness was the condition of the Lord Jesus Christ. We never can be faultless in this life, we are in impaired human bodies; but by sanctification we can be blameless. Our disposition can be supernaturally altered until in the simplicity of life before God the whole limit is holy, and if that is to be done, it must be by the great grace of God. "My peace I give unto you." The Spirit of God works with an amazing zeal on Christ's words.

"I pray God your whole spirit . . . be preserved blameless." Are we spiritually affected before God? Are our petitions our own? Do we put our will into them? Do we borrow our sentiments, or are they really ours? Paul does not say we are to be blameless in our self life in the view of other people. We never shall be; Jesus Christ was not. It was said of His bodily life—"Behold a man gluttonous, and a winebibber," of His soul life—"He . . . is mad," and of His spirit life—"He hath a devil"; but before God He was blameless. Some of us are so concerned about being blameless before men that we are to be blamed before God. The Apostle Paul prays that we may be sanctified and preserved blameless; then it is a matter of absolute indifference what anyone thinks of us, but it is not a matter of indifference what God's Holy Spirit thinks of us.

If we are sanctified by the power of the God of peace, our self life is blameless before Him, there is nothing to hide; and the more we bring our soul under the searchlight of God the more we realise the ineffable comfort of the supernatural work He has done.

Of ourselves we can never be any of the things God says we must be. We can never be blameless by thinking about it, or by praying about it, but only by being sanctified, and that is God's absolute sovereign work of grace. "Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness." Do I believe God can sanctify me? "Christ Jesus... is made unto us... sanctification." Have we the quiet confidence of a child that the life of Jesus Christ can be formed in us until the relationship to God of spirit, soul and body is without blame before Him? It is not the perfection of attainment in thinking, or in bodily life, or in worship, but the perfection of a blameless disposition, nothing in it to censure, and that in the eyes of God who sees everything.

Is it possible to be blameless in our self life? Paul says it is, and the writer to the Hebrews states that it is by sanctification we are made one with Jesus. "For both He that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one" (Hebrews 2:11). That is the glorious work of Jesus Christ in our life. Has He performed His work in us or has He not? Do not ask anybody else about it, the Holy Spirit will show you as clearly as can be. If you are right with God, you would not thank the angel Gabriel for telling you, because you know it. It will be the witness not of a word only, but nothing less than absolute agreement with God's standard when He brings you up against it.

2. To Be Blameless in My Social Life?

That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation [RV], among whom ye shine as lights in the world. (Philippians 2:15)

Am I without blame in relation to my father and mother, to my wife or husband, my brothers and sisters? If the work of Jesus Christ has had its way in us, God Almighty can see nothing to censure when He scrutinises us by His Holy Spirit. The Spirit of God does not work as our minds do, that is, He does not work with suspicion, He works silently and gently as daylight. There will be a check here, an illumination there, a wonderful all-over realisation—"Thank God, He has done it!" There is no need to protest or to profess. We have to be blameless in all our social relationships before God, but that will not mean that our relations will think us blameless! We can always gauge where we are by the teachings of Jesus Christ.

Is it possible to be blameless in our social life? The Apostle Paul says it is, and if we were asked whether we believed God could make us blameless, we would all say, "Yes." Well, has He done it? If God has not sanctified us and made us blameless, there is only one reason why He has not—we do not want Him to. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." We have not to urge God to do it, it is His will; is it our will? Sanctification is the work of the supernatural power of God.

3. To Be Blameless in My Spiritual Life?

According as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love. (Ephesians 1:4)

Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless. (2 Peter 3:14)

Is it possible to be blameless in our spiritual relationship to Almighty God, to Jesus Christ and to the Holy Ghost? It is not only possible, but God's word tells us that that is what God does—"If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, . . . the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7). That is cleansing not from conscious sin only but from infinitely more, it is cleansing to the depths of crystalline purity so that God Himself can see nothing impure. That is the work of the Lord Jesus Christ; to make His work anything less would be blasphemous. If God Almighty cannot do that in your life and mine, we have "followed cunningly devised fables." Unless Jesus Christ can re-make Himself in us, what is the meaning of those thirty years in Nazareth, those three years of His public life? What is the meaning of the Cross of Jesus Christ, of His Resurrection and Ascension, if He cannot cleanse us from all sin? But, bless God, He can! The point is—have we let Him do it? Beware of praising Jesus Christ whilst all the time you cunningly refuse to let the Spirit of God work His salvation efficaciously in your life. Remember, the battle is in the will; whenever we say "I can't," or whenever we are indifferent, it means "I won't." It is better to let Jesus Christ uncover the obstinacy. If there is one point where we say "I won't" then we shall never know His salvation. From the moment that God uncovers a point of obstinacy in us and we refuse to let Him deal with it, we begin to be sceptical, to sneer and watch for defects in the lives of others. But when once we yield to Him entirely, He makes us blameless in our personal life, in our practical life, and in our profound life. It is not done by piety, it is wrought in us by the sovereign grace of God, and we have not the slightest desire to trust in ourselves in any degree, but in Him alone.

"Now unto Him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy" (Jude 24). Can God keep me from stumbling this second? Yes. Can He keep me from sin this second? Yes. Well, that is the whole of life, you cannot live more than a second at a time. If God can keep you blameless this second, He can do it the next. No wonder Jesus Christ said "Let not your heart be troubled"! We do get troubled when we do not remember the amazing power of God.

WILL YOU GO OUT WITHOUT KNOWING?

Abraham... went out, not knowing whither he went. Hebrews 11:8

That is true either of a fool or a faithful soul. One of the hardest lessons to learn is this one that Abraham's life brings out. He went out of all his own ways of looking at things and became a fool in the eyes of the world.

1. Out in Separation unto God

Now the LORD said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto the land that I will shew thee. (Genesis 12:1 RV)

Have you been "out" in that way? If you have, there is no logical statement possible if anyone asks what you are doing. Suppose you are asked why you are in this College, ¹¹ you do not know, and you ought not to know. One of the greatest difficulties in Christian work is that everyone says—"Now what do you expect to do?" Of course you do not know what you are going to do. The only thing you know is that God knows what He is about.

Separation unto God is the first characteristic-separation unto God for food, for clothing, for money, for the next step. It is a "going out" of all your "kindred" and "house" ways of looking at things, a "going out" with nothing in view, but being perfectly certain that you are separated unto God. "Beloved, think it not strange," says Peter, "concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though a strange thing happened unto you: but rejoice. . . . "Whenever you have been faithful to God, you do not know you have been faithful until it is pointed out, and you say— "Why, I never thought of that as a test." It is only on looking back that you find it was. We have continually to revise our attitude towards God and see if it is a "going out," out of everything, trusting in God entirely. It is this attitude that keeps us in perpetual wonder. We know God, and we know He is a supernatural God who works miracles, and our attitude is one of childlike amazement-"I don't know what God is going to do next." A child sees giants and fairies where we see only the most prosaic things. Jesus said "... except ye ... become as little children." Every morning we wake it is to be a "going out," building in confidence on God. "Therefore I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on," take no thought, that is, for anything you did take thought for before you "went out." Before you "went out" you did take thought for your life, for what you should do tomorrow, but now you belong to the crowd Jesus Christ heads, and you seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness.

2. Out in Surrender to God

And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and be thou a blessing. (Genesis 12:2 RV)

It means more to surrender to God for Him to do a big thing than to surrender a big thing to God. We have to surrender our mean¹² little notions for a tremendous revelation that takes our breath away. For instance, am I humble enough to accept the tremendous revelation that God Almighty, the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost will come and make Their abode with me? (see John 14:23). Will I so completely surrender the sense of my own unworthiness that I go out of all my own ways of thinking and let God do exactly as He likes?

Sacrifice in the Bible means that we give to God the best we have; it is the finest form of worship. Sacrifice is not giving up things, but giving to God with joy the best we have. We have dragged down the idea of surrender and of sacrifice, we have taken the life out of the words and made them mean something sad and weary and despicable; in the Bible they mean the very opposite. To go out in surrender to God means the surrendering of the miserable sense of my own un-importance. Am I willing to surrender that mean little sense for the great big idea God has for me? Am I willing to surrender the fact that I am an ignorant, useless, worthless, too-old person? There is more hindrance to God's work because people cling to a sense of unworthiness than because of conceit. "Who am I?" Instantly the trend of the mind is to say-"Oh well, I have not had any education"; "I did not begin soon enough." Am I willing to surrender the whole thing, and go out in surrender to God? to go out of the carnal mind into the spiritual?—"fools for Christ's sake"?

Abraham surrendered himself entirely to the supernatural God. Have you got hold of a supernatural God? not, do you know what God is going to do? You cannot know, but you have faith in Him, and therefore He can do what He likes. Has God been trying to bring into your life the fact that He is supernatural, and have you been asking Him what He is going to do? He will never tell you. God does not tell us what He is going to do, He reveals to you who He is (cf. John 14:12-13). Do you believe in a miracle-working God, and will you go out in surrender to Him? Have you faith in your holiness or in God? faith in your obedience or in God? Have you gone out in surrender to God until you would not be an atom surprised at anything He did? No one is surprised over what God does when once he has faith in Him. Have you a supernatural God, or do you tie Him up by the laws of your own mind?

^{11.} Bible Training College (BTC).

^{12.} mean: as used here, something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

We blunder mostly on the line of surrender, not of conceit, in the continual reminders we give to God that we are small and mean. We are much worse than small and mean: Jesus said—"Without Me ye can do nothing." Let us surrender all thinking about ourselves either for appreciation or depreciation, cast ourselves confidently on God and go out like children.

3. Out in Sanctification for God

So Abram went, as the LORD had spoken unto him. (Genesis 12:4)

Sanctification means going out as God has told us. Are we going along the line God has told us in the things we have been saying and thinking, in letter-writing, to people in difficulty, in prayer? If it is a matter of our own personal sanctification, let us put God between ourselves and the difficulty.

Our Lord did not rebuke His disciples for making mistakes, but for not having faith. The two things that astonished Him were "little faith" and "great faith." Faith is not in what Jesus Christ can do, but in Himself, and anything He can do is less than Himself.

Suppose that God is the God we know Him to be when we are nearest to Him, what an impertinence worry is! Think of the unspeakable marvel of the remaining hours of this day, and think how easily we can shut God right out of His universe by the logic of our own heads, by a trick of our nerves, by remembering the way we have limited Him in the past—banish Him right out, and let the old drudging, carking care come in, until we are a disgrace to the name of Jesus. But once let the attitude be a continual "going out" in dependence on God and the life will have an ineffable charm, which is a satisfaction to Jesus Christ.

We have to learn how to "go out" of everything, out of convictions, out of creeds, out of experiences, out of everything, until so far as our faith is concerned, there is nothing between us and God.

DO YOU CONTINUE TO GO WITH JESUS?

Ye are they which have continued with Me in My temptations. Luke 22:28

We are apt to imagine that our Lord was only tempted once and that then His temptations were over. His temptations went on from the first moment of His conscious life to the last, because His holiness was not the holiness of Almighty God, but the holiness of man, which can only progress by means of the things that go against it (see Hebrews 2:18; 4:15). Are we going with Jesus in His temptations? It is true that He is with us in our temptations, but are we with Him in His? Many of us cease to go with Jesus from the moment we have an experience of what He can do. Like Peter, we have all had moments when Jesus has had to say to us, "What, could ye not watch with Me one hour?"

Are we lazy spiritually because we are so active in God's work? When the problems of the body face us, do we stop going with Jesus? Do we listen to the tempter's voice to put our bodily needs first—"Eat bread, be well, first look after what you are going to wear, and then attend to God"? It is the most subtle voice any Christian ever heard, and whether it come through an archangel or through a man or woman, it is the voice of the devil. Are we going with Jesus along these lines, or are we putting our own needs and the needs of men and social reform first?

Satan does not come on the line of tempting us to sin, but on the line of making us shift our point of view, and only the Spirit of God can detect this as a temptation of the devil. It is the same in missionary enterprise and in all Christian work. The Church is apt not to go with Jesus in His temptations. The temptations of Our Lord in the days of His flesh are the kind of temptations He is subjected to in the temple of our body. Watch when God shifts your circumstances and see whether you are going with Jesus or siding with the world, the flesh and the devil. We wear His badge, but are we going with Him? "Upon this many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him" (RV).

The temptation may be to do some big startling thing in order to prove that we really are the children of God. Satan said to Jesus, "If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down from hence," and to us he says, "If you are saved and sanctified and true to God, everyone you know should be saved too." If that were true, Jesus Christ is wrong in His revelation of God. If by our salvation and right relationship to God, we can be the means of turning our world upside down, what has Jesus Christ been doing all these years? The temptation is to claim that God does something that will prove who we are and what He has done for us. It is a temptation of the devil, and can only be detected as a temptation by the Spirit of God.

Are we taking the pattern and print of our life from some booklet or some band of Christians, or are we continuing with Jesus, standing with Him in every new circumstance of life? It is there that we understand the fellowship of His sufferings, and the broader He makes our life and our mind and circumstances, the more essential does the one thing become—to continue with Him in His temptations.

Have we given God as much "elbow room" in our lives as Our Lord gave Him in His? Have we the one set purpose, which is only born in us by the Son of God, viz., not to do our own will but the will of God? "... that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh." The temptations of Jesus continued all His earthly life, and they will continue all the time of His life in us. Are we going with Jesus in the life we are living now?

The temptation may be to compromise with evil—"Don't be so tremendously strong against sin and in denouncing the pleasures and interests that make up this life as it is, and the whole world will be at your feet"! Jesus Christ was tempted like His brethren (see Hebrews 4:15), not like men who are not born again. When we are tempted as He was, do we continue to go with Him? What are we like where nobody sees? Have we a place in our heart and mind and life where there is always open communion between ourselves and God so that we can detect the voice of the devil when he comes as "an angel of light"? Every temptation of the devil is full of the most amazing wisdom and the understanding of every problem that ever stretched before men's view. Satan's kingdom is based on wisdom, along the lines he advocates lies success, and men recognise this. Jesus Christ is not on the line of success but on the spiritual line, the holy, practical line and no other. If men and women do not continue to go with Jesus, they will begin to teach what undermines the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

"Ye are they which have continued with Me in My temptations." Are we compromising in the tiniest degree in mental conception with forces that do not continue to go with Jesus, or are we maintaining the attitude of Jesus Christ all through? Are we departing from Jesus in the slightest way in connection with the world to which we belong? Have we this past week choked the Son of God in our life by imperceptible degrees? Have the demands of the life of the Son of God in us been a bit too spiritual, too strong, too sternly holy, too sternly unworldly, too pressing, too narrow, too much in the eye of God only? or do we say "Yes, Lord, I'll go with Thee all the way"?

I have made my choice for ever, I will walk with Christ my Lord.

Watch where Jesus went. The one dominant note in His life was to do His Father's will. His is not the way of wisdom or of success, but the way of faithfulness.

No matter what your circumstances may be, don't try to shield yourself from things God is bringing into your life. We have the idea sometimes that we ought to shield ourselves from some of the circumstances God brings round us. Never! God engineers circumstances; we have to see that we face them abiding continually with Him in His temptations. They are His temptations, they are not temptations to us, but to the Son of God in us. If you talk about the subtle temptations that come to you as a child of God to those who have not the life of the Son of God, they will laugh at you. We continually side with the prince of this world and have to be brought back to a spiritual stock-taking. Are we going with Jesus in His temptations in our bodies? Are we going with Him in the temptations of our mental and moral life, and of our spiritual life, abiding true to God all through? That is the one concern Jesus Christ has about us.

"Ye are they which have continued with Me in My temptations." Do you continue to go with Jesus? The way lies through Gethsemane, through the city gate, outside the camp; the way lies alone, and the way lies until there is no trace of a footstep left, only the voice—"Follow Me."

"As He is, even so are we in this world" (RV). Where is Jesus in this world? There is no outward manifestation of Jesus, and we are to be as He is, hidden, true, and absolutely loyal to God. Temptations do not come in fits and starts, they abide all the time, and to continue with Jesus in them is the way the holiness of our life is going to be to the glory of God.

The Graciousness of Uncertainty

Foreword to the First Edition

Do you know the clear water of a mountain stream running through the shadowy places of the trees and of the brown and green mosses? Here and there is a crystal pool, hidden beneath a rock—still it seems, like a mirror—while yet all the lovely light and life of the running stream passes through it continually. Such a shadowy living pool is my thought of the life of the beloved student of the B.T.C. whom we used to call "Lambie." ¹³

Her life was spent in the quiet places, but it held the tragic sorrows and the deep joys of those who really are alive as human men and women created of God.

Bodily suffering and weakness were often her portion (due to a fall from her horse while still a young girl keen of all outdoor pursuits), but never her conquerors: sacrifice and duties wilfully undertaken and shared with the ones she loved best, instead of a self-chosen and deeply desired career elsewhere—these were hers. The countryside loved and trusted her, and took her teaching and her preaching to their hearts and consciences because they saw her life from day to day, and it was so very really that "outward and visible sign of the inward and spiritual grace" that the sacramental out-giving by word and prayer was to men a real and valid thing. "Greatly beloved"—might be written of her. And to those who enjoyed her inner friendship that friendship must be one of the indestructible and eternal things because in their lives and in hers it is hid with Christ in God.

One who loved her said in my hearing how beautiful her spirit would be in its manifestation when this mortal shall have put on immortality, and on those occasions when one caught it glancing out of her eyes I realised the truth of what he said.

The current of her inner life ran swiftly, controlled as well as indwelt by the Holy Spirit. She was trusted to speak often in the Name of Jesus Christ our Lord—for she never lowered His standard of truth, nor failed to set the personal knowledge of Him as the One essential goal for men and women in their life on earth. She preached "Jesus Christ and Him crucified" in its deep individual and racial implications. Thank God for her life. It is a gladness to think of her.

THE GRACIOUSNESS OF UNCERTAINTY

It is not yet made manifest what we shall be. 1 John 3:2 (RV)

We are apt to look upon uncertainty as a bad thing, because we are all too mathematical and common sense. We imagine we have to reach an end; so we have, but a particular end is easily reached, and is not of the nature of spiritual life. The nature of spiritual life is that we are certain in our uncertainty, consequently we do not make our "nests" anywhere spiritually. Immediately we make a "nest" out of an organisation or a creed or a belief, we come across the biggest of all calamities, the fact that all certainty brings death. G. K. Chesterton, that insurgent writer, pronounces all certainties "dead certainties." Immediately I become certain, something dies. For instance, when I become certain that my baby is no longer a baby but a little girl, the baby is dead. When I become certain that my single life is ended in married life, something is dead—"that white funeral of the single life." In the realm of belief, whenever I become certain of my creeds, I kill the life of God in my soul, because I cease to believe ^{13. &}quot;Lambie": Ruby Lamb.

^{14.} Katherine Ashe (1865–1956): convert to Christ through Oswald Chambers' influence in Ireland in 1908. Miss Ashe, as she was always known, came to the BTC as a student and teacher, then went to Egypt in 1916 for ministry to soldiers through the YMCA.

^{15. &}quot;white funeral of the single life": phrase from Tennyson's poem "To H.R.H. Princess Beatrice"; to Chambers, it meant a passage from one stage of life to another—leaving the past behind and moving into the future; he often used it to mean death to self and a complete surrender to God.

in God and believe in my belief instead. All through the Bible the realm of the uncertain is the realm of joy and delight; the certainty of belief brings distress. Certainty of God means uncertainty in life; while certainty in belief makes us uncertain of God. Certainty is the mark of the common-sense life; gracious uncertainty is the mark of the spiritual life, and they must both go together. Mathematics is the rule of reason and common sense, but faith and hope is the rule of the spiritual. "It is not yet made manifest what we shall be"—we are gloriously uncertain of the next step, but we are certain of God. Immediately we abandon to God and do the duty that lies nearest, He packs our lives with surprises all the time; whereas if we become the advocates of a set creed something dies. All certainty brings death to something. When we have a certain belief, we kill God in our lives, because we do not believe Him, we believe our beliefs about Him and do what Job's friends did-bring God and human life to the standard of our beliefs and not to the standard of God. The helplessness of professional religion is that there is no room for surprise, we tie God up in His laws and in denominational doctrines and orders of services, consequently we do not see God at all. The average man is inarticulate about his belief, and the curious thing is he does not connect his belief in goodness and truth and justice with Jesus Christ and the churches because the churches have misrepresented Jesus Christ. We cannot "corner" God or spiritual life, to think we can is the curse of denominational beliefwe have all the "stock" and no one can have it except in our way. Jesus Christ says, "Except ye . . . become as little children. . . . " A little child is certain of its parents, but uncertain about everything else, therefore it lives a perfectly delightful healthy life.

1. The Surprise of Real Life (John 3:8)

These words convey our Lord's mind, but we rarely pay any attention to His mind. He states there emphatically that the Spirit of God works in incalculable ways; we cannot say that He will work through certain denominations and channels. In times of revival people say they started in answer to prayer, but this is questionable. Revivals start entirely by the sheer surprise of the life of God. The life of God springs out on the right hand and on the left, we cannot calculate over God, and that is the immense joy of Christian life. "... so is everyone that is born of the Spirit." To be certain of God means that we are delightfully uncertain in all our ways, we do not know what a day may bring forth. That is generally said with a sigh of sadness, but it should be rather an expression of breathless unexpectedness. It is exactly the state of mind we should be in spiritually, a state of expectant wonder, like a child. When we are certain of God we always live in this delightful uncertainty; whereas if we are certain of our beliefs we become eventenored people who never expect to see God anywhere.

(a) The Frontiers of Death (John 6:53)

This is not a sad statement, but a joyful one. Whenever we think we can get the life of God by obedience or prayer or some kind of discipline, we are wrong. We must realise the frontiers of death, that there is no more chance of our entering into the life of God than a mineral has of entering the vegetable kingdom; we can only enter into the Kingdom of God if God will stoop down and lift us up. That is exactly what Jesus Christ promises to do. The bedrock of spiritual life as our Lord taught is poverty—"Blessed are the poor in spirit," not, "Blessed are the strong-willed, or the prayerful or the consecrated," but, "Blessed is the man who knows he is weak." When we get there the surprise of God's life may come at any time. It does not come by believing, that is a misrepresentation. Belief means committing myself to the uncertainty of God. God may spring forth at any minute in His own way in us. It is a benediction to recognise the frontiers of death—to recognise there is nothing at all of the nature of God in ourselves, then the life of God may spring forth at any minute in us. Mathematical common sense makes us think that when we reach the spiritual life we are certain. Up to the time of entering the spiritual life we are certain; afterwards we are gloriously uncertain. We do not know how the life will emerge or what it is going to be. Every now and again God leaves us behind the frontiers of death (see Isaiah 50:10-11); He deals with us on the death side and the life side all the time. The death side is the most beneficial, for when we realise we are dead and absolutely no use, we are unable to begin to do anything, then the surprise of God's real life comes to us suddenly, and the extraordinary surprise of real life is there.

(b) The Foundation of Discernment (John 3:3)

"Ye must be born again." That is a statement of foundation fact. We cannot be born again of ourselves any more than we can be born naturally. We cannot say we will be born again, we will believe in Jesus Christ, we will receive the Spirit; we simply cannot do it. Jesus says, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, . . . so is everyone that is born of the Spirit." Immediately we get into the attitude of knowing that we have no life in us, that we cannot re-make ourselves, then God comes in with His surprise of life. The foundation of the spiritual kingdom is, "Blessed are the poor in spirit." When we are born from above (RV mg) the first characteristic is that we begin to discern—"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." After we are born again, we begin to discern, not in thrilling experiences, but we begin to see differently and the surprise of the spiritual life comes in all around.

(c) The Fact of Direction (1 John 2:27)

The Spirit of God directs us when we remain true to the life of God in us. The danger with all of us is to want to direct one another; we are not certain that young lives ought to be left alone, we do not believe God can manage them. "I believe God can direct me, because I am so wise, but you are certain to go wrong; I must instruct you." The fact of direction in spiritual life does not come from any human element at all, it comes entirely in the surprising manner of the life of God.

2. The Spontaneity of Real Love (1 Corinthians 13:4–8)

Love is spontaneous, that is, not premeditated, it springs up in extraordinary ways. There is nothing mathematically certain in Paul's category of love. We cannot say, "I am going to think no evil," "I am going to believe all things"; the characteristic of love is the spontaneity of the whole thing. In everything to do with the life of God in us we never discern its nature till it is past. In looking back we find there was extraordinary disinterestedness in a particular emotion. We do not set in front of us the statements of Jesus Christ as standards, we receive the life of God and live up to the standard of His teaching without knowing it, and on looking back we are the most amazed beings on earth, which is the evidence of the spontaneity of real love being there.

(a) The Springs of Love (John 17:26)

The springs of love are in God, that means love cannot be found anywhere else. It is absurd for us to try and find the love of God in our hearts naturally, it is not there any more than the life of Jesus Christ is there. Love and life are in God and in Jesus Christ and in the Holy Spirit Whom God gives to us, not because we merit Him, but according to His own particular graciousness. We cannot say in the abstract, "I am going to love my enemies," because naturally we hate them; but when we have a real actual enemy if the love of God is in us, we find we do not hate him. The point is that the springs of love are in the Holy Spirit, not in us. We cannot order the Holy Spirit to come into us; we believe in God, He does the rest. If I try to engineer ways in which to show I love my wife, it is a certain sign I am beginning not to love her. If we try to show how much we love God it is a sure sign we do not love Him; if we love Him the evidence is absolutely spontaneous, it does not need to be worked out, it comes naturally, and if asked why we did certain things we cannot say why, they were done spontaneously according to the nature of love. Love can be simulated, we can affect it and pretend we have it; but when love is real it is spontaneous, and so is spirituality. The danger is lest common sense comes in and says, "Well, now suppose I was in that condition"—then it is all up. We cannot suppose ourselves in any condition we have never been in, therefore life is one of splendid uncertainty, we are certain only of God, and in any circumstances we are in the source of all these characteristics is the life of God in us; we cannot work them up by prayer or obedience; they are of the nature of God. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." We have to keep ourselves from being engrossed in the evil of present certainty. There are any number of things in the common-sense life which are apt to overcrowd everything else, but in spite of them all the real life of God springs up in this spontaneity of love, the springs of which are in the Holy Spirit Who is given unto us.

(b) The Strength of Life (Ephesians 3:17–19)

"That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith," not by feeling or reckoning, but by faith. The strength of life is not in the certainty that we can do the thing, but in the perfect certainty that God will. We are certain only of the One Whom we are trusting. The strength of our life lies in knowing that our strength is in God. "And to know the love of Christ"—its breadth, and length, and depth, and height, we cannot get out of it anywhere. When we know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, it means that we are free from anxiety, free from carefulness, so that during the twenty-four hours of the day we do what we ought to do all the time, with the strength of life bubbling up with real spontaneous joy. How am I measuring the strength of God in my life? The greatness of God's power to me a saint is measured by the power God manifested when He raised Jesus from the dead (Ephesians 1:19).

(c) The Supremacy of Loyalty (1 Corinthians 13:13)

Greater than faith, greater than hope, greater than anything we can mention is love (RV), which is the very nature of God, and the test of the reality of our spiritual life is abandon to God, the actual condition of gracious uncertainty. Such a life can be either the most arrant piece of humbug, or the expression of the life of God, consequently a saint and a hypocrite may often look one and the same. In our actual circumstances we are based on the God Whom we love, not on our belief in anything. It is significant that Jesus Christ never says anywhere what modern evangelists say—"Believe certain things about Jesus Christ." Jesus says, "Believe also in Me"—"leave the whole thing to Me, you have nothing to do with anything but your actual life, the thing that lies nearest. It is gloriously uncertain how I will come in, but I will come." The greatest thing in our lives is to remain loyal to Jesus, and this will evidence itself as His love at work in us.

3. The Suddenness of Real Light (Luke 24:31)

Light is the symbol of intuitive discernment both intellectual and spiritual. Immediately we see Jesus Christ, He becomes a possession of our real life. "The inheritance of the saints in light." When once we perceive Him by the suddenness of spiritual light, we see Him in common-sense things.

(a) The Unexpected Issues (Isaiah 9:1-5)

The characteristic of this passage is the unexpectedness of the happenings. "Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing." We never dreamed that such a thing would happen to us! This attitude of mind frequently comes by the way of a calamity. Many a man has had his soul restored in the valley of the shadow, not in the green pastures. There are clouds we fear to enter, but on the inside of those clouds is the suddenness of real light. We get the evidence of this on the threshold of real sorrow and difficulty, there is the suddenness of real light and a discernment of things that was unsought, which we could get in no other way.

(b) The Unrealised Interpretations (Job 42:5-6)

"Now mine eye seeth Thee, wherefore I abhor my words [RV mg]," i.e. "I abhor the things I was certain of, I abhor myself for being so obstinately certain that I knew; but now I see." In looking at Job's circumstances the curious thing is, he asks conundrum after conundrum, and instead of their being solved, the providence of God hurls more problems at him, till at last Job says, "Now I see." He did not perceive anything in the logical line, he simply found that the interpretation lay with God. Job discerned that truth is never gained by intellect, but by moral conscientiousness. Truth is always a vision that arises in the basis of the moral nature, never in the intellect. Immediately we are rightly related to God in moral relationships, instantly we perceive. We can always tell the difference between a man with a keen intellectual discernment and the man with moral discernment; the latter always appeals to the conscience, the former simply convinces the mind and adds no power to the moral life.

(c) The Unearned Increment (Jude 24)

Our lives are enriched with things we never earned. The unearned increment is God, and the popular phrase is right—"If I do my bit, God will see it is all right." But if the statement is made to mean that God will count it as redemption, it is a devilish lie which no man in his own mind ever thought of. What the average man means is that if we do our bit, God will see to the rest. Of course He will. The basis of things is Redemption, which is finished, the point a man has to realise is that God has saved him, and what he has to do is to get into the relationship of actual salvation and be of worth to Jesus Christ here and now. Men are not going to be redeemed, they are redeemed; Redemption is complete. That is a revelation, not something we get at by thinking, and unless we grant that Redemption is the basis of human life, we will come up against problems for which we can find no way out. It is God Who redeems man; once that realisation dawns, the sense of gratitude springs up; and man becomes of use to God in practical life.

The Moral Foundations of Life

A Series of Talks on the Ethical Principles of the Christian Life

Publication History

- As articles: in the Bible Training Course (BTC) Monthly Journal,² August 1933 September 1934.
- As a book: The Moral Foundations of Life was first published as a book in 1936.

One of Chambers' primary goals as a teacher was to challenge Christians to think. An equally important objective was to encourage believers to act. In Chambers' mind, the brain and the body were not enemies but allies in the effort to live a life that glorified God.

Oswald's wide reading can be seen throughout these lectures. The writers quoted range from the well-known to the now-obscure. When possible, the sources of these quotes are identified in a footnote.

Chambers' breadth of knowledge combined with his depth of biblical understanding combined to produce a potent mixture of Christ-centered theology and original thinking. His students didn't always agree with his conclusions, but it was virtually impossible for them to sit under Chambers' teaching and think only, "That was nice."

2. The Bible Training Course Monthly Journal was published from 1932 to 1952 by Mrs. Chambers, with help from David Lambert.

^{1.} The Bible Training College (BTC) was a residential school near Clapham Common in southwest London. It was sponsored by the League of Prayer and operated from 1911 until it closed in July 1915 because of World War I. Oswald Chambers was principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers, his wife, was lady superintendent.

FOREWORD

I see sometimes in London the preparations being made for the sure foundations of one of the great modern buildings to be erected there. Far below the surface-level men and machines toil patiently on work which soon will be hidden, but which alone will make the towering building secure. These Talks on Moral Foundations take us to that depth below the surface of our everyday life where the foundations are laid for enduring sainthood. They deal profoundly with such matters as Habit, Thinking, the Will, Behaviour. The subject of Christian ethical obligation is of paramount importance in the thought life of to-day. The very basis of our religion, our moral and spiritual standing, is being challenged. Here will be found a valiant answer to the secular, sceptical and lawless questionings of our time.

The writer was one of God's saints; and also one of those sane Christian thinkers who see into the deep places of our strange, perplexing yet alluring human life. Already the chapters have proved their worth as articles in the B.T.C. Journal. Now in this compact form they will serve for hours of instruction in righteousness as they illumine these dim regions of the soul in the blazing light of Holy Scripture.

THE WILL IN DISCIPLESHIP

Luke 9:61-62

Beware of thinking of will as a faculty. Will simply means the whole nature active. We talk about people having a weak will or a strong will, it is a misleading idea. When we speak of a man having a weak will, we mean he is without any impelling passion, he is the creature of every dominating influence; with good people he is good, with bad people he is bad, not because he is a hypocrite, but because he has no ruling passion, and any strong personality knits him into shape. Will is the essential element in God's creation of a man. I cannot give up my will: I must exercise it.

The Want To

Lord, I will follow Thee . . .

Want is a conscious tendency towards a particular end. My wants take shape when something awakens my personal life. An invalid if left alone has no wants, he wants neither to live nor to die; but when he sees a person full of bounding physical health, a want to be like him is instantly awakened. Whatever awakens my person awakens a want. In this incident the presence of Jesus awakened a conscious want to follow Him, a want to be like Him.

(a) The Want in Conscience

The first appeal was to conscience, and could be expressed in this way: "Follow Him, He is Thy supreme Lord." The presentation of Jesus Christ always awakens that desire, the presentation of abstract ideals never does. You can present morality, good principles, the duty of loving your neighbour, and never arouse a man's conscience to want anything; but when you present Jesus Christ, instantly there is a dumb awakening; a want to be what He would like me to be. It is not conviction of sin, but an awakening out of the sleep of indifference into a want.

There are some things that are without meaning for us. For instance, to be told that God will give us the Holy Spirit if we ask Him, may be a dead proposition; but when we come in contact with a person filled with the Spirit of God we instantly awaken to a want. Or again, if you tell half a dozen clean-living, upright, sterling men that God so loved them that He gave His Son to die for them, only their good breeding will keep them from being amused—"Why should Jesus Christ die for me"? It is not a living proposition to them, not in the sphere of their life at all. Their morality is well within their own grasp, they are clean living and upright, all that can be desired; they will never be awakened in that way; but present them with Jesus Christ, or with a life that is like His life, and instantly there will awaken in them a want they were not conscious of before. That is why Jesus said, "If I had not come . . . , they had not had sin: but now they have no cloke for their sin." You can never argue anyone into the Kingdom of heaven, you cannot argue anyone any where. The only result of arguing is to prove to your own mind that you are right and the other fellow wrong. You cannot argue for truth; but immediately Incarnate Truth is presented, a want awakens in the soul which only God can meet. Conscience is that faculty of the spirit which fits itself on to the highest a man knows; and when the light of Jesus Christ is thrown on what is regarded as the highest, conscience records exactly and the reason is startled and amazed (cf. Acts 26:9).

(b) The Want in Heart

The presence of Jesus awakened a want in this man's heart. Heart is the centre of all the vital activities of body, soul and spirit. Never think of the heart in the way the old psychology thought of the will, viz., as a compartment, a kind of hat-box into which you put all your convictions and dole them out occasionally when you lift the lid. The heart is the centre of a man's personality. "For out of the heart proceed . . . ," said our Lord. You can never tell from a man's life to date what he is going to want next, because the real element of want is not logical. A man's reasoning is based on something more than reason, there is always an incalculable element.

(c) The Want in Desire

The want in conscience and in heart urges a man to immediate action: "Lord, I will follow Thee." It was the finest, profoundest element in the man that made him say it. In his conscience, in the deep depths of his personality, there was awakened the desire to follow Jesus and to be like Him. The measure of a man's want is seen in the nature of the power that awakened it. No man can stand in front of Jesus Christ and say, "I want to make money." He can stand before a successful commercial man and find the desire awakened in him to be like him and make money. This man was in contact with the Prince of persons, the Lord Jesus Christ, consequently the deep desire of his heart was for the very highest, "Lord, I want to follow Thee; and I not only want to, but I will."

The Wish To

A wish is often of an abstract character, directed towards some single element into a concrete event, without reference to accompanying circumstances.

MacKenzie⁴

When I see Jesus Christ I simply want to be what He wants me to be. A wish is more definite than a want, which is inarticulate, something I am conscious of and that is all. Contact with a personality will always harden our wishing into a clear initiative along certain lines. For example, when a boy sees a soldier he wishes to be a soldier; when he sees an engineer he wishes to be an engineer, and so on. We have to select the domain of our wishes. At a time of religious awakening when Jesus Christ is in the ascendant and I come into close contact with Him, I wish to be a Christian. I have never known conviction of sin, never seen the need for the removal of the wrong disposition and identification with Jesus, but I wish to be like Him. The "wish to" simply sees the end of the desire and takes no account of the means to that end.

(a) Re-sensitised Sympathy

Our wishes move in various domains. We cannot hold ourselves in a handful for we are never sure what is going to happen in the domain of our wishes. We may have all our wishes in a certain domain and be perfectly master of them, with everything clear and simple; then a bereavement comes, and instantly the domain of our wishing is completely altered, we are suddenly put into sensitive sympathy with things we never thought about before. When Jesus Christ is in the ascendant the wish moves in the domain in which He lives, the sensitiveness of our wishing answers to Him in a general softening of our whole nature. We are not conscious of wishing to possess any particular virtue, of wishing to be this or that; we simply wish to be in perfect sympathy with Him and His purposes. The only point of rest is for a man to have his sympathies sensitised by Jesus Christ, because the basis of our nature is always open to let us into some unsuspected "hell" until we have been dominated by Our Lord. When Our Lord speaks of discipleship He catalogues the other loves (see Luke 14:26), and says that our love to Him must be the dominant love of all, because any of those other loves may be a trap-door to something entirely removed from God's purposes.

(b) Reflection of Sublimity

Abstract principles have no more power to lift a man than a man has to lift himself; but any man, no matter how sunk in sin, will answer to Jesus Christ when He is presented. To tell a man who is down and out to get up and do the right thing can never help him; but when once Jesus Christ is presented to him there is a reflected wish to be what Jesus wants him to be. It is appalling how many books and sermons there are to-day that simply present abstract truths. Jesus Christ appeals to the highest and the lowest, to the rich young ruler type of man, and to the man whom no ethics or moral principles can touch. Always keep Jesus Christ in the front; He says Himself He is to be there. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me."

(c) Recession of Second Thought Lord, I will follow Thee; but . . .

The wish ought to be followed by immediate obedience. I must take the wish and translate it into resolution and then into action; if I don't, the wish will translate itself into a corrupting power in my life instead of a redeeming power. This principle holds good in the matter of emotions. A sentimentalist is one who delights to have high and devout emotions stirred whilst reading in an arm-chair, or in a prayer meeting, but he never translates his emotions into action. Consequently a sentimentalist is usually callous, selfcentred and selfish, because the emotions he likes to have stirred do not cost him anything, and when he comes across the same things in the domain where things are real and not sentimental, the revenge comes along the line of selfishness and meanness, which is always the aftermath of an unfulfilled emotion. The higher the emotion, the purer the desire, the viler is the revenge in the moral character unless the emotion is worked out on its right level. It is better never to have seen the light, better never to wish to be what you are not than to have the desire awakened and never to have resolved it into action. Always do something along the line of the emotion that has been stirred; if you do not, it will corrupt that which was good before. The curbing of the outward action revenges itself in a meaner⁵ disposition on the inside, and the higher the religious emotion, the more appalling is the reaction unless it is worked out on its own level. There are those whose language and habits are coarse, yet they are not vile in their inner disposition, and suddenly they manifest graces and beauties of character that amaze you. They answer to the call given by Jesus Christ, while others of the Pharisee type do not answer (cf. Matthew 21:28–32). Jesus Christ said it was impossible for the man who is self-centred in his particular impression of himself to believe in Him (John 5:44).

^{4.} John Stuart MacKenzie (1860–1935) was a British philosopher; he was the author of A Manual of Ethics, the source of this quote.

^{5.} The word mean as used here refers to something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

The Will To

... And Jesus said unto him, no man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

The will to, means I must act; it is not sufficient to want to, to wish to, I must act on the wish instantly, no matter what it costs. Whenever the conviction of God's Spirit comes there is the softening of the whole nature to obey; but if the obedience is not instant there will come a metallic hardening and a corrupting of the guidance of God.

(a) The Inspired Instinct

Whenever you stand in the presence of Jesus Christ, as He is portrayed in the Scriptures and made real to you by the Holy Spirit, the instincts of your heart will always be inspired: let them lead. We read that when Jesus preached His first public sermon, all the people "wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth"; their hearts were inspired as they listened to Him, their instincts turned in the right direction; then their prejudices came in the way and they closed down the witness of their hearts, broke up the service and tried to fling Him over the brow of the hill (Luke 4:16–30). Always let the instinct that rules you in the presence of Jesus lead. That is why it is so necessary in an evangelistic meeting to push people to an issue of will. It is a terrible thing to awaken people up to a certain point and never give them the chance to act in the same atmosphere. If I preach a particularly searching discourse and never give the people a chance to act according to their inspired instincts at the time, their blood is on my head before God. If I make the issue clear and give them the opportunity to act, I clear my soul from their blood, whether they answer or not. The devil's counterfeit for this is wanting to see how many people we can get out to the penitent form. As preachers and teachers we have to bring people to the point of doing something.

(b) The Inverting Impulse

"No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back..." Never postpone a moral decision. Second thoughts in moral matters are always deflections. Give as many second thoughts as you like to matters of prudence, but in the presence of God never think twice—act. Our Lord puts it very clearly in Matthew 5:23–24, when you are at the altar, i.e., in the presence of God, and your heart answers to the conviction of the Spirit of God, you know exactly what you must do: First go. There is no mid way. If you say "I don't mind going half-way, but I was not altogether in the wrong," God's touch is gone instantly. The slightest revision of what I know God is telling me to do is the first element in the damnation of my character in that particular (see John 3:19). Immediately I see what God wants me to do when I am in His presence, I must do it and care nothing for the consequences. "Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father." The reply of Jesus sounds harsh, but remember the man's meaning was that he must stay with his father till he died. It was a point of view that put Jesus Christ right out of court. So with the rich young ruler, the wish to be all that Jesus wanted him to be awoke as soon as he came in contact with Him, but when it came to the first step of the will in acting it out, to become a mere conscious man, separated from all his wealth, dead fundamentally to the whole thing, then his countenance fell and he went away sorrowful. It is better never to have had the light than to refuse to obey it.

(c) The Intrinsic Incapacity

". . . is fit for the kingdom of God." "Not fit" does not mean, not good enough, it means out of the machine. We can never earn our place in the Kingdom of God by doing anything. Immediately we obey the instinct born in us of God's Spirit we are fitted into the Kingdom of God. Always act according to the wish that is born in you by the Spirit of God. Take the initiative to obey, never wobble spiritually. "Wobble" means that we bring in other considerations that ought never to bemean⁶ the presence of God, because those considerations mean that Jesus has not thought things out properly; He has forgotten I have a duty to my father and mother; that I have this thing the matter with my body; He has forgotten my circumstances. All these things are unconscious blasphemy against the Wisdom of God. We must always get to the point of acting on the want and the wish born in us when we are in the presence of Jesus Christ.

^{6.} bemean: debase; lower.

DIRECTION OF THE WILL

John 7:17

(CF. JOHN 5:19, 30)

The Will to Do

If any man willeth to do His will . . . (RV)

In John 7:17, our Lord is not so much laying down the principle that obedience is the gateway to knowledge, as specifically stating that the only way to know whether or not His teaching is of God is conditioned by obedience. The only way to know is to will to do His will.

(a) Think

The only way to progress in spiritual matters is to think voluntarily. A great amount of stuff we call thinking is not thinking, but merely reverie or meditation. Thinking is a voluntary effort, and in the initial stages it is never easy; voluntary effort must be made to keep the mind on some particular line. The teaching of some of the Higher Christian Life movements⁷ is apt to put thinking out of it altogether. According to that teaching we have to be semi-swooning invalids in the power of God, letting the Spirit of God take us as so much driftwood, and all our impulses and dreams are taken to be the will of God. When we become spiritual we have to exercise the power of thinking to a greater degree than ever before. We starve our mind as Christians by not thinking. If we are going to succeed in the natural world we must think voluntarily about things, and it is the same in the spiritual world. In order to think we must stop wool-gathering, check our impulses and set the mind on one line.

(b) Think Habitually

Habit is a mechanical process of which we have ceased to become conscious. The basis of habit is always physical. A habit forms a pathway in the material stuff of the brain, and as we persist in thinking along a certain line we hand over a tremendous amount to the machine and do things without thinking. Habit becomes second nature. "Habit a second nature! Habit is ten times nature!" (Duke of Wellington). For instance, when you begin to use a muscle in a particular way, it hurts badly, but if you keep on using that muscle judiciously it will get beyond hurting until you are able to use it with mechanical precision. The same thing is true in regard to thinking. It is a difficult matter to begin with. If thinking gives you a headache, it is a sign that you have brains. The brain is not ethereal or mystical, it is purely a machine. The thing that is not mechanical is the power of personality which we call thought. At first we find our brains do not work well, they go in jerks, we are bothered with associated ideas; but as we persist in thinking along a particular line our brain becomes the ally of our personality. Not only is our body capable of becoming our best friend, but the places where the body has become used to thinking become a strong assistance also. We infect the places we live in by our ruling habit. If we have made our body the ally of our personality, everything works together to aid our body wherever it is placed. People complain about their circumstances because they have not begun to make their body an ally.

(c) Think Habitually to Do

Our Lord says, in effect, that if any man will habitually think, he will come to know where His teaching comes from. The only way to prove spiritual truth is by experiment. Are we willing to set our mind determinedly to work out habitually what we think is God's will? We talk about justice and right and wrong, are we prepared to act according to what we think? Are we prepared to act according to the justice and the right which we believe to be the character of God? If we are, we shall have no difficulty in deciding whether or not the teaching of Jesus Christ comes from God.

The first moment of thinking alters our life. If for one moment we have discerned the truth, we can never be the same again; we may ignore it, or forget it, but it will not forget us. Truth once discerned goes down into the subconscious mind, but it will jump up in a most awkward way when we least expect it. In the matter of intercession, when we pray for another the Spirit of God works in the unconscious domain of that one's being about which we know nothing, and about which the one we pray for knows nothing, and after a while the conscious life of the one prayed for begins to show signs of softening and unrest, of enquiry and a desire to know something. It seems stupid to think that if we pray all that will happen, but remember to Whom we pray; we pray to a Being Who understands the unconscious depths of a man's personality, and He has told us to pray. The great Master of the human spirit said "Greater works than these shall he do. . . . And whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do." This is true also in preaching the word. We may see no result in our congregation, but if we have presented the truth and anyone has seen it for one second, he can never be the same again, a new element has come into his life. It is essential to remember this and not to estimate the success of preaching by immediate results.

Our Lord was always stern with disbelief, i.e., scepticism, because there is always a moral twist about scepticism. Never place an agnostic in the same category as a sceptic. An agnostic is one who says, "There is more than I know, but I have not found anyone who can tell me about it." Jesus is never stern with that attitude; but He is stern with the man who objects to a certain way of getting at the truth because he does not like that way. If a man refuses to try the way Jesus Christ puts before him, he ceases from that second to be an honest doubter; he must try it and put Jesus Christ's teaching to the proof. A man cannot say he is an honest intellectual doubter if he refuses one way of getting at the truth; that is mental immorality.

The Way to Know

he shall know of the teaching . . . (RV)

If I find it hard to be a Christian it is a sign that I need the awakening of new birth. Only a spiritually ignorant person tries to be a Christian. Study the life of Jesus Christ and see what Christianity means, and you will find you cannot be a Christian by trying; you must be born into the life before you can live it. There are a great many people trying to be Christians; they pray and long and fast and consecrate, but it is nothing but imitation, it has no life in it. Immediately we have life imparted to us by the Holy Spirit, we realise that it is the very life that was in Jesus that is born into us; we are loosened from the old bondage and find that we can fulfil all the expectations of the life which has been imparted to us. It is a strenuous life of obedience to God, and God has given us bodies through which to work out the life, and circumstances to react against in order to prove its reality.

(a) Intention

Beware of praying about an intention—act. To pray about what we know we should do is to piously push the whole thing overboard and think no more about it. Every intention must be acted out now, not presently, otherwise it will be stamped out. When the intention of an honest soul is grasped by the Spirit of God he will know whether the teaching Jesus gives is of God or not. Am I going to think, and think habitually, and act on what I think, so that the will of God may be performed in me until I know Who Jesus is, and that His teaching is the teaching of God? To know that the teaching of Jesus is of God means that it must be obeyed. It may be difficult to begin with, but the difficulty will become a joy.

(b) Intention and Insight

Intentions are born of listening to others. Whenever we obey an intention, insight into either good or bad is sure to follow. If our intention is in agreement with God and we act on it, we get insight into Who God is. The discernment of right and wrong intentions depends on how we think. There is a spasmodic type of life which comes from never really thinking about things, it is at the mercy of every stray intention. Someone makes an appeal for the Hindoo or the Chinese, and they say, "Oh yes, I will go and preach the gospel there," and they do it in intention. Then someone else says the best thing is to work in the slums, instantly their intention is to work there. Then another person says the best thing is to study in a Bible school, and they do that in intention. They are creatures of impulse, there is no real thinking along God's line, no acting on their intention. If you are sufficiently strong-minded you can generate any number of intentions in people and make them think anything you like; if they are not in the habit of thinking for themselves you can always sway them. The power of an evangelist over men and women who do not think is a dangerous thing. That is why it is so perilous to tell people to yield. Don't yield! Keep as stiff a neck as ever you had, and yield to nothing and to no one, unless you know it is the Lord Jesus Christ to Whom you are yielding. Once you go on the yielding line, on the surrendering line and you do not know that it is the Lord Jesus Who is calling for the yielding, you will be caught up by super natural powers that will wield you whether you like it or not. Woe be to you, if, when Jesus has asked us to yield to Him, you refuse; but be sure it is Jesus Christ to Whom you yield, and His demands are tremendous.

The insight that relates us to God arises from purity of heart, not from clearness of intellect. All the education under heaven will never give a man insight into Jesus Christ's teaching, only one thing will, and that is a pure heart, i.e., intentions that go along the right line. Education and scholarship may enable a man to put things well, but they will never give him insight. Insight only comes from a pure-heartedness in working out the will of God. That is why the subject of Divine guidance is so mysterious. "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind," says Paul, (that is what makes the thinker right), "that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." You cannot teach another what is the will of God. A knowledge of the will of God comes only by insight into God through acting on the right intention.

(c) Intention and Insight into Instruction

Studying our Lord's teaching will not profit us unless we intend to obey what we know is the immediate present duty. As we listen to certain interpretations of Jesus Christ's statements we do not feel warm to them, though we do not know what is wrong. Whenever the Spirit of God works in our conscious life it is like an intuition—I don't know how I know, but I know. The Holy Spirit witnesses only to His own nature, not to our reason. Jesus said "My sheep hear My voice," not because it is argued to them, but because they have His Spirit. There are statements of Jesus which mean nothing to us just now because we have not been brought into the place where we need to understand them. When we are brought there, the Holy Spirit will bring back a particular word, and as we intend to obey He gives us the insight into it. The Spirit of God never allows us to face spiritual subjects by spiritual curiosity first. We cannot say, "I am going to study the subject of Sanctification or of the Second Coming," we shall make about as much headway as a steamer in a fog. Insight into the instruction of Jesus depends upon our intention to obey what we know to be the will of God. If we have some doctrine or some end of our own to serve, we shall always find difficulty.

The Weighing of Doctrine

. . . whether it be of God, or whether I speak from Myself. (RV)

(a) Discernment

The reason the Incarnation and the Atonement are not credible to some people is that their disposition is unregenerated. A man may adopt the dogma of the Incarnation and the Atonement upon a basis of authority while his heart is unchanged, with the result that sooner or later the accumulated pride of unregenerate years will rise in revolt and secretly protest that it is incredible. That was the case with the men to whom Jesus is speaking here, and it is the case of hundreds who accept creeds but refuse to act on their belief; the consequence is they fling their creeds overboard and ignore the central test of Christianity, viz., Who is Jesus Christ to me?

The Atonement of our Lord never contradicts human reason, it contradicts the logic of human intellect that has never partaken of regeneration. The understanding of the Atonement depends not on Bible study, not on praying, but on spiritual growth. As we "grow up into Him in all things" we get moral understanding of the mystery of Redemption and understand why Jesus said "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." The Spirit of God brings a man to the place where he begins to discern with his heart, not with his head.

Jesus says we shall know, i.e., discern, whether His teaching is of God or not when we do what we know to be His will. We discern according to our disposition. There are moments in life when the little thing matters more than anything else, times when a critical situation depends upon our attitude of mind to another person. If a man is hesitating between obeying and not obeying God, the tiniest thing contrary to obedience is quite sufficient to swing the pendulum right away from the discernment of Jesus Christ and of God. "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee . . . first be reconciled. . . ." Distempers of mind make all the difference in the discernment of Jesus Christ's teaching. Have I a distempered view about any man or woman on earth? If I have, there is a great deal of Jesus Christ's teaching I do not want to listen to, then I shall never discern His teaching. Once let me obey God and I shall discern that I have no right to an attitude of mind to anyone other than His attitude. If I am determined to know the teaching of Jesus Christ at all costs, I must act on the intention that is stirred in me to do God's will, however humiliating it may be; and if I do, I shall discern.

(b) Discernment of Inspiration

Our Lord's teaching is God-breathed. What makes the difference between the attitude of a spiritual Christian to the teaching of Jesus and that of an unspiritual person? An unspiritual person takes the statements of Jesus to pieces as he would a man's statements, he "annulleth Jesus" (1 John 4:3 RV mg), dissolves Him by analysis; a spiritual Christian confesses "that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh." The basis of membership in the early Church was discernment of Who Jesus is by the revelation of God (see Matthew 16:17–18). All through the test is, Do I know Who Jesus Christ is; do I know that His teaching is of God?

The mystery of the Bible is that its inspiration was direct from God (2 Peter 1:21). To believe our Lord's consciousness about Himself commits me to accept Him as God's last endless Word. That does not mean that God is not still speaking, but it does mean that God is saying nothing different from the Final Word, Jesus Christ; all God says expounds that Word.

(c) Discernment of Inspiration of Christ's Teaching Is Jesus Christ's teaching God-breathed to me? There is an intention that seeks God's blessings without obeying Jesus Christ's teaching. We are apt to say with sanctimonious piety, "Yes, Jesus Christ's teaching is of God"; but how do we measure up to it? Do we intend to think about it and act on it? Beware of tampering with the springs of your life when it comes to the teaching of Jesus.

Purity of heart, not subtlety of intellect, is the place of understanding. The Spirit of God alone understands the things of God, let Him indwell, and slowly and surely the great revelation facts of the Atonement begin to be comprehended. The Mind of God as revealed in the Incarnation becomes slowly and surely the mind of the spiritual Christian.

FREEDOM OF THE WILL

Psalm 27:4-6

The subject of human free will is apt to be either understated or overstated. No man has the power to act an act of pure, unadulterated, free will. God is the only Being Who can act with absolute free will. The Bible reveals that man is free to choose, but it nowhere teaches that man is fundamentally free. The freedom man has is not that of power but of choice, consequently he is accountable for choosing the course he takes. For instance, we can choose whether or not we will accept the proposition of salvation which God puts before us; whether or not we will let God rule our lives; but we have not the power to do exactly what we like. This is easily demonstrated when we think of the number of vows that are made every New Year and so quickly broken.

Man is free to choose in so far as no human force can constrain him against his will. Pope⁸ is often misquoted; he did not say, "Convince a man against his will, he is of the same opinion still," but "compel a man against his will, he is of the same opinion still." God has so constituted man that it is not possible to convince him against his will; you can compel him and crush him, but you cannot convince him against his will. Only God could exercise constraint over a man which would compel him to do what in the moment of doing it is not his own will; but that God steadily refuses to do. The reason man is not free is that within his personality there is a disposition which has been allowed to enslave his will, the disposition of sin. Man's destiny is determined by his disposition; he cannot alter his disposition, but he can choose to let God alter it. Jesus said, "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin"; but He also said, "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed," i.e. free in essence. We are only free when the Son sets us free; but we are free to choose whether or not we will be made free. In the experience of regeneration a man takes the step of choosing to let God alter his disposition. When the Holy Spirit comes into a man, He brings His own generating will power and makes a man free in will. Will simply means the whole nature active, and when the Holy Spirit comes in and energises a man's will, he is able to do what he never could do before, viz., he is able to do God's will (Philippians 2:13).

The Universe of the Will

Thus not only our morality but our religion, so far as the latter is deliberate, depend on the effort which we can make.

James⁹

Some propositions are alive to us and we want to work at them; other propositions are dead, they do not appeal to us at all. We have to be brought out of one universe of the will into another universe where propositions which were dead become alive. You can never tell when a proposition which up to a certain stage has been dead may suddenly become of living interest.

(a) The Live Quest of the Will

One thing have I desired of the LORD; . . . that I may dwell in the house of the LORD all the days of my life. . . .

The depths of personality are hidden from our sight; we do not know anything beyond the threshold of consciousness, God is the only One Who knows. When we try to go beyond our conscious life into the depths of our personality, we do not know where we are, our only refuge is the 139th Psalm—"Search me, O God, and know my heart." Whatever rouses your will is an indication of the bias of your personality. The Bible reveals that in a man's personality there is a bias that makes him choose not the proposition of godliness, but the proposition of ungodliness. This bias is not a matter of man's deliberate choice, it is in his personality when he is born. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world . . . " (Romans 5:12). The proposition that appeals to a healthy once-born man is that of self-realisation—"I want to develop myself." If you bring before him the proposition that he should be saved and give up his right to himself to Jesus Christ, it will be a dead proposition, without meaning for him; but let conviction of sin, or disaster, or bereavement, or any of the great surprises of God touch him, and instantly the proposition takes on a totally new aspect and he will want to act on it. Jesus Christ always puts the emphasis on the effort of obedience, there must be a live quest of the will. "If you want to know My doctrine, whether it is of God or of Myself, do My will," says Jesus (see John 7:17). The truth of God is only revealed to us by obedience.

^{8.} Alexander Pope (1688-1744) was an English poet.

^{9.} William James (1842–1910) was an American philosopher, psychologist, and teacher.

(b) The Lure of the Voluntary Quest to behold the beauty of the LORD...

When once the will is roused it always has a definite end in view, an end in the nature of unity. Always distinguish between will and impulse. An impulse has no end in view and must be curbed, not obeyed. Will is the whole effort of a man consciously awake with the definite end of unity in view, which means that body, soul and spirit are in absolute harmony. This end of satisfaction offers a great fascination. The characteristic of a moral hell is satisfaction, no end in view, perfectly satisfied. Moral sickness is a perilous time, it is the condition to which sin brings us, and it accounts for the unutterable disappointments in life, there is no lure, no aim, no quest, no end in view. The characteristic of the spiritual life is the delight of discerning more and more clearly the end God has in view for us. Jesus did not say that eternal life was satisfaction, but something infinitely grander: "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee." The demand for satisfaction is God-given (cf. Matthew 5:6), but it must be satisfaction in the highest.

(c) The Liberty to Question . . . and to enquire in His temple.

When once a man has been awakened from sin to salvation, the only propositions that are alive to his will are the propositions of God. There is an insatiable inquiry after God's commands, and to every command there is a desire to act in obedience. Recall your own experience and see how true that is. The things that used to be ends in view have not only ceased to be ends, they have ceased to have any interest for you at all; they have become tasteless. This is the way God enables us to be fundamentally dead to the things of the world while we live amongst them. Jesus Christ's outward life was densely immersed in the things of the world, yet He was inwardly disconnected; the one irresistible purpose of His life was to do the will of His Father.

If I am in right relationship to God there comes this delightful liberty of enquiring in His temple. It is not to be a Sabbath day spent in a temple, but the whole of the life, every domain of body, soul and spirit, is to be lived there. The dead set of the will is towards one end only, viz., to do the will of God. Jesus said, "My sheep hear My voice." When Jesus has not spoken there is an unutterable dullness all through, our spirit does not witness to what is being said. When once that fine balance of discernment is tampered with we give an opportunity to Satan; but if it is kept in perfect accord with God's word, He will guard. Jesus said that the Holy Spirit would bring His word to our remembrance (John 14:26). The Holy Spirit does not bring text after text until we are utterly confused; He simply brings back with the greatest of ease the words which we need in the particular circumstances we are in. Then comes in the use of the will, will I obey the word which has been brought back to our remembrance? The battle comes when we begin to debate instead of obeying. We have to obey and leave all consequences with God.

The Utmost Uses of the Will

Character exists only in so far as unity and continuity of conscious life exists, and manifests itself in systematic consistency of conduct.

Stout 10

Will is the very essence of personality, and in the Bible will is always associated with intelligence and knowledge and desire. The will of a saint is not to be spent in dissipation in spiritual luxuries, but in concentration upon God.

(a) The Quietness of Strength

For in the time of trouble He shall hide me in His pavilion . . .

God gives us the energy of an impregnable position, the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, and we have to make the effort to be strong from that position. We have not to work up to that position, but to work from it with the full energy of will. It is impossible to live according to our Lord's teaching without this secret of position. We do not get to the heavenly places by struggling, or aspiring, or consecration; God lifts us there, and if we will work from that position, He keeps us in His pavilion. No wonder the life of a saint appears such an unmitigated puzzle to rational human beings without the Spirit of God. It seems so ridiculous and so conceited to say that God Almighty is our Father and that He is looking after our affairs; but looked at from the position in which Jesus places us we find it is a marvellous revelation of truth.

(b) The Quarters of Security He shall set me up upon a rock . . .

In our spiritual life God does not provide pinnacles on which we stand like spiritual acrobats; He provides tablelands of easy and delightful security. Recall the conception you had of holiness before you stood by the grace of God where you do to-day, it was the conception of a breathless standing on a pinnacle for a second at a time, but never with the thought of being able to live there; but when the Holy Spirit brought you there, you found it was not a pinnacle, but a plateau, a broad way, where the provision of strength and peace comes all the time, a much easier place to live than lower down.

The security of the position into which God brings His saints is such that the life is maintained without ecstasy. There is no place for ecstasy and manifestations in a normal healthy spiritual life. The emotions that are beyond the control of the will are a sign that there is something not in the secure position, something undisciplined, untrained. When we are in the quarters of security we have to will our observation of the things of God, and of the way in which He works. There are things we are obliged to observe, such as fireworks; but God uses for the training of His children the things which we have to will to observe, viz., trees and grass and sparrows.

Never allow the idea of conscious straining effort when you think of the exercise of the will spiritually. The straining effort comes in when we forget the great lines laid down by God. If you are a worker for God, Satan will try to wear you out to the last cell; but if you know God's grace you will be supernaturally recuperated physically. Recall how often you have been surprised, you thought you would have been exhausted after certain services, and instead, you became recreated whilst taking them. In this place of security there is no such thing as weariness without a corresponding recuperation if we maintain a right relationship with God.

(c) The Quality of Supremacy

... And now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me.

The supremacy over our old enemies is accounted for by the fact that God makes them our subjects. What things used to be your enemies? Stodginess of head, laziness of body or spirit, the whole vocabulary of "I can'ts." When you live in the right place these things are made your subjects; the things that used to hinder your life with God become subject to you by His power. The very things that used to upset you now minister to you in an extraordinary way by reason of the spiritual supremacy God gives you over them. The life of a saint reveals a quietness at the heart of things, there is something firm and dependable, because the Lord is the strength of the life.

HABIT

In the conduct of life, habits count for more than maxims, because habit is a living maxim, become flesh and instinct. To reform one's maxims is nothing; it is but to change the title of the book. To learn new habits is everything for it is to reach the substance of life. Life is but a tissue of habits.

Amiel 11

Man's Soul the Scene of Habit

Plasticity, then, in the wide sense of the word, means the possession of a structure weak enough to yield to influences, but strong enough not to yield all at once.

James

Beware of dividing man up into body, soul and spirit: man is body, soul and spirit. Soul has no entity, it depends entirely upon the body, and yet there is a subtle spiritual element in it. Soul is the rational expression of my personal spirit in my body, the way I reason and think and work. Habits are formed in the soul, not in the spirit, and they are formed in the soul by means of the body. Jesus Christ told His disciples that they must lose their soul, i.e., their way of reasoning and looking at things, and begin to estimate from an entirely different standpoint. For a while a born-again soul is inarticulate, it has no expression; the equilibrium has been upset by the incoming of a totally new spirit into the human spirit, and the reasoning faculties are disturbed. "In your patience possess ye your souls," says Jesus; that is, the new way of looking at things must be acquired with patience. On the basis of His Redemption Jesus Christ claims that He can put into my personal spirit His own heredity, Holy Spirit; then I have to form character on the basis of that new disposition. God will do everything I cannot do, but He will do nothing He has constructed me to do.

"Our virtues are habits as well as our vices." God does not give us our habits, but He holds us responsible, in proportion, for the habits we form. For instance, God does not hold a child born in the slums responsible in the same degree for its habits as He does a child born in a Christian home. The fact remains, however, that we form our own habits. God gives us a new disposition, but He gives us nothing in the shape of character. We have to work out what God works in, and the way we work it out is by the mechanical process of habit.

(a) The Mental Phase (Philippians 4:8–9; 2 Corinthians 10:5)

By the mental phase is meant, thinking that can be stated in words. There is a great deal of thinking that cannot be expressed in words, such as that which is stirred by susceptibility to the beauties of Nature, or art or music; that is spirit not yet made rational in soul. We are responsible for our habits of thinking, and Paul in these passages is dealing with the phase of mental life in which a man can choose his thinking and is able to express it in words. The old idea that we cannot help evil thoughts has become so ingrained in our minds that most of us accept it as a fact. But if it is true, then Paul is talking nonsense when he tells us to choose our thinking, to think only on those things that are true, and honourable, and just, and pure.

We may take as an example of mental habit that of answering letters on the day on which they are received. Here what is habitual and automatic is not the process of writing the reply, but the writing of the reply on the same day on which the letter was received.

Stout

The point is that we make a mental decision to do a certain thing, and the habit of doing it grows until it becomes absolutely mechanical. Remember, then, we can and we must choose our thinking, and the whole discipline of our mental life is to form the habit of right thinking. It is not done by praying, it is done only by strenuous determination, and it is never easy to begin with.

(b) The Moral Phase (Romans 6:11–19; 2 Peter 1:5–8)

The Spirit of God through the Apostles bases on the mechanism that is alike in everyone of us, the mechanism of habit. Paul says, "present your members as servants to righteousness" (RV); Peter says, "adding on your part..." (RV). There is something we have to do. Man's soul is "weak enough to yield to influences, but strong enough not to yield all at once." The phrase "the freedom of the will" is a catch phrase that has more of error than of truth in it. We are all so made that we can yield to an influence that is brought to bear upon us, and if we keep ourselves long enough under right influences, slowly and surely we shall find that we can form habits that will develop us along the line of those influences.

The peculiarity of the moral habits, contradistinguishing them from the intellectual acquisitions, is the presence of two hostile powers, one to be gradually raised into the ascendant over the other. It is necessary, above all things, in such a situation, never to lose a battle. Every gain on the wrong side undoes the effect of many conquests on the right.

Bain¹²

The idea is that of winding up a ball of wool. Let the ball drop, and infinitely more is undone than was wound in the same time. This is true of moral and spiritual habits. If once you allow the victory of a wrong thing in you, it is a long way back again to get readjusted. We talk on the moral and spiritual line as if God were punishing us, but He is not, it is because of the way God has constructed man's nature that "the way of transgressors is hard."

When once we begin the life with God on the moral line we must keep strictly to it. In the beginning the Holy Spirit will check us in doing a great many things that may be perfectly right for everyone else, but not right for us in the stage we are in. We have to narrow ourselves to one line, and keep ourselves narrow until our soul has gained the moral habit. The maimed life is always the characteristic to begin with (see Matthew 5:29–30), but our Lord's statements embrace the whole of the spiritual life from beginning to end, and in Matthew 5:48 (RV) He says, "Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect."

Never go contrary to your conscience, no matter how absurd it may be in the eyes of others. Conscience is to be our law in conduct, but Paul says it is not his own conscience, but the conscience of his weak brother that is his guide (1 Corinthians 8:9–13).

The characteristic of a Christian is that he has the right not to insist on his rights. That will mean that I refuse to do certain things because they would cause my brother to stumble. To me the restrictions may be absurd and narrow-minded, I can do the things without any harm; but Paul's argument is that he reserves the right to suffer the loss of all things rather than put an occasion to fall in his brother's way. The Holy Ghost gives us the power to forgo our rights. It is the application of the Sermon on the Mount in practical life; if we are Jesus Christ's disciples we shall always do more than our duty, always do something equivalent to going "the second mile."

These are some of the moral habits we ought to form.

(c) The Mystical Phase (John 15:4)

Our Lord did not say, "Ask God that you may abide in Me"; He said "Abide in Me," it is something we have to do. Abiding in Jesus embraces physical, mental and moral phases as well as spiritual. How am I going to acquire the spiritual habit of union with Christ in God's sight? First of all by putting my body into the condition where I can think about it. We are so extraordinarily fussy that we won't give ourselves one minute before God to think, and unless we do we shall never form the habit of abiding. We must get alone in secret and think, screw our minds down and not allow them to wool-gather. Difficult? Of course it is difficult to begin with, but if we persevere we shall soon take in all the straying parts of our mental life, and in a crisis we shall be able to draw on the fact that we are one with Jesus in God's sight.

One must first learn, unmoved, looking neither to the right nor left, to walk firmly on the strait and narrow path, before one can begin "to make one's self over again." He who every day makes a fresh resolve is like one who, arriving at the edge of the ditch he is to leap, forever stops and returns for a fresh run. Without unbroken advance there is no such thing as accumulation of the ethical forces possible, and to make this possible, and to exercise us and habituate us in it, is the sovereign blessing of regular work.

Bahnser

In the mystical life the majority of us are hopeless wool gatherers, we have never learned to brood on such subjects as "abiding in Christ." We have to form the habit of abiding until we come into the relationship with God where we rely upon Him almost unconsciously in every particular.

Mechanical Scientific Side of Habit

Man is born with a tendency to do more things than he has ready-made arrangements for in his nerve-centres.

Tames

(a) The Physical Side (Job 14:19)

In physical nature there is something akin to habit. Flowing water hollows out for itself a channel which grows broader and deeper, and after having ceased to flow for a time, it will resume again the path traced before. It is never as easy to fold a piece of paper the first time as after, for after the first time it folds naturally. The process of habit runs all through physical nature, and our brain is physical. When once we understand the bodily machine with which we have to work out what God works in, we find that our body becomes the greatest ally of our spiritual life. The difference between a sentimental Christian and a sanctified saint is just here. The sanctified saint is one who has disciplined the body into perfect obedience to the dictates of the Spirit of God, consequently his body does with the greatest of ease whatever God wants him to do. The sentimental type of Christian is the sighing, tear-flowing, beginning-over-again Christian who always has to go to prayer meetings, always has to be stirred up, or to be soothed and put in bandages, because he has never formed the habit of obedience to the Spirit of God. Our spiritual life does not grow in spite of the body, but because of the body. "Of the earth, earthy," is man's glory, not his shame; and it is in the "earth, earthy" that the full regenerating work of Jesus Christ has its ultimate reach.

(b) The Physiological Side (Mark 9:21)

Every nervous affection makes a groove in the brain. Dr. Carpenter, ¹³ the great physiologist, suffered from habitual neuralgia all the days of his life, the only time he was free from it was when he was lecturing. He said himself it was simply because the nerves had got into the habit. What a medical man aims at in the case of nervous affections is to forcibly cut short the attacks so as to give the other physical forces possession of the field. Nervous trouble can be cured by sudden calamity, by something that stops the whole nervous system and starts it again in another way; and it can be cured suddenly by the power of God. In the case of the demoniac boy our Lord did not deal with him on the medical line but on the super natural line. There was no gradual, "take a little holiday," but a sudden and emphatic breaking off, simply because our Lord recognised the way God has made the nervous system. No power on earth can touch a nervous trouble if I have submitted to it for a long time, but God can touch it if I will let Him. I may pray for ever for it to be altered but it never will be until I am willing to obey. The arresting may be terrific, a tremendous break and upset, but if I will let God have His way He will deal with it.

^{13.} William Benjamin Carpenter (1813-85).

(c) The Psychical Side (Philippians 2:12–13)

"Man is born with a tendency to do more things than he has ready-made arrangements for in his nerve centres." For instance, we are not born with a readymade habit of dressing ourselves, we have to form that habit. Apply that spiritually; when we are born again, God does not give us a fully fledged series of holy habits, we have to make those habits. It is the application of the theological statement that we have to transform innocence into holiness by a series of moral choices. Ask yourself how much time you have taken up asking God that you may not do the things you do. He will never answer, you have simply not to do them. Every time God speaks, there is something we must obey. We should do well to revise what we pray about. Some of the things we pray about are as absurd as if we prayed, "O Lord, take me out of this room," and then refused to go. We have to revise and see whether we intelligently understand what God has done for us; if He has given us the Holy Spirit, then we can do everything He asks us to do. If our body has been the slave of wrong habits physically, mentally and morally, we must get hold of a power big enough to re-make our habits and that power lies in the word "Regeneration." "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature," that means this marvellous thing—that I may be loosened from every wrong habit I have formed if only I will obey the Spirit of God. Immediately I do obey, I find I can begin to form new habits in accordance with God's commands, and prove physically, mentally and morally that I am a new creation (RV mg). That is why it is so necessary to receive the Holy Spirit, then when God gives a command it is sufficient to know He has told me to do it and I find I can do it. Frequently God has to say to us-"Say no more to Me on this matter; don't everlastingly cry to Me about this thing, do it yourself, keep your forces together and go forward." God is for you, the Spirit of God is in you, and every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, shall be yours.

Beware of the luxury of spiritual emotions unless you are prepared to work them out. God does the unseen, but we have to do the seen.

DUST AND DIVINITY

Genesis 2:7

[N.B.—ALL DIVISIONS OF THE HUMAN PERSONALITY ARE ARBITRARY.]

Genesis 2:7 reveals that man is made up of dust and Divinity. This means that in practical psychology we must always make allowance for the incalculable. You cannot exhaust man's nature by examining his "dust" qualities, nor by describing him in terms of poetic sentiment, for after you have described as much as you can, there is always an incalculable element to be taken into account. There is more than we know, therefore we cannot deal with ourselves as machines. One part of ourselves must be dealt with as a machine, and the more we deal with it as a machine the better; but to try and sum up a man as a machine only is to miss out the bigger part; or to say that man is altogether a spiritual being without anything mechanical in him is to miss out the incalculable element that cannot be summed up. These two things, dust and Divinity, make up man. That he is made of the dust is man's glory, not his shame; it has been the scene of his shame, but it was designed to be his glory.

A certain type of mind gets impatient when one talks about the incalculable element in man, and says it is nonsense to talk of man being a spiritual personality, man is nothing more than an animal. That outlook is prevalent to-day, it is called "healthy-mindedness"; it is rather blatant ignorance. We all say what is obvious until we are plunged into the deeps; but when a man is profoundly moved he instantly finds himself beyond the reach of help or comfort from the obvious. The obvious becomes trivial, it is not what his heart wants. What he needs is something that can minister to the incalculable element. When once real thought begins to trouble the mind, the disturbance goes on throughout the whole personality until the right centre is gained for thought. In the spiritual domain when a man is convicted of sin, he realises that there are deeper depths in himself than he has ever known, and the things that can be clearly explained become utterly shallow, there is no guidance whatever in them. We begin by thinking we know all about ourselves, but when a man gets a dose of "the plague of his own heart," it upsets all his thinking. Immediately man begins to examine himself, he finds he is inscrutable; there are possibilities below the threshold of his life which no one knows but God.

The Explorer of the Will (Philippians 2:11-13)

Psalm 139 is the classic in all literature concerning a man's personality. In this Psalm the tendency in man which makes him want to examine himself takes the form of prayer, "O Lord, explore me." The Psalmist implies: "Thou art the God of the early mornings and late at nights, the God of the mountains and the fathomless deep; but, my God, my soul has farther horizons than the early mornings, deeper darkness than the nights of earth; higher heights than any mountain peaks, greater depths than any sea in nature; search me out, and see if there be any way of grief in me." The Psalmist realised that God knew all about the vast universe outside him, but there was some thing more mysterious to him than the universe outside, and that was the mystery of his own heart, and he asks the great Creator to come and search him. God does not search a man without he knows it, and it is a marvellous moment in a man's life when he is explored by the Spirit of God. The great mystic work of the Holy Spirit is in the dim regions of a man's personality where he cannot go. God Himself is the explorer of man's will, and this is how He searches us.

"It is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure." "Will" is not a faculty; "will" is the whole man active, and the springs of will go deeper down than we can go. Paul says it is God who works in us to enable us to will, that is, the Holy Spirit, Who is the expression of God, will come into our spirit and energise our will so that we have power to actively will to do according to the standards of Jesus Christ. The Holy Spirit does not become our spirit; He invades our spirit and lifts our personality into a right relationship with God, and that means we can begin now to work out what God has worked in. The Holy Spirit enables us to fulfil all the commands of God, and we are without excuse for not fulfilling them. Absolute almighty ability is packed into our spirit, and to say "can't," if we have received the Holy Spirit, is unconscious blasphemy. We have not sufficiently realised the practical moral aspect of the Atonement in our lives. "If we walk in the light, as He is in the light"—then comes the amazing revelation, that "the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." Cleansing from all sin does not mean conscious deliverance from sin only, it means infinitely more than we are conscious of. The part we are conscious of is walking in the light; cleansing from all sin means something infinitely profounder, it means cleansing from all sin in the sight of God. God never bases any of His work on our consciousness.

"Do you mean to tell me that God can search me to the inmost recesses of my dreams, my inmost motives, and find nothing to blame? That God Almighty can bring the winnowing fan of His Spirit and search out my thoughts and imaginations, and find nothing to blame?" Who can stand before God and say, "My hands are clean, my heart is pure"? Who can climb that "hill of the LORD"? No man under heaven, saving the man who has been readjusted at the Cross of Christ. That man can stand before the scrutiny of God and know with a knowledge that passeth knowledge that the work of God's Son in him passes the scrutiny of God. No soul ever gets there saving by the sovereign grace of God through the Atonement.

The Expression of the Conscience (Acts 24:16)

Conscience is that faculty in a man that attaches itself to the highest he knows and tells him what the highest he knows demands that he does. Never be caught away with the phrase that conscience is the voice of God. If it were, it would be the most contradictory voice human ears ever listened to. Conscience is the eye of the soul and it looks out either towards God or towards what it regards as the highest, and the way conscience records is dependent entirely upon the light thrown on God (cf. Acts 26:9 and 24:16).

Take the case of a man who has had a great spiritual crisis and has entered into the experience of sanctification, his conscience is now looking towards God in the light that Jesus Christ throws upon God, what has he to do? He has to walk in that light and begin to get his bodily machine into harmony with what his conscience records, that is, he has to walk now not in the light of his convictions, but in a purer sterner light, the light of the Lord. It is something he alone can do; God cannot do it for him. Supposing we say we believe God can give us the Holy Spirit and can energise our wills "to do of His good pleasure," instantly we see that, conscience records that we must obey. Any deflection in obedience to God is a sin. We have been used to doing things in this body in accordance with the old disposition-my right to myself, my selfinterest; now we have to be regulated from a different standpoint. You did use the body as a servant to the wrong disposition, says Paul, see that you use it now as a servant to the right disposition (Romans 6:19). It is never done suddenly. Salvation is sudden, but the working out of salvation in our life is never sudden. It is moment by moment, here a little and there a little. The Holy Spirit educates us down to the scruple. 14

Paul says he exercised himself to have "a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men." We have to endeavour to obey our conscience in our life of faith before God and in our life of fact before men. That does not mean we must not do things men will not like. Our conduct with men is measured by the way God has dealt with us, not by what men think of us. Our conscience will show us how God has dealt with us, "forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." That is the standard that is "void of offence toward God, and toward men." Many of us are feeble Christians because we do not heed this standard. God works in the great incalculable element of our personality; we have to work out what He works in and bring it out into expression in our bodily life. It has not sufficiently entered into us that in our practical life we must do what God says we must do, not try to do it, but do it, and the reason we can do it is that it is God Who works in us to will.

^{14.} down to the scruple: to the smallest item.

The Expectation of the Heart (Psalms 27:14; 42:5)

"Heart" is simply another term for "personality." The Bible never speaks of the heart as the seat of the affections. "Heart" is best understood if we simply say "me" (cf. Romans 10:10). When once expectation is killed out of the heart, we can scarcely walk, the feet become as lead, the very life and power goes, the nerves and everything begin to fall into decay. The true nature of a man's heart according to the Bible is that of expectation and hope. It is the heart that is strengthened by God (cf. Psalm 73:26), and Jesus Christ said that He came to "bind up the brokenhearted." The marvel of the indwelling Spirit of God is that He can give heart to a despairing man. There is a difference between the human sympathy we give to a discouraged or brokenhearted man and what the Holy Spirit will do for him. We may sit down beside a brokenhearted man and pour out a flow of sympathy, and say how sorry we are for him, and tell him of other people with broken hearts; but all that only makes him more submissive to being brokenhearted. When our Lord sympathises with the heart broken by sin or sorrow, He binds it up and makes it a new heart, and the expectation of that heart ever after is from God.

The great discipline of our life spiritually is to bring other people into the realm of shadows. When God has brought other people into the realm of shadows, He can bring us into the relationship we need to be in towards Himself. The expectation of the heart must be based on this certainty: "in all the world there is none but Thee, my God, there is none but Thee." Until the human heart rests there, every other relationship in life is precarious and will end in heart-break. There is only one Being Who can satisfy the last aching abyss of the human heart, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ. The whole history of envy and cruelty in human relationships is summed up in the demand for infinite satisfaction from human hearts, we will never get it, and we are apt to become cruel, vindictive, bitter, and often criminal. When once the heart is right with God and the real centre of the life satisfied, we never expect or demand infinite satisfaction from a finite heart, we become absolutely kind to all other hearts and never become a snare. If our hearts are not rightly related to Jesus Christ, danger and disillusionment are on our track wherever we go, because other lives are not being led to God, they stick at us, they cannot get any further and they become enervated. But when once the heart is established in expectation on God, I defy other hearts to stick at you, they may try to, but all the time they are being led on to God Himself.

The Exhortation of the Mind (2 Corinthians 10:5)

Before a human spirit forms a mind it must express itself in words; immediately it expresses itself in words, it becomes a spirit of mind. In the natural man it is a spirit of mind according to the flesh, but when the Holy Spirit energises a man's spirit, the words he expresses give him a mind according to the spirit. When once the Spirit of God energises our spirit, we are responsible for forming the mind of Christ. God gives us the disposition of Jesus Christ, but He does not give us His mind, we have to form that, and we form it by the way we react on external things. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." Most of us balk forming the mind of Christ; we do not object to being delivered from sin and hell, but we do object to giving up the energy of our minds to form the mind of Christ. The Holy Spirit represents the actual working of God in a man, and He enables us to form the mind of Christ if we will. We construct the mind of Christ in the same way as we construct the natural mind, viz., by the way our disposition reacts when we come in contact with external things.

The mind is closely affiliated with its physical machine, the brain, and we are responsible for getting that machine into right habits. "Glean your thinking," says Paul (see Philippians 4:8). Never submit to the tyrannous idea that you cannot look after your mind; you can. If a man lets his garden alone it very soon ceases to be a garden; and if a saint lets his mind alone it will soon become a rubbish heap for Satan to make use of. Read the terrible things the New Testament says will grow in the mind of a saint if he does not look after it. We have to rouse ourselves up to think, to bring "every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ" (RV). Never pray about evil thoughts, it will fix them in the mind. "Quit"—that is the only thing to do with anything that is wrong; to ruthlessly grip it on the threshold of your mind and allow it no more way. If you have received the Holy Spirit, you will find that you have the power to bring "every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ" (RV).

BEHAVIOUR

1 Thessalonians 2:10

The Fundamental Resources of Personality

Behaviour means in its widest application every possible kind of reaction to the circumstances into which you may be brought.

There are resources of personality known only to God. Psalm 139 is the prayer of a man asking God to explore him where he cannot go, and to garrison him. In 1 Thessalonians 2:10, Paul is alluding to the working out of what God works in. The majority of us keep taking in and forget altogether that somehow we must work out what we take in: we cannot elude our destiny, which is practical. The profound nature of each one of us is created by God, but our perception of God depends entirely upon our own determined effort to understand what we come in contact with, and that perception is always coloured by the ruling disposition. If my ruling disposition is self-interest, I perceive that everything that happens to me is always for or against my self-interest; if, on the other hand, my ruling disposition is obedience to God, I perceive Him to be at work for my perfecting in everything that happens to me.

When my thought has been stirred by the Spirit of God and I understand what God wants me to be and experience the thrill that comes through the vision, I have to use my body to work out the vision. The first great psychological law to be grasped is that the brain and the body are pure mechanisms, there is nothing spiritual about them; they are the machines we use to express our personality. We are meant to use our brains to express our thought in words, and then to behave according to the way we have thought. A man's spirit only expresses itself as soul by means of words; the brain does not deal with pure thought. No thought is ours until it can be expressed in words. Immediately a thought is expressed in words, it returns to the brain as an idea upon which we can work. The type of life called the intellectual life is apt to deal only with these ideas, consequently there is a divorce from the practical life. The tyranny of intellect is that we see everything in the light of one principle, and when there is a gap, as there is in the moral development of man, the intellect has to ignore it and say these things are mere upsets. The Bible supplies the facts for the gap which the intellect will not accept. The intellect simply works on a process of logic along one line. Life is never a process of logic, life is the most illogical thing we know. The facts of life are illogical, they cannot be traced easily. Intellect is secondary, not primary. An intellectualist never pushes an issue of will.

We are not meant to spend our lives in the domain of intellectual thinking. A Christian's thinking ought never to be in reflection, but in activities. The philosopher says, "I must isolate myself and think things out"; he is like a spider who spins his web and only catches flies. We come to right discernment in activities; thinking is meant to regulate the doing. Our destiny as spiritual men and women is the same as our destiny as natural men and women, viz., practical, from which destiny there is no escape. Memory is a quality of personality; it does not exist in the brain but in the heart. The brain recalls more or less clearly what the heart remembers, and whether we can recall readily depends upon the state of our physical health. We take in through the words of others conceptions that are not ours as yet, we take them in through our ears and eyes and they disappear into the unconscious mind and become incorporated into our thinking. We say that the things we hear and read slip away from memory; they do not really, they pass into the unconscious mind. We may say at the time: "I don't agree with that"; but if what we hear is of the nature of reality we will agree with it sooner or later. A truth may be of no use to us just now, but when the circumstances arise in which that truth is needed, the Holv Spirit will bring it back to our remembrance. This accounts for the curious way in which the statements of Jesus emerge; we say: "I wonder where that word came from?" It came from the unconscious mind; the point is, are we going to obey it?

The matter of behaviour is ours, not God's. God does not make our character; character is formed by the reaction of our inner disposition to outer things through our nervous system. God does what we cannot do: He alters the mainspring and plants in us a totally new disposition; then begins our work, we must work out what God works in. The practising is ours, not God's. We have to bring the mechanism of body and brain into line by habit and make it a strong ally of the grace of God. We all know that it is never the grace of God that fails in a crisis; it is we who fail because we have not been practising. To refuse to form mental habits is a crime against the way we are made. It is no use praying, "O Lord, give me mental habits." God won't; He has made us so that we can make our own mental habits, if we will. When we are regenerated God does not give us another body, we have the same body, and we have to get the bodily mechanism into working order according to His teaching. Think of the time we waste in talking to God and in longing to be what He has already made us instead of doing what He has told us to do!

"Be renewed in the spirit of your mind." The expression of the mind comes through the mechanism of the brain, and the marvellous emancipation that comes slowly and surely is that we have the power to do what God wants us to do. There is nothing that a man or woman energised by the Spirit of God cannot do. All the commandments of God are enablings. "If ye love Me, ye will keep My commandments," said Jesus (RV); that is the practical simple test. Our Lord did not say, "If a man obeys Me, he will keep My commandments"; but, "If ye love Me, ye will keep My commandments." In the early stages of Christian experience we are inclined to hunt with an overplus of zeal for commands of our Lord to obey; but as we mature in the life of God conscious obedience becomes so assimilated into our make-up that we begin to obey the commands of God unconsciously, until in the maturest stage of all we are simply children of God through whom God does His will for the most part unconsciously. Many of us are on the borders of consciousness—consciously serving, consciously devoted to God; all that is immature, it is not the life yet. The first stages of spiritual life are passed in conscientious carefulness; the mature life is lived in unconscious consecration. The term "obey" would be better expressed by the word "use." For instance, a scientist, strictly speaking, "uses" the laws of nature; that is, he more than obeys them, he causes them to fulfil their destiny in his work. That is exactly what happens in the saint's life, he "uses" the commands of the Lord and they fulfil God's destiny in his life. The fundamental resources of personality will always stand true to God and to the way God has made us.

The Facile Receptivity of Personality

There are endless powers of reception in the deeper realms of personality where we cannot go, and it is these realms that God guards and garrisons. Personality is built to receive, it simply absorbs and absorbs; and education gives us the facility of expressing what we have received. We are designed with a great capacity for God, and the nature of personality is that it always wants more and more. Education is the drawing out of what is in for the purpose of expression, and we have to fit ourselves by acquired habits of conduct to express what we have received. What is the difference between an educated and an uneducated person? An educated person is one whose memory is so stored with abstract conceptions that whenever he is put into new circumstances, his memory instantly comes to his aid and he knows how to conduct himself. An uneducated person is nonplussed in new circumstances because he has nothing to come to his aid; whereas an educated person is able to extricate himself by means of examples with which his memory is stored and by the abstract conceptions he has formed of circumstances in which he has never been placed.

Apply it spiritually: Supposing you are asked to speak in the open air—"Oh, I can't!"; to take a Sunday School class—"Oh, I can't!"; to write an essay—"Oh, I can't!"; to expound a particular passage—"Oh, I can't!" What is the matter? we have not been educated on the right line. Some of us do not know what to do in certain circumstances spiritually because we have never stored our memory with the counsels of God, never watched the way God's servants conduct themselves. If we have been storing our minds with the word of God, we are never taken unawares in new circumstances because the Holy Spirit brings back these things to our remembrance and we know what we should do; but the Holy Spirit cannot bring back to our minds what we have never troubled to put there. "My people doth not consider," God says; they live on "spooned meat"15 spiritually, go to church on Sunday and expect to live in the strength of it all the week without doing anything. We should be so in the habit of obeying the Holy Spirit as He interprets the word of God to us that wherever we are placed, we extricate ourselves in a holy and just and unblameable manner.

These things will always come to the rescue in the nick of time to the educated mind—the memory of how we have seen others act in the same circumstances, and the conceptions we form as we study God's Word. We do not become educated all at once, nor do we form habits all at once; it is done bit by bit, and we have to take ourselves strongly in hand. The one thing that keeps us back from forming habits is laziness. The lazy person in the natural world is always captious, and the lazy person spiritually is captious with God, "I haven't had a decent chance." Never let the limitation of natural ability come in. We must get to the place where we are not afraid to face our life before God, and then begin to work out deliberately what God has worked in. That is the way the habits which will show themselves in holy and just and unblameable behaviour are formed.

The Fit Reactions of Personality

There is no reception without a reaction, and no impression without a corresponding expression. The great law regarding impressions and emotions is that if an emotion is not carried out on its own level, it will react on a lower level. The only test as to whether to allow an impression or emotion is to ask, What will this emotion lead to if I let it have its way? Push it to its logical conclusion, and if the outcome is something God would condemn, grip it on the threshold of your mind as in a vice and allow it no more way. But if it is an emotion kindled by the Spirit of God, at the peril of your soul you refuse to act it out, because if you do not let that emotion have its right issue in your life, it will react on a lower level; whereas if you act an emotion out on its right level, you lift your whole life on to God's platform. Paul mentions gross immorality in close connection with sanctification because every devotional emotion not worked out on its own level will react on an immoral level secretly. This accounts for the fact that men and women whose private life is exceedingly wrong often show an amazing liking for devotional literature, for the writings of the saints, for the stirring of abstruse emotions. That is the way sentimentalists are made. Every emotion must express itself, and if it is not expressed on the right level, it will react on a lower level; and the higher the emotion, the more degraded the level on which it will react.

^{15. &}quot;Spooned meat" is liquefied food that requires no chewing or effort—baby food.

A saint is a bundle of specially qualified reactions. For every possible circumstance in life there is a line of behaviour marked out in advance for us; it is not stated in black and white, we have to be so familiar with God's Book that when we come to a crisis the Spirit of God brings back to our memory the things we had read but never understood, and we see what we should do. God is making characters, not mechanisms. We have to get our bodily mechanism into line with what God has worked in. The mighty work of God is done by His sovereign grace, then we have to work it out in our behaviour.

"Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily and righteously and unblameably we behaved ourselves toward you that believe" (1 Thessalonians 2:10 RV). "Unblameable" does not mean faultless, it means a blameless disposition, undeserving of censure: that is, undeserving of censure in the sight of God Who sees everything. "Now unto Him that is able to guard you from stumbling, and to set you before the presence of His glory without blemish in exceeding joy" (Jude 24 RV).

ATTENTION 1 Timothy 4:11-16

Attention is never possible without conscious effort; interest frequently is, we can take up a book and our interest is riveted at once. Naturally we never attend to anything, we are like children, and children do not attend until they are taught to. We all have certain native interests in which we are absorbed; but attention is always an effort of will. We are held responsible by God for the culture of attention.

The Capacity to Attend

These things command and teach . . . (1 Timothy 4:11)

Interest is natural; attention must be by effort, and the great secret of a Christian's life is the attention to realities. Reality is only possible where person comes in contact with person, all the rest is a shadow of reality. That is why Jesus said, "I am . . . the truth." When Saint Paul told Timothy to command and teach, he was building his counsel on this capacity to attend, which must be by effort. We are always more willing to get ideas from books and from other people, which is simply an indication that we are not willing to attend but prefer to have our natural interest awakened. We scoop other people's brains either in books or in conversation in order to avoid attending ourselves. One of our greatest needs is to have a place where we deliberately attend; that is the real meaning of prayer. "Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret." Prayer that is not an effort of the will is unrecognised by God. "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you," said Jesus. That does not mean ask anything you like, but ask what you will. What are you actively willing? ask for that. We shall find that we ask very few things. The tendency in prayer to leave ourselves all abroad to the influence of a meeting or of a special season is not scriptural. Prayer is an effort of will, and Jesus Christ instructs us by using the word "ask." "Every one that asketh receiveth." These words are an amazing revelation of the simplicity with which God would have us pray. The other domains of prayer, the intercession of the Holy Spirit and the intercession of Christ, are nothing to do with us; the effort of our will is to do with us.

The Contemporary Attention

Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers . . . (1 Timothy 4:12)

To-day men's attention is being screwed down along scientific lines; that is where the effort is being made.

Think of the sweat and labour that a scientific student will expend in order to attain his end; where do we find men and women concentrating with the same intensity on spiritual realities? The majority of us are totally ignorant of the one abiding reality that demands our attention, viz., our relationship to God, which should exhibit itself in a life in accordance with that relationship. The essence of sin is the refusal to recognise that we are accountable to God at all. The relationship to God must be recognised and lived up to from the crown of the head to the soles of the feet; nothing is unimportant in this relation ship.

"Let no man despise thy youth," Paul said to Timothy. Youth is a thing to be despised, a man up to thirty ought to be shut up in a bandbox16 and not allowed to speak. Paul is not saying, "Stand up for your rights"; not, "Let no man despise thy youth because you are as good as anybody else," but by being an example in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith and in purity to all who believe the realities which you believe; don't be caught up by contemporary attentions. It is so easy to attend to the thing every one else is attending to, but it is difficult to attend to what no one is attending to. Paul did not say, "Pay attention to the Greek philosopher, to the history of your people," to the thousand and one things that were contemporary in his day; he said, "Screw your attention with all your effort on the one reality, your relationship to God, and be an example on that all through."

The Commiserating Attention

Give attendance to reading . . . (1 Timothy 4:13)

How many of us spend our time expecting that we will be something we are not. "Oh the time is coming when I am going to be so and so." It never will come; the time is always now. The amazing thing about the salvation of our Lord is that He brings us into contact with the reality that is, until we are just like children, continually seeing the wonder and beauty of things around us. The characteristic of young men and women of to-day is an affected tiredness of everything, nothing interests them. The salvation of Jesus is not a Divine anticipation, it is an absolute fact. People talk about the magnificent ideals that are yet to be; but the marvel of being born from above is that the reality is infinitely more wonderful than all we have imagined. Our Lord taught us to look at such things as grass and trees and birds; grass is not ideal, it is real; flowers are not ideal, they are real; sunrises and sunsets are not ideal, they are real. These things are all round about us, almost pressing themselves into our eyes and ears, and yet we never look at them. Jesus Christ drew all His illustrations from His Father's handiwork, from sparrows and flowers, things that none of us dream of noticing; we take our illustrations from things that compel attention. When we are born from above the Spirit of God does not give us new ideals, we begin to see how ideal the real is; and as we pay attention to the things near at hand, we find them to be the gate of heaven to our souls. The reality of the salvation of Jesus Christ is that He makes us pay attention to realities, not appearances.

The Soul's Awakening

Neglect not the gift that is in thee . . . (1 Timothy 4:14)

There is a difference between such books as Trine's In Tune with the Infinite¹⁷ and the reality of life. It is possible to go dreaming through life till we are struck, not by an ideal, but by a sudden reality, and all we have ever pictured of what a man or woman should be pales before the reality we see. That is what happened when men saw Jesus Christ in the days of His flesh. The Spirit of God saves us from the absurd futility of useless tears when the near objects have become far by making us open our eyes to what is near. We weep around the graves of people and things because we have never realised that we have to pay attention to the reality that is at hand. Take a lad who has become impatient with his home, he is sick of it, he cannot stand his parents, his sisters are prosaic, and he leaves—the best thing for him. Let him come in contact with other people's fathers and mothers and sisters—Oh, yes, he much prefers them; but he will soon come to realise that the ones he has left are infinitely better. Naturally we much prefer the friends we make to our God-made relations, because we can be noble with our friends, we have no past history with them.

This principle works all through. We long for some thing that is not and shut our eyes to the thing that is. When the Lord Jesus awakens us to reality by new birth and brings us in contact with Himself, He does not give us new fathers and mothers and new friends; He gives us new sight, that is, we focus our eyes on the things that are near and they become wonderfully distant. "Put thy distance on the near." This craving to go somewhere else, to see the things that are distant, arises from a refusal to attend to what is near.

^{16.} The bandbox of Chambers' day was a small, round box made to hold neckbands or collars for shirts. It is used metaphorically to mean something small, narrow, cloistered, self-contained.

^{17.} Ralph Waldo Trine (1866–1958), American writer, was the author of The Life Books series, including In Tune with the Infinite.

Have I ever realised that the most wonderful thing in the world is the thing that is nearest to me, viz., my body? Who made it? Almighty God. Do I pay the remotest attention to my body as being the temple of the Holy Ghost? Remember our Lord lived in a body like ours. The next reality that I come in contact with by my body is other people's bodies. All our relationships in life, all the joys and all the miseries, all the hells and all the heavens, are based on bodies; and the reality of Jesus Christ's salvation brings us down to the Mother Earth we live on, and makes us see by the regenerating power of God's grace how amazingly precious are the ordinary things that are always with us. Master that, and you have mastered everything. We imagine that our bodies are a hindrance to our development, whereas it is only through our bodies that we develop. We cannot express a character without a body.

This is also true of Nature. We do not get at God through Nature, as the poets say, we get at Nature through God when once we are rightly related to Him, and Nature becomes a sacrament of His Presence. Such books as Trine's start at the wrong end, they try to bring us from the ideal to the real; it is by coming in contact with the real that we find the ideal. "Neglect not the gift that is in thee." We have to be careful not to neglect the spiritual reality planted in us by God. The first thing that contact with reality does is to enable us to diagnose our moods. It is a great moment when we realise that we have the power to trample on certain moods. Moods never go by praying, moods go by kicking. A mood nearly always has its seat in the physical condition, not in the moral, and it is a continual effort to refuse to listen to those moods which arise from a physical condition; we must not submit to them for a second. It is a great thing to have something to neglect in your life; a great thing for your moral character to have something to snub. "The expulsive power of a new affection"—that is what Christianity supplies. The Spirit of God on the basis of Redemption gives us something else to think about. Are we going to think about it?

By heeding the reality of God's grace within us we are never bothered again by the fact that we do not understand ourselves, or that other people do not understand us. If anyone understood me, he would be my god. The only Being Who understands me is the Being Who made me and Who redeems me, and He will never expound me to myself; He will only bring me to the place of reality, viz., into contact with Himself, and the heart is at leisure from itself for ever afterwards.

The first things a Christian is emancipated from is the tyranny of moods and the tyranny of feeling that he is not understood. These things are the most fruitful sources of misery. Half the misery in the world comes because one person demands of another a complete understanding, which is absolutely impossible. The only Being Who understands us is the Being Who made us. It is a tremendous emancipation to get rid of every kind of self-consideration and learn to heed only one thing, the relationship between God and ourselves. "In all the world there is none but Thee, my God, there is none but Thee." Once we get there, other people become shadows, beautiful shadows, but shadows under God's control.

The Scriptural Attitude

Meditate upon these things . . . (1 Timothy 4:15)

Meditation means getting to the middle of a thing, pinning yourself down to a certain thing and concentratedly brooding upon it. The majority of us attend only to the "muddle" of things, consequently we get spiritual indigestion, the counterpart of physical indigestion, a desperately gloomy state of affairs. We cannot see anything rightly, and all we do see is stars. "Faith is . . . the evidence of things not seen." Suppose Jesus suddenly lifted the veil from our eyes and let us see angels ministering to us, His Own Presence with us, the Holy Ghost in us, and the Father around us, how amazed we should be! We have lived in the "muddle" of things instead of in the middle of things. Faith gets us into the middle, which is God and God's purpose. Elisha prayed for his servant, "LORD, I pray Thee, open his eyes, that he may see," and when his eyes were opened he saw the hosts of God and nothing else.

We have to learn to pay attention to reality; one soul attending to reality is an emancipation to hundreds more. We are impertinently inquisitive about everything saving that one thing. Through inattention to our own true capacity we live as in a dream, when all around us and in us are the eternal realities. "Attend to these duties, let them absorb you, so that all men may note your progress." We are apt to be busy about everything but that which concerns our spiritual progress, and at the end of a profitless day we snatch up a Bible or Daily Light 18 and read a few verses, and it does us good for precisely threequarters of a second. We have to take time to be diligent. Meditation is not being like a pebble in a brook, allowing the waters of thought to flow over us; that is reverie. Meditation is the most intense spiritual act, it brings every part of body and mind into harness. To be spiritual by effort is a sure sign of a false relationship to God; to be obedient by effort in the initial stages is a sure sign that we are determined to obey God at all costs. Take time. Remember we have all the time there is. The majority of us waste time and want to encroach on eternity. "Oh well, I will think about these things when I have time." The only time you will have is the day after you are dead, and that will be eternity. An hour, or half an hour, of daily attention to and meditation on our own spiritual life is the secret of progress.

The Sacred Attention

... Take heed unto thyself. (1 Timothy 4:16)

If we have been living in unrealities, we shall find ourselves faced with a great impatience when we do endeavour to face reality, and we are apt to behave like caged wild beasts. We have to take a grip of ourselves when we come to the true centre of things, and it means discipline and discipline, until we face nothing but realities. We have to exert a tremendous effort, and God is pleased to see us exert it. If you try and settle down before God in prayer when you have been dwelling in unrealities, you will recognise instantly the condition of things. As soon as you get down to pray you remember a letter you ought to write, or something else that needs to be done, a thousand and one little impertinences come in and claim your attention. When we suspend our own activities and get down at the foot of the Cross and meditate there, God brings His thoughts to us by the Holy Spirit and interprets them to us. The only mind that understands the things of God is the child mind (see Matthew 11:25); our Lord continually mentioned this simplicity (see Matthew 18:3). It is the simplicity of God, not of an imbecile, a fundamental simplicity of relationship. God has not the remotest opportunity of coming to some of us, our minds are packed full with our own thoughts and conceptions; until suddenly He comes in like the wind and blows all our thoughts right away, and thoughts come sauntering in from the Word of God. We can never get those thoughts for ourselves. They are the free gift of God for anyone and everyone who is learning to pay attention to Him.

NATURAL GROWTH IN SUPERNATURAL GRACE

1 Peter 2:7-12

Our Lord's maxims

Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow. Behold the fowls of the air. Become as little children.

Our Lord did not point out wonderful sights to His disciples all the time; He pointed out things that were apparently insignificant—lilies and grass and sparrows. God does not deal with the things that interest us naturally and compel our attention; He deals with things which we have to will to observe. The illustrations Jesus Christ used were all taken from His Father's handiwork because they express exactly how the life of God will develop in us. We draw our illustrations from the works of men, consequently we get into a hustling condition and forget our Lord's maxims.

"Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow"—in the dark! We are apt to consider a lily when it is in the sunshine only, but for the greater part of the year it is buried in the ground; and we imagine that we are to be always above ground, shedding perfume and looking beautiful; or continually being cut and put into God's show-room to be admired, forgetting altogether that we cannot be as lilies unless we have spent time in the dark, totally ignored. As a disciple, Jesus says, consider your hidden life with God. When we breathe fresh air we are not consciously exhilaratingly different all the time; but if we continue to take in fresh air, it makes a profound difference. This is true of our life in Christ. If we receive the Holy Spirit and obey Him, He makes a profound difference, and it will be manifested one day as a great surprise. It is not done in a minute as far as our consciousness is concerned, but when we come to a crisis we find to our astonishment that we are not upset or perplexed, as we might have expected, but we realise that our whole outlook has been altered. The Spirit of God awaits His own time to bring the crisis, we are apt to say, "I want the crisis now." We shall never see God's point of view as long as we bring our own ideas to Him and dictate to God what we expect Him to do. We must become as little children, be essentially simple, keep our minds brooding on what God tells us to brood on, and let God do as He likes. The difficulties come because we will not be simple enough to take God at His word.

Our natural reactions are not wrong, although they may be used to express the wrong disposition. God never contradicts our natural reactions; He wants them to be made spiritual. When we are saved God does not alter the construction of our bodily life, but He does expect us to manifest in our bodily life the alteration He has made. We express ourselves naturally through our bodies, and we express the supernatural life of God in the same way, but it can only be done by the sacrifice of the natural.

How many of us are spiritual in eating and drinking and sleeping? Those acts were spiritual in our Lord; His relationship to the Father was such that all His natural life was obedient to Him, and when He saw that His Father's will was for Him not to obey a natural reaction, He instantly obeyed His Father (see Matthew 4:1-4). If our Lord had been fanatical He would have said—"I have been so long without food, I will never eat again." That would have been to obey a principle instead of God. When God is educating us along the line of turning the natural into the spiritual, we are apt to become fanatical. Because by God's grace things have been done which are miraculous, we become devoted to the miracle and forget God, then when difficulties come we say it is the antagonism of the devil. The fact is we are grossly ignorant of the way God has made us. All that we need is a little of what we understand by pluck in the natural world put into the spiritual. Don't let your body get on top and say there is nothing after all in what God said. Stand up to the difficulty, and all that you ever believed about the transforming grace of God will be proved in your bodily life.

Curiosity (1 Peter 2:7)

Curiosity is the desire to come to a full knowledge and understanding of a thing; it is a natural reaction. Imagine a child without curiosity! A child cannot sit and listen to a lecture, but let him see something bright and instantly he is curious and wants to get hold of it, whether it is the moon or a ball. The reaction is based not so much on the desire to have it for himself as on the desire to know more about it. As men and women we are curious about intellectual or philosophic or scientific things, and when a particular quality is presented our curiosity is aroused—"I want to know more about this matter, can anyone explain it to me satisfactorily?" It is the natural reaction of the way we are made, and to ignore it is fanatical. The instinct of curiosity can be used in the wrong way (see Genesis 3:6), but that does not mean that the reaction itself is wrong, it depends upon the motive. A point that is frequently missed in dealing with the questions of a child is that he asks them from a disinterested motive; a teacher can always appeal to the disinterested curiosity of a child. A child's questions are at the very heart of things, questions that scarcely occur to a philosopher.

In natural life we grow by means of curiosity, and spiritually we grow by the same power. The Spirit of God uses the natural reaction of curiosity to enable us to know more about the One Who is precious. The instinct is not denied, but lifted on to a different platform and turned towards knowing Jesus Christ. As saints our curiosity must not be all abroad; we become insatiably curious about Jesus Christ; He is the One Who rivets our attention. Think of the avidity with which you devour anything that has to do with expounding the Lord Jesus Christ—"unto you therefore which believe He is Precious."

Imitation (1 Peter 2:9)

Imitation is one of the first reactions of a child, it is not sinful. We come to a right knowledge of ourselves by imitating others. The instinct that makes us afraid of being odd is not a cowardly instinct, it is the only power of self-preservation we have. If you live much by yourself you become an oddity, you never see the quirks in yourself. Some people won't live with others spiritually, they live in holes and corners by themselves. The New Testament warns of those who "separate themselves" (Jude 19). By the grace of God we are taken out of the fashion we were in and we become more or less speckled birds. ¹⁹ Immediately you introduce a standard of imitation which the set to which you belong does not recognise, you will experience what Peter says, "they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot" (1 Peter 4:4).

The Spirit of God lifts the natural reaction of imitation into another domain and by God's grace we begin to imitate Our Lord and shew forth His praises. It is the natural instinct of a child to imitate his mother, and when we are born again the Holy Spirit lifts this instinct into the spiritual domain and it becomes the most supernaturally natural thing for us to imitate our Lord. We grow in grace naturally, not artificially. Mimicking is the counterfeit of imitation and produces the "pi" person, one who tries his level best to be what he is not. When you are good you never try to be. It is natural to be like the one we live with most; then if we spend most of our time with Jesus Christ, we shall begin to be like Him, by the way we are built naturally and by the Spirit God puts in.

Emulation (1 Peter 2:9)

Emulation is the instinct to imitate what you see another doing, in order not to appear inferior. A boy who accepts the place of inferiority is either lazy or is becoming heartbroken; he has no right to sit down and submit to being inferior, he is not built that way naturally. A child always admires anyone with skill, and the teacher who says, "Do this and that," has no influence over a child compared with the one who says, "Come and do this with me." When a child has seen his teacher do a thing and is asked to do it, instantly the instinct of emulation is at work.

^{19.} A "speckled bird" is a person who stands out as abnormal, odd, or eccentric.

Our Lord builds His deepest teaching on the instinct of emulation. When His Spirit comes in He makes me desire not to be inferior to Him Who called me. Our example is not a good man, not even a good Christian man, but God Himself. By the grace of God I have to emulate my Father in heaven. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (Matthew 5:48). The most natural instinct of the supernatural life of God within me is to be worthy of my Father. To say that the doctrine of sanctification is unnatural is not true, it is based on the way God has made us. When we are born again we become natural for the first time; as long as we are in sin we are abnormal, because sin is not normal. When we are restored by the grace of God it becomes the most natural thing to be holy, we are not forcing ourselves to be unnatural. When we are rightly related to God all our natural instincts help us to obey Him and become the greatest ally of the Holy Spirit. We disobey whenever we become independent. Independence is not strength but unrealised weakness, and is the very essence of sin. There was no independence in our Lord, the great characteristic of His life was submission to His Father.

Emulation and imitation both centre around whatever is our ideal. When once we see Jesus, it is good-bye to all ideals; we cannot have them back again, nor do we want them back again if we are true to Him. We have to keep the one Lodestar, the Lord Jesus Christ, in front and be absorbingly taken up with Him; consequently we have to put ourselves through discipline and fast from every other type of emulation.

Ambition (1 Peter 2:11)

Ambition is a mixture of pugnacity and pride, a reaction of unwillingness to be beaten by any difficulty. It is a natural reaction. Think of a boy without the instinct to fight! The reaction that makes one boy punch another is not bad, although the disposition behind it may be. The natural reaction of ambition in a man or woman saved by God's grace is that they will not be beaten by anything the world, the flesh or the devil can put in the way of their fulfilling God's idea for them. By the grace of God we get to the place where we do not punch other people, but punch the devil clean out of the arena. "Resist the devil." How can we resist the devil unless we are ambitious not to be beaten by him! When we become spiritual the reaction of pugnacity is lifted on to another plane and we say to our body, "It can be done and it shall be done" (cf. 1 Corinthians 9:27). Most of us are devoid of spiritual pluck. Many who are naturally plucky lose all their pluck when they get a smattering of grace and become sentimental and pathetic, every tiny ache which they would have ignored altogether before they were saved, is of the devil! God does not tell us to leave the natural life entirely alone; the natural life has to be turned into the spiritual, and it is because we do not realise this that we become whining people spiritually where we would have scorned to whine naturally.

When we are born into the kingdom of God we realise that we are not fighting against flesh and blood, but against spiritual enemies, "against spiritual wickedness in high places." The Book of the Revelation is based on the reaction to overcome. "To him that overcometh . . ." You cannot overcome if there is nothing to overcome. In natural education everything is built up on difficulty, there is always something to overcome. And this is true in the spiritual world. If the world, the flesh and the devil have knocked you out once, get up and face them again, and again, until you have done with them. That is how character is made in the spiritual domain as well as in the natural. Our prayers for God's help are often nothing but incarnate laziness, and God has to say, "Speak no more unto Me of this matter. Get thee up. . . .

The pugnacious element is a natural reaction, and as Christian teachers we have to recognise it. Ambition in the spiritual domain is the reaction which refuses to bow its neck to any yoke but the yoke of the Lord Jesus Christ. Nothing awakens scorn amongst men more than a quitter, one who funks in a game. Weakness or imbecility do not awaken contempt as much as one sign of the white feather, a refusal to face the music, the tiniest sign of the lack of pugnacity. The law of antagonism runs all through life, physical, moral, mental and spiritual. I am only healthy according to the fighting corpuscles in my blood, when the fighting millions inside get low, I become diseased and after a while I shall be snuffed out. Morally it is the same, we are not born moral, we are born innocent and ignorant; morality is the outcome of fight. Immediately I am lazy in moral matters, I become immoral. Spiritually it is the same. "In the world ye shall have tribulation"—everything that is not spiritual makes for our undoing—"but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Why did not our Lord say that He would help us to overcome? Because we have to imitate Him through the power He has put in us. Think of sitting in a corner before the Almighty and saying, "But my difficulties are so enormous." Thank God they are! The bigger the difficulty, the more amazing is your profit to Jesus Christ as you draw on His supernatural grace.

Ownership (1 Peter 2:11–12)

The instinct of ownership is seen from the first of life to the last. As soon as an infant tongue can say anything, it will say "me" and "mine." "Is this mine?" "Yes"—then expect to see it smashed. The child wishes you to understand that he can do what he likes with his own. It is only the discipline of life that teaches us to keep things. The instinct of ownership is a right one, though the disposition expressed through it may be wrong. In a saint the idea of ownership is that we have the power to glorify God by good works (see Matthew 5:16). What we own is the honour of Jesus Christ. Have I ever realised that His honour is at stake in my bodily life? "What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you?" Do I own my body for that one purpose? do I own my brain to think God's thoughts after Him? We have to be intensely and personally God's.

The Spirit of God brings us into the realisation of our ownership, and the instinct of ownership becomes a tremendous wealth in the life. "All things are yours," and Paul prays that the eyes of our understanding may be enlightened that we may know what is ours in Christ Jesus.

No personality, from a tiny child to Almighty God, is without this sense of ownership. How wonderfully sprightly a dog looks when he is owned! How weary and hang-dog we become when we are convicted of sin; but when we experience God's salvation, we straighten up immediately, everything is altered, we can fling our heads back and look the world in the face because the Lord Jesus Christ is ours and we are His. A dominant ownership, such as the ownership of the Lord means that we own everything He owns. "The meek . . . shall inherit the earth."

THE WAY OF A SOUL

Ephesians 5:14–18

The Way of the Awakening of the Soul (Ephesians 5:14–15)

 \widehat{Aw} ake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead . . . (Ephesians 5:14)

What Is Possible in the Way of Habits

A good many of us are in the condition that St. Augustine described himself to be in, the condition of a halfawakened man who does not wish to be awakened—"a little more sleep." God smote St. Augustine with the words, "not in chambering and wantonness." When the Spirit of God brings a word of God to us, are we going to wake up and lay hold of it, or remain in the condition St. Augustine was in—"a little more worldliness; a little less intensity"? If God tells us to awake, we must get into the habit of awakening. We have to wake up physically before we can wake up spiritually. When God tells us to do a thing He empowers us to do it, only we must do the doing. Think of the number of times we say, "Oh, I can't." For the good of your own soul, say "I won't." To say, "I can't" enervates the whole life. If we really cannot, God has misled us. Jesus said "All power is given unto Me"; if He tells us to do something and we cannot, this is simply not true.

We talk about attacks of the devil—"I cannot concentrate my mind, the devil hinders me." The reason we cannot concentrate is that we are culpably ignorant about ourselves. The devil does not need to bother about us as long as we remain ignorant of the way God has made us and refuse to discipline ourselves; inattention and our own slovenliness will soon run away with every power we have. Watch the care students take in other domains of life, and then think of our own laziness and the way we continually fall back and say, "It can't be done." All we need is grit and gumption and reliance on the Holy Spirit. We must bring the same determined energy to the revelations in God's Book as we bring to earthly professions. Most of us leave the sweat of brain outside when we come to deal with the Bible.

Anything and everything is possible in the way of habits. Habits form a pathway in the material stuff of the brain. We cannot form a habit without thinking about it; but when once the pathway in the brain is formed we can do a thing easily without thinking about it. For instance, we were not born with the ready-made habit of dressing ourselves, we had to form that habit. If we persist in using our bodies in a certain way, alterations will take place in the make-up of the brain. Spiritually we have to learn to form habits on the basis of the grace of God. What happens at new birth is that the incoming of a totally new life breaks all the old habits, they are completely dislodged by the "expulsive power of a new affection." Most of us do not realise this and we continue to obey habits when there is no need to. The incoming of the Spirit of God from without forms a disassociation physically, and new habits can be formed. Never dispute for a second when God speaks; if you debate, you give an opportunity to the old habits to reassert themselves. Launch yourself with as strong an initiative as possible on the line of obedience; it is difficult at first, but immediately you start to obey, you find you can do it. The danger is to say "I can't," or, "I will do it presently." When in your soul's vision you see clearly what God wants, let me advise you to do something physical immediately. If you accompany a moral or spiritual decision with a physical effort you give the necessary initiative to form the new habit. A physical exertion is imperative in spiritual transactions, otherwise it is in danger of passing into thin air. When God tells you to do a thing, never wait for a fitting opportunity, do it now. You may dream about doing it to further orders,²⁰ the only thing to do is to launch out at once and make things inevitable, make it impossible to go back on the decision.

Beware of divorcing the physical and the spiritual. Habits are physical, and every command of God has a physical basis. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." You cannot hear with your heart if you do not listen with your physical ears. Does God find me quick in the uptake to discern what He says? Am I awake enough to hear? God always locates His spiritual revelations in a physical body. The great God became Incarnate in flesh and blood; the great thoughts of God became crystallised in words. When the Spirit of God touches us, we are responsible for forming the mind of Christ. God does the wonderful indwelling part, but we have to do the expressing (see Philippians 2:12–13), and when once we understand how God has made us, it becomes not at all difficult to do it. The Spirit of God knocks and says, "Wake up, form this habit," and if you try, you find you can because you find you have a wealth of power within. It is only when we are willing to be identified with the death of Jesus that the full power of His life is able to work, and we find a new page of consciousness open in our lives. There are new forces in us and we are able now to do what we never could before; we are free from the old bondage and limitations. The gateway into this life is through the death of Jesus Christ.

Be a saint physically.

The Way of the Apprehension of the Soul (Ephesians 5:16–17) understanding what the will of the Lord is . . . (Ephesians 5:17)

What Is Possible in the Way of Intelligence

Have we begun to form the habit of thinking? Thinking is the habit of expressing what moves our spirit. In order to think we must concentrate. Thinking is a purely physical process. No one can tell us how to begin to think, all they can do is to tell us what happens when we do think. In the grey matter of the brain are multitudes of blood-vessels, distributed equally all over the brain, and when we think, the blood gathers to the one part of the brain we are using. This is called concentration. Dissipated thinking means that the blood goes back to the other parts of the brain and wakens up associated ideas. When we focus our will around certain thoughts, the blood converges to that particular part of the brain, and if we can hold our wills fixed there for five minutes, we have done a tremendous thing, we have begun to form the habit of mental concentration. The majority of us allow our brains to wool-gather, we never concentrate on any particular line. Concentration is physical, not spiritual. The brain must be brought into order by concentration, then when the Spirit of God brings a spontaneous illumination of a particular theme instantly the brain is at the disposal of God. If we have not learned to concentrate, the brain cannot focus itself anywhere, it fusses all round and woolgathers. No one is responsible for that but ourselves.

This is true in ordinary thinking, and the same brain is used by the Holy Spirit. We have to learn to bring "every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ" (RV); to "stay our imagination" (RV mg) on God. This can only be done by concentration, by fixing our thoughts and our imagination deliberately on God. The majority of us are unable to fix our thoughts in prayer, we lie all abroad before God and do not rouse ourselves up to lay hold of Him, consequently we have wandering thoughts continually. God will not bring every thought and imagination into captivity; we have to do it, and that is the test of spiritual concentration. The inattentive, slovenly way we drift into the presence of God is an indication that we are not bothering to think about Him. Whenever our Lord spoke of prayer, He said, "ask." It is impossible to ask if you do not concentrate. The marvel of the goodness of God is that He does so much for us; if we would only meet with physical obedience what God does for us spiritually, the whole of our body would be under such control that we should apprehend His meaning when He speaks. It is not a question of learning a thing outside but of determination inside. God gives us the Holy Spirit not only for holy living but for holy thinking, and we are held responsible if we do not think concentratedly along the right lines. To concentrate with our mind fixed on one trend of things is never easy to begin with. There never is a time when we cannot begin to concentrate.

^{20. &}quot;To further orders" means ad infinitum; endlessly; the phrase is of military origin, meaning continuing the present action until one receives different orders.

"Be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is." We have to use the same power of concentration spiritually as we do naturally. How are we going to find out the will of God? "God will communicate it to us." He will not. His will is there all the time, but we have to discover it by being renewed in our minds, by taking heed to His word and obeying it. If we are not going to be "conformed to this world; but . . . transformed," we must use our brains. God does the spiritual, powerful part we cannot do; but we have to work it out, and as we do the obeying we prove, i.e., "make out," "what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God." We need to make our own nature the ally of the Spirit of God. The grace of God never fails us, but we often fail the grace of God because we do not practise. If we do not practise when there is no need, we shall never do it when there is a need. When people say, "I cannot think, I have not the gift," they mean that they have never used their brains. We all have bodies and brains. When we use our brains in concentration in a way we have never done before, we will have growing pains; a headache after thinking is a sign we have brains. The more we work and get beyond the conscious stage of doing things, the more easily will we do them. We all have unconscious mental methods. Never imitate to stick to what you imitate; imitate only in order to provoke your mind to know its own mechanism.

An artist is one who not only sees but is prepared to pay the price of acquiring the technical knowledge to express what he sees. An artistic person is one who has not enough art in him to make him work at the technique of art whereby he can express himself, he indulges in moods and tones and impressions; consequently there are more artistic people than there are artists. The same is true of poetry, there are many people with poetic notions, but very few poets. It is not enough for a man to feel the divine flame burning in him; unless he goes into the concentrated, slogging business of learning the technique of expression, his genius will be of no use to anyone. Apply these illustrations spiritually: if we have not enough of the life of God in us to overcome the difficulty of expressing it in our bodies, then we are living an impoverished spiritual life. Think of the illuminations the Spirit of God has given you; He expected you to bring your physical body which He made into obedience to the vision, and you never attempted to but let it drift, and when the crisis came and God looked for you to be His mouthpiece, you crumpled all to pieces. You had not formed the habit of apprehending; your physical machine was not under control. It is a terrible thing to sit down to anything.

Beware of being side-tracked by the idea that you can develop a spiritual life apart from physical accompaniments. It is a desperately dangerous thing to allow the spiritual vision to go ahead of physical obedience.

Do some practical obeying.

The Way of Appreciation by the Soul (Ephesians 5:18)

... be filled with the Spirit.

What Is Possible in the Way of Inspiration

There are two ways of inspiration possible—being drunk with wine, and being filled with the Spirit. We have no business to be nondescript, drunk neither one way nor the other. A man may be sober and incapable as well as drunk and incapable. Watch human nature; we are so built that if we do not get thrilled in the right way, we will get thrilled in the wrong. If we are without the thrill of communion with God, we will try to get thrilled by the devil, or by some concoction of human ingenuity. Don't be inspired with wine, the counterfeit of the Spirit, says Paul, but be filled with the Spirit. Enthusiasm is the idea—intoxicated with the life of God. Paul puts it as a command, "Be being filled." When our Lord talked to the woman of Samaria, He said, "the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." Profoundly speaking, there is no refilling; "a well of water" is there all the time. The picture is not that of a channel, but of a fountain, a continual infilling and overflowing of the inspiration of God.

In the matter of inspiration the first thing to watch is the temper of our own soul. A blameworthy temper of mind about another soul will end in the spirit of the devil. We cannot approach God in a wrong temper of mind, it will put a shutter down between and we shall not see Him. God introduces us to people who conduct themselves to us as we have conducted ourselves to Him, and if we do not recognise what He is doing we will ride a moral hobby-horse—"I will not be treated like that." There is no further inspiration possible from the Spirit of God until that temper of mind is gone. "Take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously." Our Lord always puts His finger unerringly on the thing that is wrong. "First be reconciled . . . " (Matthew 5:24). The next thing we have to watch is our private relationship with God. Are we determined to prove that God must do what we have said He must? If so, our intercession becomes frenzied fanaticism. Or are we only concerned about being brought into an understanding of God, which is the real meaning of prayer? The greatest barrier to intercession is that we take ourselves so seriously, and come to the conclusion that God is reserved with us; He is not. God has to ignore things we take so seriously until our relationship to Him is exactly that of a child. If we are watching the temper of our minds towards other people and towards God, there will be the continual incoming and outflowing of the inspiration of God, a fresh anointing of the Holy Spirit all the time. Imagine Jesus being jaded in the life of God! There was never anything jaded about Him. When we are jaded there is always a reason, and it is either the temper of our mind towards another or towards God. We have no business to be half-dead spiritually, to hang like clogs on God's plan; we should be filled with a radiant intensity of life, living at the highest pitch all the time without any reaction. "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

Be being filled with the life Jesus came to give.

WHAT TO THINK ABOUT

Philippians 4:8

Never run away with the idea that it does not matter much what we believe or think; it does. What we think and believe, we are; not what we say we think and believe, but what we really do think and believe, we are; there is no divorce at all. To believe, in the sense our Lord used the word, is never an intellectual act but a moral act. The following quotation from Dr. Arnold²¹ of Rugby explains the way fanatics are made, and also points out the incongruity of those Christians who are sanctified and yet show an unconscionable bigotry and narrow-mindedness in their mental outlook:—

I am quite sure that it is a most solemn duty to cultivate our understandings to the uttermost, for I have seen the evil moral consequences of fanaticism to a greater degree than I ever expected to see them realised; and I am satisfied that a neglected intellect is far oftener the cause of mischief to a man than a perverted or over-valued one. Men retain their natural quickness and cleverness while their reason and judgement are allowed to go to ruin, and thus they do work their minds and gain influence, and are pleased at gaining it; but it is the undisciplined mind which they are exercising, instead of one wisely disciplined.

The Freedom of Christian Thinking

Whatsoever things are true, . . . think on these things.

It is more painful to think about these things than to think about what we know, about what is old in our experience, because immediately we begin to think God's thoughts after Him we have to bring concentration to bear, and that takes time and discipline. When once the mind begins to think, the horizon is continually broadening and widening, there is a general unsettlement, and the danger is to go back to the old confined way and become fanatical and obstinate. This explains why some people who really are God's children have such an inveterate dislike of study. They do not quite call it the devil, but they come pretty near it. To give time to soak in God's truth, time to find out how to think along God's line, appears to them a snare and delusion. All the insubordination and difficulties and upsets come from the people who will not think. "Glean your thinking," says Paul, and we must do it by will. What are we doing with our brains now that we have entered into the sanctified life? The Holy Spirit energises the will to a complete mastery of the brain; then don't be a wool-gatherer mentally. If we are saved and sanctified by God's grace, it is unadulterated mental laziness on our part not to rouse ourselves up to think. It is not a question of the opportunities of learning, but of the determination to be continually renewed in the spirit of our mind.

(a) The Topic of the Things of Truth

The things of truth are things which are in keeping with the Person of Truth, the Lord Jesus Christ: "I am . . . the Truth." Truth therefore means not only accuracy, but accuracy about something that corresponds with God. We must distinguish between an accurate fact and a truthful fact. The devil, sin, disease, spiritualism, are all accurate facts, but they are not truthful facts. Christian Science makes the blunder of saying that because sin is not of the nature of truth, therefore it is not a fact. But sin is a fact. The accuracy of facts and the accuracy of the facts of truth are two different things. Never say that things that are not of the truth are non-existent. There are many facts that are not of the truth, that is, they do not correspond with God, Paul says, Limit your thinking to the things that are true.

^{21.} Thomas Arnold (1795–1842) was a British cleric, historian, and innovative headmaster at Rugby, the noted school for English boys.

Have you begun to discipline your mind in that way? If you have, people may pour bucket-loads of the devil's garbage over your head but it will have no more effect on you than dirt has on a crystal. Our minds are apt to be all abroad, like an octopus with its tentacles out to catch everything that comes along-newspaper garbage, spiritualistic garbage, advertisement garbage, we let them all come and make a dumping ground of our heads, and then sigh and mourn and say we cannot think right thoughts. Beware of saying you cannot help your thoughts; you can; you have all the almighty power of God to help you. We have to learn to bring every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ, and it takes time. We want to reach it in a moment like a rocket, but it can only be done by a gradual moral discipline, and we do not like discipline, we want to do it all at once.

(b) The Topic of the Things of Honesty

Honest—"honourable" (RV), "reverend" (RV mg). The word "honest" has come down in the world, it means something noble and massive, awe-inspiring and grand, that awakens our reverence and inspires sublime thoughts, as a cathedral does. The things of honesty make a man's character sublime, and Paul counsels us to think on these things. See that there is a correspondence between a sublime piece of architecture and your character. Anything that awakens the sense of the sublime is an honourable thing. In the natural realm a sunset, a sunrise, mountain scenery, music, or poetry will awaken a sense of the sublime. In the moral world, truthfulness in action will awaken it. Truthfulness in action is different from truthfulness in speech. Truth-speaking people are an annoyance, they spank children for having imagination; they are sticklers for exact accuracy of speech and would have everyone say the same thing, like gramophone records; they drag down the meaning of truth out of its sphere. So we mean truthfulness in action, a true act all through.

Another thing that awakens the sense of the sublime is suffering that arises from the misunderstanding of those whom one esteems highest. Jesus Christ brought this suffering to the white heat of perfection; He let those He esteemed misunderstand Him foully and never once vindicated Himself, but was meek towards all His Father's dispensations for Him. That is moral sublimity. In the spiritual world, the sense of the sublime is awakened by such a life as that of Abraham, or of the Apostle Paul, or of anyone going through the trial of their faith. "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." That is the most sublime utterance of faith in the Old Testament.

We are accustomed to think of honourable things in connection with the spiritual world, but there are honourable things in the natural world and in the moral world as well. We have the idea that God has only to do with the spiritual, and if the devil can succeed in keeping us with that idea, he will have a great deal of his own way; but Paul pushes the battle-line into every domain—"whatsoever things are honest, . . . think on these things," because behind them all is God.

(c) The Topic of the Things of Justice

Justice means rightness with God; nothing is just until it is adjusted to God. The justice of a law court is superficial exactitude between man and man. That is why we often rebel against the verdict of a law court, although its justice can be proved to the hilt. Paul is not referring to justice between man and man, but to the very essence of justice, and he knows no justice where God is ignored. The great exhibition of justice is Jesus Christ; there was no superficial exactitude in His life because He was perfectly at one with God. The standard all through the Sermon on the Mount is that of conduct arising from a right relationship to God. We say-"Oh well, I certainly would show a forgiving spirit to them if they would be right with me." Jesus said, "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Take any of the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount and you will find it is never put on the ground that because a man is right with me, therefore I will be the same to him, but always on the ground of a right relationship to Jesus Christ first, and then the showing of that same relationship to others. To look for justice from other people is a sign of deflection from devotion to Jesus Christ. Never look for justice, but never cease to give it. We think of justice in the most absurd connections—because people tread on our little notions, our sense of what is right, we call that injustice. When once we realise how we have behaved towards God all the days of our life until we became adjusted to Him through the Atonement, our attitude to our fellow men will be that of absolute humility (cf. Ephesians 4:32).

(d) The Topic of the Things of Purity

Purity is not innocence, it is much more. Purity means stainlessness, an unblemishedness that has stood the test. Purity is learned in private, never in public. Jesus Christ demands purity of mind and imagination, chastity of bodily and mental habits. The only men and women it is safe to trust are those who have been tried and have stood the test; purity is the outcome of conflict, not of necessity. You cannot trust innocence or natural goodness; you cannot trust possibilities. This explains Jesus Christ's attitude. Our Lord trusted no man (see John 2:24–25), yet He was never suspicious, never bitter; His confidence in what God's grace could do for any man was so perfect that He never despaired of anyone. If our trust is placed in human beings, we will end in despairing of every one.

But when we limit our thinking to the things of purity we shall think only of what God's grace has done in others, and put our confidence in that and in nothing else. Look back over your life and see how many times you have been pierced through with wounds, and all you can say when God deals with you is, "Well, it serves me right; over and over again God taught me not to trust in myself, not to put confidence in men, and yet I have persisted in doing it." God holds us responsible for being ignorant in these matters, and the cure for ignorance is to think along the lines Paul indicates here. It will mean that we shall never stand up for our own honour, or for the honour of others; we shall stand only for the honour and the dignity of the Lord Jesus Christ. Our temperamental outlook is altered by thinking; and when God alters the disposition, temperament begins to take its tone from the new disposition. These things are not done suddenly, they are only done gradually, by the stern discipline of the life under the teaching of the Spirit of God.

(e) The Topic of the Things of Loveliness

That is, the things that are morally agreeable and pleasant. The word "lovely" has the meaning of juicy and delicious. That is the definition given by Calvin, and he is supposed to be a moloch²² of severity! We have the idea that our duty must always be disagreeable, and we make any number of duties out of diseased sensibilities. If our duty is disagreeable, it is a sign that we are in a disjointed relationship to God. If God gave some people a fully sweet cup, they would go carefully into a churchyard and turn the cup upside down and empty it, and say, "No, that could never be meant for me." The idea has become incorporated into their make-up that their lot must always be miserable. Once we become rightly related to God, duty will never be a disagreeable thing of which we have to say with a sigh, "Oh, well, I must do my duty." Duty is the daughter of God. Never take your estimate of duty after a sleepless night, or after a dose of indigestion; take your sense of duty from the Spirit of God and the word of Jesus. There are people whose lives are diseased and twisted by a sense of duty which God never inspired; but once let them begin to think about the things of loveliness, and the healing forces that will come into their lives will be amazing. The very essence of godliness is in the things of loveliness; think about these things, says Paul.

(f) The Topic of the Things of Good Report

Literally, the things that have a fine face, a winning and attractive tone about them. What should we be like after a year of thinking on these things? We might not be fatter, but I am certain we should look pleasanter! When we do think about the things of good report we shall be astonished to realise where they are to be found; they are found where we only expected to find the opposite. When our eyes are fixed on Jesus Christ we begin to see qualities blossoming in the lives of others that we never saw there before. We see people whom we have tabooed and put on the other side exhibiting qualities we have never exhibited, although we call ourselves saved and sanctified. Never look for other people to be holy; it is a cruel thing to do, it distorts your view of yourself and of others. Could anyone have had a sterner view of sin than Jesus had, and yet had anyone a more loving, tender patience with the worst of men than He had? The difference in the attitude is that Jesus Christ never expected men to be holy; He knew they could not be: He came to make men holy. All He asks of men is that they acknowledge they are not right, then He will do all the rest—"Blessed are the poor in spirit." It comes back to the central message of Jesus Christ, "I, if I be lifted up . . . " If we preach anything other than "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," we make our doctrines God and ourselves the judge of others. Think of the times we have hindered the Spirit of God by trying to help others when only God could help them, because we have forgotten to discipline our own minds. It is the familiar truth that we have to be stern in proclaiming God's word, let it come out in all its rugged bluntness, unwatered down and unrefined; but when we deal with others we have to remember that we are sinners saved by grace. The tendency to-day is to do exactly the opposite, we make all kinds of excuses for God's word—"Oh God does not expect us to be perfect," and when we deal with people personally we are amazingly hard.

All these things lead us back to Jesus Christ—He is the Truth; He is the Honourable One; He is the Just One; He is the Pure One; He is the altogether Lovely One: He is the only One of Good Report. No matter where we start from, we will always come back to Jesus Christ.

The Frontiers of Christian Thinking

... if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

Paul seems to come to the conclusion that he has not made the area of thinking wide enough yet, so he says, "If there is any morally excellent thing, anything whatever to praise, anything recommendable, take account of it." We are apt to discard the virtues of those who do not know Jesus Christ and call them pagan virtues. Paul counsels, "If there is any virtue anywhere in the world, think about it," because the natural virtues are remnants of God's handiwork and will always lead to the one central Source, Jesus Christ. We have to form the habit of keeping our mental life on the line of the great and beautiful things Paul mentions. It is not a prescribed ground. It is we who make limitations and then blame God for them. Many of us behave like ostriches, we put our heads in the sand and forget altogether about the world outside—"I have had this and that experience and I am not going to think of anything else." After a while we have aches and pains in the greater part of ourselves, which is outside our heads, and then we find that God sanctifies every bit of us, spirit, soul and body. God grant we may get out into the larger horizons of God's Book.

^{22.} moloch: a tyrannical power requiring sacrifice to be appeased.

Always keep in contact with those books and those people that enlarge your horizon and make it possible for you to stretch yourself mentally. The Spirit of God is always the spirit of liberty; the spirit that is not of God is the spirit of bondage, the spirit of oppression and depression. The Spirit of God convicts vividly and tensely, but He is always the Spirit of liberty. God Who made the birds never made bird-cages; it is men who make bird-cages, and after a while we become cramped and can do nothing but chirp and stand on one leg. When we get out into God's great free life, we discover that that is the way God means us to live "the glorious liberty of the children of God."

THINKING GODLINESS

Philippians 4:5-8; 3:7-14

In physical life we do best those things we have habitually learned to do, and the same is true in mental and spiritual life. We do not come into the world knowing how to do anything; all we do we have acquired by habit. Remember, habit is purely mechanical.

Thinking Habits (Philippians 4:5)

Our thinking processes are largely subject to the law of habit. "Let your forbearance," i.e., self-control, "be known unto all men" (RV). Self-control is nothing more than a mental habit which controls the body and mind by a dominant relationship, viz.: the immediate presence of the Lord—for "the Lord is at hand." The danger in spiritual matters is that we do not think godliness; we let ideas and conceptions of godliness lift us up at times, but we do not form the habit of godly thinking. Thinking godliness cannot be done in spurts, it is a steady habitual trend. God does not give us our physical habits or our mental habits; He gives us the power to form any kind of habits we like, and in the spiritual domain we have to form the habit of godly thinking.

To a child the universe is a great confusing, amazing "outsideness"; when the child grows to be a man he has the same nervous system and brain, but the will has come in and determined his tendencies and impulses. It is natural for a child to be impulsive; but it is a disgraceful thing for a man or woman to be guided by impulse. To be a creature of impulse is the ruin of mental life. The one thing our Lord checked and disciplined in the disciples was impulse; the determining factor was to be their relationship to Himself.

We are so made that our physical life gives us an affinity with every material thing; our thinking life gives us affinity with everything in the mental realm, and it is the same with our moral and spiritual life. We are held responsible by God for the way we deal with the great mass of things that come into our lives. We all have susceptibilities in every direction; everyone is made in the same way as everyone else; consequently it is not true to say we cannot understand why some people like to devote themselves to pleasure, to races and dancing, etc. If we do not understand it, it is because part of our nature has become atrophied. Whatever one human being can do, either in the way of good or bad, any human being can do. There are things we must deny, but the negation that is the outcome of ignorance is of no value whatever to the character; the denial by will is of enormous value. "If thy right eye causeth thee to stumble, pluck it out, and cast it from thee . . ." (Matthew 5:29 RV); determine to select those elements of your conscious life that are going to tell for the characteristic of godliness.

Trending Habitually (Philippians 4:6)

We have to watch the trend of things. The trend of our conscious life is determined by us, not by God, and Paul makes the determining factor in the conscious life of a godly person the determination to pray. Prayer is not an emotion, not a sincere desire; prayer is the most stupendous effort of the will. "Let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus" (RV), the poising power of the peace of God will enable you to steer your course in the mix-up of ordinary life. We talk about "circumstances over which we have no control." None of us have control over our circumstances, but we are responsible for the way we pilot ourselves in the midst of things as they are. Two boats can sail in opposite directions in the same wind, according to the skill of the pilot. The pilot who conducts his vessel on to the rocks says he could not help it, the wind was in that direction; the one who took his vessel into the harbour had the same wind, but he knew how to trim his sails so that the wind conducted him in the direction he wanted. Never allow to yourself that you could not help this or that; and never say you reach anywhere in spite of circumstances; we all attain because of circumstances and no other way.

Let us not always say

Spite of this flesh to-day

I strove, made head, gained ground upon the whole!

Robert Browning

Touching Habitual Fundaments (Philippians 4:8)

There is a difference between thinking and grinding. Such subjects as languages or mathematics require grinding, and it is no use saying we have not the mental power to grind, we have; and the more we grind the more the mechanical part of our nature will come to our aid if we keep at it uninterruptedly. When it comes to matters of imagination, different faculties are needed. Some minds are more easily put on the grind than others, and some are more easily taught on the imaginative line than others. We have to discipline ourselves along both lines. Insubordination is another name for mental laziness. Watch the difference between listening to a language lesson and to a sermon or lecture; you will be worn out in no time by the former unless you have learned to grind; but with the latter, after a few sentences, your mind is kindled through the connection of previous thinking. It is not that we are gifted in this way but that we are created in this way. Paul insists on this very law. "... whatsoever things are true, . . . think on these things." Glean your thinking; don't allow your mind to be a harbourage for every kind of vagabond sentiment; resolutely get into the way of disciplining your impulses and stray thinking. The law of attention controls the mind and keeps it from shifting hither and thither.

The forming of a new habit is difficult until you get into the way of doing the thing, then everything you meet with aids you in developing along the right line. It is good practice to sit down for five minutes and do nothing; in that way you will soon discover how little control you have over yourself. In forming a new habit it is vitally important to insist on bringing the body under control first. Paul says, "I maul and master my body, lest, after preaching to other people, I am disqualified myself" (1 Corinthians 9:27 MOFFATT). The natural man is created by God as well as the new man in Christ, and the new man has to be manifested by the natural man in his mortal flesh. Paul puts it very practically in Romans 6:19, "Your members have been used to serve the disposition of sin; now that you are made free from sin, use your members to serve the disposition of righteousness." In 1 Corinthians 10:31 he puts it still more practically: "So whether you eat or drink, or whatever you do, let it be all done for the glory of God" (MOF-FATT). It is difficult to begin with, but as you go on you find it becomes easier until you are able not only to practise the presence of God in your spirit, but are able to prove by the habits of your actual life that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost.

Native and Acquired Interests (Philippians 3:7)

There are some subjects that are natively interesting and other subjects for which we have to acquire an interest. A child's mind is only natively interested; an adult mind if it is well formed has voluntarily acquired an interest in other subjects. We imagine that a native interest will develop into an acquired interest all at once, but it won't. It will only become a dominant interest when it has come into the very make-up of our being. Think of the things you are interested in today, the things that are really forming your mind, you can remember the time when you had no affinity with them at all, they awakened no interest in you. What has happened? The Spirit of God by the engineering of God's Providence has brought some word of His and connected it with your circumstances in such a way that the whole of your outlook is altered. "The old things are passed away; behold, they are become new" (2 Corinthians 5:17 RV). God alters the thing that matters.

The interests of a child are altogether in the senses, and in teaching a child you must begin by interesting him. The teacher who succeeds best with children is the one who does things before them; it is no use teaching children abstract stuff. That is why it is necessary in teaching a young life, whether young in years of the flesh or the spirit, for a teacher to attend more to what he does than to what he says. The crystallising point of our Lord's teaching lies here, and the reason our Lord condemned the Pharisees was that "they say, and do not." Everyone has a perfect right to come and ask those of us who teach whether we practise what we teach. The influence of our teaching is in exact proportion to our practical doing.

In Philippians 3:7–8, Paul states that he has flung overboard the things that were natively interesting to him in order to acquire other interests which at one time were of no value to him; and now the whole of his attention is set on Jesus Christ's idea for him, "I press on, if so be that I may apprehend, seeing that also I was apprehended [mg]" (Philippians 3:12 RV). A man can go through any drudgery under heaven to attain the object he has in view. Paul's object was to win Christ, and he counted "all things to be loss" (RV), and "suffered the loss of all things," counting them but refuse, to attain his object.

Nurturing Appreciation (Philippians 3:10)

These words never fail to awaken a thrill of emotion in the heart of every Christian, but the question arises "How can I become interested in these matters to the degree that the Apostle was interested in them?" The only way in which a truth can become of vital interest to me is when I am brought into the place where that truth is needed. Paul calls the people to whom the gospel is not vitally interesting, "dead"; but when once they are brought under conviction of sin, the one thing they will listen to is the thing they despised before, viz., the gospel. There is a difference between the way we try to appreciate the things of God and the way in which the Spirit of God teaches. We begin by trying to get fundamental conceptions of the creation and the world; why the devil is allowed; why sin exists. When the Spirit of God comes in He does not begin by expounding any of these subjects; He begins by giving us a dose of the plague of our own heart; He begins where our vital interests lie—in the salvation of our souls. In every Christian life spiritual sentiment is at times carried to the white heat of devotion, but the point is how can we so attend to these things that the devotion is there all the time. In spiritual life most of us progress like frogs; we jump well at times, but at other times we stay a long while in one place until God in His Providence tumbles up our circumstances. The Apostle Paul's life was not a frog jumping business, not a spasmodic life kept going by conventions and meetings, but an abiding, steadfast, attending life. If we are alive spiritually, the Spirit of God will continually prod us to attend to new phases of our salvation, and if we sit down, we sit on something that hurts. There will be always something that "bids nor sit nor stand but go!" The people who are of absolutely no use to God are those who have sat down and have become overgrown with spiritual mildew; all they can do is to refer to an experience they had twenty or thirty years ago. That is of no use whatever, we must be vitally at it all the time. With Paul it was never "an experience I once had," but "the life which I now live."

Negotiating Associations (Philippians 3:12-14)

We have to build up useful associations in our minds, to learn to associate things for ourselves, and it can only be done by determination. There are ideas associated in each of our minds that are not associated in the mind of anyone else, and this accounts for the difference in individuals. For instance, learn to associate the chair you sit in with nothing else but study; associate a selected secret place with nothing but prayer. We do not sufficiently realise the power we have to infect the places in which we live and work by our prevailing habits in those places.

The law of associated ideas applied spiritually means that we must drill our minds in godly connections. How many of us have learned to associate our summer holidays with God's Divine purposes? to associate the early dawn with the early dawn on the Sea of Galilee after the Resurrection? If we learn to associate ideas that are worthy of God with all that happens in Nature, our imagination will never be at the mercy of our impulses. Spiritually, it is not a different law that works, but the same law. When once we have become accustomed to connecting these things, every ordinary occurrence will serve to fructify our minds in godly thinking because we have developed our minds along the lines laid down by the Spirit of God. It is not done once for always; it is only done always. Never imagine that the difficulty of doing these things belongs peculiarly to you, it belongs to every one. The character of a person is nothing more than the habitual form of his associations.

Learn to beware of marginal pre-occupations that continually provoke other associations. For instance, there are people who cultivate the margin of vision; they look at you, but out of the margin of their eye they are really occupied with something else all the time; and in the mental realm there are people who never pay attention to the subject immediately in hand, but only to the marginal subjects round about. Spiritually there is the same danger. Jesus Christ wants us to come to the place where we see things from His standpoint and are identified with His interests only. "My one thought is, by forgetting what lies behind me and straining to what lies before me, to press on to the goal . . ." (MOFFATT).

Concentration is the law of life mentally, morally and spiritually.

THE MIND OF CHRIST

Philippians 2:5-8

Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus . . . (RV)

We are apt to forget that the mind of Christ is super natural, His mind is not a human mind at all. Never run away with the idea that because you have the Spirit of Christ, therefore you have His mind. God gives us the Spirit of Jesus, but He does not give us His mind; we have to construct the mind of Christ, and it can only be done as we work out in the habits of a holy life the things that were familiar in the life of our Lord. We cannot form the mind of Christ once for always; we have to form it always; that is, all the time and in everything. "Acquire your soul," i.e., the new way of looking at things, "with patience" (see Luke 21:19), and learn never to say fail! When God re-creates us in Christ Iesus He does not patch us up; He makes us "a new creation" (RV mg). Every power of our being is no longer to be used at the dictates of our right to ourselves, but to be subordinated to the Spirit of God in us Who will enable us to form the mind of Christ.

The type of mind Paul urges us to form is prescribed clearly—the mind of true humility; the mind "which was also in Christ Jesus" when He was on this earth, utterly self-effaced and self-emptied; not the mind of Christ when He was in glory. Humility is the exhibition of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, and is the touchstone of saintliness.

His Deity and Our Dependence

Who, being [originally] in the form of God, counted it not a thing to be grasped [mg] to be on an equality with God...(RV)

Paul precludes the idea that Jesus thought nothing of Himself: our Lord thought truly of Himself. There was no assertion in any shape or form, and no presumption. It was along this line that Satan tempted Him—"Remember Who You are: You are the Son of God; then assert the prerogative of Sonship—command that these stones become bread; do something supernatural—cast Yourself down from hence."

It was a temptation to the fulfilment of the Incarnation by a "short cut." Each time the temptation came, our Lord "blunted" it: "I did not come here to assert Myself; I came for God's will to be done through Me in His own way" (see John 6:38). Paul connects the two things—"on an equality with God": "not a thing to be grasped." Our Lord never once asserted His dignity, He never presumed on it.

When we are sanctified, the same temptation comes to us-"You are a child of God, saved and sanctified, presume on it, think it something to be grasped." As long as our thought is fixed on our experience instead of on the God Who gave us the experience, the habit of making nothing of ourselves is an impossibility. If we think only along the line of our experience we become censorious, not humble. Sanctification is the gateway to a sanctified life, not to boasting about an experience. The habit of forming the mind of Christ will always make us obey our Lord and Master as He obeyed His Father, and there are whole domains of natural life to be brought under the control of this habit. It is not sinful to have a body and a natural life; if it were, it would be untrue to say that Jesus Christ was sinless, because He had a body and was placed in a natural life; but He continually sacrificed His natural life to the word and the will of His Father and made it a spiritual life, and we have to form the same habit. It is the discipline of a lifetime; we cannot do it all at once. We are absolutely dependent, and yet, strange to say, the last thing we learn spiritually is to make nothing of ourselves.

but emptied Himself...(RV)

Jesus Christ effaced the God head in Himself so effectually that men without the Spirit of God despised Him. No one without the Spirit of God, or apart from a sudden revelation from God, ever saw the true Self of Jesus while He was on earth. He was "as a root out of a dry ground," thoroughly disadvantaged in the eyes of everyone not convicted of sin. The reference in 2 Corinthians 8:9 is not to a wealthy man becoming poor, but to a wealthy God becoming poor for men. Our Lord is the time-representation of a Self-disglorified God. The purpose of the Incarnation was not to reveal the beauty and nobility of human nature, but in order to remove sin from human nature. To those who seek after wisdom the preaching of Christ crucified is foolishness; but when a man knows that his life is twisted, that the mainspring is wrong, he is in the state of heart and mind to understand why it was necessary for God to become Incarnate. The doctrine of the Self-limitation of Jesus is clear to our hearts first, not to our heads. We cannot form the mind of Christ unless we have His Spirit, nor can we understand our Lord's teaching apart from His Spirit. We cannot see through it; but when once we receive His Spirit we know implicitly what He means. Things which to the intellect may be hopelessly bewildering are lustrously clear to the heart of the humble saint (see Matthew 11:25).

taking the form of a servant . . . (RV)

Our Lord took upon Him habitually the part of a slave: "I am among you as he that serveth"; consequently He could be "put upon" to any extent, unless His Father prevented it (cf. John 19:11); or His Father's honour was at stake (cf. Mark 11:15–19). It was our Lord's right to be "in the form of God," but He renounced that right and took the form of a "bondservant" (RV mg), not the form of a noble man, but of a slave. Our Lord crowned the words that the powers of this world detest—"servant," "obedience," "humility," "service."

being made in the likeness of men . . . (RV)

That is, in "the likeness of sinful flesh" (Romans 8:3). The assimilation was as complete as our Lord's sinlessness would permit, and gave Him so truly human a life that by His fulfilling all righteousness in the face of temptation, He "condemned sin in the flesh."

The nature was sinless in Him because He was sinless in it, not vice versa. . . . Jesus Christ does not stand for an originally holy human nature, but a sanctified or made-holy human nature.

Du Bose

The first Adam came in the flesh, not in sinful flesh: Jesus Christ, the last Adam, came on the plane of the first Adam; He partook of our nature but not of our sin. By His mighty Atonement He can lift us into the Kingdom in which He lived while He was on this earth so that we may be able to live a life freed from sin. That is the practical point the Apostle Paul is making.

... and being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross. (RV)

Right at the threshold of His manhood our Lord took upon Him His vocation, which was to bear away the sin of the world—by identification, not by sympathy (John 1:29). Our Lord's object in becoming Deity Incarnate was to redeem mankind, and Satan's final onslaught in the Garden of Gethsemane was against our Lord as Son of Man, viz., that the purpose of His Incarnation would fail. The profundity of His agony has to do with the fulfilling of His destiny. The Cross is a triumph for the Son of Man; any and every man has freedom of access straight to the throne of God by right of what our Lord accomplished through His death on the Cross. Though he was a Son, He learned obedience as a Saviour by the things which He suffered, and thereby became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him.

"He was crucified through weakness." Jesus Christ represents God limiting His own power for one purpose: He died for the weak, for the ungodly, for sinners, and for no one else. "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." No chain is stronger than its weakest link. In one aspect Jesus Christ became identified with the weakest thing in His own creation, a Baby; in another aspect He went to the depths of a bad man's hell, consequently from the babe to the vilest criminal Jesus Christ's substitution tells for salvation, nothing can prevail against Him.

The first thing the Spirit of God does in us is to efface the things we rely upon naturally. Paul argues this out in Philippians 3, he catalogues who he is and the things in which he might have confidence, "but," he says, "I deliberately renounce all these things that I may gain Christ." The continual demand to consecrate our gifts to God is the devil's counterfeit for sanctification. We have a way of saying—"What a wonderful power that man or woman would be in God's service." Reasoning on man's broken virtues makes us fix on the wrong thing. The only way any man or woman can ever be of service to God is when he or she is willing to renounce all their natural excellencies and determine to be weak in Him—"I am here for one thing only, for Jesus Christ to manifest Himself in me." That is to be the steadfast habit of a Christian's life. Whenever we think we are of use to God, we hinder Him. We have to form the habit of letting God carry on His work through us without let or hindrance²³ as He did through Jesus, and He will use us in ways He dare not let us see. We have to efface every other thought but that of Jesus Christ. It is not done once for all; we have to be always doing it. If once you have seen that Jesus Christ is All in all, make the habit of letting Him be All in all. It will mean that you not only have implicit faith that He is All in all, but that you go through the trial of your faith and prove that He is. After sanctification God delights to put us into places where He can make us wealthy. Jesus Christ counts as service not what we do for Him, but what we are to Him, and the inner secret of that is identity with Him in person. "That I may know Him."

His Dedication and Our Discipline

"And for their sakes I sanctify Myself" (John 17:19). How does that statement of our Lord fit in with our idea of sanctification? Sanctification must never be made synonymous with purification; Jesus Christ had no need of purification, and yet He used the word "sanctify." In the words, "I sanctify Myself," Jesus gives the key to the saint's life. Self is not sinful; if it were, how could Jesus say "I sanctify Myself"? Jesus Christ had no sin to deny, no wrong self to deny; He had only a holy Self. It was that Self He denied all the time, and it was that Self that Satan tried to make Him obey. What could be holier than the will of the holy Son of God? and yet all through He said, "not as I will, but as Thou wilt." It was the denying of His holy Self that made the marvellous beauty of our Lord's life.

^{23.} without let or hindrance: legal phrase meaning "without obstacle or impediment."

If we have entered into the experience of sanctification, what are we doing with our holy selves? Do we every morning we waken thank God that we have a self to give to Him, a self that He has purified and adjusted and baptised with the Holy Ghost so that we might sacrifice it to Him? Sacrifice in its essence is the exuberant passionate love-gift of the best I have to the one I love best. The best gift the Son of God had was His Holy Manhood, and He gave that as a love-gift to God that He might use it as an Atonement for the world. He poured out His soul unto death, and that is to be the characteristic of our lives. God is at perfect liberty to waste us if He chooses. We are sanctified for one purpose only, that we might sanctify our sanctification and give it to God.

One of the dangers of present-day teaching is that it makes us turn our eyes off Jesus Christ on to ourselves, off the Source of our salvation on to salvation itself. The effect of that is a morbid, hypersensitive life, totally unlike our Lord's life, it has not the passion of abandon that characterised Him. The New Testament never allows for a moment the idea that continually crops up in modern spiritual teaching-"I have to remember that I am a specimen of what God can do." That is inspired by the devil, never by the Spirit of God. We are not here to be specimens of what God can do, but to have our life so hid with Christ in God that our Lord's words will be true of us, that men beholding our good works will glorify our Father in heaven. There was no "show business" in the life of the Son of God, and there is to be no "show business" in the life of the saint. Concentrate on God, let Him engineer circumstances as He will, and wherever He places you He is binding up the brokenhearted through you, setting at liberty the captives through you, doing His mighty soul-saving work through you, as you keep rightly related to Him. Self-conscious service is killed, self-conscious devotion is gone, only one thing remains—"witnesses unto Me," Jesus Christ first, second and third.

"The Father abiding in Me doeth His works" (John 14:10 RV). Our Lord habitually submitted His will to His Father, that is, He engineered nothing but left room for God. The modern trend is dead against this submission; we do engineer, and engineer with all the sanctified ingenuity we have, and when God suddenly bursts in in an expected way, we are taken unawares. It is easier to engineer things than determinedly to submit all our powers to God. We say we must do all we can: Jesus says we must let God do all He can.

"As the Father taught Me, I speak these things" (John 8:28 RV). The secret of our Lord's holy speech was that He habitually submitted His intelligence to His Father. Whenever problems pressed on the human side, as they did in the temptation, our Lord had within Himself the Divine remembrance that every problem had been solved in counsel with His Father before He became Incarnate (cf. Revelation 13:8), and that therefore the one thing for Him was to do the will of His Father, and to do it in His Father's way. Satan tried to hasten Him, tried to make Him face the problems as a Man and do God's will in His own way: "The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father doing" (John 5:19 RV).

Are we intellectually insubordinate, spiritually stiff-necked, dictating to God in pious phraseology what we intend to let Him make us, hunting through the Bible to back up our pet theories? Or have we learned the secret of submitting our intelligence and our reasoning to Jesus Christ's word and will as He submitted His mind to His Father?

The danger with us is that we will only submit our minds to New Testament teaching where the light of our experience shines. "If we walk in the light"—as our experience is in the light? No, "if we walk in the light as He is in the light . . . "We have to keep in the light that God is in, not in the rays of the light of our experience. There are phases of God's truth that cannot be experienced, and as long as we stay in the narrow grooves of our experience we shall never become Godlike, but specialists of certain doctrines—Christian oddities. We have to be specialists in devotion to Jesus Christ and in nothing else. If we want to know Jesus Christ's idea of a saint and to find out what holiness means, we must not only read pamphlets about sanctification, we must face ourselves with Jesus Christ, and as we do so He will make us face ourselves with God. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." When once the truth lays hold of us that we have to be God-like, it is the death-blow for ever to attempting things in our own strength. The reason we do attempt things in our own strength is that we have never had the vision of what Jesus Christ wants us to be. We have to be God-like, not good men and women. There are any number of good men and women who are not Christians.

The life of sanctification, of service and of sacrifice, is the threefold working out in our bodies of the life of Jesus until the supernatural life is the only life. These are truths that cannot be learned; they can only be habitually lived.

OUR LORD ON HOW TO THINK

Matthew 6:19-24

We so readily look upon our Lord as Saviour in the fundamental way that we are apt to forget He is much more than Saviour, He is Teacher as well. In the same way we are familiar with the fact that all Christians have the Spirit of Christ, but not all Christians have the mind of Christ. We balk this because we do not care to go into the laboriousness of forming His mind. We all have times of inspiration and ecstasy, but in these verses our Lord is not talking of times of ecstasy, but of the deliberate set of the life all through. God does His great sovereign works of grace in us and He expects us to bring all the powers under our control into harmony with what He has done. It is an arduous and difficult task, it is not done easily; and remember, God does not do it for us. We have to transform into real thinking possession for ourselves all that the Spirit of God puts into our spirits. The last reach of spirituality is the thinking power, i.e., the power to express what moves our spirit.

The Depository of Thought (Matthew 6:19-21)

Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon the earth, . . . but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven . . . (Matthew 6:19–20 RV)

We have to lay up treasure for ourselves, it is not laid up for us; and we have to lay it up in heaven, not on earth. To begin with, we do lay up the treasure of Jesus Christ's salvation on earth, we lay it up in our bodily lives, in our circumstances; and the curse spiritually is to lay up treasure in experience. Whatever we possess in the way of treasure on earth is liable to be consumed by moth and rust. Our Lord's counsel is to lay up treasure that never can be touched, and the place where it is laid up cannot be touched. "And made us to sit with Him in the heavenly places, in Christ Jesus" (Ephesians 2:6 RV). No moth nor rust in the heavenly places, no possibility of thieves breaking through there. When we lay up treasure on earth it may go at any moment, but when we learn to lay up treasure in heaven, nothing can touch it—"therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed. . . . " It is perfectly secure.

Our Lord kept all His treasure of heart and mind and spirit in His oneness with the Father; He laid up treasure in heaven, not on earth. Our Lord never possessed anything for Himself (cf. 2 Corinthians 8:9). The temptation of Satan was to get Him to lay up things in the earthly treasury, viz., in His own body, and to draw from that source: "You are the Son of God, command these stones to be made bread; cast Yourself down and Your Father will send His angels to take care of you." Our Lord never drew power from Himself, He drew it always from without Himself, that is, from His Father. "The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do" (John 5:19). The one great interest in our Lord's life was God, and He was never deflected from that centre by other considerations, not even by the devil himself, however subtly he came. "I and my Father are one." It was a oneness not of union, but of identity. It was impossible to distinguish between the Father and the Son, and the same is to be true of the saint and the Saviour: "that they may be one, even as We are one."

Examine your own experience as a saint and see where your treasure is: is it in the Lord, or in His blessings? In the degree that we possess anything for ourselves we are separated from Jesus. So many of us are caught up in the shows of things, not in the way of property and possessions, but of blessings, and all our efforts to persuade ourselves that our treasure is in heaven is a sure sign that it is not. If our treasure is in heaven we do not need to persuade ourselves that it is, we prove it is by the way we deal with matters of earth. The religion of Jesus Christ is a religion of personal relationship to God and has nothing to do with possessions. A sense of possessions is sufficient to render us spiritually dense because what we possess often possesses us. Whenever our Lord spoke of "life" He meant the kind of life He lived, and He says, "ye have not [this] life in yourselves" (John 6:53 RV). Are we living the kind of life Jesus lived, with the skylights always open towards God, the windows of the ground floor open towards men, and the trap-door open towards sin and Satan and hell? Nothing was hidden from Jesus, all was faced with fearless courage because of His oneness with the Father.

"For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also..." The Bible term "heart" is best understood if we simply say "me," it is the central citadel of a man's personality. The heart is the altar of which the physical body is the outer court, and whatever is offered on the altar of the heart will tell ultimately through the extremities of the body. "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life."

Where do we make our depository of thinking? What do we brood on most, the blessings of God, or God Himself? Look back over your life as a saint and you will see how the weaning has gone on from the blessing to the Blesser, from sanctification to the Sanctifier. When we no longer seek God for His blessings, we have time to seek Him for Himself.

The Division of Thinking (Matthew 6:22-23)

The lamp of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light . . . (Matthew 6:22 RV)

The eye records exactly what it looks at, and conscience may be called the eye of the soul. A "single²⁴ eye" is essential to correct understanding spiritually. If the spirit is illumined by a conscience which has been rightly adjusted, then, says Jesus, the whole body is full of light because body, soul and spirit are united in a single identity with Himself. Beware of mistaking domination for identity. Identity is a oneness between two distinct persons in which neither person dominates, but the oneness dominates both. The only way this can be realised is along the line of our Lord's own life. Jesus Christ's first obedience was to the will of His Father, and our first obedience is to be to Him. The thing that detects where we live spiritually is the word "obey." The natural heart of man hates the word, and that hatred is the essence of the disposition that will not let Jesus Christ rule. The characteristic of our Lord's life was submission to His Father, not the crushing down of His own will to His Father's, but the love-agreement of His will with His Father's—"I am here for one thing only, to do Thy will, and I delight to do it." When the Holy Spirit comes into us, the first thing He does is to make us men and women with a single motive, a "single eye" for the glory of God. The essential element in the life of a saint is simplicity-"thy whole body shall be full of light."

"But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness..." What is an evil eye? Thinking that springs from our own point of view. "Is thine eye evil, because I am good?" (Matthew 20:15). Jesus says that if our eye is evil, we shall misjudge what He does. If our spirits are untouched by God's Spirit, unillumined by God, the very light we have will become darkness. The disposition of the natural man, my claim to my right to myself, banks on things of which our Lord makes nothing, e.g., possessions, rights, self-realisation; and if that disposition rules, it will cause the whole body to be full of darkness. Darkness in this connection is our own point of view; light is God's point of view (cf. 1 John 1:7).

We deal much too lightly with sin; we deal with sin only in its gross actual form and rarely deal with it in its possessing form. "Howbeit, I had not known sin, except through the law: for I had not known coveting, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet" (Romans 7:7 RV). This inheritance of covetousness is the very essence of sin, and the only thing that can touch it is the Atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is an aspect of sin which is not familiar to us. We must never lay the flattering unction to our souls that because we are not covetous of money or worldly possessions, we are not covetous of anything. Whatever we possess for ourselves is of the nature of sin. The fuss and distress of owning anything is the last remnant of the disposition of sin; whatever we own as Christians apart from Jesus Christ is a chance for the devil.

The Decisions of the Thinker

... No man can serve two masters. ... Ye cannot serve God and mammon. (Matthew 6:24)

Have we allowed these inexorable decisions of our Lord to have their powerful way in our thinking? The line of detachment runs all through our Lord's teaching: You cannot be good and bad at the same time; you cannot serve God and make your own out of the service; you cannot make "honesty is the best policy" a motive, because immediately you do, you cease to be honest. There is to be only one consideration, a right relationship with God, and we must see that that relationship is never dimmed. Never compromise with the spirit of mammon. It is easy to associate mammon only with sordid things; mammon is the system of civilised life which organises itself without any consideration of God (cf. Luke 16:15).

To be detached from our possessions is the greatest evidence that we are beginning to form the mind of Christ. If it is possible to conceive being caused sore distress through the withdrawal of any particular form of blessing, it is a sure sign that we are still trying to serve two masters. For instance, can we say, not with our lips, but with our whole souls, "For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren"? Have we for one second got hold of the spirit that was in Paul when he said that, the very spirit of Jesus? Neither fear of hell nor hope of heaven has anything to do with our personal relationship to Jesus Christ, it is a life hid with Christ in God, stripped of all possessions saving the knowledge of Him. The great lodestar of the life is Jesus Himself, not anything He does for us.

This kind of thinking is impossible until we are spiritual, and when we become spiritual we realise how completely our thinking has been reconstructed. Watch God's method of teaching us to think along the lines He has taken our spirits by His grace. In the initial stages we learn that we cannot serve two masters by recognising the disposition that Paul calls "the carnal mind," and are only too passionately grateful to come to the place where we know that that disposition is identified with the death of Jesus (Romans 6:6). No wonder Paul says "the carnal mind is enmity against God"; he does not say it is "at enmity," it is enmity against God. The carnal mind is the brother of the devil; he is all right until you bring him in contact with Jesus, but immediately you do he is a chip of the old block, he hates with an intense vehemence everything to do with Jesus Christ and His Spirit. "My right to myself" is the carnal mind in essence, and we need a clear thinking view of what it means to be delivered from this disposition. It means that just as our personality used to exhibit a ruling disposition identical with the prince of this world, so the same personality can now exhibit an identity with the Lord Jesus Christ. Sanctification means that and nothing less. Sanctification is not once for all, but once for always. Sanctification is an instantaneous, continuous work of grace. If we think of sanctification as an experience once for all, there is an element of finality about it; we begin the hop, skip and jump testimony, "Bless God, I am saved and sanctified," and from that second we begin to get "scantified." Sanctification means we have the glorious opportunity of proving daily, hourly, momentarily, this identity with Jesus Christ, and the life bears an unmistakable likeness to Him. The religion of Jesus Christ makes a man united, we are never meant to develop one part of our being at the cost of another part. When we are united with Jesus He garrisons every part, "and that wicked one toucheth him not."

Another way by which we learn that we cannot serve two masters is by putting away the aim of successful service for ever. When the seventy returned with joy, our Lord said, in effect, "Don't rejoice that the devils are subject unto you, that is My authority through you; but rejoice that you are rightly related to Me." It is sadly true that after an experience of sanctification many do try and serve two masters, they go into the joy of successful service, and slowly the eye becomes fixed on the sanctified "show business" instead of on Jesus Himself. The only illustrations our Lord used of service were those of the vine (John 15:1–6), and the rivers of living water (John 7:37–39). It is inconceivable to think of the vine delighting in its own grapes; all that the vine is conscious of is the husbandman's pruning knife. All that the one out of whom rivers of living water are flowing is conscious of is belief in Jesus, and maintaining a right relationship to Him. Are we bringing forth fruit? We certainly are if we are identified with the Lord, luscious bunches of grapes for the Husbandman to do what He likes with. Pay attention to the Source, believe in Jesus, and God will look after the outflow. God grant we may let the Holy Ghost work out His passion for souls through us. We have not to imitate Jesus by having a passion for souls like His, but to let the Holy Ghost so identify us with Jesus that His mind is expressed through us as He expressed the mind of God.

Do we recognise Jesus Christ as our Teacher, or are we being led by vague spiritual impulses of our own? We have to learn to bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ, and never be intellectually insubordinate. The teaching of Jesus Christ fits every point of a saint's life, but no point of the life of a natural man. If we apply these statements—"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness. . . . " "Take no thought for your life. ..."—to the life of a natural man, they are open to ridicule. We reverse God's order when we put Jesus as a Teacher first instead of Saviour; but when we are rightly related to God on the basis of the Atonement and begin to put Jesus Christ's teaching into practise, the marvel of marvels is we find it can be worked out. If we as saints are strenuously seeking first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, His "in-therightness," all the time, we shall find not only the Divine un-reason of things, but the Divine reason of things working out beyond all our calculations— "and all these things shall be added unto you"; "for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things."

Never allow anything to fuss your relationship to Jesus Christ, neither Christian work, nor Christian blessing, nor Christian anything. Jesus Christ first, second and third; and God Himself by the great indwelling power of the Spirit within will meet the strenuous effort on your part, and slowly and surely you will form the mind of Christ and become one with Him as He was one with the Father. The practical test is—"Is Jesus Christ being manifested in my bodily life?"

EDUCATION IN HOLY HABIT

Psalms 86:11; 143:10

Educative Evangelism versus Emotional Evangelism

After a great crisis, such as an experience of salvation or sanctification, the danger is that we fix ourselves there and become spiritual prigs. A spiritual prig is one who has had an experience from God and has closed down on it, there is no further progress, no manifestation of the graces of the Spirit. The world pours contempt on that kind of Christian; they seem to have very little conscience, no judgement, and little will. We have to remember that unless we are energised by the Spirit of God, the margins of our spirits retain the damage done by the Fall.

By the Fall man not only died from God but fell into disunion with himself; that means it became possible for man to live in one of the three parts of his nature. What happens at new birth is that a man is not only introduced into a relationship to God, but into union with himself. The one thing that is essential to the new life is obedience to the Spirit of God Who energises our spirits, and that obedience must be complete in body, soul and spirit. It is not done suddenly. Salvation is sudden, but the working of it out in our lives is never sudden. It is moment by moment, here a little and there a little. God educates us down to the scruple. The area of our conscious life gradually gets broader and broader, and we begin to bring into line with the new life things we never thought of before.

We have to remember that we have a bodily machine which we must regulate, God does not regulate it for us. Until we learn to bring the bodily machine into harmony with God's Will, there will be friction, and the friction is a warning that part of the machine is not in working order. As we bring our bodily life into line bit by bit we shall find that we have God's marvellous grace on the inside enabling us to work out what He has worked in.

The Habit of a Refined Conscience (Psalm 86:11)

Teach me Thy way, O LORD.

Conscience is that power in a man's soul that fixes on what he regards as the highest. Never call conscience the voice of God. If it were, it would be the most contradictory voice man ever listened to. For instance, Saul of Tarsus obeyed his conscience when he hounded men and women to death for worshipping Jesus Christ, and he also obeyed his conscience when later on in his life he acted in exactly the opposite way (see John 16:2; Acts 26:9).

(a) Regulated after Sin (1 Timothy 1:12-15)

After the disposition of sin is removed there is the need for conscience to be regulated. The Spirit of God always begins by repairing the damage after sin. The Apostle Paul argues in Romans 6, "You did use your members as servants of the wrong disposition, now use them as servants of the right disposition." It is a long way to go and many of us faint in the way. After a great spiritual crisis a man's conscience looks out towards God in a new light, the light which Jesus Christ throws upon God, and he has to walk in that light and bring his bodily life into harmony with what his conscience records.

Sin is the disposition of my right to myself, and it is also independence of God. These two aspects of sin are strikingly brought out in the Bible. Sin has to be dealt with from the ethical and intellectual aspect as well as from the spiritual aspect. The way sin works in connection with the life of the soul is in independence of God. Many people are never guilty of gross sins, they are not brought up in that way, they are too refined, have too much good taste; but that does not mean that the disposition to sin is not there. The essence of sin is my claim to my right to myself. I may prefer to live morally because it is better for me: I am responsible to no one, my conscience is my god. That is the very essence of sin. The true characteristic of sin is seen when we compare ourselves with Jesus Christ. We may feel quite happy and contented as long as we compare ourselves with other people, because we are all pretty much the same; but when we stand before Jesus Christ we realise what He meant when He said, "If I had not come, . . . they had not had sin: but now they have no cloke for their sin."

There is a difference between a refined conscience towards God and the fussy conscience of a hyperconscientious person without the Spirit of God. Hyperconscientious people are an absolute plague to live with, they are morally and spiritually nervous, always in terror expecting something to happen, always expecting trials, and they always come. Jesus Christ was never morally or spiritually nervous any more than He was physically nervous. The refinement of conscience in a Christian means learning to walk in accordance with the life of the Lord Jesus, drawing from God as He did. It is a life of absolute largeness and freedom.

(b) Restored after Prejudice (Acts 26:4-5)

Prejudice means a foreclosed judgement without sufficiently weighing the evidence. When first we get right with God we are all prejudiced, ugly and distorted.

When we come up against a prejudice we are stubborn and obstinate, and God leaves us alone; then the prejudice comes up again, and God waits, until at last we say "I see," and we learn how to be restored after our prejudices. Wherever there is a prejudice, the grace of God is hammering at it to break it down. The havoc in lives that are going on with God is accounted for because they are being restored after prejudice. Wherever you find a prejudice in yourself, take it to Jesus Christ. Our Lord is the only standard for prejudice, as He is the only standard for sin. Our Lord never worked from prejudice, never foreclosed His judgement without weighing the evidence. Are we letting God restore us after prejudice, or are we tied up in compartments? "I have always worshipped God in this way and I always intend to." Be careful! "I have always believed this and that, and I always shall." Be careful!

It is easier to be true to convictions formed in a vivid religious experience than to be true to Jesus Christ, because if we are going true to Jesus Christ our convictions have to be altered. Unless our experiences lead us on to a life, they will turn us into fossils; we will become mummified gramophones of convictions instead of "witnesses unto Me." Some of us are no good unless we are placed in the circumstances in which our convictions were formed; but God continually stirs up our circumstances and flings us out to make us know that the only simplicity is not the simplicity of a logical belief, but of a maintained relationship with Jesus Christ, and that is never altered in any circumstances. We must keep in unbroken touch with God by faith, and see that we give other souls the same freedom and liberty that God gives us. The duty of every Christian, and it is the last lesson we learn, is to make room for God to deal with other people direct; we will try and limit others and make them into our mould.

(c) Roused after Compromise (1 Thessalonians 2:10–12)

In the temptation of our Lord the compromise for good ends is pictured, "Don't be so stern against sin; compromise judiciously with evil and You will easily win Your Kingship of men." When we become rightly related to God our intellect is apt to say exactly the same thing, "Don't be narrow; don't be so pronounced against worldliness, you will upset your friends." Well, upset them, but never upset the main thing that God is after. There is always the tendency to compromise and we have to be roused up to recognise it. We have to walk in very narrow paths before God can trust us to walk in the wide ones. We have to be limited before we can be un-limited.

The Bible nowhere teaches us to be uncompromising in our opinions. Jesus did not say, "Leap for joy when men separate you from their company for the sake of your convictions"; He said, "Leap for joy when men cast out your name as evil, for the Son of Man's sake." I may be such a pig-headed cross-patch, and have such determined notions of my own, that no one can live with me. That is not suffering for the Son of Man's sake, it is suffering for my own sake. Never compromise with anything that would detract from the honour of the Lord. Remember that the honour of Jesus is at stake in your bodily life and rouse yourself up to act accordingly.

The Habit of Reliable Judgement (Psalm 143:10)

Teach me to do Thy will.

Our conscience may be right towards God, and yet we may err in judgement. When the disposition has been perfectly adjusted towards God, it does not mean we have a perfectly adjusted body and brain; we have the same body and brain as before and we have to bring them into line until we form the judgement that is according to Jesus Christ. Many of us are impulsive spiritually and we live to be sorry for it. We have to form the habit of reliable judgement. God never gives us reliable judgement; He gives us a disposition which leads to a perfect judgement if we will work out that disposition.

(a) The Disciplined Imagination (2 Corinthians 10:5)

We have to practise the submitting of our intelligence to Jesus Christ in His word. The imagination of a saint too often is vague and intractable. We have to learn to bring every thought and imagination into captivity to the obedience of Christ. An undisciplined imagination will destroy reliable judgement more quickly even than sin. Mental and spiritual insubordination is the mark of to-day. Jesus Christ submitted His intelligence to His Father. Do I submit my intelligence to Jesus Christ and His word?

(b) The Illuminated Judgement (1 Corinthians 4:5) We have to learn to see things from Jesus Christ's standpoint. Our judgement is warped in every particular in which we do not allow it to be illuminated by Iesus Christ. For instance, if we listen to what our Lord says about money we shall see how we disbelieve Him. We quietly ignore all He says, He is so unpractical, so utterly stupid from the modern standpoint. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Which one of us believes that? If we are the children of God He will bring us into circumstances where we will be tested on every line to see whether we will form the habit of reliable judgement. We have to learn to see things from Jesus Christ's standpoint. He says, "All power is given unto Me. . . . " The illumination of judgement comes personally when we recognise that the evil and wrong in our sphere of life is there not by accident, but in order that the power of God may come in contact with it as His power has come into us. When we come into contact with objectionable people the first natural impulse of the heart is to ask God to save them because they are a trial to us; He will never do it for that reason. But when we come to see those lives from Jesus Christ's standpoint and realise that He loves them as He loves us, we have a different relationship to them, and God can have His way in their lives in answer to our prayer.

(c) The Resourcefulness of Tact (1 Corinthians 9:19-23)

It is instructive to notice the way our Lord dealt with different people. In every case where He did not find bigotry He won them straight away. When we first become rightly related to God we have the idea that we have to talk to everyone, until we get one or two well deserved snubs; then our Lord takes us aside and teaches us His way of dealing with them. How impatient we are in dealing with others! Our attitude implies that we think God is asleep. When we begin to reason and work in God's way, He reminds us first of all how long it took Him to get us where we are, and we realise His amazing patience and we learn to come on other lives from above. As we learn to rely on the Spirit of God He gives us the resourcefulness of Jesus.

The Habit of a Rectified Will (Psalm 86:11) Unite my heart to fear Thy name.

Never look upon the will as something you possess as you do a watch. Will is the whole man active. Education in holy habit is along this line: at first we pray "Teach me Thy way, O Lord"; then we pray, "Teach me to do Thy will," and step by step God teaches us what is His will; then comes a great burst of joy, "I delight to do Thy will! There is nothing on earth I delight in more than in Thy will." When we become rightly related to God we are the will of God in disposition, and we have to work out God's will; it is the freest, most natural life imaginable. Worldly people imagine that the saints must find it difficult to live with so many restrictions, but the bondage is with the world, not with the saints. There is no such thing as freedom in the world, and the higher we go in the social life the more bondage there is. True liberty exists only where the soul has the holy scorn of the Holy Ghost—I will bow my neck to no yoke but the yoke of the Lord Jesus Christ; there is only one law, and that is the law of God.

(a) The Joy of Jesus (John 15:11)

The joy of Jesus lay in knowing that every power of His nature was in such harmony with His Father that He did His Father's will with delight. Some of us are slow to do God's will; we do it as if our shoes were iron and lead; we do it with a great sigh and with the corners of our mouths down, as if His will were the most arduous thing on earth. But when our wills are rectified and brought into harmony with God, it is a delight, a superabounding joy, to do God's will. Talk to a saint about suffering and he looks at you in amazement—"Suffering? Where does it come in?" It comes in on God's side along the line of interpretation; on the side of the saint it is an overwhelming delight in God; not delight in suffering, but if God's will should lead through suffering, there is delight in His will.

(b) The Bent of Obedience (John 15:14)

Each one of us has to rule, to exercise some authority. When we have learned the obedience to God which was manifested in our Lord, we shall govern the world. Self-chosen authority is an impertinence. Jesus said that the great ones in this world exercise authority but that in His Kingdom it is not so; no one exercises authority over another because in His Kingdom the King is Servant of all (see Luke 22:24–27). If a saint tries to exercise authority it is a proof that he is not rightly related to Jesus Christ. The characteristic of a saint's life is this bent of obedience, no notion of authority anywhere about it. If we begin to say "I have been put in this position and I have to exercise authority," God will soon remove us. When there is steadfast obedience to Jesus, it is the authority of God that comes through and other souls obey at once.

(c) The Stage of Rare Fruition (John 15:5, 8)

These verses refer to the stage of fruition—bringing forth fruit and the fruit remaining, that is what glorifies God and blesses others. If we as preachers or teachers are rightly related to God in obedience, God is continually pouring through us. When we stop obeying Him, everything becomes as hard and dry as a ditch in mid summer. When we are placed in a position by God and we keep rightly related to Him, He will see to the supply. Personally, whenever there is dryness I know that it is because I am forgetting some particular point in relation to my own life with God; when that is put right the flow is unhindered, and I believe this is true in every phase of work for God. If you are called to preach, preach; if you are called to teach, teach. Keep obedient to God on that line. The proof that you are on God's line is that other people never credit you with what comes through you. Jesus said, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Go on doing God's will, and you will be recreated while you do it.

INTRODUCTION

Source

These readings are selected from lectures and sermons given by Oswald Chambers from 1910 until his death in 1917.

Publication History

 As a book: My Utmost for His Highest was first published in 1927.

My Utmost is the best-known of the Oswald Chambers books and the one with which most people are familiar. Mrs. Chambers compiled excerpts taken from all of Oswald's spoken messages, which she recorded in shorthand during the seven years of their marriage.

Mrs. Chambers worked on the book for nearly three years while supporting herself and her daughter, Kathleen, by running a boarding house for university students in Oxford, England. Many of the daily readings contain material on a single theme gleaned from two or three different messages.

Most of the material in My Utmost appears in the other published books, but some of it does not, particularly that from Oswald's talks during the weekly devotional hour at the Bible Training College.² Those messages came from his heart to the students and were neither lectures nor sermons but talks about their life of faith and their walk with God. The devotional hour talks followed no theme or pattern, and many were never published in the *BTC Journal*³ or as books.

My Utmost for His Highest has been translated into at least twenty-five languages and has been continuously in print since it was first published in 1927.

Throughout My Utmost, all mentions of "this College" refer to the Bible Training College, London.

Bible references noted MOFFATT are from James Moffatt's translation of the New Testament, published in 1913.

^{2.} Bible Training College (BTC): residential school near Clapham Common in southwest London; sponsored by the League of Prayer and operated from 1911 until it closed in July 1915 because of World War I. Oswald Chambers was principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers, his wife, was lady superintendent.

^{3.} The Bible Training Course Monthly Journal was published from 1932 to 1952 by Mrs. Chambers, with help from David Lambert.

FOREWORD (TO THE FIRST EDITION)

These daily readings have been selected from various sources, chiefly from the lectures given at the Bible Training College, Clapham, during the years 1911–15; then, from October 1915 to November 1917, from talks given night by night in the Y.M.C.A. Huts, Zeitoun, Egypt.⁴ In November 1917 my husband entered God's presence. Since then many of the talks have been published in book form, and others from which these readings have been gathered will also be published in due course.

A large proportion of the readings have been chosen from the talks given during the Devotional Hour at the College.⁵

Men return again and again to the few who have mastered the spiritual secret, whose life has been hid with Christ in God. These are of the old-time religion, hung to the nails of the Cross. (Robert Murray McCheyne)⁶

It is because it is felt that the author is one to whose teaching men will return, that this book has been prepared, and it is sent out with the prayer that day by day the messages may continue to bring the quickening life and inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

LET US KEEP TO THE POINT

My eager desire and hope being that I may never feel ashamed, but that now as ever I may do honour to Christ in my own person by fearless courage. Philippians 1:20 (MOFFATT)

My Utmost for His Highest. "My eager desire and hope being that I may never feel ashamed." We shall all feel very much ashamed if we do not yield to Jesus on the point He has asked us to yield to Him. Paul says—"My determination is to be my utmost for His Highest." To get there is a question of will, not of debate nor of reasoning, but a surrender of will, an absolute and irrevocable surrender on that point. An over-weening consideration for ourselves is the thing that keeps us from that decision, though we put it that we are considering others. When we consider what it will cost others if we obey the call of Jesus, we tell God He does not know what our obedience will mean. Keep to the point; He does know. Shut out every other consideration and keep yourself before God for this one thing only—"My Utmost for His Highest." I am determined to be absolutely and entirely for Him and for Him alone.

My Undeterredness for His Holiness. "Whether that means life or death, no matter!" (v. 21 MOFFATT). Paul is determined that nothing shall deter him from doing exactly what God wants. God's order has to work up to a crisis in our lives because we will not heed the gentler way. He brings us to the place where He asks us to be our utmost for Him, and we begin to debate; then He produces a providential crisis where we have to decide—for or against, and from that point the "Great Divide" begins.

If the crisis has come to you on any line, surrender your will to Him absolutely and irrevocably.

WILL YOU GO OUT WITHOUT KNOWING?

He went out, not knowing whither he went. Hebrews 11:8

Have you been "out" in this way? If so, there is no logical statement possible when anyone asks you what you are doing. One of the difficulties in Christian work is this question—"What do you expect to do?" You do not know what you are going to do; the only thing you know is that God knows what He is doing. Continually revise your attitude towards God and see if it is a going out of everything, trusting in God entirely. It is this attitude that keeps you in perpetual wonder—you do not know what God is going to do next. Each morning you wake it is to be a "going out," building in confidence on God. "Take no thought for your life, . . . nor yet for your body"—take no thought for the things for which you did take thought before you "went out."

Have you been asking God what He is going to do? He will never tell you. God does not tell you what He is going to do; He reveals to you Who He is. Do you believe in a miracle-working God, and will you go out in surrender to Him until you are not surprised an atom at anything He does?

Suppose God is the God you know Him to be when you are nearest to Him, what an impertinence worry is! Let the attitude of the life be a continual "going out" in dependence upon God, and your life will have an ineffable charm about it which is a satisfaction to Jesus. You have to learn to go out of convictions, out of creeds, out of experiences, until, so far as your faith is concerned, there is nothing between yourself and God.

CLOUDS AND DARKNESS

Clouds and darkness are round about Him. Psalm 97:2

A man who has not been born of the Spirit of God will tell you that the teachings of Jesus are simple. But when you are baptised with the Holy Ghost, you find "clouds and darkness are round about Him." When we come into close contact with the teachings of Jesus Christ we have our first insight into this aspect of things. The only possibility of understanding the teaching of Jesus is by the light of the Spirit of God on the inside. If we have never had the experience of taking our commonplace religious shoes off our commonplace religious feet, and getting rid of all the undue familiarity with which we approach God, it is questionable whether we have ever stood in His presence. The people who are flippant and familiar are those who have never yet been introduced to Jesus Christ. After the amazing delight and liberty of realising what Jesus Christ does, comes the impenetrable darkness of realising Who He is.

Jesus said: "The words that I speak unto you," not—"the words I have spoken"— "they are spirit, and they are life." The Bible has been so many words to us—clouds and darkness, then all of a sudden the words become spirit and life because Jesus re-speaks them to us in a particular condition. That is the way God speaks to us, not by visions and dreams, but by words. When a man gets to God it is by the most simple way of words.

WHY CANNOT I FOLLOW THEE NOW?

Peter said unto Him, Lord, why cannot I follow Thee now? John 13:37

There are times when you cannot understand why you cannot do what you want to do. When God brings the blank space, see that you do not fill it in, but wait. The blank space may come in order to teach you what sanctification means; or it may come after sanctification to teach you what service means. Never run before God's guidance. If there is the slightest doubt, then He is not guiding. Whenever there is doubt—don't.

In the beginning you may see clearly what God's will is—the severance of a friendship, the breaking off of a business relationship, something you feel distinctly before God is His will for you to do, never do it on the impulse of that feeling. If you do, you will end in making difficulties that will take years of time to put right. Wait for God's time to bring it round and He will do it without any heartbreak or disappointment. When it is a question of the providential will of God, wait for God to move.

Peter did not wait on God, he forecast in his mind where the test would come, and the test came where he did not expect it. "I will lay down my life for Thy sake." Peter's declaration was honest but ignorant. "Jesus answered him . . . The cock shall not crow, till thou hast denied Me thrice." This was said with a deeper knowledge of Peter than Peter had of himself. He could not follow Jesus because he did not know himself, or of what he was capable. Natural devotion may be all very well to attract us to Jesus, to make us feel His fascination, but it will never make us disciples. Natural devotion will always deny Jesus somewhere or other.

January 5

THE AFTERWARDS OF THE LIFE OF POWER

Whither I go, thou canst not follow Me now; but thou shalt follow Me afterwards. John 13:36

"And when He had spoken this, He saith unto him, Follow Me." Three years before, Jesus had said—
"Follow Me," and Peter had followed easily, the fascination of Jesus was upon him, he did not need the Holy Spirit to help him to do it. Then he came to the place where he denied Jesus, and his heart broke. Then he received the Holy Spirit, and now Jesus says again—
"Follow Me." There is no figure in front now saving the Lord Jesus Christ. The first "Follow Me" had nothing mystical in it, it was an external following; now it is a following in internal martyrdom (cf. John 21:18).

Between these times Peter had denied Jesus with oaths and curses, he had come to the end of himself and all his self-sufficiency; there was not one strand of himself he would ever rely upon again, and in his destitution he was in a fit condition to receive an impartation from the risen Lord. "He breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." No matter what changes God has wrought in you, never rely upon them, build only on a Person, the Lord Jesus Christ, and on the Spirit He gives.

All our vows and resolutions end in denial because we have no power to carry them out. When we have come to the end of ourselves, not in imagination but really, we are able to receive the Holy Spirit. "Receive ye the Holy Ghost"—the idea is that of invasion. There is only one lodestar in the life now, the Lord Jesus Christ.

JANUARY 6

WORSHIP

And he . . . pitched his tent, having Beth-el on the west, and Ai on the east: and there he builded an altar. Genesis 12:8 (RV)

Worship is giving God the best that He has given you. Be careful what you do with the best you have. Whenever you get a blessing from God, give it back to Him as a love gift. Take time to meditate before God and offer the blessing back to Him in a deliberate act of worship. If you hoard a thing for yourself, it will turn into spiritual dry rot, as the manna did when it was hoarded. God will never let you hold a spiritual thing for yourself; it has to be given back to Him that He may make it a blessing to others.

Bethel is the symbol of communion with God; Ai is the symbol of the world. Abraham pitched his tent between the two. The measure of the worth of our public activity for God is the private profound communion we have with Him. Rush is wrong every time; there is always plenty of time to worship God. Quiet days with God may be a snare. We have to pitch our tents where we shall always have quiet times with God, however noisy our times with the world may be. There are not three stages in spiritual lifeworship, waiting and work. Some of us go in jumps like spiritual frogs, we jump from worship to waiting, and from waiting to work. God's idea is that the three should go together. They were always together in the life of Our Lord. He was unhasting and unresting. It is a discipline, we cannot get into it all at once.

INTIMATE WITH JESUS

Have I been so long with you, and yet hast thou not known Me? John 14:9

These words are not spoken as a rebuke, nor even with surprise; Jesus is leading Philip on. The last One with whom we get intimate is Jesus. Before Pentecost the disciples knew Jesus as the One Who gave them power to conquer demons and to bring about a revival (see Luke 10:18–20). It was a wonderful intimacy, but there was a much closer intimacy to come—"I have called you friends." Friendship is rare on earth. It means identity in thought and heart and spirit. The whole discipline of life is to enable us to enter into this closest relationship with Jesus Christ. We receive His blessings and know His word, but do we know Him?

Jesus said—"It is expedient for you that I go away"—in that relationship, so that He might lead them on. It is a joy to Jesus when a disciple takes time to step more intimately with Him. Fruitbearing is always mentioned as the manifestation of an intimate union with Jesus Christ (John 15:1–4).

When once we get intimate with Jesus we are never lonely, we never need sympathy, we can pour out all the time without being pathetic. The saint who is intimate with Jesus will never leave impressions of himself, but only the impression that Jesus is having unhindered way, because the last abyss of his nature has been satisfied by Him. The only impression left by such a life is that of the strong calm sanity that Our Lord gives to those who are intimate with Him.

DOES MY SACRIFICE LIVE?

And Abraham built an altar . . . and bound Isaac his son. Genesis 22:9

This incident is a picture of the blunder we make in thinking that the final thing God wants of us is the sacrifice of death. What God wants is the sacrifice through death which enables us to do what Jesus did, viz., sacrifice our lives. Not "I am willing to go to death with Thee," but, "I am willing to be identified with Thy death so that I may sacrifice my life to God." We seem to think that God wants us to give up things! God purified Abraham from this blunder, and the same discipline goes on in our lives. God nowhere tells us to give up things for the sake of giving them up. He tells us to give them up for the sake of the only thing worth having, viz., life with Himself. It is a question of loosening the bands that hinder the life, and immediately those bands are loosened by identification with the death of Jesus, we enter into a relationship with God whereby we can sacrifice our lives to Him.

It is of no value to God to give Him your life for death. He wants you to be a "living sacrifice," to let Him have all your powers that have been saved and sanctified through Jesus. This is the thing that is acceptable to God.

JANUARY 9

INTERCESSORY INTROSPECTION

And I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless. 1 Thessalonians 5:23

"Your whole spirit . . ." The great mystical work of the Holy Spirit is in the dim regions of our personality which we cannot get at. Read the 139th Psalm; the Psalmist implies—"Thou art the God of the early mornings, the God of the late at nights, the God of the mountain peaks, and the God of the sea; but, my God, my soul has further horizons than the early mornings, deeper darkness than the nights of earth, higher peaks than any mountain peaks, greater depths than any sea in nature—Thou Who art the God of all these, be my God. I cannot reach to the heights or to the depths; there are motives I cannot trace, dreams I cannot get at—my God, search me out."

Do we believe that God can garrison the imagination far beyond where we can go? "The blood of Jesus Christ . . . cleanseth us from all sin"—if that means in conscious experience only, may God have mercy on us. The man who has been made obtuse by sin will say he is not conscious of sin. Cleansing from sin is to the very heights and depths of our spirit if we will keep in the light as God is in the light, and the very Spirit that fed the life of Jesus Christ will feed the life of our spirits. It is only when we are garrisoned by God with the stupendous sanctity of the Holy Spirit, that spirit, soul and body are preserved in unspotted integrity, undeserving of censure in God's sight, until Jesus comes.

We do not allow our minds to dwell as they should on these great massive truths of God.

January 10

THE OPENED SIGHT

To open their eyes, . . . that they may receive . . . Acts 26:18

This verse is the grandest condensation of the propaganda of a disciple of Jesus Christ in the whole of the New Testament.

The first sovereign work of grace is summed up in the words—"that they may receive remission of sins" (RV). When a man fails in personal Christian experience, it is nearly always because he has never received anything. The only sign that a man is saved is that he has received something from Jesus Christ. Our part as workers for God is to open men's eyes that they may turn themselves from darkness to light; but that is not salvation, that is conversion—the effort of a roused human being. I do not think it is too sweeping to say that the majority of nominal Christians are of this order; their eyes are opened, but they have received nothing. Conversion is not regeneration. This is one of the neglected factors in our preaching today. When a man is born again, he knows that it is because he has received something as a gift from Almighty God and not because of his own decision. People register their vows, and sign their pledges, and determine to go through, but none of this is salvation. Salvation means that we are brought to the place where we are able to receive something from God on the authority of Jesus Christ, viz., remission of sins.

Then there follows the second mighty work of grace—"and inheritance among them which are sanctified." In sanctification the regenerated soul deliberately gives up his right to himself to Jesus Christ, and identifies himself entirely with God's interest in other men.

JANUARY 11

WHAT MY OBEDIENCE TO GOD COSTS OTHER PEOPLE

They laid hold upon one Simon, . . . and on him they laid the cross. Luke 23:26

If we obey God it is going to cost other people more than it costs us, and that is where the sting comes in. If we are in love with our Lord, obedience does not cost us anything, it is a delight, but it costs those who do not love Him a good deal. If we obey God it will mean that other people's plans are upset, and they will gibe us with it—"You call this Christianity?" We can prevent the suffering; but if we are going to obey God, we must not prevent it, we must let the cost be paid.

Our human pride entrenches itself on this point, and we say—"I will never accept anything from anyone." We shall have to, or disobey God. We have no right to expect to be in any other relation than our Lord Himself was in (see Luke 8:2–3).

Stagnation in spiritual life comes when we say we will bear the whole thing ourselves. We cannot. We are so involved in the universal purposes of God that immediately we obey God, others are affected. Are we going to remain loyal in our obedience to God and go through the humiliation of refusing to be independent, or are we going to take the other line and say—"I will not cost other people suffering"? We can disobey God if we choose, and it will bring immediate relief to the situation, but we shall be a grief to our Lord. Whereas if we obey God, He will look after those who have been pressed into the consequences of our obedience. We have simply to obey and to leave all consequences with Him.

Beware of the inclination to dictate to God as to what you will allow to happen if you obey Him.

January 12

HAVE YOU EVER BEEN ALONE WITH GOD?

When they were alone, He expounded all things to His disciples. Mark 4:34

Our Solitude with Him. Jesus does not take us alone and expound things to us all the time; He expounds things to us as we can understand them. Other lives are parables. God is making us spell out our own souls. It is slow work, so slow that it takes God all time and eternity to make a man and woman after His own purpose. The only way we can be of use to God is to let Him take us through the crooks and crannies of our own characters. It is astounding how ignorant we are about ourselves! We do not know envy when we see it, or laziness, or pride. Jesus reveals to us all that this body has been harbouring before His grace began to work. How many of us have learned to look in with courage?

We have to get rid of the idea that we understand ourselves, it is the last conceit to go. The only One Who understands us is God. The greatest curse in spiritual life is conceit. If we have ever had a glimpse of what we are like in the sight of God, we shall never say—"Oh I am so unworthy," because we shall know we are, beyond the possibility of stating it. As long as we are not quite sure that we are unworthy, God will keep narrowing us in until He gets us alone. Wherever there is any element of pride or of conceit, Jesus cannot expound a thing. He will take us through the disappointment of a wounded pride of intellect, through disappointments of heart. He will reveal inordinate affections—things over which we never thought He would have to get us alone. We listen to many things in classes, but they are not an exposition to us yet. They will be when God gets us alone over them.

HAVE YOU EVER BEEN ALONE WITH GOD?

When He was alone, . . . the twelve asked of Him. . . . Mark 4:10

His Solitude with Us. When God gets us alone by affliction, heartbreak, or temptation, by disappointment, sickness, or by thwarted affection, by a broken friendship, or by a new friendship—when He gets us absolutely alone, and we are dumbfounded and cannot ask one question, then He begins to expound. Watch Jesus Christ's training of the twelve. It was the disciples, not the crowd outside, who were perplexed. They constantly asked Him questions, and He constantly expounded things to them; but they only understood after they had received the Holy Spirit (see John 14:26).

If you are going on with God, the only thing that is clear to you, and the only thing God intends to be clear, is the way He deals with your own soul. Your brother's sorrows and perplexities are an absolute confusion to you. We imagine we understand where the other person is, until God gives us a dose of the plague of our own hearts. There are whole tracts of stubbornness and ignorance to be revealed by the Holy Spirit in each one of us, and it can only be done when Jesus gets us alone. Are we alone with Him now, or are we taken up with little fussy notions, fussy comradeships in God's service, fussy ideas about our bodies? Jesus can expound nothing until we get through all the noisy questions of the head and are alone with Him.

January 14

CALLED OF GOD

Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me. Isaiah 6:8

God did not address the call to Isaiah; Isaiah overheard God saying—"Who will go for us?" The call of God is not for the special few, it is for everyone. Whether or not I hear God's call depends upon the state of my ears; and what I hear depends upon my disposition. "Many are called, but few are chosen," that is, few prove themselves the chosen ones. The chosen ones are those who have come into a relationship with God through Jesus Christ whereby their disposition has been altered and their ears unstopped, and they hear the still small voice questioning all the time—"Who will go for us?" It is not a question of God singling out a man and saying, "Now, you go." God did not lay a strong compulsion on Isaiah; Isaiah was in the presence of God and he overheard the call, and realised that there was nothing else for him but to say, in conscious freedom—"Here am I; send me."

Get out of your mind the idea of expecting God to come with compulsions and pleadings. When Our Lord called His disciples there was no irresistible compulsion from outside. The quiet, passionate insistence of His "Follow Me" was spoken to men with every power wide awake. If we let the Spirit of God bring us face to face with God, we too will hear something akin to what Isaiah heard, the still small voice of God; and in perfect freedom will say—"Here am I; send me."

DO YOU WALK IN WHITE?

Buried with Him . . . that . . . even so we also should walk in newness of life. Romans 6:4

No one enters into the experience of entire sanctification without going through a "white funeral" —the burial of the old life. If there has never been this crisis of death, sanctification is nothing more than a vision. There must be a "white funeral," a death that has only one resurrection—a resurrection into the life of Jesus Christ. Nothing can upset such a life; it is one with God for one purpose, to be a witness to Him.

Have you come to your last days really? You have come to them often in sentiment, but have you come to them really? You cannot go to your funeral in excitement, or die in excitement. Death means that you stop being. Do you agree with God that you stop being the striving, earnest kind of Christian you have been? We skirt the cemetery and all the time refuse to go to death. It is not striving to go to death, it is dying—"baptized into His death."

Have you had your "white funeral," or are you sacredly playing the fool with your soul? Is there a place in your life marked as the last day, a place to which the memory goes back with a chastened and extraordinarily grateful remembrance—"Yes, it was then, at that 'white funeral,' that I made an agreement with God"?

^{8. &}quot;white funeral": phrase from Tennyson's poem "To H.R.H. Princess Beatrice"; to Chambers, it meant a passage from one stage of life to another; leaving the past behind and moving into the future; he often used it to mean death to self and a complete surrender to God.

"This is the will of God, even your sanctification." When you realise what the will of God is, you will enter into sanctification as naturally as can be. Are you willing to go through that "white funeral" now? Do you agree with Him that this is your last day on earth? The moment of agreement depends upon you.

January 16

THE VOICE OF THE NATURE OF GOD

I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send? Isaiah 6:8

When we speak of the call of God, we are apt to forget the most important feature, viz., the nature of the One Who calls. There is the call of the sea, the call of the mountains, the call of the great ice barriers; but these calls are only heard by the few. The call is the expression of the nature from which it comes, and we can only record the call if the same nature is in us. The call of God is the expression of God's nature, not of our nature. There are strands of the call of God providentially at work for us which we recognise and no one else does. It is the threading of God's voice to us in some particular matter, and it is no use consulting anyone else about it. We have to keep that profound relationship between our souls and God.

The call of God is not the echo of my nature; my affinities and personal temperament are not considered. As long as I consider my personal temperament and think about what I am fitted for, I shall never hear the call of God. But when I am brought into relationship with God, I am in the condition Isaiah was in. Isaiah's soul was so attuned to God by the tremendous crisis he had gone through that he recorded the call of God to his amazed soul. The majority of us have no ear for anything but ourselves, we cannot hear a thing God says. To be brought into the zone of the call of God is to be profoundly altered.

January 17

THE VOCATION OF THE NATURAL LIFE

But when it pleased God... to reveal His son in me ... Galatians 1:15–16

The call of God is not a call to any particular service; my interpretation of it may be, because contact with the nature of God has made me realise what I would like to do for Him. The call of God is essentially expressive of His nature; service is the outcome of what is fitted to my nature. The vocation of the natural life is stated by the apostle Paul—"When it pleased God to reveal His Son in me that I might preach Him [i.e., sacramentally express Him] among the Gentiles."

Service is the overflow of superabounding devotion; but, profoundly speaking, there is no call to that, it is my own little actual bit, and is the echo of my identification with the nature of God. Service is the natural part of my life. God gets me into a relationship with Himself whereby I understand His call, then I do things out of sheer love for Him on my own account. To serve God is the deliberate love-gift of a nature that has heard the call of God. Service is expressive of that which is fitted to my nature: God's call is expressive of His nature; consequently when I receive His nature and hear His call, the voice of the Divine nature sounds in both and the two work together. The Son of God reveals Himself in me, and I serve Him in the ordinary ways of life out of devotion to Him.

January 18

IT IS THE LORD!

Thomas answered and said unto Him, My Lord and my God. John 20:28

"Give Me to drink." How many of us are set upon Jesus Christ slaking our thirst when we ought to be satisfying Him? We should be pouring out now, spending to the last limit, not drawing on Him to satisfy us. "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me"—that means a life of unsullied, uncompromising, and unbribed devotion to the Lord Jesus, a satisfaction to Him wherever He places us.

Beware of anything that competes with loyalty to Jesus Christ. The greatest competitor of devotion to Jesus is service for Him. It is easier to serve than to be drunk to the dregs. The one aim of the call of God is the satisfaction of God, not a call to do something for Him. We are not sent to battle for God, but to be used by God in His battlings. Are we being more devoted to service than to Jesus Christ?

January 19

VISION AND DARKNESS

An horror of great darkness fell upon him. Genesis 15:12

Whenever God gives a vision to a saint, He puts him, as it were, in the shadow of His hand, and the saint's duty is to be still and listen. There is a darkness which comes from excess of light, and then is the time to listen. Genesis 16 is an illustration of listening to good advice when it is dark instead of waiting for God to send the light. When God gives a vision and darkness follows, wait. God will make you in accordance with the vision He has given if you will wait His time. Never try and help God fulfil His word. Abraham went through thirteen years of silence, but in those years all self-sufficiency was destroyed; there was no possibility left of relying on commonsense ways. Those years of silence were a time of discipline, not of displeasure. Never pump up joy and confidence, but stay upon God (cf. Isaiah 50:10-11).

Have I any confidence in the flesh? Or have I got beyond all confidence in myself and in men and women of God, in books and prayers and ecstasies; and is my confidence placed now in God Himself, not in His blessings? "I am the Almighty God"—El-Shaddai, the Father-Mother God. The one thing for which we are all being disciplined is to know that God is real. As soon as God becomes real, other people become shadows. Nothing that other saints do or say can ever perturb the one who is built on God.

JANUARY 20

ARE YOU FRESH FOR EVERYTHING?

Except a man be born again, he cannot see the king-dom of God. John 3:3

Sometimes we are fresh for a prayer meeting but not fresh for cleaning boots!

Being born again of the Spirit is an unmistakable work of God, as mysterious as the wind, as surprising as God Himself. We do not know where it begins, it is hidden away in the depths of our personal life. Being born again from above (RV mg) is a perennial, perpetual and eternal beginning, a freshness all the time in thinking and in talking and in living, the continual surprise of the life of God. Staleness is an indication of something out of joint with God—"I must do this thing or it will never be done." That is the first sign of staleness. Are we freshly born this minute, or are we stale, raking in our minds for something to do? Freshness does not come from obedience but from the Holy Spirit; obedience keeps us in the light as God is in the light.

Guard jealously your relationship to God. Jesus prayed "that they may be one, even as We are one"— nothing between. Keep all the life perennially open to Jesus Christ, don't pretend with Him. Are you drawing your life from any other source than God Himself? If you are depending upon anything but Him, you will never know when He is gone.

Being born of the Spirit means much more than we generally take it to mean. It gives us a new vision and keeps us absolutely fresh for everything by the perennial supply of the life of God.

JANUARY 21

RECALL WHAT GOD REMEMBERS

I remember . . . the kindness of thy youth. Jeremiah 2:2

Am I as spontaneously kind to God as I used to be, or am I only expecting God to be kind to me? Am I full of the little things that cheer His heart over me, or am I whimpering because things are going hardly with me? There is no joy in the soul that has forgotten what God prizes. It is a great thing to think that Jesus Christ has need of me—"Give Me to drink." How much kindness have I shown Him this past week? Have I been kind to His reputation in my life?

God is saying to His people—"You are not in love with Me now, but I remember the time when you were." "I remember . . . the love of thine espousals." Am I as full of the extravagance of love to Jesus Christ as I was in the beginning, when I went out of my way to prove my devotion to Him? Does He find me recalling the time when I did not care for anything but Himself? Am I there now, or have I become wise over loving Him? Am I so in love with Him that I take no account of where I go? or am I watching for the respect due to me, weighing how much service I ought to give?

If, as I recall what God remembers about me, I find He is not what He used to be to me, let it produce shame and humiliation, because that shame will bring the godly sorrow that works repentance.

JANUARY 22

WHAT AM I LOOKING AT?

Look unto Me, and be ye saved. Isaiah 45:22

Do we expect God to come to us with His blessings and save us? He says—"Look unto Me, and be saved." The great difficulty spiritually is to concentrate on God, and it is His blessings that make it difficult. Troubles nearly always make us look to God; His blessings are apt to make us look elsewhere. The teaching of the Sermon on the Mount is, in effect—Narrow all your interests until the attitude of mind and heart and body is concentration on Jesus Christ.

Many of us have a mental conception of what a Christian should be, and the lives of the saints become a hindrance to our concentration on God. There is no salvation in this way, it is not simple enough. "Look unto Me" and—not "you will be saved," but "you are saved." The very thing we look for, we shall find if we will concentrate on Him. We get preoccupied and sulky with God, while all the time He is saying—"Look up and be saved." The difficulties and trials, the casting about in our minds as to what we shall do this summer, or to-morrow, all vanish when we look to God.

Rouse yourself up and look to God. Build your hope on Him. No matter if there are a hundred and one things that press, resolutely exclude them all and look to Him. "Look unto Me," and salvation is, the moment you look.

JANUARY 23

TRANSFORMED BY INSIGHT

We all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image. 2 Corinthians 3:18

The outstanding characteristic of a Christian is this unveiled frankness before God so that the life becomes a mirror for other lives. By being filled with the Spirit we are transformed, and by beholding we become mirrors. You always know when a man has been beholding the glory of the Lord, you feel in your inner spirit that he is the mirror of the Lord's own character. Beware of anything which would sully that mirror in you; it is nearly always a good thing, the good that is not the best.

The golden rule for your life and mine is this concentrated keeping of the life open towards God. Let everything else—work, clothes, food, everything on earth—go by the board, saving that one thing. The rush of other things always tends to obscure this concentration on God. We have to maintain ourselves in the place of beholding, keeping the life absolutely spiritual all through. Let other things come and go as they may, let other people criticise as they will, but never allow anything to obscure the life that is hid with Christ in God. Never be hurried out of the relationship of abiding in Him. It is the one thing that is apt to fluctuate but it ought not to. The severest discipline of a Christian's life is to learn how to keep "beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord."

JANUARY 24

THE OVERMASTERING DIRECTION

I have appeared unto thee for this purpose. Acts 26:16

The vision Paul had on the road to Damascus was no passing emotion, but a vision that had very clear and emphatic directions for him, and he says—"I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." Our Lord said, in effect, to Paul—"Your whole life is to be overmastered by Me; you are to have no end, no aim, and no purpose but Mine." "I have chosen him."

When we are born again we all have visions, if we are spiritual at all, of what Jesus wants us to be, and the great thing is to learn not to be disobedient to the vision, not to say that it cannot be attained. It is not sufficient to know that God has redeemed the world, and to know that the Holy Spirit can make all that Jesus did effectual in me; I must have the basis of a personal relationship to Him. Paul was not given a message or a doctrine to proclaim, he was brought into a vivid, personal, overmastering relationship to Jesus Christ. Verse 16 is immensely commanding— "to make thee a minister and a witness." There is nothing there apart from the personal relationship. Paul was devoted to a Person not to a cause. He was absolutely Jesus Christ's; he saw nothing else; he lived for nothing else. "For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.'

January 25

LEAVE ROOM FOR GOD

But when it pleased God . . . Galatians 1:15

As workers for God we have to learn to make room for God—to give God "elbow room." We calculate and estimate, and say that this and that will happen, and we forget to make room for God to come in as He chooses. Would we be surprised if God came into our meeting or into our preaching in a way we had never looked for Him to come? Do not look for God to come in any particular way, but look for Him. That is the way to make room for Him. Expect Him to come, but do not expect Him only in a certain way. However much we may know God, the great lesson to learn is that at any minute He may break in. We are apt to overlook this element of surprise, yet God never works in any other way. All of a sudden God meets the life—"When it was the good pleasure of God . . . " (RV).

Keep your life so constant in its contact with God that His surprising power may break out on the right hand and on the left. Always be in a state of expectancy, and see that you leave room for God to come in as He likes.

JANUARY 26

LOOK AGAIN AND CONSECRATE

If God so clothe the grass of the field, . . . shall He not much more clothe you? Matthew 6:30

A simple statement of Jesus is always a puzzle to us if we are not simple. How are we going to be simple with the simplicity of Jesus? By receiving His Spirit, recognising and relying on Him, obeying Him as He brings the word of God, and life will become amazingly simple. "Consider," says Jesus, "how much more your Father Who clothes the grass of the field will clothe you, if you keep your relationship right with Him." Every time we have gone back in spiritual communion it has been because we have impertinently known better than Jesus Christ. We have allowed the cares of the world to come in, and have forgotten the "much more" of our Heavenly Father.

"Behold the fowls of the air"—their one aim is to obey the principle of life that is in them and God looks after them. Jesus says that if you are rightly related to Him and obey this Spirit that is in you, God will look after your "feathers."

"Consider the lilies of the field"—they grow where they are put. Many of us refuse to grow where we are put, consequently we take root nowhere. Jesus says that if we obey the life God has given us, He will look after all the other things. Has Jesus Christ told us a lie? If we are not experiencing the "much more," it is because we are not obeying the life God has given us, we are taken up with confusing considerations. How much time have we taken up worrying God with questions when we should have been absolutely free to concentrate on His work? Consecration means the continual separating of myself to one particular thing. We cannot consecrate once and for all. Am I continually separating myself to consider God every day of my life?

JANUARY 27

LOOK AGAIN AND THINK

Take no thought for your life. Matthew 6:25

A warning which needs to be reiterated is that the cares of this world, the deceitfulness of riches, and the lust of other things entering in, will choke all that God puts in. We are never free from the recurring tides of this encroachment. If it does not come on the line of clothes and food, it will come on the line of money or lack of money; of friends or lack of friends; or on the line of difficult circumstances. It is one steady encroachment all the time, and unless we allow the Spirit of God to raise up the standard against it, these things will come in like a flood.

"Take no thought for your life." "Be careful about one thing only," says our Lord—"your relationship to Me." Common sense shouts loud and says—"That is absurd, I must consider how I am going to live, I must consider what I am going to eat and drink." Jesus says you must not. Beware of allowing the thought that this statement is made by One Who does not understand our particular circumstances. Jesus Christ knows our circumstances better than we do, and He says we must not think about these things so as to make them the one concern of our life. Whenever there is competition, be sure that you put your relationship to God first.

"Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." How much evil has begun to threaten you to-day? What kind of mean⁹ little imps have been looking in and saying—"Now what are you going to do next month—this summer?" "Be anxious for nothing," Jesus says. Look again and think. Keep your mind on the "much more" of your Heavenly Father.

JANUARY 28

BUT IT IS HARDLY CREDIBLE THAT ONE COULD SO PERSECUTE JESUS!

Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me? Acts 26:14

Am I set on my own way for God? We are never free from this snare until we are brought into the experience of the baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire. Obstinacy and self-will will always stab Jesus Christ. It may hurt no one else, but it wounds His Spirit. Whenever we are obstinate and self-willed and set upon our own ambitions, we are hurting Jesus. Every time we stand on our rights and insist that this is what we intend to do, we are persecuting Jesus. Whenever we stand on our dignity we systematically vex and grieve His Spirit; and when the knowledge comes home that it is Jesus Whom we have been persecuting all the time, it is the most crushing revelation there could be.

Is the word of God tremendously keen to me as I hand it on to you, or does my life give the lie to the things I profess to teach? I may teach sanctification and yet exhibit the spirit of Satan, the spirit that persecutes Jesus Christ. The Spirit of Jesus is conscious of one thing only—a perfect oneness with the Father, and He says "Learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart." All I do ought to be founded on a perfect oneness with Him, not on a self-willed determination to be godly. This will mean that I can be easily put upon, easily over-reached, easily ignored; but if I submit to it for His sake, I prevent Jesus Christ being persecuted.

January 29

BUT IT IS HARDLY CREDIBLE THAT ONE COULD BE SO POSITIVELY IGNORANT!

Who art Thou, Lord? Acts 26:15

"The LORD spake thus to me with a strong hand." There is no escape when Our Lord speaks. He always comes with an arrestment of the understanding. Has the voice of God come to you directly? If it has, you cannot mistake the intimate insistence with which it has spoken to you in the language you know best, not through your ears, but through your circumstances. God has to destroy our determined confidence in our own convictions. "I know this is what I should do"and suddenly the voice of God speaks in a way that overwhelms us by revealing the depths of our ignorance. We have shown our ignorance of Him in the very way we determined to serve Him. We serve Jesus in a spirit that is not His, we hurt Him by our advocacy for Him, we push His claims in the spirit of the devil. Our words sound all right, but our spirit is that of an enemy. "He . . . rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." The spirit of Our Lord in an advocate of His is described in 1 Corinthians 13.

Have I been persecuting Jesus by a zealous determination to serve Him in my own way? If I feel I have done my duty and yet have hurt Him in doing it, I may be sure it was not my duty, because it has not fostered the meek and quiet spirit, but the spirit of self-satisfaction. We imagine that whatever is unpleasant is our duty! Is that anything like the spirit of our Lord—"I delight to do Thy will, O My God."

JANUARY 30

THE DILEMMA OF OBEDIENCE

And Samuel feared to shew Eli the vision. 1 Samuel 3:15

God seldom speaks to us in startling ways, but in ways that are easy to misunderstand, and we say, "I wonder if that is God's voice?" Isaiah said that the Lord spake to him "with a strong hand," that is, by the pressure of circumstances. Nothing touches our lives but it is God Himself speaking. Do we discern His hand or only mere occurrence?

Get into the habit of saying, "Speak, Lord," and life will become a romance. Every time circumstances press, say, "Speak, Lord"; make time to listen. Chastening is more than a means of discipline, it is meant to get me to the place of saying, "Speak, Lord." Recall the time when God did speak to you. Have you forgotten what He said? Was it Luke 11:13, or was it 1 Thessalonians 5:23? As we listen, our ear gets acute, and, like Jesus, we shall hear God all the time.

Shall I tell my "Eli" what God has shown to me? That is where the dilemma of obedience comes in. We disobey God by becoming amateur providences—I must shield "Eli," the best people we know. God did not tell Samuel to tell Eli; he had to decide that for himself. God's call to you may hurt your "Eli"; but if you try to prevent the suffering in another life, it will prove an obstruction between your soul and God. It is at your own peril that you prevent the cutting off of the right hand or the plucking out of the eye.

Never ask the advice of another about anything God makes you decide before Him. If you ask advice, you will nearly always side with Satan: "Immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood."

January 31

DO YOU SEE YOUR CALLING?

Separated unto the Gospel. Romans 1:1

Our calling is not primarily to be holy men and women, but to be proclaimers of the Gospel of God. The one thing that is all important is that the Gospel of God should be realised as the abiding Reality. Reality is not human goodness, nor holiness, nor heaven, nor hell, but Redemption; and the need to perceive this is the most vital need of the Christian worker today. As workers we have to get used to the revelation that Redemption is the only Reality. Personal holiness is an effect, not a cause, and if we place our faith in human goodness, in the effect of Redemption, we shall go under when the test comes.

Paul did not say he separated himself, but—"when it pleased God, who separated me . . ." Paul had not a hypersensitive interest in his own character. As long as our eyes are upon our own personal whiteness we shall never get near the reality of Redemption. Workers break down because their desire is for their own whiteness, and not for God. "Don't ask me to come into contact with the rugged reality of Redemption on behalf of the filth of human life as it is; what I want is anything God can do for me to make me more desirable in my own eyes." To talk in that way is a sign that the reality of the Gospel of God has not begun to touch me; there is no reckless abandon to God. God cannot deliver me while my interest is merely in my own character. Paul is unconscious of himself, he is recklessly abandoned, separated by God for one purpose—to proclaim the Gospel of God (cf. Romans 9:3).

February 1

THE CALL OF GOD

For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel. 1 Corinthians 1:17

Paul states here that the call of God is to preach the gospel; but remember what Paul means by "the gospel," viz., the reality of Redemption in our Lord Jesus Christ. We are apt to make sanctification the end-all of our preaching. Paul alludes to personal experience by way of illustration, never as the end of the matter. We are nowhere commissioned to preach salvation or sanctification; we are commissioned to lift up Jesus Christ (John 12:32). It is a travesty to say that Jesus Christ travailed in Redemption to make me a saint. Jesus Christ travailed in Redemption to redeem the whole world, and place it unimpaired and rehabilitated before the throne of God. The fact that Redemption can be experienced by us is an illustration of the power of the reality of Redemption, but that is not the end of Redemption. If God were human, how sick to the heart and weary He would be of the constant requests we make for our salvation, for our sanctification. We tax His energies from morning till night for things for ourselves—something for me to be delivered from! When we touch the bedrock of the reality of the Gospel of God, we shall never bother God any further with little personal plaints.

The one passion of Paul's life was to proclaim the Gospel of God. He welcomed heart-breaks, disillusionments, tribulation, for one reason only, because these things kept him in unmoved devotion to the Gospel of God.

FEBRUARY 2

THE CONSTRAINT OF THE CALL

Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel! 1 Corinthians 9:16

Beware of stopping your ears to the call of God. Everyone who is saved is called to testify to the fact; but that is not the call to preach, it is merely an illustration in preaching. Paul is referring to the pangs produced in him by the constraint to preach the Gospel. Never apply what Paul says in this connection to souls coming in contact with God for salvation. There is nothing easier than getting saved because it is God's sovereign work—"Come unto Me and I will save you." Our Lord never lays down the conditions of discipleship as the conditions of salvation. We are condemned to salvation through the Cross of Jesus Christ. Discipleship has an option with it—"IF any man . . ."

Paul's words have to do with being made a servant of Jesus Christ, and our permission is never asked as to what we will do or where we will go. God makes us broken bread and poured-out wine to please Himself. To be "separated unto the gospel" means to hear the call of God; and when a man begins to overhear that call, then begins agony that is worthy of the name. Every ambition is nipped in the bud, every desire of life quenched, every outlook completely extinguished and blotted out, saving one thing only—"separated unto the gospel." Woe be to the soul who tries to put his foot in any other direction when once that call has come to him. This College exists to see whether God has any man or woman here who cares about proclaiming His Gospel; to see whether God grips you. And beware of competitors when God does grip you.

February 3

THE RECOGNISED BAN OF RELATIONSHIP

We are made as the filth of the world. 1 Corinthians 4:13

These words are not an exaggeration. The reason they are not true of us who call ourselves ministers of the gospel is not that Paul forgot the exact truth in using them, but that we have too many discreet affinities to allow ourselves to be made refuse. "Filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ" is not an evidence of sanctification, but of being "separated unto the gospel."

"Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you," says Peter. If we do think it strange concerning the things we meet with, it is because we are craven-hearted. We have discreet affinities that keep us out of the mire-"I won't stoop; I won't bend." You do not need to, you can be saved by the skin of your teeth if you like; you can refuse to let God count you as one separated unto the gospel. Or you may say—"I do not care if I am treated as the offscouring of the earth as long as the Gospel is proclaimed." A servant of Jesus Christ is one who is willing to go to martyrdom for the reality of the gospel of God. When a merely moral man or woman comes in contact with baseness and immorality and treachery, the recoil is so desperately offensive to human goodness that the heart shuts up in despair. The marvel of the Redemptive Reality of God is that the worst and the vilest can never get to the bottom of His love. Paul did not say that God separated him to show what a wonderful man He could make of him, but "to reveal His son in me."

FEBRUARY 4

THE OVERMASTERING MAJESTY OF PERSONAL POWER

For the love of Christ constraineth us. 2 Corinthians 5:14

Paul says he is overruled, overmastered, held as in a vice, by the love of Christ. Very few of us know what it means to be held in a grip by the love of God; we are held by the constraint of our experience only. The one thing that held Paul, until there was nothing else on his horizon, was the love of God. "The love of Christ constraineth us"—when you hear that note in a man or woman, you can never mistake it. You know that the Spirit of God is getting unhindered way in that life.

When we are born again of the Spirit of God, the note of testimony is on what God has done for us, and rightly so. But the baptism of the Holy Ghost obliterates that for ever, and we begin to realise what Jesus meant when He said—"Ye shall be witnesses unto Me." Not witnesses to what Jesus can do—that is an elementary witness—but "witnesses unto Me." We will take everything that happens as happening to Him, whether it be praise or blame, persecution or commendation. No one can stand like that for Jesus Christ who is not constrained by the majesty of His personal power. It is the only thing that matters, and the strange thing is that it is the last thing realised by the Christian worker. Paul says he is gripped by the love of Christ; that is why he acts as he does. Men may call him mad or sober, but he does not care; there is only one thing he is living for, and that is to persuade men of the judgement seat of God, and of the love of Christ. This abandon to the love of Christ is the one thing that bears fruit in the life, and it will always leave the impression of the holiness and of the power of God, never of our personal holiness.

February 5

ARE YOU READY TO BE OFFERED?

Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all. Philippians 2:17

Are you willing to be offered for the work of the faithful—to pour out your life blood as a libation on the sacrifice of the faith of others? Or do you say—"I am not going to be offered up just yet, I do not want God to choose my work. I want to choose the scenery of my own sacrifice; I want to have the right kind of people watching me and saying, 'Well done."

It is one thing to go on the lonely way with dignified heroism, but quite another thing if the line mapped out for you by God means being a door-mat under other people's feet. Suppose God wants to teach you to say, "I know how to be abased"—are you ready to be offered up like that? Are you ready to be not so much as a drop in a bucket—to be so hopelessly insignificant that you are never thought of again in connection with the life you served? Are you willing to spend and be spent; not seeking to be ministered unto, but to minister? Some saints cannot do menial work and remain saints because it is beneath their dignity.

February 6

ARE YOU READY TO BE OFFERED?

I am already being poured out as a drink offering. 2 Timothy 4:6 (RV mg)

"I am now ready to be offered" (KJV). It is a transaction of will, not of sentiment. Tell God you are ready to be offered; then let the consequences be what they may, there is no strand of complaint now, no matter what God chooses. God puts you through the crisis in private, no one person can help another. Externally the life may be the same; the difference is in will. Go through the crisis in will, then when it comes externally there will be no thought of the cost. If you do not transact in will with God along this line, you will end in awakening sympathy for yourself.

"Bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar." The altar means fire—burning and purification and insulation for one purpose only, the destruction of every affinity that God has not started and of every attachment that is not an attachment in God. You do not destroy it, God does; you bind the sacrifice to the horns of the altar; and see that you do not give way to self-pity when the fire begins. After this way of fire, there is nothing that oppresses or depresses. When the crisis arises, you realise that things cannot touch you as they used to do. What is your way of fire?

Tell God you are ready to be offered, and God will prove Himself to be all you ever dreamed He would be.

THE DISCIPLINE OF DEJECTION

But we trusted . . . and beside all this, to-day is the third day. . . . Luke 24:21

Every fact that the disciples stated was right; but the inferences they drew from those facts were wrong. Anything that savours of dejection spiritually is always wrong. If depression and oppression visit me, I am to blame; God is not, nor is anyone else. Dejection springs from one of two sources—I have either satisfied a lust or I have not. Lust means-I must have it at once. Spiritual lust makes me demand an answer from God, instead of seeking God Who gives the answer. What have I been trusting God would do? And to-day—the immediate present—is the third day, and He has not done it, therefore I imagine I am justified in being dejected and in blaming God. Whenever the insistence is on the point that God answers prayer, we are off the track. The meaning of prayer is that we get hold of God, not of the answer. It is impossible to be well physically and to be dejected. Dejection is a sign of sickness, and the same thing is true spiritually. Dejection spiritually is wrong, and we are always to blame for it.

We look for visions from heaven, for earthquakes and thunders of God's power (the fact that we are dejected proves that we do), and we never dream that all the time God is in the commonplace things and people around us. If we will do the duty that lies nearest, we shall see Him. One of the most amazing revelations of God comes when we learn that it is in the commonplace things that the Deity of Jesus Christ is realised.

FEBRUARY 8

INSTANTANEOUS AND INSISTENT SANCTIFICATION

And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly. 1 Thes-salonians 5:23-24

When we pray to be sanctified, are we prepared to face the standard of these verses? We take the term sanctification much too lightly. Are we prepared for what sanctification will cost? It will cost an intense narrowing of all our interests on earth, and an immense broadening of all our interests in God. Sanctification means intense concentration on God's point of view. It means every power of body, soul and spirit chained and kept for God's purpose only. Are we prepared for God to do in us all that He separated us for? And then after His work is done in us, are we prepared to separate ourselves to God even as Jesus did? "For their sakes I sanctify Myself." The reason some of us have not entered into the experience of sanctification is that we have not realised the meaning of sanctification from God's standpoint. Sanctification means being made one with Jesus so that the disposition that ruled Him will rule us. Are we prepared for what that will cost? It will cost everything that is not of God in us.

Are we prepared to be caught up into the swing of this prayer of the apostle Paul's? Are we prepared to say—"Lord make me as holy as You can make a sinner saved by grace"? Jesus has prayed that we might be one with Him as He is one with the Father. The one and only characteristic of the Holy Ghost in a man is a strong family likeness to Jesus Christ, and freedom from everything that is unlike Him. Are we prepared to set ourselves apart for the Holy Spirit's ministrations in us?

February 9

ARE YOU EXHAUSTED SPIRITUALLY?

The everlasting God . . . fainteth not, neither is weary. Isaiah 40:28

Exhaustion means that the vital forces are worn right out. Spiritual exhaustion never comes through sin but only through service, and whether or not you are exhausted will depend upon where you get your supplies. Jesus said to Peter—"Feed My sheep," but He gave him nothing to feed them with. The process of being made broken bread and poured-out wine means that you have to be the nourishment for other souls until they learn to feed on God. They must drain you to the dregs. Be careful that you get your supply, or before long you will be utterly exhausted. Before other souls learn to draw on the life of the Lord Jesus direct, they have to draw on it through you; you have to be literally "sucked," until they learn to take their nourishment from God. We owe it to God to be our best for His lambs and His sheep as well as for Himself.

Has the way in which you have been serving God betrayed you into exhaustion? If so, then rally your affections. Where did you start the service from? From your own sympathy or from the basis of the Redemption of Jesus Christ? Continually go back to the foundation of your affections and recollect where the source of power is. You have no right to say—"Oh Lord, I am so exhausted." He saved and sanctified you in order to exhaust you. Be exhausted for God, but remember that your supply comes from Him. "All my fresh springs shall be in Thee" (PBV). 10

February 10

IS YOUR IMAGINATION OF GOD STARVED?

Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things. Isaiah 40:26

The people of God in Isaiah's day had starved their imagination by looking on the face of idols, and Isaiah made them look up at the heavens; that is, he made them begin to use their imagination aright. Nature to a saint is sacramental. If we are children of God, we have a tremendous treasure in Nature. In every wind that blows, in every night and day of the year, in every sign of the sky, in every blossoming and in every withering of the earth, there is a real coming of God to us if we will simply use our starved imagination to realise it.

The test of spiritual concentration is bringing the imagination into captivity. Is your imagination looking on the face of an idol? Is the idol yourself? Your work? Your conception of what a worker should be? Your experience of salvation and sanctification? Then your imagination of God is starved, and when you are up against difficulties you have no power, you can only endure in darkness. If your imagination is starved, do not look back to your own experience; it is God Whom you need. Go right out of yourself, away from the face of your idols, away from everything that has been starving your imagination. Rouse yourself, take the gibe that Isaiah gave the people, and deliberately turn your imagination to God.

One of the reasons of stultification in prayer is that there is no imagination, no power of putting ourselves deliberately before God. We have to learn how to be broken bread and poured-out wine on the line of intercession more than on the line of personal contact. Imagination is the power God gives a saint to posit himself out of himself into relationships he never was in.

February 11

IS YOUR HOPE IN GOD FAINT AND DYING?

Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose imagination is stayed on Thee. Isaiah 26:3 (RV mg)

Is your imagination stayed on God or is it starved? The starvation of the imagination is one of the most fruitful sources of exhaustion and sapping in a worker's life. If you have never used your imagination to put yourself before God, begin to do it now. It is no use waiting for God to come; you must put your imagination away from the face of idols and look unto Him and be saved. Imagination is the greatest gift God has given us, and it ought to be devoted entirely to Him. If you have been bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ, it will be one of the greatest assets to faith when the time of trial comes, because your faith and the Spirit of God will work together. Learn to associate ideas worthy of God with all that happens in Nature—the sunrises and the sunsets, the sun and the stars, the changing seasons, and your imagination will never be at the mercy of your impulses, but will always be at the service of God.

"We have sinned with our fathers . . . [and] remembered not"—then put a stiletto in the place where you have gone to sleep. "God is not talking to me just now," but He ought to be. Remember Whose you are and Whom you serve. Provoke yourself by recollection, and your affection for God will increase tenfold; your imagination will not be starved any longer, but will be quick and enthusiastic, and your hope will be inexpressibly bright.

FEBRUARY 12

MUST I LISTEN?

And they said unto Moses, Speak thou with us and we will hear: but let not God speak with us, lest we die. Exodus 20:19

We do not consciously disobey God, we simply do not heed Him. God has given us His commands; there they are, but we do not pay any attention to them, not because of wilful disobedience but because we do not love and respect Him. "If ye love Me, ye will keep My commandments" (RV). When once we realise that we have been "disrespecting" God all the time, we are covered with shame and humiliation because we have not heeded Him.

"Speak thou with us . . . : but let not God speak with us." We show how little we love God by preferring to listen to His servants only. We like to listen to personal testimonies, but we do not desire that God Himself should speak to us. Why are we so terrified lest God should speak to us? Because we know that if God does speak, either the thing must be done or we must tell God we will not obey Him. If it is only the servant's voice we hear, we feel it is not imperative, we can say, "Well, that is simply your own idea, though I don't deny it is probably God's truth."

Am I putting God in the humiliating position of having treated me as a child of His while all the time I have been ignoring Him? When I do hear Him, the humiliation I have put on Him comes back on me—"Lord, why was I so dull and so obstinate?" This is always the result when once we do hear God. The real delight of hearing Him is tempered with shame in having been so long in hearing Him.

February 13

THE DEVOTION OF HEARING

Speak; for Thy servant heareth. 1 Samuel 3:10

Because I have listened definitely to one thing from God, it does not follow that I will listen to everything He says. The way in which I show God that I neither love nor respect Him is by the obtuseness of my heart and mind towards what He says. If I love my friend, I intuitively detect what he wants, and Jesus says, "Ye are My friends." Have I disobeyed some command of my Lord's this week? If I had realised that it was a command of Jesus, I would not consciously have disobeyed it; but most of us show such disrespect to God that we do not even hear what He says, He might never have spoken.

The destiny of my spiritual life is such identification with Jesus Christ that I always hear God, and I know that God always hears me (John 11:41). If I am united with Jesus Christ, I hear God by the devotion of hearing all the time. A lily, or a tree, or a servant of God, may convey God's message to me. What hinders me from hearing is that I am taken up with other things. It is not that I will not hear God, but that I am not devoted in the right place. I am devoted to things, to service, to convictions, and God may say what He likes but I do not hear Him. The child attitude is always "Speak, LORD, for Thy servant heareth." If I have not cultivated this devotion of hearing, I can only hear God's voice at certain times; at other times I am taken up with things things which I say I must do, and I become deaf to Him, I am not living the life of a child. Have I heard God's voice to-day?

February 14

THE DISCIPLINE OF HEEDING

What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops. Matthew 10:27

At times God puts us through the discipline of darkness to teach us to heed Him. Song birds are taught to sing in the dark, and we are put into the shadow of God's hand until we learn to hear Him. "What I tell you in darkness"—watch where God puts you into darkness, and when you are there, keep your mouth shut. Are you in the dark just now in your circumstances, or in your life with God? Then remain quiet. If you open your mouth in the dark, you will talk in the wrong mood: darkness is the time to listen. Don't talk to other people about it; don't read books to find out the reason of the darkness, but listen and heed. If you talk to other people, you cannot hear what God is saying. When you are in the dark, listen, and God will give you a very precious message for someone else when you get into the light.

After every time of darkness there comes a mixture of delight and humiliation (if there is delight only, I question whether we have heard God at all), delight in hearing God speak, but chiefly humiliation—"What a long time I was in hearing that! How slow I have been in understanding that! And yet God has been saying it all these days and weeks." Now He gives you the gift of humiliation which brings the softness of heart that will always listen to God now.

February 15

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

None of us liveth to himself. Romans 14:7

Has it ever dawned on you that you are responsible for other souls spiritually before God? For instance, if I allow any private deflection from God in my life, everyone about me suffers. We "sit together in heavenly places." "Whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it." When once you allow physical selfishness, mental slovenliness, moral obtuseness, spiritual density, everyone belonging to your crowd will suffer. "But," you say, "who is sufficient for these things, if you erect a standard like that?" Our sufficiency is of God, and of Him alone.

"Ye shall be My witnesses" (RV). How many of us are willing to spend every ounce of nervous energy, of mental, moral and spiritual energy we have for Jesus Christ? That is the meaning of a witness in God's sense of the word. It takes time, be patient with yourself. God has left us on the earth—what for? To be saved and sanctified? No, to be at it for Him. Am I willing to be broken bread and poured-out wine for Him? To be spoilt for this age, for this life, to be spoilt from every standpoint but one—saving as I can disciple men and women to the Lord Jesus Christ. My life as a worker is the way I say "thank you" to God for His unspeakable salvation. Remember it is quite possible for anyone of us to be flung out as reprobate silver—"... lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."

February 16

THE INSPIRATION OF SPIRITUAL INITIATIVE

Arise from the dead. Ephesians 5:14

All initiative is not inspired. A man may say to you—"Buck up, take your disinclination by the throat, throw it overboard, and walk out into the thing!" That is ordinary human initiative. But when the Spirit of God comes in and says, in effect, "Buck up," we find that the initiative is inspired.

We all have any number of visions and ideals when we are young, but sooner or later we find that we have no power to make them real. We cannot do the things we long to do, and we are apt to settle down to the visions and ideals as dead, and God has to come and say—"Arise from the dead." When the inspiration of God does come, it comes with such miraculous power that we are able to arise from the dead and do the impossible thing. The remarkable thing about spiritual initiative is that the life comes after we do the "bucking up." God does not give us overcoming life; He gives us life as we overcome. When the inspiration of God comes, and He says—"Arise from the dead," we have to get up; God does not lift us up. Our Lord said to the man with the withered hand—"Stretch forth thy hand," and as soon as the man did so, his hand was healed, but he had to take the initiative. If we will do the overcoming, we shall find we are inspired of God because He gives life immediately.

February 17

THE INITIATIVE AGAINST DEPRESSION

Arise and eat. 1 Kings 19:5

The angel did not give Elijah a vision, or explain the Scriptures to him, or do anything remarkable; he told Elijah to do the most ordinary thing, viz., to get up and eat. If we were never depressed we should not be alive; it is the nature of a crystal never to be depressed. A human being is capable of depression, otherwise there would be no capacity for exaltation. There are things that are calculated to depress, things that are of the nature of death; and in taking an estimate of yourself, always take into account the capacity for depression.

When the Spirit of God comes He does not give us visions; He tells us to do the most ordinary things conceivable. Depression is apt to turn us away from the ordinary commonplace things of God's creation, but whenever God comes, the inspiration is to do the most natural simple things—the things we would never have imagined God was in, and as we do them we find He is there. The inspiration which comes to us in this way is an initiative against depression; we have to do the next thing and to do it in the inspiration of God. If we do a thing in order to overcome depression, we deepen the depression; but if the Spirit of God makes us feel intuitively that we must do the thing, and we do it, the depression is gone. Immediately we arise and obey, we enter on a higher plane of life.

February 18

THE INITIATIVE AGAINST DESPAIR

Rise, let us be going. Matthew 26:46

The disciples went to sleep when they should have kept awake, and when they realised what they had done it produced despair. The sense of the irreparable is apt to make us despair, and we say—"It is all up now, it is no use trying any more." If we imagine that this kind of despair is exceptional, we are mistaken, it is a very ordinary human experience. Whenever we realise that we have not done that which we had a magnificent opportunity of doing, then we are apt to sink in despair, and Jesus Christ comes and says—"Sleep on now, that opportunity is lost for ever, you cannot alter it, but arise and go to the next thing." Let the past sleep, but let it sleep on the bosom of Christ, and go out into the irresistible future with Him.

There are experiences like this in each of our lives. We are in despair, the despair that comes from actualities, and we cannot lift ourselves out of it. The disciples in this instance had done a downright unforgivable thing; they had gone to sleep instead of watching with Jesus, but He came with a spiritual initiative against their despair and said—"Arise and do the next thing." If we are inspired of God, what is the next thing? To trust Him absolutely and to pray on the ground of His Redemption.

Never let the sense of failure corrupt your new action.

February 19

THE INITIATIVE AGAINST DRUDGERY

Arise, shine. Isaiah 60:1

We have to take the first step as though there were no God. It is no use to wait for God to help us, He will not; but immediately we arise we find He is there. Whenever God inspires, the initiative is a moral one. We must do the thing and not lie like a log. If we will arise and shine, drudgery becomes divinely transfigured.

Drudgery is one of the finest touchstones of character there is. Drudgery is work that is very far removed from anything to do with the ideal—the utterly mean, 11 grubby things; and when we come in contact with them we know instantly whether or not we are spiritually real. Read John 13; we see there the Incarnate God doing the most desperate piece of drudgery, washing fishermen's feet, and He says—"If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." It requires the inspiration of God to go through drudgery with the light of God upon it. Some people do a certain thing, and the way in which they do it hallows that thing for ever afterwards. It may be the most commonplace thing, but after we have seen them do it, it becomes different. When the Lord does a thing through us, He always transfigures it. Our Lord took on Him our human flesh and transfigured it, and it has become for every saint the temple of the Holy Ghost.

February 20

THE INITIATIVE AGAINST DREAMING

Arise, let us go hence. John 14:31

Dreaming about a thing in order to do it properly is right; but dreaming about it when we should be doing it is wrong. After Our Lord had said those wonderful things to His disciples, we might have expected that He would tell them to go away and meditate over them all; but Our Lord never allowed "mooning." When we are getting into contact with God in order to find out what He wants, dreaming is right; but when we are inclined to spend our time in dreaming over what we have been told to do, it is a bad thing and God's blessing is never on it. God's initiative is always in the nature of a stab against this kind of dreaming, the stab that bids us "neither sit nor stand but go."

If we are quietly waiting before God and He has said—"Come ye yourselves apart," then that is meditation before God in order to get at the line He wants; but always beware of giving over to mere dreaming when once God has spoken. Leave Him to be the source of all your dreams and joys and delights, and go out and obey what He has said. If you are in love, you do not sit down and dream about the one you love all the time, you go and do something for him; and that is what Jesus Christ expects us to do. Dreaming after God has spoken is an indication that we do not trust Him.

February 21

HAVE YOU EVER BEEN CARRIED AWAY FOR HIM?

She hath wrought a good work on Me. Mark 14:6

If human love does not carry a man beyond himself, it is not love. If love is always discreet, always wise, always sensible and calculating, never carried beyond itself, it is not love at all. It may be affection, it may be warmth of feeling, but it has not the true nature of love in it.

Have I ever been carried away to do something for God not because it was my duty, nor because it was useful, nor because there was anything in it at all beyond the fact that I love Him? Have I ever realised that I can bring to God things which are of value to Him, or am I mooning round the magnitude of His Redemption whilst there are any number of things I might be doing? Not Divine, colossal things which could be recorded as marvellous, but ordinary, simple human things which will give evidence to God that I am abandoned to Him? Have I ever produced in the heart of the Lord Jesus what Mary of Bethany produced?

There are times when it seems as if God watches to see if we will give Him the abandoned tokens of how genuinely we do love Him. Abandon to God is of more value than personal holiness. Personal holiness focuses the eye on our own whiteness; we are greatly concerned about the way we walk and talk and look, fearful lest we offend Him. Perfect love casts out all that when once we are abandoned to God. We have to get rid of this notion—"Am I of any use?" and make up our minds that we are not, and we may be near the truth. It is never a question of being of use, but of being of value to God Himself. When we are abandoned to God, He works through us all the time.

February 22

THE DISCIPLINE OF SPIRITUAL TENACITY

Be still, and know that I am God. Psalm 46:10

Tenacity is more than endurance, it is endurance combined with the absolute certainty that what we are looking for is going to transpire. Tenacity is more than hanging on, which may be but the weakness of being too afraid to fall off. Tenacity is the supreme effort of a man refusing to believe that his hero is going to be conquered. The greatest fear a disciple has is not that he will be damned, but that Jesus Christ will be worsted, that the things He stood for—love and justice and forgiveness and kindness among men—will not win out in the end; the things He stands for look like will-o'-the-wisps. Then comes the call to spiritual tenacity, not to hang on and do nothing, but to work deliberately on the certainty that God is not going to be worsted.

If our hopes are being disappointed just now, it means that they are being purified. There is nothing noble the human mind has ever hoped for or dreamed of that will not be fulfilled. One of the greatest strains in life is the strain of waiting for God. "Because thou hast kept the word of My patience."

Remain spiritually tenacious.

February 23

THE DETERMINATION TO SERVE

The son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. Matthew 20:28

Paul's idea of service is the same as our Lord's: "I am among you as He that serveth"; "ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake." We have the idea that a man called to the ministry is called to be a different kind of being from other men. According to Jesus Christ, he is called to be the "door-mat" of other men; their spiritual leader, but never their superior. "I know how to be abased," says Paul. This is Paul's idea of service—"I will spend myself to the last ebb for you; you may give me praise or give me blame, it will make no difference. So long as there is a human being who does not know Jesus Christ, I am his debtor to serve him until he does." The mainspring of Paul's service is not love for men, but love for Jesus Christ. If we are devoted to the cause of humanity, we shall soon be crushed and brokenhearted, for we shall often meet with more ingratitude from men than we would from a dog; but if our motive is love to God, no ingratitude can hinder us from serving our fellow men.

Paul's realisation of how Jesus Christ had dealt with him is the secret of his determination to serve others. "I was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious"—no matter how men may treat me, they will never treat me with the spite and hatred with which I treated Jesus Christ. When we realise that Jesus Christ has served us to the end of our meanness, our selfishness, and sin, nothing that we meet with from others can exhaust our determination to serve men for His sake.

February 24

THE DELIGHT OF SACRIFICE

I will very gladly spend and be spent for you. 2 Corinthians 12:15

When the Spirit of God has shed abroad the love of God in our hearts, we begin deliberately to identify ourselves with Jesus Christ's interests in other people, and Jesus Christ is interested in every kind of man there is. We have no right in Christian work to be guided by our affinities; this is one of the biggest tests of our relationship to Jesus Christ. The delight of sacrifice is that I lay down my life for my Friend, not fling it away, but deliberately lay my life out for Him and His interests in other people, not for a cause. Paul spent himself for one purpose only—that he might win men to Jesus Christ. Paul attracted to Jesus all the time, never to himself. "I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some." When a man says he must develop a holy life alone with God, he is of no more use to his fellow men: he puts himself on a pedestal, away from the common run of men. Paul became a sacramental personality; wherever he went, Jesus Christ helped Himself to his life. Many of us are after our own ends, and Jesus Christ cannot help Himself to our lives. If we are abandoned to Jesus, we have no ends of our own to serve. Paul said he knew how to be a "door-mat" without resenting it, because the mainspring of his life was devotion to Jesus. We are apt to be devoted not to Jesus Christ but to the things which emancipate us spiritually. That was not Paul's motive: "I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren"—wild, extravagant—is it? When a man is in love it is not an exaggeration to talk in that way, and Paul is in love with Jesus Christ.

February 25

THE DESTITUTION OF SERVICE

Though the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved. 2 Corinthians 12:15

Natural love expects some return, but Paul says—"I do not care whether you love me or not, I am willing to destitute myself completely, not merely for your sakes, but that I may get you to God." "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor." Paul's idea of service is exactly along that line—"I do not care with what extravagance I spend myself, and I will do it gladly." It was a joyful thing to Paul.

The ecclesiastical idea of a servant of God is not Jesus Christ's idea. His idea is that we serve Him by being the servants of other men. Jesus Christ outsocialists the socialists. He says that in His Kingdom he that is greatest shall be the servant of all. The real test of the saint is not preaching the gospel, but washing disciples' feet, that is, doing the things that do not count in the actual estimate of men, but count everything in the estimate of God. Paul delighted to spend himself out for God's interests in other people, and he did not care what it cost. We come in with our economical notions—"Suppose God wants me to go there—what about the salary? What about the climate? How shall I be looked after? A man must consider these things." All that is an indication that we are serving God with a reserve. The apostle Paul had no reserve. Paul focuses Jesus Christ's idea of a New Testament saint in his life, viz.: not one who proclaims the Gospel merely, but one who becomes broken bread and poured-out wine in the hands of Jesus Christ for other lives.

February 26

INFERIOR MISGIVINGS ABOUT IESUS

Sir, Thou hast nothing to draw with. John 4:11

"I am impressed with the wonder of what God says, but He cannot expect me really to live it out in the details of my life!" When it comes to facing Jesus Christ on His own merits, our attitude is one of pious superiority—"Your ideals are high and they impress us, but in touch with actual things, it cannot be done." Each of us thinks about Jesus in this way in some particular. These misgivings about Jesus start from the amused questions put to us when we talk of our transactions with God—"Where are you going to get your money from? How are you going to be looked after?" Or they start from ourselves when we tell Jesus that our case is a bit too hard for Him. "It is all very well to say 'Trust in the Lord,' but a man must live, and Jesus has nothing to draw with—nothing whereby to give us these things." Beware of the pious fraud in you which says—"I have no misgivings about Jesus, only about myself." None of us ever had misgivings about ourselves; we know exactly what we cannot do, but we do have misgivings about Jesus. We are rather hurt at the idea that He can do what we cannot.

My misgivings arise from the fact that I ransack my own person to find out how He will be able to do it. My questions spring from the depths of my own inferiority. If I detect these misgivings in myself, let me bring them to the light and confess them—"Lord, I have had misgivings about Thee, I have not believed in Thy wits apart from my own; I have not believed in Thine Almighty power apart from my finite understanding of it.

February 27

THE IMPOVERISHED MINISTRY OF JESUS

From whence then hast Thou that living water? John 4:11

"The well is deep"—and a great deal deeper than the Samaritan woman knew! Think of the depths of human nature, of human life, think of the depths of the "wells" in you. Have you been impoverishing the ministry of Jesus so that He cannot do anything? Suppose there is a well of fathomless trouble inside your heart, and Jesus comes and says—"Let not your heart be troubled"; and you shrug your shoulders and say—"But, Lord, the well is deep; You cannot draw up quietness and comfort out of it." No, He will bring them down from above. Jesus does not bring anything up from the wells of human nature. We limit the Holy One of Israel by remembering what we have allowed Him to do for us in the past, and by saying—"Of course I cannot expect God to do this thing." The thing that taxes almightiness is the very thing which as disciples of Jesus we ought to believe He will do. We impoverish His ministry the moment we forget He is Almighty; the impoverishment is in us, not in Him. We will come to Jesus as Comforter or as Sympathiser, but we will not come to Him as Almighty.

The reason some of us are such poor specimens of Christianity is because we have no Almighty Christ. We have Christian attributes and experiences, but there is no abandonment to Jesus Christ. When we get into difficult circumstances, we impoverish His ministry by saying—"Of course He cannot do any thing," and we struggle down to the deeps and try to get the water for ourselves. Beware of the satisfaction of sinking back and saying—"It can't be done"; you know it can be done if you look to Jesus. The well of your incompleteness is deep, but make the effort and look away to Him.

DO YE NOW BELIEVE?

By this we believe. . . . Jesus answered . . . , Do ye now believe? John 16:30–31

"Now we believe." Jesus says—"Do you? The time is coming when you will leave Me alone." Many a Christian worker has left Jesus Christ alone and gone into work from a sense of duty, or from a sense of need arising out of his own particular discernment. The reason for this is the absence of the resurrection life of Jesus. The soul has got out of intimate contact with God by leaning to its own religious understanding. There is no sin in it, and no punishment attached to it; but when the soul realises how he has hindered his understanding of Jesus Christ, and produced for himself perplexities and sorrows and difficulties, it is with shame and contrition he has to come back.

We need to rely on the resurrection life of Jesus much deeper down, to get into the habit of steadily referring everything back to Him; instead of this we make our commonsense decisions and ask God to bless them. He cannot, it is not in His domain, it is severed from reality. If we do a thing from a sense of duty, we are putting up a standard in competition with Jesus Christ. We become a "superior person," and say-"Now in this matter I must do this and that." We have put our sense of duty on the throne instead of the resurrection life of Jesus. We are not told to walk in the light of conscience or of a sense of duty, but to walk in the light as God is in the light. When we do anything from a sense of duty, we can back it up by argument; when we do anything in obedience to the Lord, there is no argument possible; that is why a saint can be easily ridiculed.

February 29

WHAT DO YOU WANT THE LORD TO DO FOR YOU?

Lord, that I may receive my sight. Luke 18:41

What is the thing that not only disturbs you but makes you a disturbance? It is always something you cannot deal with yourself. "They rebuked him, that he should hold his peace: but he cried so much the more." Persist in the disturbance until you yet get face to face with the Lord Himself; do not deify common sense. When Jesus asks us what we want Him to do for us in regard to the incredible thing with which we are faced, remember that He does not work in commonsense ways, but in supernatural ways.

Watch how we limit the Lord by remembering what we have allowed Him to do for us in the past: "I always failed there, and I always shall"; consequently we do not ask for what we want, "It is ridiculous to ask God to do this." If it is an impossibility, it is the thing we have to ask. If it is not an impossible thing, it is not a real disturbance. God will do the absolutely impossible.

This man received his sight. The most impossible thing to you is that you should be so identified with the Lord that there is nothing of the old life left. He will do it if you ask Him. But you have to come to the place where you believe Him to be Almighty. Faith is not in what Jesus says but in Himself; if we only look at what He says we shall never believe. When once we see Jesus, He does the impossible thing as naturally as breathing. Our agony comes through the wilful stupidity of our own heart. We won't believe, we won't cut the shore line, we prefer to worry on.

THE UNDEVIATING QUESTION

Lovest thou Me? John 21:17

Peter declares nothing now (cf. Matthew 26:33–35). Natural individuality professes and declares; the love of the personality is only discovered by the hurt of the question of Jesus Christ. Peter loved Jesus in the way in which any natural man loves a good man. That is temperamental love; it may go deep into the individuality, but it does not touch the centre of the person. True love never professes anything. Jesus said—"Whosoever shall confess Me before men," i.e., confess his love not merely by his words, but by everything he does.

Unless we get hurt right out of every deception about ourselves, the word of God is not having its way with us. The word of God hurts as no sin can ever hurt, because sin blunts feeling. The question of the Lord intensifies feeling, until to be hurt by Jesus is the most exquisite hurt conceivable. It hurts not only in the natural way but in the profound personal way. The word of the Lord pierces even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, there is no deception left. There is no possibility of being sentimental with the Lord's question; you cannot say nice things when the Lord speaks directly to you, the hurt is too terrific. It is such a hurt that it stings every other concern out of account. There never can be any mistake about the hurt of the Lord's word when it comes to his child; but the point of the hurt is the great point of revelation.

March 2

HAVE YOU FELT THE HURT OF THE LORD?

He said unto him the third time, Lovest thou Me? John 21:17

Have you felt the hurt of the Lord to the uncovered quick, the place where the real sensitiveness of your life is lodged? The devil never hurts there, neither sin nor human affection hurts there, nothing goes through to that place but the word of God. "Peter was grieved, because Jesus said unto him the third time. . . ." He was awakening to the fact that in the real true centre of his personal life he was devoted to Jesus, and he began to see what the patient questioning meant. There was not the slightest strand of delusion left in Peter's mind, he never could be deluded again. There was no room for passionate utterance, no room for exhilaration or sentiment. It was a revelation to him to realise how much he did love the Lord, and with amazement he said—Lord, Thou knowest all things." Peter began to see how much he did love Jesus; but he did not say—"Look at this or that to confirm it." Peter was beginning to discover to himself how much he did love the Lord, that there was no one in heaven above or upon earth beneath beside Jesus Christ; but he did not know it until the probing, hurting questions of the Lord came. The Lord's questions always reveal me to myself.

The patient directness and skill of Jesus Christ with Peter! Our Lord never asks questions until the right time. Rarely, but probably once, He will get us into a corner where He will hurt us with His undeviating questions, and we will realise that we do love Him far more deeply than any profession can ever show.

March 3

THE UNRELIEVED QUEST

Feed My sheep. John 21:17

This is love in the making. The love of God is unmade, it is God's nature. When we receive the Holy Spirit He unites us with God so that His love is manifested in us. When the soul is united to God by the indwelling Holy Spirit, that is not the end; the end is that we may be one with the Father as Jesus was. What kind of oneness had Jesus Christ with the Father? Such a oneness that the Father sent him down here to be spent for us, and He says—"As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (RV).

Peter realises now with the revelation of the Lord's hurting question that he does love Him; then comes the point—Spend it out. Don't testify how much you love Me, don't profess about the marvellous revelation you have had, but-"Feed My sheep." And Jesus has some extraordinarily funny sheep, some bedraggled, dirty sheep, some awkward butting sheep, some sheep that have gone astray! It is impossible to weary God's love, and it is impossible to weary that love in me if it springs from the one centre. The love of God pays no attention to the distinctions made by natural individuality. If I love my Lord I have no business to be guided by natural temperament; I have to feed His sheep. There is no relief and no release from this commission. Beware of counterfeiting the love of God by working along the line of natural human sympathy, because that will end in blaspheming the love of God.

March 4

COULD THIS BE TRUE OF ME?

But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself. Acts 20:24

It is easier to serve God without a vision, easier to work for God without a call, because then you are not bothered by what God requires; common sense is your guide, veneered over with Christian sentiment. You will be more prosperous and successful, more leisure-hearted, if you never realise the call of God. But if once you receive a commission from Jesus Christ, the memory of what God wants will always come like a goad; you will no longer be able to work for Him on the commonsense basis.

What do I really count dear? If I have not been gripped by Jesus Christ, I will count service dear, time given to God dear, my life dear unto myself. Paul says he counted his life dear only in order that he might fulfil the ministry he had received; he refused to use his energy for any other thing. Acts 20:24 states Paul's almost sublime annoyance at being asked to consider himself; he was absolutely indifferent to any consideration other than that of fulfilling the ministry he had received. Practical work may be a competitor against abandonment to God, because practical work is based on this argument—"Remember how useful you are here," or-"Think how much value you would be in that particular type of work." That attitude does not put Jesus Christ as the Guide as to where we should go, but our judgement as to where we are of most use. Never consider whether you are of use; but ever consider that you are not your own but His.

March 5

IS HE REALLY LORD?

... so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus. Acts 20:24

Joy means the perfect fulfilment of that for which I was created and regenerated, not the successful doing of a thing. The joy Our Lord had lay in doing what the Father sent Him to do, and He says—"As My Father hath sent Me, even so am I sending you." Have I received a ministry from the Lord? If so, I have to be loyal to it, to count my life precious only for the fulfilling of that ministry. Think of the satisfaction it will be to hear Jesus say—"Well done, good and faithful servant"; to know that you have done what He sent you to do. We have all to find our niche in life, and spiritually we find it when we receive our ministry from the Lord. In order to do this we must have companied with Jesus; we must know Him as more than a personal Saviour. "I will shew him how great things he must suffer for My sake."

"Lovest thou Me?" Then—"Feed My sheep." There is no choice of service, only absolute loyalty to Our Lord's commission; loyalty to what you discern when you are in closest contact with God. If you have received a ministry from the Lord Jesus, you will know that the need is never the call: the need is the opportunity. The call is loyalty to the ministry you received when you were in real touch with Him. This does not imply that there is a campaign of service marked out for you, but it does mean that you will have to ignore the demands for service along other lines.

March 6

AMID A CROWD OF PALTRY THINGS

... in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses. 2 Corinthians 6:4

It takes Almighty grace to take the next step when there is no vision and no spectator—the next step in devotion, the next step in your study, in your reading, in your kitchen; the next step in your duty, when there is no vision from God, no enthusiasm and no spectator. It takes far more of the grace of God, far more conscious drawing upon God to take that step, than it does to preach the Gospel.

Every Christian has to partake of what was the essence of the Incarnation, he must bring the thing down into flesh-and-blood actualities and work it out through the finger-tips. We flag when there is no vision, no uplift, but just the common round, the trivial task. The thing that tells in the long run for God and for men is the steady persevering work in the unseen, and the only way to keep the life uncrushed is to live looking to God. Ask God to keep the eyes of your spirit open to the Risen Christ, and it will be impossible for drudgery to damp you. Continually get away from pettiness and paltriness of mind and thought out into the thirteenth chapter of St. John's Gospel.

March 7

UNDAUNTED RADIANCE

Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. Romans 8:37

Paul is speaking of the things that might seem likely to separate or wedge in between the saint and the love of God; but the remarkable thing is that nothing can wedge in between the love of God and the saint. These things can and do come in between the devotional exercises of the soul and God and separate individual life from God; but none of them is able to wedge in between the love of God and the soul of the saint. The bedrock of our Christian faith is the unmerited, fathomless marvel of the love of God exhibited on the Cross of Calvary, a love we never can and never shall merit. Paul says this is the reason we are more than conquerors in all these things, super-victors, with a joy we would not have but for the very things which look as if they are going to overwhelm us.

The surf that distresses the ordinary swimmer produces in the surf-rider the super joy of going clean through it. Apply that to our own circumstances, these very things—tribulation, distress, persecution, produce in us the super joy; they are not things to fight. We are more than conquerors through Him in all these things, not in spite of them, but in the midst of them. The saint never knows the joy of the Lord in spite of tribulation, but because of it. "I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation," says Paul.

Undaunted radiance is not built on anything passing, but on the love of God that nothing can alter. The experiences of life, terrible or monotonous, are impotent to touch the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

March 8

THE RELINQUISHED LIFE

I am crucified with Christ. Galatians 2:20

No one is ever united with Jesus Christ until he is willing to relinquish not sin only, but his whole way of looking at things. To be born from above (RV mg) of the Spirit of God means that we must let go before we lay hold, and in the first stages it is the relinquishing of all pretence. What Our Lord wants us to present to Him is not goodness, nor honesty, nor endeavour, but real solid sin; that is all He can take from us. And what does He give in exchange for our sin? Real solid righteousness. But we must relinquish all pretence of being anything, all claim of being worthy of God's consideration.

Then the Spirit of God will show us what further there is to relinquish. There will have to be the relinquishing of my claim to my right to myself in every phase. Am I willing to relinquish my hold on all I possess, my hold on my affections, and on everything, and to be identified with the death of Jesus Christ?

There is always a sharp painful disillusionment to go through before we do relinquish. When a man really sees himself as the Lord sees him, it is not the abominable sins of the flesh that shock him, but the awful nature of the pride of his own heart against Jesus Christ. When he sees himself in the light of the Lord, the shame and the horror and the desperate conviction come home.

If you are up against the question of relinquishing, go through the crisis, relinquish all, and God will make you fit for all that He requires of you.

March 9

THE TIME OF RELAPSE

Will ye also go away? John 6:67

A penetrating question. Our Lord's words come home most when He talks in the most simple way. We know Who Jesus is, but in spite of that He says—"Will ye also go away?" We have to maintain a venturing attitude toward Him all the time.

"From that time many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him." They went back from walking with Jesus, not into sin, but they relapsed. Many to-day are spending and being spent in work for Jesus Christ, but they do not walk with Him. The one thing God keeps us to steadily is that we may be one with Jesus Christ. After sanctification the discipline of our spiritual life is along this line. If God gives a clear and emphatic realisation to your soul of what He wants, do not try to keep yourself in that relationship by any particular method, but live a natural life of absolute dependence on Jesus Christ. Never try to live the life with God on any other line than God's line, and that line is absolute devotion to Him. The certainty that I know I do not know—that is the secret of going with Jesus.

Peter only saw in Jesus Someone to minister salvation to him and to the world. Our Lord wants us to be voke-fellows with Him.

Verse 70: Jesus answers the great lack in Peter. We cannot answer for others.

March 10

HAVE A MESSAGE AND BE ONE

Preach the word. 2 Timothy 4:2

We are not saved to be "channels only," but to be sons and daughters of God. We are not turned into spiritual mediums, but into spiritual messengers; the message must be part of ourselves. The Son of God was His own message, His words were spirit and life; and as His disciples our lives must be the sacrament of our message. The natural heart will do any amount of serving, but it takes the heart broken by conviction of sin, and baptised by the Holy Ghost, and crumpled into the purpose of God, before the life becomes the sacrament of its message.

There is a difference between giving a testimony and preaching. A preacher is one who has realised the call of God and is determined to use his every power to proclaim God's truth. God takes us out of our own ideas for our lives and we are "batter'd to shape and use," as the disciples were after Pentecost. Pentecost did not teach the disciples anything; it made them the incarnation of what they preached—"Ye shall be witnesses unto Me."

Let God have perfect liberty when you speak. Before God's message can liberate other souls, the liberation must be real in you. Gather your material, and set it alight when you speak.

March 11

VISION

I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision. Acts 26:19

If we lose the vision, we alone are responsible, and the way we lose the vision is by spiritual leakage. If we do not run our belief about God into practical issues, it is all up with the vision God has given. The only way to be obedient to the heavenly vision is to give our utmost for God's highest, and this can only be done by continually and resolutely recalling the vision. The test is the sixty seconds of every minute, and the sixty minutes of every hour, not our times of prayer and devotional meetings.

"Though it tarry, wait for it." We cannot attain to a vision, we must live in the inspiration of it until it accomplishes itself. We get so practical that we forget the vision. At the beginning we saw the vision but did not wait for it; we rushed off into practical work, and when the vision was fulfilled, we did not see it. Waiting for the vision that tarries is the test of our loyalty to God. It is at the peril of our soul's welfare that we get caught up in practical work and miss the fulfilment of the vision.

Watch God's cyclones. The only way God sows His saints is by His whirlwind. Are you going to prove an empty pod? It will depend on whether or not you are actually living in the light of what you have seen. Let God fling you out, and do not go until He does. If you select your own spot, you will prove an empty pod. If God sows you, you will bring forth fruit.

It is essential to practise the walk of the feet in the light of the vision.

March 12

ABANDONMENT

Then Peter began to say unto Him, Lo, we have left all, and have followed Thee. . . . Mark 10:28

Our Lord replies, in effect, that abandonment is for Himself, and not for what the disciples themselves will get from it. Beware of an abandonment which has the commercial spirit in it—"I am going to give myself to God because I want to be delivered from sin, because I want to be made holy." All that is the result of being right with God, but that spirit is not of the essential nature of Christianity. Abandonment is not for anything at all. We have got so commercialised that we only go to God for something from Him, and not for Himself. It is like saying—"No, Lord, I don't want Thee, I want myself; but I want myself clean and filled with the Holy Ghost; I want to be put in Thy showroom and be able to say—'This is what God has done for me." If we only give up something to God because we want more back, there is nothing of the Holy Spirit in our abandonment; it is miserable commercial self-interest. That we gain heaven, that we are delivered from sin, that we are made useful to God—these things never enter as considerations into real abandonment, which is a personal sovereign preference for Jesus Christ Himself.

When we come up against the barriers of natural relationship, where is Jesus Christ? Most of us desert Him—"Yes, Lord, I did hear Thy call; but my mother is in the road, my wife, my self-interest, and I can go no further." "Then," Jesus says, "you cannot be My disciple."

The test of abandonment is always over the neck of natural devotion. Go over it, and God's own abandonment will embrace all those you had to hurt in abandoning. Beware of stopping short of abandonment to God. Most of us know abandonment in vision only.

March 13

THE ABANDONMENT OF GOD

God so loved the world, that He gave. . . . John 3:16

Salvation is not merely deliverance from sin, nor the experience of personal holiness; the salvation of God is deliverance out of self entirely into union with Himself. My experimental knowledge of salvation will be along the line of deliverance from sin and of personal holiness; but salvation means that the Spirit of God has brought me into touch with God's personality, and I am thrilled with something infinitely greater than myself; I am caught up into the abandonment of God.

To say that we are called to preach holiness or sanctification, is to get into a side-eddy. We are called to proclaim Jesus Christ. The fact that He saves from sin and makes us holy is part of the effect of the wonderful abandonment of God.

Abandonment never produces the consciousness of its own effort, because the whole life is taken up with the One to Whom we abandon. Beware of talking about abandonment if you know nothing about it, and you will never know anything about it until you have realised what John 3:16 means, that God gave Himself absolutely. In our abandonment we give ourselves over to God just as God gave Himself for us, without any calculation. The consequence of abandonment never enters into our outlook because our life is taken up with Him.

March 14

OBEDIENCE

His servants ye are to whom ye obey. Romans 6:16

The first thing to do in examining the power that dominates me is to take hold of the unwelcome fact that I am responsible for being thus dominated because I have yielded. If I am a slave to myself, I am to blame for it because at a point away back I yielded myself to myself. Likewise, if I obey God I do so because I have yielded myself to Him.

Yield in childhood to selfishness, and you will find it the most enchaining tyranny on earth. There is no power in the human soul of itself to break the bondage of a disposition formed by yielding. Yield for one second to anything in the nature of lust (remember what lust is: "I must have it at once," whether it be the lust of the flesh or the lust of the mind, once yield and though you may hate yourself for having yielded, you are a bond-slave to that thing. There is no release in human power at all, but only in the Redemption. You must yield yourself in utter humiliation to the only One Who can break the dominating power, viz., the Lord Jesus Christ. "He hath anointed Me . . . to preach deliverance to the captives."

We find this out in the most ridiculously small ways—"Oh, I can give that habit up when I like." You cannot, you will find that the habit absolutely dominates you because you yielded to it willingly. It is easy to sing—"He will break every fetter," and at the same time be living a life of obvious slavery to yourself. Yielding to Jesus will break every form of slavery in any human life.

March 15

THE DISCIPLINE OF DISMAY

And as they followed, they were afraid. Mark 10:32

At the beginning we were sure we knew all about Jesus Christ, it was a delight to sell all and to fling ourselves out in a hardihood of love; but now we are not quite so sure. Jesus is on in front and He looks strange. "Jesus went before them: and they were amazed."

There is an aspect of Jesus that chills the heart of a disciple to the core and makes the whole spiritual life gasp for breath. This strange Being with His face set like a flint and His striding determination strikes terror into me. He is no longer Counsellor and Comrade, He is taken up with a point of view I know nothing about, and I am amazed at Him. At first I was confident that I understood Him, but now I am not so sure. I begin to realise there is a distance between Jesus Christ and me; I can no longer be familiar with Him. He is ahead of me and He never turns round; I have no idea where He is going, and the goal has become strangely far off.

Jesus Christ had to fathom every sin and every sorrow man could experience, and that is what makes Him seem strange. When we see Him in this aspect we do not know Him, we do not recognise one feature of His life, and we do not know how to begin to follow Him. He is on in front, a Leader Who is very strange, and we have no comradeship with Him.

The discipline of dismay is an essential necessity in the life of discipleship. The danger is to get back to a little fire of our own and kindle enthusiasm at it (cf. Isaiah 50:10–11). When the darkness of dismay comes, endure until it is over, because out of it will come that following of Jesus which is an unspeakable joy.

March 16

THE MASTER ASSIZES

For we must all appear before the judgement seat of Christ. 2 Corinthians 5:10

Paul says that we must all, preacher and people alike, "appear before the judgement seat of Christ." If you learn to live in the white light of Christ here and now, judgement finally will cause you to delight in the work of God in you. Keep yourself steadily faced by the judgement seat of Christ; walk now in the light of the holiest you know. A wrong temper of mind about another soul will end in the spirit of the devil, no matter how saintly you are. One carnal judgement, and the end of it is hell in you. Drag it to the light at once and say—"My God, I have been guilty there." If you don't, hardness will come all through. The penalty of sin is confirmation in sin. It is not only God who punishes for sin; sin confirms itself in the sinner and gives back full pay. No struggling or praying will enable you to stop doing some things, and the penalty of sin is that gradually you get used to it and do not know that it is sin. No power save the incoming of the Holy Ghost can alter the inherent consequences of sin.

"But if we walk in the light as He is in the light." Walking in the light means for many of us walking according to our standard for another person. The deadliest Pharisaism to-day is not hypocrisy, but unconscious unreality.

March 17

THE WORKER'S RULING PASSION

Wherefore we labour, that . . . we may be accepted of Him. 2 Corinthians 5:9

"Wherefore we labour. . . ." It is arduous work to keep the master ambition in front. It means holding one's self to the high ideal year in and year out, not being ambitious to win souls or to establish churches or to have revivals, but being ambitious only to be "accepted of Him." It is not lack of spiritual experience that leads to failure, but lack of labouring to keep the ideal right. Once a week at least take stock before God, and see whether you are keeping your life up to the standard He wishes. Paul is like a musician who does not heed the approval of the audience if he can catch the look of approval from his Master.

Any ambition which is in the tiniest degree away from this central one of being "approved unto God" may end in our being castaways. Learn to discern where the ambition leads, and you will see why it is so necessary to live facing the Lord Jesus Christ. Paul says—Lest my body should make me take another line, I am constantly watching so that I may bring it into subjection and keep it under (see 1 Corinthians 9:27).

I have to learn to relate everything to the master ambition, and to maintain it without any cessation.

My worth to God in public is what I am in private. Is my master ambition to please Him and be acceptable to Him, or is it something less, no matter how noble?

March 18

SHALL I ROUSE MYSELF UP TO THIS?

Perfecting holiness in the fear of God. 2 Corinthians 7:1

"Having therefore these promises." I claim the fulfilment of God's promises, and rightly, but that is only the human side; the Divine side is that through the promises I recognise God's claim on me. For instance, am I realising that my body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, or have I a habit of body that plainly will not bear the light of God on it? By sanctification the Son of God is formed in me, then I have to transform my natural life into a spiritual life by obedience to Him. God educates us down to the scruple. ¹² When He begins to check, do not confer with flesh and blood, cleanse yourself at once. Keep yourself cleansed in your daily walk.

Î have to cleanse myself from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit until both are in accord with the nature of God. Is the mind of my spirit in perfect agreement with the life of the Son of God in me, or am I insubordinate in intellect? Am I forming the mind of Christ, Who never spoke from His right to Himself, but maintained an inner watchfulness whereby He continually submitted His spirit to His Father? I have the responsibility of keeping my spirit in agreement with His Spirit, and by degrees Jesus lifts me up to where He lived—in perfect consecration to His Father's will, paying no attention to any other thing. Am I perfecting this type of holiness in the fear of God? Is God getting His way with me, and are other people beginning to see God in my life more and more?

Be serious with God and leave the rest gaily alone. Put God first literally.

March 19

THE WAY OF ABRAHAM IN FAITH

He went out, not knowing whither he went. Hebrews 11:8

In the Old Testament, personal relationship with God showed itself in separation, and this is symbolised in the life of Abraham by his separation from his country and from his kith and kin. To-day the separation is more of a mental and moral separation from the way that those who are dearest to us look at things, that is, if they have not a personal relationship with God. Jesus Christ emphasised this (see Luke 14:26).

^{12.} down to the scruple: to the smallest item.

Faith never knows where it is being led, but it loves and knows the One Who is leading. It is a life of faith, not of intellect and reason, but a life of knowing Who makes us "go." The root of faith is the knowledge of a Person, and one of the biggest snares is the idea that God is sure to lead us to success.

The final stage in the life of faith is attainment of character. There are many passing transfigurations of character; when we pray we feel the blessing of God enwrapping us and for the time being we are changed, then we get back to the ordinary days and ways and the glory vanishes. The life of faith is not a life of mounting up with wings, but a life of walking and not fainting. It is not a question of sanctification; but of something infinitely further on than sanctification, of faith that has been tried and proved and has stood the test. Abraham is not a type of sanctification, but a type of the life of faith, a tried faith built on a real God. "Abraham believed God."

March 20

FRIENDSHIP WITH GOD

Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do? Genesis 18:17

Its Delights. This chapter brings out the delight of real friendship with God as compared with occasional feelings of His presence in prayer. To be so much in contact with God that you never need to ask Him to show you His will, is to be nearing the final stage of your discipline in the life of faith. When you are rightly related to God, it is a life of freedom and liberty and delight, you are God's will, and all your commonsense decisions are His will for you unless He checks. You decide things in perfect delightful friendship with God, knowing that if your decisions are wrong He will always check; when He checks, stop at once.

Its Difficulties. Why did Abraham stop praying when he did? He was not intimate enough yet to go boldly on until God granted his desire, there was something yet to be desired in his relationship to God. Whenever we stop short in prayer and say—"Well, I don't know; perhaps it is not God's will"—there is still another stage to go. We are not so intimately acquainted with God as Jesus was, and as He wants us to be—"That they may be one, even as We are one." Think of the last thing you prayed about—were you devoted to your desire or to God? Determined to get some gift of the Spirit or to get at God? "Your Heavenly Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask Him." The point of asking is that you may get to know God better. "Delight thyself also in the LORD; and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart." Keep praying in order to get a perfect understanding of God Himself.

March 21

INTEREST OR IDENTIFICATION?

I have been crucified with Christ. Galatians 2:20 (RV)

The imperative need spiritually is to sign the death-warrant of the disposition of sin, to turn all emotional impressions and intellectual beliefs into a moral verdict against the disposition of sin, viz., my claim to my right to myself. Paul says—"I have been crucified with Christ"; he does not say, "I have determined to imitate Jesus Christ," or, "I will endeavour to follow Him," but, "I have been identified with Him in His death." When I come to such a moral decision and act upon it, then all that Christ wrought for me on the Cross is wrought in me. The free committal of myself to God gives the Holy Spirit the chance to impart to me the holiness of Jesus Christ.

"... nevertheless I live...." The individuality remains, but the mainspring, the ruling disposition, is radically altered. The same human body remains, but the old satanic right to myself is destroyed.

"And the life which I now live in the flesh, . . ." not the life which I long to live and pray to live, but the life I now live in my mortal flesh, the life which men can see, "I live by the faith of the Son of God." This faith is not Paul's faith in Jesus Christ, but the faith that the Son of God has imparted to him—"the faith of the Son of God." It is no longer faith in faith, but faith which has overleapt all conscious bounds, the identical faith of the Son of God.

THE BURNING HEART

Did not our heart burn within us? Luke 24:32

We need to learn this secret of the burning heart. Suddenly Jesus appears to us, the fires are kindled, we have wonderful visions; then we have to learn to keep the secret of the burning heart that will go through anything. It is the dull, bald, dreary, commonplace day, with commonplace duties and people, that kills the burning heart unless we have learned the secret of abiding in Jesus.

Much of our distress as Christians comes not because of sin, but because we are ignorant of the laws of our own nature. For instance, the only test as to whether we ought to allow an emotion to have its way is to see what the outcome of the emotion will be. Push it to its logical conclusion, and if the outcome is something God would condemn, allow it no more way. But if it is an emotion kindled by the Spirit of God and you do not let that emotion have its right issue in your life, it will react on a lower level. That is the way sentimentalists are made. The higher the emotion is, the deeper the degradation will be if it is not worked out on its proper level. If the Spirit of God has stirred you, make as many things inevitable as possible, let the consequences be what they will. We cannot stay on the mount of transfiguration, but we must obey the light we received there; we must act it out. When God gives a vision, transact business on that line, no matter what it costs.

We cannot kindle when we will
The fire which in the heart resides,
The spirit bloweth and is still,
In mystery our soul abides;
But tasks in hours or insight will'd
Can be through hours of gloom fulfill'd.¹³

AM I CARNALLY MINDED?

Whereas there is among you jealousy and strife, are ye not carnal? 1 Corinthians 3:3 (RV)

No natural man knows anything about carnality. The flesh lusting against the Spirit that came in at regeneration, and the Spirit lusting against the flesh, produces carnality. "Walk in the Spirit," says Paul, "and ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh"; and carnality will disappear.

Are you contentious, easily troubled about trifles? "Oh, but no one who is a Christian ever is!" Paul says they are, he connects these things with carnality. Is there a truth in the Bible that instantly awakens petulance in you? That is a proof that you are yet carnal. If sanctification is being worked out, there is no trace of that spirit left.

If the Spirit of God detects anything in you that is wrong, He does not ask you to put it right; He asks you to accept the light, and He will put it right. A child of the light confesses instantly and stands bared before God; a child of the darkness says—"Oh, I can explain that away." When once the light breaks and the conviction of wrong comes, be a child of the light, and confess, and God will deal with what is wrong; if you vindicate yourself, you prove yourself to be a child of the darkness.

What is the proof that carnality has gone? Never deceive yourself; when carnality is gone it is the most real thing imaginable. God will see that you have any number of opportunities to prove to yourself the marvel of His grace. The practical test is the only proof. "Why," you say, "if this had happened before, there would have been the spirit of resentment!" You will never cease to be the most amazed person on earth at what God has done for you on the inside.

DECREASING INTO HIS PURPOSE

He must increase, but I must decrease. John 3:30

If you become a necessity to a soul, you are out of God's order. As a worker, your great responsibility is to be a friend of the Bridegroom. When once you see a soul in sight of the claims of Jesus Christ, you know that your influence has been in the right direction, and instead of putting out a hand to prevent the throes, pray that they grow ten times stronger until there is no power on earth or in hell that can hold that soul away from Jesus Christ. Over and over again, we become amateur providences; we come in and prevent God, and say—"This and that must not be." Instead of proving friends of the Bridegroom, we put our sympathy in the way, and the soul will one day say—"That one was a thief, he stole my affections from Jesus, and I lost my vision of Him."

Beware of rejoicing with a soul in the wrong thing, but see that you do rejoice in the right thing. "The friend of the Bridegroom . . . rejoiceth greatly because of the Bridegroom's voice: this my joy therefore is fulfilled. He must increase, but I must decrease." This is spoken with joy and not with sadness—at last they are to see the Bridegroom! And John says this is his joy. It is the absolute effacement of the worker, he is never thought of again.

Watch for all you are worth until you hear he Bridegroom's voice in the life of another. Never mind what havoc it brings, what upsets, what crumblings of health, rejoice with divine hilarity when once His voice is heard. You may often see Jesus Christ wreck a life before He saves it. (Cf. Matthew 10:34.)

THE MOST DELICATE MISSION ON EARTH

The friend of the Bridegroom. John 3:29

Goodness and purity ought never to attract attention to themselves, they ought simply to be magnets to draw to Jesus Christ. If my holiness is not drawing towards Him, it is not holiness of the right order, but an influence that will awaken inordinate affection and lead souls away into side-eddies. A beautiful saint may be a hindrance if he does not present Jesus Christ but only what Christ has done for him; he will leave the impression—"What a fine character that man is!"—that is not being a true friend of the Bridegroom; I am increasing all the time, He is not.

In order to maintain this friendship and loyalty to the Bridegroom, we have to be more careful of our moral and vital relationship to Him than of any other thing, even of obedience. Sometimes there is nothing to obey, the only thing to do is to maintain a vital connection with Jesus Christ, to see that nothing interferes with that. Only occasionally do we have to obey. When a crisis arises we have to find out what God's will is, but the greater part of the life is not conscious obedience but the maintenance of this relationship—the friend of the Bridegroom. Christian work may be a means of evading the soul's concentration on Jesus Christ. Instead of being friends of the Bridegroom, we become amateur providences and may work against Him whilst we use His weapons.

VISION BY PERSONAL PURITY

Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God. Matthew 5:8

Purity is not innocence, it is much more. Purity is the outcome of sustained spiritual sympathy with God. We have to grow in purity. The life with God may be right and the inner purity remain unsullied, and yet every now and again the bloom on the outside may be sullied. God does not shield us from this possibility, because in this way we realise the necessity of maintaining the vision by personal purity. If the spiritual bloom of our life with God is getting impaired in the tiniest degree, we must leave off everything and get it put right. Remember that vision depends on character—the pure in heart see God.

God makes us pure by His sovereign grace, but we have something to look after, this bodily life by which we come in contact with other people and with other points of view; it is these that are apt to sully. Not only must the inner sanctuary be kept right with God, but the outer courts as well are to be brought into perfect accord with the purity God gives us by His grace. The spiritual understanding is blurred immediately the outer court is sullied. If we are going to retain personal contact with the Lord Jesus Christ, it will mean there are some things we must scorn to do or to think, some legitimate things we must scorn to touch.

A practical way of keeping personal purity unsullied in relation to other people is to say to yourself—That man, that woman, perfect in Christ Jesus! That friend, that relative, perfect in Christ Jesus!

March 27

VISION BY PERSONAL CHARACTER

Come up hither, and I will shew thee things. Revelation 4:1

An elevated mood can only come out of an elevated habit of personal character. If in the externals of your life you live up to the highest you know, God will continually say—"Friend, go up higher." The golden rule in temptation is—"Go higher." When you get higher up, you face other temptations and characteristics. Satan uses the strategy of elevation in temptation, and God does the same, but the effect is different. When the devil puts you into an elevated place, he makes you screw your idea of holiness beyond what flesh and blood could ever bear. It is a spiritual acrobatic performance, you are just poised and dare not move; but when God elevates you by His grace into the heavenly places, instead of finding a pinnacle to cling to, you find a great table-land where it is easy to move.

Compare this week in your spiritual history with the same week last year and see how God has called you up higher. We have all been brought to see from a higher standpoint. Never let God give you one point of truth which you do not instantly live up to. Always work it out, keep in the light of it.

Growth in grace is measured not by the fact that you have not gone back, but that you have an insight into where you are spiritually; you have heard God say "Come up higher," not to you personally, but to the insight of your character. "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?" God has to hide from us what He does until by personal character we get to the place where He can reveal it.

March 28

ISN'T THERE SOME MISUNDERSTANDING?

Let us go into Judea again. His disciples say unto Him, . . . Goest Thou thither again? John 11:7–8

I may not understand what Jesus Christ says, but it is dangerous to say that therefore He was mistaken in what He said. It is never right to think that my obedience to a word of God will bring dishonour to Jesus. The only thing that will bring dishonour is not obeying Him. To put my view of His honour in place of what He is plainly impelling me to do is never right, although it may arise from a real desire to prevent Him being put to open shame. I know when the proposition comes from God because of its quiet persistence. When I have to weigh the pros and cons, and doubt and debate come in, I am bringing in an element that is not of God, and I come to the conclusion that the suggestion was not a right one. Many of us are loyal to our notions of Jesus Christ, but how many of us are loyal to Him? Loyalty to Jesus means I have to step out where I do not see anything (cf. Matthew 14:29); loyalty to my notions means that I clear the ground first by my intelligence. Faith is not intelligent understanding, faith is deliberate commitment to a Person where I see no way.

Are you debating whether to take a step in faith in Jesus or to wait until you can see how to do the thing yourself? Obey Him with glad reckless joy. When He says something and you begin to debate, it is because you have a conception of His honour which is not His honour. Are you loyal to Jesus or loyal to your notion of Him? Are you loyal to what He says, or are you trying to compromise with conceptions which never came from Him? "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it."

March 29

OUR LORD'S SURPRISE VISITS

Be ye therefore ready also. Luke 12:40

The great need for the Christian worker is to be ready to face Jesus Christ at any and every turn. This is not easy, no matter what our experience is. The battle is not against sin or difficulties or circumstances, but against being so absorbed in work that we are not ready to face Jesus Christ at every turn. That is the one great need, not facing our belief, or our creed, or the question whether we are of any use, but to face Him.

Jesus rarely comes where we expect Him; He appears where we least expect Him, and always in the most illogical connections. The only way a worker can keep true to God is by being ready for the Lord's surprise visits. It is not service that matters, but intense spiritual reality, expecting Jesus Christ at every turn. This will give our life the attitude of child-wonder which He wants it to have. If we are going to be ready for Jesus Christ, we have to stop being religious (that is, using religion as a higher kind of culture) and be spiritually real.

If you are looking off unto Jesus, avoiding the call of the religious age you live in, and setting your heart on what He wants, on thinking on His line, you will be called unpractical and dreamy; but when He appears in the burden and the heat of the day, you will be the only one who is ready. Trust no one, not even the finest saint who ever walked this earth, ignore him, if he hinders your sight of Jesus Christ.

March 30

HOLINESS V. HARDNESS TOWARDS GOD

And He... wondered that there was no intercessor. Isaiah 59:16

The reason many of us leave off praying and become hard towards God is because we have only a sentimental interest in prayer. It sounds right to say that we pray; we read books on prayer which tell us that prayer is beneficial, that our minds are quieted and our souls uplifted when we pray; but Isaiah implies that God is amazed at such thoughts of prayer.

Worship and intercession must go together, the one is impossible without the other. Intercession means that we rouse ourselves up to get the mind of Christ about the one for whom we pray. Too often instead of worshipping God, we construct statements as to how prayer works. Are we worshipping or are we in dispute with God—"I don't see how You are going to do it." This is a sure sign that we are not worshipping. When we lose sight of God we become hard and dogmatic. We hurl our own petitions at God's throne and dictate to Him as to what we wish Him to do. We do not worship God, nor do we seek to form the mind of Christ. If we are hard towards God, we will become hard towards other people.

Are we so worshipping God that we rouse ourselves up to lay hold on Him, that we may be brought into contact with His mind about the ones for whom we pray? Are we living in a holy relationship to God, or are we hard and dogmatic?

"But there is no one interceding properly"—then be that one yourself, be the one who worships God and who lives in holy relationship to him. Get into the real work of intercession, and remember it is a work, a work that taxes every power; but a work which has no snare. Preaching the gospel has a snare; intercessory prayer has none.

March 31

HEEDFULNESS V. HYPOCRISY IN OURSELVES

If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and He shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. 1 John 5:16

If we are not heedful of the way the Spirit of God works in us, we shall become spiritual hypocrites. We see where other folks are failing, and we turn our discernment into the gibe of criticism instead of into intercession on their behalf. The revelation is made to us not through the acuteness of our minds, but by the direct penetration of the Spirit of God, and if we are not heedful of the source of the revelation, we shall become criticising centres and forget that God says—"... he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death." Take care lest you play the hypocrite by spending all your time trying to get others right before you worship God yourself.

One of the subtlest burdens God ever puts on us as saints is this burden of discernment concerning other souls. He reveals things in order that we may take the burden of these souls before Him and form the mind of Christ about them, and as we intercede on His line, God says He will give us "life for them that sin not unto death." It is not that we bring God into touch with our minds, but that we rouse ourselves until God is able to convey His mind to us about the one for whom we intercede.

Is Jesus Christ seeing the travail of His soul in us? He cannot unless we are so identified with Himself that we are roused up to get His view about the people for whom we pray. May we learn to intercede so whole-heartedly that Jesus Christ will be abundantly satisfied with us as intercessors.

APRIL 1

HEARTINESS V. HEARTLESSNESS TOWARDS OTHERS

It is Christ . . . who also maketh intercession for us. . . . The Spirit . . . maketh intercession for the saints. Romans 8:34, 27

Do we need any more argument than this to become intercessors—that Christ "ever liveth to make intercession"; that the Holy Spirit "maketh intercession for the saints"? Are we living in such vital relationship to our fellow men that we do the work of intercession as the Spirit-taught children of God? Begin with the circumstances we are in—our homes, our business, our country, the present crisis as it touches us and others—are these things crushing us? Are they badgering us out of the presence of God and leaving us no time for worship? Then let us call a halt, and get into such living relationship with God that our relationship to others may be maintained on the line of intercession whereby God works His marvels.

Beware of outstripping God by your very longing to do His will. We run ahead of Him in a thousand and one activities, consequently we get so burdened with persons and with difficulties that we do not worship God, we do not intercede. If once the burden and the pressure come upon us and we are not in the worshipping attitude, it will produce not only hardness toward God but despair in our own souls. God continually introduces us to people for whom we have no affinity, and unless we are worshipping God, the most natural thing to do is to treat them heartlessly, to give them a text like the jab of a spear, or leave them with a rapped-out counsel of God and go. A heartless Christian must be a terrible grief to Our Lord.

Are we in the direct line of the intercession of our Lord and of the Holy Spirit?

APRIL 2

THE GLORY THAT EXCELS

The Lord . . . hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight. Acts 9:17

When Paul received his sight he received spiritually an insight into the Person of Jesus Christ, and the whole of his subsequent life and preaching was nothing but Jesus Christ—"I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." No attraction was ever allowed to hold the mind and soul of Paul save the face of Jesus Christ.

We have to learn to maintain an unimpaired state of character up to the last notch revealed in the vision of Jesus Christ.

The abiding characteristic of a spiritual man is the interpretation of the Lord Jesus Christ to himself, and the interpretation to others of the purposes of God. The one concentrated passion of the life is Jesus Christ. Whenever you meet this note in a man, you feel he is a man after God's own heart.

Never allow anything to deflect you from insight into Jesus Christ. It is the test of whether you are spiritual or not. To be unspiritual means that other things have a growing fascination for you.

Since mine eyes have looked on Jesus, I've lost sight of all beside, So enchained my spirit's vision, Gazing on the Crucified.

APRIL 3

IF THOU HADST KNOWN!

If thou hadst known . . . in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. Luke 19:42

Jesus had entered into Jerusalem in triumph, the city was stirred to its foundations; but a strange god was there, the pride of Pharisaism; it was religious and upright, but a "whited sepulchre."

What is it that blinds me in this my day? Have I a strange god—not a disgusting monster, but a disposition that rules me? More than once God has brought me face to face with the strange god and I thought I should have to yield, but I did not do it. I got through the crisis by the skin of my teeth and I find myself in the possession of the strange god still; I am blind to the things which belong to my peace. It is an appalling thing that we can be in the place where the Spirit of God should be getting at us unhinderedly, and yet increase our condemnation in God's sight.

"If thou hadst known"—God goes direct to the heart, with the tears of Jesus behind. These words imply culpable responsibility; God holds us responsible for what we do not see. "Now they are hid from thine eyes"—because the disposition has never been yielded. The unfathomable sadness of the "might have been"! God never opens doors that have been closed. He opens other doors, but He reminds us that there are doors which we have shut, doors which need never have been shut, imaginations which need never have been sullied. Never be afraid when God brings back the past. Let memory have its way. It is a minister of God with its rebuke and chastisement and sorrow. God will turn the "might have been" into a wonderful culture for the future.

APRIL 4

THOSE BORDERS OF DISTRUST

Behold, the hour cometh . . . that ye shall be scattered. Iohn 16:32

Jesus is not rebuking the disciples, their faith was real, but it was disturbed; it was not at work in actual things. The disciples were scattered to their own interests, alive to interests that never were in Jesus Christ. After we have been perfectly related to God in sanctification, our faith has to be worked out in actualities. We shall be scattered, not into work, but into inner desolations and made to know what internal death to God's blessings means. Are we prepared for this? It is not that we choose it, but that God engineers our circumstances so that we are brought there. Until we have been through that experience, our faith is bolstered up by feelings and by blessings. When once we get there, no matter where God places us or what the inner desolations are, we can praise God that all is well. That is faith being worked out in actualities.

"... and shall leave Me alone." Have we left Jesus alone by the scattering of His providence? Because we do not see God in our circumstances? Darkness comes by the sovereignty of God. Are we prepared to let God do as He likes with us—prepared to be separated from conscious blessings? Until Jesus Christ is Lord, we all have ends of our own to serve; our faith is real, but it is not permanent yet. God is never in a hurry; if we wait, we shall see that God is pointing out that we have not been interested in Himself, but only in His blessings. The sense of God's blessing is elemental.

"Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Spiritual grit is what we need.

APRIL 5

HIS AGONY AND OUR FELLOWSHIP

Then cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane, and saith unto the disciples, . . . tarry ye here, and watch with Me. Matthew 26:36, 38 We can never fathom the agony in Gethsemane, but at least we need not misunderstand it. It is the agony of God and Man in one, face to face with sin. We know nothing about Gethsemane in personal experience. Gethsemane and Calvary stand for something unique; they are the gateway into Life for us.

It was not the death on the cross that Jesus feared in Gethsemane; He stated most emphatically that He came on purpose to die. In Gethsemane He feared lest He might not get through as Son of Man. He would get through as Son of God—Satan could not touch Him there; but Satan's onslaught was that He would get through as an isolated Figure only; and that would mean that He could be no Saviour. Read the record of the agony in the light of the temptation: Then the devil "departed from Him for a season." In Gethsemane Satan came back and was again overthrown. Satan's final onslaught against Our Lord as son of Man is in Gethsemane.

The agony in Gethsemane is the agony of the Son of God in fulfilling His destiny as the Saviour of the world. The veil is drawn aside to reveal all it cost Him to make it possible for us to become sons of God. His agony is the basis of the simplicity of our salvation. The Cross of Christ is a triumph for the son of Man. It was not only a sign that Our Lord had triumphed, but that He had triumphed to save the human race. Every human being can get through into the presence of God now because of what the Son of Man went through.

APRIL 6

THE COLLISION OF GOD AND SIN

Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree. 1 Peter 2:24

The Cross of Jesus is the revelation of God's judgement on sin. Never tolerate the idea of martyrdom about the Cross of Jesus Christ. The Cross was a superb triumph in which the foundations of hell were shaken. There is nothing more certain in Time or Eternity than what Jesus Christ did on the Cross: He switched the whole of the human race back into a right relationship with God. He made Redemption the basis of human life, that is, He made a way for every son of man to get into communion with God.

The Cross did not happen to Jesus: He came on purpose for it. He is "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." The whole meaning of the Incarnation is the Cross. Beware of separating God manifest in the flesh from the Son becoming sin. The Incarnation was for the purpose of Redemption. God became incarnate for the purpose of putting away sin; not for the purpose of Self-realisation. The Cross is the centre of Time and of Eternity, the answer to the enigmas of both.

The Cross is not the cross of a man but the Cross of God, and the Cross of God can never be realised in human experience. The Cross is the exhibition of the nature of God, the gateway whereby any individual of the human race can enter into union with God. When we get to the Cross, we do not go through it; we abide in the life to which the Cross is the gateway.

The centre of salvation is the Cross of Jesus, and the reason it is so easy to obtain salvation is because it cost God so much. The Cross is the point where God and sinful man merge with a crash and the way to life is opened—but the crash is on the heart of God.

APRIL 7

WHY ARE WE NOT TOLD PLAINLY?

He charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, till the Son of man were risen from the dead. Mark 9:9

Say nothing until the Son of man is risen in you—until the life of the risen Christ so dominates you that you understand what the historic Christ taught. When you get to the right state on the inside, the word which Jesus has spoken is so plain that you are amazed you did not see it before. You could not understand it before, you were not in the place in disposition where it could be borne.

Our Lord does not hide these things; they are unbearable until we get into a fit condition of spiritual life. "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." There must be communion with His risen life before a particular word can be borne by us. Do we know anything about the impartation of the risen life of Jesus? The evidence that we do is that His word is becoming interpretable to us. God cannot reveal anything to us if we have not His Spirit. An obstinate outlook will effectually hinder God from revealing anything to us. If we have made up our minds about a doctrine, the light of God will come no more to us on that line, we cannot get it. This obtuse stage will end immediately His resurrection life has its way with us.

"Tell no man..."—so many do tell what they saw on the mount of transfiguration. They have had the vision and they testify to it, but the life does not tally with it, the Son of man is not yet risen in them. I wonder when He is going to be formed in you and in me?

HIS RESURRECTION DESTINY

Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into His glory? Luke 24:26

Our Lord's Cross is the gateway into His life: His Resurrection means that He has power now to convey His life to me. When I am born again from above (RV mg), I receive from the risen Lord His very life.

Our Lord's Resurrection destiny is to bring "many sons unto glory." The fulfilling of His destiny gives Him the right to make us sons and daughters of God. We are never in the relationship to God that the Son of God is in; but we are brought by the Son into the relation of sonship. When Our Lord rose from the dead, He rose to an absolutely new life, to a life He did not live before He was incarnate. He rose to a life that had never been before; and His resurrection means for us that we are raised to His risen life, not to our old life. One day we shall have a body like unto His glorious body, but we can know now the efficacy of His resurrection and walk in newness of life. I would know Him in "the power of His resurrection."

"As Thou hast given Him power over all flesh, that He should give eternal life to as many as Thou hast given Him." "Holy Spirit" is the experimental name for Eternal Life working in human beings here and now. The Holy Spirit is the Deity in proceeding power Who applies the Atonement to our experience. Thank God it is gloriously and majestically true that the Holy Ghost can work in us the very nature of Jesus if we will obey Him.

April 9

HAVE I SEEN HIM?

After that He appeared in another form unto two of them. Mark 16:12

Being saved and seeing Jesus are not the same thing. Many are partakers of God's grace who have never seen Jesus. When once you have seen Jesus, you can never be the same, other things do not appeal as they used to do.

Always distinguish between what you see Jesus to be, and what He has done for you. If you only know what He has done for you, you have not a big enough God; but if you have had a vision of Jesus as He is, experiences can come and go, you will endure, "as seeing Him Who is invisible." The man blind from his birth did not know Who Jesus was until He appeared and revealed Himself to him. Jesus appears to those for whom he has done something; but we cannot dictate when He will come. Suddenly at any turn He may come—"Now I see Him!"

Jesus must appear to your friend as well as to you; no one can see Jesus with your eyes. Severance takes place where one and not the other has seen Jesus. You cannot bring your friend unless God brings him. Have you seen Jesus? Then you will want others to see Him too. "And they went and told it unto the residue: neither believed they them." You must tell, although they do not believe.

O could I tell, ye surely would believe it!
O could I only say what I have seen!
How should I tell or how can ye receive it,
How, till He bringeth you where I have been?

Frederick W. Myers

APRIL 10

MORAL DECISION ABOUT SIN

Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. Romans 6:6

Co-Crucifixion. Have I made this decision about sin—that it must be killed right out in me? It takes a long time to come to a moral decision about sin, but it is the great moment in my life when I do decide that just as Jesus Christ died for the sin of the world, so sin must die out in me, not be curbed or suppressed or counteracted, but crucified. No one can bring any one else to this decision. We may be earnestly convinced, and religiously convinced, but what we need to do is to come to the decision which Paul forces here.

Haul yourself up, take a time alone with God, make the moral decision and say—"Lord, identify me with Thy death until I know that sin is dead in me." Make the moral decision that sin in you must be put to death.

It was not a divine anticipation on the part of Paul, but a very radical and definite experience. Am I prepared to let the Spirit of God search me until I know what the disposition of sin is—the thing that lusts against the Spirit of God in me? Then if so, will I agree with God's verdict on that disposition of sin—that it should be identified with the death of Jesus? I cannot reckon myself "dead indeed unto sin" unless I have been through this radical issue of will before God.

Have I entered into the glorious privilege of being crucified with Christ until all that is left is the life of Christ in my flesh and blood? "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

MORAL DIVINITY

For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection. Romans 6:5

Co-Resurrection. The proof that I have been through crucifixion with Jesus is that I have a decided likeness to Him. The incoming of the Spirit of Jesus into me readjusts my personal life to God. The resurrection of Jesus has given Him authority to impart the life of God to me, and my experimental life must be constructed on the basis of His life. I can have the resurrection life of Jesus now, and it will show itself in holiness.

The idea all through the Apostle Paul's writings is that after the moral decision to be identified with Jesus in His death has been made, the resurrection life of Jesus invades every bit of my human nature. It takes omnipotence to live the life of the Son of God in mortal flesh. The Holy Spirit cannot be located as a Guest in a house, He invades everything. When once I decide that my "old man" (i.e., the heredity of sin) should be identified with the death of Jesus, then the Holy Spirit invades me. He takes charge of everything, my part is to walk in the light and to obey all that He reveals. When I have made the moral decision about sin, it is easy to reckon actually that I am dead unto sin, because I find the life of Jesus there all the time. Just as there is only one stamp of humanity, so there is only one stamp of holiness, the holiness of Jesus, and it is His holiness that is gifted to me. God puts the holiness of His Son into me, and I belong to a new order spiritually.

MORAL DOMINION

Death hath no more dominion over Him... in that He liveth, He liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God. Romans 6:9–11

Co-Eternal Life. Eternal life was the life which Jesus Christ exhibited on the human plane, and it is the same life, not a copy of it, which is manifested in our mortal flesh when we are born of God. Eternal life is not a gift from God, eternal life is the gift of God. The energy and the power which were manifested in Jesus will be manifested in us by the sheer sovereign grace of God when once we have made the moral decision about sin.

Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost—not power as a gift from the Holy Ghost; the power is the Holy Ghost, not something which He imparts. The life that was in Jesus is made ours by means of his Cross when once we make the decision to be identified with Him. If it is difficult to get right with God, it is because we will not decide definitely about sin. Immediately we do decide, the full life of God comes in. Jesus came to give us endless supplies of life: "that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." Eternal Life has nothing to do with Time, it is the life which Jesus lived when He was down here. The only source of Life is the Lord Jesus Christ.

The weakest saint can experience the power of the Deity of the Son of God if once he is willing to "let go." Any strand of our own energy in ourselves will blur the life of Jesus. We have to keep letting go, and slowly and surely the great full life of God will invade us in every part, and men will take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus.

APRIL 13

WHAT TO DO UNDER THE CONDITIONS

Cast thy burden upon the LORD. Psalm 55:22

We must distinguish between the burden-bearing that is right and the burden-bearing that is wrong. We ought never to bear the burden of sin or of doubt, but there are burdens placed on us by God which He does not intend to lift off, He wants us to roll them back on Him. "Cast what He hath given thee upon the LORD" (RV mg). If we undertake work for God and get out of touch with Him, the sense of responsibility will be overwhelmingly crushing; but if we roll back on God that which He has put upon us, He takes away the sense of responsibility by bringing in the realisation of Himself.

Many workers have gone out with high courage and fine impulses, but with no intimate fellowship with Jesus Christ, and before long they are crushed. They do not know what to do with the burden, it produces weariness, and people say—"What an embittered end to such a beginning!"

"Roll thy burden upon the LORD" (see Psalm 37:5 RV mg)—you have been bearing it all; deliberately put one end on the shoulders of God. "The government shall be upon His shoulder." Commit to God "what He hath given thee" (RV mg); not fling it off, but put it over on to Him and yourself with it, and the burden is lightened by the sense of companionship. Never dissociate yourself from the burden.

INSPIRED INVINCIBILITY

Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me. Matthew 11:29

"Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth." How petty our complaining is! Our Lord begins to bring us into the place where we can have communion with Him, and we groan and say—"Oh Lord, let me be like other people!" Jesus is asking us to take one end of the yoke—"My yoke is easy, get alongside Me and we will pull together." Are you identified with the Lord Jesus like that? If so, you will thank God for the pressure of His hand.

"To them that have no might He increaseth strength." God comes and takes us out of our sentimentality, and our complaining turns into a psalm of praise. The only way to know the strength of God is to take the yoke of Jesus upon us and learn of Him.

"The joy of the LORD is your strength." Where do the saints get their joy from? If we did not know some saints, we would say—"Oh, he, or she, has nothing to bear." Lift the veil. The fact that the peace and the light and the joy of God are there is proof that the burden is there too. The burden God places squeezes the grapes and out comes the wine; most of us see the wine only. No power on earth or in hell can conquer the Spirit of God in a human spirit, it is an inner unconquerableness.

If you have the whine in you, kick it out ruthlessly. It is a positive crime to be weak in God's strength.

APRIL 15

THE RELAPSE OF CONCENTRATION

But the high places were not taken away out of Israel; nevertheless the heart of Asa was perfect all his days. 2 Chronicles 15:17

Asa was incomplete in his external obedience, he was right in the main but not entirely right. Beware of the thing of which you say—"Oh, that does not matter much." The fact that it does not matter much to you may mean that it matters a very great deal to God. Nothing is a light matter with a child of God. How much longer are some of us going to keep God trying to teach us one thing? He never loses patience. You say—"I know I am right with God"; but still the "high places" remain, there is something over which you have not obeyed. Are you protesting that your heart is right with God, and yet is there something in your life about which He has caused you to doubt?

Whenever there is doubt, quit immediately, no matter what it is. Nothing is a mere detail.

Are there some things in connection with your bodily life, your intellectual life, upon which you are not concentrating at all? You are all right in the main, but you are slipshod; there is a relapse on the line of concentration. You no more need a holiday from spiritual concentration than your heart needs a holiday from beating. You cannot have a moral holiday and remain moral, nor can you have a spiritual holiday and remain spiritual. God wants you to be entirely his, and this means that you have to watch to keep yourself fit. It takes a tremendous amount of time. Some of us expect to "clear the numberless ascensions" in about two minutes.

APRIL 16

CAN YOU COME DOWN?

While ye have light, believe in the light. John 12:36

We all have moments when we feel better than our best, and we say—"I feel fit for anything; if only I could be like this always!" We are not meant to be. Those moments are moments of insight which we have to live up to when we do not feel like it. Many of us are no good for this workaday world when there is no high hour. We must bring our commonplace life up to the standard revealed in the high hour.

Never allow a feeling which was stirred in you in the high hour to evaporate. Don't put your mental feet on the mantelpiece and say—"What a marvellous state of mind to be in!" Act immediately, do something, if only because you would rather not do it. If in a prayer meeting God has shown you something to do, don't say—"I'll do it"; do it! Take yourself by the scruff of the neck and shake off your incarnate laziness. Laziness is always seen in cravings for the high hour; we talk about working up to a time on the mount. We have to learn to live in the grey day according to what we saw on the mount.

Don't cave in because you have been baffled once, get at it again. Burn your bridges behind you, and stand committed to God by your own act. Never revise your decisions, but see that you make your decisions in the light of the high hour.

APRIL 17

NECK OR NOTHING

Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fisher's coat unto him, . . . and did cast himself into the sea. John 21:7

Have you ever had a crisis in which you deliberately and emphatically and recklessly abandoned everything? It is a crisis of will. You may come up to it many times externally, but it amounts to nothing. The real deep crisis of abandonment is reached internally, not externally. The giving up of external things may be an indication of being in total bondage.

Have you deliberately committed your will to Jesus Christ? It is a transaction of will, not of emotion; the emotion is simply the gilt edge of the transaction. If you allow emotion first, you will never make the transaction. Do not ask God what the transaction is to be, but make it in regard to the thing you do see, either in the shallow or the profound place.

If you have heard Jesus Christ's voice on the billows, let your convictions go to the winds, let your consistency go to the winds, but maintain your relationship to Him.

APRIL 18

READINESS

God called unto him. . . . And he said, Here am I. Exodus 3:4

When God speaks, many of us are like men in a fog, we give no answer. Moses' reply revealed that he was somewhere. Readiness means a right relationship to God and a knowledge of where we are at present. We are so busy telling God where we would like to go. The man or woman who is ready for God and His work is the one who carries off the prize when the summons comes. We wait with the idea of some great opportunity, something sensational, and when it comes we are quick to cry—"Here am I." Whenever Jesus Christ is in the ascendant, we are there; but we are not ready for an obscure duty.

Readiness for God means that we are ready to do the tiniest little thing or the great big thing, it makes no difference. We have no choice in what we want to do; whatever God's programme may be we are there, ready. When any duty presents itself we hear God's voice as Our Lord heard His Father's voice, and we are ready for it with all the alertness of our love for Him. Jesus Christ expects to do with us as His Father did with Him. He can put us where He likes, in pleasant duties or in mean¹⁴ duties, because the union is that of the Father and Himself. "That they may be one, even as We are one."

Be ready for the sudden surprise visits of God. A ready person never needs to get ready. Think of the time we waste trying to get ready when God has called! The burning bush is a symbol of everything that surrounds the ready soul, it is ablaze with the presence of God.

April 19

IS IT NOT IN THE LEAST LIKELY?

For Joab had turned after Adonijah, though he turned not after Absalom. 1 Kings 2:28

Joab stood the big test, he remained absolutely loyal and true to David and did not turn after the fascinating and ambitious Absalom, but yet towards the end of his life he turned after the craven Adonijah. Always remain alert to the fact that where one man has gone back is exactly where any one may go back (see 1 Corinthians 10:13). You have gone through the big crisis, now be alert over the least things; take into calculation the "retired sphere of the leasts."

We are apt to say—"It is not in the least likely that having been through the supreme crisis, I shall turn now to the things of the world." Do not forecast where the temptation will come; it is the least likely thing that is the peril. In the aftermath of a great spiritual transaction the "retired sphere of the leasts" begins to tell; it is not dominant, but remember it is there, and if you are not warned, it will trip you up. You have remained true to God under great and intense trials, now beware of the undercurrent. Do not be morbidly introspective, looking forward with dread, but keep alert; keep your memory bright before God. Unguarded strength is double weakness, because that is where the "retired sphere of the leasts" saps. The Bible characters fell on their strong points, never on their weak ones.

"Kept by the power of God"—that is the only safety.

April 20

CAN A SAINT SLANDER GOD?

For all the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen. 2 Corinthians 1:20

Jesus told the parable of the talents recorded in Matthew 25 as a warning that it is possible for us to misjudge our capacity. This parable has not to do with natural gifts, but with the Pentecostal gift of the Holy Ghost. We must not measure our spiritual capacity by education or by intellect; our capacity in spiritual things is measured by the promises of God. If we get less than God wants us to have, before long we will slander Him as the servant slandered his master: "You expect more than You give me power to do; You demand too much of me, I cannot stand true to You where I am placed." When it is a question of God's Almighty Spirit, never say "I can't." Never let the limitation of natural ability come in. If we have received the Holy Spirit, God expects the work of the Holy Spirit to be manifested in us.

The servant justified himself in everything he did and condemned his lord on every point—"Your demand is out of all proportion to what you give." Have we been slandering God by daring to worry when He has said: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you"? Worrying means exactly what this servant implied—"I know You mean to leave me in the lurch." The person who is lazy naturally is always captious—"I haven't had a decent chance," and the one who is lazy spiritually is captious with God. Lazy people always strike out on an independent line.

Never forget that our capacity in spiritual matters is measured by the promises of God. Is God able to fulfil His promises? Our answer depends on whether we have received the Holy Spirit.

APRIL 21

NOW DON'T HURT THE LORD!

Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known Me, Philip? John 14:9

Our Lord must be repeatedly astounded at us astounded at how un-simple we are. It is opinions of our own which make us stupid; when we are simple we are never stupid, we discern all the time. Philip expected the revelation of a tremendous mystery, but not in the One Whom he knew. The mystery of God is not in what is going to be, it is now; we look for it presently, in some cataclysmic event. We have no reluctance in obeying Jesus, but it is probable that we are hurting Him by the questions we ask. "Lord, shew us the Father." His answer comes straight back—"There He is, always here or nowhere." We look for God to manifest Himself to His children: God only manifests Himself in His children. Other people see the manifestation, the child of God does not. We want to be conscious of God; we cannot be conscious of our consciousness and remain sane. If we are asking God to give us experiences, or if conscious experience is in the road, we hurt the Lord. The very questions we ask hurt Jesus because they are not the questions of a child.

"Let not your heart be troubled"—then am I hurting Jesus by allowing my heart to be troubled? If I believe the character of Jesus, am I living up to my belief? Am I allowing anything to perturb my heart, any morbid questions to come in? I have to get to the implicit relationship that takes everything as it comes from Him. God never guides presently, but always now. Realise that the Lord is here now, and the emancipation is immediate.

April 22

THE LIGHT THAT FAILS

We all with open face beholding . . . the glory of the Lord. 2 Corinthians 3:18

A servant of God must stand so much alone that he never knows he is alone. In the first phases of Christian life disheartenments come, people who used to be lights flicker out, and those who used to stand with us pass away. We have to get so used to it that we never know we are standing alone. "All men forsook me: . . . notwithstanding the Lord stood with me" (2 Timothy 4:16–17). We must build our faith, not on the fading light, but on the light that never fails. When "big" men go we are sad, until we see that they are meant to go; the one thing that remains is looking in the face of God for ourselves.

Allow nothing to keep you from looking God sternly in the face about yourself and about your doctrine, and every time you preach see that you look God in the face about things first, then the glory will remain all through. A Christian worker is one who perpetually looks in the face of God and then goes forth to talk to the people. The characteristic of the ministry of Christ is that of unconscious glory that abides. "Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while He talked with him."

We are never called on to parade our doubts or to express the hidden ecstasies of our life with God. The secret of the worker's life is that he keeps in tune with God all the time.

APRIL 23

THE WORSHIP OF THE WORK

Labourers together with God. 1 Corinthians 3:9

Beware of any work for God which enables you to evade concentration on Him. A great many Christian workers worship their work. The one concern of a worker should be concentration on God, and this will mean that all the other margins of life, mental, moral and spiritual, are free with the freedom of a child—a worshipping child, not a wayward child. A worker without this solemn, dominant note of concentration on God is apt to get his work on his neck; there is no margin of body, mind or spirit free, consequently he becomes spent out and crushed. There is no freedom, no delight in life; nerves, mind and heart are so crushingly burdened that God's blessing cannot rest. But the other side is just as true-when once the concentration is on God, all the margins of life are free and under the dominance of God alone. There is no responsibility on you for the work; the only responsibility you have is to keep in living, constant touch with God, and to see that you allow nothing to hinder your co-operation with Him. The freedom after sanctification is the freedom of a child, the things that used to keep the life pinned down are gone. But be careful to remember that you are freed for one thing only—to be absolutely devoted to your co-Worker.

We have no right to judge where we should be put, or to have preconceived notions as to what God is fitting us for. God engineers everything; wherever He puts us our one great aim is to pour out a wholehearted devotion to Him in that particular work. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

APRIL 24

THE WARNING AGAINST WANTONING

Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you. Luke 10:20

As Christian workers, worldliness is not our snare, sin is not our snare, but spiritual wantoning is, viz.: taking the pattern and print of the religious age we live in, making eyes at spiritual success. Never court anything other than the approval of God, go "without the camp, bearing His reproach." Jesus told the disciples not to rejoice in successful service, and yet this seems to be the one thing in which most of us do rejoice. We have the commercial view—so many souls saved and sanctified, thank God, now it is all right. Our work begins where God's grace has laid the foundation; we are not to save souls, but to disciple them. Salvation and sanctification are the work of God's sovereign grace; our work as His disciples is to disciple lives until they are wholly yielded to God. One life wholly devoted to God is of more value to God than one hundred lives simply awakened by His Spirit. As workers for God we must reproduce our own kind spiritually, and that will be God's witness to us as workers. God brings us to a standard of life by His grace, and we are responsible for reproducing that standard in others.

Unless the worker lives a life hidden with Christ in God, he is apt to become an irritating dictator instead of an indwelling disciple. Many of us are dictators, we dictate to people and to meetings. Jesus never dictates to us in that way. Whenever Our Lord talked about discipleship, He always prefaced it with an "IF," never with an emphatic assertion—"You must." Discipleship carries an option with it.

APRIL 25

INSTANT IN SEASON

Be instant in season, out of season. 2 Timothy 4:2

Many of us suffer from the morbid tendency to be instant "out of season." The season does not refer to time, but to us. "Be instant in season, out of season," whether we feel like it or not. If we do only what we feel inclined to do, some of us would do nothing for ever and ever. There are unemployables in the spiritual domain, spiritually decrepit people, who refuse to do anything unless they are supernaturally inspired. The proof that we are rightly related to God is that we do our best whether we feel inspired or not.

One of the great snares of the Christian worker is to make a fetish of his rare moments. When the spirit of God gives you a time of inspiration and insight, you say—"Now I will always be like this for God." No, you will not, God will take care you are not. Those times are the gift of God entirely. You cannot give them to yourself when you choose. If you say you will only be at your best, you become an intolerable drag on God; you will never do anything unless God keeps you consciously inspired. If you make a god of your best moments, you will find that God will fade out of your life and never come back until you do the duty that lies nearest, and have learned not to make a fetish of your rare moments.

APRIL 26

THE SUPREME CLIMB

Take now thy son, . . . and offer him there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of. Genesis 22:2

Character determines how a man interprets God's will (cf. Psalm 18:25-26). Abraham interpreted God's command to mean that he had to kill his son, and he could only leave this tradition behind by the pain of a tremendous ordeal. God could purify his faith in no other way. If we obey what God says according to our sincere belief, God will break us from those traditions that misrepresent Him. There are many such beliefs to be got rid of, e.g., that God removes a child because the mother loves him too much—a devil's lie! and a travesty of the true nature of God. If the devil can hinder us from taking the supreme climb and getting rid of wrong traditions about God, he will do so; but if we keep true to God, God will take us through an ordeal which will bring us out into a better knowledge of Himself.

The great point of Abraham's faith in God was that he was prepared to do anything for God. He was there to obey God, no matter to what belief he went contrary. Abraham was not a devotee of his convictions, or he would have slain Isaac and said that the voice of the angel was the voice of the devil. That is the attitude of a fanatic. If you will remain true to God, God will lead you straight through every barrier into the inner chamber of the knowledge of Himself; but there is always this point of giving up convictions and traditional beliefs. Don't ask God to test you. Never declare as Peter did—I will do anything, I will go to death with Thee. Abraham did not make any such declaration, he remained true to God, and God purified his faith.

APRIL 27

WHAT DO YOU WANT?

Seekest thou great things for thyself? Jeremiah 45:5

Are you seeking great things for yourself? Not seeking to be a great one, but seeking great things from God for yourself. God wants you in a closer relationship to Himself than receiving His gifts, He wants you to get to know Him. A great thing is accidental, it comes and goes. God never gives us anything accidental. Nothing is easier than getting into a right relationship with God except when it is not God Whom you want but only what He gives.

If you have only come the length of asking God for things, you have never come to the first strand of abandonment, you have become a Christian from a standpoint of your own. "I did ask God for the Holy Spirit, but He did not give me the rest and the peace I expected." Instantly God puts His finger on the reason—you are not seeking the Lord at all, you are seeking something for yourself. Jesus says—"Ask, and it shall be given you." Ask God for what you want, and you cannot ask if you are not asking for a right thing. When you draw near to God, you cease from asking for things. "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him." Then why ask? That you may get to know Him.

Are you seeking great things for yourself—"O Lord, baptise me with the Holy Ghost"? If God does not, it is because you are not abandoned enough to Him, there is something you will not do. Are you prepared to ask yourself what it is you want from God, and why you want it? God always ignores the present perfection for the ultimate perfection. He is not concerned about making you blessed and happy just now; He is working out His ultimate perfection all the time—"that they may be one, even as We are."

APRIL 28

WHAT YOU WILL GET

Thy life will I give unto thee for a prey in all places whither thou goest. Jeremiah 45:5

This is the unshakeable secret of the Lord to those who trust Him—I will give thee thy life. What more does a man want than his life? It is the essential thing. "Thy life... for a prey" means that wherever you may go, even if it is into hell, you will come out with your life, nothing can harm it. So many of us are caught up in the show of things, not in the way of property and possessions, but of blessings. All these have to go; but there is something grander that never can go—the life that is "hid with Christ in God."

Are you prepared to let God take you into union with Himself, and pay no more attention to what you call the "great things"? Are you prepared to abandon entirely and let go? The test of abandonment is in refusing to say—"Well, what about this?" Beware of suppositions. Immediately you allow—"What about this?" it means you have not abandoned, you do not really trust God. Immediately you do abandon, you think no more about what God is going to do. Abandon means to refuse yourself the luxury of asking any questions. If you abandon entirely to God, He says at once, "Thy life will I give unto thee for a prey." The reason people are tired of life is because God has not given them anything, they have not got their life as a prey. The way to get out of that state is to abandon to God. When you do get through to abandonment to God, you will be the most surprised and delighted creature on earth; God has got you absolutely and has given you your life. If you are not there, it is either because of disobedience or a refusal to be simple enough.

THE GRACIOUSNESS OF UNCERTAINTY

It doth not yet appear what we shall be. 1 John 3:2

Naturally, we are inclined to be so mathematical and calculating that we look upon uncertainty as a bad thing. We imagine that we have to reach some end, but that is not the nature of spiritual life. The nature of spiritual life is that we are certain in our uncertainty, consequently we do not make our nests anywhere. Common sense says—"Well, supposing I were in that condition. . . ." We cannot suppose ourselves in any condition we have never been in.

Certainty is the mark of the commonsense life: gracious uncertainty is the mark of the spiritual life. To be certain of God means that we are uncertain in all our ways, we do not know what a day may bring forth. This is generally said with a sigh of sadness; it should be rather an expression of breathless expectation. We are uncertain of the next step, but we are certain of God. Immediately we abandon to God, and do the duty that lies nearest, He packs our life with surprises all the time. When we become advocates of a creed, something dies; we do not believe God, we only believe our belief about Him. Jesus said "Except ye . . . become as little children." Spiritual life is the life of a child. We are not uncertain of God, but uncertain of what He is going to do next. If we are only certain in our beliefs, we get dignified and severe and have the ban of finality¹⁵ about our views; but when we are rightly related to God, life is full of spontaneous, joyful uncertainty and expectancy.

"Believe also in Me," said Jesus, not—"Believe certain things about Me." Leave the whole thing to Him, it is gloriously uncertain how He will come in, but He will come. Remain loyal to Him.

APRIL 30

THE SPONTANEITY OF LOVE

Love suffereth long, and is kind. . . . 1 Corinthians 13:4 (RV)

Love is not premeditated, it is spontaneous, that is, it bursts up in extraordinary ways. There is nothing of mathematical certainty in Paul's category of love. We cannot say—"Now I am going to think no evil; I am going to believe all things." The characteristic of love is spontaneity. We do not settle statements of Jesus in front of us as a standard; but when His Spirit is having His way with us, we live according to His standard without knowing it, and on looking back we are amazed at the disinterestedness of a particular emotion, which is the evidence that the spontaneity of real love was there. In everything to do with the life of God in us, its nature is only discerned when it is past.

The springs of love are in God, not in us. It is absurd to look for the love of God in our hearts naturally, it is only there when it has been shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit.

If we try to prove to God how much we love Him, it is a sure sign that we do not love Him. The evidence of our love for Him is the absolute spontaneity of our love, it comes naturally. In looking back we cannot tell why we did certain things, we did them according to the spontaneous nature of His love in us. The life of God manifests itself in this spontaneous way because the springs of love are in the Holy Ghost. (Romans 5:5)

May 1

INSIGHT NOT EMOTION

I have to lead my life in faith, without seeing Him. 2 Corinthians 5:7 (MOFFATT)

For a time we are conscious of God's attentions, then, when God begins to use us in His enterprises, we take on a pathetic look and talk of the trials and the difficulties, and all the time God is trying to make us do our duty as obscure people. None of us would be obscure spiritually if we could help it. Can we do our duty when God has shut up heaven? Some of us always want to be illuminated saints with golden haloes and the flush of inspiration, and to have the saints of God dealing with us all the time. A giltedged saint is no good, he is abnormal, unfit for daily life, and altogether unlike God. We are here as men and women, not as half-fledged angels, to do the work of the world, and to do it with an infinitely greater power to stand the turmoil because we have been born from above (RV mg).

If we try to re-introduce the rare moments of inspiration, it is a sign that it is not God we want. We are making a fetish of the moments when God did come and speak, and insisting that He must do it again; whereas what God wants us to do is to walk by faith. How many of us have laid ourselves by, as it were, and said—"I cannot do any more until God appears to me." He never will, and without any inspiration, without any sudden touch of God, we will have to get up. Then comes the surprise—"Why, He was there all the time, and I never knew it!" Never live for the rare moments, they are surprises. God will give us touches of inspiration when He sees we are not in danger of being led away by them. We must never make our moments of inspiration our standard; our standard is our duty.

May 2

THE PASSION OF PATIENCE

Though it tarry, wait for it. Habakkuk 2:3

Patience is not indifference; patience conveys the idea of an immensely strong rock withstanding all onslaughts. The vision of God is the source of patience, because it imparts a moral inspiration. Moses endured, not because he had an ideal of right and duty, but because he had a vision of God. He "endured, as seeing Him Who is invisible." A man with the vision of God is not devoted to a cause or to any particular issue; he is devoted to God Himself. You always know when the vision is of God because of the inspiration that comes with it; things come with largeness and tonic to the life because everything is energised by God. If God gives you a time spiritually, as He gave His Son actually, of temptation in the wilderness, with no word from Himself at all, endure; and the power to endure is there because you see God.

"Though it tarry, wait for it." The proof that we have the vision is that we are reaching out for more than we have grasped. It is a bad thing to be satisfied spiritually. "What shall I render unto the LORD?" said the Psalmist, "I will take the cup of salvation." We are apt to look for satisfaction in ourselves—"Now I have got the thing; now I am entirely sanctified; now I can endure." Instantly we are on the road to ruin. Our reach must exceed our grasp. "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect." If we have only what we have experienced, we have nothing; if we have the inspiration of the vision of God, we have more than we can experience. Beware of the danger of relaxation spiritually.

VITAL INTERCESSION

Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit. Ephesians 6:18

As we go on in intercession we may find that our obedience to God is going to cost other people more than we thought. The danger then is to begin to intercede in sympathy with those whom God was gradually lifting to a totally different sphere in answer to our prayers. Whenever we step back from identification with God's interest in others into sympathy with them, the vital connection with God has gone; we have put our sympathy, our consideration for them, in the way, and this is a deliberate rebuke to God.

It is impossible to intercede vitally unless we are perfectly sure of God, and the greatest dissipater of our relationship to God is personal sympathy and personal prejudice. Identification is the key to intercession, and whenever we stop being identified with God, it is by sympathy, not by sin. It is not likely that sin will interfere with our relationship to God, but sympathy will, sympathy with ourselves or with others which makes us say—"I will not allow that thing to happen." Instantly we are out of vital connection with God.

Intercession leaves you neither time nor inclination to pray for your own "sad sweet self." The thought of yourself is not kept out, because it is not there to keep out; you are completely and entirely identified with God's interests in other lives.

Discernment is God's call to intercession, never to fault finding.

May 4

VICARIOUS INTERCESSION

Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus. Hebrews 10:19

Beware of imagining that intercession means bringing our personal sympathies into the presence of God and demanding that He does what we ask. Our approach to God is due entirely to the vicarious identification of our Lord with sin. We have "boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus."

Spiritual stubbornness is the most effectual hindrance to intercession, because it is based on sympathy with that in ourselves and in others that we do not think needs atoning for. We have the notion that there are certain right and virtuous things in us which do not need to be based on the Atonement, and just in the domain of "stodge" that is produced by this idea we cannot intercede. We do not identify ourselves with God's interests in others, we get petulant with God; we are always ready with our own ideas, and intercession becomes the glorification of our own natural sympathies. We have to realise that the identification of Jesus with sin means the radical alteration of all our sympathies. Vicarious intercession means that we deliberately substitute God's interests in others for our natural sympathy with them.

Am I stubborn or substituted? Petted or perfect in my relationship to God? Sulky or spiritual? Determined to have my own way or determined to be identified with Him?

JUDGEMENT ON THE ABYSS OF LOVE

For the time is come that judgement must begin at the house of God. 1 Peter 4:17

The Christian worker must never forget that salvation is God's thought, not man's; therefore it is an unfathomable abyss. Salvation is the great thought of God, not an experience. Experience is only a gateway by which salvation comes into our conscious life. Never preach the experience; preach the great thought of God behind. When we preach we are not proclaiming how man can be saved from hell and be made moral and pure; we are conveying good news about God.

In the teachings of Jesus Christ the element of judgement is always brought out, it is the sign of God's love. Never sympathise with a soul who finds it difficult to get to God; God is not to blame. It is not for us to find out the reason why it is difficult, but so to present the truth of God that the Spirit of God will show what is wrong. The great sterling test in preaching is that it brings everyone to judgement. The Spirit of God locates each one to himself.

If Jesus ever gave us a command He could not enable us to fulfil, He would be a liar; and if we make our inability a barrier to obedience, it means we are telling God there is something He has not taken into account. Every element of self-reliance must be slain by the power of God. Complete weakness and dependence will always be the occasion for the Spirit of God to manifest His power.

LIBERTY ON THE ABYSS OF THE GOSPEL

Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free. Galatians 5:1

A spiritually minded man will never come to you with the demand—"Believe this and that"; but with the demand that you square your life with the standards of Jesus. We are not asked to believe the Bible, but to believe the One Whom the Bible reveals (cf. John 5:39–40). We are called to present liberty of conscience, not liberty of view. If we are free with the liberty of Christ, others will be brought into that same liberty—the liberty of realising the dominance of Jesus Christ.

Always keep your life measured by the standards of Jesus. Bow your neck to His yoke alone, and to no other yoke whatever; and be careful to see that you never bind a yoke on others that is not placed by Jesus Christ. It takes God a long time to get us out of the way of thinking that unless everyone sees as we do, they must be wrong. That is never God's view. There is only one liberty, the liberty of Jesus at work in our conscience enabling us to do what is right.

Don't get impatient, remember how God dealt with you—with patience and with gentleness; but never water down the truth of God. Let it have its way and never apologise for it. Jesus said, "Go... and make disciples" (RV) not—make converts to your opinions.

BUILDING FOR ETERNITY

For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it? Luke 14:28

Our Lord refers not to a cost we have to count, but to a cost which He has counted. The cost was those thirty years in Nazareth, those three years of popularity, scandal and hatred; the deep unfathomable agony in Gethsemane, and the onslaught at Calvary—the pivot upon which the whole of Time and Eternity turns. Jesus Christ has counted the cost. Men are not going to laugh at Him at last and say—"This man began to build, and was not able to finish."

The conditions of discipleship laid down by Our Lord in verses 26–27 and 33 mean that the men and women He is going to use in His mighty building enterprises are those in whom He has done everything. "If any man come to Me, and hate not . . . , he cannot be My disciple." Our Lord implies that the only men and women He will use in His building enterprises are those who love Him personally, passionately and devotedly beyond any of the closest ties on earth. The conditions are stern, but they are glorious.

All that we build is going to be inspected by God. Is God going to detect in His searching fire that we have built on the foundation of Jesus some enterprise of our own? These are days of tremendous enterprises, days when we are trying to work for God, and therein is the snare. Profoundly speaking, we can never work for God. Jesus takes us over for His enterprises, His building schemes entirely, and no soul has any right to claim where he shall be put.

THE PATIENCE OF FAITH

Because thou hast kept the word of My patience. Revelation 3:10

Patience is more than endurance. A saint's life is in the hands of God like a bow and arrow in the hands of an archer. God is aiming at something the saint cannot see, and He stretches and strains, and every now and again the saint says—"I cannot stand any more." God does not heed, He goes on stretching till His purpose is in sight, then He lets fly. Trust yourself in God's hands. For what have you need of patience just now? Maintain your relationship to Jesus Christ by the patience of faith. "Though He slay me, yet will I wait for Him" (RV).

Faith is not a pathetic sentiment, but robust vigorous confidence built on the fact that God is holy love. You cannot see Him just now, you cannot understand what He is doing, but you know Him. Shipwreck occurs where there is not that mental poise which comes from being established on the eternal truth that God is holy love. Faith is the heroic effort of your life, you fling yourself in reckless confidence on God.

God has ventured all in Jesus Christ to save us, now He wants us to venture our all in abandoned confidence in Him. There are spots where that faith has not worked in us as yet, places untouched by the life of God. There were none of those spots in Jesus Christ's life, and there are to be none in ours. "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee." The real meaning of eternal life is a life that can face anything it has to face without wavering. If we take this view, life becomes one great romance, a glorious opportunity for seeing marvellous things all the time. God is disciplining us to get us into this central place of power.

May 9

GRASP WITHOUT REACH

Where there is no vision, the people cast off restraint. Proverbs 29:18 (RV)

There is a difference between an ideal and a vision. An ideal has no moral inspiration; a vision has. The people who give themselves over to ideals rarely do anything. A man's conception of Deity may be used to justify his deliberate neglect of his duty. Jonah argued that because God was a God of justice and of mercy, therefore everything would be all right. I may have a right conception of God, and that may be the very reason why I do not do my duty. But wherever there is vision, there is also a life of rectitude because the vision imparts moral incentive.

Ideals may lull to ruin. Take stock of yourself spiritually and see whether you have ideals only or if you have vision.

Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp, Or what's a heaven for?

"Where there is no vision. . . ." When once we lose sight of God, we begin to be reckless, we cast off certain restraints, we cast off praying, we cast off the vision of God in little things, and begin to act on our own initiative. If we are eating what we have out of our own hand, doing things on our own initiative without expecting God to come in, we are on the downward path, we have lost the vision. Is our attitude to-day an attitude that springs from our vision of God? Are we expecting God to do greater things than He has ever done? Is there a freshness and vigour in our spiritual outlook.

MAY 10

TAKE THE INITIATIVE

Add to your faith virtue ["Furnish your faith with resolution," MOFFATT].... 2 Peter 1:5

"Add" means there is something we have to do. We are in danger of forgetting that we cannot do what God does, and that God will not do what we can do. We cannot save ourselves nor sanctify ourselves, God does that; but God will not give us good habits, He will not give us character, He will not make us walk aright. We have to do all that ourselves, we have to work out the salvation God has worked in. "Add" means to get into the habit of doing things, and in the initial stages it is difficult. To take the initiative is to make a beginning, to instruct yourself in the way you have to go.

Beware of the tendency of asking the way when you know it perfectly well. Take the initiative, stop hesitating, and take the first step. Be resolute when God speaks, act in faith immediately on what He says, and never revise your decisions. If you hesitate when God tells you to do a thing, you endanger your standing in grace. Take the initiative, take it yourself, take the step with your will now, make it impossible to go back. Burn your bridges behind you—"I will write that letter"; "I will pay that debt." Make the thing inevitable.

We have to get into the habit of hearkening to God about everything, to form the habit of finding out what God says. If, when a crisis comes, we instinctively turn to God, we know that the habit has been formed. We have to take the initiative where we are, not where we are not.

May 11

YOU WON'T REACH IT ON TIPTOE

Add... to your brotherliness... love. 2 Peter 1:5, 7 (see MOFFATT)

Love is indefinite to most of us, we do not know what we mean when we talk about love. Love is the sovereign preference of one person for another, and spiritually Jesus demands that that preference be for Himself (cf. Luke 14:26). When the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ is easily first; then we must practise the working out of these things mentioned by Peter.

The first thing God does is to knock pretence and the pious pose right out of me. The Holy Spirit reveals that God loved me not because I was loveable, but because it was His nature to do so. "Now," He says to me, "show the same love to others"—"Love as I have loved you." "I will bring any number of people about you whom you cannot respect, and you must exhibit My love to them as I have exhibited it to you." You won't reach it on tiptoe. Some of us have tried to, but we were soon tired.

The Lord "suffereth long. . . ." Let me look within and see His dealings with me. The knowledge that God has loved me to the uttermost, to the end of all my sin and meanness ¹⁶ and selfishness and wrong, will send me forth into the world to love in the same way. God's love to me is inexhaustible, and I must love others from the bedrock of God's love to me. Growth in grace stops the moment I get huffed. I get huffed because I have a peculiar person to live with. Just think how disagreeable I have been to God! Am I prepared to be so identified with the Lord Jesus that His life and His sweetness are being poured out all the time? Neither natural love nor Divine love will remain unless it is cultivated. Love is spontaneous, but it has to be maintained by discipline.

MAY 12

MAKE A HABIT OF HAVING NO HABITS

For if these things are yours and abound, they make you to be not idle nor unfruitful. 2 Peter 1:8 (RV)

When we begin to form a habit we are conscious of it. There are times when we are conscious of becoming virtuous and patient and godly, but it is only a stage; if we stop there we shall get the strut of the spiritual prig. The right thing to do with habits is to lose them in the life of the Lord, until every habit is so practised that there is no conscious habit at all. Our spiritual life continually resolves into introspection because there are some qualities we have not added as yet. Ultimately the relationship is to be a completely simple one.

Your god may be your little Christian habit, the habit of prayer at stated times, or the habit of Bible reading. Watch how your Father will upset those times if you begin to worship your habit instead of what the habit symbolises—"I can't do that just now, I am praying; it is my hour with God." No, it is your hour with your habit. There is a quality that is lacking in you. Recognise the defect, and then look for the opportunity of exercising yourself along the line of the quality to be added.

Love means that there is no habit visible, you have come to the place where the habit is lost, and by practise you do the thing unconsciously. If you are consciously holy, there are certain things you imagine you cannot do, certain relationships in which you are far from simple; that means there is something to be added. The only supernatural life is the life the Lord Jesus lived, and He was at home with God anywhere. Is there anywhere where you are not at home with God? Let God press through in that particular circumstance until you gain Him, and life becomes the simple life of a child.

MAY 13

THE HABIT OF A GOOD CONSCIENCE

A conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men. Acts 24:16

God's commands are given to the life of His Son in us, consequently to the human nature in which His Son has been formed, His commands are difficult, but immediately we obey they become divinely easy.

Conscience is that faculty in me which attaches itself to the highest that I know, and tells me what the highest I know demands that I do. It is the eye of the soul which looks out either towards God or towards what it regards as the highest, and therefore conscience records differently in different people.

^{16.} mean: as used here, something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

If I am in the habit of steadily facing myself with God, my conscience will always introduce God's perfect law and indicate what I should do. The point is, will I obey? I have to make an effort to keep my conscience so sensitive that I walk without offence. I should be living in such perfect sympathy with God's Son, that in every circumstance the spirit of my mind is renewed, and I "make out" (MOFFATT) at once "what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God." God always educates us down to the scruple. Is my ear so keen to hear the tiniest whisper of the Spirit that I know what I should do? "Grieve not the Holy Spirit." He does not come with a voice like thunder; His voice is so gentle that it is easy to ignore it. The one thing that keeps the conscience sensitive to Him is the continual habit of being open to God on the inside. When there is any debate, quit. "Why shouldn't I do this?" You are on the wrong track. There is no debate possible when conscience speaks. At your peril, you allow one thing to obscure your inner communion with God. Drop it, whatever it is, and see that you keep your inner vision clear.

MAY 14

THE HABIT OF ENJOYING THE DISAGREEABLE

That the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh. 2 Corinthians 4:11

We have to form habits to express what God's grace has done in us. It is not a question of being saved from hell, but of being saved in order to manifest the life of the Son of God in our mortal flesh, and it is the disagreeable things which make us exhibit whether or not we are manifesting His life. Do I manifest the essential sweetness of the Son of God, or the essential irritation of "myself" apart from Him? The only thing that will enable me to enjoy the disagreeable is the keen enthusiasm of letting the life of the Son of God manifest itself in me. No matter how disagreeable a thing may be, say—"Lord, I am delighted to obey Thee in this matter," and instantly the Son of God will press to the front, and there will be manifested in my human life that which glorifies Jesus.

There must be no debate. The moment you obey the light, the Son of God presses through you in that particular; but if you debate you grieve the Spirit of God. You must keep yourself fit to let the life of the Son of God be manifested, and you cannot keep yourself fit if you give way to self-pity. Our circumstances are the means of manifesting how wonderfully perfect and extraordinarily pure the Son of God is. The thing that ought to make the heart beat is a new way of manifesting the Son of God. It is one thing to choose the disagreeable, and another thing to go into the disagreeable by God's engineering. If God puts you there, He is amply sufficient.

Keep your soul fit to manifest the life of the Son of God. Never live on memories; let the word of God be always living and active in you.

MAY 15

THE HABIT OF RISING TO THE OCCASION

That ye may know what is the hope of His calling. . . . Ephesians 1:18

Remember what you are saved for—that the Son of God might be manifested in your mortal flesh. Bend the whole energy of your powers to realise your election as a child of God; rise to the occasion every time.

You cannot do anything for your salvation, but you must do something to manifest it, you must work out what God has worked in. Are you working it out with your tongue, and your brain and your nerves? If you are still the same miserable crosspatch, set on your own way, then it is a lie to say that God has saved and sanctified you.

God is the Master Engineer, He allows the difficulties to come in order to see if you can vault over them properly—"By my God have I leaped over a wall." God will never shield you from any of the requirements of a son or daughter of His. Peter says—"Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you." Rise to the occasion; do the thing. It does not matter how it hurts as long as it gives God the chance to manifest Himself in your mortal flesh.

May God not find the whine in us any more, but may He find us full of spiritual pluck and athleticism, ready to face anything He brings. We have to exercise ourselves in order that the Son of God may be manifested in our mortal flesh. God never has museums. The only aim of the life is that the Son of God may be manifested, and all dictation to God vanishes. Our Lord never dictated to His Father, and we are not here to dictate to God; we are here to submit to His will so that He may work through us what He wants. When we realise this, He will make us broken bread and poured-out wine to feed and nourish others.

May 16

THE HABIT OF WEALTH

Partakers of the divine nature. 2 Peter 1:4

We are made partakers of the Divine nature through the promises; then we have to "manipulate" the Divine nature in our human nature by habits, and the first habit to form is the habit of realising the provision God has made. "Oh, I can't afford it," we say—one of the worst lies is tucked up in that phrase. It is ungovernably bad taste to talk about money in the natural domain, and so it is spiritually, and yet we talk as if our Heavenly Father had cut us off with a shilling! We think it a sign of real modesty to say at the end of a day—"Oh, well, I have just got through, but it has been a severe tussle." And all the Almighty God is ours in the Lord Jesus! And He will tax the last grain of sand and the remotest star to bless us if we will obey Him. What does it matter if external circumstances are hard? Why should they not be! If we give way to self-pity and indulge in the luxury of misery, we banish God's riches from our own lives and hinder others from entering into His provision. No sin is worse than the sin of self-pity, because it obliterates God and puts self-interest upon the throne. It opens our mouths to spit out murmurings and our lives become craving spiritual sponges, there is nothing lovely or generous about them.

When God is beginning to be satisfied with us, He will impoverish everything in the nature of fictitious wealth, until we learn that all our fresh springs are in Him (PBV).¹⁷ If the majesty and grace and power of God are not being manifested in us (not to our consciousness), God holds us responsible. "God is able to make all grace abound," then learn to lavish the grace of God on others. Be stamped with God's nature, and His blessing will come through you all the time.

MAY 17

HIS ASCENSION AND OUR UNION

And it came to pass, while He blessed them, He was parted from them, and carried up into heaven. Luke 24:51

We have no corresponding experience to the events in Our Lord's life after the Transfiguration. From then onwards Our Lord's life was altogether vicarious. Up to the time of the Transfiguration He had exhibited the normal perfect life of a man; from the Transfiguration onwards—Gethsemane, the Cross, the Resurrection—everything is unfamiliar to us. His Cross is the door by which every member of the human race can enter into the life of God; by His Resurrection He has the right to give eternal life to any man, and by His Ascension Our Lord enters heaven and keeps the door open for humanity.

On the Mount of Ascension the Transfiguration is completed. If Jesus had gone to heaven from the Mount of Transfiguration, He would have gone alone; He would have been nothing more to us than a glorious Figure. But He turned His back on the glory, and came down from the Mount to identify Himself with fallen humanity.

The Ascension is the consummation of the Transfiguration. Our Lord does now go back into His primal glory; but He does not go back simply as Son of God: He goes back to God as Son of Man as well as Son of God. There is now freedom of access for anyone straight to the very throne of God by the Ascension of the Son of Man. As Son of Man Jesus Christ deliberately limited omnipotence, omnipresence and omniscience in Himself. Now they are His in absolute full power. As Son of Man Jesus Christ has all power at the throne of God. He is King of kings and Lord of lords from the day of His Ascension until now.

MAY 18

CAREFUL Unreasonableness

Behold the fowls of the air.... Consider the lilies of the field. Matthew 6:26, 28

Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow, they simply are! Think of the sea, the air, the sun, the stars and the moon—all these are, and what a ministration they exert. So often we mar God's designed influence through us by our self-conscious effort to be consistent and useful. Jesus says that there is only one way to develop spiritually, and that is by concentration on God. "Do not bother about being of use to others, believe on Me"-pay attention to the Source, "and out of you will flow rivers of living water." We cannot get at the springs of our natural life by common sense, and Jesus is teaching that growth in spiritual life does not depend on our watching it, but on concentration on our Father in heaven. Our heavenly Father knows the circumstances we are in, and if we keep concentrated on Him we will grow spiritually as the lilies.

The people who influence us most are not those who buttonhole us and talk to us, but those who live their lives like the stars in heaven and the lilies in the field, perfectly simply and unaffectedly. Those are the lives that mould us.

^{17.} PBV: Prayer Book Version. The Book of Common Prayer of the Church of England includes a translation of the Psalter, or Psalms of David.

If you want to be of use to God, get rightly related to Jesus Christ and He will make you of use unconsciously every minute you live.

MAY 19

"OUT OF THE WRECK I RISE"

Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Romans 8:35

God does not keep a man immune from trouble; He says—"I will be with him in trouble." It does not matter what actual troubles in the most extreme form get hold of a man's life, not one of them can separate him from his relationship to God. We are "more than conquerors in all these things." Paul is not talking of imaginary things, but of things that are desperately actual; and he says we are super-victors in the midst of them, not by our ingenuity, or by our courage, or by anything other than the fact that not one of them affects our relationship to God in Jesus Christ. Rightly or wrongly, we are where we are, exactly in the condition we are in. I am sorry for the Christian who has not something in his circumstances he wishes was not there.

"Shall tribulation . . ?"Tribulation is never a noble thing; but let tribulation be what it may—exhausting, galling, fatiguing, it is not able to separate us from the love of God. Never let cares or tribulations separate you from the fact that God loves you.

"Shall...anguish...?" (RV)—can God's love hold when everything says that His love is a lie, and that there is no such thing as justice?

"Shall... famine...?"—can we not only believe in the love of God but be more than conquerors, even while we are being starved?

Either Jesus Christ is a deceiver and Paul is deluded, or some extraordinary thing happens to a man who holds on to the love of God when the odds are all against God's character. Logic is silenced in the face of every one of these things. Only one thing can account for it—the love of God in Christ Jesus. "Out of the wreck I rise" every time.

MAY 20

THE REALM OF THE REAL

In your patience possess ye your souls. Luke 21:19

When a man is born again, there is not the same robustness in his thinking or reasoning for a time as formerly. We have to make an expression of the new life, to form the mind of Christ. "Acquire your soul with patience" (RV). Many of us prefer to stay at the threshold of the Christian life instead of going on to construct a soul in accordance with the new life God has put within. We fail because we are ignorant of the way we are made, we put things down to the devil instead of our own undisciplined natures. Think what we can be when we are roused!

There are certain things we must not pray about—moods, for instance. Moods never go by praying, moods go by kicking. A mood nearly always has its seat in the physical condition, not in the moral. It is a continual effort not to listen to the moods which arise from a physical condition; never submit to them for a second. We have to take ourselves by the scruff of the neck and shake ourselves, and we will find that we can do what we said we could not. The curse with most of us is that we won't. The Christian life is one of incarnate spiritual pluck.

May 21

DIVINE REASONINGS OF FAITH

But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. Matthew 6:33

Immediately we look at these words of Jesus, we find them the most revolutionary statement human ears ever listened to. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." We argue in exactly the opposite way, even the most spiritually-minded of us—"But I must live; I must make so much money; I must be clothed; I must be fed." The great concern of our lives is not the kingdom of God, but how we are to fit ourselves to live. Jesus reverses the order: Get rightly related to God first, maintain that as the great care of your life, and never put the concern of your care on the other things.

"Take no thought for your life. . . ." Our Lord points out the utter unreasonableness from His standpoint of being so anxious over the means of living. Jesus is not saying that the man who takes thought for nothing is blessed—that man is a fool. Jesus taught that a disciple has to make his relationship to God the dominating concentration of his life, and to be carefully careless about everything else in comparison to that. Jesus is saying—Don't make the ruling factor of your life what you shall eat and what you shall drink, but be concentrated absolutely on God. Some people are careless over what they eat and drink, and they suffer for it; they are careless about what they wear, and they look as they have no business to look; they are careless about their earthly affairs, and God holds them responsible. Jesus is saying that the great care of the life is to put the relationship to God first, and everything else second.

It is one of the severest disciplines of the Christian life to allow the Holy Spirit to bring us into harmony with the teaching of Jesus in these verses.

May 22

NOW THIS EXPLAINS IT

That they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us. John 17:21

If you are going through a solitary way, read John 17, it will explain exactly why you are where you are—Jesus has prayed that you may be one with the Father as He is. Are you helping God to answer that prayer, or have you some other end for your life? Since you became a disciple you cannot be as independent as you used to be.

The purpose of God is not to answer our prayers, but by our prayers we come to discern the mind of God, and this is revealed in John 17. There is one prayer God must answer, and that is the prayer of Jesus—"that they may be one, even as We are one." Are we as close to Jesus Christ as that?

God is not concerned about our plans; He does not say-"Do you want to go through this bereavement; this upset?" He allows these things for His own purpose. The things we are going through are either making us sweeter, better, nobler men and women; or they are making us more captious and fault-finding, more insistent upon our own way. The things that happen either make us fiends, or they make us saints; it depends entirely upon the relationship we are in to God. If we say—"Thy will be done," we get the consolation of John 17, the consolation of knowing that our Father is working according to His own wisdom. When we understand what God is after we will not get mean and cynical. Jesus has prayed nothing less for us than absolute oneness with Himself as He was one with the Father. Some of us are far off it, and yet God will not leave us alone until we are one with Him, because Jesus has prayed that we may be.

May 23

CAREFUL INFIDELITY

Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Matthew 6:25

Jesus sums up commonsense carefulness in a disciple as infidelity. If we have received the Spirit of God, He will press through and say—"Now where does God come in in this relationship, in this mapped-out holiday, in these new books?" He always presses the point until we learn to make Him our first consideration. Whenever we put other things first, there is confusion.

"Take no thought . . ."—don't take the pressure of forethought upon yourself. It is not only wrong to worry, it is infidelity, because worrying means that we do not think that God can look after the practical details of our lives, and it is never anything else that worries us. Have you ever noticed what Jesus said would choke the word He puts in? The devil? No, the cares of this world. It is the little worries always. I will not trust where I cannot see, that is where infidelity begins. The only cure for infidelity is obedience to the Spirit.

The great word of Jesus to His disciples is abandon.

MAY 24

THE DELIGHT OF DESPAIR

And when I saw Him, I fell at His feet as dead. Revelation 1:17

It may be that like the apostle John you know Jesus Christ intimately, when suddenly He appears with no familiar characteristic at all, and the only thing you can do is to fall at His feet as dead. There are times when God cannot reveal Himself in any other way than in His majesty, and it is the awfulness of the vision which brings you to the delight of despair; if you are ever to be raised up, it must be by the hand of God.

"He laid His right hand upon me." In the midst of the awfulness, a touch comes, and you know it is the right hand of Jesus Christ. The right hand not of restraint nor of correction nor of chastisement, but the right hand of the Everlasting Father. Whenever His hand is laid upon you, it is ineffable peace and comfort, the sense that "underneath are the everlasting arms," full of sustaining and comfort and strength. When once His touch comes, nothing at all can cast you into fear again. In the midst of all His ascended glory the Lord Jesus comes to speak to an insignificant disciple, and to say—"Fear not." His tenderness is ineffably sweet. Do I know Him like that?

Watch some of the things that strike despair. There is despair in which there is no delight, no horizon, no hope of anything brighter; but the delight of despair comes when I know that "in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing." I delight to know that there is that in me which must fall prostrate before God when He manifests Himself, and if I am ever to be raised up it must be by the hand of God. God can do nothing for me until I get to the limit of the possible.

THE TEST OF SELF-INTEREST

If thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left. Genesis 13:9

As soon as you begin to live the life of faith in God, fascinating and luxurious prospects will open up before you, and these things are yours by right; but if you are living the life of faith you will exercise your right to waive your rights, and let God choose for you. God sometimes allows you to get into a place of testing where your own welfare would be the right and proper thing to consider if you were not living a life of faith; but if you are, you will joyfully waive your right and leave God to choose for you. This is the discipline by means of which the natural is transformed into the spiritual by obedience to the voice of God.

Whenever right is made the guidance in the life, it will blunt the spiritual insight. The great enemy of the life of faith in God is not sin, but the good which is not good enough. The good is always the enemy of the best. It would seem the wisest thing in the world for Abraham to choose, it was his right, and the people around would consider him a fool for not choosing. Many of us do not go on spiritually because we prefer to choose what is right instead of relying on God to choose for us. We have to learn to walk according to the standard which has its eye on God. "Walk before Me."

THINK AS JESUS TAUGHT

Pray without ceasing. 1 Thessalonians 5:17

We think rightly or wrongly about prayer according to the conception we have in our minds of prayer. If we think of prayer as the breath in our lungs and the blood from our hearts, we think rightly. The blood flows ceaselessly, and breathing continues ceaselessly; we are not conscious of it, but it is always going on. We are not always conscious of Jesus keeping us in perfect joint with God, but if we are obeying Him, He always is. Prayer is not an exercise, it is the life. Beware of anything that stops ejaculatory prayer. "Pray without ceasing," keep the childlike habit of ejaculatory prayer in your heart to God all the time.

Jesus never mentioned unanswered prayer; He had the boundless certainty that prayer is always answered. Have we by the Spirit the unspeakable certainty that Jesus had about prayer, or do we think of the times when God does not seem to have answered prayer? "Every one that asketh receiveth." We say—"But, . . . but . . ." God answers prayer in the best way, not sometimes, but every time, although the immediate manifestation of the answer in the domain in which we want it may not always follow. Do we expect God to answer prayer?

The danger with us is that we want to water down the things that Jesus says and make them mean something in accordance with common sense; if it were only common sense, it was not worth while for Him to say it. The things Jesus says about prayer are supernatural revelations.

THE LIFE THAT LIVES

Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high. Luke 24:49

The disciples had to tarry until the day of Pentecost not for their own preparation only; they had to wait until the Lord was glorified historically. As soon as He was glorified, what happened? "Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear." The parenthesis in John 7:39 ("For the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified") does not apply to us; the Holy Ghost has been given, the Lord is glorified; the waiting depends not on God's providence, but on our fitness.

The Holy Spirit's influence and power were at work before Pentecost, but He was not here. Immediately Our Lord was glorified in Ascension, the Holy Spirit came into this world, and He has been here ever since. We have to receive the revelation that He is here. The reception of the Holy Spirit is the maintained attitude of a believer. When we receive the Holy Spirit, we receive quickening life from the ascended Lord.

It is not the baptism of the Holy Ghost which changes men, but the power of the ascended Christ coming into men's lives by the Holy Ghost that changes them. We too often divorce what the New Testament never divorces. The baptism of the Holy Ghost is not an experience apart from Jesus Christ: it is the evidence of the ascended Christ.

The baptism of the Holy Ghost does not make you think of Time or Eternity, it is one amazing glorious NOW. "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee." Begin to know Him now, and finish never.

MAY 28

UNQUESTIONED REVELATION

And in that day ye shall ask Me nothing. John 16:23

When is "that day"? When the Ascended Lord makes you one with the Father. In that day you will be one with the Father as Jesus is, and "in that day," Jesus says, "ye shall ask Me nothing." Until the resurrection life of Jesus is manifested in you, you want to ask this and that; then after a while you find all questions gone, you do not seem to have any left to ask. You have come to the place of entire reliance on the resurrection life of Jesus which brings you into perfect contact with the purpose of God. Are you living that life now? If not, why shouldn't you?

There may be any number of things dark to your understanding, but they do not come in between your heart and God. "And in that day ye shall ask Me no question"-you do not need to, you are so certain that God will bring things out in accordance with His will. John 14:1 has become the real state of your heart, and there are no more questions to be asked. If anything is a mystery to you and it is coming in between you and God, never look for the explanation in your intellect, look for it in your disposition, it is that which is wrong. When once your disposition is willing to submit to the life of Jesus, the understanding will be perfectly clear, and you will get to the place where there is no distance between the Father and His child because the Lord has made you one, and "in that day ye shall ask Me no question."

MAY 29

UNDISTURBED RELATIONSHIP

At that day ye shall ask in My name. . . . The Father Himself loveth you. John 16:26–27

"At that day ye shall ask in My name," i.e., in My nature. Not—"You shall use My name as a magic word," but—"You will be so intimate with Me that you will be one with Me." "That day" is not a day hereafter, but a day meant for here and now. "The Father Himself loveth you"—the union is so complete and absolute. Our Lord does not mean that life will be free from external perplexities but that just as He knew the Father's heart and mind, so by the baptism of the Holy Ghost He can lift us into the heavenly places where He can reveal the counsels of God to us.

"Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name ..." "That day" is a day of undisturbed relationship between God and the saint. Just as Jesus stood unsullied in the presence of His Father, so by the mighty efficacy of the baptism of the Holy Ghost, we can be lifted into that relationship—"that they may be one, even as We are one."

"... He will give it you." Jesus says that God will recognise our prayers. What a challenge! By the Resurrection and Ascension power of Jesus, by the sent-down Holy Ghost, we can be lifted into such a relationship with the Father that we are at one with the perfect sovereign will of God by our free choice even as Jesus was. In that wonderful position, placed there by Jesus Christ, we can pray to God in His name, in His nature, which is gifted to us by the Holy Ghost, and Jesus says—"Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name, He will give it you." The sovereign character of Jesus Christ is tested by His own statements.

MAY 30

"YES-BUT ...!"

Lord, I will follow Thee; but . . . Luke 9:61

Supposing God tells you to do something which is an enormous test to your common sense, what are you going to do? Hang back? If you get into the habit of doing a thing in the physical domain, you will do it every time until you break the habit determinedly; and the same is true spiritually. Again and again you will get up to what Jesus Christ wants, and every time you will turn back when it comes to the point, until you abandon resolutely. "Yes, but—supposing I do obey God in this matter, what about . . . ?" "Yes, I will obey God if He will let me use my common sense, but don't ask me to take a step in the dark." Jesus Christ demands of the man who trusts Him the same reckless sporting spirit that the natural man exhibits. If a man is going to do anything worthwhile, there are times when he has to risk everything on his leap, and in the spiritual domain Jesus Christ demands that you risk everything you hold by common sense and leap into what He says, and immediately you do, you find that what He says fits on as solidly as common sense. At the bar of common sense Jesus Christ's statements may seem mad; but bring them to the bar of faith, and you begin to find with awe-struck spirit that they are the words of God. Trust entirely in God, and when He brings you to the venture, see that you take it. We act like pagans in a crisis, only one out of a crowd is daring enough to bank his faith in the character of God.

May 31

GOD FIRST

Put God First in Trust

Jesus did not commit Himself unto them, . . . for He knew what was in man. (John 2:24–25)

Our Lord trusted no man; yet He was never suspicious, never bitter, never in despair about any man because He put God first in trust; He trusted absolutely in what God's grace could do for any man. If I put my trust in human beings first, I will end in despairing of everyone; I will become bitter, because I have insisted on man being what no man ever can be—absolutely right. Never trust anything but the grace of God in yourself or in anyone else.

Put God's Needs First

Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God. (Hebrews 10:9)

A man's obedience is to what he sees to be a need; Our Lord's obedience was to the will of His Father. The cry to-day is—"We must get some work to do; the heathen are dying without God; we must go and tell them of Him." We have to see first of all that God's needs in us personally are being met. "Tarry ye until . . ." The purpose of this College is to get us rightly related to the needs of God. When God's needs in us have been met, then He will open the way for us to realise His needs elsewhere.

Put God's Trust First

And whoso receiveth one such little child in My name receiveth Me. (Matthew 18:5)

God's trust is that He gives me Himself as a babe. God expects my personal life to be a "Bethlehem." Am I allowing my natural life to be slowly transfigured by the indwelling life of the Son of God? God's ultimate purpose is that His Son might be manifested in my mortal flesh.

June 1

THE STAGGERING QUESTION

Son of man, can these bones live? Ezekiel 37:3

Can that sinner be turned into a saint? Can that twisted life be put right? There is only one answer: "O Lord, Thou knowest, I don't." Never trample in with religious common sense and say—"Oh, yes, with a little more Bible reading and devotion and prayer, I see how it can be done."

It is much easier to do something than to trust in God; we mistake panic for inspiration. That is why there are so few fellow-workers with God and so many workers for Him. We would far rather work for God than believe in Him. Am I quite sure that God will do what I cannot do? I despair of men in the degree in which I have never realised that God has done anything for me. Is my experience such a wonderful realisation of God's power and might that I can never despair of anyone I see? Have I had any spiritual work done in me at all? The degree of panic is the degree of the lack of personal spiritual experience.

"Behold, O my people, I will open your graves." When God wants to show you what human nature is like apart from Himself, He has to show it you in yourself. If the Spirit of God has given you a vision of what you are apart from the grace of God (and He only does it when His Spirit is at work), you know there is no criminal who is half so bad in actuality as you know yourself to be in possibility. My "grave" has been opened by God and "I know that in me (that is in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing." God's Spirit continually reveals what human nature is like apart from His grace.

JUNE 2

WHAT ARE YOU HAUNTED BY?

What man is he that feareth the Lord? Psalm 25:12

What are you haunted by? You will say—"By nothing," but we are all haunted by something, generally by ourselves, or, if we are Christians, by our experience. The Psalmist says we are to be haunted by God. The abiding consciousness of the life is to be God, not thinking about Him. The whole of our life inside and out is to be absolutely haunted by the presence of God. A child's consciousness is so mother-haunted that although the child is not consciously thinking of its mother, yet when calamity arises, the relationship that abides is that of the mother. So we are to live and move and have our being in God, to look at everything in relation to God, because the abiding consciousness of God pushes itself to the front all the time.

If we are haunted by God, nothing else can get in, no cares, no tribulation, no anxieties. We see now why Our Lord so emphasised the sin of worry. How can we dare be so utterly unbelieving when God is round about us? To be haunted by God is to have an effective barricade against all the onslaughts of the enemy.

"His soul shall dwell at ease." In tribulation, misunderstanding, slander, in the midst of all these things, if our life is hid with Christ in God, He will keep us at ease. We rob ourselves of the marvellous revelation of this abiding companionship of God. "God is our Refuge"—nothing can come through that shelter.

JUNE 3

THE SECRET OF THE LORD

The secret ["friendship," RV] of the LORD is with them that fear Him. Psalm 25:14

What is the sign of a friend? That he tells you secret sorrows? No, that he tells you secret joys. Many will confide to you their secret sorrows, but the last mark of intimacy is to confide secret joys. Have we ever let God tell us any of His joys, or are we telling God our secrets so continually that we leave no room for Him to talk to us? At the beginning of our Christian life we are full of requests to God, then we find that God wants to get us into relationship with Himself, to get us in touch with His purposes. Are we so wedded to Jesus Christ's idea of prayer—"Thy will be done" —that we catch the secrets of God? The things that make God dear to us are not so much His great big blessings as the tiny things, because they show His amazing intimacy with us; He knows every detail of our individual lives.

". . . him shall He teach in the way that He shall choose." At first we want the consciousness of being guided by God, then as we go on we live so much in the consciousness of God that we do not need to ask what His will is, because the thought of choosing any other will never occur to us. If we are saved and sanctified God guides us by our ordinary choices, and if we are going to choose what He does not want, He will check, and we must heed. Whenever there is doubt, stop at once. Never reason it out and say—"I wonder why I shouldn't?" God instructs us in what we choose, that is, He guides our common sense, and we no longer hinder His Spirit by continually saying—"Now, Lord, what is Thy will?"

THE NEVER-FAILING GOD

For He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. Hebrews 13:5

What line does my thought take? Does it turn to what God says or to what I fear? Am I learning to say not what God says, but to say something after I have heard what He says? "He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me."

"I will in no wise fail thee" (RV)—not for all my sin and selfishness and stubbornness and waywardness. Have I really let God say to me that He will never fail me? If I have listened to this say-so of God's, then let me listen again.

"Neither will I in any wise forsake thee" (RV). Sometimes it is not difficulty that makes me think God will forsake me, but drudgery. There is no Hill Difficulty to climb, no vision given, nothing wonderful or beautiful, just the commonplace day in and day out—can I hear God's say-so in these things?

We have the idea that God is going to do some exceptional thing, that He is preparing and fitting us for some extraordinary thing by and by, but as we go on in grace we find that God is glorifying Himself here and now, in the present minute. If we have God's say-so behind us, the most amazing strength comes, and we learn to sing in the ordinary days and ways.

June 5

GOD'S SAY-SO

He hath said . . . so that we may boldly say . . . Hebrews 13:5–6

My say-so is to be built on God's say-so. God says—"I will never leave thee," then I can with good courage say—"The Lord is my helper, I will not fear"—I will not be haunted by apprehension. This does not mean that I will not be tempted to fear, but I will remember God's say-so. I will be full of courage, like a child "bucking himself up" to reach the standard his father wants. Faith in many a one falters when the apprehensions come, they forget the meaning of God's say-so, forget to take a deep breath spiritually. The only way to get the dread taken out of us is to listen to God's say-so.

What are you dreading? You are not a coward about it, you are going to face it, but there is a feeling of dread. When there is nothing and no one to help you, say—"But the Lord is my Helper, this second, in my present outlook." Are you learning to say things after listening to God, or are you saying things and trying to make God's word fit in? Get hold of the Father's say-so, and then say with good courage—"I will not fear." It does not matter what evil or wrong may be in the way, He has said—"I will never leave thee."

Frailty is another thing that gets in between God's say-so and ours. When we realise how feeble we are in facing difficulties, the difficulties become like giants, we become like grasshoppers, and God becomes a nonentity. Remember God's say-so—"I will in no wise fail you" (RV). Have we learned to sing after hearing God's key-note? Are we always possessed with the courage to say—"The Lord is my helper," or are we succumbing?

June 6

WORK OUT WHAT GOD WORKS IN

Work out your own salvation. Philippians 2:12

Your will agrees with God, but in your flesh there is a disposition which renders you powerless to do what you know you ought to do. When the Lord is presented to the conscience, the first thing conscience does is to rouse the will, and the will always agrees with God. You say—"But I do not know whether my will is in agreement with God." Look to Jesus and you will find that your will and your conscience are in agreement with Him every time. The thing in you which makes you say "I shan't" is something less profound than your will; it is perversity, or obstinacy, and they are never in agreement with God. The profound thing in man is his will, not sin. Will is the essential element in God's creation of man: sin is a perverse disposition which entered into man. In a regenerated man the source of will is almighty, "For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure." You have to work out with concentration and care what God works in; not work your own salvation, but work it out, while you base resolutely in unshaken faith on the complete and perfect Redemption of the Lord. As you do this, you do not bring an opposed will to God's will, God's will is your will, and your natural choices are along the line of God's will, and the life is as natural as breathing. God is the source of your will, therefore you are able to work out His will. Obstinacy is an unintelligent "wadge" that refuses to be enlightened; the only thing is for it to be blown up with dynamite, and the dynamite is obedience to the Holy Spirit.

Do I believe that Almighty God is the source of my will? God not only expects me to do His will, but He is in me to do it.

June 7

DON'T SLACK OFF

Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do. John 14:13

Am I fulfilling this ministry of the interior? There is no snare, or any danger of infatuation or pride in intercession, it is a hidden ministry that brings forth fruit whereby the Father is glorified. Am I allowing my spiritual life to be frittered away, or am I bringing it all to one centre—the Atonement of my Lord? Is Jesus Christ more and more dominating every interest in my life? If the one central point, the great exerting influence in my life, is the Atonement of the Lord, then every phase of My life will bear fruit for Him.

I must take time to realise what is the central point of power. Do I give one minute out of sixty to concentrate upon it? "If ye abide in Me"—continue to act and think and work from that centre—"ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." Am I abiding? Am I taking time to abide? What is the greatest factor of power in my life? Is it work, service, sacrifice for others, or trying to work for God? The thing that ought to exert the greatest power in my life is the Atonement of the Lord. It is not the thing we spend the most time on that moulds us most; the greatest element is the thing that exerts most power. We must determine to be limited and concentrate our affinities.

"Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do." The disciple who abides in Jesus is the will of God, and his apparently free choices are God's fore-ordained decrees. Mysterious? Logically contradictory and absurd? Yes, but a glorious truth to a saint.

JUNE 8

WHAT NEXT?

Determine to Know More Than Others

If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them. John 13:17

If you do not cut the moorings, God will have to break them by a storm and send you out. Launch all on God, go out on the great swelling tide of His purpose, and you will get your eyes open. If you believe in Jesus, you are not to spend all your time in the smooth waters just inside the harbour bar, full of delight, but always moored; you have to get out through the harbour bar into the great deeps of God and begin to know for yourself, begin to have spiritual discernment.

When you know you should do a thing, and do it, immediately you know more. Revise where you have become "stodgy" spiritually, and you will find it goes back to a point where there was something you knew you should do, but you did not do it because there seemed no immediate call to, and now you have no perception, no discernment; at a time of crisis you are spiritually distracted instead of spiritually self-possessed. It is a dangerous thing to refuse to go on knowing.

The counterfeit of obedience is a state of mind in which you work up occasions to sacrifice yourself; ardour is mistaken for discernment. It is easier to sacrifice yourself than to fulfil your spiritual destiny, which is stated in Romans 12:1–2. It is a great deal better to fulfil the purpose of God in your life by discerning His will than to perform great acts of self-sacrifice. "To obey is better than sacrifice." Beware of harking back to what you were once when God wants you to be something you have never been. "If any man will do..., he shall know..."

JUNE 9

THE NEXT BEST THING TO DO

Ask If You Have Not Received

For every one that asketh receiveth. Luke 11:10

There is nothing more difficult than to ask. We will long and desire and crave and suffer, but not until we are at the extreme limit will we ask. A sense of unreality makes us ask. Have you ever asked out of the depths of moral poverty? "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God. . . ."—but be sure that you do lack wisdom. You cannot bring yourself up against Reality when you like. The next best thing to do if you are not spiritually real, is to ask God for the Holy Spirit on the word of Jesus Christ (see Luke 11:13). The Holy Spirit is the One Who makes real in you all that Jesus did for you.

"For every one that asketh receiveth." This does not mean you will not get if you do not ask (cf. Matthew 5:45), but until you get to the point of asking you won't receive from God. To receive means you have come into the relationship of a child of God, and now you perceive with intelligent and moral appreciation and spiritual understanding that these things come from God.

"If any of you lack wisdom . . ." If you realise you are lacking, it is because you have come in contact with spiritual reality; do not put your reasonable blinkers on again. People say—Preach us the simple gospel: don't tell us we have to be holy, because that produces a sense of abject poverty, and it is not nice to feel abjectly poor. "Ask" means beg. Some people are poor enough to be interested in their poverty, and some of us are like that spiritually. We will never receive if we ask with an end in view; if we ask, not out of our poverty but out of our lust. A pauper does not ask from any other reason than the abject panging condition of his poverty, he is not ashamed to beg. Blessed are the paupers in spirit.

June 10

THE NEXT BEST THING TO DO

Seek If You Have Not Found

Seek, and ye shall find. Luke 11:9

"Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss." If you ask for things from life instead of from God, you ask amiss, that is, you ask from a desire for self-realisation. The more you realise yourself the less will you seek God. "Seek, and ye shall find." Get to work, narrow your interests to this one. Have you ever sought God with your whole heart, or have you only given a languid cry to Him after a twinge of moral neuralgia? Seek, concentrate, and you will find.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." Are you thirsty, or smugly indifferent—so satisfied with your experience that you want nothing more of God? Experience is a gateway, not an end. Beware of building your faith on experience, the metallic note will come in at once, the censorious note. You can never give another person that which you have found, but you can make him homesick for what you have.

"Draw nigh to God." "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Knock—the door is closed, and you suffer from palpitation as you knock. "Cleanse your hands"—knock a bit louder, you begin to find you are dirty. "Purify your heart"—this is more personal still, you are desperately in earnest now—you will do anything. "Be afflicted"—have you ever been afflicted before God at the state of your inner life? There is no strand of self-pity left, but a heartbreaking affliction of amazement to find you are the kind of person that you are. "Humble yourself"—it is a humbling business to knock at God's door—you have to knock with the crucified thief. "To him that knocketh, it shall be opened."

June 11

GETTING THERE

Where the Sin and the Sorrow Cease and the Song and the Saint Commence

Come unto Me. Matthew 11:28

Do I want to get there? I can now. The questions that matter in life are remarkably few, and they are all answered by the words—"Come unto Me." Not—"Do this, or don't do that"; but—"Come unto Me." If I will come to Jesus my actual life will be brought into accordance with my real desires; I will actually cease from sin, and actually find the song of the Lord begin.

Have you ever come to Jesus? Watch the stubbornness of your heart, you will do anything rather than the one simple childlike thing—"Come unto Me." If you want the actual experience of ceasing from sin, you must come to Jesus.

Jesus Christ makes Himself the touchstone. Watch how He used the word "Come." At the most unexpected moments there is the whisper of the Lord—"Come unto Me," and you are drawn immediately. Personal contact with Jesus alters everything. Be stupid enough to come and commit yourself to what He says. The attitude of coming is that the will resolutely lets go of everything and deliberately commits all to Him.

"and I will give you rest," i.e., I will stay you. Not—I will put you to bed and hold your hand and sing you to sleep; but—I will get you out of bed, out of the languor and exhaustion, out of the state of being half dead while you are alive; I will imbue you with the spirit of life, and you will be stayed by the perfection of vital activity. We get pathetic and talk about "suffering the will of the Lord"! Where is the majestic vitality and might of the Son of God about that?

June 12

GETTING THERE

Where the Self-Interest Sleeps and the Real Interest Awakens

Master, where dwellest Thou? . . . Come and see. . . . John 1:38–39

Come with Me

"They . . . abode with Him that day." That is about all some of us ever do, then we wake up to actualities, self-interest arises and the abiding is passed. There is no condition of life in which we cannot abide in Jesus.

"Thou art Simon...: thou shalt be called Cephas." God writes the new name on those places only in our lives where He has erased the pride and self-sufficiency and self-interest. Some of us have the new name in spots only, like spiritual measles. In sections we look all right. When we have our best spiritual mood on, you would think we were very high-toned saints; but don't look at us when we are not in that mood. The disciple is one who has the new name written all over him; self-interest and pride and self-sufficiency have been completely erased.

Pride is the deification of self, and this to-day in some of us is not of the order of the Pharisee, but of the publican. To say "Oh, I'm no saint," is acceptable to human pride, but it is unconscious blasphemy against God. It literally means that you defy God to make you a saint. "I am much too weak and hopeless, I am outside the reach of the Atonement." Humility before men may be unconscious blasphemy before God. Why are you not a saint? It is either that you do not want to be a saint, or that you do not believe God can make you one. It would be all right, you say, if God saved you and took you straight to heaven. That is just what He will do! "We will come unto Him, and make our abode with Him." Make no conditions, let Jesus be everything, and He will take you home with Him not only for a day, but for ever.

June 13

GETTING THERE

Where the Selective Affinity Dies and the Sanctified Abandon Lives

Come ye after Me. Mark 1:17

One of the greatest hindrances in coming to Jesus is the excuse of temperament. We make our temperament and our natural affinities barriers to coming to Jesus. The first thing we realise when we come to Jesus is that He pays no attention whatever to our natural affinities. We have the notion that we can consecrate our gifts to God. You cannot consecrate what is not yours; there is only one thing you can consecrate to God, and that is your right to yourself (Romans 12:1). If you will give God your right to yourself, He will make a holy experiment out of you. God's experiments always succeed. The one mark of a saint is the moral originality which springs from abandonment to Jesus Christ. In the life of a saint there is this amazing wellspring of original life all the time; the Spirit of God is a well of water springing up, perennially fresh. The saint realises that it is God Who engineers circumstances, consequently there is no whine, but a reckless abandon to Jesus. Never make a principle out of your experience; let God be as original with other people as He is with you.

If you abandon to Jesus, and come when He says "Come," He will continue to say "Come" through you; you will go out into life reproducing the echo of Christ's "Come." That is the result in every soul who has abandoned and come to Jesus.

Have I come to Jesus? Will I come now?

GET A MOVE ON

In the Matter of Determination

Abide in Me. John 15:4

The Spirit of Jesus is put into me by the Atonement, then I have to construct with patience the way of thinking that is exactly in accordance with my Lord. God will not make me think like Jesus, I have to do it myself; I have to bring every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. "Abide in Me"—in intellectual matters, in money matters, in every one of the matters that make human life what it is. It is not a bandbox 18 life.

Am I preventing God from doing things in my circumstances because I say it will hinder my communion with Him? That is an impertinence. It does not matter what my circumstances are, I can be as sure of abiding in Jesus in them as in a prayer meeting. I have not to change and arrange my circumstances myself. With Our Lord the inner abiding was unsullied; He was at home with God wherever His body was placed. He never chose His own circumstances, but was meek towards His Father's dispensations for Him. Think of the amazing leisure of Our Lord's Life! We keep God at excitement point, there is none of the serenity of the life hid with Christ in God about us.

Think of the things that take you out of abiding in Christ—"Yes, Lord, just a minute, I have got this to do; Yes, I will abide when once this is finished; when this week is over, it will be all right, I will abide then." Get a move on; begin to abide now. In the initial stages it is a continual effort until it becomes so much the law of life that you abide in Him unconsciously. Determine to abide in Jesus wherever you are placed.

June 15

GET A MOVE ON

In the Matter of Drudgery

And beside this, ... add ... 2 Peter 1:5

You have inherited the Divine nature, says Peter (v. 4), now screw your attention down and form habits, give diligence, concentrate. "Add" means all that character means. No man is born either naturally or supernaturally with character; he has to make character. Nor are we born with habits; we have to form habits on the basis of the new life God has put into us. We are not meant to be illuminated versions, but the common stuff of ordinary life exhibiting the marvel of the grace of God. Drudgery is the touchstone of character. The great hindrance in spiritual life is that we will look for big things to do. "Jesus . . . took a towel, . . . and began to wash the disciples' feet."

There are times when there is no illumination and no thrill, but just the daily round, the common task. Routine is God's way of saving us between our times of inspiration. Do not expect God always to give you His thrilling minutes, but learn to live in the domain of drudgery by the power of God.

It is the "adding" that is difficult. We say we do not expect God to carry us to heaven on flowery beds of ease, and yet we act as if we did! The tiniest detail in which I obey has all the omnipotent power of the grace of God behind it. If I do my duty, not for duty's sake, but because I believe God is engineering my circumstances, then at the very point of my obedience the whole superb grace of God is mine through the Atonement.

June 16

WHAT DO YOU MAKE OF THIS?

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. . . . I have called you friends. John 15:13, 15

Jesus does not ask me to die for Him, but to lay down my life for Him. Peter said—"I will lay down my life for Thy sake," and he meant it; his sense of the heroic was magnificent. It would be a bad thing to be incapable of making such a declaration as Peter made; the sense of our duty is only realised by our sense of the heroic. Has the Lord ever asked you—"Wilt thou lay down thy life for My sake?" It is far easier to die than to lay down the life day in and day out with the sense of the high calling. We are not made for brilliant moments, but we have to walk in the light of them in ordinary ways. There was only one brilliant moment in the life of Jesus, and that was on the Mount of Transfiguration; then He emptied Himself the second time of His glory, and came down into the demon-possessed valley. For thirty-three years Jesus laid out His life to do the will of His Father, and, John says, "we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." It is contrary to human nature to do it.

If I am a friend of Jesus, I have deliberately and carefully to lay down my life for Him. It is difficult, and thank God it is difficult. Salvation is easy because it cost God so much, but the manifestation of it in my life is difficult. God saves a man and endues him with the Holy Spirit, and then says in effect—"Now work it out, be loyal to Me, whilst the nature of things round about you would make you disloyal." "I have called you friends." Stand loyal to your Friend, and remember that His honour is at stake in your bodily life.

June 17

THE UNCRITICAL TEMPER

Judge not, that ye be not judged. Matthew 7:1

Jesus says regarding judging—Don't. The average Christian is the most penetratingly critical individual. Criticism is a part of the ordinary faculty of man; but in the spiritual domain nothing is accomplished by criticism. The effect of criticism is a dividing up of the powers of the one criticised; the Holy Ghost is the One in the true position to criticise, He alone is able to show what is wrong without hurting and wounding. It is impossible to enter into communion with God when you are in a critical temper; it makes you hard and vindictive and cruel, and leaves you with the flattering unction that you are a superior person. Jesus says, as a disciple, cultivate the uncritical temper. It is not done once and for all. Beware of anything that puts you in the superior person's place.

There is no getting away from the penetration of Jesus. If I see the mote in your eye, it means I have a beam in my own. Every wrong thing that I see in you, God locates in me. Every time I judge, I condemn myself (see Romans 2:17–20). Stop having a measuring rod for other people. There is always one fact more in every man's case about which we know nothing. The first thing God does is to give us a spiritual spring-cleaning; there is no possibility of pride left in a man after that. I have never met the man I could despair of after discerning what lies in me apart from the grace of God.

JUNE 18

DON'T THINK NOW, TAKE THE ROAD

And Peter . . . walked on the water, to go to Jesus. But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid. Matthew 14:29–30 The wind was actually boisterous, the waves were actually high, but Peter did not see them at first. He did not reckon with them, he simply recognised his Lord, and stepped out in recognition of Him and walked on the water. Then he began to reckon with the actual things, and down he went instantly. Why could not our Lord have enabled him to walk at the bottom of the waves as well as on the top of them? Neither could be done saving by recognition of the Lord Jesus.

We step right out on God over some things, then self-consideration enters in and down we go. If you are recognising your Lord, you have no business with where He engineers your circumstances. The actual things are, but immediately you look at them you are overwhelmed, you cannot recognise Jesus, and the rebuke comes: Wherefore didst thou doubt?" Let actual circumstances be what they may, keep recognising Jesus, maintain complete reliance on Him.

If you debate for a second when God has spoken, it is all up. Never begin to say—"Well, I wonder if He did speak?" Be reckless immediately, fling it all out on Him. You do not know when His voice will come, but whenever the realisation of God comes in the faintest way imaginable, recklessly abandon. It is only by abandon that you recognise Him. You will only realise His voice more clearly by recklessness.

JUNE 19

THE SERVICE OF PASSIONATE DEVOTION

Lovest thou Me? . . . Feed My sheep. John 21:17

Jesus did not say—Make converts to your way of thinking, but look after My sheep, see that they get nourished in the knowledge of Me. We count as service what we do in the way of Christian work; Jesus Christ calls service what we are to Him, not what we do for Him. Discipleship is based on devotion to Jesus Christ, not on adherence to a belief or a creed. "If any man come to Me, and hate not . . . , he cannot be My disciple." There is no argument and no compulsion, but simply—"If you would be My disciple, you must be devoted to Me." A man touched by the Spirit of God suddenly says—"Now I see Who Jesus is," and that is the source of devotion.

To-day we have substituted credal belief for personal belief, and that is why so many are devoted to causes and so few devoted to Jesus Christ. People do not want to be devoted to Jesus, but only to the cause He started. Jesus Christ is a source of deep offence to the educated mind of to-day that does not want Him in any other way than as a Comrade. Our Lord's first obedience was to the will of His Father, not to the needs of men; the saving of men was the natural outcome of His obedience to the Father. If I am devoted to the cause of humanity only, I will soon be exhausted and come to the place where my love will falter; but if I love Jesus Christ personally and passionately, I can serve humanity though men treat me as a door-mat. The secret of a disciple's life is devotion to Jesus Christ, and the characteristic of the life is its unobtrusiveness. It is like a corn of wheat, which falls into the ground and dies, but presently it will spring up and alter the whole landscape (see John 12:24).

June 20

HAVE YOU COME TO "WHEN" YET?

And the LORD turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends. Job 42:10

The plaintive, self-centred, morbid kind of prayer, a dead-set that I want to be right, is never found in the New Testament. The fact that I am trying to be right with God is a sign that I am rebelling against the Atonement. "Lord, I will purify my heart if You will answer my prayer; I will walk rightly if You will help me." I cannot make myself right with God, I cannot make my life perfect; I can only be right with God if I accept the Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ as an absolute gift. Am I humble enough to accept it? I have to resign every kind of claim and cease from every effort, and leave myself entirely alone in His hands, and then begin to pour out in the priestly work of intercession. There is much prayer that arises from real disbelief in the Atonement. Jesus is not beginning to save us, He has saved us, the thing is done, and it is an insult to ask Him to do it.

If you are not getting the hundredfold more, not getting insight into God's word, then start praying for your friends, enter into the ministry of the interior. "The Lord turned the captivity of Job when he prayed for his friends." The real business of your life as a saved soul is intercessory prayer. Wherever God puts you in circumstances, pray immediately, pray that His Atonement may be realised in other lives as it has been in yours. Pray for your friends now; pray for those with whom you come in contact now.

June 21

THE MINISTRY OF THE INTERIOR

But ye are . . . a royal priesthood. 1 Peter 2:9

By what right do we become "a royal priesthood"? By the right of the Atonement. Are we prepared to leave ourselves resolutely alone and to launch out into the priestly work of prayer? The continual grubbing on the inside to see whether we are what we ought to be, generates a self-centred, morbid type of Christianity, not the robust, simple life of the child of God. Until we get into a right relationship to God, it is a case of hanging on by the skin of our teeth, and we say—"What a wonderful victory I have got!" There is nothing indicative of the miracle of Redemption in that. Launch out in reckless belief that the Redemption is complete, and then bother no more about yourself, but begin to do as Jesus Christ said—pray for the friend who comes to you at midnight, pray for the saints, pray for all men. Pray on the realisation that you are only perfect in Christ Jesus, not on this plea—"O Lord, I have done my best, please hear me."

How long is it going to take God to free us from the morbid habit of thinking about ourselves? We must get sick unto death of ourselves, until there is no longer any surprise at anything God can tell us about ourselves. We cannot touch the depths of meanness in ourselves. There is only one place where we are right, and that is in Christ Jesus. When we are there, we have to pour out for all we are worth in the ministry of the interior.

June 22

THE UNDEVIATING TEST

For with what judgement ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. Matthew 7:2

This statement is not a haphazard guess, it is an eternal law of God. Whatever judgement you give, it is measured to you again. There is a difference between retaliation and retribution. Jesus says that the basis of life is retribution—"with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." If you have been shrewd in finding out the defects in others, remember that will be exactly the measure given to you. Life serves back in the coin you pay. This law works from God's throne downwards (cf. Psalm 18:25–26).

Romans 2 applies it in a still more definite way, and says that the one who criticises another is guilty of the very same thing. God looks not only at the act, He looks at the possibility. We do not believe the statements of the Bible to begin with. For instance, do we believe this statement, that the things we criticise in others we are guilty of ourselves? The reason we see hypocrisy and fraud and unreality in others is because they are all in our own hearts. The great characteristic of a saint is humility—"Yes, all those things and other evils would have been manifested in me but for the grace of God; therefore I have no right to judge."

Jesus says—"Judge not, that ye be not judged"; if you do judge, it will be measured to you exactly as you have judged. Who of us would dare to stand before God and say—"My God, judge me as I have judged my fellow men"? We have judged our fellow men as sinners; if God should judge us like that we would be in hell. God judges us through the marvellous Atonement of Jesus Christ.

June 23

ACQUAINTANCE WITH GRIEF

A Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief. Isaiah 53:3

We are not acquainted with grief in the way in which Our Lord was acquainted with it; we endure it, we get through it, but we do not become intimate with it. At the beginning of life we do not reconcile ourselves to the fact of sin. We take a rational view of life and say that a man by controlling his instincts, and by educating himself, can produce a life which will slowly evolve into the life of God. But as we go on, we find the presence of something which we have not taken into consideration, viz., sin, and it upsets all our calculations. Sin has made the basis of things wild and not rational. We have to recognise that sin is a fact, not a defect; sin is red-handed mutiny against God. Either God or sin must die in my life. The New Testament brings us right down to this one issue. If sin rules in me, God's life in me will be killed; if God rules in me, sin in me will be killed. There is no possible ultimate but that. The climax of sin is that it crucified Jesus Christ, and what was true in the history of God on earth will be true in your history and in mine. In our mental outlook we have to reconcile ourselves to the fact of sin as the only explanation as to why Jesus Christ came, and the explanation of the grief and sorrow in life.

June 24

RECONCILING ONE'S SELF TO THE FACT OF SIN

This is your hour, and the power of darkness. Luke 22:53

It is not being reconciled to the fact of sin that produces all the disasters in life. You may talk about the nobility of human nature, but there is something in human nature which will laugh in the face of every ideal you have. If you refuse to agree with the fact that there is vice and self-seeking, something downright spiteful and wrong in human beings, instead of reconciling yourself to it when it strikes your life, you will compromise with it and say it is of no use to battle against it. Have you made allowance for this hour and the power of darkness, or do you take a recognition of yourself that misses out sin? In your bodily relationships and friendships do you reconcile yourself to the fact of sin? If not, you will be caught round the next corner and you will compromise with it. If you reconcile yourself to the fact of sin, you will realise the danger at once—"Yes, I see what that would mean." The recognition of sin does not destroy the basis of friendship; it establishes a mutual regard for the fact that the basis of life is tragic. Always beware of an estimate of life which does not recognise the fact that there is sin.

Jesus Christ never trusted human nature, yet He was never cynical, never suspicious, because He trusted absolutely in what He could do for human nature. The pure man or woman, not the innocent, is the safeguarded man or woman. You are never safe with an innocent man or woman. Men and women have no business to be innocent; God demands that they be pure and virtuous. Innocence is the characteristic of a child; it is a blameworthy thing for a man or woman not to be reconciled to the fact of sin.

June 25

RECEIVING ONE'S SELF IN THE FIRES OF SORROW

What shall I say? Father, save me from this hour? [mg] But for this cause came I unto this hour. Father, glorify Thy name. John 12:27–29 (RV)

My attitude as a saint to sorrow and difficulty is not to ask that they may be prevented, but to ask that I may preserve the self God created me to be through every fire of sorrow. Our Lord received Himself in the fire of sorrow, He was saved not from the hour, but out of the hour.

We say that there ought to be no sorrow, but there is sorrow, and we have to receive ourselves in its fires. If we try and evade sorrow, refuse to lay our account with it, we are foolish. Sorrow is one of the biggest facts in life; it is no use saying sorrow ought not to be. Sin and sorrow and suffering are, and it is not for us to say that God has made a mistake in allowing them.

Sorrow burns up a great amount of shallowness, but it does not always make a man better. Suffering either gives me my self or it destroys my self. You cannot receive your self in success, you lose your head; you cannot receive your self in monotony, you grouse. The way to find your self is in the fires of sorrow. Why it should be so is another matter, but that it is so is true in the Scriptures and in human experience. You always know the man who has been through the fires of sorrow and received himself, you are certain you can go to him in trouble and find that he has ample leisure for you. If a man has not been through the fires of sorrow, he is apt to be contemptuous, he has no time for you. If you receive yourself in the fires of sorrow, God will make you nourishment for other people.

June 26

ALWAYS NOW

We . . . beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain. 2 Corinthians 6:1

The grace you had yesterday will not do for today. Grace is the overflowing favour of God; you can always reckon it is there to draw upon. "In much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses"—that is where the test for patience comes. Are you failing the grace of God there? Are you saying—"Oh, well, I won't count this time"? It is not a question of praying and asking God to help you; it is taking the grace of God now. We make prayer the preparation for work, it is never that in the Bible. Prayer is the exercise of drawing on the grace of God. Don't say—"I will endure this until I can get away and pray." Pray now; draw on the grace of God in the moment of need. Prayer is the most practical thing, it is not the reflex action of devotion. Prayer is the last thing in which we learn to draw on God's grace.

"In stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours"—in all these things manifest a drawing upon the grace of God that will make you a marvel to yourself and to others. Draw now, not presently: The one word in the spiritual vocabulary is Now. Let circumstances bring you where they will, keep drawing on the grace of God in every conceivable condition you may be in. One of the greatest proofs that you are drawing on the grace of God is that you can be humiliated without manifesting the slightest trace of anything but His grace.

"Having nothing. . . ." Never reserve anything. Pour out the best you have, and always be poor. Never be diplomatic and careful about the treasure God gives. This is poverty triumphant.

June 27

THE OVERSHADOWING PERSONAL DELIVERANCE

I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the LORD. Jeremiah 1:8

God promised Jeremiah that He would deliver him personally—"Thy life will I give unto thee for a prey." That is all God promises His children. Wherever God sends us, He will guard our lives. Our personal property and possessions are a matter of indifference, we have to sit loosely to all these things; if we do not, there will be panic and heartbreak and distress. That is the inwardness of the overshadowing of personal deliverance.

The Sermon on the Mount indicates that when we are on Jesus Christ's errands, there is no time to stand up for ourselves. Jesus says, in effect, "Do not be bothered with whether you are being justly dealt with or not." To look for justice is a sign of deflection from devotion to Him. Never look for justice in this world, but never cease to give it. If we look for justice, we will begin to grouse and to indulge in the discontent of self-pity—"Why should I be treated like this?" If we are devoted to Jesus Christ we have nothing to do with what we meet, whether it is just or unjust. Jesus says-"Go steadily on with what I have told you to do and I will guard your life. If you try to guard it yourself, you remove yourself from My deliverance." The most devout among us become atheistic in this connection; we do not believe God, we enthrone common sense and tack the name of God on to it. We do lean to our own understanding, instead of trusting God with all our hearts.

June 28

APPREHENDED BY GOD

If that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended. Philippians 3:12

Never choose to be a worker; but when once God has put His call on you, woe be to you if you turn to the right hand or to the left. We are not here to work for God because we have chosen to do so, but because God has apprehended us. There is never any thought of—"Oh well, I am not fitted for this." What you are to preach is determined by God, not by your own natural inclinations. Keep your soul steadfastly related to God, and remember that you are called not to bear testimony only, but to preach the gospel.

Every Christian must testify, but when it comes to the call to preach, there must be the agonising grip of God's hand on you. Your life is in the grip of God for that one thing. How many of us are held like that?

Never water down the word of God; preach it in its undiluted sternness. There must be unflinching loyalty to the word of God; but when you come to personal dealing with your fellow men, remember who you are—not a special being made up in heaven, but a sinner saved by grace.

"I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do . . ."

June 29

DIRECTION OF DISCIPLINE

And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. Matthew 5:30

Jesus did not say that everyone must cut off the right hand, but—"If your right hand offends you in your walk with Me, cut it off." There are many things that are perfectly legitimate, but if you are going to concentrate on God you cannot do them. Your right hand is one of the best things you have, but Jesus says if it hinders you in following His precepts, cut it off. This line of discipline is the sternest one that ever struck mankind.

When God alters a man by regeneration, the characteristic of the life to begin with is that it is maimed. There are a hundred and one things you dare not do, things that to you and in the eyes of the world that knows you are as your right hand and your eye, and the unspiritual person says—"Whatever is wrong in that? How absurd you are!" There never has been a saint yet who did not have to live a maimed life to start with. But it is better to enter into life maimed and lovely in God's sight than to be lovely in man's sight and lame in God's. In the beginning Jesus Christ by His Spirit has to check you from doing a great many things that may be perfectly right for everyone else but not right for you. See that you do not use your limitations to criticise someone else.

It is a maimed life to begin with, but in v. 48 Jesus gives the picture of a perfectly full-orbed life—"Ye shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect."

June 30

DO IT NOW

Agree with thine adversary quickly. Matthew 5:25

Jesus Christ is laying down this principle—Do what you know you must do, now, and do it quickly; if you do not, the inevitable process will begin to work and you will have to pay to the last farthing in pain and agony and distress. God's laws are unalterable; there is no escape from them. The teaching of Jesus goes straight to the way we are made up.

To see that my adversary gives me my rights is natural; but Jesus says that it is a matter of eternal and imperative importance to me that I pay my adversary what I owe him. From our Lord's standpoint it does not matter whether I am defrauded or not; what does matter is that I do not defraud. Am I insisting on my rights, or am I paying what I owe from Jesus Christ's standpoint?

Do the thing quickly, bring yourself to judgement now. In moral and spiritual matters, you must do it at once; if you do not, the inexorable process will begin to work. God is determined to have His child as pure and clean and white as driven snow, and as long as there is disobedience in any point of His teaching, He will prevent none of the working of His Spirit. Our insistence in proving that we are right is nearly always an indication that there has been some point of disobedience. No wonder the Spirit so strongly urges to keep steadfastly in the light!

"Agree with thine adversary quickly." Have you suddenly turned a corner in any relationship and found that you had anger in your heart? Confess it quickly, quickly put it right before God, be reconciled to that one—do it now.

July 1

THE INEVITABLE PENALTY

Verily I say unto thee, Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou have paid the uttermost farthing. Matthew 5:26 (RV)

"There is no heaven with a little of hell in it." God is determined to make you pure and holy and right; He will not allow you to escape for one moment from the scrutiny of the Holy Spirit. He urged you to come to judgement right away when He convicted you, but you did not; the inevitable process began to work and now you are in prison, and you will only get out when you have paid the uttermost farthing. "Is this a God of mercy, and of love?" you say. Seen from God's side, it is a glorious ministry of love. God is going to bring you out pure and spotless and undefiled; but He wants you to recognise the disposition you were showing—the disposition of your right to yourself. The moment you are willing that God should alter your disposition, His re-creating forces will begin to work. The moment you realise God's purpose, which is to get you rightly related to Himself and then to your fellow men, He will tax the last limit of the universe to help you take the right road. Decide it now—"Yes, Lord, I will write that letter to-night"; "I will be reconciled to that man now."

These messages of Jesus Christ are for the will and the conscience, not for the head. If you dispute the Sermon on the Mount with your head, you will blunt the appeal to your heart.

"I wonder why I don't go on with God"! Are you paying your debts from God's standpoint? Do now what you will have to do some day. Every moral call has an "ought" behind it.

July 2

THE CONDITIONS OF DISCIPLESHIP

If any man come to Me, and hate not . . . , he cannot be My disciple. Luke 14:26, see also 27, 33

If the closest relationships of life clash with the claims of Jesus Christ, He says it must be instant obedience to Himself. Discipleship means personal, passionate devotion to a Person, Our Lord Jesus Christ. There is a difference between devotion to a Person and devotion to principles or to a cause. Our Lord never proclaimed a cause; He proclaimed personal devotion to Himself. To be a disciple is to be a devoted loveslave of the Lord Jesus. Many of us who call ourselves Christians are not devoted to Jesus Christ. No man on earth has this passionate love to the Lord Jesus unless the Holy Ghost has imparted it to him. We may admire Him, we may respect Him and reverence Him, but we cannot love Him. The only Lover of the Lord Jesus is the Holy Ghost, and He sheds abroad the very love of God in our hearts. Whenever the Holy Ghost sees a chance of glorifying Jesus, He will take your heart, your nerves, your whole personality, and simply make you blaze and glow with devotion to Jesus Christ.

The Christian life is stamped by "moral spontaneous originality," consequently the disciple is open to the same charge that Jesus Christ was, viz., that of inconsistency. But Jesus Christ was always consistent to God, and the Christian must be consistent to the life of the Son of God in him, not consistent to hard and fast creeds. Men pour themselves into creeds, and God has to blast them out of their prejudices before they can become devoted to Jesus Christ.

JULY 3

THE CONCENTRATION OF PERSONAL SIN

Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips. Isaiah 6:5

When I get into the presence of God, I do not realise that I am a sinner in an indefinite sense; I realise the concentration of sin in a particular feature of my life. A man will say easily—"Oh yes, I know I am a sinner," but when he gets into the presence of God he cannot get off with that statement. The conviction is concentrated on—"I am this, or that, or the other." This is always the sign that a man or woman is in the presence of God. There is never any vague sense of sin, but the concentration of sin in some personal particular. God begins by convicting us of one thing fixed on in the mind that is prompted by His Spirit; if we will yield to His conviction on that point, He will lead us down to the great disposition of sin underneath. That is the way God always deals with us when we are consciously in His presence.

This experience of the concentration of sin is true in the greatest and the least of saints as well as in the greatest and the least of sinners. When a man is on the first rung of the ladder of experience, he may say—"I do not know where I have gone wrong, but the Spirit of God will point out some particular definite thing." The effect of the vision of the holiness of the Lord on Isaiah was to bring home to him that he was a man of unclean lips. "And he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged." The cleansing fire had to be applied where the sin had been concentrated.

JULY 4

ONE OF GOD'S GREAT DON'TS

Fret not thyself, it tendeth only to evil doing. Psalm 37:8 (RV)

Fretting means getting out at elbows mentally or spiritually. It is one thing to say "Fret not," but a very different thing to have such a disposition that you find yourself able not to fret. It sounds so easy to talk about resting in the Lord and waiting patiently for Him, until the nest is upset—until we live, as so many are doing, in tumult and anguish, is it possible then to rest in the Lord? If this "don't" does not work there, it will work nowhere. This "don't" must work in days of perplexity as well as in days of peace, or it never will work. And if it will not work in your particular case, it will not work in anyone else's case. Resting in the Lord does not depend on external circumstances at all, but on your relationship to God Himself.

Fussing always ends in sin. We imagine that a little anxiety and worry are an indication of how really wise we are; it is much more an indication of how really wicked we are. Fretting springs from a determination to get our own way. Our Lord never worried and He was never anxious, because He was not "out" to realise His own ideas; He was "out" to realise God's ideas. Fretting is wicked if you are a child of God.

Have you been bolstering up that stupid soul of yours with the idea that your circumstances are too much for God? Put all "supposing" on one side and dwell in the shadow of the Almighty. Deliberately tell God that you will not fret about that thing. All our fret and worry is caused by calculating without God.

JULY 5

DON'T CALCULATE WITHOUT GOD

Commit thy way unto the LORD; trust also in Him; and He shall bring it to pass. Psalm 37:5

Don't calculate without God. God seems to have a delightful way of upsetting the things we have calculated on without taking Him into account. We get into circumstances which were not chosen by God, and suddenly we find we have been calculating without God; He has not entered in as a living factor. The one thing that keeps us from the possibility of worrying is bringing God in as the greatest factor in all our calculations.

In our religion it is customary to put God first, but we are apt to think it is an impertinence to put Him first in the practical issues of our lives. If we imagine we have to put on our Sunday moods before we come near to God, we will never come near Him. We must come as we are.

Don't calculate with the evil in view. Does God really mean us to take no account of the evil? "Love . . . taketh not account of evil" (RV). Love is not ignorant of the existence of the evil, but it does not take it in as a calculating factor. Apart from God, we do reckon with evil; we calculate with it in view and work all reasonings from that standpoint.

Don't calculate with the rainy day in view. You cannot lay up for a rainy day if you are trusting Jesus Christ. Jesus said—"Let not your heart be troubled." God will not keep your heart from being troubled. It is a command—"Let not..." Haul yourself up a hundred and one times a day in order to do it, until you get into the habit of putting God first and calculating with Him in view.

JULY 6

VISION AND REALITY

And the parched ground shall become a pool. Isaiah 35:7

We always have visions before a thing is made real. When we realise that although the vision is real, it is not real in us, then is the time that Satan comes in with his temptations, and we are apt to say it is no use to go on. Instead of the vision becoming real, there has come the valley of humiliation.

Life is not as idle ore, But iron dug from central gloom, And batter'd by the shocks of doom To shape and use.

God gives us the vision, then He takes us down to the valley to batter us into the shape of the vision, and it is in the valley that so many of us faint and give way. Every vision will be made real if we will have patience. Think of the enormous leisure of God! He is never in a hurry. We are always in such a frantic hurry. In the light of the glory of the vision we go forth to do things, but the vision is not real in us yet; and God has to take us into the valley, and put us through fires and floods to batter us into shape, until we get to the place where He can trust us with the veritable reality. Ever since we had the vision God has been at work, getting us into the shape of the ideal, and over and over again we escape from His hand and try to batter ourselves into our own shape.

The vision is not a castle in the air, but a vision of what God wants you to be. Let Him put you on His wheel and whirl you as He likes, and as sure as God is God and you are you, you will turn out exactly in accordance with the vision. Don't lose heart in the process. If you have ever had the vision of God, you may try as you like to be satisfied on a lower level, but God will never let you.

July 7

ALL NOBLE THINGS ARE DIFFICULT

Enter ye in at the strait gate . . . : because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way. . . . Matthew 7:13–14

If we are going to live as disciples of Jesus, we have to remember that all noble things are difficult. The Christian life is gloriously difficult, but the difficulty of it does not make us faint and cave in, it rouses us up to overcome. Do we so appreciate the marvellous salvation of Jesus Christ that we are our utmost for His highest?

God saves men by His sovereign grace through the Atonement of Jesus; He works in us to will and to do of His good pleasure; but we have to work out that salvation in practical living. If once we start on the basis of His Redemption to do what He commands, we find that we can do it. If we fail, it is because we have not practised. The crisis will reveal whether we have been practising or not. If we obey the Spirit of God and practise in our physical life what God has put in us by His Spirit, then when the crisis comes, we shall find that our own nature as well as the grace of God will stand by us.

Thank God He does give us difficult things to do! His salvation is a glad thing, but it is also a heroic, holy thing. It tests us for all we are worth. Jesus is bringing many "sons unto glory," and God will not shield us from the requirements of a son. God's grace turns out men and women with a strong family likeness to Jesus Christ, not milksops. It takes a tremendous amount of discipline to live the noble life of a disciple of Jesus in actual things. It is always necessary to make an effort to be noble.

JULY 8

THE WILL TO LOYALTY

Choose you this day whom ye will serve. Joshua 24:15

Will is the whole man active. I cannot give up my will, I must exercise it. I must will to obey, and I must will to receive God's Spirit. When God gives a vision of truth it is never a question of what He will do, but of what we will do. The Lord has been putting before us all some big propositions, and the best thing to do is to remember what you did when you were touched by God before—the time when you were saved, or first saw Jesus, or realised some truth. It was easy then to yield allegiance to God; recall those moments now as the Spirit of God brings before you some new proposition.

"Choose you this day whom ye will serve." It is a deliberate calculation, not something into which you drift easily; and everything else is in abeyance until you decide. The proposition is between you and God; do not confer with flesh and blood about it. With every new proposition other people get more and more "out of it," that is where the strain comes. God allows the opinion of His saints to matter to you, and yet you are brought more and more out of the certainty that others understand the step you are taking. You have no business to find out where God is leading, the only thing God will explain to you is Himself.

Profess to Him—"I will be loyal." Immediately you choose to be loyal to Jesus Christ, you are a witness against yourself. Don't consult other Christians, but profess before Him—"I will serve Thee." Will to be loyal—and give other people credit for being loyal too.

JULY 9

THE GREAT PROBING

Ye cannot serve the LORD. Joshua 24:19

Have you the slightest reliance on any thing other than God? Is there a remnant of reliance left on any natural virtue, any set of circumstances? Are you relying on yourself in any particular in this new proposition which God has put before you? That is what the probing means. It is quite true to say—"I cannot live a holy life"; but you can decide to let Jesus Christ make you holy. "Ye cannot serve the Lord God"—but you can put yourself in the place where God's Almighty power will work through you. Are you sufficiently right with God to expect Him to manifest His wonderful life in you?

"Nay; but we will serve the LORD." It is not an impulse, but a deliberate commitment. You say—"But God can never have called me to this, I am too unworthy, it can't mean me." It does mean you, and the weaker and feebler you are, the better. The one who has something to trust in is the last one to come anywhere near saying—"I will serve the Lord."

We say—"If I really could believe!" The point is—If I really will believe. No wonder Jesus Christ lays such emphasis on the sin of unbelief. "And He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief." If we really believed that God meant what He said—what should we be like! Dare I really let God be to me all that He says He will be?

July 10

THE SPIRITUAL SLUGGARD

Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together. Hebrews 10:24–25

We are all capable of being spiritual sluggards; we do not want to mix with the rough and tumble of life as it is, our one object is to secure retirement. The note struck in Hebrews 10 is that of provoking one another and of keeping together—both of which require initiative, the initiative of Christ-realisation, not of self-realisation. To live a remote, retired, secluded life is the antipodes of spirituality as Jesus Christ taught it.

The test of our spirituality comes when we come up against injustice and meanness and ingratitude and turmoil, all of which have the tendency to make us spiritual sluggards. We want to use prayer and Bible reading for the purpose of retirement. We utilise God for the sake of getting peace and joy, that is, we do not want to realise Jesus Christ, but only our enjoyment of Him. This is the first step in the wrong direction. All these things are effects and we try to make them causes.

"I think it meet," said Peter, "... to stir you up by putting you in remembrance." It is a most disturbing thing to be smitten in the ribs by some provoker of God, by someone who is full of spiritual activity. Active work and spiritual activity are not the same thing. Active work may be the counterfeit of spiritual activity. The danger of spiritual sluggishness is that we do not wish to be stirred up, all we want to hear about is spiritual retirement. Jesus Christ never encourages the idea of retirement—"Go tell My brethren..."

JULY 11

THE SPIRITUAL SAINT

That I may know Him. Philippians 3:10

The initiative of the saint is not towards self-realisation, but towards knowing Jesus Christ. The spiritual saint never believes circumstances to be haphazard, or thinks of his life as secular and sacred; he sees everything he is dumped down in as the means of securing the knowledge of Jesus Christ. There is a reckless abandonment about him. The Holy Spirit is determined that we shall realise Jesus Christ in every domain of life, and He will bring us back to the same point again and again until we do. Self-realisation leads to the enthronement of work; whereas the saint enthrones Jesus Christ in his work. Whether it be eating or drinking or washing disciples' feet, whatever it is, we have to take the initiative of realising Jesus Christ in it. Every phase of our actual life has its counterpart in the life of Jesus. Our Lord realised His relationship to the Father even in the most menial work. "Jesus knowing . . . that He was come from God, and went to God; . . . took a towel, . . . and began to wash the disciples' feet."

The aim of the spiritual saint is "that I may know Him." Do I know Him where I am to-day? If not,

I am failing Him. I am here not to realise myself, but to know Jesus. In Christian work the initiative is too often the realisation that something has to be done and I must do it. That is never the attitude of the spiritual saint, his aim is to secure the realisation of Jesus Christ in every set of circumstances he is in.

JULY 12

THE SPIRITUAL SOCIETY

Till we all come . . . unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. Ephesians 4:13

Rehabilitation means the putting back of the whole human race into the relationship God designed it to be in, and this is what Jesus Christ did in Redemption. The Church ceases to be a spiritual society when it is on the look-out for the development of its own organisation. The rehabilitation of the human race on Jesus Christ's plan means the realisation of Jesus Christ in corporate life as well as in individual life. Jesus Christ sent apostles and teachers for this purpose—that the corporate Personality might be realised. We are not here to develop a spiritual life of our own, or to enjoy spiritual retirement; we are here so to realise Jesus Christ that the Body of Christ may be built up.

Am I building up the Body of Christ, or am I looking for my own personal development only? The essential thing is my personal relationship to Jesus Christ—"That I may know Him." To fulfil God's design means entire abandonment to him. Whenever I want things for myself, the relationship is distorted. It will be a big humiliation to realise that I have not been concerned about realising Jesus Christ, but only about realising what He has done for me.

My goal is God Himself, not joy nor peace, Nor even blessing, but Himself, my God.

Am I measuring my life by this standard or by anything less?

July 13

THE PRICE OF VISION

In the year that king Uzziah died, I saw also the Lord. Isaiah 6:1

Our soul's history with God is frequently the history of the passing of the hero. Over and over again God has to remove our friends in order to bring Himself in their place, and that is where we faint and fail and get discouraged. Take it personally: In the year that the one who stood to me for all that God was, died—I gave up everything? I became ill? I got disheartened? or—I saw the Lord?

My vision of God depends upon the state of my character. Character determines revelation. Before I can say "I saw also the Lord," there must be something corresponding to God in my character. Until I am born again and begin to see the Kingdom of God, I see along the line of my prejudices only; I need the surgical operation of external events and an internal purification.

It must be God first, God second, and God third, until the life is faced steadily with God and no one else is of any account whatever. "In all the world there is none but Thee, my God, there is none but Thee."

Keep paying the price. Let God see that you are willing to live up to the vision.

July 14

THE ACCOUNT WITH PERSECUTION

But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. Matthew 5:39, etc.

These verses reveal the humiliation of being a Christian. Naturally, if a man does not hit back, it is because he is a coward; but spiritually if a man does not hit back, it is a manifestation of the Son of God in him. When you are insulted, you must not only not resent it, but make it an occasion to exhibit the Son of God. You cannot imitate the disposition of Jesus; it is either there or it is not. To the saint personal insult becomes the occasion of revealing the incredible sweetness of the Lord Jesus.

The teaching of the Sermon on the Mount is not—Do your duty, but—Do what is not your duty. It is not your duty to go the second mile, to turn the other cheek, but Jesus says if we are His disciples, we shall always do these things. There will be no spirit of—"Oh well, I cannot do any more, I have been so misrepresented and misunderstood." Every time I insist upon my rights, I hurt the Son of God; whereas I can prevent Jesus from being hurt if I take the blow myself. That is the meaning of filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ. The disciple realises that it is his Lord's honour that is at stake in his life, not his own honour.

Never look for right in the other man, but never cease to be right yourself. We are always looking for justice; the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount is—Never look for justice, but never cease to give it.

JULY 15

THE POINT OF SPIRITUAL HONOUR

I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians. Romans 1:14

Paul was overwhelmed with the sense of his indebtedness to Jesus Christ, and he spent himself to express it. The great inspiration in Paul's life was his view of Jesus Christ as his spiritual creditor. Do I feel that sense of indebtedness to Christ in regard to every unsaved soul? The spiritual honour of my life as a saint is to fulfil my debt to Christ in relation to them. Every bit of my life that is of value I owe to the Redemption of Jesus Christ; am I doing anything to enable Him to bring His Redemption into actual manifestation in other lives? I can only do it as the Spirit of God works in me this sense of indebtedness. I am not to be a superior person amongst men, but a bondslave of the Lord Jesus. "Ye are not your own." Paul sold himself to Jesus Christ. He says—"I am a debtor to everyone on the face of the earth because of the Gospel of Jesus; I am free to be an absolute slave only." That is the characteristic of the life when once this point of spiritual honour is realised. Quit praying about yourself and be spent for others as the bondslave of Jesus. That is the meaning of being made broken bread and poured-out wine in reality.

JULY 16

THE NOTION OF DIVINE CONTROL

How much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him? Matthew 7:11

Jesus is laying down rules of conduct for those who have His Spirit. By the simple argument of these verses He urges us to keep our minds filled with the notion of God's control behind everything, which means that the disciple must maintain an attitude of perfect trust and an eagerness to ask and to seek.

Notion your mind with the idea that God is there. If once the mind is notioned along that line, then when you are in difficulties it is as easy as breathing to remember—Why, my Father knows all about it! It is not an effort, it comes naturally when perplexities press. Before, you used to go to this person and that, but now the notion of the Divine control is forming so powerfully in you that you go to God about it. Jesus is laying down the rules of conduct for those who have His Spirit, and it works on this principle—

God is my Father, He loves me, I shall never think of anything He will forget, why should I worry?

There are times, says Jesus, when God cannot lift the darkness from you, but trust Him. God will appear like an unkind friend, but He is not; He will appear like an unnatural Father, but He is not; He will appear like an unjust judge, but He is not. Keep the notion of the mind of God behind all things strong and growing. Nothing happens in any particular unless God's will is behind it, therefore you can rest in perfect confidence in Him. Prayer is not only asking, but an attitude of mind which produces the atmosphere in which asking is perfectly natural. "Ask, and it shall be given you."

July 17

THE MIRACLE OF BELIEF

My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words. 1 Corinthians 2:4

Paul was a scholar and an orator of the first rank; he is not speaking out of abject humility, but saying that he would veil the power of God if, when he preached the gospel, he impressed people with his "excellency of speech." Belief in Jesus is a miracle produced only by the efficacy of Redemption, not by impressiveness of speech, not by wooing and winning, but by the sheer unaided power of God. The creative power of the Redemption comes through the preaching of the Gospel, but never because of the personality of the preacher. The real fasting of the preacher is not from food, but rather from eloquence, from impressiveness and exquisite diction, from everything that might hinder the gospel of God being presented. The preacher is there as the representative of God—"as though God did beseech you by us." He is there to present the Gospel of God, not human ideals. If it is only because of my preaching that people desire to be better, they will never get anywhere near Jesus Christ. Anything that flatters me in my preaching of the Gospel will end in making me a traitor to Jesus; I prevent the creative power of His redemption from doing its work.

"I, if I be lifted up . . . , will draw all men unto Me."

JULY 18

THE MYSTERY OF BELIEVING

And he said, Who art Thou, Lord? Acts 9:5 (RV)

By the miracle of Redemption Saul of Tarsus was turned in one second from a strong-willed, intense Pharisee into a humble, devoted slave of the Lord Iesus.

There is nothing miraculous about the things we can explain. We command what we are able to explain, consequently it is natural to seek to explain. It is not natural to obey; nor is it necessarily sinful to disobey. There is no moral virtue in obedience unless there is a recognition of a higher authority in the one who dictates. It is possibly an emancipation to the other person if he does not obey. If one man says to another-"You must," and "You shall," he breaks the human spirit and unfits it for God. A man is a slave for obeying unless behind his obedience there is a recognition of a holy God. Many a soul begins to come to God when he flings off being religious, because there is only one Master of the human heart, and that is not religion but Jesus Christ. But woe be to me if when I see Him I say—"I will not." He will never insist that I do, but I have begun to sign the death-warrant of the Son of God in my soul. When I stand face to face with Jesus Christ and say—"I will not," He will never insist; but I am backing away from the re-creating power of His Redemption. It is a matter of indifference to God's grace how abominable I am if I come to the light; but woe be to me if I refuse the light (see John 3:19–21).

JULY 19

MASTERY OVER THE BELIEVER

Ye call Me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am. John 13:13

Our Lord never insists on having authority; He never says—"Thou shalt." He leaves us perfectly free—so free that we can spit in His face, as men did; so free that we can put Him to death, as men did; and He will never say a word. But when His life has been created in me by His Redemption, I instantly recognise His right to absolute authority over me. It is a moral domination—"Thou art worthy. . . . " It is only the unworthy in me that refuses to bow down to the worthy. If when I meet a man who is more holy than myself, I do not recognise his worthiness and obey what comes through him, it is a revelation of the unworthy in me. God educates us by means of people who are little better than we are, not intellectually, but "holily," until we get under the domination of the Lord Himself, and then the whole attitude of the life is one of obedience to Him.

If Our Lord insisted upon obedience He would become a taskmaster, and He would cease to have any authority. He never insists on obedience, but when we do see Him we obey Him instantly. He is easily Lord, and we live in adoration of Him from morning till night. The revelation of my growth in grace is the way in which I look upon obedience. We have to rescue the word "obedience" from the mire. Obedience is only possible between equals. It is the relationship between father and son, not between master and servant. "I and My Father are one." "Though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered." The Son's obedience was as Redeemer, because He was Son, not in order to be Son.

JULY 20

DEPENDENT ON GOD'S PRESENCE

They that wait upon the LORD . . . shall walk, and not faint. Isaiah 40:31

There is no thrill in walking; it is the test of all the stable qualities. To "walk and not faint" is the highest reach possible for strength. The word "walk" is used in the Bible to express the character—John, "looking upon Jesus as He walked," said, Behold the Lamb of God!" There is never anything abstract in the Bible, it is always vivid and real. God does not say—"Be spiritual," but—"Walk before Me."

When we are in an unhealthy state physically or emotionally, we always want thrills. In the physical domain this will lead to counterfeiting the Holy Ghost; in the emotional life it leads to inordinate affection and the destruction of morality; and in the spiritual domain if we insist on getting thrills, on mounting up with wings, it will end in the destruction of spirituality.

The reality of God's presence is not dependent on any place, but only dependent upon the determination to set the Lord always before us. Our problems come when we refuse to bank on the reality of His presence. The experience the Psalmist speaks of—"Therefore will we not fear, though . . ."—will be ours when once we are based on Reality; not the consciousness of God's presence but the reality of it—"Why, He has been here all the time."

At critical moments it is necessary to ask guidance, but it ought to be unnecessary to be saying always—"Oh Lord, direct me here, and there." Of course He will! If our commonsense decisions are not God's order, He will press through them and check; then we must be quiet and wait for the direction of His presence.

JULY 21

THE GATEWAY TO THE KINGDOM

Blessed are the poor in spirit. Matthew 5:3

Beware of placing Our Lord as a Teacher first. If Jesus Christ is a Teacher only, then all He can do is to tantalise me by erecting a standard I cannot attain. What is the use of presenting me with an ideal I cannot possibly come near? I am happier without knowing it. What is the good of telling me to be what I never can be—to be pure in heart, to do more than my duty, to be perfectly devoted to God? I must know Jesus Christ as Saviour before His teaching has any meaning for me other than that of an ideal which leads to despair. But when I am born again of the Spirit of God, I know that Jesus Christ did not come to teach only: He came to make me what He teaches I should be. The Redemption means that Jesus Christ can put into any man the disposition that ruled His own life, and all the standards God gives are based on that disposition.

The teaching of the Sermon on the Mount produces despair in the natural man—the very thing Jesus means it to do. As long as we have a selfrighteous, conceited notion that we can carry out Our Lord's teaching, God will allow us to go on until we break our ignorance over some obstacle, then we are willing to come to Him as paupers and receive from Him. "Blessed are the paupers in spirit," that is the first principle in the kingdom of God. The bedrock in Jesus Christ's kingdom is poverty, not possession; not decisions for Jesus Christ, but a sense of absolute futility—"I cannot begin to do it." Then Jesus says—"Blessed are you." That is the entrance, and it does take us a long while to believe we are poor! The knowledge of our own poverty brings us on to the moral frontier where Jesus Christ works.

JULY 22

SANCTIFICATION

This is the will of God, even your sanctification. 1 Thessalonians 4:3

The Death Side

In sanctification God has to deal with us on the death side as well as on the life side. Many of us spend so much time in the place of death that we get sepulchral. There is always a battle royal before sanctification, always something that tugs with resentment against the demands of Jesus Christ. Immediately the Spirit of God begins to show us what sanctification means, the struggle begins. "If any man come to Me, and hate not . . . his own life, he cannot be My disciple."

The Spirit of God in the process of sanctification will strip me until I am nothing but "myself," that is the place of death. Am I willing to be "myself," and nothing more—no friends, no father, no brother, no self-interest, simply ready for death? That is the condition of sanctification. No wonder Jesus said: "I came not to send peace, but a sword." This is where the battle comes, and where so many of us faint. We refuse to be identified with the death of Jesus on this point. "But it is so stern," we say; "He cannot wish me to do that." Our Lord is stern; and He does wish me to do that.

Am I willing to reduce myself simply to "me," determinedly to strip myself of all my friends think of me, of all I think of myself, and to hand that simple naked self over to God? Immediately I am, He will sanctify me wholly, and my life will be free from earnestness in connection with everything but God.

When I pray—"Lord, show me what sanctification means for me," He will show me. It means being made one with Jesus. Sanctification is not something Jesus Christ puts into me: it is Himself in me.

JULY 23

SANCTIFICATION

Of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us . . . sanctification. 1 Corinthians 1:30

The Life Side

The mystery of sanctification is that the perfections of Jesus Christ are imparted to me, not gradually, but instantly when by faith I enter into the realisation that Jesus Christ is made unto me sanctification. Sanctification does not mean anything less than the holiness of Jesus being made mine manifestly.

The one marvellous secret of a holy life lies not in imitating Jesus, but in letting the perfections of Jesus manifest themselves in my mortal flesh. Sanctification is "Christ in you." It is His wonderful life that is imparted to me in sanctification, and imparted by faith as a sovereign gift of God's grace. Am I willing for God to make sanctification as real in me as it is in His word?

Sanctification means the impartation of the holy qualities of Jesus Christ. It is His patience, His love, His holiness, His faith, His purity, His godliness, that is manifested in and through every sanctified soul. Sanctification is not drawing from Jesus the power to be holy; it is drawing from Jesus the holiness that was manifested in Him, and He manifests it in me. Sanctification is an impartation, not an imitation. Imitation is on a different line. In Jesus Christ is the perfection of everything, and the mystery of sanctification is that all the perfections of Jesus are at my disposal, and slowly and surely I begin to live a life of ineffable order and sanity and holiness "Kept by the power of God."

July 24

DISPOSITION AND DEEDS

Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven. Matthew 5:20

The characteristic of a disciple is not that he does good things, but that he is good in motive because he has been made good by the supernatural grace of God. The only thing that exceeds right doing is right being. Jesus Christ came to put into any man who would let Him a new heredity which would exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees. Jesus says—"If you are My disciple you must be right not only in your living, but in your motives, in your dreams, in the recesses of your mind." You must be so pure in your motives that God Almighty can see nothing to censure. Who can stand in the Eternal Light of God and have nothing for God to censure? Only the Son of God, and Jesus Christ claims that by His Redemption He can put into any man His own disposition, and make him as unsullied and as simple as a child. The purity which God demands is impossible unless I can be re-made within, and this is what Jesus has undertaken to do by His Redemption.

No man can make himself pure by obeying laws. Jesus Christ does not give us rules and regulations; His teachings are truths that can only be interpreted by the disposition He puts in. The great marvel of Jesus Christ's salvation is that He alters heredity. He does not alter human nature; He alters its mainspring.

JULY 25

AM I BLESSED LIKE THIS?

Blessed are . . . Matthew 5:3-10

When we first read the statements of Jesus they seem wonderfully simple and unstartling, and they sink unobserved into our unconscious minds. For instance, the Beatitudes seem merely mild and beautiful precepts for all unworldly and useless people, but of very little practical use in the stern workaday world in which we live. We soon find, however, that the Beatitudes contain the dynamite of the Holy Ghost. They explode, as it were, when the circumstances of our lives cause them to do so. When the Holy Spirit brings to our remembrance one of these Beatitudes we say-"What a startling statement that is!" and we have to decide whether we will accept the tremendous spiritual upheaval that will be produced in our circumstances if we obey His words. That is the way the Spirit of God works. We do not need to be born again to apply the Sermon on the Mount literally. The literal interpretation of the Sermon on the Mount is child's play; the interpretation by the Spirit of God as He applies Our Lord's statements to our circumstances is the stern work of a saint.

The teaching of Jesus is out of all proportion to our natural way of looking at things, and it comes with astonishing discomfort to begin with. We have slowly to form our walk and conversation on the line of the precepts of Jesus Christ as the Holy Spirit applies them to our circumstances. The Sermon on the Mount is not a set of rules and regulations: it is a statement of the life we will live when the Holy Spirit is getting His way with us.

July 26

THE ACCOUNT WITH PURITY

Out of the heart proceed . . . Matthew 15:18–20

We begin by trusting our ignorance and calling it innocence, by trusting our innocence and calling it purity; and when we hear these rugged statements of Our Lord's, we shrink and say—"But I never felt any of those awful things in my heart." We resent what Jesus Christ reveals. Either Jesus Christ is the supreme Authority on the human heart, or He is not worth paying any attention to. Am I prepared to trust His penetration, or do I prefer to trust my innocent ignorance? If I make conscious innocence the test, I am likely to come to a place where I find with a shuddering awakening that what Jesus Christ said is true, and I shall be appalled at the possibility of evil and wrong in me. As long as I remain under the refuge of innocence, I am living in a fool's paradise. If I have never been a blackguard, the reason is a mixture of cowardice and the protection of civilised life; but when I am undressed before God, I find that Jesus Christ is right in His diagnosis.

The only thing that safeguards is the Redemption of Jesus Christ. If I will hand myself over to Him, I need never experience the terrible possibilities that are in my heart. Purity is too deep down for me to get to naturally: but when the Holy Spirit comes in, He brings into the centre of my personal life the very Spirit that was manifested in the life of Jesus Christ, viz., Holy Spirit, which is unsullied purity.

THE WAY TO KNOW

If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine. . . . John 7:17

The golden rule for understanding spiritually is not intellect, but obedience. If a man wants scientific knowledge, intellectual curiosity is his guide; but if he wants insight into what Jesus Christ teaches, he can only get it by obedience. If things are dark to me, then I may be sure there is something I will not do. Intellectual darkness comes through ignorance; spiritual darkness comes because of something I do not intend to obey.

No man ever receives a word from God without instantly being put to the test over it. We disobey and then wonder why we don't go on spiritually. "If when you come to the altar," said Jesus, "there you remember your brother hath ought against you . . . don't say another word to Me, but first go and put that thing right." The teaching of Jesus hits us where we live. We cannot stand as humbugs before Him for one second. He educates us down to the scruple. The Spirit of God unearths the spirit of self-vindication; He makes us sensitive to things we never thought of before.

When Jesus brings a thing home by His word, don't shirk it. If you do, you will become a religious humbug. Watch the things you shrug your shoulders over, and you will know why you do not go on spiritually. First go—at the risk of being thought fanatical you must obey what God tells you.

July 28

AFTER OBEDIENCE—WHAT?

And straightway He constrained His disciples to get into the ship, and to go to the other side. . . . Mark 6:45; see verses 45–52

We are apt to imagine that if Jesus Christ constrains us, and we obey Him, He will lead us to great success. We must never put our dreams of success as God's purpose for us; His purpose may be exactly the opposite. We have an idea that God is leading us to a particular end, a desired goal; He is not. The question of getting to a particular end is a mere incident. What we call the process, God calls the end.

What is my dream of God's purpose? His purpose is that I depend on Him and on His power now. If I can stay in the middle of the turmoil calm and unperplexed, that is the end of the purpose of God. God is not working towards a particular finish; His end is the process—that I see Him walking on the waves, no shore in sight, no success, no goal, just the absolute certainty that it is all right because I see Him walking on the sea. It is the process, not the end, which is glorifying to God.

God's training is for now, not presently. His purpose is for this minute, not for something in the future. We have nothing to do with the afterwards of obedience; we get wrong when we think of the afterwards. What men call training and preparation, God calls the end.

God's end is to enable me to see that He can walk on the chaos of my life just now. If we have a further end in view, we do not pay sufficient attention to the immediate present; but if we realise that obedience is the end, then each moment as it comes is precious.

JULY 29

WHAT DO YOU SEE IN YOUR CLOUDS?

Behold, He cometh with clouds. Revelation 1:7

In the Bible clouds are always connected with God. Clouds are those sorrows or sufferings or providences, within or without our personal lives, which seem to dispute the rule of God. It is by those very clouds that the Spirit of God is teaching us how to walk by faith. If there were no clouds, we should have no faith. The clouds are but the dust of our Father's feet. The clouds are a sign that He is there. What a revelation it is to know that sorrow and bereavement and suffering are the clouds that come along with God! God cannot come near without clouds, He does not come in clear shining.

It is not true to say that God wants to teach us something in our trials; through every cloud He brings, He wants us to unlearn something. God's purpose in the cloud is to simplify our belief until our relationship to Him is exactly that of a child—God and my own soul, other people are shadows. Until other people become shadows, clouds and darkness will be mine every now and again. Is the relationship between myself and God getting simpler than ever it has been?

There is a connection between the strange providences of God and what we know of Him, and we have to learn to interpret the mysteries of life in the light of our knowledge of God. Unless we can look the darkest, blackest fact full in the face without damaging God's character, we do not yet know Him.

"They feared as they entered the cloud. . . ." Is there anyone "save Jesus only" in your cloud? If so, it will get darker; you must get to the place where there is "no one any more save Jesus only."

JULY 30

THE DISCIPLINE OF DISILLUSIONMENT

Jesus did not commit Himself unto them . . . for He knew what was in man. John 2:24–25

Disillusionment means that there are no more false judgements in life. To be undeceived by disillusionment may leave us cynical and unkindly severe in our judgement of others, but the disillusionment which comes from God brings us to the place where we see men and women as they really are, and yet there is no cynicism, we have no stinging, bitter things to say. Many of the cruel things in life spring from the fact that we suffer from illusions. We are not true to one another as facts; we are true only to our ideas of one another. Everything is either delightful and fine, or mean and dastardly, according to our idea.

The refusal to be disillusioned is the cause of much of the suffering in human life. It works in this way—if we love a human being and do not love God, we demand of him every perfection and every rectitude, and when we do not get it we become cruel and vindictive; we are demanding of a human being what he or she cannot give. There is only one Being Who can satisfy the last aching abyss of the human heart, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ. Why Our Lord is apparently so severe regarding every human relationship is because He knows that every relationship not based on loyalty to Himself will end in disaster. Our Lord trusted no man, yet He was never suspicious, never bitter. Our Lord's confidence in God and in what His grace could do for any man was so perfect that He despaired of no one. If our trust is placed in human beings, we shall end in despairing of everyone.

July 31

TILL YOU ARE ENTIRELY HIS

Let your endurance be a finished product, so that you may be finished and complete, with never a defect. James 1:4 (MOFFATT)

Many of us are all right in the main, but there are some domains in which we are slovenly. It is not a question of sin, but of the remnants of the carnal life which are apt to make us slovenly. Slovenliness is an insult to the Holy Ghost. There should be nothing slovenly, whether it be in the way we eat and drink, or in the way we worship God.

Not only must our relationship to God be right, but the external expression of that relationship must be right. Ultimately God will let nothing escape, every detail is under His scrutiny. In numberless ways God will bring us back to the same point over and over again. He never tires of bringing us to the one point until we learn the lesson, because He is producing the finished product. It may be a question of impulse, and again and again, with the most persistent patience, God has brought us back to the one particular point; or it may be mental wool-gathering, or independent individuality. God is trying to impress upon us the one thing that is not entirely right.

We have been having a wonderful time this Session¹⁹ over the revelation of God's Redemption, our hearts are perfect towards Him; His wonderful work in us makes us know that in the main we are right with Him; now, says the Spirit, through St. James, "Let your endurance be a finished product." Watch the slipshod bits—"Oh, that will have to do for now." Whatever it is, God will point it out with persistence until we are entirely His.

SOMETHING MORE ABOUT HIS WAYS

He Comes Where He Commands Us to Leave

When Jesus had made an end of commanding His twelve disciples, He departed thence to teach and to preach in their cities. (Matthew 11:1)

If when God said "Go," you stayed, because you were so concerned about your people at home, you robbed them of the teaching and preaching of Jesus Christ Himself. When you obeyed and left all consequences to God, the Lord went into your city to teach; as long as you would not obey, you were in the way. Watch where you begin to debate and to put what you call duty in competition with your Lord's commands. "I know God told me to go, but then my duty was here"; that means you do not believe that Jesus means what He says.

He Teaches Where He Instructs Us Not To Master, . . . let us make three tabernacles.

Are we playing the spiritual amateur providence in other lives? Are we so noisy in our instruction of others that God cannot get anywhere near them? We have to keep our mouths shut and our spirits alert. God wants to instruct us in regard to His Son, He wants to turn our times of prayer into mounts of transfiguration, and we will not let Him. When we are certain of the way God is going to work, He will never work in that way any more.

He Works Where He Sends Us to Wait

Tarry ye . . . until . . .

Wait on God and He will work, but don't wait in spiritual sulks because you cannot see an inch in front of you! Are we detached enough from our own spiritual hysterics to wait on God? To wait is not to sit with folded hands, but to learn to do what we are told.

These are phases of His ways we rarely recognise.

AUGUST 2

THE DISCIPLINE OF DIFFICULTY

In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world. John 16:33

An average view of the Christian life is that it means deliverance from trouble. It is deliverance in trouble, which is very different. "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High . . . there shall no evil befall thee"—no plague can come nigh the place where you are at one with God.

If you are a child of God, there certainly will be troubles to meet, but Jesus says do not be surprised when they come. "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world," there is nothing for you to fear. Men who before they were saved would scorn to talk about troubles, often become "fushionless" after being born again because they have a wrong idea of a saint. God does not give us overcoming life: He gives us life as we overcome. The strain is the strength. If there is no strain, there is no strength. Are you asking God to give you life and liberty and joy? He cannot, unless you will accept the strain. Immediately you face the strain, you will get the strength.

^{19.} this Session: talk given at BTC devotional hour, June 23, 1915.

^{20.} fushionless: insipid; lacking energy; mentally or spiritually dull.

Overcome your own timidity and take the step, and God will give you to eat of the tree of life and you will get nourishment. If you spend yourself out physically, you become exhausted; but spend yourself spiritually, and you get more strength. God never gives strength for tomorrow, or for the next hour, but only for the strain of the minute. The temptation is to face difficulties from a commonsense standpoint. The saint is hilarious when he is crushed with difficulties because the thing is so ludicrously impossible to anyone but God.

August 3

THE BIG COMPELLING OF GOD

Behold, we go up to Jerusalem. Luke 18:31

Jerusalem stands in the life of Our Lord as the place where He reached the climax of His Father's will. "I seek not Mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent Me." That was the one dominating interest all through Our Lord's life, and the things He met with on the way, joy or sorrow, success or failure, never deterred Him from His purpose. "He steadfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem."

The great thing to remember is that we go up to Jerusalem to fulfil God's purpose, not our own. Naturally, our ambitions are our own; in the Christian life we have no aim of our own. There is so much said to-day about our decisions for Christ, our determination to be Christians, our decisions for this and that, but in the New Testament it is the aspect of God's compelling that is brought out. "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you." We are not taken up into conscious agreement with God's purpose, we are taken up into God's purpose without any consciousness at all. We have no conception of what God is aiming at, and as we go on it gets more and more vague. God's aim looks like missing the mark because we are too short-sighted to see what He is aiming at. At the beginning of the Christian life we have our own ideas as to what God's purpose is—"I am meant to go here or there"; "God has called me to do this special work"; and we go and do the thing, and still the big compelling of God remains. The work we do is of no account, it is so much scaffolding compared with the big compelling of God. "He took unto Him the twelve," He takes us all the time. There is more than we have got at as yet.

AUGUST 4

THE BRAVE COMRADESHIP OF GOD

Then He took unto Him the twelve. Luke 18:31

The bravery of God in trusting us! You say—"But He has been unwise to choose me, because there is nothing in me; I am not of any value." That is why He chose you. As long as you think there is something in you, God cannot choose you because you have ends of your own to serve; but if you have let Him bring you to the end of your self-sufficiency, then He can choose you to go with Him to Jerusalem, and that will mean the fulfilment of purposes which He does not discuss with you.

We are apt to say that because a man has natural ability, therefore he will make a good Christian. It is not a question of our equipment but of our poverty; not of what we bring with us, but of what God puts into us; not a question of natural virtues, of strength of character, knowledge, and experience—all that is of no avail in this matter. The only thing that avails is that we are taken up into the big compelling of God and made His comrades (cf. 1 Corinthians 1:26-30). The comradeship of God is made up out of men who know their poverty. He can do nothing with the man who thinks that he is of use to God. As Christians we are not out for our own cause at all, we are out for the cause of God, which can never be our cause. We do not know what God is after, but we have to maintain our relationship with Him whatever happens. We must never allow anything to injure our relationship with God; if it does get injured, we must take time and get it put right. The main thing about Christianity is not the work we do, but the relationship we maintain and the atmosphere produced by that relationship. That is all God asks us to look after, and it is the one thing that is being continually assailed.

August 5

THE BAFFLING CALL OF GOD

And all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished. . . . And they understood none of these things. Luke 18:31, 34

God called Jesus Christ to what seemed unmitigated disaster. Jesus Christ called His disciples to see Him put to death; He led every one of them to the place where their hearts were broken. Jesus Christ's life was an absolute failure from every standpoint but God's. But what seemed failure from man's standpoint was a tremendous triumph from God's, because God's purpose is never man's purpose.

There comes the baffling call of God in our lives also. The call of God can never be stated explicitly; it is implicit. The call of God is like the call of the sea, no one hears it but the one who has the nature of the sea in him. It cannot be stated definitely what the call of God is to, because His call is to be in comradeship with Himself for His own purpose, and the test is to believe that God knows what He is after. The things that happen do not happen by chance, they happen entirely in the decree of God. God is working out His purposes.

If we are in communion with God and recognise that He is taking us into His purposes, we shall no longer try to find out what His purposes are. As we go on in the Christian life it gets simpler, because we are less inclined to say—"Now why did God allow this and that?" Behind the whole thing lies the compelling of God. "There's a divinity that shapes our ends." A Christian is one who trusts the wits and the wisdom of God, and not his own wits. If we have a purpose of our own, it destroys the simplicity and the leisureliness which ought to characterise the children of God.

August 6

THE CROSS IN PRAYER

At that day ye shall ask in My name. John 16:26

We are too much given to thinking of the Cross as something we have to get through; we get through it only in order to get into it. The Cross stands for one thing only for us—a complete and entire and absolute identification with the Lord Jesus Christ, and there is nothing in which this identification is realised more than in prayer.

"Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him." Then why ask? The idea of prayer is not in order to get answers from God; prayer is perfect and complete oneness with God. If we pray because we want answers, we will get huffed with God. The answers come every time, but not always in the way we expect, and our spiritual huff shows a refusal to identify ourselves with Our Lord in prayer. We are not here to prove God answers prayer; we are here to be living monuments of God's grace.

"I say not that I will pray the Father for you: for the Father Himself loveth you." Have you reached such an intimacy with God that the Lord Jesus Christ's life of prayer is the only explanation of your life of prayer? Has Our Lord's vicarious life become your vital life? "At that day" you will be so identified with Jesus that there will be no distinction. When prayer seems to be unanswered, beware of trying to fix the blame on someone else. That is always a snare of Satan. You will find there is a reason which is a deep instruction to you, not to anyone else.

August 7

PRAYER IN THE FATHER'S HOUSE

Wist ye not that I must be in My Father's house? Luke 2:49 (RV)

Our Lord's childhood was not immature manhood: our Lord's childhood is an eternal fact. Am I a holy innocent child of God by identification with my Lord and Saviour? Do I look upon life as being in my Father's house? Is the Son of God living in His Father's house in me?

The abiding Reality is God, and His order comes through the moments. Am I always in contact with Reality, or do I only pray when things have gone wrong, when there is a disturbance in the moments of my life? I have to learn to identify myself with my Lord in holy communion in ways some of us have not begun to learn as yet. "I must be about My Father's business" (KJV)—live the moments in My Father's house.

Narrow it down to your individual circumstances—are you so identified with the Lord's life that you are simply a child of God, continually talking to Him and realising that all things come from His hands? Is the Eternal Child in you living in the Father's house? Are the graces of His ministering life working out through you in your home, in your business, in your domestic circle? Have you been wondering why you are going through the things you are? It is not that you have to go through them, it is because of the relation into which the Son of God has come in His Father's providence in your particular sainthood. Let Him have His way, keep in perfect union with Him.

The vicarious life of your Lord is to become your vital simple life; the way He worked and lived among men must be the way He lives in you.

August 8

PRAYER IN THE FATHER'S HONOUR

That holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God. Luke 1:35

If the Son of God is born into my mortal flesh, is His holy innocence and simplicity and oneness with the Father getting a chance to manifest itself in me? What was true of the Virgin Mary in the historic introduction of God's Son into this earth is true in every saint. The Son of God is born into me by the direct act of God; then I as a child of God have to exercise the right of a child, the right of being always face to face with my Father. Am I continually saying with amazement to my commonsense life—"Why do you want to turn me off here? Don't you know that I must be about my Father's business?" Whatever the circumstances may be, that Holy, Innocent, Eternal Child must be in contact with His Father.

Am I simple enough to identify myself with my Lord in this way? Is He getting His wonderful way in me? Is God realising that His Son is formed in me, or have I carefully put Him on one side? Oh the clamour of these days! Everyone is clamouring—for what? For the Son of God to be put to death. There is no room here for the Son of God just now, no room for quiet holy communion with the Father.

Is the Son of God praying in me or am I dictating to Him? Is He ministering in me as He did in the days of His flesh? Is the Son of God in me going through His passion for His own purposes? The more one knows of the inner life of God's ripest saints, the more one sees what God's purpose is—filling up "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ." There is always something to be done in the sense of "filling up."

August 9

PRAYER IN THE FATHER'S HEARING

Father, I thank Thee that thou hast heard Me. John 11:41

When the Son of God prays, He has only one consciousness, and that consciousness is of His Father. God always hears the prayers of His Son, and if the Son of God is formed in me the Father will always hear my prayers. I have to see that the Son of God is manifested in my mortal flesh. "Your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost," the "Bethlehem" of the Son of God. Is the Son of God getting His chance in me? Is the direct simplicity of the life of God's Son being worked out exactly as it was worked out in His historic life? When I come in contact with the occurrences of life as an ordinary human being, is the prayer of God's Eternal Son to His Father being prayed in me? "In that day ye shall ask in My name ..." (RV). What day? The day when the Holy Ghost has come to me and made me effectually one with my Lord.

Is the Lord Jesus Christ being abundantly satisfied in your life or have you got a spiritual "strut" on? Never let common sense obtrude and push the Son of God on one side. Common sense is a gift which God gave to human nature; but common sense is not the gift of His Son. Supernatural sense is the gift of His Son; never enthrone common sense. The Son detects the Father; common sense never yet detected the Father and never will. Our ordinary wits never worship God unless they are transfigured by the indwelling Son of God. We have to see that this mortal flesh is kept in perfect subjection to Him and that He works through it moment by moment. Are we living in such human dependence upon Jesus Christ that His life is being "manifested in our mortal flesh" (RV)?

August 10

THE SACRAMENT OF THE SAINT

Let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to Him in well-doing. 1 Peter 4:19

To choose to suffer means that there is something wrong; to choose God's will even if it means suffering is a very different thing. No healthy saint ever chooses suffering; he chooses God's will, as Jesus did, whether it means suffering or not. No saint dare interfere with the discipline of suffering in another saint.

The saint who satisfies the heart of Jesus will make other saints strong and mature for God. The people who do us good are never those who sympathise with us, they always hinder, because sympathy enervates. No one understands a saint but the saint who is nearest to the Saviour. If we accept the sympathy of a saint, the reflex feeling is—"Well, God is dealing hardly with me." That is why Jesus said self-pity was of the devil (see Matthew 16:23). Be merciful to God's reputation. It is easy to blacken God's character because God never answers back, He never vindicates Himself. Beware of the thought that Jesus needed sympathy in His earthly life; He refused sympathy from man because He knew far too wisely that no one on earth understood what He was after. He took sympathy from His Father only, and from the angels in heaven. (Cf. Luke 15:10.)

Notice God's unutterable waste of saints. According to the judgement of the world, God plants His saints in the most useless places. We say—"God intends me to be here because I am so useful." God puts His saints where they will glorify Him, and we are no judges at all of where that is.

THIS EXPERIENCE MUST COME

And he saw him no more. 2 Kings 2:12

It is not wrong to depend upon Elijah as long as God gives him to you, but remember the time will come when he will have to go; when he stands no more to you as your guide and leader, because God does not intend he should. You say—"I cannot go on without Elijah." God says you must.

Alone at your Jordan (2 Kings 2:14). Jordan is the type of separation where there is no fellowship with anyone else, and where no one can take the responsibility for you. You have to put to the test now what you learned when you were with your Elijah. You have been to Jordan over and over again with Elijah, but now you are up against it alone. It is no use saying you cannot go; this experience has come, and you must go. If you want to know whether God is the God you have faith to believe Him to be, then go through your Jordan alone.

Alone at your Jericho (v. 15). Jericho is the place where you have seen your Elijah do great things. When you come to your Jericho you have a strong disinclination to take the initiative and trust in God, you want someone else to take it for you. If you remain true to what you learned with Elijah, you will get the sign that God is with you.

Alone at your Bethel (v. 23). At your Bethel you will find yourself at your wits' end and at the beginning of God's wisdom. When you get to your wits' end and feel inclined to succumb to panic, don't; stand true to God and He will bring His truth out in a way that will make your life a sacrament. Put into practice what you learned with your Elijah, use his cloak and pray. Determine to trust in God and do not look for Elijah any more.

August 12

THE THEOLOGY OF REST

Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Matthew 8:26

When we are in fear we can do nothing less than pray to God, but Our Lord has a right to expect that those who name His Name should have an understanding confidence in Him. God expects His children to be so confident in Him that in any crisis they are the reliable ones. Our trust is in God up to a certain point, then we go back to the elementary panic prayers of those who do not know God. We get to our wits' end, showing that we have not the slightest confidence in Him and His government of the world; He seems to be asleep, and we see nothing but breakers ahead.

"O ye of little faith"! What a pang must have shot through the disciples—"Missed it again!" And what a pang will go through us when we suddenly realise that we might have produced downright joy in the heart of Jesus by remaining absolutely confident in Him, no matter what was ahead.

There are stages in life when there is no storm, no crisis, when we do our human best; it is when a crisis arises that we instantly reveal upon whom we rely. If we have been learning to worship God and to trust Him, the crisis will reveal that we will go to the breaking point and not break in our confidence in Him.

We have been talking a great deal about sanctification—what is it all going to amount to? It should work out into rest in God which means oneness with God, a oneness which will make us not only blameless in His sight but a deep joy to Him.

AUGUST 13

QUENCH NOT THE SPIRIT

Quench not the spirit. 1 Thessalonians 5:19

The voice of the Spirit is as gentle as a zephyr, so gentle that unless you are living in perfect communion with God, you never hear it. The checks of the Spirit come in the most extraordinarily gentle ways, and if you are not sensitive enough to detect His voice you will quench it, and your personal spiritual life will be impaired. His checks always come as a still small voice, so small that no one but the saint notices them.

Beware if in personal testimony you have to hark back and say—"Once, so many years ago, I was saved." If you are walking in the light, there is no harking back, the past is transfused into the present wonder of communion with God. If you get out of the light you become a sentimental Christian and live on memories, your testimony has a hard, metallic note. Beware of trying to patch up a present refusal to walk in the light by recalling past experiences when you did walk in the light. Whenever the Spirit checks, call a halt and get the thing right, or you will go on grieving Him without knowing it.

Suppose God has brought you up to a crisis and you nearly go through but not quite, He will engineer the crisis again, but it will not be so keen as it was before. There will be less discernment of God and more humiliation at not having obeyed; and if you go on grieving the Spirit, there will come a time when that crisis cannot be repeated, you have grieved Him away. But if you go through the crisis, there will be the psalm of praise to God. Never sympathise with the thing that is stabbing God all the time. God has to hurt the thing that must go.

August 14

CHASTENING

Despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of Him. Hebrews 12:5

It is very easy to quench the Spirit; we do it by despising the chastening of the Lord, by fainting when we are rebuked by Him. If we have only a shallow experience of sanctification, we mistake the shadow for the reality, and when the Spirit of God begins to check, we say—"Oh, that must be the devil."

Never quench the Spirit, and do not despise Him when He says to you—"Don't be blind on this point any more; you are not where you thought you were. Up to the present, I have not been able to reveal it to you, but I reveal it now." When the Lord chastens you like that, let Him have His way. Let Him relate you rightly to God.

"Nor faint when thou art rebuked of Him." We get into sulks with God and say—"Oh well, I can't help it; I did pray and things did not turn out right, and I am going to give it all up." Think what would happen if we talked like this in any other domain of life!

Am I prepared to let God grip me by His power and do a work in me that is worthy of Himself? Sanctification is not my idea of what I want God to do for me; sanctification is God's idea of what He wants to do for me, and He has to get me into the attitude of mind and spirit where at any cost I will let Him sanctify me wholly.

August 15

SIGNS OF THE NEW BIRTH

Ye must be born again. John 3:7

The answer to the question "How can a man be born when he is old?" is—When he is old enough to die—to die right out to his "rag rights," to his virtues, to his religion, to everything, and to receive into himself the life which never was there before. The new life manifests itself in conscious repentance and unconscious holiness.

"As many as received Him" (John 1:12). Is my knowledge of Jesus born of internal spiritual perception, or is it only what I have learned by listening to others? Have I something in my life that connects me with the Lord Jesus as my personal Saviour? All spiritual history must have a personal knowledge for its bedrock. To be born again means that I see Jesus.

"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:3). Do I seek for signs of the Kingdom, or do I perceive God's rule? The new birth gives a new power of vision whereby I begin to discern God's rule. His rule was there all the time, but true to His nature; now that I have received His nature, I can see His rule.

"Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin" (1 John 3:9). Do I seek to stop sinning or have I stopped sinning? To be born of God means that I have the supernatural power of God to stop sinning. In the Bible it is never—Should a Christian sin? The Bible puts it emphatically—A Christian must not sin. The effective working of the new birth life in us is that we do not commit sin, not merely that we have the power not to sin, but that we have stopped sinning. First John 3:9 does not mean that we cannot sin; it means that if we obey the life of God in us, we need not sin.

DOES HE KNOW ME?

He calleth . . . by name. John 10:3

When I have sadly misunderstood Him? (John 20:17). It is possible to know all about doctrine and yet not know Jesus. The soul is in danger when knowledge of doctrine outsteps intimate touch with Jesus. Why was Mary weeping? Doctrine was no more to Mary than the grass under her feet. Any Pharisee could have made a fool of Mary doctrinally, but one thing they could not ridicule out of her was the fact that Jesus had cast seven demons out of her; yet His blessings were nothing in comparison to Himself. Mary "saw Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus"; immediately she heard the voice, she knew she had a past history with the One who spoke. "Master"!

When I have stubbornly doubted? (John 20:27). Have I been doubting something about Jesus—an experience to which others testify but which I have not had? The other disciples told Thomas that they had seen Jesus, but Thomas doubted—"Except I shall see . . . , I will not believe." Thomas needed the personal touch of Jesus. When His touches come, or how they come, we do not know; but when they do come they are indescribably precious. "My Lord and my God"!

When I have selfishly denied Him? (John 21:15–17). Peter had denied Jesus Christ with oaths and curses, and yet after the Resurrection Jesus appeared to Peter alone. He restored him in private, then He restored him before the others. "Lord, Thou knowest that I love Thee."

Have I a personal history with Jesus Christ? The one sign of discipleship is intimate connection with Him, a knowledge of Jesus Christ which nothing can shake.

August 17

ARE YOU DISCOURAGED IN DEVOTION?

Yet lackest thou one thing; sell all that thou hast . . . and come, follow Me. Luke 18:22

"And when he heard this . . ." Have you ever heard the Master say a hard word? If you have not, I question whether you have heard Him say anything. Jesus Christ says a great deal that we listen to, but do not hear; when we do hear, His words are amazingly hard.

Jesus did not seem in the least solicitous that this man should do what He told him, He made no attempt to keep him with Him. He simply said—"Sell all you have, and come, follow Me." Our Lord never pleaded, He never cajoled, He never entrapped; He simply spoke the sternest words mortal ears ever listened to, and then left it alone.

Have I ever heard Jesus say a hard word? Has He said something personally to me to which I have deliberately listened? Not something I can expound or say this and that about, but something I have heard Him say to me? This man did understand what Jesus said, he heard it and he sized up what it meant, and it broke his heart. He did not go away defiant; he went away sorrowful, thoroughly discouraged. He had come to Jesus full of the fire of earnest desire, and the word of Jesus simply froze him; instead of producing an enthusiastic devotion, it produced a heart-breaking discouragement. And Jesus did not go after him, He let him go. Our Lord knows perfectly that when once His word is heard, it will bear fruit sooner or later. The terrible thing is that some of us prevent it bearing fruit in actual life. I wonder what we will say when we do make up our minds to be devoted to Him on that particular point? One thing is certain, He will never cast anything up at us.

August 18

HAVE YOU EVER BEEN EXPRESSIONLESS WITH SORROW?

And when he heard this, he was very sorrowful: for he was very rich. Luke 18:23

The rich young ruler went away expressionless with sorrow; he had not a word to say. He had no doubt as to what Jesus said, no debate as to what it meant, and it produced in him a sorrow that had not any words. Have you ever been there? Has God's word come to you about something you are very rich in—temperament, personal affinity, relationships of heart and mind? Then you have often been expressionless with sorrow. The Lord will not go after you, He will not plead, but every time He meets you on that point He will simply repeat—"If you mean what you say, those are the conditions."

"Sell all that thou hast" —undress yourself morally before God of everything that might be a possession until you are a mere conscious human being, and then give God that. That is where the battle is fought—in the domain of the will before God. Are you more devoted to your idea of what Jesus wants than to Himself? If so, you are likely to hear one of His hard sayings that will produce sorrow in you. What Jesus says is hard, it is only easy when it is heard by those who have His disposition. Beware of allowing anything to soften a hard word of Jesus Christ's.

I can be so rich in poverty, so rich in the consciousness that I am nobody, that I shall never be a disciple of Jesus; and I can be so rich in the consciousness that I am somebody—that I shall never be a disciple. Am I willing to be destitute of the sense that I am destitute? This is where discouragement comes in. Discouragement is disenchanted self-love, and self-love may be love of my devotion to Jesus.

August 19

SELF-CONSCIOUSNESS

Come unto Me. Matthew 11:28

God means us to live a fully-orbed life in Christ Jesus, but there are times when that life is attacked from the outside, and we tumble into a way of introspection which we thought had gone. Self-consciousness is the first thing that will upset the completeness of the life in God, and self-consciousness continually produces wrestling. Self-consciousness is not sin; it may be produced by a nervous temperament or by a sudden dumping down into new circumstances. It is never God's will that we should be anything less than absolutely complete in Him. Anything that disturbs rest in Him must be cured at once, and it is not cured by being ignored, but by coming to Jesus Christ. If we come to Him and ask Him to produce Christ-consciousness, He will always do it until we learn to abide in Him.

Never allow the dividing up of your life in Christ to remain without facing it. Beware of leakage, of the dividing up of your life by the influence of friends or of circumstances; beware of anything that is going to split up your oneness with Him and make you see yourself separately. Nothing is so important as to keep right spiritually. The great solution is the simple one—"Come unto Me." The depth of our reality, intellectually, morally and spiritually, is tested by these words. In every degree in which we are not real, we will dispute rather than come.

August 20

COMPLETENESS

And I will give you rest. Matthew 11:28

Whenever anything begins to disintegrate your life with Jesus Christ, turn to Him at once and ask Him to establish rest. Never allow anything to remain which is making the dis-peace. Take every element of disintegration as something to wrestle against, and not to suffer. Say—"Lord, prove Thy consciousness in me," and self-consciousness will go and He will be all in all. Beware of allowing self-consciousness to continue because by slow degrees it will awaken self-pity, and self-pity is Satanic. "Well, I am not understood; this is a thing they ought to apologise for; that is a point I really must have cleared up." Leave others alone and ask the Lord to give you Christ-consciousness, and He will poise you until the completeness is absolute.

The complete life is the life of a child. When I am consciously conscious, there is something wrong. It is the sick man who knows what health is. The child of God is not conscious of the will of God because he is the will of God. When there has been the slightest deviation from the will of God, we begin to ask—"What is Thy will?" A child of God never prays to be conscious that God answers prayer, he is so restfully certain that God always does answer prayer.

If we try to overcome self-consciousness by any commonsense method, we develop it tremendously.

Jesus says "Come unto Me . . . and I will give you rest," i.e., Christ-consciousness will take the place of self-consciousness. Wherever Jesus comes He establishes rest, the rest of the perfection of activity that is never conscious of itself.

August 21

THE MINISTRY OF THE UNNOTICED

Blessed are the poor in spirit. Matthew 5:3

The New Testament notices things which from our standards do not seem to count. "Blessed are the poor in spirit," literally—Blessed are the paupersan exceedingly commonplace thing! The preaching of to-day is apt to emphasise strength of will, beauty of character—the things that are easily noticed. The phrase we hear so often, "Decide for Christ," is an emphasis on something Our Lord never trusted. He never asks us to decide for Him, but to yield to Him, a very different thing. At the basis of Jesus Christ's Kingdom is the unaffected loveliness of the commonplace. The thing I am blessed in is my poverty. If I know I have no strength of will, no nobility of disposition, then Jesus says—Blessed are you, because it is through this poverty that I enter His Kingdom. I cannot enter His Kingdom as a good man or woman, I can only enter it as a complete pauper.

The true character of the loveliness that tells for God is always unconscious. Conscious influence is priggish and un-Christian. If I say, "I wonder if I am of any use," I instantly lose the bloom of the touch of the Lord. "He that believeth on Me, out of [him] shall flow rivers of living water." If I examine the outflow, I lose the touch of the Lord.

Which are the people who have influenced us most? Not the ones who thought they did, but those who had not the remotest notion that they were influencing us. In the Christian life the implicit is never conscious; if it is conscious, it ceases to have this unaffected loveliness which is the characteristic of the touch of Jesus. We always know when Jesus is at work because He produces in the commonplace something that is inspiring.

August 22

"I INDEED . . . BUT HE"

I indeed baptize you with water . . . but He . . . shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire. Matthew 3:11

Have I ever come to a place in my experience where I can say—"I indeed . . . but He"? Until that moment does come, I will never know what the baptism of the Holy Ghost means. "I indeed" am at an end, I cannot do a thing: "but He" begins just there—He does the things no one else can ever do. Am I prepared for His coming? Jesus cannot come as long as there is anything in the way either of goodness or badness. When He comes am I prepared for Him to drag into the light every wrong thing I have done? It is just there that He comes. Wherever I know I am unclean, He will put His feet; wherever I think I am clean, He will withdraw them. Repentance does not bring a sense of sin, but a sense of unutterable unworthiness. When I repent, I realise that I am utterly helpless; I know all through me that I am not worthy even to bear His shoes. Have I repented like that? Or is there a lingering suggestion of standing up for myself? The reason God cannot come into my life is because I am not through into repentance.

"He . . . shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." John does not speak of the baptism of the Holy Ghost as an experience, but as a work performed by Jesus Christ, "He shall baptise you." The only conscious experience those who are baptised with the Holy Ghost ever have is a sense of absolute unworthiness.

"I indeed" was this and that; "but He" came, and a marvellous thing happened. Get to the margin where He does everything.

August 23

PRAYER CHOICE AND PRAYER CONFLICT

When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret. Matthew 6:6

Jesus did not say—"Dream about thy Father in secret," but "pray to thy Father in secret." Prayer is an effort of will. After we have entered our secret place and have shut the door, the most difficult thing to do is to pray. We cannot get our minds into working order, and the first thing that conflicts is wandering thoughts. The great battle in private prayer is the overcoming of mental wool-gathering. We have to discipline our minds and concentrate on wilful prayer.

We must have a selected place for prayer and when we get there the plague of flies begins—This must be done, and that. "Shut thy door." A secret silence means to shut the door deliberately on emotions and remember God. God is in secret, and He sees us from the secret place; He does not see us as other people see us, or as we see ourselves. When we live in the secret place it becomes impossible for us to doubt God, we become more sure of Him than of anything else. Your Father, Jesus says, is in secret and nowhere else. Enter the secret place, and right in the centre of the common round you find God there all the time. Get into the habit of dealing with God about everything. Unless in the first waking moment of the day you learn to fling the door wide back and let God in, you will work on a wrong level all day; but swing the door wide open and pray to your Father in secret, and every public thing will be stamped with the presence of God.

August 24

THE SPIRITUAL INDEX

Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? Matthew 7:9

The illustration of prayer that Our Lord uses here is that of a good child asking for a good thing. We talk about prayer as if God heard us irrespective of the fact of our relationship to Him (cf. Matthew 5:45). Never say it is not God's will to give you what you ask, don't sit down and faint, but find out the reason, turn up the index. Are you rightly related to your wife, to your husband, to your children, to your fellow-students—are you a "good child" there? "Oh, Lord, I have been irritable and cross, but I do want spiritual blessing." You cannot have it, you will have to do without until you come into the attitude of a good child.

We mistake defiance for devotion; arguing with God for abandonment. We will not look at the index. Have I been asking God to give me money for something I want when there is something I have not paid for? Have I been asking God for liberty while I am withholding it from someone who belongs to me? I have not forgiven someone his trespasses; I have not been kind to him; I have not been living as God's child among my relatives and friends.

I am a child of God only by regeneration, and as a child of God I am good only as I walk in the light. Prayer with most of us is turned into pious platitude, it is a matter of emotion, mystical communion with God. Spiritually we are all good at producing fogs. If we turn up the index, we will see very clearly what is wrong—that friendship, that debt, that temper of mind. It is no use praying unless we are living as children of God. Then, Jesus says—"Every one that asketh receiveth."

THE FRUITFULNESS OF FRIENDSHIP

I have called you friends. John 15:15

We never know the joy of self-sacrifice until we abandon in every particular. Self-surrender is the most difficult thing—"I will if . . .!" "Oh well, I suppose I must devote my life to God." There is none of the joy of self-sacrifice in that.

As soon as we do abandon, the Holy Ghost gives us an intimation of the joy of Jesus. The final aim of self-sacrifice is laying down our lives for our Friend. When the Holy Ghost comes in, the great desire is to lay down the life for Jesus; the thought of sacrifice never touches us because sacrifice is the love passion of the Holy Ghost.

Our Lord is our example in the life of self-sacrifice—"I delight to do Thy will, O My God." He went on with His sacrifice with exuberant joy. Have I ever yielded in absolute submission to Jesus Christ? If Jesus Christ is not the lodestar, there is no benefit in the sacrifice; but when the sacrifice is made with the eyes on Him, slowly and surely the moulding influence begins to tell.

Beware of letting natural affinities hinder your walk in love. One of the most cruel ways of killing natural love is by disdain built on natural affinities. The affinity of the saint is the Lord Jesus. Love for God is not sentimental; to love as God loves is the most practical thing for the saint.

"I have called you friends." It is a friendship based on the new life created in us, which has no affinity with our old life, but only with the life of God. It is unutterably humble, unsulliedly pure, and absolutely devoted to God.

August 26

ARE YOU EVER DISTURBED?

Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you. John 14:27

There are times when our peace is based upon ignorance, but when we awaken to the facts of life, inner peace is impossible unless it is received from Jesus. When Our Lord speaks peace, He makes peace, His words are ever "spirit and life." Have I ever received what Jesus speaks? "My peace I give unto you"—it is a peace which comes from looking into His face and realising His undisturbedness.

Are you painfully disturbed just now, distracted by the waves and billows of God's providential permission, and having, as it were, turned over the boulders of your belief, are you still finding no well of peace or joy or comfort; is all barren? Then look up and receive the undisturbedness of the Lord Jesus. Reflected peace is the proof that you are right with God because you are at liberty to turn your mind to Him. If you are not right with God, you can never turn your mind anywhere but on yourself. If you allow anything to hide the face of Jesus Christ from you, you are either disturbed or you have a false security.

Are you looking unto Jesus now, in the immediate matter that is pressing, and receiving from Him peace? If so, He will be a gracious benediction of peace in and through you: But if you try to worry it out, you obliterate Him and deserve all you get. We get disturbed because we have not been considering Him. When one confers with Jesus Christ the perplexity goes, because He has no perplexity, and our only concern is to abide in Him. Lay it all out before Him and in the face of difficulty, bereavement and sorrow, hear Him say—"Let not your heart be troubled."

August 27

THEOLOGY ALIVE

Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you. John 12:35

Beware of not acting upon what you see in your moments on the mount with God. If you do not obey the light, it will turn into darkness. "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" The second you waive the question of sanctification or any other thing upon which God gave you light, you begin to get dry rot in your spiritual life. Continually bring the truth out into actuality; work it out in every domain, or the very light you have will prove a curse.

The most difficult person to deal with is the one who has the smug satisfaction of an experience to which he can refer back, but who is not working it out in practical life. If you say you are sanctified, show it. The experience must be so genuine that it is shown in the life. Beware of any belief that makes you self-indulgent; it came from the pit, no matter how beautiful it sounds.

Theology must work itself out in the most practical relationships. "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, . . ." said Our Lord, i.e., you must be more moral than the most moral being you know. You may know all about the doctrine of sanctification, but are you running it out into the practical issues of your life? Every bit of our life, physical, moral and spiritual, is to be judged by the standard of the Atonement.

WHAT'S THE GOOD OF PRAYER?

Lord, teach us to pray. Luke 11:1

It is not part of the life of a natural man to pray. We hear it said that a man will suffer in his life if he does not pray; I question it. What will suffer is the life of the Son of God in him, which is nourished, not by food, but by prayer. When a man is born from above (RV mg), the life of the Son of God is born in him, and he can either starve that life or nourish it. Prayer is the way the life of God is nourished. Our ordinary views of prayer are not found in the New Testament. We look upon prayer as a means of getting things for ourselves; the Bible idea of prayer is that we may get to know God Himself.

"Ask, and ye shall receive." We grouse before God, we are apologetic or apathetic, but we ask very few things. Yet what a splendid audacity a childlike child has! Our Lord says—"Except ye . . . become as little children." Ask, and God will do. Give Jesus Christ a chance, give Him elbow room, and no man will ever do this unless he is at his wits' end. When a man is at his wits' end it is not a cowardly thing to pray, it is the only way he can get into touch with Reality. Be yourself before God and present your problems, the things you know you have come to your wits' end over. As long as you are self-sufficient, you do not need to ask God for anything.

It is not so true that "prayer changes things" as that prayer changes me and I change things. God has so constituted things that prayer on the basis of Redemption alters the way in which a man looks at things. Prayer is not a question of altering things externally, but of working wonders in a man's disposition.

August 29

SUBLIME INTIMACY

Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God? John 11:40

Every time you venture out in the life of faith, you will find something in your commonsense circumstances that flatly contradicts your faith. Common sense is not faith, and faith is not common sense; they stand in the relation of the natural and the spiritual. Can you trust Jesus Christ where your common sense cannot trust Him? Can you venture heroically on Jesus Christ's statements when the facts of your commonsense life shout "It's a lie"? On the mount it is easy to say—"Oh yes, I believe God can do it"; but you have to come down into the demon-possessed valley and meet with facts that laugh ironically at the whole of your mount-of-transfiguration belief. Every time my programme of belief is clear to my own mind, I come across something that contradicts it. Let me say I believe God will supply all my need, and then let me run dry, with no outlook, and see whether I will go through the trial of faith, or whether I will sink back to something lower.

Faith must be tested, because it can be turned into a personal possession only through conflict. What is your faith up against just now? The test will either prove that your faith is right, or it will kill it. "Blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Me." The final thing is confidence in Jesus. Believe steadfastly on Him and all you come up against will develop your faith. There is continual testing in the life of faith, and the last great test is death. May God keep us in fighting trim! Faith is unutterable trust in God which never dreams that He will not stand by us.

August 30

AM I CONVINCED BY CHRIST?

Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, . . . but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven. Luke 10:20

Jesus Christ says, in effect, Don't rejoice in successful service, but rejoice because you are rightly related to Me. The snare in Christian work is to rejoice in successful service, to rejoice in the fact that God has used you. You never can measure what God will do through you if you are rightly related to Jesus Christ. Keep your relationship right with Him, then whatever circumstances you are in, and whoever you meet day by day, He is pouring rivers of living water through you, and it is of His mercy that He does not let you know it. When once you are rightly related to God by salvation and sanctification, remember that wherever you are, you are put there by God; and by the reaction of your life on the circumstances around you, you will fulfil God's purpose, as long as you keep in the light as God is in the light.

The tendency to-day is to put the emphasis on service. Beware of the people who make usefulness their ground of appeal. If you make usefulness the test, then Jesus Christ was the greatest failure that ever lived. The lodestar of the saint is God Himself, not estimated usefulness. It is the work that God does through us that counts, not what we do for Him. All that Our Lord heeds in a man's life is the relationship of worth to His Father. Jesus is bringing many sons to glory.

MY JOY . . . YOUR JOY

That My joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. John 15:11

What was the joy that Jesus had? It is an insult to use the word happiness in connection with Jesus Christ. The joy of Jesus was the absolute self-surrender and self-sacrifice of Himself to His Father, the joy of doing that which the Father sent Him to do. "I delight to do Thy will." Jesus prayed that our joy might go on fulfilling itself until it was the same joy as His. Have I allowed Jesus Christ to introduce His joy to me?

The full flood of my life is not in bodily health, not in external happenings, not in seeing God's work succeed, but in the perfect understanding of God, and in the communion with Him that Jesus Himself had. The first thing that will hinder this joy is the captious irritation of thinking out circumstances. The cares of this world, said Jesus, will choke God's word. Before we know where we are, we are caught up in the shows of things. All that God has done for us is the mere threshold; He wants to get us to the place where we will be His witnesses and proclaim Who Jesus is.

Be rightly related to God, find your joy there, and out of you will flow rivers of living water. Be a centre for Jesus Christ to pour living water through. Stop being self-conscious, stop being a sanctified prig, and live the life hid with Christ. The life that is rightly related to God is as natural as breathing wherever it goes. The lives that have been of most blessing to you are those who were unconscious of it.

SEPTEMBER 1

DESTINY OF HOLINESS

Ye shall be holy; for I am holy. 1 Peter 1:16 (RV)

Continually restate to yourself what the purpose of your life is. The destined end of man is not happiness, nor health, but holiness. Nowadays we have far too many affinities, we are dissipated with them; right, good, noble affinities which will yet have their fulfilment, but in the meantime God has to atrophy them. The one thing that matters is whether a man will accept the God Who will make him holy. At all costs a man must be rightly related to God.

Do I believe I need to be holy? Do I believe God can come into me and make me holy? If by your preaching you convince me that I am unholy, I resent your preaching. The preaching of the gospel awakens an intense resentment because it must reveal that I am unholy; but it also awakens an intense craving. God has one destined end for mankind, viz., holiness. His one aim is the production of saints. God is not an eternal blessing-machine for men; He did not come to save men out of pity: He came to save men because He had created them to be holy. The Atonement means that God can put me back into perfect union with Himself, without a shadow between, through the Death of Jesus Christ.

Never tolerate through sympathy with yourself or with others any practice that is not in keeping with a holy God. Holiness means unsullied walking with the feet, unsullied talking with the tongue, unsullied thinking with the mind—every detail of the life under the scrutiny of God. Holiness is not only what God gives me, but what I manifest that God has given me.

SEPTEMBER 2

THE SACRAMENT OF SACRIFICE

He that believeth on Me, . . . from within him shall flow. . . . John 7:38 (RV mg)

Jesus did not say—"he that believeth in Me shall realise the blessing of the fullness of God," but—"he that believeth in Me, out of him shall escape everything he receives." Our Lord's teaching is always anti—self-realisation. His purpose is not the development of a man; His purpose is to make a man exactly like Himself, and the characteristic of the Son of God is self-expenditure. If we believe in Jesus, it is not what we gain, but what He pours through us that counts. It is not that God makes us beautifully rounded grapes, but that He squeezes the sweetness out of us. Spiritually, we cannot measure our life by success, but only by what God pours through us, and we cannot measure that at all.

When Mary of Bethany broke the box of precious ointment and poured it on Jesus' head, it was an act for which no one else saw any occasion; the disciples said it was a waste. But Jesus commended Mary for her extravagant act of devotion, and said that wherever His gospel was preached "this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her." Our Lord is carried beyond Himself with joy when He sees any of us doing what Mary did, not being set on this or that economy, but being abandoned to Him. God spilt the life of His Son that the world might be saved; are we prepared to spill out our lives for Him?

"He that believeth on Me," out of him, "shall flow rivers of living water," that is, hundreds of other lives will be continually refreshed. It is time now to break the life, to cease craving for satisfaction, and to spill the thing out. Our Lord is asking who of us will do it for Him?

SEPTEMBER 3

THE WATERS OF SATISFACTION SCATTERED

... nevertheless he would not drink thereof, but poured it out unto the LORD. 2 Samuel 23:16

What has been like water from the well of Bethlehem to you recently—love, friendship, spiritual blessing? Then at the peril of your soul, you take it to satisfy yourself. If you do, you cannot pour it out before the Lord. You can never sanctify to God that with which you long to satisfy yourself. If you satisfy yourself with a blessing from God, it will corrupt you; you must sacrifice it, pour it out, do with it what common sense says is an absurd waste.

How am I to pour out unto the Lord natural love or spiritual blessing? In one way only—in the determination of my mind. There are certain acts of other people which one could never accept if one did not know God, because it is not within human power to repay them. But immediately I say—"This is too great and worthy for me, it is not meant for a human being at all, I must pour it out unto the Lord"; then these things pour out in rivers of living water all around. Until I do pour these things out before the Lord, they endanger those I love as well as myself because they will turn to lust. We can be lustful in things which are not sordid and vile. Love has to get to its transfiguration point of being poured out unto the Lord.

If you have become bitter and sour, it is because when God gave you a blessing you clutched it for yourself; whereas if you had poured it out unto the Lord, you would have been the sweetest person out of heaven. If you are always taking blessings to yourself and never learn to pour out anything unto the Lord, other people do not get their horizon enlarged through you.

SEPTEMBER 4

HIS!

Thine they were, and Thou gavest them Me. John 17:6

The missionary is one in whom the Holy Ghost has wrought this realisation—"Ye are not your own." To say "I am not my own," is to have reached a great point in spiritual nobility. The true nature of the life in the actual whirl is the deliberate giving up of myself to another in sovereign preference, and that other is Jesus Christ. The Holy Spirit expounds the nature of Jesus to me in order to make me one with my Lord, not that I might go off as a showroom exhibit. Our Lord never sent any of the disciples out on the ground of what He had done for them. It was not until after the Resurrection, when the disciples had perceived by the power of the Holy Spirit Whom He was, that Jesus said "Go."

"If any man come to Me, and hate not . . . , he cannot be My disciple," not—he cannot be good and upright, but—he cannot be one over whom Jesus writes the word "Mine." Any one of the relationships Our Lord mentions may be a competitive relationship. I may prefer to belong to my mother, or to my wife, or to myself; then says Jesus, you cannot be My disciple. This does not mean I will not be saved, but it does mean that I cannot be "His."

Our Lord makes a disciple His own possession, He becomes responsible for him. "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me." The spirit that comes in is not that of doing anything for Jesus, but of being a perfect delight to Him. The secret of the missionary is—I am His, and He is carrying out His enterprises through me.

Be entirely His.

SEPTEMBER 5

THE MISSIONARY WATCHING

Watch with Me. Matthew 26:40

"Watch with Me"—with no private point of view of your own at all, but watch entirely with Me. In the early stages we do not watch with Jesus, we watch for Him. We do not watch with Him through the revelation of the Bible; in the circumstances of our lives. Our Lord is trying to introduce us to identification with Himself in a particular Gethsemane, and we will not go; we say—"No, Lord, I cannot see the meaning of this, it is bitter." How can we possibly watch with Someone Who is inscrutable? How are we going to understand Jesus sufficiently to watch with Him in His Gethsemane, when we do not know even what His suffering is for? We do not know how to watch with Him; we are only used to the idea of Jesus watching with us.

The disciples loved Jesus Christ to the limit of their natural capacity, but they did not understand what He was after. In the Garden of Gethsemane they slept for their own sorrow, and at the end of three years of the closest intimacy they "all forsook Him, and fled."

"They were all filled with the Holy Ghost"—the same "they," but something wonderful has happened in between, viz., Our Lord's Death and Resurrection and Ascension, and the disciples have been invaded by the Holy Spirit. Our Lord had said—"Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you," and this meant that they learned to watch with Him all the rest of their lives.

DIFFUSIVENESS OF LIFE

Rivers of living water. John 7:38

A river touches places of which its source knows nothing, and Jesus says if we have received of His fulness, however small the visible measure of our lives, out of us will flow the rivers that will bless to the uttermost parts of the earth. We have nothing to do with the outflow—"This is the work of God, that ye believe. . . ." God rarely allows a soul to see how great a blessing he is.

A river is victoriously persistent, it overcomes all barriers. For a while it goes steadily on its course, then it comes to an obstacle and for a while it is balked, but it soon makes a pathway round the obstacle. Or a river will drop out of sight for miles, and presently emerge again broader and grander than ever. You can see God using some lives, but into your life an obstacle has come and you do not seem to be of any use. Keep paying attention to the Source, and God will either take you round the obstacle or remove it. The river of the Spirit of God overcomes all obstacles. Never get your eyes on the obstacle or on the difficulty. The obstacle is a matter of indifference to the river which will flow steadily through you if you remember to keep right at the Source. Never allow anything to come between yourself and Jesus Christ, no emotion, or experience; nothing must keep you from the one great sovereign Source.

Think of the healing and far-flung rivers nursing themselves in our souls! God has been opening up marvellous truths to our minds, and every point He has opened up is an indication of the wider power of the river He will flow through us. If you believe in Jesus, you will find that God has nourished in you mighty torrents of blessing for others.

SEPTEMBER 7

SPRINGS OF BENIGNITY

The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water. John 4:14

The picture Our Lord gives is not that of a channel but a fountain. Be being filled, and the sweetness of vital relationship to Jesus will flow out of the saint as lavishly as it is imparted to him. If you find your life is not flowing out as it should, you are to blame; something has obstructed the flow. Keep right at the Source, and—you will be blessed personally? No, out of you will flow rivers of living water, irrepressible life.

We are to be centres through which Jesus can flow as rivers of living water in blessing to everyone. Some of us are like the Dead Sea, always taking in but never giving out, because we are not rightly related to the Lord Jesus. As surely as we receive from Him, He will pour out through us, and in the measure He is not pouring out, there is a defect in our relationship to Him. Is there anything between you and Jesus Christ? Is there anything that hinders your belief in Him? If not, Jesus says, out of you will flow rivers of living water. It is not a blessing passed on, not an experience stated, but a river continually flowing. Keep at the Source, guard well your belief in Jesus Christ and your relationship to Him, and there will be a steady flow for other lives, no dryness and no deadness.

Is it not too extravagant to say that out of an individual believer, rivers are going to flow? "I do not see the rivers," you say. Never look at yourself from the standpoint of—"Who am I?" In the history of God's work you will nearly always find that it has started from the obscure, the unknown, the ignored, but the steadfastly true to Jesus Christ.

SEPTEMBER 8

DO IT YOURSELF

Determinedly Demolish Some Things

Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God. 2 Corinthians 10:5

Deliverance from sin is not deliverance from human nature. There are things in human nature, such as prejudices, which the saint has to destroy by neglect; and other things which have to be destroyed by violence, i.e., by the Divine strength imparted by God's Spirit. There are some things over which we are not to fight, but to stand still in and see the salvation of God; but every theory or conception which erects itself as a rampart against the knowledge of God is to be determinedly demolished by drawing on God's power, not by fleshly endeavour or compromise (2 Corinthians 10:4).

It is only when God has altered our disposition and we have entered into the experience of sanctification that the fight begins. The warfare is not against sin; we can never fight against sin: Jesus Christ deals with sin in Redemption. The conflict is along the line of turning our natural life into a spiritual life, and this is never done easily, nor does God intend it to be done easily. It is done only by a series of moral choices. God does not make us holy in the sense of character; He makes us holy in the sense of innocence, and we have to turn that innocence into holy character by a series of moral choices. These choices are continually in antagonism to the entrenchments of our natural life, the things which erect themselves as ramparts against the knowledge of God. We can either go back and make ourselves of no account in the Kingdom of God, or we can determinedly demolish these things and let Jesus bring another son to glory.

SEPTEMBER 9

DO IT YOURSELF

Determinedly Discipline Other Things

Bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ. 2 Corinthians 10:5

This is another aspect of the strenuous nature of sainthood. Paul says—"I take every project prisoner to make it obey Christ" (MOFFATT). How much Christian work there is to-day which has never been disciplined, but has simply sprung into being by impulse! In Our Lord's life every project was disciplined to the will of His Father. There was not a movement of an impulse of His own will as distinct from His Father's—"The Son can do nothing of Himself." Then take ourselves—a vivid religious experience, and every project born of impulse put into action immediately, instead of being imprisoned and disciplined to obey Christ.

This is a day when practical work is over-emphasised, and the saints who are bringing every project into captivity are criticised and told that they are not in earnest for God or for souls. True earnestness is found in obeying God, not in the inclination to serve Him that is born of undisciplined human nature. It is inconceivable, but true nevertheless, that saints are not bringing every project into captivity, but are doing work for God at the instigation of their own human nature which has not been spiritualised by determined discipline.

We are apt to forget that a man is not only committed to Jesus Christ for salvation; he is committed to Jesus Christ's view of God, of the world, of sin and of the devil, and this will mean that he must recognise the responsibility of being transformed by the renewing of his mind.

SEPTEMBER 10

MISSIONARY MUNITIONS

Worshipping as Occasion Serves

When thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee. John 1:48

We imagine we would be all right if a big crisis arose; but the big crisis will only reveal the stuff we are made of, it will not put anything into us. "If God gives the call, of course I will rise to the occasion." You will not unless you have risen to the occasion in the workshop, unless you have been the real thing before God there. If you are not doing the thing that lies nearest, because God has engineered it, when the crisis comes instead of being revealed as fit, you will be revealed as unfit. Crises always reveal character.

The private relationship of worshipping God is the great essential of fitness. The time comes when there is no more "fig-tree" life possible, when it is out into the open, out into the glare and into the work, and you will find yourself of no value there if you have not been worshipping as occasion serves you in your home. Worship aright in your private relationships, then when God sets you free you will be ready, because in the unseen life which no one saw but God you have become perfectly fit, and when the strain comes you can be relied upon by God.

"I can't be expected to live the sanctified life in the circumstances I am in; I have no time for praying just now, no time for Bible reading, my opportunity hasn't come yet; when it does, of course I shall be all right." No, you will not. If you have not been worshipping as occasion serves, when you get into work you will not only be useless yourself, but a tremendous hindrance to those who are associated with you.

The workshop of missionary munitions is the hidden, personal, worshipping life of the saint.

SEPTEMBER 11

MISSIONARY MUNITIONS

Ministering as Opportunity Surrounds Us

If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. John 13:14

Ministering as opportunity surrounds us does not mean selecting our surroundings, it means being very selectly God's in any haphazard surroundings which He engineers for us. The characteristics we manifest in our immediate surroundings are indications of what we will be like in other surroundings.

The things that Jesus did were of the most menial and commonplace order, and this is an indication that it takes all God's power in me to do the most commonplace things in His way. Can I use a towel as He did? Towels and dishes and sandals, all the ordinary sordid things of our lives, reveal more quickly than anything what we are made of. It takes God Almighty Incarnate in us to do the meanest duty as it ought to be done.

"I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." Watch the kind of people God brings around you, and you will be humiliated to find that this is His way of revealing to you the kind of person you have been to Him. Now, He says, exhibit to that one exactly what I have shown to you.

"Oh," you say, "I will do all that when I get out into the foreign field." To talk in this way is like trying to produce the munitions of war in the trenches—you will be killed while you are doing it.

We have to go the "second mile" with God. Some of us get played out in the first ten yards, because God compels us to go where we cannot see the way, and we say—"I will wait till I get nearer the big crisis." If we do not do the running steadily in the little ways, we shall do nothing in the crisis.

SEPTEMBER 12

BY SPIRITUAL CONFUSION

Ye know not what ye ask. Matthew 20:22

There are times in spiritual life when there is confusion, and it is no way out to say that there ought not to be confusion. It is not a question of right and wrong, but a question of God taking you by a way which in the meantime you do not understand, and it is only by going through the confusion that you will get at what God wants.

The Shrouding of His Friendship (Luke 11:5–8). Jesus gave the illustration of the man who looked as if he did not care for his friend, and He said that that is how the Heavenly Father will appear to you at times. You will think He is an unkind friend, but remember He is not; the time will come when everything will be explained. There is a cloud on the friendship of the heart, and often even love itself has to wait in pain and tears for the blessing of fuller communion. When God looks completely shrouded, will you hang in in confidence in Him?

The Shadow on His Fatherhood (Luke 11:11–13). Jesus says there are times when your Father will appear as if He were an unnatural father, as if He were callous and indifferent, but remember He is not; I have told you—"Every one that asketh receiveth." If there is a shadow on the face of the Father just now, hang into it that He will ultimately give His clear revealing and justify Himself in all that He permitted.

The Strangeness of His Faithfulness (Luke 18:1–8). "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" Will He find the faith which banks on Him in spite of the confusion? Stand off in faith believing that what Jesus said is true, though in the meantime you do not understand what God is doing. He has bigger issues at stake than the particular things you ask.

SEPTEMBER 13

AFTER SURRENDER—WHAT?

I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do. John 17:4

Surrender is not the surrender of the external life, but of the will; when that is done, all is done. There are very few crises in life; the great crisis is the surrender of the will. God never crushes a man's will into surrender, He never beseeches him, He waits until the man yields up his will to Him. That battle never needs to be re-fought.

Surrender for Deliverance. "Come unto Me, . . . and I will give you rest." It is after we have begun to experience what salvation means that we surrender our wills to Jesus for rest. Whatever is perplexing heart or mind is a call to the will—"Come unto Me." It is a voluntary coming.

Surrender for Devotion. "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself." The surrender here is of my self to Jesus, my self with His rest at the heart of it. "If you would be My disciple, give up your right to yourself to Me." Then the remainder of the life is nothing but the manifestation of this surrender. When once the surrender has taken place we never need "suppose" anything. We do not need to care what our circumstances are, Jesus is amply sufficient.

Surrender for Death (John 21:18–19). ". . . another shall gird thee." Have you learned what it means to be bound for death? Beware of a surrender which you make to God in an ecstasy; you are apt to take it back again. It is a question of being united with Jesus in His death until nothing ever appeals to you that did not appeal to Him.

After surrender—what? The whole of life after surrender is an aspiration for unbroken communion with God.

SEPTEMBER 14

IMAGINATION V. INSPIRATION

The simplicity that is in Christ. 2 Corinthians 11:3

Simplicity is the secret of seeing things clearly. A saint does not think clearly for a long while, but a saint ought to see clearly without any difficulty. You cannot think a spiritual muddle clear, you have to obey it clear. In intellectual matters you can think things out, but in spiritual matters you will think yourself into cotton wool. If there is something upon which God has put His pressure, obey in that matter, bring your imagination into captivity to the obedience of Christ with regard to it and everything will become as clear as daylight. The reasoning capacity comes afterwards, but we never see along that line, we see like children; when we try to be wise we see nothing (Matthew 11:25).

The tiniest thing we allow in our lives that is not under the control of the Holy Spirit is quite sufficient to account for spiritual muddle, and all the thinking we like to spend on it will never make it clear. Spiritual muddle is only made plain by obedience. Immediately we obey, we discern. This is humiliating, because when we are muddled we know the reason is in the temper of our mind. When the natural power of vision is devoted to the Holy Spirit, it becomes the power of perceiving God's will and the whole life is kept in simplicity.

September 15

WHAT TO RENOUNCE

But have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty. 2 Corinthians 4:2

Have you "renounced the hidden things of dishonesty"—the things that your sense of honour will not allow to come to the light? You can easily hide them. Is there a thought in your heart about anyone which you would not like to be dragged into the light? Renounce it as soon as it springs up; renounce the whole thing until there is no hidden thing of dishonesty or craftiness about you. Envy, jealousy, strife—these things arise not necessarily from the disposition of sin, but from the make-up of your body which was used for this kind of thing in days gone by (see Romans 6:19 and 1 Peter 4:1–2): Maintain a continual watchfulness so that nothing of which you would be ashamed arises in your life.

"Not walking in craftiness," that is, resorting to what will carry your point. This is a great snare. You know that God will only let you work in one way, then be careful never to catch people the other way; God's blight will be upon you if you do. Others are doing things which to you would be walking in craftiness, but it may not be so with them; God has given you another standpoint. Never blunt the sense of your Utmost for His Highest. For you to do a certain thing would mean the incoming of craftiness for an end other than the highest, and the blunting of the motive God has given you. Many have gone back because they are afraid of looking at things from God's stand-point. The crisis comes spiritually when a man has to emerge a bit farther on than the creed he has accepted.

SEPTEMBER 16

THE DIVINE REGION OF RELIGION

But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret. Matthew 6:6

The main idea in the region of religion is—Your eyes upon God, not on men. Do not have as your motive the desire to be known as a praying man. Get an inner chamber in which to pray where no one knows you are praying, shut the door and talk to God in secret. Have no other motive than to know your Father in heaven. It is impossible to conduct your life as a disciple without definite times of secret prayer.

"But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions. . . ." (Matthew 6:7). God is never impressed by our earnestness. He does not hear us because we are in earnest, but only on the ground of Redemption. Prayer is not simply getting things from God, that is an initial form of prayer; prayer is getting into perfect communion with God. If the Son of God is formed in us by regeneration, He will press forward in front of our common sense and change our attitude to the things about which we pray.

"Every one that asketh receiveth." We pray pious blether, our will is not in it, and then we say God does not answer; we never asked for anything. "Ye shall ask what ye will," said Jesus. Asking means our will is in it. Whenever Jesus talked about prayer, He put it with the grand simplicity of a child; we bring in our critical temper and say—"Yes, but . . ." Jesus said—"Ask." But remember that we have to ask of God things that are in keeping with the God Whom Jesus Christ revealed.

SEPTEMBER 17

WHAT'S THE GOOD OF TEMPTATION?

There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man. 1 Corinthians 10:13

The word "temptation" has come down in the world; we are apt to us it wrongly: Temptation is not sin, it is the thing we are bound to meet if we are men. Not to be tempted would be to be beneath contempt. Many of us, however, suffer from temptations from which we have no business to suffer, simply because we have refused to let God lift us to a higher plane where we would face temptations of another order.

A man's disposition on the inside, i.e., what he possesses in his personality, determines what he is tempted by on the outside. The temptation fits the nature of the one tempted, and reveals the possibilities of the nature. Every man has the setting of his own temptation, and the temptation will come along the line of the ruling disposition.

Temptation is a suggested short cut to the realisation of the highest at which I aim—not towards what I understand as evil, but towards what I understand as good. Temptation is something that completely baffles me for a while, I do not know whether the thing is right or wrong. Temptation yielded to is lust deified, and is a proof that it was timidity that prevented the sin before.

Temptation is not something we may escape, it is essential to the full-orbed life of a man. Beware lest you think you are tempted as no one else is tempted; what you go through is the common inheritance of the race, not something no one ever went through before. God does not save us from temptations; He succours us in the midst of them (Hebrews 2:18).

SEPTEMBER 18

HIS TEMPTATION AND OURS

For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Hebrews 4:15

Until we are born again, the only kind of temptation we understand is that mentioned by St. James—"Every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed." But by regeneration we are lifted into another realm where there are other temptations to face, viz., the kind of temptations Our Lord faced. The temptations of Jesus do not appeal to us, they have no home at all in our human nature. Our Lord's temptations and ours move in different spheres until we are born again and become His brethren. The temptations of Jesus are not those of a man, but the temptations of God as Man. By regeneration the Son of God is formed in us, and in our physical life He has the same setting that He had on earth. Satan does not tempt us to do wrong things; he tempts us in order to make us lose what God has put into us by regeneration, viz., the possibility of being of value to God. He does not come on the line of tempting us to sin, but on the line of shifting the point of view, and only the Spirit of God can detect this as a temptation of the devil.

Temptation means the test by an alien power of the possessions held by a personality. This makes the temptation of Our Lord explainable. After Jesus in His baptism had accepted the vocation of bearing away the sin of the world (RV mg), He was immediately put by God's Spirit into the testing machine of the devil; but He did not tire. He went through the temptation "without sin," and retained the possessions of His personality intact.

SEPTEMBER 19

DO YOU CONTINUE TO GO WITH JESUS?

Ye are they which have continued with Me in My temptations. Luke 22:28

It is true that Jesus Christ is with us in our temptations, but are we going with Him in His temptations? Many of us cease to go with Jesus from the moment we have an experience of what He can do. Watch when God shifts your circumstances, and see whether you are going with Jesus, or siding with the world, the flesh and the devil. We wear His badge, but are we going with Him? "From that time many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him." The temptations of Jesus continued throughout His earthly life, and they will continue throughout the life of the Son of God in us. Are we going with Jesus in the life we are living now?

We have the idea that we ought to shield ourselves from some of the things God brings round us. Never! God engineers circumstances, and whatever they may be like we have to see that we face them while abiding continually with Him in His temptations. They are His temptations, not temptations to us, but temptations to the life of the Son of God in us. The honour of Jesus Christ is at stake in your bodily life. Are you remaining loyal to the Son of God in the things which beset His life in you?

Do you continue to go with Jesus? The way lies through Gethsemane, through the city gate, outside the camp; the way lies alone, and the way lies until there is no trace of a footstep left, only the voice, "Follow Me."

SEPTEMBER 20

THE DIVINE RULE OF LIFE

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect. Matthew 5:48

Our Lord's exhortation in these verses is to be generous in our behaviour to all men. In the spiritual life beware of walking according to natural affinities. Everyone has natural affinities; some people we like and others we do not like. We must never let those likes and dislikes rule in our Christian life. If we "walk in the light," as God is in the light, God will give us communion with people for whom we have no natural affinity.

The Example Our Lord gives us is not that of a good man, or even of a good Christian, but of God Himself. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect"—show to the other man what God has shown to you; and God will give us ample opportunities in actual life to prove whether we are perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect. To be a disciple means that we deliberately identify ourselves with God's interests in other people. "That ye love one another; as I have loved you...."

The expression of Christian character is not good doing, but Godlikeness: If the Spirit of God has transformed you within, you will exhibit Divine characteristics in your life, not good human characteristics. God's life in us expresses itself as God's life, not as human life trying to be godly. The secret of a Christian is that the supernatural is made natural in him by the grace of God, and the experience of this works out in the practical details of life, not in times of communion with God. When we come in contact with things that create a buzz, we find to our amazement that we have power to keep wonderfully poised in the centre of it all.

SEPTEMBER 21

MISSIONARY PREDESTINATIONS

And now, saith the LORD that formed me from the womb to be His servant. Isaiah 49:5

The first thing that happens after we have realised our election to God in Christ Jesus is the destruction of our prejudices and our parochial notions and our patriotisms; we are turned into servants of God's own purpose. The whole human race was created to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever. Sin has switched the human race on to another tack, but it has not altered God's purpose in the tiniest degree; and when we are born again we are brought into the realisation of God's great purpose for the human race, viz., I am created for God, He made me. This realisation of the election of God is the most joyful realisation on earth, and we have to learn to rely on the tremendous creative purpose of God. The first thing God will do with us is to "force thro' the channels of a single heart" the interests of the whole world. The love of God, the very nature of God, is introduced into us, and the nature of Almighty God is focused in John 3:16—"God so loved the world. . . . "

We have to maintain our soul open to the fact of God's creative purpose, and not muddle it with our own intentions. If we do, God will have to crush our intentions on one side however much it may hurt. The purpose for which the missionary is created is that he may be God's servant, one in whom God is glorified. When once we realise that through the salvation of Jesus Christ we are made perfectly fit for God, we shall understand why Jesus Christ is so ruthless in His demands. He demands absolute rectitude from His servants, because He has put into them the very nature of God.

Beware lest you forget God's purpose for your life.

SEPTEMBER 22

THE MISSIONARY'S MASTER

Ye call Me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am. John 13:13

To have a master and to be mastered is not the same thing. To have a master means that there is one who knows me better than I know myself, one who is closer than a friend, one who fathoms the remotest abyss of my heart and satisfies it, one who has brought me into the secure sense that he has met and solved every perplexity and problem of my mind. To have a master is this and nothing less—"One is your Master, even Christ."

Our Lord never enforces obedience; He does not take means to make me do what He wants. At certain times I wish God would master me and make me do the thing, but He will not; in other moods I wish He would leave me alone, but He does not.

"Ye call me Master and Lord"—but is He? Master and Lord have little place in our vocabulary, we prefer the words Saviour, Sanctifier, Healer. The only word to describe mastership in experience is love, and we know very little about love as God reveals it. This is proved by the way we use the word obey. In the Bible obedience is based on the relationship of equals, that of a son with his father. Our Lord was not God's servant, He was His son. "Though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience. . . ." If our idea is that we are being mastered, it is a proof that we have no master; if that is our attitude to Jesus, we are far away from the relationship He wants. He wants us in the relationship in which He is easily Master without our conscious knowledge of it, all we know is that we are His to obey.

SEPTEMBER 23

THE MISSIONARY'S GOAL

Behold, we go up to Jerusalem. Luke 18:31

In the natural life our ambitions alter as we develop; in the Christian life the goal is given at the beginning, the beginning and the end are the same, viz., Our Lord Himself. We start with Christ and we end with Him—until we all attain (RV) to the stature of the manhood of Christ Jesus, not to our idea of what the Christian life should be. The aim of the missionary is to do God's will, not to be useful, not to win the heathen; he is useful and he does win the heathen, but that is not his aim. His aim is to do the will of his Lord.

In Our Lord's life Jerusalem was the place where He reached the climax of His Father's will upon the Cross, and unless we go with Jesus there, we shall have no companionship with Him. Nothing ever discouraged Our Lord on His way to Jerusalem. He never hurried through certain villages where He was persecuted, or lingered in others where He was blessed. Neither gratitude nor ingratitude turned Our Lord one hair's breadth away from His purpose to go up to Jerusalem.

"The disciple is not above his Master." The same things will happen to us on our way to our Jerusalem. There will be the works of God manifested through us, people will get blessed, and one or two will show gratitude and the rest will show gross ingratitude, but nothing must deflect us from going up to our Jerusalem.

"There they crucified Him." That is what happened when Our Lord reached Jerusalem, and that happening is the gateway to our salvation. The saints do not end in crucifixion: by the Lord's grace they end in glory. In the meantime our watchword is—I, too, go up to Jerusalem.

SEPTEMBER 24

THE "GO" OF PREPARATION

Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there thou rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Matthew 5:23–24

It is easy to imagine that we shall get to a place where we are complete and ready, but preparation is not suddenly accomplished, it is a process steadily maintained. It is dangerous to get into a settled state of experience. It is preparation and preparation.

The sense of sacrifice appeals readily to a young Christian. Humanly speaking, the one thing that attracts to Jesus Christ is our sense of the heroic, and the scrutiny of Our Lord's words suddenly brings this tide of enthusiasm to the test. "First be reconciled to thy brother." The "go" of preparation is to let the word of God scrutinise. The sense of heroic sacrifice is not good enough. The thing the Holy Spirit is detecting in you is the disposition that will never work in His service. No one but God can detect that disposition in you. Have you anything to hide from God? If you have, then let God search you with His light. If there is sin, confess it, not admit it. Are you willing to obey your Lord and Master, whatever the humiliation to your right to yourself may be?

Never discard a conviction. If it is important enough for the Spirit of God to have brought it to your mind, it is that thing He is detecting. You were looking for a great thing to give up. God is telling you of some tiny thing; but at the back of it there lies the central citadel of obstinacy: "I will not give up my right to myself"—the thing God intends you to give up if ever you are going to be a disciple of Jesus Christ.

SEPTEMBER 25

THE "GO" OF RELATIONSHIP

And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain. Matthew 5:41

The summing up of Our Lord's teaching is that the relationship which He demands is an impossible one unless He has done a supernatural work in us. Jesus Christ demands that there be not the slightest trace of resentment even suppressed in the head of a disciple when he meets with tyranny and injustice. No enthusiasm will ever stand the strain that Jesus Christ will put upon His worker, only one thing will, and that is a personal relationship to Himself which has gone through the mill of His spring-cleaning until there is only one purpose left—"I am here for God to send me where He will." Every other thing may get fogged, but this relationship to Jesus Christ must never be.

The Sermon on the Mount is not an ideal, it is a statement of what will happen in me when Jesus Christ has altered my disposition and put in a disposition like His own. Jesus Christ is the only One Who can fulfil the Sermon on the Mount.

If we are to be disciples of Jesus, we must be made disciples supernaturally; as long as we have the deadset purpose of being disciples we may be sure we are not. "I have chosen you." That is the way the grace of God begins. It is a constraint we cannot get away from; we can disobey it, but we cannot generate it. The drawing is done by the supernatural grace of God, and we never can trace where His work begins. Our Lord's making of a disciple is supernatural. He does not build on any natural capacity at all. God does not ask us to do the things that are easy to us naturally; He only asks us to do the things we are perfectly fitted to do by His grace, and the cross will come along that line always.

September 26

THE UNBLAMEABLE ATTITUDE

If thou . . . rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee . . . Matthew 5:23

If when you come to the altar, there you remember that your brother has anything against you, not—If you rake up something by a morbid sensitiveness, but—"If thou... rememberest," that is, it is brought to your conscious mind by the Spirit of God: "first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." Never object to the intense sensitiveness of the Spirit of God in you when He is educating you down to the scruple.

"First be reconciled to thy brother. . . ." Our Lord's direction is simple—"first be reconciled." Go back the way you came, go the way indicated to you by the conviction given at the altar; have an attitude of mind and a temper of soul to the one who has something against you that makes reconciliation as natural as breathing. Jesus does not mention the other person, He says—you go. There is no question of your rights. The stamp of the saint is that he can waive his own rights and obey the Lord Jesus.

"And then come and offer thy gift." The process is clearly marked. First, the heroic spirit of self-sacrifice, then the sudden checking by the sensitiveness of the Holy Spirit, and the stoppage at the point of conviction; then the way of obedience to the word of God, constructing an unblameable attitude of mind and temper to the one with whom you have been in the wrong; then the glad, simple, unhindered offering of your gift to God.

SEPTEMBER 27

THE "GO" OF RENUNCIATION

Lord, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest. Luke 9:57

Our Lord's attitude to this man is one of severe discouragement because He knew what was in man. We would have said—"Fancy losing the opportunity of winning that man!" "Fancy bringing about a north wind that froze him and turned him away discouraged!" Never apologise for your Lord. The words of the Lord hurt and offend until there is nothing left to hurt or offend. Jesus Christ has no tenderness whatever toward anything that is ultimately going to ruin a man in the service of God. Our Lord's answers are based not on caprice, but on a knowledge of what is in man. If the Spirit of God brings to your mind a word of the Lord that hurts you, you may be sure that there is something He wants to hurt to death.

Verse 58. These words knock the heart out of serving Jesus Christ because it is pleasing to me. The rigour of rejection leaves nothing but my Lord, and myself, and a forlorn hope. "Let the hundredfold come or go, your lodestar must be your relationship to Me, and I have nowhere to lay My head."

Verse 59. This man did not want to disappoint Jesus, nor to hurt his father. We put sensitive loyalty to relatives in place of loyalty to Jesus Christ and Jesus has to take the last place. In a conflict of loyalty, obey Jesus Christ at all costs.

Verse 61. The one who says—"Yes, Lord, but ..." is the one who is fiercely ready, but never goes. This man had one or two reservations. The exacting call of Jesus Christ has no margin of good-byes, because good-bye, as it is often used, is pagan, not Christian. When once the call of God comes, begin to go and never stop going.

SEPTEMBER 28

THE "GO" OF UNCONDITIONAL IDENTIFICATION

One thing thou lackest: . . . come, take up the cross, and follow Me. Mark 10:21

The rich young ruler had the master passion to be perfect. When he saw Jesus Christ, he wanted to be like Him. Our Lord never puts personal holiness to the fore when He calls a disciple; He puts absolute annihilation of my right to myself and identification with Himself—a relationship with Himself in which there is no other relationship. Luke 14:26 has nothing to do with salvation or sanctification, but with unconditional identification with Jesus Christ. Very few of us know the absolute "go" of abandonment to Jesus.

"Then Jesus beholding him loved him." The look of Jesus will mean a heart broken for ever from allegiance to any other person or thing. Has Jesus ever looked at you? The look of Jesus transforms and transfixes. Where you are "soft" with God is where the Lord has looked at you. If you are hard and vindictive, insistent on your own way, certain that the other person is more likely to be in the wrong than you are, it is an indication that there are whole tracts of your nature that have never been transformed by His gaze.

"One thing thou lackest. . . ." The only "good thing" from Jesus Christ's point of view is union with Himself and nothing in between.

"Sell whatsoever thou hast. . . ." I must reduce myself until I am a mere conscious man, I must fundamentally renounce possessions of all kinds, not to save my soul, (only one thing saves a man—absolute reliance upon Jesus Christ) but in order to follow Jesus. "Come, and follow Me." And the road is the way He went.

SEPTEMBER 29

THE CONSCIOUSNESS OF THE CALL

For necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel! 1 Corinthians 9:16

We are apt to forget the mystical, supernatural touch of God. If you can tell where you got the call of God and all about it, I question whether you have ever had a call. The call of God does not come like that, it is much more supernatural. The realisation of it in a man's life may come with a sudden thunder-clap or with a gradual dawning, but in whatever way it comes, it comes with the undercurrent of the supernatural, something that cannot be put into words, it is always accompanied with a glow. At any moment there may break the sudden consciousness of this incalculable, supernatural, surprising call that has taken hold of your life—"I have chosen you." The call of God has nothing to do with salvation and sanctification. It is not because you are sanctified that you are therefore called to preach the gospel; the call to preach the gospel is infinitely different. Paul describes it as a necessity laid upon him.

If you have been obliterating the great supernatural call of God in your life, take a review of your circumstances and see where God has not been first, but your ideas of service, or your temperamental abilities. Paul said—"Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" He had realised the call of God, and there was no competitor for his strength.

If a man or woman is called of God, it does not matter how untoward circumstances are, every force that has been at work will tell for God's purpose in the end. If you agree with God's purpose He will bring not only your conscious life, but all the deeper regions of your life which you cannot get at, into harmony.

SEPTEMBER 30

THE COMMISSION OF THE CALL

Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for His body's sake. Colossians 1:24

We make calls out of our own spiritual consecration, but when we get right with God He brushes all these aside, and rivets us with a pain that is terrific to one thing we never dreamed of, and for one radiant, flashing moment we see what He is after, and we say—"Here am I, send me."

This call has nothing to do with personal sanctification, but with being made broken bread and poured-out wine. God can never make us wine if we object to the fingers He uses to crush us with. If God would only use His own fingers, and make me broken bread and poured-out wine in a special way! But when He uses someone whom we dislike, or some set of circumstances to which we said we would never submit, and makes those the crushers, we object. We must never choose the scene of our own martyrdom. If ever we are going to be made into wine, we will have to be crushed; you cannot drink grapes. Grapes become wine only when they have been squeezed.

I wonder what kind of finger and thumb God has been using to squeeze you, and you have been like a marble and escaped? You are not ripe yet, and if God had squeezed you, the wine would have been remarkably bitter. To be a sacramental personality means that the elements of the natural life are presenced by God as they are broken providentially in His service. We have to be adjusted to God before we can be broken bread in His hands. Keep right with God and let Him do what He likes, and you will find that He is producing the kind of bread and wine that will benefit His other children.

OCTOBER 1

THE SPHERE OF EXALTATION

Jesus . . . leadeth them up into a high mountain apart by themselves. Mark 9:2

We have all had times on the mount, when we have seen things from God's standpoint and have wanted to stay there; but God will never allow us to stay there. The test of our spiritual life is the power to descend; if we have power to rise only, something is wrong. It is a great thing to be on the mount with God, but a man only gets there in order that afterwards he may get down among the devil-possessed and lift them up. We are not built for the mountains and the dawns and aesthetic affinities, those are for moments of inspiration, that is all. We are built for the valley, for the ordinary stuff we are in, and that is where we have to prove our mettle. Spiritual selfishness always wants repeated moments on the mount. We feel we could talk like angels and live like angels, if only we could stay on the mount. The times of exaltation are exceptional, they have their meaning in our life with God, but we must beware lest our spiritual selfishness wants to make them the only time.

We are apt to think that everything that happens is to be turned into useful teaching, it is to be turned into something better than teaching, viz., into character. The mount is not meant to teach us anything, it is meant to make us something. There is a great snare in asking—"What is the use of it?" In spiritual matters we can never calculate on that line. The moments on the mountain top are rare moments, and they are meant for something in God's purpose.

OCTOBER 2

THE SPHERE OF HUMILIATION

If Thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us. Mark 9:22

After every time of exaltation we are brought down with a sudden rush into things as they are, where it is neither beautiful nor poetic nor thrilling. The height of the mountain top is measured by the drab drudgery of the valley; but it is in the valley that we have to live for the glory of God. We see His glory on the mount, but we never live for His glory there. It is in the sphere of humiliation that we find our true worth to God, that is where our faithfulness is revealed. Most of us can do things if we are always at the heroic pitch because of the natural selfishness of our hearts, but God wants us at the drab commonplace pitch, where we live in the valley according to our personal relationship to Him. Peter thought it would be a fine thing for them to remain on the mount, but Jesus Christ took the disciples down from the mount into the valley the place where the meaning of the vision is explained.

"If Thou canst do any thing..." It takes the valley of humiliation to root the scepticism out of us. Look back at your own experience, and you will find that until you learned Who Jesus was, you were a cunning sceptic about His power. When you were on the mount, you could believe anything, but what about the time when you were up against facts in the valley? You may be able to give a testimony to sanctification, but what about the thing that is a humiliation to you just now? The last time you were on the mount with God, you saw that all power in heaven and in earth belonged to Jesus—will you be sceptical now in the valley of humiliation?

OCTOBER 3

THE SPHERE OF MINISTRATION

This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting. Mark 9:29

"Why could not we cast him out?" The answer lies in a personal relationship to Jesus Christ. This kind can come forth by nothing but by concentration and redoubled concentration on Him. We can ever remain powerless, as were the disciples, by trying to do God's work not in concentration on His power, but by ideas drawn from our own temperament. We slander God by our very eagerness to work for Him without knowing Him.

You are brought face to face with a difficult case and nothing happens externally, and yet you know that emancipation will be given because you are concentrated on Jesus Christ. This is your line of service—to see that there is nothing between Jesus and yourself. Is there? If there is, you must get through it, not by ignoring it in irritation, or by mounting up, but by facing it and getting through it into the presence of Jesus Christ. Then that very thing, and all you have been through in connection with it, will glorify Jesus Christ in a way you will never know till you see Him face to face.

We must be able to mount up with wings as eagles; but we must also know how to come down. The power of the saint lies in the coming down and the living down. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me," said Paul, and the things he referred to were mostly humiliating things. It is in our power to refuse to be humiliated and to say—"No, thank you, I much prefer to be on the mountain top with God." Can I face things as they actually are in the light of the reality of Jesus Christ, or do things as they are efface altogether my faith in Him, and put me into a panic?

OCTOBER 4

THE VISION AND THE VERITY

Called to be saints. 1 Corinthians 1:2

Thank God for the sight of all you have never yet been. You have had the vision, but you are not there yet by any means. It is when we are in the valley, where we prove whether we will be the choice ones, that most of us turn back. We are not quite prepared for the blows which must come if we are going to be turned into the shape of the vision. We have seen what we are not, and what God wants us to be, but are we willing to have the vision "batter'd to shape and use" by God? The batterings always come in commonplace ways and through commonplace people.

There are times when we do know what God's purpose is; whether we will let the vision be turned into actual character depends upon us, not upon God. If we prefer to loll on the mount and live in the memory of the vision, we will be of no use actually in the ordinary stuff of which human life is made up. We have to learn to live in reliance on what we saw in the vision, not in ecstasies and conscious contemplation of God, but to live in actualities in the light of the vision until we get to the veritable reality. Every bit of our training is in that direction. Learn to thank God for making known His demands.

The little "I am" always sulks when God says do. Let the little "I am" be shrivelled up in God's indignation—"I AM THAT I AM . . . hath sent me." He must dominate. Is it not penetrating to realise that God knows where we live, and the kennels we crawl into! He will hunt us up like a lightning flash. No human being knows human beings as God does.

OCTOBER 5

THE BIAS OF DEGENERATION

Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. Romans 5:12

The Bible does not say that God punished the human race for one man's sin; but that the disposition of sin, viz., my claim to my right to myself, entered into the human race by one man, and that another Man took on Him the sin of the human race and put it away (Hebrews 9:26)—an infinitely profounder revelation. The disposition of sin is not immorality and wrongdoing, but the disposition of self-realisation—I am my own god. This disposition may work out in decorous morality or in indecorous immorality, but it has the one basis, my claim to my right to myself. When Our Lord faced men with all the forces of evil in them, and men who were clean living and moral and upright, He did not pay any attention to the moral degradation of the one or to the moral attainment of the other; He looked at something we do not see, viz., the disposition.

Sin is a thing I am born with and I cannot touch it; God touches sin in Redemption. In the Cross of Jesus Christ God redeemed the whole human race from the possibility of damnation through the heredity of sin. God nowhere holds a man responsible for having the heredity of sin. The condemnation is not that I am born with a heredity of sin, but if when I realise Jesus Christ came to deliver me from it, I refuse to let Him do so, from that moment I begin to get the seal of damnation. "And this is the judgement" (the critical moment) "that the light is come into the world, and men loved the darkness rather than the light."

OCTOBER 6

THE BENT OF REGENERATION

When it pleased God . . . to reveal His son in me. Galatians 1:15–16

If Jesus Christ is to regenerate me, what is the problem He is up against? I have a heredity I had no say in; I am not holy, nor likely to be; and if all Jesus Christ can do is to tell me I must be holy, His teaching plants despair. But if Jesus Christ is a Regenerator, One Who can put into me His own heredity of holiness, then I begin to see what He is driving at when He says that I have to be holy. Redemption means that Jesus Christ can put into any man the hereditary disposition that was in Himself, and all the standards He gives are based on that disposition: His teaching is for the life He puts in. The moral transaction on my part is agreement with God's verdict on sin in the Cross of Jesus Christ.

The New Testament teaching about regeneration is that when a man is struck by a sense of need, God will put the Holy Spirit into his spirit, and his personal spirit will be energised by the Spirit of the Son of God—"until Christ be formed in you." The moral miracle of Redemption is that God can put into me a new disposition whereby I can live a totally new life. When I reach the frontier of need and know my limitations, Jesus says—"Blessed are you." But I have to get there. God cannot put into me, a responsible moral being, the disposition that was in Jesus Christ unless I am conscious I need it.

Just as the disposition of sin entered into the human race by one man, so the Holy Spirit entered the human race by another Man; and Redemption means that I can be delivered from the heredity of sin and through Jesus Christ can receive an unsullied heredity, viz., the Holy Spirit.

OCTOBER 7

RECONCILIATION

For He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him. 2 Corinthians 5:21

Sin is a fundamental relationship; it is not wrong doing, it is wrong being, deliberate and emphatic independence of God. The Christian religion bases everything on the positive, ²² radical nature of sin. Other religions deal with sins; the Bible alone deals with sin. The first thing Jesus Christ faced in men was the heredity of sin, and it is because we have ignored this in our presentation of the Gospel that the message of the Gospel has lost its sting and its blasting power.

The revelation of the Bible is not that Jesus Christ took upon Himself our fleshly sins, but that He took upon Himself the heredity of sin which no man can touch. God made His own Son to be sin that He might make the sinner a saint. All through the Bible it is revealed that Our Lord bore the sin of the world by identification, not by sympathy. He deliberately took upon His own shoulders, and bore in His own Person, the whole massed sin of the human race—

"He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin," and by so doing He put the whole human race on the basis of Redemption. Jesus Christ rehabilitated the human race; He put it back to where God designed it to be, and anyone can enter into union with God on the ground of what Our Lord has done on the Cross.

A man cannot redeem himself; Redemption is God's "bit," it is absolutely finished and complete; its reference to individual men is a question of their individual action. A distinction must always be made between the revelation of Redemption and the conscious experience of salvation in a man's life.

OCTOBER 8

THE EXCLUSIVENESS OF CHRIST

Come unto Me. Matthew 11:28

Is it not humiliating to be told that we must come to Jesus! Think of the things we will not come to Jesus Christ about. If you want to know how real you are, test yourself by these words—"Come unto Me." In every degree in which you are not real, you will dispute rather than come, you will quibble rather than come, you will go through sorrow rather than come; you will do anything rather than come the last lap of unutterable foolishness—"Just as I am." As long as you have the tiniest bit of spiritual impertinence, it will always reveal itself in the fact that you are expecting God to tell you to do a big thing, and all He is telling you to do is to "come."

"Come unto Me." When you hear those words you will know that something must happen in you before you can come. The Holy Spirit will show you what you have to do, anything at all that will put the axe at the root of the thing which is preventing you from getting through. You will never get further until you are willing to do that one thing. The Holy Spirit will locate the one impregnable thing in you, but He cannot budge it unless you are willing to let Him.

How often have you come to God with your requests and gone away with the feeling—"Oh well, I have done it this time!" And yet you go away with nothing, whilst all the time God has stood with outstretched hands not only to take you, but for you to take Him. Think of the invincible, unconquerable, unwearying patience of Jesus—"Come unto Me."

^{22.} positive: independent; unrelated to anything else.

OCTOBER 9

PULL YOURSELF TOGETHER

Yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness. Romans 6:19

I cannot save and sanctify myself; I cannot atone for sin; I cannot redeem the world; I cannot make right what is wrong, pure what is impure, holy what is unholy. That is all the sovereign work of God. Have I faith in what Jesus Christ has done? He has made a perfect Atonement, am I in the habit of constantly realising it? The great need is not to do things, but to believe things. The Redemption of Christ is not an experience, it is the great act of God which He has performed through Christ, and I have to build my faith upon it. If I construct my faith on my experience, I produce that most unscriptural type, an isolated life, my eyes fixed on my own whiteness. Beware of the piety that has no presupposition in the Atonement of the Lord. It is of no use for anything but a sequestered life; it is useless to God and a nuisance to man. Measure every type of experience by our Lord Himself. We cannot do anything pleasing to God unless we deliberately build on the presupposition of the Atonement.

The Atonement of Jesus has to work out in practical, unobtrusive ways in my life. Every time I obey, absolute Deity is on my side, so that the grace of God and natural obedience coincide. Obedience means that I have banked everything on the Atonement, and my obedience is met immediately by the delight of the supernatural grace of God.

Beware of the piety that denies the natural life, it is a fraud. Continually bring yourself to the bar of the Atonement—where is the discernment of the Atonement in this thing, and in that?

OCTOBER 10

WHEREBY SHALL I KNOW?

I thank Thee, O Father, . . . because Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Matthew 11:25

In spiritual relationships we do not grow step by step, we are either there or we are not. God does not cleanse us more and more from sin, but when we are in the light, walking in the light, we are cleansed from all sin. It is a question of obedience, and instantly the relationship is perfected. Turn away for one second out of obedience, and darkness and death are at work at once.

All God's revelations are sealed until they are opened to us by obedience. You will never get them open by philosophy or thinking. Immediately you obey, a flash of light comes. Let God's truth work in you by soaking in it, not by worrying into it. The only way you can get to know is to stop trying to find out and by being born again. Obey God in the thing He shows you, and instantly the next thing is opened up. We read tomes on the work of the Holy Spirit, when one five minutes of drastic obedience would make things as clear as a sunbeam. "I suppose I shall understand these things some day!" You can understand them now. It is not study that does it, but obedience. The tiniest fragment of obedience, and heaven opens and the profoundest truths of God are yours straight away. God will never reveal more truth about Himself until you have obeyed what you know already. Beware of becoming "wise and prudent."

OCTOBER 11

AFTER GOD'S SILENCE— What?

When He had heard therefore that he was sick, He abode two days still in the same place where He was. John 11:6

Has God trusted you with a silence—a silence that is big with meaning? God's silences are His answers. Think of those days of absolute silence in the home at Bethany! Is there anything analogous to those days in your life? Can God trust you like that, or are you still asking for a visible answer? God will give you the blessings you ask if you will not go any further without them; but His silence is the sign that He is bringing you into a marvellous understanding of Himself. Are you mourning before God because you have not had an audible response? You will find that God has trusted you in the most intimate way possible, with an absolute silence, not of despair, but of pleasure, because He saw that you could stand a bigger revelation. If God has given you a silence, praise Him, He is bringing you into the great run of His purposes. The manifestation of the answer in time is a matter of God's sovereignty. Time is nothing to God. For a while you say—"I asked God to give me bread, and He gave me a stone." He did not, and to-day you find He gave you the bread of life.

A wonderful thing about God's silence is that the contagion of His stillness gets into you and you become perfectly confident—"I know God has heard me." His silence is the proof that He has. As long as you have the idea that God will bless you in answer to prayer, He will do it, but He will never give you the grace of silence. If Jesus Christ is bringing you into the understanding that prayer is for the glorifying of His Father, He will give you the first sign of His intimacy—silence.

OCTOBER 12

GETTING INTO GOD'S STRIDE

Enoch walked with God. Genesis 5:24

The test of a man's religious life and character is not what he does in the exceptional moments of life, but what he does in the ordinary times, when there is nothing tremendous or exciting on. The worth of a man is revealed in his attitude to ordinary things when he is not before the footlights. (Cf. John 1:36) It is a painful business to get through into the stride of God, it means getting your "second wind" spiritually. In learning to walk with God there is always the difficulty of getting into His stride; but when we have got into it, the only characteristic that manifests itself is the life of God. The individual man is lost sight of in his personal union with God, and the stride and the power of God alone are manifested.

It is difficult to get into stride with God, because when we start walking with Him we find He has outstripped us before we have taken three steps. He has different ways of doing things, and we have to be trained and disciplined into His ways. It was said of Jesus, "He shall not fail nor be discouraged," because He never worked from His own individual standpoint but always from the standpoint of His Father, and we have to learn to do the same. Spiritual truth is learned by atmosphere, not by intellectual reasoning. God's Spirit alters the atmosphere of our way of looking at things, and things begin to be possible which never were possible before. Getting into the stride of God means nothing less than union with Himself. It takes a long time to get there, but keep at it. Don't give in because the pain is bad just now, get on with it, and before long you will find you have a new vision and a new purpose.

OCTOBER 13

INDIVIDUAL DISCOURAGEMENT AND PERSONAL ENLARGEMENT

Moses . . . went out unto his brethren, and looked on their burdens. Exodus 2:11

Moses saw the oppression of his people and felt certain that he was the one to deliver them, and in the righteous indignation of his own spirit he started to right their wrongs. After the first strike for God and for the right, God allowed Moses to be driven into blank discouragement, He sent him into the desert to feed sheep for forty years. At the end of that time, God appeared and told Moses to go and bring forth His people, and Moses said—"Who am I, that I should go?" In the beginning Moses realised that he was the man to deliver the people, but he had to be trained and disciplined by God first. He was right in the individual aspect, but he was not the man for the work until he had learned communion with God.

We may have the vision of God and a very clear understanding of what God wants, and we start to do the thing; then comes something equivalent to the forty years in the wilderness, as if God had ignored the whole thing, and when we are thoroughly discouraged God comes back and revives the call, and we get the quaver in and say—"Oh, who am I!" We have to learn the first great stride of God—"I AM THAT I AM ... hath sent me." We have to learn that our individual effort for God is an impertinence; our individuality is to be rendered incandescent by a personal relationship to God (see Matthew 3:11). We fix on the individual aspect of things; we have the vision—"This is what God wants me to do"; but we have not got into God's stride. If you are going through a time of discouragement, there is a big personal enlargement ahead.

OCTOBER 14

THE KEY TO THE MISSIONARY

All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations. Matthew 28:18–19

The basis of missionary appeals is the authority of Jesus Christ, not the needs of the heathen. We are apt to look upon Our Lord as One Who assists us in our enterprises for God. Our Lord puts himself as the absolute sovereign supreme Lord over His disciples. He does not say the heathen will be lost if we do not go; He simply says—"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." Go on the revelation of My sovereignty; teach and preach out of a living experience of Me.

"Then the eleven disciples went . . . into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them" (v. 16). If I want to know the universal sovereignty of Christ, I must know Him for myself, and how to get alone with Him; I must take time to worship the Being Whose Name I bear. "Come unto Me"—that is the place to meet Jesus. Are you weary and heavy laden? How many missionaries are! We banish those marvellous words of the universal Sovereign of the world to the threshold of an aftermeeting; they are the words of Jesus to His disciples.

"Go ye therefore. . . . " "Go" simply means live. Acts 1:8 is the description of how to go. Jesus did not say—Go into Jerusalem and Judea and Samaria, but, "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me" in all these places. He undertakes to establish the goings.

"If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you . . ."—that is the way to keep going in our personal lives. Where we are placed is a matter of indifference; God engineers the goings. "None of these things move me. . . ." That is how to keep going till you're gone!

OCTOBER 15

THE KEY TO THE MISSIONARY MESSAGE

And He is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. 1 John 2:2

The key to the missionary message is the propitiation of Christ Jesus. Take any phase of Christ's work—the healing phase, the saving and sanctifying phase; there is nothing limitless about those. "The Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!"—that is limitless. The missionary message is the limitless significance of Jesus Christ as the propitiation for our sins, and a missionary is one who is soaked in that revelation.

The key to the missionary message is the remissionary aspect of Christ's life, not His kindness and His goodness, and His revealing of the Fatherhood of God; the great limitless significance is that He is the propitiation for our sins. The missionary message is not patriotic, it is irrespective of nations and of individuals, it is for the whole world. When the Holy Ghost comes in He does not consider my predilections, He brings me into union with the Lord Jesus.

A missionary is one who is wedded to the charter of his Lord and Master; he has not to proclaim his own point of view, but to proclaim the Lamb of God. It is easier to belong to a coterie which tells what Jesus Christ has done for me, easier to become a devotee to Divine healing, or to a special type of sanctification, or to the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Paul did not say—"Woe is unto me, if I do not preach what Christ has done for me," but—"Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" This is the Gospel—"The Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!"

OCTOBER 16

THE KEY TO THE MASTER'S ORDERS

Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into His harvest. Matthew 9:38

The key to the missionary problem is in the hand of God, and that key is prayer, not work, that is, not work as the word is popularly understood to-day, because that may mean the evasion of concentration on God. The key to the missionary problem is not the key of common sense, nor the medical key, nor the key of civilisation or education or even evangelisation. The key is prayer. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest." Naturally, prayer is not practical, it is absurd; we have to realise that prayer is stupid from the ordinary commonsense point of view.

There are no nations in Jesus Christ's outlook, but the world. How many of us pray without respect of persons, and with respect to only one Person, Jesus Christ? He owns the harvest that is produced by distress and conviction of sin, and this is the harvest we have to pray that labourers may be thrust out to reap. We are taken up with active work while people all round are ripe to harvest, and we do not reap one of them, but waste our Lord's time in over-energised activities. Suppose the crisis comes in your father's life, in your brother's life, are you there as a labourer to reap the harvest for Jesus Christ? "Oh, but I have a special work to do!" No Christian has a special work to do. A Christian is called to be Jesus Christ's own, one who is not above his Master, one who does not dictate to Jesus Christ what he intends to do. Our Lord calls to no special work: He calls to Himself. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest," and He will engineer circumstances and thrust you out.

OCTOBER 17

GREATER WORKS

And greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto My Father. John 14:12

Prayer does not fit us for the greater works; prayer is the greater work. We think of prayer as a commonsense exercise of our higher powers in order to prepare us for God's work. In the teaching of Jesus Christ prayer is the working of the miracle of Redemption in me which produces the miracle of Redemption in others by the power of God. The way fruit remains is by prayer, but remember it is prayer based on the agony of Redemption, not on my agony. Only a child gets prayer answered; a wise man does not.

Prayer is the battle; it is a matter of indifference where you are. Whichever way God engineers circumstances, the duty is to pray. Never allow the thought—"I am of no use where I am"; because you certainly can be of no use where you are not. Wherever God has dumped you down in circumstances, pray to Him all the time. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do." We won't pray unless we get thrills, that is the intensest form of spiritual selfishness. We have to labour along the line of God's direction, and He says pray. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into His harvest."

There is nothing thrilling about a labouring man's work, but it is the labouring man who makes the conceptions of the genius possible; and it is the labouring saint who makes the conceptions of his Master possible. You labour at prayer and results happen all the time from God's standpoint. What an astonishment it will be to find, when the veil is lifted, the souls that have been reaped by you, simply because you had been in the habit of taking your orders from Jesus Christ.

OCTOBER 18

THE KEY TO THE MISSIONARY DEVOTION

For His name's sake they went forth. 3 John 7

Our Lord has told us how love to Him is to manifest itself. "Lovest thou Me? . . . Feed My sheep"—identify yourself with My interests in other people, not, identify Me with your interests in other people. 1 Corinthians 13:4–8 gives the character of this love, it is the love of God expressing itself. The test of my love for Jesus is the practical one, all the rest is sentimental jargon.

Loyalty to Jesus Christ is the supernatural work of Redemption wrought in me by the Holy Ghost Who sheds abroad the love of God in my heart, and that love works efficaciously through me in contact with everyone I meet. I remain loyal to His name although every commonsense fact gives the lie to Him, and declares that He has no more power than a morning mist.

The key to missionary devotion means being attached to nothing and no one saving Our Lord Himself, not being detached from things externally. Our Lord was amazingly in and out among ordinary things; His detachment was on the inside towards God. External detachment is often an indication of a secret vital attachment to the things we keep away from externally. The loyalty of a missionary is to keep his soul concentratedly open to the nature of the Lord Jesus Christ. The men and women Our Lord sends out on His enterprises are the ordinary human stuff, plus dominating devotion to Himself wrought by the Holy Ghost.

OCTOBER 19

THE UNHEEDED SECRET

My kingdom is not of this world. John 18:36

The great enemy to the Lord Jesus Christ in the present day is the conception of practical work that has not come from the New Testament, but from the systems of the world in which endless energy and activities are insisted upon, but no private life with God. The emphasis is put on the wrong thing. Jesus said, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; . . . for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you," a hidden, obscure thing. An active Christian worker too often lives in the shop window. It is the innermost of the innermost that reveals the power of the life.

We have to get rid of the plague of the spirit of the religious age in which we live. In Our Lord's life there was none of the press and rush of tremendous activity that we regard so highly, and the disciple is to be as his Master. The central thing about the kingdom of Jesus Christ is a personal relationship to Himself, not public usefulness to men. It is not its practical activities that are the strength of this Bible Training College, its whole strength lies in the fact that here you are put into soak before God. You have no idea of where God is going to engineer your circumstances, no knowledge of what strain is going to be put on you either at home or abroad, and if you waste your time in over-active energies instead of getting into soak on the great fundamental truths of God's Redemption, you will snap when the strain comes; but if this time of soaking before God is being spent in getting rooted and grounded in God on the un-practical line, you will remain true to Him whatever happens.

OCTOBER 20

IS GOD'S WILL MY WILL?

This is the will of God, even your sanctification. 1 Thessalonians 4:3

It is not a question of whether God is willing to sanctify me; is it my will? Am I willing to let God do in me all that has been made possible by the Atonement? Am I willing to let Jesus be made sanctification to me, and to let the life of Jesus be manifested in my mortal flesh? Beware of saying—"Oh, I am longing to be sanctified." You are not, stop longing and make it a matter of transaction—"Nothing in my hands I bring." Receive Jesus Christ to be made sanctification to you in implicit faith, and the great marvel of the Atonement will be made real in you. All that Jesus made possible is made mine by the free loving gift of God on the ground of what He performed. My attitude as a saved and sanctified soul is that of profound humble holiness (there is no such thing as proud holiness), a holiness based on agonising repentance and a sense of unspeakable shame and degradation; and also on the amazing realisation that the love of God commended itself to me in that while I cared nothing about Him, He completed everything for my salvation and sanctification (see Romans 5:8). No wonder Paul says nothing is "able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Sanctification makes me one with Jesus Christ, and in Him one with God, and it is done only through the superb Atonement of Christ. Never put the effect as the cause. The effect in me is obedience and service and prayer, and is the outcome of speechless thanks and adoration for the marvellous sanctification wrought out in me because of the Atonement.

OCTOBER 21

DIRECTION BY IMPULSE

Building up yourselves on your most holy faith. Jude 20

There was nothing either of the nature of impulse or of cold-bloodedness about Our Lord, but only a calm strength that never got into panic. Most of us develop our Christianity along the line of our temperament, not along the line of God. Impulse is a trait in natural life, but Our Lord always ignores it, because it hinders the development of the life of a disciple. Watch how the Spirit of God checks impulse, His checks bring a rush of self-conscious foolishness which makes us instantly want to vindicate ourselves. Impulse is all right in a child, but it is disastrous in a man or woman; an impulsive man is always a petted man. Impulse has to be trained into intuition by discipline.

Discipleship is built entirely on the supernatural grace of God. Walking on the water is easy to impulsive pluck, but walking on dry land as a disciple of Jesus Christ is a different thing. Peter walked on the water to go to Jesus, but he followed Him afar off on the land. We do not need the grace of God to stand crises, human nature and pride are sufficient, we can face the strain magnificently; but it does require the supernatural grace of God to live twenty-four hours in every day as a saint, to go through drudgery as a disciple, to live an ordinary, unobserved, ignored existence as a disciple of Jesus. It is inbred in us that we have to do exceptional things for God; but we have not. We have to be exceptional in the ordinary things, to be holy in mean streets, among mean people, and this is not learned in five minutes.

OCTOBER 22

THE WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT

The Spirit Himself beareth witness with our spirit. . . . Romans 8:16 (RV)

We are in danger of getting the barter spirit when we come to God, we want the witness before we have done what God tells us to do. "Why does not God reveal Himself to me?" He cannot; it is not that He will not, but He cannot, because you are in the road as long as you won't abandon absolutely to Him. Immediately you do, God witnesses to Himself; He cannot witness to you, but He witnesses instantly to His own nature in you. If you had the witness before the reality, it would end in sentimental emotion. Immediately you transact on the Redemption and stop the impertinence of debate, God gives you the witness. As soon as you abandon reasoning and argument, God witnesses to what He has done, and you are amazed at your impertinence in having kept Him waiting. If you are in debate as to whether God can deliver from sin, either let Him do it, or tell Him He cannot. Do not quote this and that person, try Matthew 11:28—"Come unto Me." Come, if you are weary and heavy laden; ask if you know you are evil (Luke 11:13).

The simplicity that comes from our natural commonsense decisions is apt to be mistaken for the witness of the Spirit, but the Spirit witnesses only to His own nature and to the work of Redemption, never to our reason. If we try to make Him witness to our reason, it is no wonder we are in darkness and perplexity. Fling it all overboard, trust in God, and He will give the witness.

OCTOBER 23

NOT A BIT OF IT!

If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away. 2 Corinthians 5:17

Our Lord never nurses our prejudices, He mortifies them, runs clean athwart them. We imagine that God has a special interest in our particular prejudices; we are quite sure that God will never deal with us as we know He has to deal with other people. "God must deal with other people in a very stern way, but of course He knows that my prejudices are all right." We have to learn—"Not a bit of it!" Instead of God being on the side of our prejudices, He is deliberately wiping them out. It is part of our moral education to have our prejudices run straight across by His providence, and to watch how He does it.

God pays no respect to anything we bring to Him; there is only one thing He wants of us, and that is our unconditional surrender. When we are born again, the Holy Spirit begins to work His new creation in us, and there will come a time when there is not a bit of the old order left; the old solemnity goes, the old attitude to things goes, and "all things are of God." How are we going to get the life that has no lust, no self-interest, no sensitiveness to pokes, the love that is not provoked, that thinketh no evil, that is always kind? The only way is by allowing not a bit of the old life to be left, but only simple perfect trust in God, such trust that we no longer want God's blessings, but only want Himself. Have we come to the place where God can withdraw His blessings and it does not affect our trust in Him? When once we see God at work, we will never bother our heads about things that happen, because we are actually trusting in our Father in Heaven Whom the world cannot see.

OCTOBER 24

THE VIEWPOINT

Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ. 2 Corinthians 2:14

The viewpoint of a worker for God must not be as near the highest as he can get, it must be the highest. Be careful to maintain strenuously God's point of view, it has to be done every day, bit by bit; don't think on the finite. No outside power can touch the viewpoint.

The viewpoint to maintain is that we are here for one purpose only, viz., to be captives in the train of Christ's triumphs. We are not in God's showroom, we are here to exhibit one thing—the absolute captivity of our lives to Jesus Christ. How small the other points of view are—"I am standing alone battling for Jesus"; "I have to maintain the cause of Christ and hold this fort for Him." Paul says—"I am in the train of a conqueror, and it does not matter what the difficulties are, I am always led in triumph." Is this idea being worked out practically in us? Paul's secret joy was that God took him, a red-handed rebel against Jesus Christ, and made him a captive, and now that is all he is here for. Paul's joy was to be a captive of the Lord, he had no other interest in heaven or on earth. It is a shameful thing for a Christian to talk about getting the victory. The Victor ought to have got us so completely that it is His victory all the time, and we are more than conquerors through Him. "For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ." We are enwheeled with the odour of Jesus, and wherever we go we are a wonderful refreshment to God.

OCTOBER 25

THE EXTERNAL CRUSH OF THINGS

I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. 1 Corinthians 9:22

A Christian worker has to learn how to be God's noble man or woman amid a crowd of ignoble things. Never make this plea—"If only I were somewhere else!" All God's men are ordinary men made extraordinary by the matter He has given them. Unless we have the right matter in our minds intellectually and in our hearts affectionately, we will be hustled out of usefulness to God. We are not workers for God by choice. Many people deliberately choose to be workers, but they have no matter in them of God's almighty grace, no matter of His mighty word. Paul's whole heart and mind and soul were taken up with the great matter of what Jesus Christ came to do, he never lost sight of that one thing. We have to face ourselves with the one central fact—Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.

"I have chosen you." Keep that note of greatness in your creed. It is not that you have got God, but that He has got you. Here, in this College, God is at work, bending, breaking, moulding, doing just as He chooses. Why He is doing it, we do not know; He is doing it for one purpose only—that He may be able to say, "This is My man, My woman." We have to be in God's hand so that He can plant men on the Rock as He has planted us.

Never choose to be a worker, but when God has put His call on you, woe be to you if you turn to the right hand or to the left. He will do with you what He never did with you before the call came; He will do with you what He is not doing with other people. Let Him have His way.

OCTOBER 26

WHAT IS A MISSIONARY?

As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you. John 20:21

A missionary is one sent by Jesus Christ as He was sent by God. The great dominant note is not the needs of men, but the command of Jesus. The source of our inspiration in work for God is behind, not before. The tendency to-day is to put the inspiration ahead, to sweep everything in front of us and bring it all out to our conception of success. In the New Testament the inspiration is put behind us, the Lord Jesus. The ideal is to be true to Him, to carry out His enterprises.

Personal attachment to the Lord Jesus and His point of view is the one thing that must not be overlooked. In missionary enterprise the great danger is that God's call is effaced by the needs of the people until human sympathy absolutely overwhelms the meaning of being sent by Jesus. The needs are so enormous, the conditions so perplexing, that every power of mind falters and fails. We forget that the one great reason underneath all missionary enterprise is not first the elevation of the people, nor the education of the people, nor their needs; but first and foremost the command of Jesus Christ—"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations."

When looking back on the lives of men and women of God the tendency is to say—"What wonderfully astute wisdom they had! How perfectly they understood all God wanted!" The astute mind behind is the Mind of God, not human wisdom at all. We give credit to human wisdom when we should give credit to the Divine guidance of God through child-like people who were foolish enough to trust God's wisdom and the supernatural equipment of God.

OCTOBER 27

THE METHOD OF MISSIONS

Go ye therefore, and teach [disciple] all nations. Matthew 28:19

Jesus Christ did not say—"Go and save souls" (the salvation of souls is the supernatural work of God), but—"Go and teach," i.e., disciple, "all nations," and you cannot make disciples unless you are a disciple yourself. When the disciples came back from their first mission, they were filled with joy because the devils were subject to them, and Jesus said—"Don't rejoice in successful service; the great secret of joy is that you are rightly related to Me." The great essential of the missionary is that he remains true to the call of God, and realises that his one purpose is to disciple men and women to Jesus. There is a passion for souls that does not spring from God, but from the desire to make converts to our point of view.

The challenge to the missionary does not come on the line that people are difficult to get saved, that backsliders are difficult to reclaim, that there is a "wadge" of callous indifference; but along the line of his own personal relationship to Jesus Christ. "Believe ye that I am able to do this?" Our Lord puts that question steadily, it faces us in every individual case we meet. The one great challenge is—Do I know my risen Lord? Do I know the power of His indwelling

Spirit? Am I wise enough in God's sight, and foolish enough according to the world, to bank on what Jesus Christ has said; or am I abandoning the great supernatural position, which is the only call for a missionary, viz., boundless confidence in Christ Jesus? If I take up any other method, I depart altogether from the method laid down by Our Lord—"All power is given unto Me. . . . Go ye therefore."

OCTOBER 28

JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH

For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by His life. Romans 5:10

I am not saved by believing; I realise I am saved by believing. It is not repentance that saves me; repentance is the sign that I realise what God has done in Christ Jesus. The danger is to put the emphasis on the effect instead of on the cause—"It is my obedience that puts me right with God, my consecration." Never! I am put right with God because prior to all, Christ died. When I turn to God and by belief accept what God reveals I can accept, instantly the stupendous Atonement of Jesus Christ rushes me into a right relationship with God, and by the supernatural miracle of God's grace I stand justified, not because I am sorry for my sin, not because I have repented, but because of what Jesus has done. The spirit of God brings it with a breaking, all-over light, and I know, though I do not know how, that I am saved.

The salvation of God does not stand on human logic, it stands on the sacrificial Death of Jesus. We can be born again because of the Atonement of Our Lord. Sinful men and women can be changed into new creatures, not by their repentance or their belief, but by the marvellous work of God in Christ Jesus which is prior to all experience. The impregnable safety of justification and sanctification is God Himself. We have not to work out these things ourselves; they have been worked out by the Atonement: The supernatural becomes natural by the miracle of God; there is the realisation of what Jesus Christ has already done—"It is finished."

OCTOBER 29

SUBSTITUTION

He hath made Him to be sin for us, . . . that we might be made the righteousness of God. . . . 2 Corinthians 5:21

The modern view of the death of Jesus is that He died for our sins out of sympathy. The New Testament view is that He bore our sin not by sympathy, but by identification. He was made to be sin. Our sins are removed because of the death of Jesus, and the explanation of His death is His obedience to His Father, not His sympathy with us. We are acceptable with God not because we have obeyed, or because we have promised to give up things, but because of the death of Christ, and in no other way. We say that Jesus Christ came to reveal the Fatherhood of God, the loving-kindness of God; the New Testament says He came to bear away the sin of the world (RV mg). The revelation of His Father is to those to whom He has been introduced as Saviour: Iesus Christ never spoke of Himself to the world as one Who revealed the Father, but as a stumbling-block (see John 15:22– 24). John 14:9 was spoken to His disciples.

That Christ died for me, therefore I go scot free, is never taught in the New Testament. What is taught in the New Testament is that "He died for all" (not—He died my death), and that by identification with His death I can be freed from sin, and have imparted to me His very righteousness. The substitution taught in the New Testament is twofold: "He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." It is not Christ for me unless I am determined to have Christ formed in me.

FAITH

Without faith it is impossible to please Him. Hebrews 11:6

Faith in antagonism to common sense is fanaticism, and common sense in antagonism to faith is rationalism. The life of faith brings the two into a right relation. Common sense is not faith, and faith is not common sense; they stand in the relation of the natural and the spiritual; of impulse and inspiration. Nothing Jesus Christ ever said is common sense, it is revelation sense, and it reaches the shores where common sense fails. Faith must be tried before the reality of faith is actual. "We know that all things work together for good," then no matter what happens, the alchemy of God's providence transfigures the ideal faith into actual reality. Faith always works on the personal line, the whole purpose of God being to see that the ideal faith is made real in His children. For every detail of the commonsense life, there is a revelation fact of God whereby we can prove in practical experience what we believe God to be. Faith is a tremendously active principle which always puts Jesus Christ first—"Lord, Thou hast said so and so" (e.g., Matthew 6:33), "it looks mad, but I am going to venture on Thy word." To turn head faith into a personal possession is a fight always, not sometimes. God brings us into circumstances in order to educate our faith, because the nature of faith is to make its object real. Until we know Jesus, God is a mere abstraction, we cannot have faith in Him; but immediately we hear Jesus say—"He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father," we have something that is real, and faith is boundless. Faith is the whole man rightly related to God by the power of the Spirit of Jesus Christ.

OCTOBER 31

DISCERNMENT OF FAITH

Faith as a grain of mustard seed . . . Matthew 17:20

We have the idea that God rewards us for our faith, it may be so in the initial stages; but we do not earn anything by faith. Faith brings us into right relationship with God and gives God His opportunity. God has frequently to knock the bottom board out of your experience if you are a saint in order to get you into contact with Himself. God wants you to understand that it is a life of faith, not a life of sentimental enjoyment of His blessings. Your earlier life of faith was narrow and intense, settled around a little sun-spot of experience that had as much of sense as of faith in it, full of light and sweetness; then God withdrew His conscious blessings in order to teach you to walk by faith. You are worth far more to Him now than you were in your days of conscious delight and thrilling testimony.

Faith by its very nature must be tried, and the real trial of faith is not that we find it difficult to trust God, but that God's character has to be cleared in our own minds. Faith in its actual working out has to go through spells of unsyllabled isolation. Never confound the trial of faith with the ordinary discipline of life. Much that we call the trial of faith is the inevitable result of being alive. Faith in the Bible is faith in God against every thing that contradicts Him—"I will remain true to God's character whatever He may do." "Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him"—this is the most sublime utterance of faith in the whole of the Bible.

November 1

YE ARE NOT YOUR OWN

Know ye not that . . . ye are not your own? 1 Corinthians 6:19

There is no such thing as a private life—"a world within the world"—for a man or woman who is brought into fellowship with Jesus Christ's sufferings. God breaks up the private life of His saints, and makes it a thoroughfare for the world on the one hand and for Himself on the other. No human being can stand that unless he is identified with Jesus Christ. We are not sanctified for ourselves, we are called into the fellowship of the Gospel, and things happen which have nothing to do with us, God is getting us into fellowship with Himself. Let Him have his way, if you do not, instead of being of the slightest use to God in His Redemptive work in the world, you will be a hindrance and a clog.

The first thing God does with us is to get us based on rugged Reality until we do not care what becomes of us individually as long as He gets His way for the purpose of His Redemption. Why shouldn't we go through heartbreaks? Through these doorways God is opening up ways of fellowship with His Son. Most of us fall and collapse at the first grip of pain; we sit down on the threshold of God's purpose and die away of self-pity, and all so-called Christian sympathy will aid us to our death-bed. But God will not. He comes with the grip of the pierced hand of His Son, and says—"Enter into fellowship with Me; arise and shine." If through a broken heart God can bring His purposes to pass in the world, then thank Him for breaking your heart.

November 2

AUTHORITY AND INDEPENDENCE

If ye love Me, ye will keep My commandments. John 14:15 (RV)

Our Lord never insists upon obedience; He tells us very emphatically what we ought to do, but He never takes means to make us do it. We have to obey Him out of oneness of spirit. That is why when Our Lord talked about discipleship, He prefaced it with an IF—you do not need to unless you like. "If any man will be My disciple, let him deny himself"; let him give up his right to himself to Me. Our Lord is not talking of eternal positions, but of being of value to Himself in this order of things, that is why He sounds so stern (cf. Luke 14:26). Never interpret these words apart from the One who uttered them.

The Lord does not give me rules, He makes His standard very clear, and if my relationship to Him is that of love, I will do what He says without any hesitation. If I hesitate, it is because I love someone else in competition with Him, viz., myself. Jesus Christ will not help me to obey Him, I must obey Him; and when I do obey Him, I fulfil my spiritual destiny. My personal life may be crowded with small petty incidents, altogether unnoticeable and mean, 23 but if I obey Jesus Christ in the haphazard circumstances, they become pinholes through which I see the face of God, and when I stand face to face with God I shall discover that through my obedience thousands were blessed. When once God's Redemption comes to the point of obedience in a human soul, it always creates. If I obey Jesus Christ, the Redemption of God will rush through me to other lives, because behind the deed of obedience is the Reality of Almighty God.

November 3

A BOND-SLAVE OF JESUS

I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me. Galatians 2:20

These words mean the breaking of my independence with my own hand and surrendering to the supremacy of the Lord Jesus. No one can do this for me, I must do it myself. God may bring me to the point three hundred and sixty-five times a year, but He cannot put me through it. It means breaking the husk of my individual independence of God, and the emancipation of my personality into oneness with Himself, not for my own ideas, but for absolute loyalty to Jesus. There is no possibility of dispute when once I am there. Very few of us know anything about loyalty to Christ—"For my sake." It is that which makes the iron saint.

Has that break come? All the rest is pious fraud. The one point to decide is—Will I give up, will I surrender to Jesus Christ, and make no conditions whatever as to how the break comes? I must be broken from my self-realisation, and immediately that point is reached, the reality of the supernatural identification takes place at once, and the witness of the Spirit of God is unmistakable—"I have been crucified with Christ" (RV).

The passion of Christianity is that I deliberately sign away my own rights and become a bond-slave of Jesus Christ. Until I do that, I do not begin to be a saint.

One student a year who hears God's call would be sufficient for God to have called this College into existence. This College as an organisation is not worth anything, it is not academic; it is for nothing else but for God to help Himself to lives. Is He going to help Himself to us, or are we taken up with our conception of what we are going to be?

^{23.} mean: as used here, something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

November 4

THE AUTHORITY OF REALITY

Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you. James 4:8

It is essential to give people a chance of acting on the truth of God. The responsibility must be left with the individual, you cannot act for him, it must be his own deliberate act, but the evangelical message ought always to lead a man to act. The paralysis of refusing to act leaves a man exactly where he was before; when once he acts, he is never the same. It is the foolishness of it that stands in the way of hundreds who have been convicted by the Spirit of God. Immediately I precipitate myself over into an act, that second I live; all the rest is existence. The moments when I truly live are the moments when I act with my whole will.

Never allow a truth of God that is brought home to your soul to pass without acting on it, not necessarily physically, but in will. Record it, with ink or with blood. The feeblest saint who transacts business with Jesus Christ is emancipated the second he acts; all the almighty power of God is on his behalf. We come up to the truth of God, we confess we are wrong, but go back again; then we come up to it again, and go back; until we learn that we have no business to go back. We have to go clean over on some word of our redeeming Lord and transact business with Him. His word "come" means "transact." "Come unto Me." The last thing we do is to come; but everyone who does come knows that that second the supernatural life of God invades him instantly. The dominating power of the world, the flesh and the devil is paralysed, not by your act, but because your act has linked you on to God and His redemptive power.

November 5

PARTAKERS OF HIS SUFFERINGS

Rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings. 1 Peter 4:13

If you are going to be used by God, He will take you through a multitude of experiences that are not meant for you at all; they are meant to make you useful in His hands, and to enable you to understand what transpires in other souls so that you will never be surprised at what you come across. "Oh, I can't deal with that person." Why not? God gave you ample opportunity to soak before Him on that line, and you "barged off" because it seemed stupid to spend time in that way.

The sufferings of Christ are not those of ordinary men. He suffered "according to the will of God," not from the point of view we suffer from as individuals. It is only when we are related to Jesus Christ that we can understand what God is after in His dealings with us. It is part of Christian culture to know what God's aim is. In the history of the Christian Church the tendency has been to evade being identified with the sufferings of Jesus Christ; men have sought to procure the carrying out of God's order by a short cut of their own. God's way is always the way of suffering, the way of the "long, long trail."

Are we partakers of Christ's sufferings? Are we prepared for God to stamp our personal ambitions right out? Are we prepared for God to destroy by transfiguration our individual determinations? It will not mean that we know exactly why God is taking us that way; that would make us spiritual prigs. We never realise at the time what God is putting us through; we go through it more or less misunderstandingly; then we come to a luminous place and say—"Why, God has girded me, though I did not know it!"

November 6

PROGRAMME OF BELIEF

Believest thou this? John 11:26

Martha believed in the power at the disposal of Jesus Christ; she believed that if He had been present He could have healed her brother. She also believed that Jesus had a peculiar intimacy with God and that whatever He asked of God, God would do; but she needed a closer personal intimacy with Jesus. Martha's programme of belief had its fulfilment in the future; Jesus led her on until her belief became a personal possession, and then slowly emerged into a particular inheritance—"Yea, Lord: I believe that Thou art the Christ. . . ."

Is there something like that in the Lord's dealings with you? Is Jesus educating you into a personal intimacy with Himself? Let Him press home His question to you—"Believest thou this?" What is your ordeal of doubt? Have you come, like Martha, to some overwhelming passage in your circumstances where your programme of belief is about to emerge into a personal belief? This can never be until a personal need arises out of a personal problem.

To believe is to commit. In the programme of mental belief I commit myself, and abandon all that is not related to that commitment. In personal belief I commit myself morally to this way of confidence and refuse to compromise with any other; and in particular belief I commit myself spiritually to Jesus Christ, and determine in that thing to be dominated by the Lord alone.

When I stand face to face with Jesus Christ and He says to me—"Believest thou this?" I find that faith is as natural as breathing, and I am staggered that I was so stupid as not to trust Him before.

THE UNDETECTED SACREDNESS OF CIRCUMSTANCES

All things work together for good to them that love God. Romans 8:28

The circumstances of a saint's life are ordained of God. In the life of a saint there is no such thing as chance. God by His providence brings you into circumstances that you cannot understand at all, but the Spirit of God understands. God is bringing you into places and among people and into conditions in order that the intercession of the Spirit in you may take a particular line. Never put your hand in front of the circumstances and say-"I am going to be my own providence here; I must watch this, and guard that." All your circumstances are in the hand of God, therefore never think it strange concerning the circumstances you are in. Your part in intercessory prayer is not to enter into the agony of intercession, but to utilise the commonsense circumstances God puts you in, and the commonsense people He puts you amongst by His providence, to bring them before God's throne and give the Spirit in you a chance to intercede for them: In this way God is going to sweep the whole world with His saints.

Am I making the Holy Spirit's work difficult by being indefinite, or by trying to do His work for Him? I must do the human side of intercession, and the human side is the circumstances I am in and the people I am in contact with. I have to keep my conscious life as a shrine of the Holy Ghost, then as I bring the different ones before God, the Holy Spirit makes intercession for them.

Your intercessions can never be mine, and my intercessions can never be yours, but the Holy Ghost makes intercession in our particular lives, without which intercession someone will be impoverished.

NOVEMBER 8

THE UNRIVALLED POWER OF PRAYER

We know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. Romans 8:26

We realise that we are energised by the Holy Spirit for prayer; we know what it is to pray in the Spirit; but we do not so often realise that the Holy Spirit Himself prays in us prayers which we cannot utter. When we are born again of God and are indwelt by the Spirit of God, He expresses for us the unutterable.

"He," the Spirit in you, "maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God," and God searches your heart not to know what your conscious prayers are, but to find out what is the prayer of the Holy Spirit.

The Spirit of God needs the nature of the believer as a shrine in which to offer His intercession. "Your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost." When Jesus Christ cleansed the temple, He "would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the temple." The Spirit of God will not allow you to use your body for your own convenience. Jesus ruthlessly cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and said—"My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves."

Have we recognised that our body is the temple of the Holy Ghost? If so, we must be careful to keep it undefiled for Him. We have to remember that our conscious life, though it is only a tiny bit of our personality, is to be regarded by us as a shrine of the Holy Ghost. He will look after the unconscious part that we know nothing of; but we must see that we guard the conscious part for which we are responsible.

November 9

SACRAMENTAL SERVICE

Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ . . . Colossians 1:24

The Christian worker has to be a sacramental "gobetween," to be so identified with his Lord and the reality of His Redemption that He can continually bring His creating life through him. It is not the strength of one man's personality being superimposed on another, but the real presence of Christ coming through the elements of the worker's life. When we preach the historic facts of the life and death of Our Lord as they are conveyed in the New Testament, our words are made sacramental; God uses them on the ground of His Redemption to create in those who listen that which is not created otherwise. If we preach the effects of Redemption in human life instead of the revelation regarding Jesus, the result in those who listen is not new birth, but refined spiritual culture, and the Spirit of God cannot witness to it because such preaching is in another domain. We have to see that we are in such living sympathy with God that as we proclaim His truth He can create in souls the things which He alone can do.

"What a wonderful personality!" "What a fascinating man!" "Such marvellous insight!" What chance has the Gospel of God through all that? It cannot get through, because the line of attraction is always the line of appeal. If a man attracts by his personality, his appeal is along that line; if he is identified with his Lord's personality, then the appeal is along the line of what Jesus Christ can do. The danger is to glory in men; Jesus says we are to lift Him up.

November 10

FELLOWSHIP IN THE GOSPEL

Fellow labourer in the gospel of Christ. 1 Thessalonians 3:2

After sanctification it is difficult to state what your aim in life is, because God has taken you up into His purpose by the Holy Ghost. He is using you now for His purposes throughout the world as He used His Son for the purpose of our salvation. If you seek great things for yourself—"God has called me for this and that," you are putting a barrier to God's use of you. As long as you have a personal interest in your own character, or any set ambition, you cannot get through into identification with God's interests. You can only get there by losing for ever any idea of yourself and by letting God take you right out into His purpose for the world, and because your goings are of the Lord, you can never understand your ways.

I have to learn that the aim in life is God's, not mine. God is using me from His great personal standpoint, and all He asks of me is that I trust Him, and never say—"Lord, this gives me such heartache." To talk in that way makes me a clog. When I stop telling God what I want, He can catch me up for what He wants without let or hindrance.²⁴ He can crumple me up or exalt me, He can do anything He chooses. He simply asks me to have implicit faith in Himself and in His goodness. Self-pity is of the devil; if I go off on that line I cannot be used by God for His purpose in the world. I have "a world within the world" in which I live, and God will never be able to get me outside it because I am afraid of being frost-bitten.

November 11

THE SUPREME CLIMB

Take now thy son. . . . Genesis 22:2

God's command is—Take now, not presently. It is extraordinary how we debate! We know a thing is right, but we try to find excuses for not doing it at once. To climb to the height God shows can never be done presently, it must be done now. The sacrifice is gone through in will before it is performed actually.

"And Abraham rose up early in the morning, . . . and went unto the place of which God had told him" (v. 3). The wonderful simplicity of Abraham! When God spoke, he did not confer with flesh and blood. Beware when you want to confer with flesh and blood, i.e., your own sympathies, your own insight, anything that is not based on your personal relationship to God. These are the things that compete with and hinder obedience to God.

Abraham did not choose the sacrifice. Always guard against self-chosen service for God; self-sacrifice may be a disease. If God has made your cup sweet, drink it with grace; if He has made it bitter, drink it in communion with Him. If the providential order of God for you is a hard time of difficulty, go through with it, but never choose the scene of your martyrdom. God chose the crucible for Abraham, and Abraham made no demur; he went steadily through. If you are not living in touch with Him, it is easy to pass a crude verdict on God. You must go through the crucible before you have any right to pronounce a verdict, because in the crucible you learn to know God better. God is working for His highest ends until His purpose and man's purpose become one.

November 12

THE TRANSFIGURED LIFE

If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. 2 Corinthians 5:17

What idea have you of the salvation of your soul? The experience of salvation means that in your actual life things are really altered, you no longer look at things as you used to; your desires are new, old things have lost their power. One of the touchstones of experience is—Has God altered the thing that matters? If you still hanker after the old things, it is absurd to talk about being born from above (RV mg), you are juggling with yourself. If you are born again, the Spirit of God makes the alteration manifest in your actual life and reasoning, and when the crisis comes you are the most amazed person on earth at the wonderful difference there is in you. There is no possibility of imagining that you did it. It is this complete and amazing alteration that is the evidence that you are a saved soul.

What difference has my salvation and sanctification made? For instance, can I stand in the light of 1 Corinthians 13, or do I have to shuffle? The salvation that is worked out in me by the Holy Ghost emancipates me entirely, and as long as I walk in the light as God is in the light, He sees nothing to censure, because His life is working out in every particular, not to my consciousness, but deeper than my consciousness.

November 13

FAITH AND EXPERIENCE

The Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me. Galatians 2:20

We have to battle through our moods into absolute devotion to the Lord Jesus, to get out of the hole-and-corner business of our experience into abandoned devotion to Him. Think Who the New Testament says that Jesus Christ is, and then think of the despicable meanness²⁵ of the miserable faith we have—"I haven't had this and that experience!" Think what faith in Jesus Christ claims—that He can present us faultless before the throne of God, unutterably pure, absolutely rectified and profoundly justified. Stand in implicit, adoring faith in Him, He is "made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." How can we talk of making a sacrifice for the Son of God! Our salvation is from hell and perdition, and then we talk about making sacrifices!

We have to get out into faith in Jesus Christ continually; not a prayer meeting Jesus Christ, nor a book Jesus Christ, but the New Testament Jesus Christ, Who is God Incarnate, and Who ought to strike us to His feet as dead. Our faith must be in the One from Whom our experience springs. Jesus Christ wants our absolute abandon of devotion to Himself. We never can experience Jesus Christ, nor ever hold Him within the compass of our own hearts, but our faith must be built in strong emphatic confidence in Him.

It is along this line that we see the rugged impatience of the Holy Ghost against unbelief. All our fears are wicked, and we fear because we will not nourish ourselves in our faith. How can anyone who is identified with Jesus Christ suffer from doubt or fear! It ought to be an absolute psalm of perfectly irrepressible, triumphant belief.

November 14

DISCOVERING DIVINE DESIGNS

I being in the way, the LORD led me. . . . Genesis 24:27

We have to be so one with God that we do not continually need to ask for guidance. Sanctification means that we are made the children of God, and the natural life of a child is obedience—until he wishes to be disobedient, then instantly there is the intuitive jar. In the spiritual domain the intuitive jar is the monition of the Spirit of God. When He gives the check, we have to stop at once and be renewed in the spirit of our mind in order to make out what God's will is. If we are born again of the Spirit of God, it is the abortion of piety to ask God to guide us here and there. "The Lord led me," and on looking back we see the presence of an amazing design, which, if we are born of God, we will credit to God.

We can all see God in exceptional things, but it requires the culture of spiritual discipline to see God in every detail. Never allow that the haphazard is anything less than God's appointed order, and be ready to discover the Divine designs anywhere. Beware of making a fetish of consistency to your convictions instead of being devoted to God. "I shall never do that"—in all probability you will have to, if you are a saint. There never was a more inconsistent Being on this earth than Our Lord, but He was never inconsistent to His Father. The one consistency of the saint is not to a principle, but to the Divine life. It is the Divine life which continually makes more and more discoveries about the divine mind. It is easier to be a fanatic than a faithful soul, because there is something amazingly humbling, particularly to our religious conceit, in being loyal to God.

^{25.} mean: as used here, something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

NOVEMBER 15

WHAT IS THAT TO THEE?

Lord, and what shall this man do?... What is that to thee? Follow thou Me. John 21:21–22

One of our severest lessons comes from the stubborn refusal to see that we must not interfere in other people's lives. It takes a long time to realise the danger of being an amateur providence, that is, interfering with God's order for others. You see a certain person suffering, and you say—"He shall not suffer, and I will see that he does not." You put your hand straight in front of God's permissive will to prevent it, and God says—"What is that to thee?" If there is stagnation spiritually, never allow it to go on, but get into God's presence and find out the reason for it. Possibly you will find it is because you have been interfering in the life of another; proposing things you had no right to propose; advising when you had no right to advise. When you do have to give advice to another, God will advise through you with the direct understanding of His Spirit; your part is to be so rightly related to God that His discernment comes through you all the time for the blessing of another soul.

Most of us live on the borders of consciousness—consciously serving, consciously devoted to God. All this is immature, it is not the real life yet. The mature stage is the life of a child which is never conscious; we become so abandoned to God that the consciousness of being used never enters in. When we are consciously being used as broken bread and poured-out wine, there is another stage to be reached, where all consciousness of ourselves and of what God is doing through us is eliminated. A saint is never consciously a saint; a saint is consciously dependent on God.

November 16

STILL HUMAN!

Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. 1 Corinthians 10:31

The great marvel of the Incarnation slips into ordinary childhood's life; the great marvel of the Transfiguration vanishes in the devil-possessed valley; the glory of the Resurrection descends into a breakfast on the sea-shore. This is not an anticlimax, but a great revelation of God.

The tendency is to look for the marvellous in our experience; we mistake the sense of the heroic for being heroes. It is one thing to go through a crisis grandly, but another thing to go through every day glorifying God when there is no witness, no limelight, no one paying the remotest attention to us. If we do not want medieval haloes, we want something that will make people say—"What a wonderful man of prayer he is!" "What a pious, devoted woman she is!" If you are rightly devoted to the Lord Jesus, you have reached the sublime height where no one ever thinks of noticing you, all that is noticed is that the power of God comes through you all the time.

"Oh, I have had a wonderful call from God!" It takes Almighty God Incarnate in us to do the meanest²⁶ duty to the glory of God. It takes God's Spirit in us to make us so absolutely humanly His that we are utterly unnoticeable. The test of the life of a saint is not success, but faithfulness in human life as it actually is. We will set up success in Christian work as the aim; the aim is to manifest the glory of God in human life, to live the life hid with Christ in God in human conditions. Our human relationships are the actual conditions in which the ideal life of God is to be exhibited.

November 17

THE ETERNAL GOAL

By Myself have I sworn, saith the LORD, for because thou hast done this thing, . . . that in blessing I will bless thee. . . . Genesis 22:16–17

Abraham has reached the place where he is in touch with the very nature of God, he understands now the reality of God.

My goal is God Himself... At any cost, dear Lord, by any road.

Frederick Brook

"At any cost, by any road" means nothing selfchosen in the way God brings us to the goal.

There is no possibility of questioning when God speaks if He speaks to His own nature in me; prompt obedience is the only result. When Jesus says—"Come," I simply come; when He says—"Let go," I let go; when he says—"Trust in God in this matter," I do trust. The whole working out is the evidence that the nature of God is in me.

God's revelation of Himself to me is determined by my character, not by God's character.

'Tis because I am mean, Thy ways so oft look mean to me.

George MacDonald

^{26.} mean: as used here, something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

By the discipline of obedience I get to the place where Abraham was, and I see Who God is. I never have a real God until I have come face to face with Him in Jesus Christ, then I know that "in all the world, my God, there is none but Thee, there is none but Thee."

The promises of God are of no value to us until by obedience we understand the nature of God. We read some things in the Bible three hundred and sixty-five times and they mean nothing to us; then all of a sudden we see what God means, because in some particular we have obeyed God, and instantly His nature is opened up. All the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen." The "yea" must be born of obedience; when by the obedience of our lives we say "Amen" to a promise, then that promise is ours.

November 18

WINNING INTO FREEDOM

If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed. John 8:36

If there is any remnant of individual conceit left, it always says—"I can't." Personality never says—"I can't," but simply absorbs and absorbs. Personality always wants more and more. It is the way we are built. We are designed with a great capacity for God; and sin and our individuality are the things that keep us from getting at God. God delivers us from sin: we have to deliver ourselves from individuality, i.e., to present our natural life to God and sacrifice it until it is transformed into a spiritual life by obedience.

God does not pay any attention to our natural individuality in the development of our spiritual life. His order runs right across the natural life, and we have to see that we aid and abet God, not stand against Him and say—"I can't do that." God will not discipline us, we must discipline ourselves. God will not bring every thought and imagination into captivity; we have to do it. Do not say—"O Lord, I suffer from wandering thoughts." Don't suffer from wandering thoughts. Stop listening to the tyranny of your individuality, and get emancipated out into personality.

"If the Son . . . shall make you free . . ." Do not substitute "Saviour" for "Son." The Saviour set us free from sin; this is the freedom of being set free by the Son. It is what Paul means in Galatians 2:20—"I have been crucified with Christ" (RV), his natural individuality has been broken and his personality united with his Lord, not merged but united; "ye shall be free indeed," free in essence, free from the inside. We will insist on energy, instead of being energised into identification with Jesus.

November 19

WHEN HE IS COME

And He, when He is come, He will convict the world in respect of sin. . . . John 16:8 (RV)

Very few of us know anything about conviction of sin; we know the experience of being disturbed because of having done wrong things; but conviction of sin by the Holy Ghost blots out every relationship on earth and leaves one relationship only—"Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned." When a man is convicted of sin in this way, he knows with every power of his conscience that God dare not forgive him; if God did forgive him, the man would have a stronger sense of justice than God. God does forgive, but it cost the rending of His heart in the death of Christ to enable Him to do so. The great miracle of the grace of God is that He forgives sin, and it is the death of Jesus Christ alone that enables the Divine nature to forgive and to remain true to itself in doing so. It is shallow nonsense to say that God forgives us because He is love. When we have been convicted of sin we will never say this again. The love of God means Calvary, and nothing less; the love of God is spelt on the Cross and nowhere else. The only ground on which God can forgive me is through the Cross of my Lord. There, His conscience is satisfied.

Forgiveness means not merely that I am saved from hell and made right for heaven (no man would accept forgiveness on such a level); forgiveness means that I am forgiven into a recreated relationship, into identification with God in Christ. The miracle of Redemption is that God turns me, the unholy one, into the standard of Himself, the Holy One, by putting into me a new disposition, the disposition of Iesus Christ.

November 20

THE FORGIVENESS OF GOD

In whom we have . . . the forgiveness of sins. Ephesians 1:7

Beware of the pleasant view of the Fatherhood of God—God is so kind and loving that of course He will forgive us. That sentiment has no place whatever in the New Testament. The only ground on which God can forgive us is the tremendous tragedy of the Cross of Christ; to put forgiveness on any other ground is unconscious blasphemy. The only ground on which God can forgive sin and reinstate us in His favour is through the Cross of Christ, and in no other way. Forgiveness, which is so easy for us to accept, cost the agony of Calvary. It is possible to take the forgiveness of sin, the gift of the Holy Ghost, and our sanctification with the simplicity of faith, and to forget at what enormous cost to God it was all made ours.

Forgiveness is the divine miracle of grace; it cost God the Cross of Jesus Christ before He could forgive sin and remain a holy God. Never accept a view of the Fatherhood of God if it blots out the Atonement. The revelation of God is that He cannot forgive; He would contradict His nature if He did. The only way we can be forgiven is by being brought back to God by the Atonement. God's forgiveness is only natural in the super-natural domain.

Compared with the miracle of the forgiveness of sin, the experience of sanctification is slight. Sanctification is simply the marvellous expression of the forgiveness of sins in a human life, but the thing that awakens the deepest well of gratitude in a human being is that God has forgiven sin. Paul never got away from this. When once you realise all that it cost God to forgive you, you will be held as in a vice, constrained by the love of God.

November 21

IT IS FINISHED

I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do. John 17:4

The death of Jesus Christ is the performance in history of the very mind of God. There is no room for looking on Jesus Christ as a martyr; His death was not something that happened to Him which might have been prevented. His death was the very reason why He came.

Never build your preaching of forgiveness on the fact that God is our Father and He will forgive us because He loves us. It is untrue to Jesus Christ's revelation of God; it makes the Cross unnecessary, and the Redemption "much ado about nothing." If God does forgive sin, it is because of the death of Christ. God could forgive men in no other way than by the death of His Son, and Jesus is exalted to be Saviour because of His death. "We see Jesus . . . because of the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour" (RV). The greatest note of triumph that ever sounded in the ears of a startled universe was that sounded on the Cross of Christ—"It is finished." That is the last word in the Redemption of man.

Anything that belittles or obliterates the holiness of God by a false view of the love of God, is untrue to the revelation of God given by Jesus Christ. Never allow the thought that Jesus Christ stands with us against God out of pity and compassion; that He became a curse for us out of sympathy with us. Jesus Christ became a curse for us by the Divine decree. Our portion of realising the terrific meaning of the curse is conviction of sin, the gift of shame and penitence is given us; this is the great mercy of God. Jesus Christ hates the wrong in man, and Calvary is the estimate of His hatred.

November 22

SHALLOW AND PROFOUND

Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. 1 Corinthians 10:31

Beware of allowing yourself to think that the shallow concerns of life are not ordained of God; they are as much of God as the profound. It is not your devotion to God that makes you refuse to be shallow, but your wish to impress other people with the fact that you are not shallow, which is a sure sign that you are a spiritual prig. Be careful of the production of contempt in yourself, it always comes along this line, and causes you to go about as a walking rebuke to other people because they are more shallow than you are. Beware of posing as a profound person; God became a Baby.

To be shallow is not a sign of being wicked, nor is shallowness a sign that there are no deeps; the ocean has a shore. The shallow amenities of life, eating and drinking, walking and talking, are all ordained by God. These are the things in which Our Lord lived. He lived in them as the Son of God, and He said that "the disciple is not above his Master."

Our safeguard is in the shallow things. We have to live the surface commonsense life in a commonsense way; when the deeper things come, God gives them to us apart from the shallow concerns. Never show the deeps to anyone but God. We are so abominably serious, so desperately interested in our own characters, that we refuse to behave like Christians in the shallow concerns of life.

Determinedly take no one seriously but God, and the first person you find you have to leave severely alone as being the greatest fraud you have ever known, is yourself.

November 23

DISTRACTION OF ANTIPATHY

Have mercy upon us, O LORD, have mercy upon us: for we are exceedingly filled with contempt. Psalm 123:3

The thing of which we have to beware is not so much damage to our belief in God as damage to our Christian temper. "Therefore take heed to thy spirit, that ye deal not treacherously." The temper of mind is tremendous in its effects, it is the enemy that penetrates right into the soul and distracts the mind from God. There are certain tempers of mind in which we never dare indulge; if we do, we find they have distracted us from faith in God, and until we get back to the quiet mood before God, our faith in Him is nil, and our confidence in the flesh and in human ingenuity is the thing that rules.

Beware of "the cares of this world," because they are the things that produce a wrong temper of soul. It is extraordinary what an enormous power there is in simple things to distract our attention from God. Refuse to be swamped with the cares of this life.

Another thing that distracts us is the lust of vindication. St. Augustine prayed—"O Lord, deliver me from this lust of always vindicating myself." That temper of mind destroys the soul's faith in God. "I must explain myself; I must get people to understand." Our Lord never explained anything; He left mistakes to correct themselves.

When we discern that people are not going on spiritually and allow the discernment to turn to criticism, we block our way to God. God never gives us discernment in order that we may criticise, but that we may intercede.

November 24

DIRECTION OF ASPIRATION

Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, . . . so our eyes wait upon the LORD our God. Psalm 123:2

This verse is a description of entire reliance upon God. Just as the eyes of the servant are riveted on his master, so our eyes are up unto God and our knowledge of His countenance is gained (cf. Isaiah 53:1 RV). Spiritual leakage begins when we cease to lift up our eyes unto Him. The leakage comes not so much through trouble on the outside as in the imagination, when we begin to say—"I expect I have been stretching myself a bit too much, standing on tiptoe and trying to look like God instead of being an ordinary humble person." We have to realise that no effort can be too high.

For instance, you came to a crisis when you made a stand for God and had the witness of the Spirit that all was right, but the weeks have gone by, and the years maybe, and you are slowly coming to the conclusion, "Well, after all, was I not a bit too pretentious? Was I not taking a stand a bit too high?" Your rational friends come and say-"Don't be a fool, we knew when you talked about this spiritual awakening that it was a passing impulse, you can't keep up the strain, God does not expect you to." And you say—"Well, I suppose I was expecting too much." It sounds humble to say it, but it means that reliance on God has gone and reliance on worldly opinion has come in. The danger is lest, no longer relying on God, you ignore the lifting up of your eyes to Him. Only when God brings you to a sudden halt, will you realise how you have been losing out. Whenever there is a leakage, remedy it immediately. Recognise that something has been coming between you and God, and get it readjusted at once.

November 25

THE SECRET OF SPIRITUAL COHERENCE

But God forbid that I should glory. . . . Galatians 6:14

When a man is first born again, he becomes incoherent, there is an amount of unrelated emotion about him, unrelated phases of external things. In the apostle Paul there was a strong steady coherence underneath, consequently he could let his external life change as it liked and it did not distress him, because he was rooted and grounded in God. Most of us are not spiritually coherent because we are more concerned about being coherent externally. Paul lived in the basement; the coherent critics live in the upper storey of the external statement of things, and the two do not begin to touch each other. Paul's consistency was down in the fundamentals. The great basis of his coherence was the agony of God in the Redemption of the world, viz., the Cross of Jesus Christ.

Re-state to yourself what you believe, then do away with as much of it as possible, and get back to the bedrock of the Cross of Christ. In external history the Cross is an infinitesimal thing; from the Bible point of view it is of more importance than all the empires of the world. If we get away from brooding on the tragedy of God upon the Cross in our preaching, it produces nothing. It does not convey the energy of God to man; it may be interesting but it has no power. But preach the Cross, and the energy of God is let loose. "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. . . . We preach Christ crucified."

NOVEMBER 26

THE CONCENTRATION OF SPIRITUAL ENERGY

... save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. Galatians 6:14

If you want to know the energy of God (i.e., the resurrection life of Jesus) in your mortal flesh, you must brood on the tragedy of God. Cut yourself off from prying personal interest in your own spiritual symptoms and consider bare-spirited the tragedy of God, and instantly the energy of God will be in you. Look unto Me," pay attention to the objective Source and the subjective energy will be there. We lose power if we do not concentrate on the right thing. The effect of the Cross is salvation, sanctification, healing, etc., but we are not to preach any of these, we are to preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified. The proclaiming of Jesus will do its own work. Concentrate on God's centre in your preaching, and though your crowd may apparently pay no attention, they can never be the same again. If I talk my own talk, it is of no more importance to you than your talk is to me; but if I talk the truth of God, you will meet it again and so shall I. We have to concentrate on the great point of spiritual energy, the Cross, to keep in contact with that centre where all the power lies, and the energy will be let loose. In holiness movements and spiritual experience meetings the concentration is apt to be put not on the Cross of Christ, but on the effects of the Cross.

The feebleness of the churches is being criticised to-day, and the criticism is justified. One reason for the feebleness is that there has not been this concentration of spiritual energy; we have not brooded enough on the tragedy of Calvary or on the meaning of Redemption.

THE CONSECRATION OF SPIRITUAL ENERGY

By whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. Galatians 6:14

If I brood on the Cross of Christ, I do not become a subjective pietist, interested in my own whiteness; I become dominantly concentrated on Jesus Christ's interests. Our Lord was not a recluse nor an ascetic, He did not cut Himself off from society, but He was inwardly disconnected all the time. He was not aloof, but He lived in another world. He was so much in the ordinary world that the religious people of His day called Him a glutton and a winebibber. Our Lord never allowed anything to interfere with His consecration of spiritual energy.

The counterfeit of consecration is the conscious cutting off of things with the idea of storing spiritual power for use later on, but that is a hopeless mistake. The Spirit of God has spoiled the sin of a great many, yet there is no emancipation, no fullness in their lives. The kind of religious life we see abroad to-day is entirely different from the robust holiness of the life of Jesus Christ. "I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil." We are to be in the world but not of it; to be disconnected fundamentally, not externally.

We must never allow anything to interfere with the consecration of our spiritual energy. Consecration is our part, sanctification is God's part; and we have deliberately to determine to be interested in that only in which God is interested. The way to solve perplexing problems is to ask—"Is this the kind of thing which Jesus Christ is interested in, or the kind of thing the spirit that is the antipodes of Jesus is interested in?"

November 28

THE BOUNTY OF THE DESTITUTE

Being justified freely by His grace . . . Romans 3:24

The Gospel of the grace of God awakens an intense longing in human souls and an equally intense resentment, because the revelation which it brings is not palatable. There is a certain pride in man that will give and give, but to come and accept is another thing. I will give my life to martyrdom, I will give myself in consecration, I will do anything, but do not humiliate me to the level of the most hell-deserving sinner and tell me that all I have to do is to accept the gift of salvation through Jesus Christ.

We have to realise that we cannot earn or win anything from God; we must either receive it as a gift or do without it. The greatest blessing spiritually is the knowledge that we are destitute; until we get there Our Lord is powerless. He can do nothing for us if we think we are sufficient of ourselves; we have to enter into His Kingdom through the door of destitution. As long as we are rich, possessed of anything in the way of pride or independence, God cannot do anything for us. It is only when we get hungry spiritually that we receive the Holy Spirit. The gift of the nature of God is made effectual in us by the Holy Spirit; He imparts to us the quickening life of Jesus, which puts "the beyond" within, and immediately the beyond has come within, it rises up to "the above," and we are lifted into the domain where Jesus lives. (John 3:5)

November 29

THE ABSOLUTENESS OF JESUS CHRIST

He shall glorify Me. John 16:14

The pietistic movements of to-day have none of the rugged reality of the New Testament about them; there is nothing about them that needs the death of Jesus Christ, all that is required is a pious atmosphere, and prayer and devotion. This type of experience is not supernatural nor miraculous, it did not cost the passion of God, it is not dyed in the blood of the Lamb, not stamped with the hall-mark of the Holy Ghost. It has not that mark on it which makes men say, as they look with awe and wonder—"That is the work of God Almighty." That and nothing else is what the New Testament talks about.

The type of Christian experience in the New Testament is that of personal, passionate devotion to the Person of Jesus Christ. Every other type of Christian experience, so called, is detached from the Person of Jesus. There is no regeneration, no being born again into the Kingdom in which Christ lives, but only the idea that He is our Pattern. In the New Testament Jesus Christ is Saviour long before He is Pattern. To-day He is being despatched as the Figurehead of a religion, a mere Example. He is that, but He is infinitely more; He is salvation itself. He is the Gospel of God.

Jesus said—"When He, the Spirit of truth, is come, . . . He shall glorify Me." When I commit myself to the revelation made in the New Testament, I receive from God the gift of the Holy Spirit Who begins to interpret to me what Jesus did, and does in me subjectively what Jesus Christ did for me objectively.

November 30

BY THE GRACE OF GOD I AM WHAT I AM

His grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain. 1 Corinthians 15:10

The way we continually talk about our own inability is an insult to the Creator. The deploring of our own incompetence is a slander against God for having overlooked us. Get into the habit of examining in the sight of God the things that sound humble before men, and you will be amazed at how staggeringly impertinent they are. "Oh, I shouldn't like to say I am sanctified; I'm not a saint." Say that before God; and it means—"No, Lord, it is impossible for You to save and sanctify me; there are chances I have not had; so many imperfections in my brain and body; no, Lord, it isn't possible." That may sound wonderfully humble before men, but before God it is an attitude of defiance.

Again, the things that sound humble before God may sound the opposite before men. To say—"Thank God, I know I am saved and sanctified," is in the sight of God the acme of humility, it means you have so completely abandoned yourself to God that you know He is true. Never bother your head as to whether what you say sounds humble before men or not, but always be humble before God, and let Him be all in all.

There is only one relationship that matters, and that is your personal relationship to a personal Redeemer and Lord. Let everything else go, but maintain that at all costs, and God will fulfil His purpose through your life. One individual life may be of priceless value to God's purpose, and yours may be that life.

DECEMBER 1

THE LAW AND THE GOSPEL

For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. James 2:10

The moral law does not consider us as weak human beings at all, it takes no account of our heredity and infirmities, it demands that we be absolutely moral. The moral law never alters, either for the noblest or for the weakest, it is eternally and abidingly the same. The moral law ordained by God does not make itself weak to the weak, it does not palliate our shortcomings, it remains absolute for all time and eternity. If we do not realise this, it is because we are less than alive; immediately we are alive, life becomes a tragedy. I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died." When we realise this, then the Spirit of God convicts us of sin. Until a man gets there and sees that there is no hope, the Cross of Jesus Christ is a farce to him. Conviction of sin always brings a fearful binding sense of the law, it makes a man hopeless—"sold under sin." I, a guilty sinner, can never get right with God, it is impossible. There is only one way in which I can get right with God, and that is by the death of Jesus Christ. I must get rid of the lurking idea that I can ever be right with God because of my obedience—which of us could ever obey God to absolute perfection!

We only realise the power of the moral law when it comes with an "if." God never coerces us. In one mood we wish He would make us do the thing, and in another mood we wish He would leave us alone. Whenever God's will is in the ascendant, all compulsion is gone. When we choose deliberately to obey Him, then, with all His almighty power, He will tax the remotest star and the last grain of sand to assist us.

DECEMBER 2

CHRISTIAN PERFECTION

Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect . . . Philippians 3:12

It is a snare to imagine that God wants to make us perfect specimens of what He can do; God's purpose is to make us one with Himself. The emphasis of holiness movements is apt to be that God is producing specimens of holiness to put in His museum. If you go off on this idea of personal holiness, the dead-set of your life will not be for God, but for what you call the manifestation of God in your life. "It can never be God's will that I should be sick," you say. If it was God's will to bruise His own Son, why should He not bruise you? The thing that tells for God is not your relevant consistency to an idea of what a saint should be, but your real vital relation to Jesus Christ, and your abandonment to Him whether you are well or ill.

Christian perfection is not, and never can be, human perfection. Christian perfection is the perfection of a relationship to God which shows itself amid the irrelevancies of human life. When you obey the call of Jesus Christ, the first thing that strikes you is the irrelevancy of the things you have to do, and the next thing that strikes you is the fact that other people seem to be living perfectly consistent lives. Such lives are apt to leave you with the idea that God is unnecessary, by human effort and devotion we can reach the standard God wants. In a fallen world this can never be done. I am called to live in perfect relation to God so that my life produces a longing after God in other lives, not admiration for myself. Thoughts about myself hinder my usefulness to God. God is not after perfecting me to be a specimen in His show-room; He is getting me to the place where He can use me. Let Him do what He likes.

DECEMBER 3

NOT BY MIGHT NOR BY POWER

And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. 1 Corinthians 2:4

If in preaching the Gospel you substitute your clear knowledge of the way of salvation for confidence in the power of the Gospel, you hinder people getting to Reality. You have to see that while you proclaim your knowledge of the way of salvation, you yourself are rooted and grounded in faith in God. Never rely on the clearness of your exposition, but as you give your exposition see that you are relying on the Holy Spirit. Rely on the certainty of God's redemptive power, and He will create His own life in souls.

When once you are rooted in Reality, nothing can shake you. If your faith is in experiences, anything that happens is likely to upset that faith; but nothing can ever upset God or the almighty Reality of Redemption; base your faith on that, and you are as eternally secure as God. When once you get into personal contact with Jesus Christ, you will never be moved again. That is the meaning of sanctification. God puts His disapproval on human experience when we begin to adhere to the conception that sanctification is merely an experience, and forget that sanctification itself has to be sanctified (see John 17:19). I have deliberately to give my sanctified life to God for His service, so that He can use me as His hands and His feet.

DECEMBER 4

THE LAW OF ANTAGONISM

To him that overcometh . . . Revelation 2:7

Life without war is impossible either in nature or in grace. The basis of physical, mental, moral, and spiritual life is antagonism. This is the open fact of life.

Health is the balance between physical life and external nature, and it is maintained only by sufficient vitality on the inside against things on the outside. Everything outside my physical life is designed to put me to death. Things which keep me going when I am alive, disintegrate me when I am dead. If I have enough fighting power, I produce the balance of health. The same is true of the mental life. If I want to maintain a vigorous mental life, I have to fight, and in that way the mental balance called thought is produced.

Morally it is the same. Everything that does not partake of the nature of virtue is the enemy of virtue in me, and it depends on what moral calibre I have whether I overcome and produce virtue. Immediately I fight, I am moral in that particular. No man is virtuous because he cannot help it; virtue is acquired.

And spiritually it is the same. Jesus said—"In the world ye shall have tribulation," i.e., everything that is not spiritual makes for my undoing, but—"be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." I have to learn to score off the things that come against me, and in that way produce the balance of holiness; then it becomes a delight to meet opposition.

Holiness is the balance between my disposition and the law of God as expressed in Jesus Christ.

DECEMBER 5

THE TEMPLE OF THE HOLY GHOST

Only in the throne will I be greater than thou. Genesis 41:40

I have to account to God for the way in which I rule my body under His domination. Paul said he did not "frustrate the grace of God"—make it of no effect. The grace of God is absolute, the salvation of Jesus is perfect, it is done for ever. I am not being saved, I am saved; salvation is as eternal as God's throne; the thing for me to do is to work out what God works in. "Work out your own salvation"; I am responsible for doing it. It means that I have to manifest in this body the life of the Lord Jesus, not mystically, but really and emphatically. "I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection." Every saint can have his body under absolute control for God. God has made us to have government over all the temple of the Holy Spirit, over imaginations and affections. We are responsible for these, and we must never give way to inordinate affections. Most of us are much sterner with others than we are in regard to ourselves; we make excuses for things in ourselves whilst we condemn in others things to which we are not naturally inclined.

"I beseech you," says Paul, "present your bodies a living sacrifice." The point to decide is this—"Do I agree with my Lord and Master that my body shall be His temple?" If so, then for me the whole of the law for the body is summed up in this revelation, that my body is the temple of the Holy Ghost.

DECEMBER 6

THE BOW IN THE CLOUD

I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between Me and the earth. Genesis 9:13

It is the will of God that human beings should get into moral relationship with Him, and His covenants are for this purpose. "Why does not God save me?" He has saved me, but I have not entered into relationship with Him. "Why does not God do this and that?" He has done it, the point is—Will I step into covenant relationship? All the great blessings of God are finished and complete, but they are not mine until I enter into relationship with Him on the basis of His covenant.

Waiting for God is incarnate unbelief, it means that I have no faith in Him; I wait for Him to do something in me that I may trust in that. God will not do it, because that is not the basis of the Godand-man relationship. Man has to go out of himself in his covenant with God as God goes out of Himself in His covenant with man. It is a question of faith in God—the rarest thing; we have faith only in our feelings. I do not believe God unless He will give me something in my hand whereby I may know I have it, then I say—"Now I believe." There is no faith there. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved."

When I have really transacted business with God on His covenant and have let go entirely, there is no sense of merit, no human ingredient in it at all, but a complete overwhelming sense of being brought into union with God, and the whole thing is transfigured with peace and joy.

December 7

REPENTANCE

For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation. 2 Corinthians 7:10

Conviction of sin is best portrayed in the words—

My sins, my sins, my Saviour. How sad on Thee they fall.

John S. B. Monsell

Conviction of sin is one of the rarest things that ever strikes a man. It is the threshold of an understanding of God. Jesus Christ said that when the Holy Spirit came He would convict of sin, and when the Holy Spirit rouses a man's conscience and brings him into the presence of God, it is not his relationship with men that bothers him, but his relationship with God—"against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in Thy sight." Conviction of sin, the marvel of forgiveness, and holiness are so interwoven that it is only the forgiven man who is the holy man, he proves he is forgiven by being the opposite to what he was, by God's grace. Repentance always brings a man to this point: "I have sinned." The surest sign that God is at work is when a man says that and means it. Anything less than this is remorse for having made blunders, the reflex action of disgust at himself.

The entrance into the Kingdom is through the panging pains of repentance crashing into a man's respectable goodness; then the Holy Ghost, Who produces these agonies, begins the formation of the Son of God in the life. The new life will manifest itself in conscious repentance and unconscious holiness, never the other way about. The bedrock of Christianity is repentance. Strictly speaking, a man cannot repent when he chooses; repentance is a gift of God. The old Puritans used to pray for "the gift of tears." If ever you cease to know the virtue of repentance, you are in darkness. Examine yourself and see if you have forgotten how to be sorry.

DECEMBER 8

THE IMPARTIAL POWER OF GOD

For by one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified. Hebrews 10:14

We trample the blood of the Son of God under foot if we think we are forgiven because we are sorry for our sins. The only explanation of the forgiveness of God and of the unfathomable depth of His forgetting, is the Death of Jesus Christ. Our repentance is merely the outcome of our personal realisation of the Atonement which He has worked out for us. "Christ Jesus . . . is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." When we realise that Christ is made all this to us, the boundless joy of God begins; wherever the joy of God is not present, the death sentence is at work.

It does not matter who or what we are, there is absolute reinstatement into God by the death of Jesus Christ and by no other way, not because Jesus Christ pleads, but because He died. It is not earned, but accepted. All the pleading which deliberately refuses to recognise the Cross is of no avail; it is battering at another door than the one which Jesus has opened. "I don't want to come that way, it is too humiliating to be received as a sinner." "There is none other Name. . . . "The apparent heartlessness of God is the expression of His real heart, there is boundless entrance in His way. "We have forgiveness through His blood."

Identification with the death of Jesus Christ means identification with Him to the death of everything that never was in Him.

God is justified in saving bad men only as He makes them good. Our Lord does not pretend we are all right when we are all wrong. The Atonement is a propitiation whereby God through the death of Jesus makes an unholy man holy.

DECEMBER 9

THE OFFENCE OF THE NATURAL

And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. Galatians 5:24

The natural life is not sinful; we must be apostatised from sin, have nothing to do with sin in any shape or form. Sin belongs to hell and the devil; I, as a child of God, belong to heaven and God. It is not a question of giving up sin, but of giving up my right to myself, my natural independence and self-assertiveness, and this is where the battle has to be fought. It is the things that are right and noble and good from the natural standpoint that keep us back from God's best. To discern that natural virtues antagonise surrender to God, is to bring our soul into the centre of its greatest battle. Very few of us debate with the sordid and evil and wrong, but we do debate with the good. It is the good that hates the best, and the higher up you get in the scale of the natural virtues, the more intense is the opposition to Jesus Christ. "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh"—it is going to cost the natural in you everything, not something. Jesus said—If any man will be My disciple, "let him deny himself" i.e., his right to himself, and a man has to realise Who Jesus Christ is before he will do it. Beware of refusing to go to the funeral of your own independence.

The natural life is not spiritual, and it can only be made spiritual by sacrifice. If we do not resolutely sacrifice the natural, the supernatural can never become natural in us. There is no royal road there; each of us has it entirely in his own hands. It is not a question of praying, but of performing.

DECEMBER 10

THE OFFERING OF THE NATURAL

Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman. Galatians 4:22

Paul is not dealing with sin in this chapter of Galatians, but with the relation of the natural to the spiritual. The natural must be turned into the spiritual by sacrifice, otherwise a tremendous divorce will be produced in the actual life. Why should God ordain the natural to be sacrificed? God did not. It is not God's order, but His permissive will. God's order was that the natural should be transformed into the spiritual by obedience; it is sin that made it necessary for the natural to be sacrificed.

Abraham had to offer up Ishmael before he offered up Isaac. Some of us are trying to offer up spiritual sacrifices to God before we have sacrificed the natural. The only way in which we can offer a spiritual sacrifice to God is by presenting our bodies a living sacrifice. Sanctification means more than deliverance from sin, it means the deliberate commitment of myself whom God has saved, to God, and I do not care what it costs.

If we do not sacrifice the natural to the spiritual, the natural life will mock at the life of the Son of God in us and produce a continual swither. This is always the result of an undisciplined spiritual nature. We go wrong because we stubbornly refuse to discipline ourselves, physically, morally or mentally. "I wasn't disciplined when I was a child." You must discipline yourself now. If you do not, you will ruin the whole of your personal life for God.

God is not with our natural life while we pamper it; but when we put it out in the desert and resolutely keep it under, then God will be with it; and He will open up wells and oases, and fulfil all His promises for the natural.

DECEMBER 11

INDIVIDUALITY

If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself. Matthew 16:24

Individuality is the husk of the personal life. Individuality is all elbows, it separates and isolates. It is the characteristic of the child and rightly so; but if we mistake individuality for the personal life, we shall remain isolated. The shell of individuality is God's created natural covering for the protection of the personal life; but individuality must go in order that the personal life may come out and be brought into fellowship with God. Individuality counterfeits personality as lust counterfeits love. God designed human nature for Himself; individuality debases human nature for itself.

The characteristics of individuality are independence and self-assertiveness. It is the continual assertion of individuality that hinders our spiritual life more than anything else. If you say—"I cannot believe," it is because individuality never can believe. Personality cannot help believing. Watch yourself when the Spirit of God is at work. He pushes you to the margins of your individuality, and you have either to say—"I shan't," or to surrender, to break the husk of individuality and let the personal life emerge. The Holy Spirit narrows it down every time to one thing (cf. Matthew 5:23-24). The thing in you that will not be reconciled to your brother is your individuality. God wants to bring you into union with Himself, but unless you are willing to give up your right to yourself, He cannot. "Let him deny himself"—deny his independent right to himself, then the real life has a chance to grow.

DECEMBER 12

PERSONALITY

That they may be one, even as We are one. John 17:22

Personality is that peculiar, incalculable thing that is meant when we speak of ourselves as distinct from everyone else. Our personality is always too big for us to grasp. An island in the sea may be but the top of a great mountain. Personality is like an island; we know nothing about the great depths underneath, consequently we cannot estimate ourselves. We begin by thinking that we can, but we come to realise that there is only one Being Who understands us, and that is our Creator.

Personality is the characteristic of the spiritual man as individuality is the characteristic of the natural man. Our Lord can never be defined in terms of individuality and independence, but only in terms of personality, "I and My Father are one." Personality merges, and you only reach your real identity when you are merged with another person. When love, or the Spirit of God, strikes a man, he is transformed, he no longer insists upon his separate individuality. Our Lord never spoke in terms of individuality, of a man's "elbows" or his isolated position, but in terms of personality—"that they may be one, even as We are one." If you give up your right to yourself to God, the real true nature of your personality answers to God straight away. Jesus Christ emancipates the personality, and the individuality is transfigured; the transfiguring element is love, personal devotion to Jesus. Love is the out-pouring of one personality in fellowship with another personality.

DECEMBER 13

WHAT TO PRAY FOR

Men ought always to pray, and not to faint. Luke 18:1

You cannot intercede if you do not believe in the reality of the Redemption; you will turn intercession into futile sympathy with human beings which will only increase their submissive content to being out of touch with God. In intercession you bring the person, or the circumstance that impinges on you, before God until you are moved by His attitude towards that person or circumstance. Intercession means filling up "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ," and that is why there are so few intercessors. Intercession is put on the line of—"Put yourself in his place." Never! Try to put yourself in God's place.

As a worker, be careful to keep pace with the communications of reality from God or you will be crushed. If you know too much, more than God has engineered for you to know, you cannot pray, the condition of the people is so crushing that you cannot get through to reality.

Our work lies in coming into definite contact with God about everything, and we shirk it by becoming active workers. We do the things that can be tabulated, but we will not intercede. Intercession is the one thing that has no snares, because it keeps our relationship with God completely open.

The thing to watch in intercession is that no soul is patched up, a soul must get through into contact with the life of God. Think of the number of souls God has brought about our path and we have dropped them! When we pray on the ground of Redemption, God creates something He can create in no other way than through intercessory prayer.

DECEMBER 14

THE GREAT LIFE

Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you. . . . John 14:27

Let not your heart be troubled. John 14:1

Whenever a thing becomes difficult in personal experience, we are in danger of blaming God, but it is we who are in the wrong, not God, there is some perversity somewhere that we will not let go. Immediately we do, everything becomes as clear as daylight. As long as we try to serve two ends, ourselves and God, there is perplexity. The attitude must be one of complete reliance on God. When once we get there, there is nothing easier than living the saintly life; difficulty comes in when we want to usurp the authority of the Holy Spirit for our own ends.

Whenever you obey God, His seal is always that of peace, the witness of an unfathomable peace, which is not natural, but the peace of Jesus. Whenever peace does not come, tarry till it does or find out the reason why it does not. If you are acting on an impulse, or from a sense of the heroic, the peace of Jesus will not witness; there is no simplicity or confidence in God, because the spirit of simplicity is born of the Holy Ghost, not of your decisions. Every decision brings a reaction of simplicity.

My questions come whenever I cease to obey. When I have obeyed God, the problems never come between me and God, they come as probes to keep the mind awake and amazed at the revelation of God. Any problem that comes between God and myself springs out of disobedience; any problem, and there are many, that is alongside me while I obey God, increases my ecstatic delight, because I know that my Father knows, and I am going to watch and see how He unravels this thing.

DECEMBER 15

APPROVED UNTO GOD

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. 2 Timothy 2:15

If you cannot express yourself on any subject, struggle until you can. If you do not, someone will be the poorer all the days of his life. Struggle to re-express some truth of God to yourself, and God will use that expression to someone else. Go through the wine-press of God where the grapes are crushed. You must struggle to get expression experimentally, then there will come a time when that expression will become the very wine of strengthening to someone else; but if you say lazily—"I am not going to struggle to express this thing for myself, I will borrow what I say," the expression will not only be of no use to you, but of no use to anyone. Try to re-state to yourself what you implicitly feel to be God's truth, and you give God a chance to pass it on to someone else through you.

Always make a practice of provoking your own mind to think out what it accepts easily. Our position is not ours until we make it ours by suffering. The author who benefits you is not the one who tells you something you did not know before, but the one who gives expression to the truth that has been struggling for utterance in you.

DECEMBER 16

WRESTLING BEFORE GOD

Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God... praying always... Ephesians 6:13, 18

You have to wrestle againt the things that prevent you from getting to God, and you wrestle in prayer for other souls; but never say that you wrestle with God in prayer, it is scripturally untrue. If you do wrestle with God, you will be crippled all the rest of your life. If, when God comes in some way you do not want, you take hold of Him as Jacob did and wrestle with Him, you compel Him to put you out of joint. Don't be a hirpler²⁷ in God's ways, but be one who wrestles before God with things, becoming more than conqueror through Him. Wrestling before God tells in His Kingdom. If you ask me to pray for you and I am not complete in Christ, I may pray but it avails nothing; but if I am complete in Christ, my prayer prevails all the time. Prayer is only effective when there is completeness—"Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God."

Always distinguish between God's order and His permissive will, i.e., His providential purpose towards us. God's order is unchangeable; His permissive will is that with which we must wrestle before Him. It is our reaction to the passive will of God that enables us to get at His order. "All things work together for good to them that love God"—to those who remain true to God's order, to His calling in Christ Jesus. God's permissive will is the means whereby His sons and daughters are to be manifested. We are not to be like jelly-fish saying—"It's the Lord's will." We have not to put up a fight before God, not to wrestle with God, but to wrestle before God with things. Beware of squatting lazily before God instead of putting up a glorious fight so that you may lay hold of His strength.

DECEMBER 17

REDEMPTION CREATES THE NEED IT SATISFIES

But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him. 1 Corinthians 2:14

The Gospel of God creates a sense of need of the Gospel. Paul says—"If our gospel be hid, it is hid"—to those who are blackguards? No, "to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not." The majority of people have their morality well within their own grasp, they have no sense of need of the gospel. It is God Who creates the need of which no human being is conscious until He manifests Himself. Jesus said-"Ask, and it shall be given you," but God cannot give until a man asks. It is not that He withholds, but that that is the way He has constituted things on the basis of Redemption. By means of our asking, God gets processes into work whereby He creates the thing that is not in existence until we do ask. The inner reality of Redemption is that it creates all the time. As the Redemption creates the life of God in us, so it creates the things belonging to that life. Nothing can satisfy the need but that which created the need. This is the meaning of Redemption—it creates and it satisfies.

"I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." We preach our own experiences and people are interested, but no sense of need is awakened. If Jesus Christ is lifted up, the Spirit of God will create a conscious need of Him. Behind the preaching of the Gospel is the creative Redemption of God at work in the souls of men. It is never personal testimony that saves men. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."

DECEMBER 18

THE TEST OF LOYALTY

And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God. Romans 8:28

It is only the loyal soul who believes that God engineers circumstances. We take such liberties with our circumstances, we do not believe God engineers them, although we say we do; we treat the things that happen as if they were engineered by men. To be faithful in every circumstance means that we have only one loyalty, and that is to our Lord. Suddenly God breaks up a particular set of circumstances, and the realisation comes that we have been disloyal to Him by not recognising that He had organised them. We never saw what He was after, and that particular thing will never be repeated all the days of our life. The test of loyalty always comes just there. If we learn to worship God in the trying circumstances, He will alter them in two seconds when He chooses.

Loyalty to Jesus Christ is the thing that we "stick at" to-day. We will be loyal to work, to service, to anything, but do not ask us to be loyal to Jesus Christ. Many Christians are intensely impatient of talking about loyalty to Jesus. Our Lord is dethroned more emphatically by Christian workers than by the world. God is made a machine for blessing men, and Jesus Christ is made a Worker among workers.

The idea is not that we do work for God, but that we are so loyal to Him that He can do His work through us—"I reckon on you for extreme service, with no complaining on your part and no explanation on Mine." God wants to use us as He used His own Son.

WHAT TO CONCENTRATE ON

I came not to send peace, but a sword. Matthew 10:34

Never be sympathetic with the soul whose case makes you come to the conclusion that God is hard. God is more tender than we can conceive, and every now and again He gives us the chance of being the rugged one that He may be the tender One. If a man cannot get through to God it is because there is a secret thing he does not intend to give up—"I will admit I have done wrong, but I no more intend to give up that thing than fly." It is impossible to deal sympathetically with a case like that: we have to get right deep down to the root until there is antagonism and resentment against the message. People want the blessing of God, but they will not stand the thing that goes straight to the quick.

If God has had His way with you, your message as His servant is merciless insistence on the one line, cut down to the very root, otherwise there will be no healing. Drive home the message until there is no possible refuge from its application. Begin to get at people where they are until you get them to realise what they lack, and then erect the standard of Jesus Christ for their lives—"We never can be that!" Then drive it home: "Jesus Christ says you must." "But how can we be?" "You cannot, unless you have a new Spirit" (see Luke 11:13).

There must be a sense of need before your message is of any use. Thousands of people are happy without God in this world. If I was happy and moral till Jesus came, why did He come? Because that kind of happiness and peace is on a wrong level; Jesus Christ came to send a sword through every peace that is not based on a personal relationship to Himself.

I, if I be lifted up, . . . will draw all men unto Me. John 12.32

Very few of us have any understanding of the reason why Jesus Christ died. If sympathy is all that human beings need, then the Cross of Christ is a farce, there was no need for it. What the world needs is not "a little bit of love," but a surgical operation.

When you are face to face with a soul in difficulty spiritually, remind yourself of Jesus Christ on the Cross. If that soul can get to God on any other line, then the Cross of Jesus Christ is unnecessary. If you can help others by your sympathy or understanding, you are a traitor to Jesus Christ. You have to keep your soul rightly related to God and pour out for others on His line, not pour out on the human line and ignore God. The great note to-day is amiable religiosity.

The one thing we have to do is to exhibit Jesus Christ crucified, to lift Him up all the time. Every doctrine that is not imbedded in the Cross of Jesus will lead astray. If the worker himself believes in Jesus Christ and is banking on the Reality of Redemption, the people he talks to must be concerned. The thing that remains and deepens is the worker's simple relationship to Jesus Christ; his usefulness to God depends on that and that alone.

The calling of a New Testament worker is to uncover sin and to reveal Jesus Christ as Saviour, consequently he cannot be poetical, he must be sternly surgical. We are sent by God to lift up Jesus Christ, not to give wonderfully beautiful discourses. We have to probe straight down as deeply as God has probed us, to be keen in sensing the Scriptures which bring the truth straight home and to apply them fearlessly.

DECEMBER 21

EXPERIENCE OR REVELATION

We have received . . . the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. 1 Corinthians 2:12

Reality is Redemption, not my experience of Redemption; but Redemption has no meaning for me until it speaks the language of my conscious life. When I am born again, the Spirit of God takes me right out of myself and my experiences, and identifies me with Jesus Christ. If I am left with my experiences, my experiences have not been produced by Redemption. The proof that they are produced by Redemption is that I am led out of myself all the time; I no longer pay any attention to my experiences as the ground of Reality, but only to the Reality which produced the experiences. My experiences are not worth anything unless they keep me at the Source, Jesus Christ.

If you try to dam up the Holy Spirit in you to produce subjective experiences, you will find that He will burst all bounds and take you back again to the historic Christ. Never nourish an experience which has not God as its Source, and faith in God as its result. If you do, your experience is anti-Christian, no matter what visions you may have had. Is Jesus Christ Lord of your experiences, or do you try to lord it over Him? Is any experience dearer to you than your Lord? He must be Lord over you, and you must not pay attention to any experience over which He is not Lord. There comes a time when God will make you impatient with your own experience—"I do not care what I experience; I am sure of Him."

Be ruthless with yourself if you are given to talking about the experiences you have had. Faith that is sure of itself is not faith; faith that is sure of God is the only faith there is.

DECEMBER 22

THE DRAWING OF THE FATHER

No man can come to Me, except the Father which hath sent Me draw him. John 6:44

When God draws me, the issue of my will comes in at once—will I react on the revelation which God gives; will I come to Him? Discussion on spiritual matters is an impertinence. Never discuss with anyone when God speaks. Belief is not an intellectual act; belief is a moral act whereby I deliberately commit myself. Will I dump myself down absolutely on God and transact on what He says? If I will, I shall find I am based on Reality that is as sure as God's throne.

In preaching the gospel, always push an issue of will. Belief must be the will to believe. There must be a surrender of the will, not a surrender to persuasive power; a deliberate launching forth on God and on what He says until I am no longer confident in what I have done, I am confident only in God. The hindrance is that I will not trust God, but only my mental understanding. As far as feelings go, I must stake all blindly: I must will to believe, and this can never be done without a violent effort on my part to dissociate myself from my old ways of looking at things, and by putting myself right over on to Him.

Every man is made to reach out beyond his grasp. It is God Who draws me, and my relationship with Him in the first place is a personal one, not an intellectual one. I am introduced into the relationship by the miracle of God and my own will to believe, then I begin to get an intelligent appreciation and understanding of the wonder of the transaction.

DECEMBER 23

HOW CAN I PERSONALLY PARTAKE IN THE ATONEMENT?

But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. Galatians 6:14

The Gospel of Jesus Christ always forces an issue of will. Do I accept God's verdict on sin in the Cross of Christ? Have I the slightest interest in the death of Jesus? Do I want to be identified with His death, to be killed right out to all interest in sin, in worldliness, in self—to be so identified with Jesus that I am spoilt for everything else but Him? The great privilege of discipleship is that I can sign on under His Cross, and that means death to sin. Get alone with Jesus and either tell Him that you do not want sin to die out in you; or else tell Him that at all costs you want to be identified with His death. Immediately you transact in confident faith in what Our Lord did on the Cross, a supernatural identification with His death takes place, and you will know with a knowledge that passeth knowledge that your "old man" is crucified with Christ. The proof that your "old man" has been crucified with Christ is in the amazing ease with which the life of God in you enables you to obey the voice of Jesus Christ.

Every now and again, Our Lord lets us see what we would be like if it were not for Himself; it is a justification of what He said—"Without Me ye can do nothing." That is why the bedrock of Christianity is personal, passionate devotion to the Lord Jesus. We mistake the ecstasy of our first introduction into the Kingdom for the purpose of God in getting us there; His purpose in getting us there is that we may realise all that identification with Jesus Christ means.

DECEMBER 24

THE HIDDEN LIFE

Your life is hid with Christ in God. Colossians 3:3

The Spirit of God witnesses to the simple, almighty security of the life hid with Christ in God, and this is continually brought out in the Epistles. We talk as if it were the most precarious thing to live the sanctified life; it is the most secure thing, because it has Almighty God in and behind it. The precarious thing is to try and live without God. If we are born again it is the easiest thing to live in right relationship to God and the most difficult thing to go wrong, if only we will heed God's warnings and keep in the light.

When we think of being delivered from sin, of being filled with the Spirit, and of walking in the light, we picture the peak of a great mountain, very high and wonderful, and we say—"Oh, but I could never live up there!" But when we do get there by God's grace, we find it is not a mountain peak, but a plateau where there is ample room to live and to grow. "Thou hast enlarged my steps under me."

When you really see Jesus, I defy you to doubt Him. When He says—"Let not your heart be troubled," if you see Him I defy you to trouble your mind, it is a moral impossibility to doubt when He is there. Every time you get into personal contact with Jesus, His words are real. "My peace I give unto you," it is a peace all over from the crown of the head to the sole of the feet, an irrepressible confidence. "Your life is hid with Christ in God," and the imperturbable peace of Jesus Christ is imparted to you.

DECEMBER 25

HIS BIRTH AND OUR NEW BIRTH

Behold, a virgin . . . shall bring forth a son, and they shall call His name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us. Matthew 1:23

His Birth in History. "Therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:35). Jesus Christ was born into this world, not from it. He did not evolve out of history; He came into history from the outside. Jesus Christ is not the best human being, He is a Being Who cannot be accounted for by the human race at all. He is not man becoming God, but God Incarnate, God coming into human flesh, coming into it from outside. His life is the Highest and the Holiest, entering in at the lowliest door. Our Lord's birth was an advent.

His Birth in Me. "Of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you" (Galatians 4:19). Just as Our Lord came into human history from outside, so He must come into me from outside. Have I allowed my personal human life to become a "Bethlehem" for the Son of God? I cannot enter into the realm of the Kingdom of God unless I am born from above (RV mg) by a birth totally unlike natural birth. "Ye must be born again." This is not a command, it is a foundation fact. The characteristic of the new birth is that I yield myself so completely to God that Christ is formed in me. Immediately Christ is formed in me, His nature begins to work through me.

God manifest in the flesh—that is what is made profoundly possible for you and me by the Redemption.

DECEMBER 26

PLACED IN THE LIGHT

If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, . . . the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin. 1 John 1:7

To mistake conscious freedom from sin for deliverance from sin by the Atonement is a great error. No man knows what sin is until he is born again. Sin is what Jesus Christ faced on Calvary. The evidence that I am delivered from sin is that I know the real nature of sin in me. It takes the last reach of the Atonement of Jesus Christ, that is, the impartation of His absolute perfection, to make a man know what sin is.

The Holy Spirit applies the Atonement to us in the unconscious realm as well as in the realm of which we are conscious, and it is only when we get a grasp of the unrivalled power of the Spirit in us that we understand the meaning of 1 John 1:7, "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." This does not refer to conscious sin only, but to the tremendously profound understanding of sin which only the Holy Ghost in me realises.

If I walk in the light as God is in the light, not in the light of my conscience, but in the light of God—if I walk there, with nothing folded up, then there comes the amazing revelation—the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses me from all sin so that God Almighty can see nothing to censure in me. In my consciousness it works with a keen poignant knowledge of what sin is. The love of God at work in me makes me hate with the hatred of the Holy Ghost all that is not in keeping with God's holiness. To walk in the light means that everything that is of the darkness drives me closer into the centre of the light.

DECEMBER 27

WHERE THE BATTLE'S LOST AND WON

If thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the LORD Jeremiah 4:1

The battle is lost or won in the secret places of the will before God, never first in the external world. The Spirit of God apprehends me and I am obliged to get alone with God and fight the battle out before Him. Until this is done, I lose every time. The battle may take one minute or a year, that will depend on me, not on God; but it must be wrestled out alone before God, and I must resolutely go through the hell of a renunciation before Him. Nothing has any power over the man who has fought out the battle before God and won there. If I say—"I will wait till I get into the circumstances and then put God to the test," I shall find I cannot. I must get the thing settled between myself and God in the secret places of my soul where no stranger intermeddles, and then I can go forth with the certainty that the battle is won. Lose it there, and calamity and disaster and upset are as sure as God's decree. The reason the battle is not won is because I try to win it in the external world first. Get alone with God, fight it out before Him, settle the matter there once and for all.

In dealing with other people, the line to take is to push them to an issue of will. That is the way abandonment begins. Every now and again, not often, but sometimes, God brings us to a point of climax. That is the Great Divide in the life; from that point we either go towards a more and more dilatory and useless type of Christian life, or we become more and more ablaze for the glory of God—"My Utmost for His Highest."

DECEMBER 28

CONTINUOUS CONVERSION

Except ye be converted, and become as little children ... Matthew 18:3

These words of Our Lord are true of our initial conversion, but we have to be continuously converted all the days of our lives, continually to turn to God as children. If we trust to our wits instead of to God, we produce consequences for which God will hold us responsible. Immediately our bodies are brought into new conditions by the providence of God, we have to see our natural life obeys the dictates of the Spirit of God. Because we have done it once is no proof that we shall do it again. The relation of the natural to the spiritual is one of continuous conversion, and it is the one thing we object to. In every setting in which we are put, the Spirit of God remains unchanged and His salvation unaltered but we have to "put on the new man." God holds us responsible every time we refuse to convert ourselves, our reason for refusing is wilful obstinacy. Our natural life must not rule, God must rule in us.

The hindrance in our spiritual life is that we will not be continually converted, there are "wadges" of obstinacy where our pride spits at the throne of God and says—"I won't." We deify independence and wilfulness and call them by the wrong name. What God looks on as obstinate weakness, we call strength. There are whole tracts of our lives which have not yet been brought into subjection, and it can only be done by this continuous conversion. Slowly but surely we can claim the whole territory for the Spirit of God.

DECEMBER 29

DESERTER OR DISCIPLE?

From that time many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him. John 6:66

When God gives a vision by His Spirit through His word of what He wants, and your mind and soul thrill to it, if you do not walk in the light of that vision, you will sink into servitude to a point of view which Our Lord never had. Disobedience in mind to the heavenly vision will make you a slave to points of view that are alien to Jesus Christ. Do not look at someone else and say—"Well, if he can have those views and prosper, why cannot I?" You have to walk in the light of the vision that has been given to you and not compare yourself with others or judge them, that is between them and God. When you find that a point of view in which you have been delighting clashes with the heavenly vision and you debate, certain things will begin to develop in you—a sense of property and a sense of personal right, things of which Jesus Christ made nothing. He was always against these things as being the root of everything alien to Himself. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." If we do not recognise this, it is because we are ignoring the undercurrent of Our Lord's teaching.

We are apt to lie back and bask in the memory of the wonderful experience we have had. If there is one standard in the New Testament revealed by the light of God and you do not come up to it, and do not feel inclined to come up to it, that is the beginning of backsliding, because it means your conscience does not answer to the truth. You can never be the same after the unveiling of a truth. That moment marks you for going on as a more true disciple of Jesus Christ, or for going back as a deserter.

DECEMBER 30

"AND EVERY VIRTUE WE POSSESS"

All my fresh springs shall be in Thee. Psalm 87:7 (PBV)²⁸

^{28.} PBV: Prayer Book Version. The Book of Common Prayer of the Church of England includes a translation of the Psalter, or Psalms of David.

Our Lord never patches up our natural virtues, He remakes the whole man on the inside. "Put on the new man"—see that your natural human life puts on the garb that is in keeping with the new life. The life God plants in us develops its own virtues, not the virtues of Adam but of Jesus Christ. Watch how God will wither up your confidence in natural virtues after sanctification, and in any power you have, until you learn to draw your life from the reservoir of the resurrection life of Jesus. Thank God if you are going through a drying-up experience!

The sign that God is at work in us is that He corrupts confidence in the natural virtues, because they are not promises of what we are going to be, but remnants of what God created man to be. We will cling to the natural virtues, while all the time God is trying to get us into contact with the life of Jesus Christ which can never be described in terms of the natural virtues. It is the saddest thing to see people in the service of God depending on that which the grace of God never gave them, depending on what they have by the accident of heredity. God does not build up our natural virtues and transfigure them, because our natural virtues can never come anywhere near what Jesus Christ wants. No natural love, no natural patience, no natural purity can ever come up to His demands. But as we bring every bit of our bodily life into harmony with the new life which God has put in us, He will exhibit in us the virtues that are characteristic of the Lord Jesus.

And every virtue we possess Is His alone.

DECEMBER 31

YESTERDAY

The God of Israel will be your reward. Isaiah 52:12 (RV)

Security from Yesterday. "God requireth that which is past." At the end of the year we turn with eagerness to all that God has for the future, and yet anxiety is apt to arise from remembering the yesterdays. Our present enjoyment of God's grace is apt to be checked by the memory of yesterday's sins and blunders. But God is the God of our yesterdays, and He allows the memory of them in order to turn the past into a ministry of spiritual culture for the future. God reminds us of the past lest we get into a shallow security in the present.

Security for To-morrow. "For the LORD will go before you." This is a gracious revelation, that God will garrison where we have failed to. He will watch lest things trip us up again into like failure, as they assuredly would do if He were not our reward. God's hand reaches back to the past and makes a clearing-house for conscience.

Security for To-day. "For ye shall not go out with haste." As we go forth into the coming year, let it not be in the haste of impetuous, unremembering delight, nor with the flight of impulsive thoughtlessness, but with the patient power of knowing that the God of Israel will go before us. Our yesterdays present irreparable things to us; it is true that we have lost opportunities which will never return but God can transform this destructive anxiety into a constructive thoughtfulness for the future. Let the past sleep, but let it sleep on the bosom of Christ.

Leave the Irreparable Past in His hands, and step out into the Irresistible Future with Him.

Not Knowing Whither

The Steps of Abraham's Faith

A Series of Studies in the Life of Abraham Oswald Chambers

Copyright 1934, Oswald Chambers Publications Association Scripture versions quoted: KJV, RV

Father, the narrow path
To that far country show;
And in the steps of Abraham's faith
Enable me to go,
A cheerful sojourner
Where'er Thou bidst me roam,
Till, guided by Thy Spirit here,
I reach my heavenly home.

Charles Wesley

INTRODUCTION

Source

The material in Not Knowing Whither is taken from lectures in Old Testament studies class at the Bible Training College, ¹ London, January through April 1915, covering Genesis 12:1 through 25:10.

Publication History

- As articles: The lectures were first published as articles in the BTC Monthly Journal² between April 1932 and July 1933.
- As a book: Not Knowing Whither was published in 1934.

This is one of only five Oswald Chambers books that expounds a section of scripture rather than developing a theme. The others are Our Portrait in Genesis, on Genesis 1 through 9 and 26 through 50; Baffled to Fight Better, on Job; Shade of His Hand, on Ecclesiastes; and Studies in the Sermon on the Mount, on Matthew 5 through 7.

During the months Oswald Chambers gave these lectures on the life of Abraham, he was struggling to find God's leading for the next step in his own life. Should he remain at the Bible Training College, or should he volunteer for military service in the British forces then fighting World War I? By the time he concluded this series, he had offered to serve as a chaplain and within a few weeks was selected for duty with the YMCA in Egypt. On October 28, 1915, he began his work with the troops at Zeitoun, 3 just outside Cairo.

^{1.} Bible Training College (BTC): a residential school near Clapham Common in southwest London. Sponsored by the League of Prayer; operated from 1911 until it closed in July 1915 because of World War I. Oswald Chambers was principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers, his wife, was lady superintendent.

^{2.} Bible Training Course Monthly Journal: published from 1932 to 1952 by Mrs. Chambers, with help from David Lambert. 3. Zeitoun (zay TOON), Egypt: six miles northeast of Cairo; site of a YMCA camp, the Egypt General Mission compound, and, from 1916 to 1919, the Imperial School of Instruction, training base for British, Australian, and New Zealand troops during World War I.

Throughout these talks, Chambers quotes from many writers and poets, particularly from his favorite, Robert Browning.

Lectures on some of the earlier and later chapters in Genesis were published in 1957 as Our Portrait in Genesis, which is also included in this volume. Gems from Genesis (1989) combined Not Knowing Whither and Our Portrait in Genesis into one volume, with a chapter on the Tower of Babel added by Arthur Neil, long-time OC scholar and editor of the Oswald Chambers Publications Association.

For this collection, we have presented Not Knowing Whither and Our Portrait in Genesis separately, in the form in which they were originally published.

PREFACE (TO THE FIRST EDITION)

These studies, from the lips of the late Oswald Chambers, are as wonderful as anything published by him hitherto. They concern the life of the great pioneer of the life of faith in which we see faith's reactions to God's call, to clashing circumstances, to the claims of companions, and to the terrific cost of God's Friendship. Herein we see linked up, in a wonderful way, the experience of grace under the New Covenant with the eternal purpose of God made plain under the Old Covenant. Abraham is studied as a forerunner of modern saints in their faith-walk.

The book is replete with spiritual wisdom. The very chapter titles betray that touch of genius, as men call it, which sparkles in the pages.

If great books are the life-blood of the world's master spirits, then such a book as this is the life-blood of one who by grace was brought to the fulness of the stature of Christ. The studies first appeared in the B.T.C. Journal. In book form they will make possible a term of guided reading on this outstanding example of the walk of faith in this world of men.

CROSSING THE BAR

Genesis 12:1-3

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar
When I put out to sea.

But such a tide as moving seems asleep,

Too full for sound and foam,

When that which drew from out the boundless deep

Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark;

For the from out our bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crost the bar.

Tennyson

Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out. . . . Genesis 12:1

"Crossing the Bar" is indicative of what happens whenever we act in faith in God. Whatever the faith is in connection with, we have to launch right out on God. To debate with God and trust common sense is moral blasphemy against God. The call of God embarrasses us because of two things—it presents us with sealed orders, and urges us to a vast venture. When God calls us He does not tell us along the line of our natural senses what to expect; God's call is a command that asks us, that means there is always a possibility of refusal on our part. Faith never knows where it is being led, it knows and loves the One Who is leading. It is a life of faith, not of intelligence and reason, but a life of knowing Who is making me "go."

The personal private life of faith of each one of us has its source and explanation in the life of the Father of the Faithful, Abraham. Abraham's call, with his limitations as well as his obedience, is full of minute instruction with regard to the life of faith.

1. The Call of God

The call of God can never be stated explicitly, it is implicit. The call of God is like the call of the sea, or of the mountains; no one hears these calls but the one who has the nature of the sea or of the mountains; and no one hears the call of God who has not the nature of God in him. It cannot be definitely stated what the call of God is to, because it is a call into comradeship with God Himself for His own purposes, and the test of faith is to believe that God knows what He is after. The call of God only becomes clear as we obey, never as we weigh the pros and cons and try to reason it out. The call is God's idea, not our idea, and only on looking back over the path of obedience do we realise what is the idea of God; God sanctifies memory. When we hear the call of God it is not for us to dispute with God, and arrange to obey Him if He will expound the meaning of His call to us. As long as we insist on having the call expounded to us, we will never obey; but when we obey it is expounded, and in looking back there comes a chuckle of confidence—"He doeth all things well." Before us there is nothing, but overhead there is God, and we have to trust Him. If we insist on explanations before we obey, we lie like clogs on God's plan and put ourselves clean athwart His purpose.

^{6.} David Lambert (1871–1961): Methodist minister; friend of Oswald and Biddy Chambers. Assisted Mrs. Chambers with OC publications from 1917 until his death in 1961.

To do our best is one part, but to wash our hands smilingly of the consequences is the next part of any sensible virtue.

Robert Louis Stevenson

When Jesus Christ says "Follow Me," He never says to where, the consequences must be left entirely to Him. We come in with our "buts," and "supposings," and "what will happen if I do?" (cf. Luke 9:57-62). We have nothing to do with what will happen if we obey, we have to abandon to God's call in unconditional surrender and smilingly wash our hands of the consequences. Until we get through all the shivering wisdom that will not venture out on God, we will never know all that is involved in the life of faith. Fate means stoical resignation to an unknown force. Faith is not resignation to a power we do not know; faith is committal to One Whose character we do know because it has been revealed to us in Jesus Christ. As we live in contact with God, His order comes to us in the haphazard, and we recognise that every detail of our lives is engineered for us by our Heavenly Father. If we are going to live a life of faith, we must rest nowhere until we see God and know Him in spite of all apparent contradictions.

I have to take care not to settle on the sandbank of selfishness, but to leave all for the Lord to order it. If I then make shipwreck, it will be in the wide sea of God's love, the depths of which are as welcome to me as the surest haven. But nature fights against the thought of venturing forth we know not where, out of self, into unknown regions.

2. The Calling of Abraham

Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out. . . .

"... and he went out, not knowing whither he went." This is true of a fool or of a faithful soul. One of the hardest lessons to learn is the one brought out by Abraham's obedience to the call of God. He went "out" of all his own ways of looking at things and became a fool in the eyes of the world. In the beginning faith is always uncertain, because every broad view is at first an uncertain view of particulars. We hear the call of God while we listen to a sermon, or during a time of prayer, and we say—"Yes, I will give myself to God unreservedly." Then something happens in our immediate circumstances which does not seem to fit into the vision we have had, and the danger is that we compromise and say we must have been mistaken in the vision. We have to stand true to the fact of God's call and smilingly wash our hands of the consequences. We have nothing to do with the afterwards of obedience. It is easy to want to be always on the mount, but when we come down to the devil-possessed valley we get annoyed or exhausted, we cannot go on with God there. We have perfect faith in God as long as He keeps us on the mount, but not the slightest atom of faith when He takes us into the valley. We have to be careful that the things which are really impertinent actualities do not find us either ignoring them or abandoning our faith in God. We have to go through the trial of our faith in these particulars, because it is the trial of our faith that makes us wealthy towards God.

"And from thy kindred . . ." Personal acquaintance with God shows itself in separation, symbolised by Abraham's physical separation from his country and his kindred. Nowadays it means much more a moral separation from the way those nearest and dearest to us think and look at things, if, that is, they have not a personal relationship with God. Jesus emphasised this (see Luke 14:26). Arguers against obeying the call of God will arise in the shape of country and kindred, and if you listen to them you will soon dull your ears to God's call and become the dullest, most commonplace Christian imaginable, because you have no courage in your faith; you have seen and heard, but have not gone on. If you accept sympathy from those who have not heard the call of God, it will so blunt your own sense of His call that you become useless to Him. Every saint must stand out absolutely alone. Beware lest the sympathy of others competes with God for the throne of your life. Don't look for a comrade other than God when God speaks to you; through you will come His purpose.

ON WITH GOD

Genesis 12:4-9

Not of the sunlight,
Not of the moonlight,
Not of the starlight!
O young Mariner,
Down to the haven,
Call your companions,
Launch your vessel,
And crowd your canvas,
And, ere it vanishes
Over the margin,
After it, follow it,
Follow The Gleam.

So Abram departed. Genesis 12:4

It is not sin or disobedience only that keeps us from obeying the call of God, but the good, right, natural things that make us hesitate. The natural can only be transformed into the spiritual by obedience, and the beginnings of God's life in a man or woman cut directly across the will of nature. The sword has to go through the natural (cf. Luke 2:35). The call of God comes with a realisation that what God says is true, but that does not prevent us from going through the trial of our faith in connection with actual details, and it is when we touch actual details that we begin to dispute with God and say—"But if I obeyed God here my sense of justice and right would be injured." To talk in that way means we do not believe God one atom, although we say we do. The knowledge of God's will is not in the nature of a mathematical problem; as we obey, we make out what is His will, it becomes as clear as daylight. We have to be continually renewed in the spirit of our minds, refusing to be conformed to the spirit of the age in which we live, then we shall "prove"—literally, make out in obedience—"what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." We have to beware of giving credit to man's wisdom for the way he has taken, when all the time it is the perfect wisdom of God that is manifested through the simple obedience of the man. It is never the acute ability of the saint that is exhibited, but the astute wisdom of God.

1. The Concession of Abraham's Faith (Genesis 12:4)

We must remember that faith in God always demands a concession from us personally. "So Abram departed," that is, he went on with God as God had commanded him, "not knowing whither he went." Watch the debates that go on in our minds when God speaks, whether it is in a big or a little matter, we won't launch out on God's word, we will hug the shore line. "But it is so unwise to trust God in this matter"—that implies that God has no wisdom at all. If we are going to obey God there must be a concession made on our part; we have deliberately to trust the character of God as it has been revealed to us in the face of all obstacles. "If God would only come down and explain everything to me, I would have faith in Him," we say; and yet how little trust we are inclined to have in God, even when we have had an experience of His grace and a revelation of Himself. We sink back to the experience instead of being confident in the God Who gave us the experience. Experience is never the ground of our trust, it is the gateway to the One Whom we trust. The work of faith is not an explanation to our minds, but a determination on our part to obey God and to make a concession of our faith in His character; immediately we do what God says, we discern what He means. Naturally, man is made to have dominion, therefore he insists on explanations, because everything we can explain we can command. In the spiritual domain nothing is explained until we obey, and then it is not so much an explanation as an instant discernment. "If any man will do . . . he shall know. . . . " If we say "I want to know why I should do this," it means we have no faith in God, but only sordid confidence in our own wits. "If God would only give me supernatural touches, I would trust Him." No, we would idolise ourselves. "I do not mind being a saint if I can remain natural and be a saint entirely on my own initiative. If I can instruct God about my upbringing and my particular temperament and affinities, and construct my own scenery, then I would like to be a saint." All along it is the hesitation of the natural refusing to be transformed into the spiritual. In Abraham there was no hesitation, although there were misinterpretations. In the life of Our Lord there was no hesitation and no misinterpretations; He combined the great vision of faith with the actual details. The Apostle Paul always applies the great eternal truths to actual details, because that is where faith has to work. The characteristic of Abraham's faith was that he did not select his affinities, he made a concession of his faith to God, and "went out, not knowing whither he went."

2. The Companions of Abraham's Faith (Genesis 12:5)

If God has given you a personal revelation of Himself and you have made a distinct concession on your part of faith in His character, you will make a great blunder if you look to see whether others see the same thing. God will undertake to instruct them if you remain faithful to the immediate connections in which He has put you. To live a life alone with God does not mean that we live it apart from everyone else. The connection between godly men and women and those associated with them is continually revealed in the Bible, e.g., 1 Timothy 4:10. If you are going on with God, says Paul, your attitude is to "labour and suffer reproach" from those who because of apparently accidental relationships go with you, so that by your labour you may bring them to be among the conscious believers. There is a difference between conscious and unconscious salvation. To be consciously saved means that we become of immense practical value to God in this order of things.

3. The Consecration of Abraham's Faith (Genesis 12:6-9)

Notice the significance of v. 8—"there he builded an altar unto the LORD." Worship is the tryst of sacramental identification with God, that is, I deliberately give back to God the best He has given me that I may be identified with Him in it. Whenever Abraham neglected to build an altar after God had made a promise to him, he fell into sin. Every act of worship to be effective must be a public testimony to those who in God's providence are with us for worship; it is at once the most public and the most personally sacred act that God demands of His faithful ones. Whenever God has given you a blessing, take time to meditate beside the blessing and offer it back to God in a deliberate ecstasy of worship. God will never allow you to hold a spiritual blessing for yourself, it has to be given back to Him that He may make it a blessing to others. If you hoard it, it will turn to spiritual dry rot. If God has blessed you, erect an altar and give the blessing back to God as a love-gift.

Abraham "pitched his tent, having Beth-el on the west and Hai on the east." Beth-el is the symbol of communion with God; Hai is the symbol of the world: Abraham pitched his tent between the two. The measure of the worth of our public activity to God is the private, profound communion we have with Him. Rush is always wrong; there is plenty of time to worship God. There are not three stages—worship, waiting and work; some of us go in jumps like spiritual frogs, we jump from worship to waiting and from waiting to work. God's idea is that the three should go together; they were always together in the life of Our Lord, He was unhasting and unresting. It is a discipline, we cannot get there all at once.

THE DANCE OF CIRCUMSTANCES

Genesis 12:10-13

Not for such hopes and fears
Annulling youth's brief years,
Do I remonstrate: folly wide the mark!
Rather I prize the doubt
Low kinds exist without,
Finished and finite clods, untroubled by a spark.

Then, welcome each rebuff
That turns earth's smoothness rough,
Each sting that bids nor sit nor stand but go!
Be our joy three-parts pain!
Strive, and hold cheap the strain;
Learn, nor account the pang; dare, never grudge the throe!

Browning

And there was a famine in the land. Genesis 12:10

There is a difference between circumstances and environment. We cannot control our circumstances, but we are the deciders of our own environment. Environment is the element in our circumstances which fits the disposition. A man convicted of sin and a man in love may be in the same external circumstances, but the environment of the one is totally different from that of the other. Our environment depends upon our personal reaction to circumstances. "Circumstances over which I have no control" is a perfectly true phrase, but it must never be made to mean that we cannot control ourselves in those circumstances. No matter into what perplexing circumstances God's providence may lead us or allow us to go, we have to see to it that in our reaction to those circumstances, which dance around us so perplexingly, we exhibit a personal relation to the highest we know. It is only by living in the presence of God that we cease to act in an ungodlike manner in perplexing circumstances.
