
1. The Famine in the Land of Promise (Genesis 12:10)

This must have been a severe test to Abraham's faith. Take it personally: we hear God's word on the mount, but when it comes to the dance of circumstances we are "knocked out," because we forget that we have to react in those circumstances in accordance with our faith in God. In going down to Egypt, Abraham declined from this standard.

The element of discipline in the life of faith must never be lost sight of, because only by means of the discipline are we taught the difference between the natural interpretation of what we call good and what God means by "good." We have to be brought to the place of hearty agreement with God as to what He means by good, and we only reach it by the trial of our faith, never by a stoical effort, such as saying—"Well, I must make up my mind that this is God's will, and that it is best."

At times it appears as if God has not only forsaken His word, but has deliberately deceived us. We asked Him for a particular thing, or related ourselves to Him along a certain line, and expected that it would mean the fulness of blessing, and actually it has meant the opposite—upset, trouble and difficulty all around, and we are staggered, until we learn that by this very discipline God is bringing us to the place of entire abandonment to Himself.

Never settle down in the middle of the dance of circumstances and say that you have been mistaken in your natural interpretation of God's promise to you because the immediate aftermath is devastation; say that God did give you the promise, and stick to it, and slowly God will bring you into the perfect, detailed fulfilment of that promise. When and where the fulfilment will take place, depends upon God and yourself, but never doubt the absolute fulfilment of God's word, and remember that the beginning of the fulfilment lies in your acquiescence in God's will. Remain true to God, although it means the sword going through the natural, and you will be brought into a supernaturally clear agreement with God. We are not introduced to Christianity by explanations, but we must labour at the exposition of Christianity until we satisfactorily unfold it through God's grace and our own effort.

2. The Foreboding on the Line of Peace (Genesis 12:11-13)

In the beginning of the life of faith the first element is that of fanaticism. There must be the cutting off, and the maiming, and the separation. There is nothing fascinating about any of that, but when the life has become imbedded in God, and the maiming has disappeared into the full-orbed perfection of a child of God, then that perfection has a tremendous fascination for others even though they do not care anything about God. Then comes the danger of this subterfuge—"I won't tell other people the whole truth, I won't say I am delivered from all sin, or sanctified wholly, that is too rugged, it will offend them; I will cover up the vital testimony and say I am religiously inclined, then I shall be able to preserve my influence with them." Whenever that cunning rascal "expediency" comes in, it will bring in its train a foreboding anxiety, which is a sure sign that in that particular we are ceasing to obey God. Our testimony must be unmistakably to the whole of the truth, not to part of it only. It is impossible to go on in our life with God if the element of personal testimony is left out; we will begin to get dextrous with a dexterity that is more or less doubtful, we say the truth but not the whole truth. Whenever God reveals something which we have never seen before and which affects others, a public testimony must be made, and the peril is lest we say—"But if I stand up and give that testimony, other people will be stumbled." Whenever we start this doubtful weighing of things we are acting not in accordance with our reliance on God, but in presumptuous confidence that God will see us through if we trust our wits: God will see us through only if we stand stedfastly true to what He has told us. Another danger is to imagine that it is my particular presentation of things that will attract people. It may attract them, but never to God. The line of attraction is always an indication of the goal of the attracted; if you attract by personal impressiveness, the attracted will get no further than you. Our Lord said—"I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me."

Verse 13 reveals a weakness in Abraham's faith, he does not yet perfectly rely upon the help of God in God's own way and time. This weakness arises from the inability to apply our faith in God to the actual circumstances we are in. We have to be true to God. not true only to our idea of God.

The failures of the chosen men of God upon a closer examination reveal them as sins of weakness arising from unguarded strength, which failures on the one hand do not destroy the personal standing with God, but on the other hand render necessary in him a purifying and providential training.

Foster's Essay on "The Aversion of Men of Taste to Evangelical Religion"

If we imagine we have strength apart from God, we shall have to break the neck of our strength over some obstacle before we are willing to rely upon God. Our own strength is the backbone of the natural life. but if the backbone of the strength of the natural man is removed without planting in the backbone of the life of God, there will be the "wobble," which persists until the vision of faith and the reality are one and the same.

BLANK ASTONISHMENT

Genesis 12:14-20

Pure faith indeed—you know not what you ask! Naked belief in God the Omnipotent, Omniscient, Omnipresent, sears too much The sense of conscious creatures to be borne. It were the seeing him, no flesh shall dare.

No, when the fight begins within himself, A man's worth something. God stoops o'er his head.

Satan looks up between his feet—both tug— He's left, himself, i' the middle: the soul wakes And grows. Prolong that battle through his life! Never leave growing till the life to come!

Browning

What is this that thou hast done unto me? Genesis 12:18

When we sin directly, we are never blankly astonished at the result. We may be defiant, we may tell lies; or, what is better, we may accept God's forgiveness. Blank astonishment always comes because of failure to do God's will by our very desire to do it. There is no word of censure on Abraham in the Bible for his distinct failure in going down to Egypt on account of the famine in the land God had promised him; but the blank astonishment which it caused is implied all through. Beware of saying what Abraham ought to have done—firstly, because he did not do it; and secondly, because you increase the severity of your own condemnation. This incident is not related for the dishonour of Abraham, but for the honour of God. Abraham did not attempt to vindicate himself.

Beware of thinking (no matter what you say) that God guided you in your decisions; the thought leads to spiritual hypocrisy. God holds His children responsible for the way in which they interpret His will. We only discern God's will by being renewed in the spirit of our minds in every circumstance we are in. We must learn to tell ourselves the truth on the basis of God's word, not on the basis of independent spiritual impulse, although by our blunders of impulse we are chastened as God's sons and daughters.

1. The Saint's Guilt in the Worldling's Sin (Genesis 12:14–16)

The result of Abraham's going down to Egypt was perplexity to himself, and he was also responsible for bringing a direct occasion of sin to Pharaoh. Pharaoh treats Abraham with a generosity which must have put Abraham to shame.

Get alarmed when your desire to serve God brings you into such a position that you have to accept, because you cannot refuse, the magnanimous treatment of worldlings who do not know your Lord; because to be in that position means you have transgressed God's order by the very keenness of your desire to do His will; and when you withdraw, as you must do ultimately, it will be with the knowledge that you have been the direct occasion of sin to them.

Christian work is apt to lead individual saints into blank astonishment, because it springs from an eager desire to do God's will. To say—"I want to do God's will," is to put myself outside God altogether. The striking thing in Our Lord's life was that He was not more eager to do the will of His Father than His Father was for Him to do it. He was the Saviour of the world, everything depended upon Him, and yet for thirty years He did nothing wonderful. "His doing nothing wonderful was in itself a kind of wonder" (Bonaventura). Our Lord's life is the exhibition of the will of God, not of doing the will of God.

Beware in your judgement either on Abraham or on yourself that you do not transfer the judgement to a stage of moral development not yet reached. It is easy to exaggerate. For example, an act that would be criminal in a man is not criminal in a boy. Abraham's transgression must never be classed as a sin morally. He transgressed through eagerness to do the right thing. Transgression is nearly always an unconscious act, there is no conscious determination to do wrong; sin is never an unconscious act. We blunder when we refuse to discern between these two.

2. The Saint's Gifts from the Worldling's Sincerity (Genesis 12:16)

The Egyptian maid Hagar, who became so important an influence in the lives of Abraham and Sarah, was probably amongst the gifts which came to Abraham in Egypt. The friendships and gifts of the world are perfectly sincere, but the saint soon realises that these friendships and gifts are embarrassing and hindering if he is to remain loyal to God. Then begins the blank astonishment of real perplexity, and God never shields us from anxiety on this score. It is not a case of right and wrong, but of learning through chastening what Abraham learned, that we cannot come eagerly and find out God's will by guessing. We must be renewed in our minds in every circumstance we are in, and beware of suspicions and considerations and suggestions that make themselves seem right to us. Beware of despising the chastening of the Lord, or of fainting when you are rebuked of Him. The only thing to do is to take your blank astonishment, be silent about it, and go on to the next thing.

3. The Saint's Groaning and the Worldling's Scorn (Genesis 12:17–18)

Pharaoh is a better man than those around him, and he concludes directly that the judgement on his house is from God on account of Sarah, whose person God is guarding as the true mother of Israel. Abraham did not tell a lie, he told a half-truth (see Genesis 20:12).

To say that if a man is committing sin he will hinder the purpose of God, is not true; if a leader is trying to serve his own ends, he will hinder the purpose of God. For instance, if I were to try and utilise this house of God⁸ for my own ends, the atmosphere of the house would be damaged instantly. Personal sin does not present a barrier in God's house, although it does put a barrier between the one who is sinning and God; but immediately anyone tries to utilise God's house, or God's people, or God's things for his own purposes and ends, then the atmosphere is altered at once. Then the thoughts of many hearts are revealed and there is produced the groaning of the saints and the scorn of the worldling, and the humiliating thing is that in such a case the worldling is right.

4. The Saint's Grade in the Worldling's Separation (Genesis 12:19–20)

Abraham was dismissed by Pharaoh—a most unspeakable humiliation. If you have made a compromise out of your eagerness to stand for God's honour, you will have to endure to the last limit, as Abraham did, the scorn of the honourable worldling. Instead of your breaking from the world, the world will come with all its courtesy and say—Will you go? By your very desire to stand up loyally for God, you have put yourself in a position where you cannot stand up for Him. The discipline of our lives is to become as little children. A little child would have stayed in the land whether there was a famine or not.

Abraham's going down to Egypt, and his "dumb-foundering" there, is the reason for all the complexity that came afterwards, and accounts for the continual recurrence of Egypt in the history of the Kingdom of God, until at last Egypt is to be united into the great, full purpose of God.

UNPERPLEXED

Genesis 13

Yea, this in him was the peculiar grace
(Hearten our chorus!)
That before living he'd learn how to live—
No end to learning:
Earn the means first—God surely will contrive
Use for our earning.
Others mistrust and say, "But time escapes:
Live now or never!"
He said, "What's time? Leave Now for dogs and apes!
Man has Forever."

Browning

... unto the place of the altar, which he had made there at the first. Genesis 13:4

When we come to study the lives of the saints, the confusing thing is that from one standpoint they are a jumble of inconsistencies, whilst from another standpoint they are an exhibition of the boundless consistency of God. This needs to be heeded, because if we study the life of a saint in order to find out what God is like, we shall finish up in the dumps and say—It is enough; whereas if we study God Himself, we shall find that He manifests His amazing consistency in the weakest and feeblest saint. At one time we find Abraham in a blank and sordid muddle; at another, we find him unperplexed and noble. The point is that God remains the same whether Abraham is unperplexed or muddled.

1. The Tryst of Sacramental Identification (Genesis 13:1-4)

Abraham went with God, and Lot "went with Abraham." Lot went down to Egypt with Abraham, and came back with Abraham, and the abundance of their possessions nearly brought about strife. A life of faithfulness is devotion to a servant or handmaid of God; a life of faith is devotion to God. Lot continually went to pieces; Abraham never did.

^{8.} this house of God: reference to Bible Training College (BTC).

The Way. We have to keep tryst with God in contact with the peculiar ways of everyone, and this can only be done by sacramental identification. The one thing Our Lord heeded was His tryst with God in connection with everyone, whether it was Judas or Peter or John; He took no account of the evil. We get huffed in no time-"No, they did not treat me rightly";—they did not consider that I ought to have been considered." Will I keep my tryst with God in contact with the blackguard or the traitor or the saint? Whoever it is, is nothing to do with me. I have not to fit other people into my ideas, but to keep tryst with God in relation to them. I am not to ignore them, but to refuse to look at them from my idea of what they ought to be, and to look at them only as facts in relation to my tryst with God.

The Wealth. Abraham came back exceedingly wealthy, but he kept tryst with God over his possessions. Beware of not keeping tryst with God over your possessions, whether they be material or not. It is perilously possible not to, but to make your spiritual life depend on the abundance of things you possess. If God has given you the wealth of Divine healing for your body, keep tryst with Him over it. When you are learning to trust God, He gives you at first certain things you lean on; then He withdraws, and you say it is the devil. No, it is the chastening of the Lord because He sees that you are possessing those things. You can only possess your possessions by being detached from them to God Who is the Source. If you are drawing your life from God and begin to take a wrong line, God will withdraw His life. This is also true with regard to money. We have only one Source, and that is God. One of the biggest snares is the idea that God is sure to lead us to success.

The Worship. All commentators notice one interesting point in Abraham's life, viz., the times he erected an altar and the times he did not; whenever he neglected to erect an altar, he went astray. This fact is one of great significance because worship is the tryst of sacramental identification. In worship I deliberately give back to God the best He has given me that I may be identified with Him in it. If Abraham had erected an altar, he would not have gone down to Egypt, but would have identified himself with God over the famine in the land of promise. Selfishness in spiritual matters produces delusion rapidly. If in every case of blank astonishment, we go back to the place where we first built an altar to God, we will be delivered from the delusion of obtuse independent certainty. Worship is the sacramental element in the saint's life.

2. The Test of Self Interest (Genesis 13:5–13)

As surely as we begin our life of faith with God, fascinating, luxurious and rich prospects will open to us, which are ours by right, but if we are living the life of faith we will exercise the right to waive our rights and give them away, letting God choose for us. It is the discipline of transforming the natural into the spiritual by obedience to God's voice. In the life of faith God allows us to get into a place of testing where the consideration of our own welfare would be the right and proper thing if we were not living the life of faith; but if we are living the life of faith, we will heartily waive our own rights in favour of those whose right it is not, and leave God to choose for us. Whenever we make "right" our guidance, we blunt our spiritual insight. The greatest enemy of the life with God is not sin, but the good that is not good enough. It would seem the wisest thing in the world for Abraham to choose, it was his right, and the people round him would consider him a fool for not choosing. Many of us do not go on in our spiritual life because we prefer to choose what is our right instead of relying upon God to choose for us. We have to learn to walk according to the standard that has its eve on God.

The Tax of Riches (vv. 5-7). Abraham's riches were in a great measure a tax to him. Every possession is tainted with a want; in this case the want was for sufficient pasturage. When Jesus Christ came He possessed nothing; the only symbol for our Lord is the symbol of poverty (Luke 9:58; 2 Corinthians 8:9) and this is true of the saint—"having nothing, and yet possessing all things." Every possession produces an appetite that clings.

The Touch of Rectitude. Lot forgot the place of communion, he thought only of the world. But Abraham, unperplexed, instantly exhibited forbearance as the result of his tryst with God, he walked in the moral atmosphere of the Sermon on the Mount. Abraham's rectitude was not the rectitude of honour, but of holiness. This rectitude is exhibited in the life of Jesus Christ, of Whom it is recorded that He "pleased not Himself." This gives the deathblow to subjectivity, that is, to the subjective experiences based on what is pleasing to my holy self; of the holiest Being Who ever trod this earth it is recorded that He pleased not Himself.

The Tarnish of Reasonableness (vv. 10–13). Lot chose what he considered the best for his possessions. This is the tarnish of reasonableness of a mind that has neglected its tryst with God.

3. The Type of Supreme Integrity (Genesis 13:14–18)

We must distinguish between the times when God revealed Himself to Abraham and the times when He concealed Himself. In the former, Abraham's faith is elevated; in the latter it sinks.

The Manifestation of God (v. 14). The first manifestation of God to Abraham was in his migration to Canaan; the first concealing when he went down to Egypt. Abraham did not have another manifestation of God until after his noble act of faith toward Lot.

The Message of God (vv. 15–16). The promises of God correspond to the acts and conduct of faith in Abraham. Only when Abraham acts in accordance with his real faith in God, does God speak to him.

There is a connection throughout between the providence of God and the conduct of Abraham.

The Man of God (v. 18). Paul takes Abraham as a type of the life of faith, not as the type of a saint, but of a tried faith built on a real God. The sanctification of our faith, as distinct from the sanctification of our heart, is the unfathomable, supernatural blessing from God.

WAR Genesis 14:1–16

Let it go or stay, so I wake to the higher aims
Of a land that has lost for a while her lust of gold,
And love of a peace that was full of wrongs and shames,

Horrible, hateful, monstrous, not to be told; And hail once more to the banner of battle unroll'd!

Tho' many a light shall darken, and many shall weep

For those that are crush'd in the clash of jarring claims. . . .

Let it flame or fade, and the war roll down like a wind.

We have proved we have hearts in a cause, we are noble still,

And myself have awaked, as it seems, to the better mind;

It is better to fight for the good than to rail at the

I have felt with my native land, I am one with my kind,

I embrace the purpose of God, and the doom assign'd.

... and [one] told Abram the Hebrew; ... he armed his trained servants. Genesis 14:13–14

In the study of Abraham, as in the study of all Bible characters, principles are no guide. The inconsistencies which we find in Abraham reveal the consistency of God, and the thing to note is that Abraham remained true to God both before and after his lapses. Beware, however, what you call lapses in Abraham. For instance, there is no lapse on Abraham's part in connection with this war, but rather the presentation of the inspiration of God. Error lies in making the basis of truth an abstraction, or a principle, instead of a personal relationship. Reality is not found in logic; Reality is a Person. "I am . . . the Truth." Spiritual life is based on a personal relationship to Jesus Christ, and on the consequent responsibility of that relationship.

1. The War of Violence (Genesis 14:1-8)

This is the first war mentioned in Scripture, and its cause was the lust for dominion. The war of the world against the world is portrayed in this chapter, and it is full of the most intense spiritual interpretation. Life without conflict is impossible, either in nature or in grace. This is an open fact of life. The basis of physical, mental, moral and spiritual life is antagonism. Physical life is maintained according to the power of fight in the corpuscles of the blood. If I have sufficient vital force within to overcome the forces without, I produce the balance of health. The same is true of mental life. If I want to maintain a clear, vigorous, mental life, I have to fight, and in this way I produce the balance of thought. Morally it is the same. Virtue is the result of fight; I am only virtuous according to the moral stability I have within. If I have sufficient moral fighting capacity, I produce the moral balance of virtue. We make virtue out of necessity, but no one is virtuous who is good because he cannot help it. Virtue is the outcome of conflict. And spiritually it is the same. "In the world ye shall have tribulation"; i.e., everything that is not spiritual makes for my undoing; "but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." When once this is understood it is a perfect delight to meet opposition, and as we learn to score off the things that come against us, we produce the balance of holiness. Faith must be tried, and it is the trial of faith that is precious. If you are faint-hearted, it is a sign you won't play the game, you are fit for neither God nor man because you will face nothing.

2. The War of Faint-Hearted Defence (Genesis 14:9–12)

When God's providence involves us unexpectedly in all sorts of complications, the test comes on two lines—Will I have faith in God; and will I ally myself with those who rescue the down-trodden irrespective of their beliefs? It is instructive to note in the Bible that faint-heartedness arises whenever self-interest begins to get luxurious. The sign of faint-heartedness in individuals is in the languid talk of "someone else" when there is anything to be done.

Whenever there is the experience of fag or weariness or degradation, you may be certain you have done one of two things—either you have disregarded a law of nature, or you have deliberately got out of touch with God. There is no such thing as weariness in God's work. If you are in tune with the joy of God, the more you spend out in God's service, the more the recuperation goes on, and when once the warning note of weariness is given, it is a sign that something has gone wrong. If only we would heed the warning, we would find it is God's wonderfully gentle way of saying—"Not that way; that must be left alone; this must be given up." Spiritual fatigue comes from the unconscious frittering away of God's time. When you feel weary or are exhausted, don't ask for hot milk, but get back to God. The secret of weariness and nervous disease in the natural world is the lack of a dominating interest, and the same is true in spiritual life. Much of what is called Christian work is veneered spiritual disease; it is Christian activity that counts-dominating life from God, and every moment is filled with an energy that is not our own, a super-abounding life that nothing can stand before.

3. The War of Divine Inspiration (Genesis 14:13–16)

In chapter 13 Abraham was put through the test of self-interest, and here he is put through the test of self-complacency. The occasion for self-complacency would be in seeing that what befell Lot was just, and that God was proving Abraham to be in the right. But Abraham did not go under in the test; he did not sit down, as it were, with a sanctified smirk and say, "Perhaps he will learn wisdom now." Abraham entered into the war with the light and cheerful heroism of heaven.

"... servants, born in his own house." This phrase is of great spiritual significance. Whenever a conflict takes place, such as is pictured here, the successful fighters are the faithful children of the faithful saints. In spiritual warfare may God have mercy on the barren saint who has never produced his own kind but has to rely upon the converts of others. In the rugged details of the Old Testament regarding marriage, there is always a spiritual revelation. In the natural world there are three—father, mother and child; and in the spiritual world there are three—God, Church and converts. If a spiritual nature cannot reproduce its own kind, it will have to answer to God for it. If you have to rely in times of stress upon the converts of others, the conflict drags out desperately; you can always rely on your own converts, those whom you have been the means of leading into the truth.

MORE THAN CONQUEROR

Genesis 14:17-24

Why have we yet no great deliverance wrought, Why have we not truth's banner yet unfurled, High floating in the face of all the world,—Why do we live and yet accomplish nought?

What time the years pass from us of our youth, And we unto the altar of high truth As yet no worthy offering have brought. But now we bid these restless longings cease;

If Heaven has aught for us to do or say,
Our time will come; and we may well hold peace,
When He, till thrice ten years had passed away,
In stillness and in quietness upgrew,
Whose word once spoken should make all things new.

Trench⁹

Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils. Hebrews 7:4

We have to live perfectly actual lives, not actually perfect lives. This fact makes all the difference between religious faith and religious farce, and is very clearly brought out in the life of Abraham. God is not actual, He is real, and He bears into me His Holy Spirit Who enables me to live a perfectly actual life, kept by the reality of the love of God. "I don't feel this and that"—how can you when God is not actual, but real? Feeling has to do with actualities and will come later. Right feeling is produced by obedience, never vice versa. I am brought into contact with actuality by my senses, and into contact with reality by my faith. The test in actual things is—Am I living a life of faith, or a life of common sense which denies faith? Faith does not make me actually perfect; faith makes me perfectly actual.

1. When the Victory Is Won (Genesis 14:17)

The supreme test in the perfectly actual life of faith comes after a victory has been gained, because in the expansive hour of relaxation the ruling disposition of the heart is instantly manifested. We read of Our Lord that after a day when "all the city was gathered together at the door," He rose up a great while before day in order to pray, not to praise (Mark 1:32–35). In Abraham the victory revealed that he was more than conqueror over himself. To say "I have got the victory" is a selfish testimony; the testimony of the Spirit of God is that the Victor has got me. If we can notify victories for ourselves, we are not in right relationship to God at that particular time. Instead of worshipping God we are conscious only of what He has done through us, and we triumph in the experience He has brought us. My actual life is given me by God, and I can live in it either as an atheist or as a worshipper. Abraham stands as one who worships God after a victory.

2. Where the Victor Is a Worshipper (Genesis 14:18–20)

Just where Abram stands as the most striking character, Melchizedek enters and towers above him.

What better type or symbol could there be of the absolute, the everlasting, the divine, high priesthood and kingship than that phenomenal figure of Melchizedek? He comes out of the invisible, timeless eternity of the past; he belongs to the timeless assured eternity of the future; he is High Priest forever.

Du Bose

Melchizedek is a type of Christ; Abraham is never taken as a type of Christ, he is a type of the perfectly actual children of God. Melchizedek represents the Incarnation of God; Abraham represents the life of faith in the God Who became Incarnate. "Christ in me" and "I in Christ"; "Christ the Lord" and "Christ the Servant"—all become simple when we understand the relationship of Melchizedek and Abraham.

The supreme lesson of the perfectly actual life of faith is to learn how to worship. Faith brings me into personal contact with God before Whom I must ever bow. I have to maintain a worshipful relationship to God in everything, and in the beginning this is difficult. I am all right at meetings, at anything that is illuminated, but when it comes to actual life, I am actually of no use. I can talk till further orders, ¹⁰ but don't ask me to live the life.

We have to contend for God in our actual circumstances, and our contention for God lies in seeing that we rely upon Him absolutely while we carry out the dictates of our faith in Him. Melchizedek brings bread and wine to refresh the heroes of the perfectly actual life. Christ never takes part in the perfectly actual mixup of our human lives; therefore to ask "What would Jesus do?" is not the question of faith, but of Pharisaism, The question to ask is—"What would Jesus have me do?" It is impossible for Christ to be where you are, that is why He has put you there. You have to put on the new man in the actual circumstances you are in and manifest Him. It is arrogant humbug to imagine we are to be God Almighty on this earth. We are to be the sons and daughters of God, to live actual lives and put on the new man by deliberate acts of faith all the time, not denying the actual life. We have to remember that our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost, and to see that God is manifested in our mortal flesh by our worship; and that can only be done as we take the nourishment, the bread and the wine, which will sustain us in our actual contentions for God. "For in that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succour them that are tempted," i.e., succour us with His bread and wine in the hour of our temptation (Hebrews 2:18; 4:15).

It is dangerous to take Abraham as the picture of sanctification. Sanctification means the perfection of Jesus Christ manifesting itself in actual experience. If you take Abraham as a picture of sanctification, you will have to chop his life up and say—This part is sanctification, and that is not; and you will produce a false spiritual interpretation. Abraham is a picture of the life of faith, not the result of faith. He portrays for all time the ups and downs, the haphazards and the tests, the nobilities and the blunders of the perfectly actual life of faith.

3. While the Victorious Is Worthy (Genesis 14:21–24)

Abraham renounces any advantage for himself, but he preserves the rights of those with him. We have the perfect right not to insist on our rights, it is the privilege of a Christian to waive his rights; but we do not always recognise that we must insist on those associated with us getting their rights. If they prefer to take the line of faith that we take, that is their responsibility, but we are not exonerated from seeing that they get their rights.

^{10. &}quot;till further orders": ad infinitum; endlessly; of military origin, meaning continuing the present action until one receives different orders.

A STAR-HITCHED WAGON

Genesis 15:1-6

Be near me when my light is low,
When the blood creeps, and the nerves prick
And tingle; and the heart is sick,
And all the wheels of Being slow.

Be near me when the sensuous frame Is rack'd with pangs that conquer trust; And Time, a maniac scattering dust, And Life, a Fury slinging flame.

And he believed in the LORD. Genesis 15:6

The title represents the wildness of God's expectations. If only He had told us to hitch our wagon to a mule, we could see how it might be done; but to tell us to hitch our natural lumbering wagons to the star of Almighty God makes us wonder whether we have understood Him aright. Faith sticks to the wagon and the star; fanaticism jumps from the wagon to the star and breaks its neck. A saint is not an angel and never will be; a saint is the flesh and blood theatre in which the decrees of God are carried to successful issues. All of which means that God demands of us the doing of common things while we abide in Him,

1. The Vision in the Valley of Afterwards (Genesis 15:1)

The meaning of the valley of afterwards is that there must be an interchange between actualities and realities, it is the successful interchange between the two that keeps the life healthy. There is no "afterwards" to the one who lives his life mystically only; a life that produces no results is an intensely selfish life. There must be the interchange between my real standing before God and my life on the earth, i.e., my wagon must be hitched to the star, and hitched to it by faith.

The afterwards of success for God produces the feeling—Was it worthwhile? The coward fears before danger; the heroic spirit fears afterwards. It was after the victory, when Abraham went into the valley of the afterwards, that God said to him—"Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." If you say, "My goal is God Himself" before you have been to school, it is merely a nursery rhyme; but say it after winning a victory that tells for God, and the victory does not seem such a glorious thing after all, until you find that the goal is not a prize, but the fulfilment of a decree of God in and through you.

2. The Veil on the Vision of Abraham (Genesis 15:2–3)

Abraham is not rebellious, but he is not hilarious. He believes that Eliezer must be his heir, and he acquiesces in the purpose of God and only wants light as to the meaning of it. The phrase—"Behold, to me Thou hast given no seed" is not a murmur against God, but a pious exclamation of weakness. It is not a challenge to God, but an expression of resignation; Abraham is blaming himself for misinterpreting God—"Excuse me for being so disappointed, Lord, but I find that all my hopes and ideas have been wrong"; but he came to find that they were not wrong.

Beware of being sorry for God's reputation in your particular case. Self-pity is Satanic; but pity for God is the betrayal of your affections. Here Abraham is in the condition not of pitying himself, but of pitying God's reputation in himself; he cannot understand how God is going to fulfil what He has said—no heir other than Eliezer, the idea of having a child must have been a misinterpretation. The veil on the vision of Abraham makes him say: It can't be done—I want an explanation as to Your meaning. When God's promise refers to fertility in mud, we must not think it refers to birds of paradise in heaven, and because we see the mud only and no sign of fertility, say we are mistaken. If any promise of God that has emphatically to do with this earth and with flesh and blood people, is not being fulfilled, beware of saying—Oh well, I must have misinterpreted what God meant. We forget that we have to build in absolute confidence on God. There is nothing more heroic than to have faith in God when you can see so many better things in which to have faith. It is comparatively easy to have faith in God in a pathetic way in the starvation of things round about you, but a different matter to have faith in God after a tremendous victory has been won, and then in the aftermath that follows to think that there is to be no realisation of that for which God had caused you to hope.

3. The Voice and the Vastness of Altitude (Genesis 15:4–5)

In this chapter we fathom the depths of all that the New Testament unfolds. Abraham the childless is to become the father of nations—How mad the promise sounds! "And He brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars: . . .

So shall thy seed be." God points Abraham away from his wagon in the mud to the starry night, and hitches the two together by His own word. God's appeal to the stars is not to furnish proof for a doubting mind, but to provide nourishment for a faltering faith. Nature to the saint is a sacrament of God, not merely a series of facts; not symbols and signs, but the real evidence of the coming of God as a sacrament to His faithful children.

The whole discipline of the life of faith is to mix together the light of heaven and the sordid actuality of earth. Contemplation and consideration must go together, i.e., take your plan for what you do on earth from the altitude of heaven; let contemplation of the stars be mixed with what you build on earth.

In personal life despise these two things—dumps and hurry; they are worse than the devil, and are both excessively culpable. Dumps is an absolute slur against God—I won't look up, I have done all I could but it is all up, and I am in despair. Hurry is the same mood expressed in an opposite way—I have no time to pray, no time to look to God or to consider anything, I must do the thing. Perspiration is mistaken for Inspiration. Consequently I drive my miserable little wagon in a rut instead of hitching it to a star and pulling according to God's plan. God hitched the wagon of Abraham to the stars which He had created, by His word. In our personal lives the great solution is always found in the words of Our Lord when we have His Spirit. Jesus Christ is God Incarnate, and He makes His words spirit and life to us; our little human wagons are hitched to the star of God's sacramental purpose by the words of Jesus and in no other way. Whenever we include in hurry or in the dumps and refuse to pay attention to His words, we smash the connecting line and go off on our own.

4. The Veracity and Virtue of Attitude (Genesis 15:6)

"And he believed in the LORD." This is the act by which Abraham goes out of himself and relies upon God for righteousness and grace. Abraham had manifested many noble qualities of heart and many virtues in his walk of faith, but he is not made righteous before God by these. The lack in Abraham is supplied through his living confidence in God. The justification of every sinner is by faith and by faith alone, and when a man walks in that faith his justification appears in his flesh and justifies God (see Psalm 51:4).

This verse is the first germ of the great doctrine of "The LORD our Righteousness." Righteousness must never be made to mean less than a guiltless position in the presence of justice and right. God justifies me by my supernatural faith in Him, but it is my just walk that proves Him just in saving me; if I do not walk in the life of faith, I am a slander to God.

GOOD VERSUS BEST

Genesis 16:1-6

How the world is made for each of us!

How all we perceive and know in it

Tends to some moment's product thus,

When a soul declares itself—to wit,

By its fruit, the thing it does!

Be hate that fruit or love that fruit, It forwards the general deed of man. And each of the Many helps to recruit The life of the race by a general plan; Each living his own, to boot.

She fled from her face. Genesis 16:6

In the spiritual life we do not go from good to better, and from better to best; because there is only One to Whom we go, and that One is The Best, viz., God Himself. There can be no such thing as God's second best. We can perversely put ourselves out of God's order into His permissive will, but that is a different matter. In seeking the Best we soon find that our enemy is our good things, not our bad. The things that keep us back from God's best are not sin and imperfection, but the things that are right and good and noble from the natural standpoint. To discern that the natural virtues antagonise surrender to God is to bring our soul at once into the centre of our greatest battlefield. Very few of us debate with the sordid and the wrong, but we do debate with the good; and the higher up we go in the scale of the natural virtues, the more intense is the opposition to Jesus Christ, which is in inverse ratio to what one would naturally imagine (cf. Matthew 23:31).

1. The Fanaticism of Self-Denial (Genesis 16:1-2)

The childless state of Abraham's house was its great sorrow, and was a constant trial to Abraham's faith.

Everything to do with Abraham's call was dependent upon his having seed. It is instructive to note where both Abraham and Sarah began to go wrong. They did their best to fulfil God's command, but in so doing they got out of God's order into His permissive will. The fanatical passionate desire to fulfil God's will led them into desperate error. Beware of the fanaticism of self-denial, it will lead to error lasting in its effects. When we go off on that line we become devoted to our interpretation of our destiny. Destiny is never abstract. The destiny of a human being is vested in personal relationship to God. Abraham learned this lesson later; on Mount Moriah he distinctly proved that he knew the difference between obeying what God said and obeying God Who said it. Fanaticism is sticking true to my interpretation of my destiny instead of waiting for God to make it clear. The fanatical line is—Do something; the test of faith lies in not doing. Fanaticism is always based on the highest I believe; a sordid being is never fanatical. Our Lord taught His disciples to pray—"Lead us not into temptation." To say-"Lord, I will do whatever You tell me to do; I will stand loyal to You," is deliberately to disobey this caution of Our Lord.

Natural impulse in a saint leads to perdition every time unless it is brought into obedience to the destiny of God, then it is turned into inspiration. It is not that impulse is wrong, but it will lead to wrong unless it is brought into obedience to the spiritual destiny of the life, and this can only be done by devotion to the One Who founds our destiny for us, Our Lord Himself. Beware of trying to forestall God's programme by your own impulse.

2. The Falsity of Sagacious Discernment (Genesis 16:4)

Abraham and Sarah both adhered to their sagacious discernment in acting in accordance with the practice of the time in which they lived. Beware of discerning according to your own sagacity how God must do some things, because it means that you dictate to God—That word of God must be fulfilled; I cannot allow that I have been deluded, therefore there is only one thing left to do. That is leaning to your own understanding instead of trusting in the Lord with all your heart. Never say—God must do this thing. He must not; God will fulfil His own word. You have no business to dictate to Him, you have to remain true to God and when His word is fulfilled, you will know He has fulfilled it because it is a supernatural fulfilment. Always beware of being more eager to do God's will than God is for you to do it. The remarkable thing about the life of Our Lord was not that He was eager to do God's will, but that He was obedient to do it. He never put His fingers across the threads of His Father's providential order for Him and gave a tug saying—"Now I will help You," and pulled the thing right out of His Father's hands. He simply obeyed, leaving His Father's wisdom to arrange all for Him. We rush in and say—I see what God wants and I will do it, and we wound our own souls and injure other lives.

3. The Frenzy of Spent Devotion (Genesis 16:5)

Sarah's appeal in which she demands that the wrong should be upon Abraham—"My wrong be upon thee"—is a passionate outbreak. The whole thing is the consequence of the wrong into which Abraham has allowed himself to be drawn. It is significant to note that both Adam and Abraham receive the severe judgement of God; they heeded the voice of their wives and they had no business to. The full force of God's judgement comes on the man, not on the woman. All through it is man who is held responsible, he may escape from man's judgement but never from God's judgement ultimately. Nothing in the way of judgement is visited by God on the woman (cf. 1 Timothy 2:14); in human judgement it is the opposite. In this case the punishment fell distinctly on Abraham, although the instigation came from the fanatical self-denial of Sarah. God never holds a woman responsible in the same way as He does a man.

4. The Fanaticism of Sensual Dominion (Genesis 16:6)

Sarah through her harsh treatment of Hagar evidently thrust her back into the position of a mere slave; Hagar believed that she had grown above that position, and fled. Hagar does not stand for sin, but for the natural life when it gets out of place and up against the spiritual life. Hagar and her son received real protection and blessing from God. Sin can never be in a subordinate position. My natural life must be in subordination and under the absolute control of the spiritual. The natural must be turned into the spiritual by obedience, whatever sword has to go through its heart. The natural life must be "spiked" for the glory of God. The characteristic of the natural life is the independent passion for free dominion over itself. Immediately the natural life fights to get away, it comes into opposition. It is the good that hates the best. It is not only sin that produces the havoc in life, but the natural determination to "boss the show" for God and everyone else.

CONTINUOUS CONVERSION

Genesis 16:7-16

Lord, I have fallen again—a human clod!
Selfish I was, and heedless to offend;
Stood on my rights. Thy own child would not send Away his shreds of nothing for the whole God!
Wretched, to thee who savest, low I bend:
Give me the power to let my rag-rights go
In the great wind that from thy gulf doth blow.

Keep me from wrath, let it seem ever so right:
My wrath will never work thy righteousness.
Up, up the hill, to the whiter than snow-shine,
Help me to climb, and dwell in pardon's light.
I must be pure as thou, or ever less
Than thy design of me—therefore incline
My heart to take men's wrongs as thou tak'st mine.

George MacDonald

Whence camest thou? . . . Return, . . . and submit. Genesis 16:8-9

Hagar represents the natural life, she does not represent sin; sin cannot be converted. I have continually to convert the natural life into submission to the Spirit of God in me and not say—I will never do anything natural again; that is fanatical. When by the providence of God my body is brought into new conditions, I have to see that my natural life is converted to the dictates of the Spirit of God in me. Because it has been done once is no proof that it will be done again. "Except ye be converted, and become as little children . . ." is true for all the days of the saintly life, we have continually to turn to God. The attitude of continuous conversion is the only right attitude towards the natural life, and it is the one thing we object to. Either we say the natural is wrong and try to kill it, or else we say that the natural is all there is, and that everything natural and impulsive is right. Neither attitude is right. The hindrance in spiritual life is that we will not be continuously converted, there are "wadges" of obstinacy where our pride spits at the throne of God and says—"I shan't; I am going to be boss." We cannot remain boss by the sheer power of will; sooner or later our wills must yield allegiance to some force greater than their own, either God or the devil.

1. The Angel of the Lord and Wrecked Passion (Genesis 16:7)

Hagar in her helpless condition is in a fit state for the angel of the Lord to appear to her. Sarah's fanatical self-denial and vindictive spite are far from right, but they do not justify Hagar for her passionateness. I alone am responsible for the wrong I do. Hagar desired to be the mother of the seed of Abraham, but she was not to be; in her own mind she insisted on being not only the equal of Sarah but her displacer. Beware of passion that makes you reach for position, because it will end in spiritual infamy. Passion is the combination of desire and pride with a wild reach of possibility. The desire may be for a big or a little thing, but the instant result of anything done at the spur of passion lands you in a wilderness of disgust, nursing wounded pride.

The right relationship of Hagar to Sarah is to be the relationship of my natural life to the domination of the Holy Ghost. My natural life must not rule, the spiritual must rule, and it must rule over the natural life, which is represented by Hagar. I have to convert my natural life continually into submission to the Spirit of God in me, otherwise I shall produce the divorce which ends in hell.

2. The Angel of the Lord and Wounded Pride (Genesis 16:9)

The angel of the Lord and conscience say the same thing—Return and submit—yet they stand distinct. If the voice of God does not correspond with what conscience says, I need pay no attention to it; but when it says the same thing as conscience, I must either obey or be damned in that particular. Return from assumed responsibility and submit—to the old oppression? Yes, but without the element of passion and of pride, and the result will be according to the will of God.

Natural pride has to do with my standing before men, not before God—I shall not bow, I will make others bow to me. That is natural domination, and represents the antagonism of the natural life to the domination of the Holy Spirit. Wherever there is natural pride the Lord must inevitably be put to open shame.

3. The Angel of the Lord and the Word of Promise (Genesis 16:10–12)

"The LORD hath heard thy affliction." Throughout the Bible this is the revelation of the personal attitude of God to the miseries of the world. He is not indifferent, the cry does not go up to the ears of a deaf God.

Hagar's great desire is to be the mother of the believing children of Abraham; the angel says—No, Hagar is to be the mother of Ishmael, and Ishmael is to be blessed. The limitation of the promise is connected with the promise itself. Do not miss the point of Hagar's mistake. Hagar must be cured of the delusion that she is destined to become the mother of the believing seed of Abraham—"Cast out the bondwoman and her son": i.e. cast them out of the position they have no right to be in (see Galatians 4:30).

The attitude of Our Lord towards anything to do with the natural is that of unflinching, patient sternness; He is not cruel, but He is stern, just as He was stern with His mother (John 2:4), and just as the apostle Paul was stern with his own body (1 Corinthians 9:27).

When we are born again we enthrone Ishmael, that is, we consecrate our natural gifts and say these are the things with which God is going to do His work: they are the things God makes His servants, and I have to see that they are put in the position of servants. If I put them on the throne, I start a mutiny within my own soul. The bondwoman and her child have to be cast out; the natural has to be sacrificed in order that it may be brought into perfect at-homeness with the Spirit of God. If we make our natural life submit and obey the Holy Spirit within us, we will hasten the time for the manifestation of the sons of God (Romans 8:21). It is the man who can rule his natural spirit that is able to take the city. It is only when we have learned to bring the natural life into perfect submission to the ruling personality of God that God dare turn His saints loose. It is of no use to turn out a lot of half-baked Ephraims into unlimited power. If I enthrone natural pride or natural virtue, I am in total insubordination to God in just that particular and cannot be His son or daughter.

4. The Appearing of the Lord and Waiting Patience (Genesis 16:13–16)

"Thou art a God that seeth" (RV). We see for the first time when we do not look. We see actual things, and we say that we see them, but we never really see them until we see God; when we see God, everything becomes different. It is not the external things that are different, but a different disposition looks through the same eyes as the result of the internal surgery that has taken place. We see God, and then we see things actually as we never saw them before.

THE RESERVATIONS OF GOD

Genesis 17:1

Oh, we're sunk enough here, God knows! But not quite so sunk that moments, Sure tho' seldom, are denied us, When the spirit's true endowments Stand out plainly from its false ones, And apprise it if pursuing Or the right way—or the wrong way, To its triumph or undoing.

There are flashes struck from midnights,

There are fire-flames noondays kindle, Whereby piled-up honours perish, Whereby swollen ambitions dwindle. While just this or that poor impulse, Which for once had play unstifled, Seems the sole work of a life-time That away the rest have trifled.

I am the Almighty God. Genesis 17:1

God is a perplexing Being to man because He is never in the wrong, and through the process of allowing every bit of man's wrongdoing to appear right at the time, He proves Himself right ultimately. Beware of the conception that God has to use His wits to keep Himself from being outwitted by man and the devil. God will never have more power than He has now; if He could have, He would cease to be God. Individually we may thwart God's purpose in our lives for a time, but God's purpose will be fulfilled, wherever we end. Human free will is God's sovereign work, and God not only respects it in man but He delights to posit it in him. I have perfect power not to do God's will, and I have that power by the sovereign will of God; but I can never thwart God's will ultimately. God allows ample room for man and the devil to do their worst; He allows the combination of other wills to work out to the last lap of exhaustion so that that way need never be tried again, and men will have to confess, either reluctantly or willingly, that God's purpose was right after all. And this holds true in the individual lives of God's children. I am at liberty if I choose to try every independent plan of my own, but I shall find in the end (whether too late or not is another matter), that what God said I had better do at the beginning was the right thing, if only I had listened to Him.

Every blunder Abraham made was repeated in his descendants by the inevitableness of God's providence. The consequence of doing wrong is brought out in the life of Abraham in great prominence, but the abiding truth remains the same for each one of us. It is not cause and effect, but because God is God.

1. The Rigour of the Everlasting No

The LORD appeared to Abram . . .

Compare Genesis 15:1—"The word of the LORD came unto Abram in a vision." God's method all through seems to be vision first and then reality. So many mistake the vision for the reality, but in between the vision and the reality there is often a deep valley of humiliation, cf. 15:12—"Lo, an horror of great darkness fell upon him." How often has a faithful soul been plunged into a like darkness; after the vision has come the test and the darkness. Whenever God gives a vision to a saint, He puts the saint, as it were, in the shadow of His hand, and the saint's duty is to be still and listen. Genesis 16 is an illustration of the danger of listening to good advice when it is dark instead of waiting for God to send the light (cf. Galatians 1:15–16). When God gives a vision and darkness follows, wait; God will bring you into accordance with the vision He has given if you will wait His time. We try to do away with the supernatural in God's undertakings. Never try and help God fulfil His word. There are some things we cannot do, and that is one of them.

Never try to anticipate the actual fulfilment of a vision; you transact some business spiritually with God on your mount of transfiguration and by faith see clearly a vision of His purpose, and immediately afterwards there is nothing but blank darkness. You trust in the Lord, but you walk in darkness; the temptation is to work up enthusiasm, you have to stay on God and wait (Isaiah 50:10-11). If darkness turns to spiritual doldrums, you are to blame. When God puts the dark of "nothing" into your experience, it is the most positive something He can give you. If you do anything now it is sure to be wrong, you have to remain in the centre of nothing, and say "thank you" for nothing. It is a very great lesson, which few of us learn, that when God gives us nothing it is because we are inside Him, and by determining to do something we put ourselves outside Him. Abraham would not stay in the land when the famine came because there was nothing; he would not trust God for a child because there was not one. God kept giving Abraham "nothing," i.e., Himself, and by determining to do something Abraham jumped outside God, and came to find that he was putting himself in the relationship of the Everlasting No. There are things God tells us to do without any light or illumination other than just the word of His command, and if we do not obey it is because we are independently strong enough to wriggle out of obeying. All God's commands are enablings, therefore it is a crime to be weak in His strength.

The phrase "When Abram was ninety years old and nine" is of immense significance. Thirteen years have rolled by in between Genesis 16:16 and Genesis 17:1. Abraham had anticipated the purpose of God and had to pass through a long time of discipline. The act of Abraham and Sarah produced a complexity in God's plan all down the ages. So Moses had to wait forty years after his presumptuous attempt to reach his destination. Adam and Eve did the same thing, they took the "short cut" (which is the meaning of temptation) and anticipated their destination to be actually what they were potentially—"as God" (Genesis 3:5 RV), and thereby they went wrong. Our destination is to be as God, that is what we are here to become, and in Jesus Christ we do become so. Beware of estimating the temptation of a child of God to be less royal than it really is. The temptation of a child of God does not spring from selfish lust, but from a passionate desire to reach God's destination.

Abraham emerged out of this stage of discipline with one determination, viz., to let God have His way. There is no indication that he is relying on the flesh any longer, his reliance is on God alone. All self-sufficiency has been destroyed in every shape and form, there is not one common sense ray left as to how God is going to fulfil His word. God never hastens and He never tarries. He works His plans out in His own way, and we either lie like clogs on His hands or we assist Him by being as clay in the hands of the potter.

"The LORD appeared to Abram"—the real God now, not a vision. The knowledge of the real God is reached when my confidence is placed in God and not in His blessings. Paul takes Abraham as the type of the life of faith; not of sanctification, but of a tried faith built on a real God.

2. The Reality of the Everlasting Yea

I am God Almighty . . . (RV)

"I am God Almighty"-El Shaddai, the Father-Mother God, God proved as sufficient for everything. The wonder of El Shaddai (the power to create new things in the old world) runs through the whole kingdom of grace. Remember, Isaac was born of dead parents (Romans 4:19). If I think I am going to produce the Son of God in myself by prayer, or obedience, or consecration, I am making exactly the same blunder that Sarah and Abraham made over Hagar. "... which were born, not ... of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." Immediately I realise that the thing is impossible, then God will do it. To be brought to the verge of the impossible is to be brought to the margin of the reservations of God. When God is bringing us there we indulge in sulky misbehaviour—"I don't want to go that way; I want Your blessings," and when God asks if we have to come to the end of ourselves, we sit resigned and say—"It is all up now"; then suddenly we are in Paradise because we have come to the end of the thing God could not bring in. The Everlasting Yea is reached when we perceive that God is El Shaddai, the All-Sufficient God. There is no need so far as God is concerned for the years of silence and discipline if we will only be stupid enough to hear the everlasting No and not try to make it Yea—"Oh yes, I am going to try and make my natural virtues pleasing to God"; God says you cannot do it. God does not discard the old and create something entirely new; He creates something in the old until the old and the new are made one. To call conversion new birth is an impoverishment. Because a man who has lived in sin stops sinning, it is no sign that he is born from above (RV mg). Jesus did not talk about new birth to a sinner, but to a religious man, a godly man full of rectitude; but Nicodemus worshipped God as a reminiscence, he had not the creation of El Shaddai in him. The creation of El Shaddai is what is made possible by the Lord Jesus (Galatians 4:19).

3. The Reasonableness of the Everlasting Way

Walk before Me . . .

Abraham's faith is to be permanent, that is, he must walk continually before the eyes of the Almighty in the conscious unconsciousness of His presence. We won't walk before God because we are not confident in Him, and the proof that we are not confident in God is that occasionally we get into the sulks. If you are walking with God it is impossible to be in the sulks. Never have the idea that you have disobeyed when you know you have not, the reason you say so is because you are not walking in the permanent light of faith. Suppose Job had said—"If I were trusting in God I should not be treated like this"; he was trusting in God, and he was treated like that. Faith is not that I see God, but that I know God sees me; that is good enough for me, I will run out and play-a life of absolute freedom. Watch the spiritual sulks that arise because we want something other than God; we want God to give us something, to make us feel well, to give us wonderful insight into the Bible. That is not the attitude of a saint but of a sinner who is trying to be a saint, and who is coming to God to get things from Him. Unless we give to God the things we get from Him, they will prove our perdition.

4. The Rectitude of the Everlasting Day

... and be thou perfect.

"And be perfect," free from blame, or guiltless. Abraham was still lacking in the development of his faith and was therefore not blameless as vet. Had Abraham stayed in the land of promise, no matter though he starved to death, he would have been blameless, but he went down to Egypt and so was not blameless. We must beware lest we ignore what the old theologians called prevenient grace, that is, receiving beforehand the grace of God which will keep us worshipping Him instead of trusting in our wits. If we put moral wits in the place of mystic worship, we will go wrong. The life of Abraham does not stand for the life of a saint but for the life of the Father of the Faithful, consequently every error he committed, as well as every glorious thing he did, is recorded and traced out in its consequences through the history of his people. We are not to follow all the steps of Abraham, but to follow the steps of his faith (cf. 1 Corinthians 4:17).

We try to scrape our defects off and say—I think I am all right now. That is not walking blamelessly before God, but walking in determined opposition to faith in God. If I walk in faith in God there will be no specks to rub off; but if I don't walk in faith in God, everything is a defect and a stain, however good I am. It is a snare to continually think about defects, things which we really think should not be there. Imagine anyone who has seen himself in the light of Jesus Christ thinking of his defects! Why we are too filthy for words, and to be concerned because of the spots upon us is absurd. Leave the whole miserable thing alone; we have the sentence of death in ourselves that we should not trust in ourselves but in God, and there are no specks in God. I have determinedly to take no one seriously but God, and the first person I have to leave severely alone as being the greatest fraud I have ever known is myself. "Oh I am sick of myself"—if you really were sick of yourself you would go to your own funeral and for ever after let God be all in all. Until you get to that point you will never have faith in God.

Beware of the thing that makes you go down before God and sway from side to side spiritually—"I don't know what to do"; then don't do anything. "I don't see anything"; well, don't look for anything. "I thought by this time I should see something"; if you don't, be foolish enough to trust in God. It is the height of madness from common-sense standpoints to have faith in God. Faith is not a bargain with God—I will trust You if You give me money, but not if You don't. We have to trust in God whether He sends us money or not, whether He gives us health or not. We must have faith in God, not in His gifts. Let us walk before God and be perfect, you in your circumstances and I in mine, then we will prove ourselves true children of Abraham.

I faced a future all unknown,
No opening could I see,
I heard without the night wind moan.
The days were dark to me—
I cannot face it all alone
O be Thou near to me!

He has, He will, He worketh still, In ways most wonderful. He drew me from the miry clay, He filled my cup quite full. And while my heart can speak I'll tell His love unspeakable.

And Abram fell on his face. Genesis 17:3

It is significant to note the times when Abraham did not speak to God but remained silent before Him, not sullen, but silent. Awe is just that—reverential dread and wonder. Beware of its imitation; the pose of reverential awe is the greatest cloak for unbelief. Awe is the condition of a man's spirit realising Who God is and what He has done for him personally. Our Lord emphasises the attitude of a child, no attitude can express such solemn awe and familiarity as that of a child. In the Apocalypse the attitude of St. John is that of an awe-struck child of God.

1. The Personal Relation in Faithfulness (Genesis 17:2)

The covenant with the Father of the Faithful is applicable to every man when once faith (i.e. a relationship between the individual and God) is born. We make covenants with ourselves, or with our experiences, or with our transactions—I came out to the penitent form; or, I surrendered to God. That is a covenant of self-idolatry, an attempt to consecrate our earnest consecration to God. It is never a question of covenanting to keep our vows before God, but of our relationship to God Who makes the covenant with us. In the matter of salvation it is God's honour that is at stake, not our honour. Few of us have faith in God, the whole thing is a solemn vow with our religious selves. We promise that we will do what God wants; we vow that we will remain true to Him, and we solemnly mark a text to this effect; but no human being can do it. We have to steadily refuse to promise anything and give ourselves over to God's promise, flinging ourselves entirely on to Him, which is the only possible act of the faith that comes as God's gift. It is a personal relation to God's faith—"between Me and thee." "Come unto Me," said Jesus. The thing that keeps us from coming is religious self-idolatry; we will not let God make a covenant with us, we will make vows with God. Vowing means I can do it if I pledge myself to do it (cf. Exodus 19:3–5). We have to stake ourselves on the truthfulness of God's character; what He does with us is a matter of indifference. Beware of trusting in your trust and see that you trust in the Lord, and you will never know you trust Him because you are taken up into His certainty.

2. The Profound Realisation of Fruition (Genesis 17:3)

This is an expression of deep humility and trustful confidence and pure joy; these are always the characteristics of faith in God. Every time you say—I feel I haven't got the witness, pack up and get out-out of the compartment of yourself and into the compartment of God, and stay there. Whenever you make a transaction with God, it is real instantly and you have the witness; when there is no witness, no humility, no confidence or joy, it is because you have made a transaction with your religious self and you say-I must wait for God's witness. That is self-idolatry; there is no trust in God in it, but just the mewling of a sick infant. The relation is to be that of a child; fling yourself clean over on to God and wash your hands of the consequences, and John 14:27—"My peace I give unto you"—becomes true at once. The profound realisation of God makes you too unspeakably peaceful to be capable of any self-interest.

3. The Precious Recognition of Fellowship (Genesis 17:3-4)

... and God talked with him.

The faith that is the creation of God's Spirit in the human soul is never private and personal. When once that faith is created we are caught up into the terrific universal purpose of God, "Thou shalt be a father of many nations." The Holy Spirit destroys our personal private life and turns it into a thoroughfare for God.

Faith is not the means whereby we take God to ourselves for our select coterie; faith is the gift of God whereby He expresses His purposes through us. God wants to take us up into His purpose so that we no more keep for our joys "a world within the world," but God can do with us exactly what He likes without saying—By your leave. God does not ask permission to use us any more than we ask permission to use our hands, but we have to keep in joint with God. Full power cannot be put into a machine that is out of gear. (Cf. 1 John 1:7.)

4. The Promised Royalty of Fatherhood (Genesis 17:4)

This amazing promise is exactly expressive of the power of God and it produces moral hysterics. When it begins to dawn in my conscious life what God's purpose is, there is the laughter of the possibility of the impossible. The impossible is exactly what God does. The sure sign that we have no faith in God is that we have no faith in the supernatural. No man can believe God unless God is in him. The promises to Abraham are God all over from beginning to end. Don't only make room for God, but believe that God has room enough for you.

5. The Peculiar Recognition of Regeneration Familiarity (Genesis 17:5)

The new name "Abraham" announces a new disposition, and circumcision represents the renewal of the whole into a more noble nature by the presence of a new disposition within until the two are made one (cf. Matthew 5:48). Hagar represents not the sinful but the natural, which must first go through the pain of being a willing slave and be turned into oneness with the purpose of God. The difficulty in personal life is that the natural in us says to God in spiteful irritation—"I shan't; I won't go back to Sarah; I won't submit to any rule at all, I will boss the whole thing myself." But you cannot; you will either have to come to the death of the natural willingly, or be dragged there by the providential tyranny of God.

6. The Physical Sign of Spirituality (Genesis 17:6–14)

Circumcision, or sanctification which it symbolises, is the decision to cut away all self-idolatry and abandon to God entirely. The old nature and the new have to be made one, and the sign that they are one is circumcision in the Old Testament and sanctification in the new. The point to remember is that the new creation is made by El Shaddai in the old world. When the Holy Spirit comes in the two natures are there distinctly, and they have to be amalgamated into one nature. The old has to be turned into a noble nature by the incoming of God; we are not to be fanatical and turn our noses up at the old. The new disposition is the one in which God is all. The Judaisers taught that all those who were of the direct historic seed of Abraham were all right. The Apostle John says No, it is not by physical generation but by supernatural generation (see John 1:12-13). Then came the spiritualising people who denied that God had anything to do with the physical generation. The Apostle says No. Jesus Christ came that way (see 1 John 4:2), which is a proof that everything that has been defiled is to be made holy through Christ. Beware of insulting God by being a pious prude instead of a pure person.

ECSTASIED Genesis 17:15-27

Though dim as yet in tint and line,
We trace Thy picture's wise design,
And thank Thee that our age supplies
Its dark relief of sacrifice.
Thy will be done!
Strike, Thou the Master, we Thy keys,
The anthem of the destinies!
The minor of Thy loftier strain,
Our hearts shall breathe the old refrain,
Thy will be done!

Whittier

Then Abraham fell upon his face, and laughed. Genesis 17:17

There are certain phases of the life of faith which look so much like cant and humbug that we are apt to grieve God's Spirit by our religious respectability in regard to them, and ecstasy is just one of those phases. An ecstasied man is one whose state of mind is marked by mental alienation from his surroundings, and his very consciousness is altered into excessive joy. These states are open gateways for God or for the devil. If they are worked up by thrills of our own seeking, they are of the devil; but when they come unsought in faithful performance of duties, they are the gateway into direct communication with God. Ecstasy is not a state in which to live; keep your ecstatic times dark. You have no business to show the depths to anyone but yourself and God.

We are all so abominably serious, so interested in our own characters, that we refuse to behave like Christians in the shallow concerns of life. Our safeguard is the God-given shallowness. It is the attitude of a spiritual prig to go about with a countenance that is a rebuke to others because you have the idea that they are shallower than you. Live the surface commonsense life in a commonsense way, and remember that the shallow concerns of life are as much of God as the profound concerns. It is not our devotion to God or our holiness that makes us refuse to be shallow, but our wish to impress others that we are not shallow, which is a sure sign that we are prigs. We are to be of the stamp of Our Lord and Master, and the prigs of His day called Him a glutton and a winebibber, they said He was not dealing with the profound things. Beware of the production of contempt for others by thinking that they are shallow. To be shallow is not a sign of being wicked; the ocean has a shore. The shallow amenities of life are appointed of God and are the things in which Our Lord lived, and He lived in them as the Son of God. It is easier for personal pride not to live in them. Beware of posing as a profound person; God became a Baby.

1. The Princess of God in Human Expression (Genesis 17:15–16)

The name "princess" is not earned by piety on the part of the woman, it is the new thing which has been created in her by faith in God. When we find unfortunate ingredients in Abraham and Sarah, and in ourselves, we have to realise that God's designations refer to what He redemptively creates in us, and not to our decorations of ourselves. The treasure is "in earthen vessels." A princess in God's sense is not a princess when she prides herself on her own initiative. When Our Lord says, "the same is My sister, and mother," note the condition of His designation, viz., "whosoever shall do the will of My Father which is in heaven"; not whosoever has done the will of God once. Doing the will of God is instantaneously continuous. Am I doing the will of God now? Faith does not give us a feeling of eternal life upon which we draw; faith is a fountain of living water overflowing. If I keep living the life of faith then I shall be a sister of the Lord Jesus. There is only one way to live the life of faith, and that is to live it.

2. The Paradoxes of God and Human Emotion (Genesis 17:17)

This is the first time laughter is mentioned in the Bible, and the first mention of a thing in the Bible colours its meaning all the way through. Abraham's laughter had in it no intermixture of wrong. Laughter and weeping are the two intensest forms of human emotion, and these profound wells of human emotion are to be consecrated to God. The devil is never said to laugh. Laughter that is not the laughter of a heart right with God, a child heart, is terrible; the laughter of sin is as the crackling of burning thorns. Whenever the angels come to this earth they come bursting with a joy which instantly has to be stayed (cf. Luke 2:13). This earth is like a sick chamber, and when God sends His angels here He has to say—"Now be quiet; they are so sick with sin that they cannot understand your hilarity." Whenever the veil is lifted there is laughter and joy. These are the characteristics that belong to God and God's order of things; sombreness and oppression and depression, are the characteristics of all that does not belong to God.

The promise was so great that Abraham sank reverently upon the ground, and so paradoxical that he ecstatically laughed—"Is it to be now at this late day even as Thou didst assure me it was to be?" There was no doubt, but amazement; the thing was so completely impossible that Abraham believed it absolutely, so absolutely that his equilibrium was upset. We have all experienced ecstasy in minor degrees. Every time we have transacted business with God on His covenant and have let go entirely on God, there is no sense of merit in it, no human ingredient at all, but such a complete overwhelming sense of being a creation of God's that we are transfigured by peace and joy.

3. The Purpose of God and Human Expectation (Genesis 17:18-21)

Abraham was all this time contented with the supposition that Ishmael was the child of promise, but in this new revelation he receives the definite statement of God that Sarah shall bear to him the true heir, and the promise is revealed even in regard to time. Up till now there had been the mingling of doubt with Abraham's faith, he did not trust God completely because he did not see how He was going to fulfil His word (cf. Luke 24:41). In v. 20 the promise is still more clearly revealed, and with this revelation God withdraws—"and God went up from Abraham."

4. The Programme of God and Human Exercise (Genesis 17:22–27)

These verses state how Abraham complies with the prescribed rite of circumcision. God uses circumcision (as He did the rainbow) and makes it a sign and symbol for something it never was until He made it so. Circumcision becomes with the historic people of God a real sign of the covenant with God that they are His people, but there must be an accompanying sign of our agreement with God. For instance, the physical exertion of coming to a penitent form has a more emphatic meaning than we imagine, and it is against those exertions that human nature protests—"But it is so humiliating." Of course it is! If you sit tight against the monitions of the Holy Ghost, you will make yourself obtuse to the voice of God. The thing that keeps you back from obeying is the domination of natural human pride that will not bow to God. Salvation will never be actual until you physically commit yourself to it (Romans 10:10).

FRIEND OF GOD

Genesis 18:1-15

Nor hope to find
A Friend but what has found a Friend in thee!—
All like the purchase; few the price will pay;
But since Friends grow not thick on every bough,

Nor ev'ry Friend unrotten at the core; First on Thy Friend, delib'rate with thyself! Pause—ponder—sift! not eager in the choice Nor jealous of the chosen:—fixing, fix! Judge before Friendship, then confide till death.

Pass not away, I pray Thee, from Thy servant. Genesis 18:3

The Apostle James calls Abraham "the Friend of God." The foundations of friendship with God are laid in inborn qualities; Abraham has that in him now which makes it possible for him to be the friend of God. Never confound "Saviour" with "friend," Our Lord said "Ye are My friends" to His disciples, not to sinners. Friendship with God means that there is now something of the nature of God in a man on which God can base His friendship. These inborn qualities are formed in me by the incoming of the Holy Spirit, they are not there by natural generation; then as I obey the revelation granted to me, friendship with God begins, based on the new life which has been created in me. That new life has no affinities on the old lines, but only on the line of God, and is unutterably humble and holy, unsulliedly pure, and absolutely devoted to God. "El Shaddai"—the One Who creates something in the old world, and transfigures it.

Friendship with God is faith in action in relation to God and to our fellow men. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; even as I have loved you" (RV). I love others as God has loved me, and I see in the ingratitude of others the ingratitude which I have exhibited to God. The fellowship which arises out of such a friendship is a delight to the heart of God.

1. The Altar of Fellowship (Genesis 18:1-5)

This manifestation of God to Abraham is the most striking sign in the old Covenant of the Incarnation. The Incarnation in practical identification means the manifestation of God in mortal flesh in every detail of human life. Our Lord was not an ascetic like John the Baptist, He was not limited, or proscribed and fanatical. In Our Lord's life the natural and the supernatural were reconciled, the natural was not violently discarded. There was no ostensible preparation for the coming of the Son of God. How many knew that Jesus was God Incarnate? (John 1:11–12). It was only when the surgery of events had taken place that their eyes were opened and they knew Him (Luke 24:31). Our Lord comes in the most casual way, and we will miss Him unless we are prepared in our nature to discern Him. The most amazing evidence of a man's nature being changed is the way in which he sees God, to say "God led me here"; "God spoke to me"; is an everyday occurrence to him.

The altar of fellowship means that in every occurrence of life I offer myself in devotion to God. Abraham had difficulty at first in bringing the actual details of his life into touch with his real faith in God. Our Lord's actual life was a continual manifestation of His real faith in God, every detail—washing disciples' feet, fasting, praying, marriage feasts—manifested the altar of fellowship.

2. The Discipline of Fellowship (Genesis 18:6–8)

The reality of God being our Guest is the most awful joy in the discipline of fellowship. The spirit of hospitality consists in this, that in or with the stranger, we receive the Lord Himself. If Abraham could have done more for God actually than he would for any other, his fellowship with God was imperfect; but Abraham did no other for God than he would have done for a stranger, and this is the essential of readiness for God. We do our best to dress ourselves up, we put on behaviour that is not ours, moods that have nothing to do with us, all in order to offer God suitable accommodation. The only way in which we can have God as our Guest is by receiving from Him the Holy Spirit Who will turn our bodies into His house. It is not that we prepare a palace for God, but that He comes into our mortal flesh and we do our ordinary work, in an ordinary setting, amongst ordinary people, as for Him. Our Lord teaches that we have to receive those He sends as Himself (Matthew 10:40). When therefore we receive hospitality from others in His name, we have to remember that it is being offered to our Master, not to us. It is easier to receive the rebuffs and the spurnings than to receive the hospitality and welcome really offered to Our Lord. We say—"But I cannot accept this"; if we are identified with our Lord we will have to go through the humiliation of accepting things of which we feel ourselves unworthy.

Times of feasting reveal a man's master like nothing else in human life, and it is in those times that Our Lord reveals Himself to be Master. My treatment of Jesus Christ is shown in the way I eat and drink, I am either a glutton and put Jesus Christ to shame, or else I am an ascetic and refuse to have fellowship with Him in eating and drinking; but when I become a humble saint I reveal Him all the time in the ordinary common ways of life. The ordinance of the Lord's Supper is a symbol of what we should be doing all the time. It is not a memorial of One Who has gone, but of One Who is always here, "This do in remembrance of Me"-be in such fellowship with Me that you show My death until I manifest Myself again. It is in the common things of life that evidence of the discipline of fellowship is given.

3. The Illumination of Fellowship (Genesis 18:9–15)

"Sarah laughed within herself." Abraham's laughter was that of joyful faith (chapter 17:17); Sarah's laughter was that of doubting little faith. Sarah had to come to the place where her faith was as active as Abraham's, where she was certain that what God had said would happen, would happen. There are times when God seems to overlook certain forms of unbelief, at the other times He brings our unbelief out suddenly into the light and makes us cringe with shame before it. It is not because He wants to show how miserable and mean¹² we are, but because our particular form of un-faith is hindering the expression of His purpose in and through us.

A child of faith must never limit the promise of God by what seems good to him, but must give to the power of God the preference over his own reason. God never contradicts reason, He transcends it always. We "limit the Holy One of Israel" by remembering what we have allowed Him to do for us in the past; this hinders God and grieves His Spirit. In a time of communion God brings to us a real illumination of His word and we feel thoroughly exhilarated, then we begin to bring in our "Buts." Whenever you are severely rebuked by God for indulgence in unbelief, take it as an honour from God, because prompt obedience on your part will mean the expression of God's purpose in and through you. The things that burden us either make us laugh at their absurdity, or else make us realise that God is burdening us for His own purpose.

In verses 9–14 we have a record of the most remarkable table-talk in the world, the table-talk of God with Abraham and his wife.

GETTING THERE

Genesis 18:16-33

If we with earnest effort could succeed
To make our life one long connected Prayer,
As lives of some perhaps have been and are:—
If—never leaving Thee—we had no need
Our wandering spirits back again to lead
Into Thy presence, but continued there,
Like angels standing on the highest stair

Of the sapphire throne—this were to pray indeed!
But if distractions manifold prevail,
And if in this we must confess we fail,
Grant us to keep at least a prompt desire,
Continual readiness for Prayer and Praise—
An altar heaped and waiting to take fire
With the least spark, and leap into a blaze!

Trench

^{12.} mean: as used here, something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

And Abraham drew near, and said . . .

"Getting there" means coming into intimate relationship with God without impertinence or lack of reverence. The meaning of intercession is that we see what God is doing, consequently there is an intimacy between the child and the Father which is never impertinent. We must pour into the bosom of God the cares which give us pain and anxiety in order that He may solve for us, and before us, the difficulties which we cannot solve. We injure our spiritual life when we dump the whole thing down before God and say—You do it. That spirit is blind to the real union with God. We must dump ourselves down in the midst of our problems and watch God solve them for us. "But I have no faith"—bring your problems to God and stay with Him while He solves them, then God Himself and the solution of your problems will be for ever your own. Watch the tendency to pathetic humbug in your approach to God. If we could see the floor of God's immediate presence, we would find it strewn with the "toys" of God's children who have said—This is broken, I can't play with it any more, please give me another present. Only one in a thousand sits down in the midst of it all and says-I will watch my Father mend this. God must not be treated as a hospital for our broken "toys," but as our Father.

1. The Actual and Real in Union (Genesis 18:16–19)

Verse 16 reveals the union of vision and actual life. Abraham sees Jehovah, but he also does his duty to his guests; he does not forget the courtesy of seeing his sublime visitors on their way as if they were ordinary men. The union of the actual and the real was an habitual condition in the life of Our Lord; it is not so with us until we learn to make it so. We have a wonderful time of communion with God, then comes the spiritual pout—I have to go and clean boots, or write an essay! In Our Lord's life there was no divorce between the actual and the real, He never gave Himself "continually to prayer." Beware of the tendency that makes you wish that God would pretend you are someone special, it is a childish make-believe, standing on spiritual tiptoe to look as big as God—others can do this and that, but I must give myself to prayer. The great secret of the obedient life of faith is that the actual conditions of bodily life are transfigured by real communion with God.

"Shall I hide from Abraham that which I do?" (RV). Notice the communing of God with Himself before He gives the revelation to Abraham. God cannot reveal Himself to anyone; the revelations of God are determined by the condition of individual character (cf. Psalm 18:24–26); God takes up the man who is worthy to be the recipient of a revelation. Abraham by his own obedience was fitted to receive the revelation, and this is recognised by God when He brings him into union with Himself, not into absorption, but into complete union.

2. The Awful Reckoning Ultimately (Genesis 18:20–22)

The moral demand is for the punishment of sin. Every grain of sand cries out for its punishment (cf. Genesis 4:10). Human beings do not echo the cry, only one or two echo it in intercession, and the cry of Nature is joined by the man who knows God.

"I will know." This is the introduction of the final decision. It must become evident in the last trial whether the limit of the long-suffering patience of God has been reached. Verse 22: "And the men . . ." must be connected with Genesis 19:1. They were two angels who accompanied Jehovah, and in the form of men they depart to introduce the final test; they depart, but Abraham stands "yet before the Lord."

3. The Appealing Reverence to the Uttermost (Genesis 18:23–33)

There is no impertinence in Abraham's attitude, only profound humility and intensest intimacy. Abraham is not questioning God, but bringing himself to see how God will solve the matter. God allows Abraham to come out with his full intercession until Abraham begins to grasp the essential conditions by which God governs all things. Abraham goes on from step to step, and Jehovah grants him step by step, without once going before his request. The stopping point is reached by reason of the fact that Abraham was in complete communion with God throughout the progress of his intercession. After the final test prayer is impossible (cf. 1 John 5:16).

By means of intercession we understand more and more the way God solves the problems produced in our minds by the conflict of actual facts and our real faith in God. Whenever temptations contend in our minds, and things meet us in the providence of God which seem to involve a contradiction of what we believe, let the conviction of God's righteousness remain unshaken.

It is an insult to sink before God and say "Thy will be done" when there has been no intercession. That is the prayer of impertinent unbelief—There is no use in praying, God does whatever He chooses. The saying of "Thy will be done" is born of the most intimate relationship to God whereby I talk to Him freely. There is in this prayer of Abraham a distinction between the begging which knows no limit and the prayer which is conscious that there are limits set by the holy character of God. Repetition in intercessory importunity is not bargaining, but the joyous insistence of prayer.

The nearer Abraham came to God in his intercession the more he recognised his entire unworthiness—"Behold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, which am but dust and ashes." Genuine unworthiness is never shy before God any more than a child is shy before his mother. A child of God is conscious only of his entire dependence upon God.

In the beginning of our spiritual life our prayers are not of faith but of fretfulness. But when you get into the inner place I defy you to go on praying for yourself, it never occurs to you to do so because you are brought into relationship with God Who makes your spirit partake of His own. Whenever Our Lord spoke of importunity in intercession it was never for ourselves but for others. When by imperceptible degrees we stop praying for ourselves, we are "getting there." Prayer is the supreme activity of all that is noblest in our personality, and the essential nature of prayer is faith.

SCARCELY SAVED

Genesis 19:1-29

Better in bitterest agony to lie, Before Thy throne, Than through much increase to be lifted up on high, And stand alone.

Yet best—the need that broke me at Thy feet, In voiceless prayer, And cast my chastened heart, a sacrifice complete, Upon Thy care.

John Oxenham

Escape for thy life. Genesis 19:17

It is such chapters as these that enable us to understand the essential nature of God's Redemption.

1. Prepared by Gracious Experiences (Genesis 19:1-3)

The manifestation which was given to Lot corresponds to that given to Abraham (see Genesis 18:2). Lot was not a noble man of God like Abraham, but the fact that he bowed himself to the ground before the angels shows that he retained the power to know when God was near. In comparison with his generation, Lot was righteous, and his contact with Abraham made his manners similar to Abraham's. This preparation by gracious experiences occurs in our personal lives, and such experiences should be cherished for they enable us to do the right thing when we might otherwise do wrong. Beware of not heeding the angel of God in whatever form he comes to you.

"They entered into his house." The entrance of God into a house does not secure anything, but reveals that there is something there with which God has affinity. It is never our merit God looks at but our faith. If there is only one strand of faith amongst all the corruption within us, God will take hold of that one strand.

After every temptation notice where your affinities lie. If you have gone through the temptation successfully, your affinities will be with the highest and purest (cf. Matthew 4:11); but if you have not the same affinity with the highest, it is a sign that you have become blunted in your spiritual susceptibilities. The seal of doom in a man is that he cannot believe in purity, and this can only be accounted for by an internal twist; no man gets there easily. What is true in individual lives has become appallingly true in Sodom.

God has given us a precious gift in that looking at other Christians we see not them but the Lord. If you see only where others are not the Lord, it is you who are wrong, not they; you have lost the bloom of spirit which keeps you in touch with Jesus Christ. If I cannot see God in others, it is because He is not in me. If I get on my moral high horse and say it is they who are wrong, I become that last of all spiritual iniquities, a suspicious person, a spiritual devil dressed up as a Christian. Beware of mistaking suspicion for discernment, it is the biggest misunderstanding that ever twisted Christian humility into Pharisaism. When I see in others things that are not of God, it is because the Spirit of God has revealed to me my own meanness¹³ and badness; when I am put right with God on the basis of His Redemption and see those things in others, it is in order that God may restore them through my intercession. Be careful never to lose the bloom of your spiritual susceptibilities.

2. Proposals of Great Evil (Genesis 19:4)

The history of Sodom reveals that sin is the beginning of the most appalling corruption. Always distinguish between what we are apt to call sin and what the Bible calls sin. The Bible does not call the corruption of Sodom sin; sin is a disposition, not a deed; the corruption of Sodom is the criminal result of sin. It is because this distinction has been lost sight of that pseudo-evangelical preaching has been to the effect that only moral blackguards can be saved. When Our Lord faced men not guilty of moral blackguardism, but worthy, upright men, He did not deal with them in the way He did with sinners; He seemed to be infinitely sterner with the Pharisees than with the publicans (see Matthew 21:31). He looked at something we do not see, viz., the disposition.

Lot was the only one who stood as a representative of God in Sodom, and while he was free from the abominations of Sodom, he was not far from its worldly mind. His was the doubting heart which soon turns to double ways. Lot's position arises from having borrowed most of his piety (Genesis 12:4). Weak faith chooses the visible things instead of enduring as seeing Him Who is invisible, and slowly and surely such faith settles down between mammon and righteousness. In the supreme test Lot trusted his wits; Abraham worshipped and waited.

3. Perils of Grievous Emotion (Genesis 19:5-9)

In the history of Sodom, independence of God reaches the limit of blasphemy. The way to get there in personal life is to indulge in sentimental spirituality. If you indulge in a spiritual sentiment you do not intend to obey, the exact opposite of that emotion will come in its wake. Beware of panic, because panic always advocates doing wrong that right may result. In fact, the tendency to do instead of to devote one's self to God, is nearly always the sign of a smudged purity of relationship to God.

4. Performance of God's Ends (Genesis 19:10-29)

Abraham standing alone with God is the key to the rescue of Lot and his family, out they come whether they like it or not. The angels are insistent in answer to Abraham's intercession (see v. 16). Yet Lot was rescued with the greatest difficulty because of his vacillation. Vacillation in a crisis is the sign of an unabandoned nature. An abandoned nature never can vacillate because there is nothing to weigh; such a nature is completely abandoned to another. Lot's fear was culpable because it was indicative of a stultified judgement.

See to it that you do not profane the holiness of God by refusing to abandon yourself away from your experience of what He has done for you to God Himself. Whenever you do not come in contact with God for yourself, you will begin to watch your own whiteness—I dare not say this or do that. It is a cabined, confined life and when difficulties come like a wall of fire, God has to come and rescue you; and He does it by means of intercession on the part of some one else. Beware of accepting the blessings and visions of God as an indication of your goodness and not of the mercy and purpose of God—"the LORD being merciful unto him."

WRECKED IN HARBOUR

Genesis 19:30-38

A Chequer-Board of mingled Light and Shade? And We the Pieces on it deftly laid? Moved and removed, without a word to say, By the Same Hand that Board and Pieces made?

No Pieces we in any Fateful Game, Nor free to shift on Destiny the blame; Each Soul doth tend its own immortal flame, Fans it to Heaven, or smothers it in shame.

John Oxenham

And he dwelt in a cave. Genesis 19:30

The phrase "wrecked in harbour" describes the character that has gone through great storms and has made the harbour, and yet is wrecked as the result of an inward, persisting defect.

I am very sorry for the failures at Christchurch of which you tell. I suspect that cleverness was at the bottom of the failure, for it is a character of mind the exercise of which is so instantly and pleasantly rewarded, that the temptation to cultivate it is always present.

Sir James Paget in a letter to his son

Spiritual cleverness is the cause of much of our failure. We may not have much mental cleverness, but some of us are dextrously clever spiritually. We have so many memories of the times when God came in and did the thing that we determinedly "loaf" on God—only we call it "relying on the Holy Ghost." There are times when God does give real spiritual insight and times when He does not, and if between the times of inspiration you do not work but "loaf," you are leading up to tremendous failure one day. The moments of light and inspiration are an indication of the standard which we must work to keep up. If between the times of inspiration we refuse to practise, we shall fail spiritually exactly where Paget's son failed intellectually. He failed because he trusted to the clever moments of his genius, and we fail because we trust to the monuments of spiritual cleverness.

1. The Natural History of the Prudence Peril

The prudence which appears in the life of Abraham as sinful prudence (e.g., Genesis 12:10) appears again in the lives of his kindred, and is the persisting defect in the character of Lot. No man can do things and leave them with himself. He may not see the result, but he will have to answer for it generations after. The prudence peril is traceable first of all in Adam, then in Noah, then in Abraham, and right on to the end of the chapter until it becomes the most dominant characteristic of Israel and Judah. The terror of the prudence peril is that it can end in such a deed as this. These things are written for our instruction. "But I never could do such things." What any man has ever done, any man can do if he does not watch.

The error is putting prudence in competition with God's will, weighing pros and cons before God when He has spoken. Always beware when you want other people to commend the decision you have made, because it is an indication that you have trusted your wits instead of worshipping God. If you say "But I can prove I was right," you may be sure you are wrong, because you have to use your ingenuity to prove you are right. When you act in faith in God it is not logical proof that you are right that matters, but the certainty of the Divine approval, and this keeps you from seeking the approval of others. We have to watch that we use our wits to assist us in worshipping God and carrying out His will, not in carrying out our own will and then asking God very piously to bless the concoction. Put communion with God on the throne, and then ask God to direct your common sense to choose according to His will. Worship first and wits after.

2. The Natural History of Panic Perversity

Sensual passion always follows spent panic. It is easy to fall into the sins of the flesh when once the ideals of life lose their power. All you have to do is to get into a panic on any line, and you will be as perverse as can be because you have committed a sin against your own nature. Not only so, but you have given an opportunity to the devil over your body. There was an entire absence of panic in the life of Our Lord, consequently nothing of the nature of perversity. Notice how Our Lord continually curbed Peter on the line of impulse, because impulse is apt to lead to panic, and anything of the nature of panic opens the door to perversity and sensuality. A saint has no right to give way to a panic of nerves, it is a deliberate giving way and has to be hauled up instantly. When we give way to a panic of nerves we give the temple of the Holy Ghost over to the devil. Beware of the "panickiness' which takes the form of hysteria, because on the borders of hysteria lurk all the demons that can possess human nature. Never sympathise with anyone who is giving way to hysteria; if you do, you aid and abet Satan in thrusting the temple of the Holy Ghost into the clutches of the devil.

Never allow an emotion which you know you dare not carry out on its own level; grip it on the threshold of your mind in a vice of blood and allow it no more way. Few of us realise the power we have of doing this. I am a criminal in the sight of God for allowing an emotion with regard to anyone which I know I dare not carry out on its logical level. If once we got hold of the psychological law that an emotion not carried out on its legitimate level will react on a lower level, it would bring the wind of rugged reality into devotional meetings. It is possible to step from devotion to God into a moral cesspool in one second, and we are to blame before God for not knowing these things. God's word is as rugged and unvarnished as can be on this line, and it is the cunning and abominable nonsense of what is called good taste that prevents these things being stated. I have no business to allow false emotions before God, emotions that are not "me" at all, and that I have not the remotest intention of carrying out. Our Lord requires not only chastity of body, He requires chastity of thought.

The law that every extraordinary expansion or satisfaction of heart or brain or will is paid for, paid for inevitably without the possibility of putting off or transferring the payment, is one of the truths about which no human being with a soul a little above the brute has the slightest doubt. . . . It is an eternal and immutable verity and the soul of man is a witness to it.

PHILISTINISM

Genesis 20:1-7

When the powers of hell prevail
O'er our weakness and unfitness,
Could we lift the fleshly veil,
Could we for a moment witness
Those unnumbered hosts that stand
Calm and bright on either hand—
Oh! what joyful hope would cheer!
Oh! what faith serene would guide us!
Great may be the danger near,
Greater are the friends beside us.

And Abraham journeyed . . . and sojourned in Gerar. Genesis 20:1

The term "Philistinism" owes its popularity to Matthew Arnold¹⁴ and is used to-day in reference to uncultured people. It is used here because this is the first meeting of the house of Abraham with the Philistines, and also because at this stage Abraham lapsed into uncultured confidence in himself and into compromise with spiritually uncultured people. To say "I can't understand how Abraham could do it" is self-deception. If you will look inside your own heart, provided you do not love yourself too much, you will never say such a thing. We have to be careful lest we blind ourselves by putting up our own standards instead of looking at the standard God puts up. If we put a saint up as a standard, we blind ourselves to ourselves; it is personal vanity makes us do it. When we put God's standard up, viz., Himself, there is no room for personal vanity. It is self-deception to say—"Because I am saved and sanctified, therefore all I do is sure to be right." As long as I establish myself amongst people who agree with me and am consciously "bigger" than them all, it is easy to be complacent; but when circumstances oust me out amongst another set of people who do not accept my standards, my complacency is upset and I am nowhere. The grace of God makes us honest with ourselves. We must be humorous enough to see the shallow tricks we all have, no matter what our profession of Christianity. We are so altogether perverse that God Almighty had to come and save us! Whenever we forget this and begin to set up little standards of our own, imbedded in some favourite saint, we are sure to go wrong. We have to get rid of all notions about ourselves and our own standards, and keep in front what God puts in front, viz., Our Lord Himself, then we will not be tempted to delusion about ourselves. Our eye must be on God, not on ourselves.

1. The Disposition of Reaction (Genesis 20:1)

When the Bible records facts of experience, look in your own experience for the answer; when the Bible reveals standards of revelation, look to God, not to experience.

The reaction from a state of great spiritual excitement is revealed in Abraham as well as in Lot, and as on a former occasion (see Genesis 12:10) Abraham decides to change his residence—"and he sojourned in Gerar." If we bring the light of experience to this reaction on the part of Abraham, we shall understand how even such a believer as he fell the second time into the same sin. We are apt to say-I won't do that thing again now that God has warned me." But you will, you will do it as certainly as Abraham did if you trust to your vows instead of to God. The one thing to do is to look steadfastly to God. Always beware when you are perfectly certain you are right, so certain that you do not dream of asking God's counsel. God never puts the judgement with our wits, but entirely with Himself, consequently we must never depend on our moral judgement or our intellectual discernment, or on our sense of right and justice. All these are right in themselves but not right in us, we can only be right as we remain absolutely confident in God. When we realise that we have repeated a sin, the danger is to lie down in the mud and refuse to get up. There is no refuge in vowing or in praying, but only in one place, in absolute confidence in God. The child attitude is the only right one.

2. The Discretion of Reason (Genesis 20:2)

Judged from every standpoint, it would seem the right thing for Abraham to get away from the blasted country of Sodom and go to Gerar. It was not wrong from any standpoint, it was the act of a wise, sensible, reasoning man of God; but Abraham was not God's man in going because immediately he goes God rebukes him. In going to Gerar, as in going down to Egypt, Abraham thought he was justified, but in each case an entirely different thing happens from what he intended, viz., Sarah is taken from him. Whenever we bring in our ordinary wisdom as a factor of decision on any point, we are "out of it," not morally or with human beings (it will end with a wrong relation to human beings ultimately), but our relationship to God is injured. Abraham had no notion that he was doing wrong to Abimelech, but the record proves that he did, and also that he injured his relationship to God as a faithful soul. Beware of being other than a simple child of God. The only safeguard is dependence upon God, not on godly decisions.

Beware whenever your logical moral right puts you in a wrong relation to God. "If God will only prove that my right is right"—it is the one thing over which we are stubbornly jealous of God. "I know I am right," we say, and it has to be proved to us that from the standpoint of the Holy Ghost we are wrong. If I can prove to my own mind that I am right, by that very act I am wrong in disposition towards God.

3. The Dream of Realisation (Genesis 20:3)

The fact that God makes good come out of my wrong does not make my wrong any better, I have simply utilised God's permissive will to go in a circle when I should have gone straight. There are times when you see what God wants and you begin to obey with the simple direct obedience of a child; then comes the "choppy waters" of friends' advice or of considerations of yourself, and for a while you wobble because you have become discreet and shrewd and wise, instead of being a child of God. Then when after the passing of days, or longer, according to your stubbornness, God brings you out of all the turmoil, the devil comes and says it was a good thing after all. It was not, it was a bad thing. You prevented God's order being worked out directly through you, and He had to allow you to go in a circle and only brought you back after having grieved you through with sorrows.

Beware of justifying yourself when God alone is the justifier. If ever I can justify myself, I make God unjust. If I am right and morally based in all I do and say, I do not need a Saviour, and God is not justified in the extravagant waste of sending Jesus Christ to die for me. If God judges me a sinner who needs saving, and I can prove that I am just, I make God unjust (cf. Psalm 51:4). Every kind of upholding I give to myself, whether I be saint or sinner, is a blow in the face of God, and is a proof that I am on the wrong basis. If in any detail I take the justice of God and make it mean my own justice, I thereby prove God to be unjust. This is part of the mystery of godliness and can only be understood by the intuition of faith (Matthew 11:25).

4. The Dilemma of Rectitude (Genesis 20:4-7)

God stepped in and delivered Abimelech from committing sin because of His sheer mercy—"I also withheld thee from sinning against Me." There is a difference between deliverance from sin by God's sovereign act, which is an occasion for praise, and the defiance of sin by personal integrity, which tells in the building up of character. There are times in personal life when God by His sovereign act prevented us from committing sin, and when we look back and see how He preserved us, the danger is to say it must have been because of our innocence. No, it was of the mercy of God.

We have to learn to utilise a right reliance on circumstances in the spiritual domain, to discern that it is God Who engineers circumstances. Abraham refused to see this, and every now and again he stepped in and engineered circumstances for himself, and every time he did this, he upset everything. Reverent humility and moral pride are ultimately brought out very clearly—the former in Abraham and the latter in Abimelech. The believer in his weakness is exalted above the man of the world in his strength.

HUMILIATION

Genesis 20:8-18

Sink in thou blessed sign!
Pass all my spirit through
And sever with thy sacred touch
The hollow from the true.

Through my heart's very ground Thy ploughshare must be driven, Till all are better loved than self, And yet less loved than heaven.

Caroline M. Noel

And Abraham said, Because . . . Genesis 20:11

Humiliation and humility must not be confounded. Humility can never be humiliated. To be humiliated means to be lowered in condition. The word as applied to our Lord has no reference whatever to His personal calibre, but to the lowering of His external form from "being in the form of God" to "taking the form of a servant." Humiliation as applied to us means a lowering of condition in the sense of being mortified. Whenever we pride ourselves on anything as being of real acceptance to God and realise that He absolutely ignores that thing, we will experience the ghastly humbling of humiliation.

1. The Humility and Honour of Abimelech (Genesis 20:8–10)

Abimelech's true humility is revealed in the way he humbles himself in communicating the events of his dream to his courtiers, he deliberately makes known before his whole court the compromising position he is in. Verse 8 describes the intense publicity of his confession, and verses 9–11 his rigorous, yet not vindictive talk with Abraham—although there is stinging irony in what he says to Sarah (v. 16).

In nine cases out of ten, reserve is simply personal pride, which will turn to insolence or iniquity at a moment's notice. One of the most delicate issues in the history of the human soul is that of concealing what ought to be made known and of making known what ought to be concealed. When concealing is a great relief, question it; when revealing is a great relief, question it. The only guiding factor is obedience to the highest we know. The wriggling we indulge in to escape from being humiliated prevents our being right with God. For instance, you have a wrong attitude of mind towards another, and the Spirit of God tells you to put it right between yourself and that one (cf. Matthew 5:24), and you say-No, I will put it right between myself and God. You cannot do it; it is impossible. Instead of deliberately obeying God, irrespective of what it costs, we use the trick of prayer to cover our own cowardice. It is a very subtle subterfuge to prevent ourselves being humiliated, but God will bring us into a place of humiliation externally, and others will see we are humiliated. If, on the other hand, there is something between yourself and God, and you feel it would be an enormous relief to tell someone else about it, don't. "Immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." It is never a question of giving an explanation to someone else, but of maintaining obedience to the highest we know at all costs.

Personal misconduct will never bring bondage on others unless the misconduct springs from an independent attitude of mind towards God. Wrongdoing on the part of any student here will never interfere with the atmosphere unless along with the misconduct there is a deliberate defiance of mind against God, then the whole atmosphere of the College will be charged with antagonism, and the antagonism will last as long as that one remains at "loggerheads" with God spiritually. It is not wrongdoing but a wrong attitude of mind towards God spiritually that damages the atmosphere.

It was independence of God on the part of Abraham that brought the trouble on the house of Abimelech. Abraham repeated the mistake of a former occasion because of a wrong attitude to God; he was so wrong that he thought he was doing right. Abimelech had reason to complain of the conduct of Abraham in the same way that Pharaoh had reason to complain of it (cf. Genesis 12:13–20), and Abimelech does not shrink from declaring his injured sense of truth and justice. Imagine the humiliation it would be to Abraham when he realised what he had done.

2. The Humiliation and Honour of Abraham (Genesis 20:11–18)

The way in which Abraham offers his apologies reveals clearly that he was ashamed. The fear of man which had determined him earlier (Genesis 12:11-13) was awakened afresh in him by what he had so recently seen in Sodom, and he was suspicious of human nature everywhere—"Because I thought, Surely the fear of God is not in this place." Abraham ashamedly explains his motive and gives his explanation for his equivocation. In verse 12 he explains that what he said of Sarah was not untrue, but he also indicates that his reason for saying she was his sister has deservedly brought him into humiliation. There was none of the sneakish element in Abraham as there was in Jacob, his reason for denying his wife was that through her God had promised him a child, and he was trying to guard her for God.

We are always in danger of mistaking personal predilections for Christian perfection, and we have to learn to take the veil off our moral quirks. Over and over again it works like this: we begin to be cunning and think—Now, if I am not careful that man will utilise my position for his own purposes. The real reason we say it is that we do not like that particular man and imagine therefore that God does not like him either. Or else it works in this way: when someone whom we like comes, we say—Oh yes, that is of God's order; but I can't be bothered with those other people, I do not think God guided them to come. It is the same old trick, and we have to be excessively careful that we do not lean to our own understanding and try to conserve God's order in our way instead of allowing God to conserve His order in His own way.

There was never any element of fear or cunning or diplomacy in Our Lord in any shape or form. Our Lord was never suspicious of anyone; yet He trusted no one saving His Father, consequently He was never vindictive, nor was He ever humiliated. It is only possible to be humiliated when we are serving our own pride.

Abraham's defects are clear and his sins obvious, but his nobility is extraordinary. Abraham is never presented as a saint or as a type of sanctification. Phases of his life may be used to present these, but Abraham himself is the type of the life of faith in its failures and in its successes. Sanctification is not something Our Lord does in me; sanctification is Himself in me. "Of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who ... is made unto us ... sanctification" (1 Corinthians 1:30).

GOD IS GOOD

Genesis 21:1-8

Never to be again! But many more of the kind As good, nay, better perchance: is this your comfort to me?

To me, who must be saved because I cling with my mind

To the same, same self, same love, same God: ay, what was, shall be. . . .

There shall never be one lost good! What was, shall live as before;

The evil is null, is nought, is silence implying sound;

What was good shall be good, with, for evil, so much good more;

On the earth the broken arcs; in the heaven, a perfect round.

Browning

God hath made me to laugh. Genesis 21:6

One of the greatest demands of God on the human spirit is to believe that God is good when His providence seems to prohibit the fulfilment of what He has promised. The one character in the Bible who sustains this strain grandly is Abraham. Paul in summing up the life of Abraham points to it as his greatest quality—"Abraham believed God."

1. God's Performance of His Own Promise (Genesis 21:1)

No one can fulfil a promise but the one who made it. These words contain the whole autobiography of the godly ups and downs of the life of faith. During the years when everything seemed to contradict the fulfilment of the promise, Abraham continually forgot this fundamental fact and tried to help God fulfil it. God alone can fulfil His promise, and we have to come to the place of perfect reliance upon God (cf. 1 Thessalonians 5:23–24).

"The LORD visited Sarah as He had said, and the LORD did unto Sarah as He had spoken." God visits the believer with the word of promise and visits him again with the word of fulfilment. Abraham endured for twenty-five years without any sign of fulfilment. The majority of us know nothing about waiting, we don't wait, we endure. Waiting means that we go on in the perfect certainty of God's goodness—no dumps or fear. The attitude of the human heart towards God Who promises should be to give Him credit for being as honest as He ought to be, and then to go on in the actual life as if no promise had been made. That is faithful waiting.

2. God's Presentation of His Own Performance (Genesis 21:2)

The presentation of God's performance here is in the actual details of the birth of an ordinary child, extraordinary only to the eye of faith. We come to God not with faith in His goodness but with a conception of our own, and we look for God to come to us in that way. God cannot come to me in my way. He can only come in His own way—in ways man would never dream of looking for Him. In the Incarnation the Eternal God was so majestically small that He was not detected, the world never saw Him. And this is true in regard to us, God is so insignificant providentially, that we never see Him. We cry out-"Oh God, I wish You would come to me," when He is there all the time, and suddenly we see Him and say "Surely the LORD is in this place; and I knew it not." We looked for desolation and anguish, and instead there is the laughter and hilarity of realising that we see God. This astonishment at the performance of God is brought out over and over again until we learn to be humiliated at our despicable disbelief. "I don't know what I am going to do after Easter."15—But I thought you knew God! Have all these days and weeks gone by and has God shown you nothing? Your anxiety proves that you do not believe in the goodness of God an atom, and it postpones the time of His performance.

3. God's Programme for His Progeny (Genesis 21:3–8)

What Abraham did for his son was in accordance with God's programme for him, not according to Abraham's ways for him (cf. Proverbs 22:6). God has a distinct programme for every child born into this world, legitimately or illegitimately. If the programme is unheeded, the reason is that parents do not care about God's programme being fulfilled, but it will be fulfilled all the same. In spiritual matters be careful to note God's programme for His progeny in you. Is the Son of God formed in me? Have I heard God's promise about Him? He "shall be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:35), that is, He has nothing to do with my natural abilities. There is no relation between the promise of God for the life He forms in us by regeneration and our personal private ambitions, those ambitions are completely transfigured. I have to heed the promise of God for my child, be it a child of nature or of grace, and see that I do not try and make God's gift fulfil my own ends. If I do, I become cruel in my judgement of God and God has to be very severe with me.

Suppose that God sees fit to put you into desolation when He begins the forming of His Son in you, what does it matter to you, and what ought it to matter? God's programme was to look after Sarah only until the child of His promise was born, and all He is after in you and me is the forming of His Son in us. When He drives the sword through the natural, we begin to whine and say "Oh, I can't go through that," but we must go through it. If we refuse to make our natural life obedient to the Son of God in us, the Son of God will be put to death in us. We have to put on the new man in our human nature to fit the life of the Son of God in us, and see that in the outer courts of our bodily lives we conduct our life for Him.

"God hath made me to laugh." Sarah's hilarity is the joy of God sounding through the upset equilibrium of a mind that scarcely expected the promise to be fulfilled. The son of Sarah is himself a type of the Son of Mary, and in each case the promise is limited through a particular woman, and through an apparently impossible, yet actual birth. Fancy making everything depend on that haughty, inclined-to-be unstable, not amazingly-superb-in-rectitude Sarah! How haphazard God seems, not sometimes but always. God's ways turn man's thinking upside down.

Verse 7 is indicative of the amazement that comes when God's promise is fulfilled. What is known as the dark side of Christian experience is not really Christian experience at all, it is God putting the rot of sacramental death through the natural virtues in order to produce something in keeping with His Son, and all our whining and misery ought to be the laughter of Sarah—Now I see what God wants! Instead of that, we moon in corners and gloom before God, and say "I am afraid I am not sanctified." If you fight against the desolation, you will kill the life of God in you; yield to it, and God's fulfilment will amaze you. It is in the periods of desolation that the sickly pietists talk about "What I am suffering!" They are in the initial stages and have not begun to realise God's purpose. God is working out the manifestation of the fulfilment of His promise, and when it is fulfilled there is never any thought of self or of selfconsideration anywhere.

WHICH? Genesis 21:9-21

Profit?—Loss?
Who shall declare this good—that ill?
When good and ill so intertwine
But to fulfil the wast design
Of an Omniscient Will?—
When seeming gain but turns to loss,—
When earthly treasure proves but dross,—
And what seemed loss but turns again
To high, eternal gain?

John Oxenham

And God said, . . . Let it not be grievous in thy sight. Genesis 21:12

The dilemmas of our personal life with God are few if we obey and many if we are wilful. Spiritually the dilemma arises from the disinclination for discipline; every time I refuse to discipline my natural self, I become less and less of a person and more and more of an independent, impertinent individual. Individuality is the characteristic of the natural man; personality is the characteristic of the spiritual man. That is why Our Lord can never be defined in terms of individuality, but only in terms of personality. Individuality is the characteristic of the child, it is the husk of the personal life. It is all "elbows," it separates and isolates; personality can merge and be blended. The shell of individuality is God's created covering for the protection of the personal life, but individuality must go in order that the personal life may be brought out into fellowship with God—"that they may be one, even as We are one."

1. The Offence of the Natural (Genesis 21:9–10)

Sarah is full of indignation when she sees the mocking of Ishmael, and begs Abraham to "cast out this bondwoman and her son." God tells Abraham to hearken to what Sarah says, and Ishmael is cast out. We have to remember, however, that Sarah gave Hagar to Abraham to be his wife; we always become anxious when we take our own self-chosen ways. In the Epistle to the Galatians the Apostle Paul makes his great revelation regarding that which was "born after the flesh" and that which was "born after the Spirit." He is dealing not with sin, but with the relationship between the natural and the spiritual. The natural must be disciplined and turned into the spiritual by sacrifice (cf. Galatians 5:24), otherwise it will produce a tremendous divorce in the life. Why did God make it necessary for the natural to be sacrificed to the spiritual? God did not. God's order was that the natural should be transformed into the spiritual by obedience; sin made it necessary for the natural to be sacrificed to the spiritual, and that after sanctification, remember. We have the idea that sanctification means deliverance from sin only; it means much more, it means that we start on a life of discipline such as nine out of every ten of us will have nothing

The offence of the natural is its robust ridicule of the spiritual, and if the natural is not "cast out" it will not only perish itself but will lead the whole personal life astray. "I was not disciplined when I was a child." You must discipline yourself now, if you do not, you will ruin your life for God. If the natural is not sacrificed to the spiritual by me, not by God, it will mock at the life of the Son of God in me and produce a continual "swither," which is always the result of an undisciplined nature. Instead of "I can't," say "I won't," and you have it exactly, it is the Ishmael jeer. People go wrong spiritually because they stubbornly refuse to discipline themselves physically, mentally or in any way, and after a while they become that most contemptible and objectionable thing, a petted man or woman, and their own greatest cause of suffering. There is no suffering to equal the suffering of selflove arising from independent individuality which refuses to submit either to God or to its nobler self.

2. The Offering of the Natural (Genesis 21:11-13)

The casting out of the bondwoman and her son was necessary not only for the line of promise but for the welfare of Ishmael himself. All the problems regarding civilisation and organisation and the natural virtues arise along this line. If I put the civilised organisation to which I belong, or my natural virtues, on the throne, they will make a mock of the Son of God Who is formed in me. These things are the outcome of the natural life and I have to resolutely put them under, not because they are wrong, but because they are individual protests against the life of the Son of God in me. The natural life is not spiritual, it can only be made spiritual by deliberately casting it out and making it the slave instead of the ruler. My business is to make independent individuality conform to the Son of God in me by severity. We are apt to deify wilfulness and independence and call them by the wrong name; what we call strength of will God looks upon as contemptible weakness. The Being with the greatest will who ever lived on the earth was Our Lord Jesus Christ, and yet He never exercised His will, as We think of will; His life was one of meekness and submission (see John 5:19, 30). Our Lord was the antipodes of the individual, there was nothing independent or wilful or self-assertive about Him, and He says "Learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart." Jesus Christ cannot give me a meek and quiet spirit, I have to take His yoke upon me; that is, I have to deliberately discipline myself. The teaching of the Sermon on the Mount is the destruction of individuality and the exaltation of personality. When the personal life is merged with God, it will manifest the characteristics of God. Individuality never exhibits the characteristics of God but natural characteristics, the characteristics of Ishmael, or of Esau, or of Saul of Tarsus, that mock at the meek and lowly Son of God. What is it that begins to mock in you? "Meek? Do you think I am going to bow my neck to that? Be loyal there, in my home? Obey a passing sentiment that came to me in a prayer meeting?" Cast out "the bondwoman and her son"—the natural life and all that nourishes it, or it will lead your personal life to ruin. The casting out must be done by you, then God will bring it back into its rightful inheritance. The natural life can only be brought into union by being cast out (cf. Matthew 5:29, 48).

If we do not resolutely cast out the natural, the supernatural can never become natural in us. There are some Christians in whom the supernatural and the natural seem one and the same, and you say—Well, they are not one with me, I find the natural at "loggerheads" with the spiritual. The reason is that the other life has gone through the fanatical stage of cutting off the right arm, gone through the discipline of maiming the natural, completely casting it out, and God has brought it back into its right relationship with the spiritual on top, and the spiritual manifests itself in a life which knows no division into sacred and secular. There is no royal road there, each one has it entirely in his own hands; it is not a question of praying but of performing.

3. The Ostracism of the Natural (Genesis 21:14)

The casting out of Hagar and Ishmael is necessary, but Hagar is not divorced. Divorce stands for apostasy (cf. Isaiah 1:1). We must be divorced from sin, not separated from sin. Sin belongs to hell and the devil; I, as a child of God, belong to heaven and God, and I must have nothing to do with sin in any shape or form. The separation which goes on all through the life of faith is alluded to by Paul in Galatians 2:20 —"I have been crucified with Christ" (RV); and again in Romans 12:1—"Present your bodies a living sacrifice"—go to the funeral of your own independence. It is not a question of giving up sin, but of giving up my right to myself, my natural independence and self-assertiveness. Immediately I do, the natural cries out and goes through terrific suffering. There are things in me which must go through death or they will abide alone and ruin the personal life (cf. John 12:24). But if I sternly put them through death, God will bring them back into the right inheritance. Jesus says If any man will be My disciple, "let him deny himself," i.e., deny his right to himself, and a man has to realise Who Jesus Christ is before he will do it. It is the things that are right and noble and good from the natural standpoint that keep us back from God's best. To discern that the natural virtues antagonise surrender to God, is to begin to see where the battle lies. It is going to cost the natural everything, not something.

4. The Ordeal of the Natural (Genesis 21:15–16)

Beware of blaspheming the Creator by calling the natural sinful. The natural is not sinful, but un-moral and un-spiritual. It is the home of all the vagrant vices and virtues, and must be disciplined with the utmost severity until it learns its true position in the providence of God. Remember, Abraham had to offer up Ishmael before he offered up Isaac. Some of us are trying to offer spiritual sacrifices before we have sacrificed the natural. The only way we can offer a spiritual sacrifice to God is to do what He tells us to do, discipline what He tells us to discipline. Under no consideration must we dictate to God on the basis of the natural life. When God's Son tells me to do a thing, I have no business to allow the natural to dictate and say-I cannot do that because I get so tired. What does it matter if it kills the natural? God's purpose for the natural will be fulfilled, I have to be absolutely stern with it and not make God wait on my natural inclinations.

5. The Outrance of the Natural (Genesis 21:19-21)

"Outrance"—the utmost extremity or bitter end. Verse 20 is striking—"God was with the lad," as long as he remained in the straits of the desert, and he found his home in the oases and by the wells. After Ishmael had learned by experience that he was not a fellow heir with Isaac, he was richly endowed by Abraham, and he also remained in friendly relationship with Isaac (Genesis 25:6, 9). God is not with my natural life as long as I pamper it and pander to it, but when I put it out in the desert, resolutely cast it out and keep it under, then God is with it and He opens up wells and oases, and fulfils His promise for it. It must be stern discipline, rigorous severity to the last degree on my part (cf. 1 Corinthians 9:27), then God will be with the natural life and bring it to its full purpose.

CONDITIONS

Genesis 21:22-34

Now, who shall arbitrate?
Ten men love what I hate,
Shun what I follow, slight what I receive;
Ten, who in ears and eyes
Match me: we all surmise,
They this thing, and I that: whom shall my soul believe?

But I need, now as then,
Thee, God, who mouldest men;
And since, not even while the whirl was worst,
Did I,—to the wheel of life
With shapes and colours rife, Bound dizzily,—mistake my end, to slake Thy thirst.

Thus they made a covenant at Beer-sheba. Genesis 21:32

The life of faith as portrayed in the life of Abraham is a detailed presentation of its majesties and its muddles. We have detected Abraham's blunder in the actual conditions in working from his wits, but we must not forget that by far the most striking thing about Abraham is his worship of God.

In this chapter the right relation between common sense and faith is exhibited. Common sense is not faith and faith is not common sense; they stand in the relation of Ishmael and Isaac, of the natural and the spiritual, of individuality and personality, of impulse and inspiration. Faith in antagonism to common sense is fanaticism, and common sense in antagonism to faith is rationalism. The life of faith brings the two into right relationship. No one can solve the difficulty of making them one for me, I must do it for myself, and I can only solve it by life not by thinking, just as the natural can only be made spiritual in life, not in thinking. We have the idea that the body, individuality, and the natural life are altogether of the devil; they are not, they are of God, designed by God, and it is in the human body and in the natural order of things that we have to exhibit our worship of God. The danger is to mistake the natural for the spiritual, and instead of worshipping God in my natural life to make my natural life God.

How am I going to find out what the will of God is? In one way only, by not trying to find out. If you are born again of the Spirit of God, you are the will of God, and your ordinary common-sense decisions are God's will for you unless He gives an inner check. When He does, call a halt immediately and wait on Him. Be renewed in the spirit of your mind that you may make out His will, not in your mind, but in practical living. God's will in my common-sense life is not for me to accept conditions and say—"Oh well, it is the will of God," but to apprehend them for Him, and that means conflict, and it is of God that we conflict. Doing the will of God is an active thing in my common-sense life.

1. The Arbitration between Abraham and Abimelech (Genesis 21:22–24)

Abimelech does not stand for the sinful, but for the noble and upright and perfectly natural. The blessing of God is recognised by the natural, but never recognised by the sinful. Abimelech stands as the type of civilisation with its organisations and culture and good sense. Between the Church, which is an organism, and organisation which is pagan, there must be arbitration. Much of our organisation in the Church is pagan, and it is our salvation to see that it is pagan. Immediately we forget this and compromise instead of arbitrate, we have sold the Son of God to the world.

The attitude of faith to organisation is illustrated in Our Lord's attitude to Pilate. Our Lord did not compromise with Pilate, He arbitrated with him—"You have to decide this matter because God has put you in the position where you must. You stand there on your dignity as proconsul: I stand here on My dignity as Son of God. If you put Me to death as your duty, I go to death because it is My duty." There is no compromise there. "If My kingdom were of this world, then would My servants fight" (John 18:36); but there is no fight, there is arbitration, and the reason for it is God's order behind the whole thing.

2. The Apprehension of Abimelech by Abraham (Genesis 21:25–26)

Abraham distinguishes clearly between political and private rights in this matter of the well, and now he in his turn administers a rebuke to Abimelech. In verse 26 Abimelech throws back the reproof on Abraham on the plea that he had not been told that the well had been taken away. This of course is mere natural shrewdness, and is the ground of their first arbitration. It is instructive to notice that Abraham always takes his rebukes magnificently, he never once shows individuality but always personality.

When first we become spiritual we arbitrate with our bodies until we say—I will put the natural into absolute subjection and have no more arbitration (see 1 Corinthians 9:27). The same kind of thing is taking place in the history of the world to-day. At present there is arbitration between the children of God and the natural forces of civilisation. We arbitrate between the two by recognising the present claims of each without compromising either. When the Lord Jesus comes again there will be no more arbitration, all the natural forces of civilisation will instantly be put in subjection to Him, in the same way that those who enter into the sanctified life deliberately put the natural in themselves into subjection to Jesus Christ. In the meantime there is arbitration, no compromise and no fight, but deliberate arbitration between the two.

As Abimelech rebuked Abraham when he was in the wrong (see Genesis 20), and Abraham in his turn rebuked Abimelech, so in the same way the children of men from time to time rebuke the children of God, and the children of God rebuke the politics of natural men. Compromise with each other or unity between them is immoral. Arbitration until He comes whose right it is to reign is the God-ordained programme.

Abimelech exhibits the characteristic of natural, noble, worldly civilisation which recognises the blessing of God attached to the people of God, and shrewdly realises the value of having the people of God in the midst of civilised life. No man on earth

"pooh-poohs" the people of God, although he himself does not intend to become one of them. Our Lord did not pray that His disciples should be taken out of the world, but that they should be kept from the evil (John 17:10).

3. The Agreement of Abraham and Abimelech (Genesis 21:27–34)

The Old Testament Scriptures always regard the oath as a peculiar sacrament. If you read what the Bible says about vowing you will see how culpably negligent we are in the way we promise. If we do not fulfil a promise, we damage our moral and spiritual life. It is infinitely better to refuse to promise anything, even in the most superficial relationships, than to promise and not perform. Spiritual leakages are accounted for in this way. Always do what you ought to do, but be careful of promising anything, because a promise puts the blood of God on your character.

If you make a promise you must see that it is fulfilled, no matter what it costs you. The glib way we promise is indicative of the slipshod ways we have got into, and of our laziness and indifference. The word of a natural man is his bond; the word of a saint binds God. It is a question of relationship to God all through.

The origin of the phrase "business is business" is in the fact that business must not be carried on as a matter of faith but as a matter of covenant. Business is the go-between between the children of God and natural civilised life, and must be carried on by bonds.

By means of this arbitration Abraham's faith develops more fully into faith in the eternal truth of Jehovah's covenant (v. 33).

THE SUPREME CLIMB

Genesis 22:1-3

Thy prayer shall be fulfilled; but how?
His thoughts are not as thine,
While thou wouldst only weep and bow,
He saith, "Arise and shine!"
Thy thoughts were all of grief and night,
But His of boundless joy and light.
Thy Father reigns supreme above:
Thy glory of His name
Is Grace and Wisdom, Truth and Love,
His Will must be the same.
And thou hast asked all joys in one
In whispering forth, "Thy will be done."

Take..., get..., offer... upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of. Genesis 22:2

In the life of Abraham we deal with the failures and the triumphs of the life of faith, and this chapter records the perfecting of the obedience of faith in Abraham. His obedience was not merely in the sacrifice of Isaac, but in his readiness to perceive a revelation even when it seemed to contradict what God had told him (cf. Genesis 22:11–12). The very nature of faith is that it must be tried; faith untried is only ideally real, not actually real. Faith is not rational, therefore it cannot be worked out on the basis of logical reason; it can only be worked out on the implicit line by living obedience.

God proves Abraham's faith by placing him in the most extreme crisis possible, because faith must prove itself by the inward concession of its dearest objects, and in this way be purified from all traditional and fanatical ideas and misconceptions.

1. The Crucible for Abraham

God did tempt Abraham. (Genesis 22:1)

These are startling words, for centuries later the Holy Ghost caused it to be written that God tempteth no man (James 1:13). Again, Our Lord taught us to pray "lead us not into temptation"; and He Himself was deliberately "led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil." The reason for the apparent contradiction is that there is a difference between the providence of God's rule and the providence of God's grace. The providence of God's grace is wrought out in the development of faith, and Paul refers to this when he says "we know that all things work together for good to them that love God" everything that happens transforms ideal faith into actual reality by the alchemy of God's providence (cf. Hebrews 12:11). The providence of God's grace is worked out in and through the arrangement of His rule, but is conditioned by the individual life of the one with whom He is dealing, e.g., God placed Abraham in a position He would not have placed Sarah or

Lot. When we learn not to trust in our wits, we will never put ourselves where we have no business to be.

God does not further our spiritual life in spite of our circumstances, but in and by our circumstances. The whole purpose of God is to make the ideal faith actually real in the lives of His servants. God is working for His highest purpose until it and man's highest good become one.

God sits "as a refiner and purifier of silver"—the crucible of testing is placed by God, not by man. It is easy to pass a crude verdict on God if you are not living in touch with Him. If you look at God through the mist of the heat of the crucible, you will say God is cruel. You must go through the crucible before you have any right to pronounce a verdict. On the off-side of the crucible a great many things are said which prove to be misconceptions—"God took away my child because I loved her too much." Go through the crucible, and you will find that in it you learned to know God better.

2. The Concentration of Abraham

Behold, here I am. (v. 1)

These words express the greatest application of the human mind. To say "Here I am" when God speaks, is only possible if we are in His presence, in the place where we can obey. To understand where I am in the sight of God means not only to listen but to obey promptly all He says. I can always know where I am. Whenever I want to debate about doing what I know to be supremely right, I am not in touch with God.

3. The Command to Abraham

Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest . . . (v. 2)

God's words are, as it were, blows aimed against the incrustations of natural individual life in order that Abraham's personal faith might be emancipated into fellowship with God. The blows are aimed at individuality because individuality will not come into fellowship with God; personality always does. Individuality is the husk of the personality, the home of independence and pride; but when God is developing the faith of a man all that must be sacrificed. It is the chrysalis developing into a butterfly, a winged creature of personal life. If you are not in the crucible yourself, the blows seem cruel; but if you are, you find the ecstasy of being brought into personal fellowship with God. Faith always works on the personal line (cf. Job 1:12).

God's command is—"Take now," not presently. To go to the height God shows can never be done presently, it must be done now. Every mother who gives her son in war-time climbs to the height instantly, there may be any amount of protest, but she climbs to the height and buries her son; her woman's heart goes through the bereavement long before it comes actually.

4. The Climb for Abraham

... and offer him there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of. (v. 2)

The mount of the Lord is the very height of the trial into which God brings His servant. There is no indication of the cost to Abraham, his implicit understanding of God so far out-reaches his explicit knowledge that he trusts God utterly and climbs the highest height on which God can ever prove him, and remains unutterably true to God. There was no conflict, that was over, Abraham's confidence was fixed; he did not consult with flesh and blood, his own or anyone else's, he instantly obeyed. The point is that though all other voices should proclaim differently, obedience to the dictates of the Spirit of God at all costs is to be the attitude of the faithful soul. This mountain is not a mountain of sacrifice, but the mountain of proof that Abraham loved God supremely (see Genesis 22:12).

It is extraordinary how we debate with right. We know a thing is right but we try to seek excuses for not doing it now. Always beware when you want to confer with your own flesh and blood, i.e., your own sympathies, your own insight. These things are based on individuality, not on personal relationship to God, and they are the things that compete with God and hinder our faith. When Our Lord is bringing us into personal relationship with Himself, it is always the individual relationships He breaks down. He comes with a sword rap on the husks that will not break, that will not let the life out for God (Matthew 10:34). "If any man comes to Me, and hate not . . . , he cannot be My disciple" (Luke 14:26). If you are outside the crucible you will say that Jesus Christ is cruel, but when you are in the crucible you see that it is a personal relationship with Himself that He is after all the time. He is after the true gold, and the devil is after it too.

5. The Consecration of Abraham

And Abraham rose up early in the morning . . . and went unto the place of which God had told him. (v. 3)

Verse 3 reveals the wonderful simplicity of Abraham. This is the sacrifice of Abraham, not of Isaac. Always guard against self-chosen service for God; self sacrifice may be a disease. God chose the crucible for Abraham, and Abraham made no demur, he went steadily through. If God has made your cup sweet, drink it with grace; if He has made it bitter, drink it in communion with Him. If it is a hard time of difficulty in the providential order of God, go through with it, but never choose your own service. If God has given the command, He will look after everything; your business is to get up and go, and smilingly wash your hands of the consequences.

Beware of pronouncing any verdict on the life of faith if you are not living it.

ISOLATION

Genesis 22:3-6

Let no man think that sudden in a minute All is accomplished and the work is done; Though with thine earliest dawn thou shouldst begin it, Scarce were it ended in thy setting sun.

How have I knelt with arms of my aspiring Lifted all night in irresponsive air, Dazed and amazed with overmuch desiring, Blank with the utter agony of prayer!

The place afar off. Genesis 22:4

Verse 1 states that God "did tempt Abraham," and the context proves that the word "tempt" has the underlying meaning of purifying: God had to lift Abraham's faith into an understanding of Himself. The life of Abraham is a life of faith, and faith in its actual working out has to go through spells of unsyllabled isolation (cf. Romans 8:26). Temptations in the life of faith are not accidents, each temptation is part of a plan, a step in the process of faith. Faith is not logical, it works on the line of life and by its very nature must be tried. Never confound the trial of faith with the ordinary discipline of life. Much that we call the trial of our faith is the inevitable result of being alive. The problem lies in the clearing of God's character with regard to what He allows. Faith according to the Bible is confidence in God when He is inscrutable and apparently contradictory in His providences.

1. The Duty of Diligence

And Abraham rose up early in the morning. (v. 3)

This phrase is characteristic not only of men and women in the Bible, but of God Himself. The revelation of God in the Old Testament is that of a working God. No other religion presents God either as diligent or as suffering, but as an all-in-all principle, ruling in lofty disdain. The God Who reveals Himself to Abraham is One ever intent on the fulfilment of His great designs; and like God, like people. If God is diligent, surely we ought to be diligent in doing our duty to Him. Think how patient and how diligent God has been with us! Over and over again God gets us near the point, and then by some petty individual sulk we spoil it all, and He patiently begins all over again. Think of the vision, "whiter than snow shine," God gave of what He wanted us to be—where has it gone this Easter time? Has God had to begin all over again from where we left off last time, or have we said—I will be true to God at all costs, no matter what the isolation?

2. The Direction of Duty

And went unto the place of which God had told him. (v. 3)

Abraham took the direction of his duty from God's word, not from his own discernment (cf. Genesis 12:4; Hebrews 11:6). Our danger is to water down God's word to suit ourselves. God never fits His word to suit me; He fits me to suit His word. The discernment of God's call does not come in every moment of life, but only in rare moments; the moments Our Lord spoke of as "the light" (John 12:35–36). We have to remain true to what we see in those moments; if we do not, we will put back God's purpose in our life. The undercurrent of regret arises when we confer with those who have not heard the call of God, and if we listen to them we get into darkness. The life of Abraham is an illustration of two things: of unreserved surrender to God, and of God's complete possession of a child of His for His own highest end.

It is never the consecration of our gifts that fits us for God's service. Profoundly speaking, we are not here to work for God. Absorption in practical work is one of the greatest hindrances in preventing a soul discerning the call of God. Unless active work is balanced by a deep isolated solitude with God, knowledge of God does not grow and the worker becomes exhausted and spent out. Our Lord said that the only men He will use in His enterprises are those in whom He has done everything (Luke 14:26, 27, 33); otherwise we would serve our own ends all the time. Many have begun well but have gone off on doctrine, all their energy is spent furthering a cause, Jesus Christ is not the dominating ruler. The direction of duty lies not in doing things for God, but in doing what God tells us to do, and God's order comes to us in the haphazard moments. We do not make the haphazard moments, God is the arranger of the haphazard.

The direction of duty is loyalty to God in our present circumstances.

3. The Discipline of Distance

Then on the third day . . . (v. 4)

God is never in a hurry. We say, "I see what God wants and it seems so easy, I wish I could do it now." Abraham had to travel many long hours to the place of sacrifice, a deed was to be done after days of reflection, not on the impulse of the moment, and during the journey not a look or a word betrayed his secret. Isaac never guessed at the isolation in his father's mind. Never reveal to anyone the profound depths of your isolation; when the life is going on profoundly with God, conceal it. "Appear not unto men to fast." It was this about Our Lord that staggered the Pharisees, no one know what He was going through in the profoundest concerns of His life. And at the end when He might easily have been absorbed in the tremendous issue which He knew was at hand, He revealed no concern about Himself, only for His disciples—"Let not your heart be troubled."

4. The Deception of Determination

I and the lad will . . . come again to you. (v. 5)

The strength of Abraham's faith appears in that he held to God's promise while he promptly went to do what seemed to prevent its fulfilment. He believed that God would fulfil all He had promised and did not stay to question. To take God at His word may mean expecting God to come up to my standard; whereas true faith does not so much take God at His word as take the word of God as it is, in the face of all difficulties, and act upon it, with no attempt to explain or expound it.

5. The Devotion of the Devoted

And Abraham took the wood of the burnt offering, and laid it upon Isaac his son. (v. 6)

This verse is sublime. There is nothing more wonderful than the picture of this thoughtful, obedient boy going with his father, and even when he knew what the purpose was (v. 9), he was willing to relinquish the joy of life (cf. John 21:18).

THE PATH OF GOD

Genesis 22:7-14

My God, my God, let me for once look on thee
As though nought else existed, we alone!
And as creation crumbles, my soul's spark
Expands till I can say,—Even from myself
I need thee and I feel thee and I love thee.
I do not plead my rapture in thy works
For love of thee, nor that I feel as one
Who cannot die: but there is that in me Which turns to thee, which loves or which should love.

Browning

God will provide Himself . . . Genesis 22:8

The life of Abraham provides the pattern spiritual biography in which the life ascends from the rational and accountable to the personally traced footsteps of the soul's path to God. The turning points in the spiral ascent of faith are, first, obedience to the effectual call of God (Genesis 12); and second, the culmination of unreserved resignation to God (Genesis 22). Our difficulties spiritually arise from unrecognised spiritual hysterics, in which mood we unconsciously select God to watch us and our symptoms. The only cure for that is to get hold of God and have no symptoms.

1. The Speech of Silent Spirituality (Genesis 22:7–8)

The speech of Abraham and Isaac reveals that they are spiritually silent—the son is silent before the father as the father is silent before God, and thus God elevates them both above unspiritual human nature. That is, both father and son have gone one step beyond the limit of the possible because they are on the path of God. To talk easily about spiritual experiences is an indication that I have only a devout nodding acquaintance with the experiences of others, and am devoid of all such experiences myself.

In the life of faith the pressure of forethought is transferred to God by the faith which fulfils His behests; I have faith in God's accountable rationality, not in my own. If I have never heard the call of God, all I see is the accountability that I can state to myself. Practical work is nearly always a determination to think for myself, to take the pressure of forethought on myself: I see the need, therefore I must do something. That is not the effectual call of God, but the call of my sympathy with conditions as I see them. When God's call comes, I learn to do actively what He tells me and take no thought for the morrow. Take a step in faith in God, and your rational friends will say: "Very beautiful, but suppose We all did it . . . !" You are not living on the line of accountable rationality, but a life of agreement with God's effectual call, and have therefore no reply to make.

In Hebrews 11:19 we get an insight into Abraham's spirituality—"Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead." It was not Abraham's common sense but his spiritual illumination that made him know it. Beware of turning a commonsense somersault and make God appear foolish by saying that Abraham knew all about it and it was not a sacrifice at all. Abraham did not know all about it; he believed that God would give Isaac back to him, but how, he had no notion; he surrendered himself entirely to the supernatural God. God never tells us what He is going to do. He reveals Who He is.

So, "they went both of them together" in the obedience of faith. Abraham stood in the midst of the most appalling personal controversy, the controversy between natural love and faith, and Isaac was worthy of his father. The path to God is never the same as the path of God. When I am going on with God in His path, I do not understand, but God does; therefore I understand God, not His path. When you take a step in faith in God and fulfil His behests, God does the forethinking for you. When you do it for yourself. God has to take second place. If you are going through the discipline of transferring your forethought to God and actively fulfilling His behests, you have to be silent; and when you do speak your speech is shallow, it does not convey where you are. People must never guess what you are going through. Piety always pretends to be going through what it is not.

2. The Sacrifice of Surrendered Sonship (Genesis 22:9–10)

God is the ruling factor in all our transaction (cf. Proverbs 20:24). When we commit ourselves to God He arranges the haphazard, and we have to see that we actively fulfil His behests where He places us.

The binding of Isaac is a prefiguring of the fulfilment and the perfection of the Death of Christ. The emphasis of the so-called Higher Christian Life¹⁹ is to look at Christ as our Example, not as our sacrifice: by prayer and consecration we come into God's favour. We do not, that is blasphemy. God never accepts us because we obey; He can only accept us on the ground of sacrifice, which cost death. Therefore our approach to God can never be on the ground of our merit—that I am being bound by Another; that is the effect of the sacrifice of Christ in me. Personal holiness is never the ground of my acceptance with God; the only ground of acceptance is the Death of the Lord Jesus Christ.

3. The Sympathy of Supreme Spirit (Genesis 22:11–12)

Abraham had a rational understanding of what God's command meant and he had to step out of it. Abraham was not a fanatic, the instant the voice of God came he surrendered himself in devotion to the voice, although it seemed an arrest of obedience to the Divine command. The essence of true religious faith is devotion to a Person. Beware of sticking to convictions instead of to Christ; convictions are simply the clothes of your growing life.

The great point of Abraham's faith in God was that he was prepared to do anything for God. Mark the difference between that and doing anything to prove your love to God. Abraham was there to obey God, no matter to what he went contrary. Abraham was not a pledged devotee of his own convictions, or he would have slain his son and said the voice of the angel was the voice of the devil. There is always the point of giving up convictions and traditional beliefs. If I will remain true to God, He will lead me straight through the ordeal into the inner chamber of a better knowledge of God. Our Lord taught us to pray "lead us not into temptation." Don't ask God to test you. Don't declare as Peter did, I will do anything, I will go to death for You. Abraham did not make any such declaration, he remained true to God, and God purified his faith.

Abraham is taught by the ancient ritual what Paul clearly expressed in Romans 12:1. Genesis 22:9 is a picture of the blunder of thinking that the sacrifice of death is the final thing God wants: what God wants is the sacrifice through death which enables a man to do what Jesus did, viz., sacrifice his life. Many of us think that God wants us to give up things; we make Christianity the great apotheosis of giving up! God purified Abraham from this blunder, and the same discipline goes on in our lives. "Oh well, I expect God will ask me to give that up." God nowhere tells us to give up things for the sake of giving them up; He tells us to give them up for the sake of the only thing worth having, viz., life with Himself. It is a question of loosening the bands that hinder our life, and immediately those bands are loosened by identification with the death of Jesus, we enter into a relationship with God whereby we sacrifice our life to God. To give God my life for death is of no value; what is of value is to let Him have all my powers that have been saved and sanctified, so that as Jesus sacrificed His life for His Father, I can sacrifice my life for Him. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice," says Paul.

4. The Substitution of Sacramental Service (Genesis 22:13-14)

Abraham did not receive a positive command to sacrifice the ram, he recognised in the ram caught by his horns in a thicket behind him a Divine suggestion. Until we get into fellowship with God His suggestions are no good to us. When people are intimate with one another suggestions convey more than words, and when God gets us into oneness with Himself we recognise His suggestions. Abraham offers the ram as a substitute for his son; he does not withhold his son in intention, although in fact he offers a substitute. The entire system of sacrifice is an extension of the sacrifice of the ram. The spiritual sacrifice of Isaac and the physical sacrifice of the ram are made one, the natural and the spiritual are blended. That Christ is the substitute for me and therefore I go scot free, is never taught in the New Testament. If I say that Christ suffered instead of me, I knock the bottom board out of His sacrifice. Christ died in the stead of me. I, a guilty sinner, can never get right with God, it is impossible. I can only be brought into union with God by identification with the One Who died in my stead. No sinner can get right with God on any other ground than the ground that Christ died in his stead, not instead of him.

THE ETERNAL GOAL

Genesis 22:15-19

My goal is God Himself, not joy, nor peace. Nor even blessing, but Himself, my God; 'Tis His to lead me there, not mine, but His— "At any cost, dear Lord, by any road!"

One thing I know, I cannot say Him nay; One thing I do, I press towards my Lord; My God my glory here, from day to day, And in the glory there my Great Reward.

F. Brook²⁰

In blessing I will bless thee . . . because thou hast obeyed My voice. Genesis 22:17–18

The spirit of obedience gives more joy to God than anything else on earth. Obedience is impossible to us naturally, even when we do obey, we do it with a pout in our moral underlip, and with the determination to scale up high enough and then "boss my boss." In the spiritual domain there is no pout to be removed because the nature of God has come into me. The nature of God is exhibited in the life of Our Lord, and the great characteristic of His life is obedience. When the love of God is shed abroad in my heart by the Holy Ghost (Romans 5:5), I am possessed by the nature of God, and I know by my obedience that I love Him. The best measure of a spiritual life is not its ecstasies, but its obedience. "To obey is better than sacrifice."

1. The Supreme Call of God (Genesis 22:15)

When God first called to Abraham there was still a dim gulf between them, God had to call and Abraham to answer (v. 1). Now that gulf is bridged. "The angel of the Lord called a second time out of heaven, . . ." i.e., an inward state of soul, and Abraham is so near to God that he does not need to reply; he is in the place of unimpeded listening. Is there any impediment between my ears and God's voice?

The call of God is a call in accordance with the nature of God, not in accordance with my idea of God. At first, Abraham did not interpret the call along the line of the nature of God because he did not know it; he interpreted it along the line of the Chaldaic tradition and took it to mean he was to kill his son. The supreme crisis in Abraham's faith has now been reached, all his imperfect conceptions of God have been left behind and he has come now to understand God. Always beware of self-assertiveness, it bruises our relationship to God, and distorts the manifestation of His nature in us. Abraham was neither an amateur providence nor a moral policeman, he simply believed God.

2. The Supreme Reality of God (Genesis 22:16)

Abraham has come to the place where he is in touch with the very nature of God, he understands the reality of God, and God, as it were, unveils Himself to him in a burst of enthusiasm. There is no possibility of questioning on my part when God speaks, if He is speaking to His own nature in me; prompt obedience is the only result. When Jesus says "Come unto Me," I simply come; when He says "Trust in God in this matter," I do not try to trust, I do trust. An alteration has taken place in my disposition which is an evidence that the nature of God is at work in me.

3. The Supreme Character of God (Genesis 22:17–18)

The promise of God stands in relation to Abraham's tried and willing obedience. The revelation of God to me is determined by my character, not by God's (Psalms 25–26). If I am mean,²¹ that is how God will appear to me.

'Tis because I am mean, Thy ways so oft Look mean to me.

George MacDonald

By the discipline of obedience, I come to the place Abraham reached and see God as He is. The promises of God are of no use to me until by obedience I understand the nature of God. We read some things in the Bible three hundred and sixty-five times and they mean nothing to us, then all of a sudden we see what they mean, because in some particular we have obeyed God, and instantly His character is revealed. "For how many soever be the promises of God, in Him is the yea" (RV). The "yea" must be born of obedience; when by the obedience of our life, we say "Amen," "So let it be," to a promise, then that promise is made ours.

4. The Supreme Reward (Genesis 22:19)

The more we have to sacrifice for God, the more glorious is the reward presently. We have no right to choose our sacrifice, God will let us see where the sacrifice is to come, and it will always be on the line of what God has given us, our "Isaac," and yet His call is to sacrifice it. God is always at work on the principle of lifting up the natural and making it and the spiritual one, and very few of us will go through with it. We will cling to the natural when God wants to put a sword through it. If you go through the transfiguration of the natural, you will receive it back on a new plane altogether. God wants to make eternally our own what we only possessed intermittently.

In the beginning we do not train for God, we train for work, for our own aims, but as we go on with God we lose all our own aims and are trained into God's purpose. Unless practical work is appointed by God, it will prove a curse (cf. John 17:13). "At any cost, by any road," means nothing self-chosen. The Bible does not say that God blessed Abraham and took him to heaven; but that He blessed him and kept him on earth. The maturity of character before God is the personal channel through which He can bless others. If it takes all our lifetime before God can put us right, then others are going to be impoverished. We need to hurry and climb our Mount Moriah, come to the place where God can put an end to the dim gulf between Him and ourselves, then He will be able to bless us as He did Abraham.

No language can express the ineffable blessedness of the supreme reward that awaits the soul that has taken its supreme climb, proved its supreme love, and entered on its supreme reward. What an imperturbable certainty there is about the man who is in contact with the real God! Thank God, the life of the Father of the Faithful is but a specimen of the life of every humble believer who obediently follows the discipline of the life of faith. What a depth of transparent rightness there must be about the man who walks before God, and the meaning of the Atonement is to place us there in perfect adjustment to God. "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect," not faultless, but blameless, undeserving of censure in the eyes of God.

STILL HUMAN

Genesis 22:20-24

For some may follow truth from dawn to dark As a child follows by his mother's hand, Knowing no fear, rejoicing all the way; And unto some her face is as a star Set through an avenue of thorns and fires, And waving branches, black without a leaf. And still it draws them, though the feet must bleed,

Though the garments must be rent and eyes be scorched;

And if the valley of the shadow of death
Be passed, and to the level road they come,
Still with their faces to the polar star,
It is not with the same looks, the same limbs,
But halt and maimed and of infirmity.

And it came to pass . . . that it was told Abraham. Genesis 22:20

1. God's Omniscience and Human Life

What the natural reason would call an anti-climax is the very climax of God's supernatural grace whereby a man having gone through the most wonderful experience, emerges and lives an unwonderful, ordinary life. That is the difference between the fanatic and the faithful soul. You find it all through the New Testament. The wonder of the Incarnation slips into the life of ordinary childhood; the marvel of the Transfiguration descends to the valley and the demon-possessed boy, and the glory of the Resurrection merges into Our Lord providing breakfast for His disciples on the sea shore in the early dawn. The tendency in early Christian experience is to look for the marvellous. We are apt to mistake the sense of the heroic for being heroes. It is one thing to go through a crisis grandly, but a different thing to go through every day glorifying God when there is no witness, no limelight, and no one paying the remotest attention to you. If we don't want medieval haloes, we want something that will make people say—What a wonderful man of prayer he is! What a pious, devoted woman she is! If anyone says that of you, you have not been loyal to God. If you are rightly devoted to Jesus Christ, you have reached the sublime height where no one thinks of noticing you, all that is noticed is that the power of God comes through all the time. It is along some such line as this that we are to understand the omniscience of God and human life. "Oh, I have had a wonderful call from God!" It takes Almighty God Incarnate in you to peel potatoes properly, and to wash heathen children for the glory of God. Anyone cannot do these things; anybody can do the shining in the sun and the sporting in the footlights, but it takes God's incarnated Spirit to make you so absolutely humanly His that you are utterly unnoticeable.

2. God's Object and Human Nature

The history of the life of Abraham does not close abruptly with his greatest act of faith, but from that act of faith there is a natural human progress to a sanctified life. Human nature likes to read about the heroic and the intense: it takes the Divine nature to be interested in grass and sparrows and trees, because they are so unutterably commonplace, and also because God happens to have made them. God's order is the human; the devil's is the spectacular. The object of the crisis is that we may live the human life in perfect relation to God.

Abraham is not the type of a saint or of sanctification, but of the life of faith. Our human relationships are the actual conditions in which the ideal life of God is to be exhibited. Any sordid being can sit in a cathedral in the twilight and listen to beautiful music and feel divine; Abraham lived as God's man in the earthly conditions of his life. If the indwelling of God cannot be manifested in human flesh, then the Incarnation and the Atonement are of no avail. All our Christian work may be merely scaffolding poles to prepare us so that God may do what He likes with us, unobtrusively. The test of the life of a saint is not success, but faithfulness as a steward of the mysteries of God in human life as it actually is (cf. Luke 6:40). We will put up success as the aim in Christian work; the one thing glorifying to God is the glory of God manifested in human lives unobtrusively. The "show business" belongs to the pagan order of things; devotion to God in actual human conditions belongs to the Redemptive order. A Christian is one who has learned to live the life hid with Christ in God in human conditions.

3. God's Order and Human Haphazard (Genesis 22:20)

The message which Abraham received was providential and came at the right moment. The message was apparently haphazard, but it was all in the order of God. It is a great moment in the life of a child of God when letters and messages are seen to be under the direction of Divine providence. When God brings me a word on occasions and I obey it, He will look after everything else. There is nothing haphazard to a child of God (Romans 8:28).

4. God's Opportunity and Human Forethought (Genesis 22:21-23)

Abraham must soon think of Isaac's marriage, and the message from his kindred causes him to hope that he may find in his brother's family a bride for Isaac. Remain true to God in your obscurity, and remember you are not the designer of your destiny. You hear the call of God and realise what He wants, then you begin to find reasons why you should not obey Him. Well, obey Him, because away in some other part of the world there are other circumstances being worked by God, and if you say—"I shan't, I wasn't made for this," you get out of touch with God. Your "goings" are not according to your mind, but according to God's mind. Remain true at all costs to what God is doing with you and don't ask why He is doing it. Don't loaf along like a strayed poet on the fringes of God's providence; the Almighty has got you in hand, leave yourself alone and trust in Him. Half the sentimental pious folks that strew the coasts of emotional religious life are there because we will engineer our own circumstances. We have to be for God's purpose, and God cannot explain

His purpose until it happens. God's omniscience, God's order, and God's opportunity in my individual life all work together, and Jesus Christ enters into my life just at the point of the haphazard circumstances I am in. Sanctification is not the end of Redemption, it is the gateway to the purpose of God. No Christian experience is the end and purpose of Redemption. God's own plans are the purpose of Redemption.

When the call of Jesus Christ comes, it comes to you, it cannot come to your father or your mother, or to your wife, or to your own self-interest; it comes entirely to your personal life. Instantly the clamour begins. Father and mother say No, the claims of my own life say No; Jesus Christ says Yes. Think-could Jesus Christ's call mean that I hurt my father and mother irrevocably? Certainly it could not; then if I obey Him, even though it looks like bringing the sword and the upset into lives, in the final wind up God will bring His wisdom out perfectly, and I shall find that every one of those human relationships have been brought in in the wake of my obedience. The point is—will I trust God, or lean to my own convictions? Obedience to the supremacy of the Lord Jesus is the only legitimate outcome of sanctification. Thank God, He wants us to be human, not spooks!

HUMAN GREATNESS

We cannot kindle when we will
The fire which in the heart resides;
The spirit bloweth and is still,
In mystery our soul abides.
But tasks in hours of insight will'd
Can be through hours of gloom fulfill'd.

With aching hands and bleeding feet,
We dig and heap, lay stone on stone;
We bear the burden and the heat
Of the long day, and wish 'twere done.
Not till the hours of light return
All we have built do we discern

Matthew Arnold

Thou art a prince of God. Genesis 23:6 (RV)

1. In the Place of Sorrow (Genesis 23:1-2)

The Old Testament relates the end of no other woman's life so particularly as it does the end of Sarah's life. Abraham's personal sorrow is recorded in the words—"to weep for her." It is a farce to make nothing of death; the natural expressions of the heart are not suppressed, but tempered and transfigured. It is no part of faith to affect insensibility to sorrow, that is stoical humbug. In certain stages of religious experience we have the idea that we must not show sorrow when we are sorrowful. That idea is an enemy to the Spirit of Jesus Christ, because it leads to heartlessness and hypocrisy. Not to sorrow is not even human, it is diabolical. The Spirit of God hallows sorrow.

In dealing with the life of Abraham as the Father of the Faithful neither faith nor common sense must be our guide, but God Who unites both in the alchemy of personal experience. To be guided by common sense alone is fanatical; both common sense and faith have to be brought into relation to God. The life of faith does not consist of acts of worship or of great self-denial and heroic virtues, but of all the daily conscious acts of our lives.

2. In the Place of Sojourning (Genesis 23:3-4)

The phrase Abraham uses, "a stranger and sojourner," is the inner meaning of the term "Hebrew." Abraham could never say that he was at home in Canaan, he left his home never to find another on earth. The thought of pilgrimage sank deep into the Hebrew mind, and the note of the sojourner is, essentially the note of the Christian. Instead of being pilgrims and strangers on the earth, we become citizens of this order of things and entrench ourselves here, and the statements of Jesus have no meaning. The genius of the Spirit of God is to make us pilgrims, consequently there is the continual un-at-home-ness in this world (cf. Philippians 3:20). It is a matter of indifference to the Spirit of God where we are, and it ought to be equally indifferent to us. As saints, we are cursed, not blessed, by patriotism. The idea of nations is man's, not God's. When Our Lord establishes His Kingdom there will be no nations, only the great Kingdom of God. That is why His Kingdom is not built up on civilised life.

3. In the Place of Sentiment (Genesis 23:8-9)

Sentiment is thought occasioned by feeling; sentimentality is feeling occasioned by thought. Sentiment plays an important part in human affairs. and no sentiment is more sacred than that connected with our dead. Sentimentality is produced by watching things we are not in. Go through a disaster or bereavement, and the emotions produced are the bedrock of feeling which makes human life worthy. As Christians we should conduct our lives on the high sentiment which is the outcome of a transaction with the Lord Jesus Christ. If our testimony is hard, it is because we have gone through no crisis with God, there is no heartbroken emotion behind it. If we have been through a crisis in which human feeling has been ploughed to its inner centre by the Lord, our testimony will convey all the weight of the greatness of God along with human greatness. It is essential to go through a crisis with God which costs you something, otherwise your devotional life is not worth anything. You cannot be profoundly moved by nothing, or by doctrine; you can only be profoundly moved by devotion.

Verses 8–9. The story of Abraham's palaver with the Hittites conveys the idea that they had respect for the true greatness of Abraham.

Bending before men is a recognition that there does dwell in that presence of our brother something divine.

Carlyle²²

We all recognise human trappings; only one in a thousand recognises human greatness. We bow not to greatness, but to the trappings of money and of birth. If I bow because I must, I am a conventional fraud; if I bow because I recognise true greatness, it is a sign that I am being emancipated. The greatest humiliation for a Christian is to recognise that he has ignored true greatness because it was without trappings. If the Pharisees had been reverent towards true greatness, they would not have treated the Nazarene Carpenter as they did.

4. In the Place of Scrupulosity (Genesis 23:17–18)

The details of this palaver must not be passed over. We are apt to say that religion is religion, and business is business; but there is no cleavage in the life of faith. Slovenliness is an insult to the Holy Ghost. Our Lord is scrupulous in His saving of us, surely we can be scrupulous in the conduct of His temple, our bodies and our bodily connections. That will mean God's greatness coming down into our human setting, and we see to it that we do everything in keeping with the greatness of God.

5. In the Place of Sublimity (Genesis 23:6)

The Hittites had no word for "gentleman," so they called Abraham "a prince of God." Abraham kept company with God until he became a partaker of the Divine nature. It is impossible for a saint, no matter what his experience, to keep right with God if he will not take the trouble to spend time with God. In order to keep the mind and heart awake to God's high ideals you have to keep coming back again and again to the primal source. If you do not, you will be crushed into degeneracy. Just as a poet or an artist must keep his soul brooding on the right lines, so a Christian must keep the sense of God's call always awake. Spend plenty of time with God; let other things go, but don't neglect Him. And beware of practical work. We are not here to do work for God, we are here to be workers with Him, those through whom He can do His work.

BEATIFIC BETROTHAL

Genesis 24

Warp and Woof and Tangle,— Weavers of Webs are we.
Living and dying—and mightier dead,
For the shuttle, once sped, is sped—is sped;—
Weavers of Webs are we.

White, and Black, and Hodden-gray,— Weavers of Webs are we. To every weaver one golden strand Is given in trust by the Master-Hand;— Weavers of Webs are we.

And that we weave, we know not,— Weavers of Webs are We.
The threads we see, but the pattern is known
To the Master-Weaver alone, alone;—
Weavers of Webs are we.

John Oxenham

Come in, thou blessed of the LORD; wherefore standest thou without? Genesis 24:31

Nothing can exceed the dignity and beauty of this chapter in the Bible. It reveals God's providential workings in the lives of several elemental, upright people, and clearly conveys God's order for each one. In the case of Abraham we see sublime sentiment (thought born in profound feeling) being worked out in plain common-sense details, yet with the natural sensibilities alive at once to human conditions and to the demands of God.

1. Sentiment, Sense and Sensibility

As already stated, there is a difference between sentiment and sentimentality. We cannot be profoundly moved by thought; we can only be profoundly moved by a personal crisis with God in which our usual equilibrium is disturbed, and our subsequent conceptions of life must be taken from the emotions stirred by the crisis. If the disturbance comes to you from outside, you will be exactly the same after it; but if you go through a personal crisis, such as Our Lord insists on, the personal crisis of devotion to Himself in discipleship, then all your conceptions of life will take colour from that moment. People are called backsliders who are merely sentimental pious people, they have had no crisis, all they have is the affectation of sentimentality. Recall the depths of feeling through which God has taken Abraham, and now in this chapter we see him being led rightly in the actual concerns of life.

Right views on profound subjects will always be the spring of right relationships in shallow matters. To be guided by common sense is as foolish as being guided by faith. God is the One Who welds both faith and common sense into one practical personality.

By "Sense" understand matters of practical human existence, and remember that any feature of actual life not brought under the severe control of the conception born of your crisis with God will leave a loophole for the devil. For instance, if you ignore certain aspects of your natural life as it has been constructed by God—take too much sleep, or not enough sleep, forego meals—you will give occasion to the enemy straightaway, no matter how great a saint you are. We have no business to leave out any part of our being from the control of the conceptions born of our crisis with God. The difficulty with us as Christians is that we will not think in accordance with the crisis we have had; consequently when we come to the things of sense and meet with people who have not had a crisis with God, it is an easy business to climb down. If we remain true to the sentiment produced in us by our crisis with God, those who meantime protest against us will ultimately come up to the same standard; but if we succumb, everything will go down.

By "Sensibility" understand the natural intuitive power usually called tact, which makes it possible for us to live with other people without annoying them. These three, sentiment, sense and sensibility, must be welded into one in our personal lives by devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Solemn Sacredness of Serving

Eliezer in many respects stands as a picture of a disciple of the Lord; the whole moulding of his life is his devotion to another, not to a sense of right or duty, but to his master (cf. John 13:13-14). We know very little about devotion to Jesus Christ. We know about devotion to right and to duty, but none of that is saintly, it is purely natural. My sense of duty and of right can never be God's. If I can state what my duty is, I have become my god in that particular. There is only One Who knows what my duty is as a Christian, and that is God. The Sermon on the Mount nowhere tells us what our duty is; it tells us the things a saint will dothings that are not his duty, e.g., Matthew 5:39–42. Be renewed in the spirit of your mind, says Paul, not that you may do your duty, but that you may make out what God's will is.

All the reward Eliezer seeks is the happiness of his master, self-remembrance in him is dead. He is shrewd and practical, yet as guileless as a child, the exact embodiment of 1 Corinthians 4:2—"It is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful."

3. Self–Forgetfulness in Stewards of Secrets

One significant thing to notice is that Rebecca came alone and unveiled, and conversed freely with a stranger. The self-forgetfulness of Eliezer and Rebecca's own intuition made her know that she was safe with him. "Man's virtue and woman's liberty go hand in hand." There are those who talk like angels, yet they smudge the soul; there are others who may not talk sweetly yet they exhilarate the soul. Guard your intuition as the gift of God. You cannot judge virtue by its obverse; you can only judge virtue by intuition. Woe be to any woman who ignores her intuition, ignores the warning which says—Now draw back. For God's sake and your own womanhood's sake, draw back, it matters not who the person is.

4. Sweet Supremacy of Singleness

Rebecca's brother and mother recognise God's hand in the whole matter (Genesis 24:50), and those words are the answer to Eliezer's prayer. Rebecca felt the thrill which always passes through any pure young heart in the presence of a saint. A soul's trust in a saint in the providence of God is something more precious even than love. Few of us know anything about it because we are too sordidly selfish, we want things for ourselves all the time. Eliezer had only one conception, loyalty to his master, and in the providence of God he brought Rebecca straight to Isaac. This marriage, like all true marriages, concerns the Kingdom of God.

DISCOVERING DIVINE DESIGNS

Genesis 24

Let us not always say
"Spite of this flesh to-day
I strove, made head, gained ground upon the whole!"
As the bird wings and sings,
Let us cry "All good things Are ours, nor soul helps flesh more, now, than flesh helps soul!"...

He fixed thee mid this dance
Of plastic circumstance,
This Present, thou, forsooth, wouldst fain arrest:
Machinery just meant
To give thy soul its bent,
Try thee and turn thee forth, sufficiently impressed.

And the man bowed down his head and worshipped the LORD. Genesis 24:26

The whole discipline of the life of faith is to make the ideal visions of faith and the actual performance of life one in personal possession. Only one Being can enable us to make the ideal and the actual one in personal life, viz., the Holy Spirit. In art and literature the ideal and the actual are only made one in a picture or a poem or book. The temple of the Holy Ghost is our personal life.

1. Human Forethought and Divine Design (Genesis 24:1-9)

Abraham's motive is clearly stated here. Never speak of human motives as if they were opposed to the Divine. In the life of a child of God the human motive is the disguised Divine. Sanctification means that I become a child of God, consequently my common-sense decisions are God's will unless He gives the check of His Spirit. I decide things in perfect fellowship with God, knowing that if my decisions are wrong, He will check. When He checks, I must stop at once. It is the inner check of the Spirit that prevents common sense being our god. There are times of crisis when we must wait on God, but they are rare. It is the abortion of piety to ask God to guide us here and there, of course He will! Such asking is not real. Remember our Lord's injunction— "Except ye . . . become as little children."

If God is not recognised by His blessings in the details of actual life in the beginning, He will be recognised in the end by His destructions. Human forethought in a faithful soul such as Abraham is the manifestation of the Divine design. In looking back you see not the haphazard, but an amazing design which, if you are born of God, you will credit to God; otherwise you credit it to the extraordinary wisdom of men and women.

2. Human Appointments and Divine Discoveries (Genesis 24:10–21)

It is our wisdom to follow providence, but folly to force it. By earnest human effort Eliezer makes his appointments, and these are not only recognised by God, but become also discoveries of the Divine mind. Unless you are a saint, your praying is pious humbug; but if you are a saint, you soon realise that you discover the Divine by energetically doing the human, provided you are maintaining a personal relationship to God. The fanatical element in the saint is the element that is devoted to a principle instead of to consistent conduct before God. For instance, I may become a devotee to the doctrine of Divine healing which means I must never be sick, and if I am sick then I say I must have gone wrong. The battle all through is against the absurdity of being consistent to an ideal instead of to God. The vital point about Eliezer is not his asking for signs, but that Eliezer asked for signs. Eliezer was a man who related everything entirely to God, consequently his human appointments, which are easy to ridicule, were God's way of enabling him to discover His mind. Beware of making a fetish of consistency to convictions instead of developing your faith in God. "I shall never do that"—in all probability you will have to if you are a saint. Whenever we take what God has done and put it in the place of Himself, we instantly become idolaters. If Our Lord had been fanatically consistent, He would have said after the temptation —I have not eaten for forty days, therefore I will never eat food again. He did not eat for forty days because it was His Father's will for Him not to. Judged on the line of logical consistency there was no more inconsistent being than Our Lord. He said—"Resist not evil"; and then He cleansed the temple in Jerusalem (Mark 11:15-16). But Our Lord was never inconsistent to His Father. The saint is to be consistent to the Divine life within him, not logically consistent to a principle. A fanatic is concerned not about God but about proving his own little fanatical ideas. It is a danger peculiar to us all. It is easier to be a fanatic than a faithful soul, because there is something amazingly humbling, particularly to our religious conceit, in being loyal to God.

3. Human Astonishment and Divine Details (Genesis 24:21–33)

The details of these verses are commonplace to Eastern custom, but Eliezer sees God in them. It is easy to see God in exceptional things or in a crisis, but it requires the culture of spiritual discipline to see God in every detail. Never allow that the haphazard is anything less than God's appointed order.

One other thing to note in these verses is the characteristic of the hospitality, it is an incurious, generous hospitality, which is the rarest type. Hospitality is characteristic not only of the East but of God's programme. To be curious about another person's affairs is an impertinence and is never Christian.

4. Human Affinities and Divine Directions (Genesis 24:34–49)

Eliezer gives a simple account of his journey, but his speech is an example of great wisdom. When the Spirit of God guides a man's human affairs, his speech indicates not human shrewdness, but the frankness of Divine skill. Ever note that we must be ready to discover the Divine designs anywhere.

5. Human Abandon and Divine Devotion (Genesis 24:50–67)

The custom according to which the brother must interest himself in the affairs of the sister is the explanation of much in these verses. They recognised the will of God in the whole matter, and have neither good nor ill to say. The consent of Rebecca is not sought in the betrothal, but only in the less important point of immediate departure.

When a soul abandons to God, God will not abandon it. But let that soul trust its wits and become its own amateur providence and a dextrous muddle will be the result. When once you have the amateur providence idea, it will prevent your doing the thing God tells you to do—"I must not tell my parents about my call; I want to prevent them suffering." Your plain duty before God is to tell them. If you are abandoned to God and do the duty that lies nearest, God will not abandon you; but if you trust in your wits and bring in the amateur providence idea, He will have to abandon you, and there will be heartbreaks and distresses that He is not in at all. Present the whole thing where it ought to be presented—in abandonment to God, and He will engineer everything in His own way.

Genesis 25:1-10

That low man seeks a little thing to do,
Sees it and does it:
This high man, with a great thing to pursue.
Dies ere he know it.
That low man goes on adding one to one,
His hundred's soon hit:
This high man, aiming at a million,
Misses an unit.
That, has the world here—should he need the next,
Let the world mind him!
This, throws himself on God, and unperplexed,
Seeking shall find him.

And his sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him. Genesis 25:9

It is not what a man achieves, but what he believes and strives for that makes him noble and great. Hebrews 11 impresses this aspect of the life of faith over against the life of human perfection. The first thing faith in God does is to remove all thought of relevant perfection. Some lives may seem humanly perfect and yet not be relevant to God and His purpose. The effect such lives leave is not of a reach that exceeds its grasp, but of a completed little circle of their own. It takes a man completely severed from God to be perfect in that way. There is a difference between a perfect human life lived on earth and a personal life with God lived on earth; the former gasps that for which it reaches, the latter is grasped by that which it never can reach. The former chains us to earth by its very completeness; the latter causes us to fling ourselves unperplexed on God. The difference is not a question of sin, but the paradox of the incomplete perfection of a right relationship to God.

1. The Region of the Irrelevant (Genesis 25:1-4)

One of the most striking features in Abraham's life is its irrelevancy. If we take Abraham to be the embodiment of an idea, say, of sanctification, we will have to cut out much that God puts in. The irrelevant things in Abraham's life are evidences of that half-conscious living which proves that his mind was not taken up with himself. The greatest thing in Abraham's life is God, not "Abraham-ism." The whole trend of his life is to make us admire God, not Abraham.

The outstanding characteristic in the life of a saint is its irrelevance, an irrelevance which is amazingly relevant to the purpose of God. If you become a devotee to a principle, you become a religious lunatic; you are no longer loyal to the life of Jesus, but loyal only to the logic of your convictions about Him. A fanatic dismisses all irrelevancy in life. We say that a lunatic is a man who has lost his reason; a lunatic is a man who has lost everything but his reason. A madman's explanation of things is always complete. The main thing is life, not logic. It is the irrelevant running all through life that makes it what it is worth.

One of the dangers of the so-called Higher Christian Life movements²³ is the idea that God wants to produce specimens to put in His museum. You can often find better specimens in the world than in the Church. Think of the men and women you know who have not been through the crisis you have been through, and your human reason tells you they are infinitely better than you are, they are more unselfish, never irritable or upset, and yet they would not dream of saying what you have to say, that you are loyal to Jesus Christ. The irrelevancy of your life and the relevancy of theirs will produce perplexity in your mind until you remember that you are not called to produce one of God's specimens; you are called to live in perfect relationship to God so that the net result of your life is not admiration for you, but a longing after God. Christian perfection is not, and never can be, human perfection. Christian perfection is the perfection of a relationship to God which shows itself in the total irrelevancy of human life.

If you get off on the line of personal holiness or Divine healing or the Second Coming of Our Lord, and make any of these your end, you are disloyal to Jesus Christ. Supposing the Lord has healed your body and you make Divine healing your end, the dead set of your life is no longer for God but for what you are pleased to call the manifestation of God in your life. Bother your life! "It can never be God's will that I should be sick." If it was God's will to bruise His own Son, why should it not be His will to bruise you? The thing that tells is not relevant consistency to an idea of what a saint's life is, but abandonment abjectly to Jesus Christ whether you are well or ill.

Much of our life is irrelevant to any and every mind saving God's mind. When you obey the call of God the first thing that strikes you is the irrelevancy of the things you have to do, and you are sure to be brought up full butt against the perfect human specimens. The net result of such lives does not leave you with the "flavour" of God at all, it leaves you with the idea that God is totally unnecessary—by human effort and human devotion we can reach the standard God wants. Well, in a fallen world it cannot be done. Paul refers to this in 2 Corinthians 4:3–4—"the god of this world hath blinded the minds of the unbelieving . . ." (RV), i.e., they have the perfection of the human, but never once have they seen the perfection of God.

Beware of taking your conception of a saint from deductions from certain Scriptures, and always clarify your views by meditation on John 17. God wants to do with the saints what His Son prayed He would do—make them one with Himself (v. 21).

2. The Reign of the Irrevocable (Genesis 25:5-7)

Ishmael is the son born of the wrong way of doing God's will. If we try to do God's will through our own effort, we produce Ishmael. Much of our modern Christian enterprise is "Ishmael," i.e., it is born not of God, but of an inordinate desire to do God's will in our own way—the one thing Our Lord never did.

Ishmael, as we have seen, had to be dismissed and disciplined until he was willing to become subservient and be utilised for God's purposes; and the natural has to be put completely under, dismissed and denied, until it is willing to be subjected to God, not to our ideas of relevancy. We put sin in the wrong place. Remember, we cannot touch sin. The Atonement of the Lord alone touches sin. We must not tamper with it for one second. We can do nothing with sin; we must leave God's Redemption to deal with it. Our part has to do with "Ishmael," i.e., the natural. The natural has to be denied, not because it is bad and wrong, but because it has nothing to do with our life of faith in God until it is turned into the spiritual by obedience. It is the attitude of the maimed life, which so few of us understand.

3. The Realm of the Irreproachable (Genesis 25:8)

The Hebrews regarded life as complete when it was full of days and riches and honour. Age was looked upon as a sign of favour. Whenever a nation becomes unspiritual, it reverses this order, the demand is not for old age but for youth. This reversal in the modern life of to-day is indicative of apostasy, not of advance.

Abraham's life wore to a tranquil sunset. He is described as "full of years," i.e., satisfied with life. He had seen, felt, believed, loved, suffered enough, earth had no more to offer him. Through God's goodness he found goodness in everything. Bitterness and cynicism are born of broken gods; bitterness is an indication that somewhere in my life I have belittled the true God and made a god of human perfection.

4. The Reunion of the Irreconcilable (Genesis 25:9–10)

Ishmael and Isaac are re-united at the grave of their father. Ishmael—strong, rugged, human perfection; Isaac—meditative, incomplete visionary, but on the trail of God. These two unite at the burial of Abraham, the Friend of God, whom God will not forsake. "Gathered to his people" means gathered to the unseen world. This is immortality in direct statement in the Old Testament.

Publication History

The three parts that comprise Our Brilliant Heritage were published individually as articles and booklets before being issued as a combined volume in 1965.

• Our Brilliant Heritage: These lectures were most likely given to League of Prayer meetings in London. "The Gospel Mystery of Sanctification" appeared as an article in Tongues of Fire in November 1912. It was identified as "verbatim notes of a lecture given by Chambers at Speke Hall," the League's headquarters. It is also probable that Chambers included this subject matter in his classes on Christian doctrine at the Bible Training College between 1911 and 1915. The material was published as five articles in Spiritual Life magazine, from October 1925 through February 1926, then as a booklet in 1929.

- Grow Up into Him: These lectures on Christian habits were given at the Bible Training College, London, from October 1 through December 17, 1914. The material was published as articles in Spiritual Life magazine over a period of two years, from August 1926 through August 1928, then published as a booklet in 1931.
- When Oswald Chambers gave these lectures in the autumn of 1914, fear and uncertainty ruled the minds of many in Britain as World War I showed no sign of the early conclusion people had hoped for. Basic necessities were being rationed

We ought to be going about like multi-millionaires. Externally we may have $2^{1/2}d.^{3}$ only, but spiritually we have all the grace of God to spend on others."

As He Walked: The material in As He Walked is drawn from lectures on Christian experience given at the Bible Training College, from April 30 through July 9, 1914. The talks were published as articles in Spiritual Life magazine from September 1929 through March 1930, and published as a booklet in 1930.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE (FROM THE 4TH EDITION, 1937)

This Book will greatly help seekers after Holiness, because it meets us on the threshold of our life in Christ and leads us along a luminous path of scriptural teaching, to the full measure of the believer's identification with his Risen Lord. "The candidates for sanctification are those who have the first-fruits of sanctification in the initial work of grace." They are then shown that the secret of holiness is the imparted holiness of Jesus Christ. "What a marvellous thing sanctification is. The perfections of Jesus—ours by the sheer gift of God."

As Chapter II nourishes the heart by leading us to implicit trust in Jesus; so Chapter III feeds the mind with deepest scriptural truth. It might be described as Spiritualised Theology. And the Chapter on "in Heavenly Places" is an unveiling of the glory and strength and security of the most intimate relationship we can know with our Risen Lord. "Jesus Christ can create in us the image of God even as it was in Himself." What an arresting sentence is this—"In illustrating the spiritual life, our tendency is to catch the tricks of the world, to watch the energy of the business man, and to apply these methods to God's work. Jesus Christ tells us to take the lessons of our lives from the things men never look at. "Consider the lilies": "Behold the fowls of the air." How often do we look at clouds, or grass, at sparrows, or flowers? Why, we have no time to look at them, we are in the rush of things—it is absurd to sit dreaming about sparrows and trees and clouds! Thank God when He raises us to the heavenly places, He manifests in us the very mind that was in Christ Jesus, unhasting and unresting, calm, steady and strong."

And the last Chapter insists on the possession of the Light, and shows its marvellous ministry in illuminating through His saints the darkness around. "Have we let God raise us up to the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, and are we learning to walk in the light as God is in the light?"

THE MYSTERY OF SANCTIFICATION

And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh. 1 Timothy 3:16

By the word mystery we mean something known only to the initiated, therefore if we are going to understand the gospel mystery of Sanctification and fully experience it, we must belong to the initiated, that is, we must be born from above (RV mg) by the Spirit of God. Robert Murray McCheyne⁴ said, and I would like his words engraven on my own heart, "The greatest need for my people is my personal holiness." Minister of the gospel, say that of your congregation—"The greatest need for my people is my personal holiness." Teacher, say that of your class—"The greatest need for my Sunday School class is my personal holiness."

Am I born again of the Spirit of God? What is the relation of my heart to holiness? Our Lord said, "Every tree is known by his own fruit," and I know whether I am born of the Spirit by the desires of my heart. Do I desire holiness more keenly than I desire any other thing? Do I desire that my motives, my heart, my life, everything in me, should be as pure as God wants it to be? If so, it is a strong witness to the fact that I am amongst the initiated; I am in the place where I can understand the mystery of sanctification sufficiently to enter into it.

1. The Awakening of Desires

Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind. (Romans 12:2)

When we are born again of the Spirit of God, the Word of God awakens great desires in us, and in times of prayer the Spirit of God renews our minds; in times of meeting with God's people the gracious sense of God's quickening comes until we know that the great desire of our hearts before God is to be as holy as God desires us to be. We do want to be baptised with the Holy Ghost so that we bear a strong family likeness to Jesus Christ. These deep desires are strong in the heart of every one who is born from above (RV mg). Paul says he speaks the mystery of God to all such, because they have the Spirit of God to enable them to understand it. We must watch and note whether these are our desires.

The candidates for sanctification are those who have the first-fruits of sanctification in the initial work of grace, those who are rightly adjusted to God through the Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ, and who hunger and thirst after holiness, and desire to do all God's will.

Do we long for holiness? Are the deepest desires of our hearts Godward? Do we know, first of all, that we are reconciled to God? Do we know that our sins are forgiven, that God has put the life of His Spirit into us, and are we learning how to walk in the light, and are we gaining victories by the power of the Spirit? Do we realise that as we rely on God we have strength to perform our duties in accordance with God's will?

All this is grand, ordinary, Christian experience in its elementary stages. Everyone who is born again of the Spirit of God experiences these things; they are the initiated, the ones who can understand the mystery of sanctification and, God grant, may enter into the experience of it.

There is a type of Christian who says—"Yes, I have the desire for holiness, I am reading God's word, I am trying to be holy and to draw on the resurrection life of Jesus." Never will the mystery of sanctification dawn in that way; it is not God's way. Sin is a step aside; being born of the Spirit of God is a step inside, and sanctification is being built into all the perfect character of Jesus Christ by a gift.

Another type of Christian says—"Well, I have tried and striven and prayed, but I find it so hard to cut off my right arm, to poke out my right eye, that I have come to the conclusion that I am unworthy of this great blessing from God; I am not one of these special people who can be holy." I believe there are numbers of Christians who have laid themselves on one side, as it were, and come to the conclusion that sanctification is not meant for them; the reason being that they have tried to work sanctification out in their own way instead of in God's way, and have failed.

There are others who by strange penances, fastings and prayers, and afflictions to their bodies are trying to work out sanctification. They, too, have tried to penetrate the mystery in a way other than God's appointed way.

Are you trying to work out sanctification in any of these ways? You know that salvation is a sovereign work of grace, but, you say, sanctification is worked out by degree. God grant that the Spirit of God may put His quiet check on you, and enable you to understand the first great lesson in the mystery of sanctification which is "Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us . . . sanctification."

2. Impartation, Not Imitation

Sanctification does not put us into the place that Adam was in and require us to fulfil the will of God as He makes it known to us; sanctification is something infinitely more than that. In Jesus Christ is perfect holiness, perfect patience, perfect love, perfect power over all the power of the enemy, perfect power over everything that is not of God, and sanctification means that all that is ours in Him. The writer to the Hebrews does not tell us to imitate Jesus when we are tempted; he says—"Come to Jesus, and He will succour you in the nick of time." That is, all His perfect overcoming of temptation is ours in Him.

We have heard it put in this way so often—When faced with difficulties, we do not try to brace ourselves up by prayer to meet them, but by the power of the grace of God we let the perfections of Jesus Christ be manifested in us. Jesus Christ does not give us power to work up a patience like His own. His patience is manifested if we will let His life dwell in us. So many have the idea that in sanctification we draw from Jesus the power to be holy. We draw from Jesus the holiness that was manifested in Him, and He manifests it in us. This is the mystery of sanctification.

Sanctification does not mean that the Lord gives us the ability to produce by a slow, steady process a holiness like His; it is His holiness in us. By sanctification we understand experimentally what Paul says in 1 Corinthians 1:30: "Of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us . . . sanctification." Whenever Paul speaks of sanctification, he speaks of it as an impartation, never as an imitation. Imitation comes in on a different line. Paul does not say, nor does the Spirit of God say anywhere, that after we are born again of the Spirit of God, Jesus Christ is put before us as an Example and we make ourselves holy by drawing from Him. Never! Sanctification is Christ formed in us; not the Christ-life, but Christ Himself. In Jesus Christ is the perfection of everything, and the mystery of sanctification is that we may have in Jesus Christ, not the start of holiness, but the holiness of Jesus Christ. All the perfections of Jesus Christ are at our disposal if we have been initiated into the mystery of sanctification. No wonder men cannot explain this mystery for the joy and the rapture and the marvel of it all, and no wonder men see it when it is there, for it works out everywhere.

3. The Mystery of Fellowship

We will come unto him, and make our abode with him. (John 14:23)

The "nuggets of gold" spoken by our Lord in the Gospels are beaten out by the apostles in the Epistles. Jesus states that the relationship between the Father and the Son is to be the relationship between the Father and the Son and the sanctified soul. Talk about "nothing between"! There is no possible room for anything between, unless the soul steps aside. As long as the soul realises in the simplicity of faith that all that Jesus was and is, is his, then the very life, the very faith, the very holiness of Jesus is imparted to him.

Think what the fellowship of our Lord Jesus Christ with His Father was when He was here—"I knew that Thou hearest Me always." "I do always those things that please Him." This is not an example for us: it is infinitely more. It means that this fellowship is exactly what is made ours in sanctification. Jesus said "At that day . . . I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you: for the Father Himself loveth you." In what day? The day when we are brought into that union of fellowship with the Father and all the perfections of Jesus are made ours so that we can say with Paul—"I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

Those of you who are hungering and thirsting after holiness, think what it would mean to you to go out to-night knowing that you may step boldly into the heritage that is yours if you are born of the Spirit, and realise that the perfections of Jesus are yours by His sovereign gift in such a way that you can prove it experimentally!

4. The Mystical Union

I am the vine, ye are the branches. (John 15:5)

He that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit. (1 Corinthians 6:17)

The New Testament exhausts itself in trying to expound the closeness of this union. The Spirit of God conveys to the initiated, to those who are born again, what a marvellous thing sanctification is. The perfections of Jesus—ours by the sheer gift of God: God does not give us power to imitate Him: He gives us His very Self.

This is what sanctification means for you and me. Do you say it is too much? Do you know what it comes down to? It comes down to faith: our word is confidence. If we are born again of God by the Spirit, we have not the slightest doubt in our minds of Jesus Christ; we have absolute confidence in Him. But draw nearer still—Have we confidence to let the Spirit of God explain to us what sanctification means, and lead us into the experience? If so, instead of its being painful to follow the ways of wisdom, we will find that "her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."

5. The Mystery of the Incarnation

Therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God. (Luke 1:35)

There are three big mysteries: The Mystery of the Triune God—Father, Son and Holy Ghost; the Mystery of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is both human and Divine, and the Mystery we are dealing with—the mystery that I, a sinner, can be made into the image of Jesus Christ by the great work of His Atonement in my life.

Have you ever noticed how our Lord's death is explained and applied by the Spirit of God in the Apostle Paul's teaching? For instance, "Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life" (Romans 6:4) means that all that our Lord's death is stated to mean in the New Testament can be made real in our experience. We can go through identification with the death of Jesus until we are alive only to the things which He was alive to. Jesus Christ does not give us power to put the "old man" to death in ourselves: "our old man was crucified with Him" (Romans 6:6 RV); we can be identified with His death and know that this is true. We are not merely put into a state of innocence before God; by identification with Our Lord's death we are delivered from sin in every bit of its power and every bit of its presence.

God never removes from us the power of stepping aside; we can step aside any moment we like. Read the First Epistle of John—If any man step aside—John's thought is surely that it is a rare thing for a man to step aside. Our attitude seems to be that it is a rare thing to keep in the light!

"And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places"—like Christ Jesus? No, "in Christ Jesus." The very Spirit that ruled Jesus in His life now rules us. How has it come about? Read Romans 8:10. "And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness." John the Baptist said of Jesus—"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." The Spirit of God Who wrought out that marvellous Life in the Incarnation will baptise us into the very same life, not into a life like it, but into His life until the very holiness of Jesus is gifted to us. It is not something we work out in Him, it is in Him, and He manifests it through us while we abide in Him. This explains why in the initial stages of sanctification we sometimes see marvellous exhibitions of Christ-like life and patience. All that was wrought out in the life of Jesus was wrought out by the Holy Ghost Whom our Lord has shed forth by His ascended right, and by the baptism of the Holy Ghost the perfections of Jesus are made ours. We are not put into the place where we can imitate Jesus; the baptism of the Holy Ghost puts us into the very life of Jesus:

Are you hungering after sanctification? Have you such confidence in Jesus that you can pray this prayer, the prayer of a child—"Father, in the Name of Jesus, baptise me with the Holy Ghost and fire until sanctification is made real in my life"?

THE GOSPEL OF THE GRACE OF GOD

Unto Me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. Ephesians 3:8

To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory. Colossians 1:27

The mystery of sanctification is that the perfections of Jesus Christ are imparted to us, not gradually, but instantly, when by faith we enter into the realisation that Christ is made unto us sanctification. Sanctification does not mean anything less than the holiness of Jesus Christ being made ours manifestly, and faith is the instrument given us to use in order to work out this unspeakable mystery in our lives. There are two "means"; the Gospel of the Grace of God, and faith, which enables the life and liberty and power and marvel of the holiness of Jesus Christ to be wrought out in us.

1. The Instrument of Faith

Do we know anything about this mystical union whereby the unsearchable riches of Jesus Christ are made ours? If we have been born from above (RV mg) of the Spirit of God, the deep craving of our hearts is to be as holy as Jesus Christ, and just as we took the first step in salvation by faith, so we take the next step by faith. We are invited, we are commanded and pleaded with, to believe the gospel of the grace of God, which is, "Christ in you, the hope of glory."

The one marvellous secret of a holy life is not in imitating Jesus, but in letting the perfections of Jesus manifest themselves in our mortal flesh. Do we believe that? Do we believe it with the same simple trust and confidence we had when we first trusted Jesus to save us?

The way to believe it is to listen first. "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Have we listened? Have we ever listened with the ears of our spirit to this wonderful statement—"Christ in you"? Do we hear that? If we are born of the Spirit of God, we do hear it, we hear it more eagerly, more passionately, more longingly than anything else that can be told. We are invited and commanded by God to believe that we can be made one with Jesus as He is one with God, so that His patience, His holiness, His purity, His gentleness, His prayerfulness are made ours. The way the gift of faith works in us and makes this real is by hearing. We first hear, and then we begin to trust. It is so simple that most of us miss the way. The way to have faith in the gospel of God's grace, in its deepest profundity as well as in its first working, is by listening to it. How many of us have brought the ears of our spirit straight down to the gospel of God's grace?

Our idea of faith has a good deal to do with the harmful way faith is often spoken of. Faith is looked upon as an attitude of mind whereby we assent to a testimony on the authority of the one who testifies. We say that because Jesus says these things, we believe in Him. The faith of the New Testament is infinitely more than that; it is the means by which sanctification is manifested, the means of introducing the life of God into us, not the effect of our understanding only. In Romans 3:24–25, Paul speaks about faith in the blood of Jesus, and faith is the instrument the Spirit of God uses. Faith is more than an attitude of the mind; faith is the complete, passionate, earnest trust of our whole nature in the Gospel of God's grace as it is presented in the Life and Death and Resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Implicit Trust in Jesus

Some of us have never allowed God to make us understand how hopeless we are without Jesus Christ. It was my experience of the tempter, and my knowledge of my own heart under his assaults, that made me a preacher of Paul's gospel. It was my own exceeding sinfulness of heart that ever more and more taught and compelled me to preach Jesus Christ alone, His blood and His righteousness. Everyone who is born again of the Spirit of God knows that there is no good thing outside the Lord Jesus Christ. It is no use looking for sanctification through prayer or obedience; sanctification must be the direct gift of God by means of this instrument of faith, not a half-hearted faith, but the most earnest, intense, and personal faith.

Sanctification is "Christ in you." Is anything we hear in testimonies to sanctification untrue of Jesus Christ? It is His wonderful life that is imparted to us in sanctification, and it is imparted by faith. It will never be imparted as long as we cling to the idea that we can get it by obedience, by doing this and that. We have to come back to one thing, faith alone, and after having been put right with God by sanctification, it is still a life of faith all through. Those who are in the experience of sanctification know that it means that the holiness of Jesus is imparted as a sovereign gift of God's grace. We cannot earn it, we cannot pray it down, but, thank God, we can take it by faith, "through faith in His blood."

When we have become rightly related to God, it is the trial of our faith that is precious (see 1 Peter 1:7). Satan tries to come in and make the saint disbelieve that sanctification is only by faith in God; he comes in with his "cinematograph show" and says, "You must have this and you must do that." The Spirit of God keeps us steadily to one line—faith in Jesus, and the trial of our faith, until the perfections of Jesus Christ are lived over again in our lives.

3. Identification with Jesus

God says that He will give us the desires of our heart. What are our desires? What do we desire more than anything else on earth? If we are born again of the Spirit of God, our one desire is a hunger and thirst after nothing less than holiness, the holiness of Jesus, and He will satisfy it.

"Whoso eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood, hath eternal life." Just as we take food into our bodies and assimilate it, so, Jesus says, we must take Him into our souls. Faith is not seeing food and drink on the table; faith is taking it. So many say, "Oh, yes, I have faith that the Lord Jesus will save me." If we have faith that the Lord Jesus will save us, we are saved, and we know it. When by the Spirit of God Jesus is made real to us, His presence makes everything as natural as breathing. His presence is the reality.

What do we do to earn a gift? Nothing; we take it. If we have the slightest remnant of thinking we can earn it, we will never take it; if we are quite certain we do not deserve it, we will take it. We come with the sense of abject unworthiness, knowing that "in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing"; if ever I am to be holy, I must be made holy by God's sovereign grace.

That is the Gospel. We receive it by faith; and the Spirit of God is the One Who makes the simple act of faith the supernatural work of God. To those outside Christian experience it sounds foolish; to those inside it is wonderfully real. Immediately we stretch out the instrument of faith with implicit trust, the Spirit of God imparts to us the holiness of Jesus Christ and all that that means; and it is on this line alone we live. Obedience is the means whereby we show the earnestness of our desire to do God's will. We receive this perfect adjustment to God as a gift, and then begin to manifest the life of Jesus Christ in our mortal flesh.

Those of you who have never had this experience of sanctification, think! The perfections of Jesus Christ made yours entirely! The Lord showing His love, His purity, His holiness through you! "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." It is not power to live like Jesus; it is Christ living in us, and it is His life that is seen, but it is only seen as by faith we walk in the light.

What does Paul say? "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you," and again, "We are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works." How many of us can look up into God's face by simple faith, trusting entirely in the great gospel of His grace, and say— "Lord, make the sanctification in me as real as the sanctification revealed in Thy Word"? Are we willing for Him to do it? Then we must turn from every other thing and trust in Him. Jesus Christ re-creates us by His marvellous life until we are a new creation (RV mg) in Him, and "all things are of God." The life is lived naturally as we lived the old life. Consciously? No, infinitely deeper; it is lived moment by moment by the faith of the Sons of God; only in rare moments are we conscious of it. When we come up against a crisis, for a moment we hesitate and wonder how we are going to meet the difficulty then we find that it is the perfections of Jesus Christ imparted into us that meet it, and slowly and surely we begin to live a life of ineffable order and sanity and holiness, kept by the power of God. No wonder the Apostle Paul says, "When He shall come to be glorified in His saints, and to be admired in all them that believe"!

Have you any doubt about the gospel of the grace of God? None whatever, you say. Then launch out in simple faith and say, "My God, make the sanctification of the New Testament mine; make the unsearchable riches of Jesus Christ mine till my Lord and I are one"—so much one that it never consciously occurs to you to be anything else, and in all the circumstances of life you will find that you have the perfections of Jesus Christ—at the back of you? No, dwelling in you! No wonder the Apostle John is so eager that we should walk in the light!

UNREALISED TRUTHS OF SANCTIFICATION

Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation. 2 Corinthians 5:17–18

I want to deal with some of the unrealised truths of sanctification, the things we do not readily notice, from the standpoint of the new creation (RV mg) in Christ Jesus.

As we have seen, the idea of sanctification is not that God gives us a new spirit of life, and then puts Jesus Christ in front of us as a copy and says, "Do your best and I will help you"; but that God imparts to us the perfections of Jesus Christ. By the perfections of Jesus we do not mean His attributes as Son of God. What is imparted to us is the holiness of Jesus, not a principle of life that enables us to imitate Him, but the holiness of Jesus as it met life in Him.

1. Creation through Christ

For by Him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by Him, and for Him. (Colossians 1:16)

And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write; These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God. (Revelation 3:14)

These verses are chosen out of a number in the Bible which reveal that God Almighty created the world and everything that was created, through the Eternal Son. Some people tell us that Revelation 3:14 means that the Son was the first Creation of God Almighty. The Bible does not say so. The Bible says, "He is before all things, and by Him all things consist." Jesus Christ was introduced into the world in this way: the Spirit of God took hold of a part of that creation, of which the Son of God was Himself the Creator, in the Virgin Mary and formed in her the Son of God—"therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:35). That is the last reach of the creation of God. The Son of God was the One Whom we know as Jesus Christ, and in the life of Jesus we have the pattern life of all God desires man to be, and also the pattern life of sanctification.

2. Creation in Christ

All things were made by Him; and without Him was not anything made. That which hath been made was life in Him; and the life was the light of men. (John 1:3-4 RV mg)

By creation we are the children of God; we are not the sons and daughters of God by creation; Jesus Christ makes us sons and daughters of God by regeneration (John 1:12). The idea of the Fatherhood of Jesus is revealed in the Bible, though rarely mentioned. "Everlasting Father" refers to the Being we know as the Son of God. Paul in talking to the Athenians said, "We are the offspring of God." But the creator-power in Jesus Christ is vested in a more marvellous way even than when God created the world through Him for He has that in Himself whereby He can create His own image. God created the world and everything that was made through the Son, and "that which hath been made was life in Him" (RV mg); therefore just as God created the world through Him, the Son is able to create His own image in anyone and everyone. Have we ever thought of Jesus as the marvellous Being Who can create in us His own image? "Wherefore if any man is in Christ, there is a new creation [mg]"! (2 Corinthians 5:17 RV). We do not sufficiently realise the wonder of it. Those of us who are in the experience of God's mighty salvation do not give ourselves half enough prayerful time, and wondering time, and studying time to allow the Spirit of God to bring this marvellous truth home to us.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on Me hath everlasting life." The very life that was in Jesus is the life of the soul who believes in Him, because it is created in him by Jesus. This life is only in Jesus Christ, it is not in anyone else, and we cannot get it by obeying or by praying, by vowing or by sacrificing.

"Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." We must have the image of God in our spirits, and Jesus will create His image in us by His sovereign right. The fullest and most gracious meaning of regeneration and sanctification is that in Christ Jesus we can be made a new creation (RV mg). Sanctification is not being given a new start, not that God wipes out the past and says it is forgiven, but something inconceivably grander, viz., that Jesus Christ has the power to create in us the image of God as it was in Himself. Paul says, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again"-every strand of my spirit and soul and body aches-"until Christ be formed in you." "I fear," he says, "lest by any means ... your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy." We have already dealt with this along the line of faith; we have to receive Jesus Christ in implicit confidence and let Him do His work in us.

Creation in Christ means that Jesus Christ is able to create us into His own image, not merely re-create us, because what we get in Jesus Christ is something that Adam never had. Adam was created a "son of God," an innocent being with all the possibilities of development before him; God intended him to take part in that development by a series of moral choices whereby the natural life was to be sacrificed to the will of God and turned into a spiritual life. Adam failed to do this. Jesus Christ creates in us not what was in Adam, He creates in us what He was and is. "Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us... sanctification." This is the meaning of the grand old evangelical hymn—

My hope is built on nothing less Than Jesus' blood and righteousness.

Edward Mote

3. Creation like Christ

As He is, so are we in this world. (1 John 4:17)

Those of us who are God's children ought to stand in determined reverence before this verse. It can mean only one thing, and that is that the image and character and holiness of Jesus Christ is ours by the sovereign right of His creation. Sanctification means that we are taken into a mystical union which language cannot define (cf. 1 John 3:2). It is Jesus Christ's holiness that is granted to us, not something pumped up by prayer and obedience and discipline, but something created in us by Jesus Christ. No wonder the New Testament puts Jesus Christ upon the throne! No wonder Jesus said that the Holy Ghost would glorify Him! And no wonder this talk is called "unrealised truths of sanctification"!

We are potentially sons and daughters of God through God's claim upon us in Christ, but we are only sons and daughters of God in reality through our will. Do we will, not to imitate Jesus, but to hand ourselves over to God until His claim is realised in us? Paul says, "We pray you," we passionately entreat you, "as though God did beseech you by us, . . . be ye reconciled to God." It is one thing to realise in speechless wonder, when the heart is attuned to an impulse of worship, what the claim of God is, and another thing to tell God that we want Him to realise His claim in us. "My God, I am Thine by creation, I am Jesus Christ's through His Atonement, and I choose that Thy claim shall be realised in me."

"Wherefore if any man is in Christ . . ." (RV). "Any man" means ourselves—men of no account. Our Lord never taught individualism; He taught the value of the individual, a very different thing. Does Paul mean that I, an ordinary man with no particular education, with ordinary common-place work, surrounded by commonplace people, can be made a new creation (RV mg) in Christ Jesus? He does, because he says "any man," and you must come in there. Will you choose to be one of the ordinary common rut, the "any man," and let God get hold of you? You are part of the creation of God, then let Jesus Christ make His creation good in you.

Jesus Christ does not make us original characters, He makes our characters replicas of His own; consequently, argues the Spirit of God, when men see us, they will not say, "What wonderful, original, extraordinary characters." No, none of that rubbish! They will say, "How marvellous God must be to take poor pieces of human stuff like those men, and turn them into the image of Jesus Christ!" "... which things the angels desire to look into." We are too free from wonder nowadays, too easy with the Word of God; we do not use it with the breathless amazement Paul does. Think what sanctification means—Christ in me; made like Christ; as He is, so are we.

4. The Transient Life

Old things are passed away.

By "old things" Paul does not mean sin and the "old man" only, he means everything that was our life as natural men before we were re-created in spirit by Christ. That means a great deal more than some of us mean. The "old things" means not only things that are wrong, any fool will give up wrong things if he can, but things that are right. Watch the life of Jesus and you will get Paul's meaning. Our Lord lived a natural life as we do, it was not a sin for Him to eat, but it would have been a sin for Him to eat during those forty days in the wilderness, because during that time His Father's will for Him was otherwise, and He sacrificed His natural life to the will of God. That is the way the "old things" pass away.

In his Second Epistle to the Corinthians Paul uses as an illustration of this the glory which came from Moses. It was a real glory, but it was a glory that was "to be done away" (3:7); and the writer to the Hebrews writes of a covenant which was doomed "to vanish away" (8:13). The natural life of man is a real creation of God, but it is meant to pass away into a spiritual life in Jesus Christ's way. Watch Paul's argument in the Epistle to the Romans—"But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit . . ." (8:9). Paul was talking to flesh and blood men and women, not to disembodied spirits, and he means that the old order is passed. "You used to look at things differently from Jesus Christ," he says, "but now that you have turned to the Lord" (God grant you may if you have not) "the veil is taken away, and "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."

5. The Transfigured Life

Behold, all things are become new.

Have those of us who are in the experience of sanctification learned the practical insistent habit of realising that the "old things are passed away," and that "all things are become new"? In their testimony people put it in this way—"God alters the thing that matters; it used to matter to me what certain people thought, now it does not matter at all." "Old things" are passed away, not only sin and the old disposition, but the whole old order of things, and "behold, all things are become new."

Paul is trying to get us to an amazed state of mind—"Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature"! Some of us talk about sanctification as if we were talking of a new book, or an article in the newspaper. With Paul the wonder never ceased; however often he talked about it, each time he was more full of wonder than the last.

The great mighty work of God's grace in sanctification is a Divine work. Do we choose to walk in God's way and let Him make it real in us? Then let the things that are passed be passed, and when the circumstances come again that tempt us to self-pity, remember that the old things are passed away. Do we choose never to let things affect us that never affected Jesus Christ? Immediately we do, we will find it is possible because the perfections of Jesus Christ are made ours by the sovereign right of His creation. No wonder Paul talks of "the unsearchable riches of Christ"! No wonder the marvel of the revelation breaks through his language and escapes until those who are not sanctified think him mad; and John is called an old man in "the sere and yellow leaf" who talked vaguely about the possibility of living without sin! Those who talk in this way have never entered into the wonderful experience of sanctification, but, thank God, it is for "any man."

6. The Truest Life of All

All things are of God.

"Be ye therefore followers"—of good principles? Of holiness? Of the life Jesus lived on earth? No! "Be ye therefore followers of God." "Be ye therefore perfect, as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." God by sanctification creates us into the image of His Son. Do we choose to walk in the light of that life? Never make excuses, never turn to the right hand nor to the left. Keep the life concentrated on this marvellous gift of God, "Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us ... sanctification."

IN HEAVENLY PLACES

And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places, in Christ Jesus. Ephesians 2:6

Sanctification is the impartation to us of the holy qualities of Jesus Christ. It is His patience, His love, His holiness, His faith, His purity, His godliness that are manifested in and through every sanctified soul. The presentation that God by sanctification plants within us His Spirit, and then setting Jesus Christ before us says—"There is your Example, follow Him and I will help you, but you must do your best to follow Him and do what He did," is an error. It is not true to experience, and, thank God, it is not true to the wonderful Gospel of the grace of God. The mystery of sanctification is "Christ in you, the hope of glory." "That which hath been made was life in Him" (RV mg), that is, Jesus Christ can create in us the image of God even as it was in Himself.

1. The Impartial Power of God

And hath raised us up.

Who are the "us" He has raised up? We have pointed out the "any man" aspect, and it needs pointing out because we often hear a man say—"Well, it cannot mean me, I'm not a true, fine-spirited person; my past life has been very sordid; I have not had the advantages of other people, and it cannot mean me; God cannot mean that by His marvellous grace He can raise me up." Yes, He can, and it is just such a man He does mean. God stoops down to the very lowest, to the very weakest, to the sons of disobedience, the children of wrath, and raises them right up. In this particular instance Paul is driving home the impartiality of God with more than usual insistence; he is talking to Gentiles and he says that God by the Cross of Jesus Christ makes no distinction between Jew and Gentile in the matter of personal salvation. Thank God for the impartiality of His grace!

Any man, every man, we ourselves, may partake of this marvellous raising up whereby God puts us into the wonderful life of His Son, and the very qualities of Jesus Christ are imparted to us. There is plenty of room to grow in the heavenly places; room for the head to grow, for the heart to grow, for the bodily relationships to grow, for the spirit to grow—plenty of room for every phase of us to grow into the realisation of what a marvellous Being our Lord Jesus Christ is.

"And hath quickened us together with Christ." The illustration Paul uses is that as God raised the dead body of Jesus, so He has quickened those who were dead in trespasses and sins and has raised them up with Jesus. It means that there is a participation now in all the wonderful perfections of Jesus Christ, and that ultimately "we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is."

2. The Inviolable Place of God

Heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

That is where God raises us. We do not get there by climbing, by aspiring, by struggling, by consecration, or by vows; God lifts us right straight up out of sin, inability and weakness, lust and disobedience, wrath and self-seeking—lifts us right up out of all this, "up, up to the whiter than snow shine," to the heavenly places where Jesus Christ lived when He was on earth, and where He lives to this hour in the fullness of the plenitude of His power. May God never relieve us from the wonder of it. We are lifted up into that inviolable place that cannot be defiled, and Paul states that God can raise us up there now, and that the wonder of sitting in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus is to be manifested in our lives while we are here on earth.

"And made us sit together." Sit? But I have to earn my living! Sit? But I am in the midst of the wild turmoil of city life! Sit? But I have my calling in life and my ambitions to fulfil! Paul says that God has raised us up and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. We must have in our minds that by "heavenly places" is meant all that Jesus Christ was when He was down here, and all that He is revealed to be now by the Word; and God raises us up to sit together with Him there. There is ample time and ample room to grow in the heavenly places.

3. The Symbols in the Heavenly Places

Have you ever noticed the kind of pictures God gives to the saints? They are always pictures of creation, never pictures of men. God speaks of the unfailing stars and the upholding of the "worm Jacob." He talks about the marvels of creation, and makes His people forget the rush of business ideas that stamp the kingdoms of this world. The Spirit of God says-"Do not take your pattern and print from those; the God Who holds you is the God Who made the world—take your pattern from Him." The marvellous characteristic of the Spirit of God in you and me when we are raised up to the heavenly places in Christ Jesus is that we look to the Creator, and see that the marvellous Being Who made the world and upholds all things by the word of His Power is the One Who keeps us in every particular.

Our Lord always took His illustrations from His Father's handiwork. In illustrating the spiritual life, our tendency is to catch the tricks of the world, to watch the energy of the business man, and to apply these methods to God's work. Jesus Christ tells us to take the lessons of our lives from the things men never look at—"Consider the lilies"; "Behold the fowls of the air." How often do we look at clouds, or grass, at sparrows, or flowers? Why, we have no time to look at them, we are in the rush of things—it is absurd to sit dreaming about sparrows and trees and clouds! Thank God, when He raises us to the heavenly places, He manifests in us the very mind that was in Christ Jesus, unhasting and unresting, calm, steady and strong.

4. The Safety of the Heavenlies

My peace I give unto you. (John 14:27)

Your life is hid with Christ in God. (Colossians 3:3)

We are familiar with these verses, but has God ever struck the marvel out of them until we are lost in wonder, love, and praise as they are applied to us as sanctified souls? "My peace I give unto you." We talk about the peace of Jesus, but have we ever realised what that peace was like? Read the story of His life, the thirty years of quiet submission at Nazareth, the three years of service, the slander and spite, backbiting and hatred He endured, all unfathomably worse than anything we shall ever have to go through; and His peace was undisturbed, it could not be violated. It is that peace that God will exhibit in us in the heavenly places; not a peace like it, but that peace. In all the rush of life, in working for our living, in all conditions of bodily life, wherever God engineers our circumstances—"My peace"; the imperturbable, inviolable peace of Jesus imparted to us in every detail of our lives. "Your life is hid with Christ in God." Have we allowed the wonder of it to enwrap us round and soak us through until we begin to realise the ample room there is to grow there? "The secret place of the Most High," absolutely secure and safe.

As we go on in life and grow in grace, we realise more and more wonderingly what the peace of Jesus means. Watch the saint who is sanctified, "in tumults," Paul says—tribulation, turmoil, trouble, afflictions all around everywhere, yet the peace of Jesus is gifted and manifests itself, and the life grows as the lily spiritually. Tolstoi made the blunder of applying the teaching of Jesus to men who were not born again of the Holy Ghost, and with what result? They found it impossible to carry it out. But when we are born again from above (RV mg), quickened and raised up by God, we find it is possible to consider the lilies because we have not only the peace of God, but the very peace that characterised Jesus Christ; we are seated in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, absolutely safe, the mind imperturbably ensphered in Christ. "For ye are dead," says Paul; that is, the old way of looking at things, the old way of doing things, the old fuss and fume are dead, and we are a new creation (RV mg) in Christ Jesus, and in that new creation is manifested the very peace that was manifested in Jesus Christ.

5. The Strength in the Heavenlies

All spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ. (Ephesians 1:3)

The unsearchable riches of Christ. (Ephesians 3:8)

God is able to make all grace abound toward you. (2 Corinthians 9:8)

These verses mean that just as the overflowing, omnipotent power of God was exhibited in and through our Lord, so it will be exhibited in and through us when we are raised up into the heavenly places. Get into the habit of saying—"Lord Jesus, prove Thyself sufficient in me for this thing now." Do not say-"Oh Lord, show me what to do"; let Him do it and it will be done. It is His perfections, not ours; His patience, His love, His holiness, His strength—"all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus." How blind we are! There is a danger with the children of God of getting too familiar with sublime things. We talk so much about these wonderful realities, and forget that we have to exhibit them in our lives. It is perilously possible to mistake the exposition of the truth for the truth; to run away with the idea that because we are able to expound these things we are living them too. Paul's warning comes home to us—"... lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."

6. The Sight in the Heavenlies

Blessed are the pure in heart. (Matthew 5:8)

What do we mean by "pure in heart"? We mean nothing less and nothing else than what the Son of God was and is. When God raises us up into the heavenly places He imparts to us the very purity that is Jesus Christ's. That is what the sanctified life means—the undisturbable range of His peace, the unshakeable, indefatigable power of His strength, and the unfathomable, crystalline purity of His holiness. There is plenty of room in the heavenly places to grow into the realisation of the unfathomable depths of the purity of Christ's heart.

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." When the Son of God "walked this earth with naked feet, and wove with human hands the creed of creeds," He understood the revealed counsels of His Father to Him because His heart was pure, and to the sanctified soul God says—"Friend, come up higher." Jesus warns the disciple never to be afraid of the contempt of the world when he possesses spiritual discernment. Those who are in the heavenly places see God's counsels in what to the wisdom of the world is arrogant stupidity. We can never stand for one second in the heavenly places in a secular mood. Jesus never had secular moods, His heart was never defiled by secular thinking or by secular ways. What do we mean by secular ways? Secularity has to do with what we desire within, not with what happens to our bodies. What do we desire most? What the heart of Jesus wanted most was God's glory, and sanctification means that that same desire is imparted to us. The wonder of a pure heart is that it is as pure as Jesus Christ's heart. Sanctification does not mean that a purity like Jesus Christ's is gifted to us, but that His purity is gifted to us. Our Lord was wonderfully sensitive to the things of God, and He says—"all things that I have heard of My Father I have made known unto you." His Father distinctly revealed things to Him.

The sanctified soul realises with growing amazement what we are trying feebly to put into words, that all these things are ours if we are willing for God to realise His claim in us. "All things are yours . . . and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's."

To be "in Christ Jesus" means that we are initiated into the position of sons. Do you know how God speaks to His sons? He softly breathes His stern messages in the heavenly places, with what result? There is never any panic in His sons. The Son of God had pre-intimations of what was to happen, and as we walk with the mind stayed where God places it by sanctification, in that way steadfastly keeping our garments white, we will find that nothing strikes us with surprise or with panic. God never allows it to; He keeps us in perfect peace while He whispers His secrets and reveals His counsels. We are struck with panic whenever we turn out of the way; when we forget to "grow up into Him in all things"; when we forget to keep the childlike weakness which never dreams it can look at things in the way Jesus does apart from His Spirit.

"Bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." Our Lord never pried into His Father's secrets, neither will the saint. Some have made the blunder of trying to wrest God's secrets from Him. That was never Jesus Christ's way, nor is it communicated by the Spirit of God. God always gifted His intimations to His Son. How many of us have allowed God to reveal His counsels to us in this way, and how many of us are being humiliated by realising that we have been trying to probe into God's secrets some other way? When we are raised up into the heavenly places, it is a life of joy unspeakable and full of glory.

One word of warning—we must guard the life where the Spirit of God warns we should guard it, and the first thing to be guarded against is inordinate curiosity. Remember what Jesus said of Himself, and of the Holy Spirit: "I do nothing of Myself; but as My Father hath taught Me, I speak these things." "The Spirit of truth . . . shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak." When our minds are stayed upon God and we are growing in the realisation of the purity of Christ's heart and His wonderful strength and power, we will find that that same characteristic is being worked out in us, there is no mental or intellectual insubordination, but a complete subordination to Jesus Christ, even as He was subordinated to His Father. The same thing is true of our wills; just as Jesus brought His will into subjection to His Father and said—"I seek not Mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent Me," when we are raised up to the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, we will manifest the same.

Whenever a decline comes, whenever there is a tendency to turn aside, we will find God is a consuming fire: He will hold and hurt cruelly, and we may cry out to Him to let us go, but He will not let us go. God loves us too much to let us go, and He will burn and burn until there is nothing left but the purity that is as pure as He is—unless we determine to side with the impure and become as reprobate silver. Men are apt to cry to God to stop—"If only God would leave me alone!" God never will. His passionate, inexorable love never allows Him to leave men alone, and with His children He will shake everything that can be shaken till there is nothing that can be shaken any more; then will abide the consuming fire of God until the life is changed into the same image from glory to glory, and men see that strong family likeness to Jesus that can never be mistaken.

THE INHERITANCE OF THE SAINTS

Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. Colossians 1:12

Sanctification means the impartation to us and through us of the Lord Jesus Christ, His patience, His purity, His holiness. It is not that Jesus Christ enables us to imitate Him; not that the power of God is in us and we try our best and fail, and try again; but that the very virtues of Jesus Christ are manifested in our mortal flesh.

1. The Possession of Light

The inheritance of the saints in light.

How often God's book refers to God as light, to Jesus Christ as light, to the Spirit of God as light, and to the saints as light. By sanctification God places us in the light that He is in, the light in which our Lord Jesus lived His life. "And the life was the light of men." Our inheritance in light means that we manifest in our mortal flesh the life of the Lord Jesus Christ. The "light" means the very things He exhibited, a life full of approach to God, full of understanding of God and of man.

"He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life" (John 8:12). Supposing you are walking over a moor at night, you know there is a path but it is too dark and obscure for you to see; then the moon struggles through the clouds and you see the path, a clear strip of white, straight across the hill; in a little while all is obscure again, but you have seen the path and you know the way to go. There are times in our experience when life is just like that. We do not see the path though we know it is there, then the light shines and we see it, and when darkness comes again we can step boldly. Sometimes the light is as the moonlight or the dawn, or it comes as a terrifying flash of lightning, when all of a sudden we see the way we should go. "While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light" (John 12:36). Have we believed in the light we have had? Can we recall the time when the light of God in the Face of Jesus Christ was clearer to us than anything else has ever been, when we saw perfectly clearly and understood exactly what the Lord wanted? Did we believe in that light; and have we walked up to the light? Can we say to-night, "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision"? So many of us see the light, we see the way across the moor; by a sudden lightning flash of God's revealing grace we see the way to go, but we do not take it. We say, "Oh, yes, I did receive the Spirit of God, and I thought that it would be like this and that, but it has not been." The reason is that we did not believe in the light when it was given. You say, "I am a Christian, I have been born of the Spirit of God; I understand that sanctification is the qualities of the Lord Jesus being exhibited in me; only two weeks ago I had a wonderful time of communion with the Lord in the heavenly places; I saw the way so clearly, and I knew exactly what I should do in the circumstances I was in; but I failed to do it." "While ye have light, believe in the light," and slowly and surely we shall find what our Lord said is true—"he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

If we have entered into the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, the light has shone, and, this is the marvellous thing, as we begin to do what we know the Lord would have us do, we find He does not enable us to do it, He simply puts through us all His power and the thing is done in His way. Thank God for everyone who has seen the light, who has understood how the Lord Jesus Christ clears away the darkness and brings the light by showing His own characteristics through us.

Did I believe the light when I had it? Is there someone who had the light a year ago, last week, you saw clearly what God wanted; did you obey the light? You answer, "No, I did not." Well, tell Him so, and thank God there is another opportunity; and those who have obeyed the light and have been going on, ask God to confirm you in the way that you may be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light.

One remarkable thing about our Lord's life is that He always understood that His Father was right. I wonder if we always do? There is much that is obscure, much we cannot understand, but are we certain that our Father understands? Have we let Jesus Christ so manifest Himself in us that we know that the Father always does things well? When we come across a dark trial, such as war, or a trial more personal and peculiarly our own, something that is a distress and a pain and a wildness, with no light or liberty, the danger is that we begin to say, "Why should this happen to me? Why should I be plunged into this darkness?" But if we remember our possession of light, the Son of God in all His understanding of the Father takes possession of us absolutely, and we see in our hearts just as Jesus Christ saw. That is the marvel of sanctification. At the threshold of every new experience, of every new phase of the truth of God, there is a margin of darkness where we have this glorious test-will I let the Son of God manifest Himself in my mortal flesh in this thing, and will I possess the light that God has given me? If so, we shall see just as Jesus Christ saw.

2. Partakers of Light

There is a difference between this inheritance and an earthly inheritance. When we partake in an earthly inheritance it becomes a particular possession of our own that no one else can have, and not only so but by taking it we may impoverish someone else. The marvellous thing about the inheritance of the saints in light is that when we take our part of the inheritance, everyone else is blessed in the taking; but if we refuse to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light, we rob others of its glory and its wonder.

There is another thing about the possession of light in Jesus Christ: my possession of light is quite different from yours. Each of us has a particular possession of light that no one else can have, and if we refuse to take our possession, everyone else will suffer. In every saint's life there is a particular personal edition of the possession of light, and until that is partaken of with full-hearted confidence, all the others suffer. The difficulty is that the round person wants to be in the square hole; this shows how we become deflected from the light that is in Christ. There is a possession of light that the Spirit distributes to each one according to the perfect wisdom of God. It is Satan, not God, who makes a man say everyone must be just as he is. As we participate in the light and the Son of God is manifested in us in our particular setting, there will be marvellous blessing to all the people round about. The test for apostles and teachers is not that they talk wonderful stuff, not that they are able to expound God's word, but that they edify the saints (Ephesians 4:12). No individual can develop a holy life with God without benefiting all other saints. I wonder if we have been obedient to the heavenly vision, or have we been hankering after being like someone else?

One of the greatest dangers of Satan when he comes as an angel of light is that he tries to persuade the saint of God that he must let go the possession of what God wants him to have and take a possession belonging to someone else. If a man has a special gift for preaching God's truth, Satan will try to persuade him that preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ is not what God has called him to do, but that he has been called to live a quiet life with God in secret. Always remember that the tiniest deflection of the eye or the heart away from God in light, and from Jesus Christ in light, and from obeying the light when it is given, will mean a deflection for a long while, much sorrow and much distress. Thank God He does not leave His children alone; there is much pain and distress, but He will always bring them back.

I wonder if we have seen Jesus Christ as a possession of light—in our circumstances, in our business, in our home relations, or in whatever it may be? Have we seen clearly what God wants us to do, and have we done it? As surely as we begin to put ourselves into the path of obedience, the perfections of the Son of God are manifested through us with such a great brilliancy of light that we will never think of taking credit to ourselves for it. One step in the right direction in obedience to the light, and the manifestation of the Son of God in your mortal flesh is as certain as that God is on His throne. When once God's light has come to us through Jesus Christ, we must never hang back, but obey; and we shall not walk in darkness, but will have the light of life.

"As He is, so are we." The sanctified life is a life that bears a strong family likeness to Jesus Christ, a life that exhibits His virtues, His patience, His love, His holiness. Slowly and surely we learn the great secret of eternal life, which is to know God.

Every bit of knowledge that we have of God fills us with ineffable joy. Remember what Jesus said to His disciples—"That My joy might be in you" (RV).

What was the joy of Jesus? That He understood the Father. Do we understand God on any one point? If we do, we will know something of the joy that Jesus had. It is a wonderful possession, it is the very characteristic of Jesus. To understand the tiniest bit of truth about God is to love it with all our heart and soul and mind; all that lies dark and obscure just now is one day going to be as clear, as radiantly and joyously clear, as the bit we have seen. No wonder God counsels us to be patient. Little by little everything will be brought into the light until we understand as Jesus Christ understood. The whole of Eternity will be taken up with understanding and knowing God, and, thank God, we may begin to know Him down here. The sanctified life means that we begin to understand God and to manifest the life of the Son of God in our mortal flesh.

Before we get hold of the Spirit of God and the Spirit of God gets hold of us, we are apt to be taken up with the outside of things, we cling to them and mistake them for the essential reality until slowly they begin to dwindle from us and to turn to ashes and disappointment. But when we are made partakers of light we are wedded to God's realities behind the things that are seen, and we remain absolutely true to Him.

3. Light Indwelling

Now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light. (Ephesians 5:8)

What we have in the kingdom of light, we give. That is always the characteristic. If we try to picture to others the glory of communion with God without being in close contact with God ourselves, we will paralyse the imagination of those we talk to. George MacDonald, in his poem "The Disciple," pictures the sense of dreary disappointment that came to a boy when he heard it said that godly people were as pillars in the temple of God—

Straightway my heart is like a clod, My spirit wrapt in doubt:— A pillar in the house of God, And never more go out!

That will always be the result when we try to portray a truth of God without being partakers of the light, without being lifted into the inheritance.

As we partake of this possession of light, it is as if the Son of God lifted the veil from the way God created things. He lifts our eyes up to the stars and says—"Do you see those? Every one of them is known to your Father in heaven," and something we cannot state in words gets hold of our souls and it means this—God is so full of light that He knows us down to the tiniest detail of our lives. Then another time He shows us the makeup of a daisy and He says—"That was God's thought when He created a daisy," and slowly the Spirit of God makes our lives into exactly God's idea of what we ought to be.

By sanctification we are placed in the will of God. We have not to ask what the will of God is, we are the will of God, and as we keep in the light as He is in the light, the decisions of the mind and the natural progress of the life go on like a law, and when the decision is likely to be wrong the Spirit checks. Whenever there is the tiniest inward check, we must stop, and we will find that the Lord Jesus Christ and His perfections will be there to meet every emergency.

In prayer have we learned the wonderful power of that phrase "... boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus"? It means that we can talk to God as Jesus Christ did, but only through the right of His Atonement. We must never allow the idea that because we have been obedient, because our need is great, because we long for it, therefore God will hear us. There is only one way into the holiest, and that is by the blood of Jesus. Being made partakers of the light means that we are taken into the fellowship Jesus referred to when He said, "the Father Himself loveth you."

As we are made partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light, we begin to understand that there is no division into sacred and secular, it is all one great glorious life with God as the Son of God is manifested in our mortal flesh. Paul puts it in this way: "When it pleased God... to reveal His Son in me." You in your shop, you in your office, you in your home, say that in your own heart—"The Son of God revealed in me!" That is sanctification.

4. Placed in the Light

And hath translated us into the kingdom of His dear Son.

Just as the stars are poised by God Almighty, so the Apostle says the great power of the Father lifts the saints into the light that He and His Son are in, and poises them there, as eternally established as the stars. Have we ever allowed our imagination to be kindled by the light of God? God is Light, and He lifts us up in Himself, no matter who we are, and poises us as surely as He established the stars, in the very light that He is in. He makes us meet to be partakers of that wonderful inheritance, and slowly and surely the marvel of the life of the Son of God is manifested in our mortal flesh. No wonder Paul says—"Giving thanks unto the Father"!

It was never from His right to Himself that our Lord Jesus Christ spoke; He never thought from His right to Himself; that is, He never thought or spoke from His bodily conditions or the condition of His circumstances. We do talk from our right to ourselves, from the condition of our bodies, from our personal possessions; these are the things we all reason from naturally. They are the things the Son of God never reasoned from; He thought and spoke always from His Father; that is, He expressed the thought of God in light. When we are sanctified, the Spirit of God will enable us to do the same. As we go on with God we shall find that we see things in quite a different way, we see them with the eyes of Jesus Christ.

When we shut ourselves in alone with God at night, with the stars and the great quietness round about, it is so easy and so wonderful to talk to God; but do we walk in the light of the talk we had when the morning comes? Do we allow the Son of God to manifest Himself in our walk and conversation, or do we forget and begin to work from ourselves, and at the end of the day do we have to say to God—"I am sorry, Lord, but I made a tremendous blunder, I forgot to step back and let Thee manifest Thyself."

Remember, God wants to lift us up and poise us in the light that He is in, and that everything that is dark just now will one day be as clear to us as it is to Him. Think of all the things that are dark just now. Jesus said, "There is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed." Things are dark and obscure to us because we are not in a right condition to understand them. Thank God for all that we have understood, for every bit of truth that is so full of light and liberty and wonder that it fills us with joy. Step by step as we walk in that light, and allow the Son of God to meet every circumstance by His virtues, by His power and His presence, we shall understand more and more with a knowledge "which passeth knowledge."

How many of us know anything about this Gospel Mystery of Sanctification? Are we allowing the life and liberty and power and marvel of the holiness of Jesus Christ to be wrought out in us? Do we know what it is to be made new creatures in Christ Jesus? Have we let God raise us up to the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, and are we learning to walk in the light as God is in the light?

For this is the will of God, even your sanctification.

But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us... sanctification.

Grow Up into Him

Take the Initiative

Add to your faith virtue. 2 Peter 1:5 ("Furnish your faith with resolution." MOFFATT)

This love requires nothing of us but innocent and regular manners and behaviour. It would only have us do all those things for the sake of God which reason bids us practise. The thing required is not to add to the good actions we have already done, but only to do that out of love to God which men of reputation and virtuous lives do from a principle of honour and regard of themselves. We are not only to lop off evil. That we must do if we were guided by no other principle than right reason. But for everything else leave it in the order God has established in the world. Let us do all the same honest and virtuous actions, but let us do them for the sake of Him Who made us and to Whom we owe our all.

Fénelon

The question of forming habits on the basis of the grace of God is a very vital one. God regenerates us and puts us in contact with all His Divine resources, but He cannot make us walk according to His will; the practising is ours, not God's. We have to take the initiative and "add to . . . faith virtue. . . ." To take the initiative means to make a beginning, and each one of us must do it for himself: We have to acquaint ourselves with the way we have to go; and beware of the tendency of asking the way when we know it perfectly well.

To "add" means to acquire the habit of doing things, and it is difficult in the initial stages. We are in danger of forgetting that we cannot do what God does and that God will not do what we can do. We cannot save ourselves or sanctify ourselves; God only can do that; but God does not give us good habits, He does not give us character, He does not make us walk aright; we must do all that. We have to work out what God has worked in (Philippians 2:12–13). Many of us lose out spiritually, not because the devil attacks us, but because we are stupidly ignorant of the way God has made us. Remember, the devil did not make the human body; he may have tampered with it, but the human body was created by God, and its constitution after we are saved remains the same as before. For instance, we are not born with a readymade habit of dressing ourselves; we have to form that habit. Apply it spiritually—when we are born again, God does not give us a fully fledged series of holy habits, we have to make them; and the forming of habits on the basis of God's supernatural work in our souls is the education of our spiritual life.

Many of us refuse to do it; we are lazy and we frustrate the grace of God.

1. Stop Hesitating

A doubleminded man is unstable in all his ways. (James 1:8)

We have to stop hesitating and take the first step; and the first step is to stop hesitating! "How long halt ye between two opinions?" There are times when we wish that God would kick us right over the line and make us do the thing; but the remarkable thing about God's patience is that He waits until we stop hesitating. Some of us hesitate so long that we become like spiritual storks; we look elegant only as long as we stand on one leg; when we stand on two we look very ungraceful.

Or we have stood so long on the verge of a promise of God's that we have grown like monuments on its edge; and if we were asked to go over the edge in the way of giving our testimony or doing something for God, we should feel very awkward. It would be a good thing for us if we could be pushed over, no matter how we sprawled. If God tells us to do something good we hesitate over obeying, we endanger our standing in grace.

"A doubleminded man," i.e. a discreet man, diplomatic and wise—"is unstable in all his ways." The man who does not put God first in his calculations is always double minded. "If I do," "Supposing," and "But"—these are all in the vocabulary of the double minded man. If we begin to weigh things, we let in that subtle enemy against God, viz., insinuation. When God speaks we have to be resolute and act immediately in faith on what He says. When Peter walked on the water, he did not wait for someone to take his hand; he stepped straight out, in recognition of Jesus, and walked on the water.

Never revise decisions. If you have made a wrong decision, then face the music and stand up to it; do not whimper and say—"I won't do that again." Take the initiative, take the step with your will now; burn your bridges behind you—"I will write that letter"; "I will pay that debt"; make it impossible to go back on the decision. Sentimentality always begins when we refuse to obey, when we refuse to take some stand God has told us to because of an insinuation that has come in from somewhere. If we hesitate, insinuations are sure to come.

2. Start Hearkening

Whosoever . . . heareth My sayings, and doeth them . . . (Luke 6:47)

Whether we are Christians or not, we must all build; the point is that a Christian builds upon a different basis. If we build to please ourselves, we are building on the sand; if we build for the love of God, we are building on the rock. Do we listen to what Jesus has to say? All we build will end in disaster unless it is built on the sayings of Jesus. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." Before we can hear certain things, we must be trained. Our disposition determines what we listen for; and when Jesus alters the disposition, He gives us the power to hear as He hears. (Cf. John 12:29-30.) If, when no one is watching us, we are building ourselves up in the word of God, then, when a crisis comes, we shall stand; but if we are not building on the word of God, when a crisis comes we shall go down, no matter what our wills are like. Have we learned the habit of listening to what God says? Have we added this resolute hearing in our practical life? We may be able to give a testimony as to what God has done for us, but does the life we live evidence that we are not listening now, but living only in the memory of what we once heard? We have to keep our ears trained to detect God's voice, to be continually renewed in the spirit of our mind. If when a crisis comes we instinctively turn to God, we know that the habit of hearkening has been formed. At the beginning there is the noisy clamour of our own misgivings; we are so taken up with what we have heard that we cannot hear any more. We have to hearken to that which we have not listened to before, and to do it we must be insulated on the inside.

"He wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned." Once a week at least read the Sermon on the Mount and see how much you have hearkened to it—"Love your enemies, bless them that curse you"; we do not listen to it because we do not want to. We have to learn to hearken to Jesus in everything, to get into the habit of finding out what He says. We cannot apply the teachings of Jesus unless we are regenerated, and we cannot apply all His teachings at once. The Holy Spirit will bring back to our remembrance a certain word of our Lord's and apply it to the particular circumstances we are in, the point is—are we going to obey it? "Whosoever . . . heareth My sayings, and doeth them . . ." When Jesus Christ brings a word home, never shirk it.

3. Stand Heroically

Having done all, to stand. (Ephesians 6:13)

It is a great deal easier to fight than to stand; but spiritually our conflict is not so much a fight as a standing on guard—"having done all, to stand." When we are in a frenzy, we attack; when we are strong, we stand to overcome. To-day in Christian work we are suffering from a phase of spiritual dyspepsia that emphasises doing. The great thing to do is to be a believer in Jesus.

With Jesus it is never "Do, do," but "Be, be and I will do through you." To stand, means to work on the level of the heroic. It would be a terrible thing to lose the sense of the heroic, because the sense of our duty is only realised by our sense of the heroic. Our Lord calls us to a joyful heroic life, and we must never relax:

"Put on the whole armour of God." If we try to put on the armour without a right relationship to God we shall be like David in Saul's armour; but when we are right with God we find that the armour fits us exactly, because it is God's own nature that is the armour. The armour God gives us is not the armour of prayer, but the armour of Himself, the armour of God. "That ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." The devil is a bully, but when we stand in the armour of God, he cannot harm us; if we tackle him in our own strength we are soon done for; but if we stand with the strength and courage of God, he cannot gain one inch of way at all. Some of us run away instead of standing; when there is a fresh onslaught of the wiles of the devil we lose heart instantly; and instead of standing we scuttle and others have to stand until we are sufficiently ashamed to come back again. We have to take the initiative in standing against panic. One strong moral man will form a nucleus around which others will gather; and spiritually, if we put on the armour of God and stand true to Him, a whole army of weak-kneed Christians will be strengthened. Remember, we have to take the initiative where we are, not where we are not.

YOU WON'T REACH IT ON TIPTOE!

Love, to most of us, is an indefinite thing; we do not know what we mean when we speak of love: The love Paul mentions in 1 Corinthians 13 means the sovereign preference of my person for another person, and everything depends on who the other person is. Jesus demands that the sovereign preference be for Him. We cannot love to order, and yet His word stands—"If any come to Me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also," (i.e., a hatred of every loyalty that would divide the heart from loyalty to Jesus) "he cannot be My disciple." Devotion to a Person is the only thing that tells; and no man on earth has the love which Jesus demands, unless it has been imparted to him. We may admire Jesus Christ, we may respect Him and reverence Him; but apart from the Holy Ghost we do not love Him. The only Lover of the Lord Jesus Christ is the Holy Ghost. In Romans 5:5, Paul says that "the love of God" not the power to love God, but the love of God-"is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." The Holy Ghost is the gift of the ascended Christ. "Have I received the Holy Ghost?" Not, "Do I believe in Him?" but, "Have I received Him?" Something must come into me. (Luke 11:13.) When by a willing acceptance, I receive the Holy Spirit, He will shed abroad the love of God in my heart; and on the basis of that love I have to practise the working out of the things which Peter mentions here, and Paul mentions in 1 Corinthians 13. We cannot reach it on tiptoe; some of us tried to once for seven days, then we got tired! The springs of love are in God, not in us. It is absurd to look for the love of God in our natural hearts; the love of God is only there when it has been shed abroad by the Holy Ghost.

1. Love Where You Cannot Respect

But God commendeth His love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. (Romans 5:8)

The revelation of God's love is that He loved us when He could not possibly respect us—He loved us "while we were yet sinners"; "when we were enemies." When we receive the nature of God into us, the first thing that happens is that God takes away all pretence and pious pose; and He does it by revealing that He loved us, not because we were loveable, but because it is His nature to love. "God is love." The surest evidence that the nature of God has come into me is that I know I am a sinner—"I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing." When God has made me know what I am really like in His sight, it is no longer possible for me to be annoyed at what others may tell me I am capable of; God has revealed it to me already. When once we have had a dose of the plague of our own heart, we will never want to vindicate ourselves. The worst things that are said about us may be literally untrue; but we know that whatever is said is not so bad as what is really true of us in the sight of God.

Never try to prevent a soul feeling real disgust at what he is like in God's sight. The first thing the Holy Spirit does when He comes in is to convict, not to comfort, because He has to let us know what we are like in God's sight; and then He brings the revelation that God will fill us with His own nature if we will let Him.

The curious thing about the love of God is that it is the cruellest thing on earth to everything that is not of Him. God hurts desperately when I am far away from Him; but when I am close to Him, He is unutterably tender. Paul says that "God commendeth His own love toward us" (RV). God's love seems so strange to our natural conceptions that it has to be commended, i.e. recommended, to us before we see anything in it. It is only when we have been awakened by conviction to the sin and anarchy of our hearts against God that we realise the measure of His love toward us, even "while we were yet sinners." "The Son of God, Who loved me, and gave Himself for me"—Paul never lost the wonder of that love.

The Lord "suffereth long, and is kind. . . ." If I watch God's dealings with me, I shall find that He gives me a revelation of my own pride and bad motives towards Him, and the realisation that He loved me when He could not begin to respect me will send me forth into the world to love others as He loved me. God's love for me is inexhaustible, and His love for me is the basis of my love for others. We have to love where we cannot respect and where we must not respect, and this can only be done on the basis of God's love for us. "This is My commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you."

Love means deliberate self-limitation; we deliberately identify ourselves with the interests of our Lord in everything. "Having loved His own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end." The revelation comes home to me that God has loved me to the end of all my meanness and my sin, my selfseeking and my wrong motives; and now this is the corresponding revelation—that I have to love others as God has loved me. God will bring around us any number of people we cannot respect, and we have to exhibit the love of God to them as He has exhibited it to us. Have we ever realised the glorious opportunity we have of laying down our lives for Jesus Christ? Jesus does not ask us to die for Him, but to lay down our lives for Him. Our Lord did not sacrifice Himself for death, He sacrificed His life, and God wants our life, not our death. "I beseech you," says Paul, "present your bodies a living sacrifice."

The greatest love of a man is his love for his friends (John 15:13); the greatest love of God is His love for His enemies (Romans 5:8–10); the highest Christian love is that a man will lay down his life for his Friend, the Lord Jesus Christ—"I have called you friends." Our Lord here connects the highest human love with the highest Divine love, and the connection is in the disciple, not in our Lord. The emphasis is laid on the deliberate laying down of the life, not in one tragic crisis such as death, but in the grey face of actual facts illumined by no romance, obscured by the mist of the utterly commonplace—expending the life deliberately day by day because of my love for my Friend. This is the love that never fails, and it is neither human nor Divine love alone, but the at-onement of both being made manifest in the life of the disciple, The supreme moment of the Cross in actual history is but the concentrated essence of the very nature of the Divine love. God lays down His life for the very creation which men utilise for their own selfish ends. The Self-expenditure of the love of God exhibited in the life and death of our Lord becomes a bridge over the gulf of sin; whereby human love can be imbued by Divine love, the love that never fails.

2. Love Where You Are Not Respected (1 Peter 2:20-21)

We shall not always be respected if we are disciples of Jesus. Our Lord said—"These things have I spoken unto you, that ye should not be offended. They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service," and that will be so again. "The disciple is not above his Master." How much respect did Jesus Christ receive when He was on this earth?

A Nazarene Carpenter, despised, rejected, and crucified. "We e'en must love the highest when we see it" is not true, for when the religious people of our Lord's day saw the Highest Incarnate before them, they hated Him and crucified Him. "Remember the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than his Lord. If they have persecuted Me, they will also persecute you." We are apt to think of a Christian merely as a civilised individual; a Christian is one who is identified with Jesus; one who has learned the lesson that the servant is not greater than his Lord.

If we are despised because we have extraordinary notions, we are apt to be uplifted by that; it suits our natural pride; but Jesus said—"Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of Man's sake." If you want a good time in this world, do not become a disciple of Jesus. "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself," i.e. give up his right to himself to Me. There is always an IF in connection with discipleship, and it implies that we need not unless we like. There is never any compulsion; Jesus does not coerce us. There is only one way of being a disciple, and that is by being devoted to Jesus.

3. Love Wherever Redemption Reaches (John 3:16)

What has God redeemed? Everything that sin and Satan have touched and blighted, God has redeemed;

Redemption is complete. We are not working for the redemption of the world, we are working on the Redemption, which is a very different thing. Jesus Christ's last command to His disciples was not to go and save the world; the saving is done. He told them to go and make disciples (RV). Our work is to "open their eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins," i.e. that they may receive the Redemption which is complete but which is incredible to a man until he does receive it—"I do not doubt that God saves men; nor do I doubt that He can do all the Bible says He can; but it is ridiculous to suppose it includes me!"

We have to beware of making the need the call; the Redemption is the call; the need is the opportunity, and the opportunity is in our own homes, in our work, just wherever we are, not simply in meetings. Naturally we always want to go somewhere else, but the love of God works just where we are, and His love works irrespective of persons.

Are we banking in unshaken faith on the Redemption of Jesus Christ? Is it our conviction amongst men that every man can be presented "perfect in Christ Jesus"? Are we filling up "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ . . . for His body's sake"? That means we have to be so identified with our Lord that His love is being poured out all the time, we have to be prepared to be nothing at all so that He can pour His sweetness through us. Neither natural love nor Divine love will remain unless it is cultivated. We must form the habit of love until it is the practice of our lives.

MAKE A HABIT OF HAVING NO HABITS

For as these qualities exist and increase with you, they render you active and fruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. 2 Peter 1:8 (MOFFATT)

When we are forming a habit we are conscious of it, but in the real Christian life, habits do not appear, because by practice we do the thing unconsciously. As Christians, we have to learn the habit of waiting upon God as He comes to us through the moments, and to see that we do not make common-sense our guide; we do until we have seen the Lord. When we realise that God's order comes to us in the haphazard, our life will manifest itself in the way our Lord indicates in the Sermon on the Mount. The illustrations our Lord uses there are "the fowls of the air," "the lilies of the field." Birds and flowers obey the law of their lives in the setting in which they are placed; they have no consciousness of being conscious; it is not their own thought that makes them what they are, but the thought of the Father in heaven. If our childlike trust in God is giving place to self-consciousness and self-depreciation, it is a sign that there is something wrong; and the cure for it is to reach the place where every habit is so practised that there is no conscious habit at all. Watch how God will upset our programmes if we are in danger of making our little Christian habits our god. Whenever we begin to worship our habit of prayer or of Bible reading, God will break up that time. We say—"I cannot do this, I am praying; it is my hour with God." No, it is our hour with our habit; we pray to a habit of prayer.

1. Exercising Habits until Each Habit Is Lost For as these qualities exist and increase with you . . . (MOFFATT)

Are they existing in us? There are times when we are conscious of becoming virtuous and patient and godly, but they are only stages; if we stop there we get the strut of the "pi" person. A "pi" person is one who does his level best to be what he would like to be but knows he is not. Our Christian life continually resolves itself into consciousness and introspection because there are some qualities we have not added yet. Ultimately, the relationship is to be a completely simple one.

Consciousness of a defect is a disease spiritually; yet it is produced by the finger of God because we have neglected to add some quality. We must acknowledge the defect, and then look out for the opportunity of exercising ourselves along the line of the quality to be added—patience, godliness, love. We have to exercise the quality until the habit is merged in the simplicity of a child's life.

We have to beware of singling out one quality only. Peter says "as these qualities," faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity, "exist and increase with you" (MOFFATT). Our Lord is the type of all Christian experience, and He cannot be summed up in terms of natural virtues, but only in terms of the supernatural. "Come unto Me," says Jesus, "and I will give you rest," the rest of the perfection of activity that is never conscious of itself. This perfection of activity can be illustrated by the spinning of a coloured top; if the top spins quickly, all the colours merge and a musical sound is heard; but if it spins slowly, it wobbles and sighs and every colour is conspicuous. If we are conscious of a defect it is because the Lord is pointing out that there is a quality to be added; and until it is added we are conscious of a black streak here, and a coloured streak there. But when the particular quality has been added we are no longer conscious of the defect, all the qualities are merged and the whole life is at rest in the perfection of activity.

The dominant thing about a saint is not self-realisation, but the Lord Himself; consequently a saint can always be ignored because to the majority of eyes our Lord is no more noticeable in the life of a saint than He was to men in the days of His flesh. But when a crisis comes the saint is the one to whom men turn; and the life which seemed colourless is seen to be the white light of God.

2. Expressing Holiness until Conscious Holiness Is Lost

they render you active and fruitful . . .

It is an utter mistake to fix our eyes on our own whiteness, for all we are conscious of then is a passionate longing for a holy relationship to God. We have to come to the place where conscious holiness ceases to be because of the presence of the One Who is holiness. When we have been made partakers of the Divine nature we are taken up into God's consciousness, we do not take God into our consciousness. If we are consciously holy we are far from simple in certain relationships, for there will be certain things we imagine we cannot do; whereas in reality we are the only ones who ought to be able to do those things. Once we come into simple relationship with God, He can put us where He pleases and we are not even conscious of where He puts us. All we are conscious of is an amazing simplicity of life that seems to be a haphazard life externally. The only supernatural life ever lived on earth was the life of our Lord, and He was at home with God anywhere. Wherever we are not at home with God, there is a quality to be added. We have to let God press through us in that particular until we gain Him, and life becomes the simple life of a child in which the vital concern is putting God, first.

3. Experiencing Knowledge until Knowledge Is Lost

... in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Then shall I know even as also I am known"—love abides, and knowledge is merged. Knowledge is faith perfected, and faith in turn passes into sight. We experience knowledge until knowledge is swallowed up in the fact of God's presence—"Why He is here!" Knowledge is an expression of the nature of God, and is the practical outcome of the life of God in us, but if we isolate knowledge we are in danger of criticising God. We look for God to manifest Himself to His children: God only manifests Himself in His children, consequently others see the manifestation, the child of God does not. You say, "I am not conscious of God's blessing now"—thank God! "I am not conscious now of the touches of God"—thank God! "I am not conscious now that God is answering my prayers"—thank God! If you are conscious of these things it means you have put yourself outside God. "That the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh"—"I am not conscious that His life is being manifested," you say, but if you are a saint it surely is. When a little child becomes conscious of being a little child, the child-likeness is gone; and when a saint becomes conscious of being a saint, something has gone wrong. "Oh but I'm not good enough." You never will be good enough! that is why the Lord had to come and save you. Go to your own funeral and ever after let God be all in all, and life will become the simple life of a child in which God's order comes moment by moment.

Never live on memories. Do not remember in your testimony what you once were; let the word of God be always living and active in you, and give the best you have every time and all the time.

THE HABIT OF A GOOD CONSCIENCE

Having a good conscience. 1 Peter 3:16

We hear it said that conscience is the voice of God, but logically that is easily proved to be absurd. Paul said—"I verily thought within myself that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth"; Paul was obeying his conscience when he hated Jesus Christ and put His followers to death; and our Lord said that "whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service." If conscience were the voice of God it would be the most contradictory voice human ears ever listened to. Conscience is the eye of the soul; and how it records depends entirely upon the light thrown upon God. The God Whom Saul of Tarsus knew had the light of Judaism upon Him, and Paul's conscience recording in that light brought him to the conclusion that he should hate Jesus and persecute His followers. Immediately the white light of our Lord was thrown upon God, Saul's conscience recorded differently—"and he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Saul had not another conscience, but it recorded differently, and the result was a tremendous disturbance in his life. Conscience is the faculty of the spirit that fits itself on to the highest a man knows, whether he be an agnostic or a Christian; every man has a conscience, although every man does not know God.

1. The Sensitive Conscience

And herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men. (Acts 24:16)

If I am in the habit of steadily and persistently facing myself with God, my conscience will always introduce God's perfect law to me; the question then is will I do what my conscience makes me understand clearly I should do? When conscience has been enlightened by the Son of God being formed in me, I have to make an effort to keep my conscience so sensitive that I obey that which I perceive to be God's will. I have to be so keen in the scent of the Lord, so sensitive to the tiniest touch of His Spirit, that I know what I should do. If I keep my soul inwardly open to God, then when I come in contact with the affairs of life outside, I know immediately what I should do; if I do not, I am to blame. I should be living in such perfect sensitiveness to God, in such perfect sympathy with His Son that in every circumstance I am in, the spirit of my mind is renewed, and I prove, i.e. make out, what is God's will, the thing that is good, and acceptable, and perfect.

We avoid forming a sensitive conscience when we say—"Oh well, God cannot expect me to do this thing, He has not told me to do it." How do we expect God to tell us? The word is "not in heaven . . . neither is it beyond the sea . . . but the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it" (Deuteronomy 30:12–14). If we are Christians that is where the word of God is—in our hearts.

In the engineering of our circumstances, God gives us opportunities to form a sensitive conscience, and in this way He educates us down to the scruple.⁵ When we come to a crisis it is easy to get direction, but it is a different matter to live in such perfect oneness with God that in the ordinary occurrences of life we always do the right thing. Is my conscience so sensitive that it needs neither terrible crime nor sublime holiness to awaken it, but the ordinary occurrences of life will awaken it? "Grieve not the Holy Spirit." He does not come with a voice of thunder, but with a voice so gentle that it is easy to ignore it. The one thing that keeps the conscience sensitive is the continual habit of seeing that I am open to God within. Whenever there is debate, quit. "Why shouldn't I do this?" You are on the wrong track. When conscience speaks there must be no debate whatever. In a crisis human nature is put on the strain, and we usually know what to do; but the sensitive conscience of the Christian is realised in the ordinary things of life, the humdrum things. We are apt to think of conscience only in connection with something outrageous. The sensitiveness of conscience is maintained by the habit of always being open towards God. At the peril of your soul you allow one thing to obscure your inner communion with God. Drop it, whatever it is, and see that you keep your inner vision clear.

2. The Seared Conscience

The conscience referred to here has been damaged by some terrific iron cramp.⁶ Conscience is the eye of the soul recording what it looks at, but if what Ruskin calls "the innocence of the eye" is lost, then the recording of conscience may be distorted. If I continually twist the organ of my soul's recording, it will become perverted. If I do a wrong thing often enough, I cease to realise the wrong in it. A bad man can be perfectly happy in his badness. That is what a seared conscience means.

^{5.} down to the scruple: to the smallest item.

Our critical faculties are given us for the purpose of self-examination, and the way to examine ourselves under the control of the Spirit of God is to ask ourselves—"Am I less sensitive than I used to be to the indications of God's will, less sensitive regarding purity, uprightness, goodness, honesty and truth?" If I realise that I am, I may be perfectly certain that something I have done (not something done to me) has seared my conscience. It has given me, so to speak, a bloodshot eye of the soul and I cannot see aright.

Conscience may be seared by means of a desperate crime as in the case of Herod. Herod ordered the voice of God to be silent in his life (see Mark 6:16–28), and when Jesus Christ stood before him we read that "He answered him nothing" (Luke 23:8–9).

The human eye may be damaged by gazing too much on intense whiteness, as in the case of snow blindness when men remain blind for months. And conscience may be damaged by tampering with the occult side of things, giving too much time to speculation; then when we turn to human life we are as blind as bats. It may be all right for angels to spend their time in visions and meditation, but if I am a Christian I find God in the ordinary occurrences of my life. The special times of prayer are of a different order. If I sequester myself and press my mind on one line of things and forget my relation to human life, when I do turn to human affairs I am morally blind. Am I trying to embrace a sensation of God spiritually for myself? When God has saved and sanctified us there is a danger that we are unwilling to let the vision fade; we refuse to take up our ordinary work, and soon we will be completely at a loss because we have hugged an experience to our souls instead of maintaining a right relationship to God Who gave us the experience.

My mortal flesh does not come in contact with God, it comes in contact with other mortal flesh, with earthly things, and I have to manifest the Son of God there by putting on the new man in connection with all these things. Am I doing it? Have I formed the habit of keeping my conscience sensitive to God on the inside and equally sensitive to man on the outside by always working out what God works in? God engineers our circumstances and He brings across our paths some extraordinary people, viz., embodiments of ourselves in so many forms, and it is part of the humour of the situation that we recognise ourselves. Now, God says, exhibit the attitude to them that I showed to you. This is the one way of keeping a conscience void of offence toward God and man.

3. The Saintly Conscience

Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience. (Hebrews 10:22)

Can God readjust a seared conscience and make it sensitive again? He can, and it is done by the vicarious Atonement of our Lord. "How much more shall the blood of Christ . . . purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" (Hebrews 9:14). When the Holy Spirit comes into me, my whole nature is in a desperate turmoil because immediately a man sees Jesus and understands Who He is, that instant he is criticised and self-condemned. If the Holy Spirit is obeyed He will make the Atonement of the Lord efficacious in me so that the blood of Christ cleanses my conscience from dead works and I become readjusted to God. The experimental element that works this transforming mystery of the Atonement becoming my vital life is repentance wrought in me by the Holy Spirit. The deepest repentance is not in the sinner, but in the saint. Repentance means not only sorrow for sin, it involves the possession of a new disposition that will never do the thing again. The only truly repentant man is the holy man. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." To admit instead of confess is to trample the blood of the Son of God under foot, but immediately we allow the Holy Spirit to give us the gift of repentance, the shed blood of Christ will purge our conscience from dead works and send us into heart-spending service for God with a passionate devotion.

If I allow the saintly conscience to have way in me it will mean that I keep my own life steadfastly open towards God and keep steadfastly related to Him on the line of intercessory prayer for others. The clearing house for a guilty conscience is that by our intercession Jesus repairs the damage done to other lives, and the consolation to our conscience is amazing. The saintly conscience means that I maintain an open scrutiny before God, and that I carry out the sensitiveness gained there all through my life.

THE HABIT OF ENJOYING THE DISAGREEABLE

Whereas he who has not these by him is blind, shortsighted, oblivious that he has been cleansed from his erstwhile sins. 2 Peter 1:9 (MOFFATT)

In order to express what God's grace has done in us we have to form habits until all habits are merged in the perfect relationship of love. It is the relationship of a child wherein we realise that everything which God tells us to do we must do and not debate. God's commands are made to the life of His Son in us, not to our human nature; consequently all that God tells us to do is always humanly difficult; but it becomes divinely easy immediately we obey because our obedience has behind it all the omnipotent power of the grace of God.

The meaning of sanctification is that the Son of God is formed in us (Galatians 4:19); then our human nature has to be transfigured by His indwelling life, and this is where our action comes in. We have to put on the new man in accordance with the life of the Son of God in us. If we refuse to be sanctified, there is no possibility of the Son of God being manifested in us, because we have prevented our lives being turned into a Bethlehem; we have not allowed the Spirit of God to bring forth the Son of God in us. Are we putting on the new man in accordance with the Son of God, or are we choking His life in us? If we allow things which do not spring from the Son of God, we will put His life in us to death. The historic life of our Lord is the type of the life that will be produced in us if we take care to work out what God works in. Our human nature is meant for the Son of God to manifest Himself in, and this brings us to the margin of our responsibility. Scriptural language may seem to destroy individual responsibility, but in reality it increases it a hundredfold. For example, to say with Paul—I have been crucified with Christ; yet I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me-does not mean that I am without responsibility; it means that I have the responsibility now of seeing that the Son of God works through me all the time. I have to see that the outer courts in which He lives are kept in perfect trim for Him to work through. I must not allow them to be choked up with prejudices or notions of my own.

1. By Keeping Yourself Fit

But he that lacketh these things is blind . . .

When Christ is formed in us we have to see that our human nature acts in perfect obedience to all that the Son of God reveals. God does not supply us with character, He gives us the life of His Son and we can either ignore Him and refuse to obey Him, or we can so obey Him, so bring every thought and imagination into captivity, that the life of Jesus is manifested in our mortal flesh. It is not a question of being saved from hell, but of being saved in order to manifest the Son of God in our mortal flesh. Our responsibility is to keep ourselves fit to manifest Him.

Are we lacking in the things that Peter through the Spirit of God says we must add—the things which ought to mark the life of the saint? For instance, do we exhibit the virtue of self-control, the virtue of godliness, in the letters we write, in the conversations we hold? If not, then we not only give a wrong impression of the Son of God, but we hurt His life in us. If we are lacking in these things, it is because we have become short-sighted; we have forgotten that we have been cleansed from our old sins and are in imminent peril of being taken up with an experience and an illumination, and of forgetting that the life of Jesus is to be manifested in our mortal flesh.

The only way to keep yourself fit is by the discipline of the disagreeable. It is the disagreeable things which make us exhibit whether we are manifesting the life of the Son of God, or living a life which is antagonistic to Him. When disagreeable things happen, do we manifest the essential sweetness of the Son of God or the essential irritation of ourselves apart from Him? Whenever self comes into the ascendant, the life of the Son of God in us is perverted and twisted; there is irritation, and His life suffers. We have to beware of every element in human nature which clamours for attention first. Growth in grace stops the moment we get huffed. We get huffed because we have a peculiar person to live with—just think of the disagreeable person you have been to God! Every disagreeable person you ever met is an objective picture of what you were like in the sight of God. We have to learn to get in the first blow at the thing that is unlike God in ourselves. We can take in our human nature the blow that was meant for Him and so prevent the tramp of feet on Him. That is what Paul means when he speaks of filling up "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for His body's sake."

It is one thing to go into the disagreeable by God's engineering, but another thing to go into it by choice. If God puts us there, He is amply sufficient. No matter how difficult the circumstances may lie, if we will let Jesus Christ manifest Himself in them, it will prove to be a new means of exhibiting the wonderful perfection and extraordinary purity of the Son of God. This keen enthusiasm of letting the Son of God manifest Himself in us is the only thing that will keep us enjoying the discipline of the disagreeable. "Let your light so shine before men. . . ." Our light is to shine in the darkness; it is not needed in the light. It is on earth, in this condition of things, that we have to see that the life of the Son of God is manifested in us, and we must keep ourselves fit to do it.

2. By Keeping Your Sight Fit

In human sight we soon lose the innocence of sight; we know what we see, but instead of trusting the innocence of sight we confuse it by trying to state what we ought to see. Jesus restores the spiritual innocence of sight—"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Paul said that he was sent by God to open men's eyes. If you are being trained as an art student you will first of all be taught to see things as a whole, in mass outline, and then in detail. The meaning of perspective is that we keep the view of the whole whilst paying attention to the detail.

What is the thing that is pressing just now so that you cannot see aright? The reason it presses is that you have forgotten the One Who is far off to human sight, but very near to spiritual sight—God Himself. "And there we saw the giants . . . and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight." When we see God we see neither the obstacle, nor ourselves, but, like Moses, we endure "as seeing Him Who is invisible." Can I see the Invisible One in the thing that is nearest to me—my food, my clothes, my money, my friendships? Can I see these in the light of God? Everything that came into the life of our Lord externally was transfigured because He saw always Him Who is Invisible—"I knew that Thou hearest Me always": "I do always those things that please Him."

I cannot keep my sight right if I give way to selfpity. "Why should this happen to me?" To talk in that way is a grief to Jesus because it is a deliberate refusal on my part to take His yoke upon me. He was meek towards His Father's dispensations for Him and never once murmured. The reason the thing has happened to you will only be seen when you are identified with Jesus in it; see that you remain in entire connection with Him. If you indulge in self-pity and the luxury of misery, it means that you have forgotten God, forgotten that you have been purged from your old sins, and that you have to put on the new man, in accordance with the life of the Son of God in you.

"While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen." The way to keep our sight fit is by looking at the things which are not seen, and external things become a glorious chance of enabling us to concentrate on the invisible things. Once we realise that God's order comes to us in the passing moments, then nothing is unimportant. Every disagreeable thing is a new way of bringing us to realise the wonderful manifestation of the Son of God in that particular. What was the thing that obliterated God and you know it had no business to? You forget to take your heart to God and spill it. The thing that ought to make our hearts beat is a new way of manifesting the Son of God in us.

3. By Keeping Your Soul Fit

... and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins.

Jesus says that a man must lose his soul in order to find it—"whosoever will lose his life [i.e. soul] for My sake shall find it." Soul is "me," my personal spirit, manifesting itself in my body, my way of estimating things. The incoming of the Holy Spirit into my spirit enables me to construct a new way of reasoning and looking at things. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." Our Lord's way of reasoning certainly is not ours naturally; we have to form His mind. We cannot form the mind of Christ without having His Spirit, but we may have the Spirit of Christ and refuse to form His mind. We cannot alter our reasoning until God calls us up short. We may have been going steadily on not realising that we had to readjust our views, and then the Holy Spirit brings to our conscious mind what we knew perfectly well, but had never seen in that connection before. There must be instant obedience. The moment we obey the light the Spirit of God brings, the mind of Jesus is formed in us in that particular, and we begin to reason as He reasons; but if we debate and go back to our old way of reasoning we grieve the Spirit of God. In new circumstances there are always readjustments to be made. No matter how disagreeable things may be, say—"Lord, I am delighted to obey Thee in this matter," and instantly the Son of God presses to the front and in our human minds there is formed the way of reasoning that glorifies Jesus. We have to keep our soul fit to form the mind of Christ.

THE HABIT OF RISING TO THE OCCASION

So be the more eager, brothers, to ratify your calling and election, for as you exercise these qualities you will never make a slip. 2 Peter 1:10 (MOFFATT)

In natural life our aims shift and alter as we develop; but development in the Christian life is an increasing manifestation of Jesus Christ. Christian faith is nourished on dogma, and all young Christian life is uniform; but in the mature Christian life there are diversities. We must be careful that we do not remain children too long, but see that we "grow up into Him in all things." We have to assimilate truth until it becomes part of us, and then begin to manifest the individual characteristics of the children of God. The life of God shows itself in different manifestations, but the aim ultimately is the manifestation of Jesus Christ. "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

If Jesus Christ is not being manifested in my mortal flesh, I am to blame; it is because I am not eating His flesh and drinking His blood. Just as I take food into my body and assimilate it, so, says Jesus, I must take Him into my soul. "He that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me." Food is not health, and truth is not holiness. Food has to be assimilated by a properly organised system before the result is health, and truth must be assimilated by the child of God before it can be manifested as holiness. We may be looking at the right doctrines and yet not assimilating the truths which the doctrines reveal. Beware of making a doctrinal statement of truth the truth—"I am . . . the Truth," said Jesus. Doctrinal statement is our expression of that vital connection with Him. If we divorce what Jesus says from Himself, it leads to secret selfindulgence spiritually; the soul is swayed by a form of doctrine that has never been assimilated and the life is twisted away from the centre, Jesus Christ Himself.

1. The Habit of Ratifying Your Election

Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure . . .

To ratify (MOFFATT) is to make sure of. I have to form the habit of assuring myself of my election, to bend the whole energy of my Christian powers to realise my calling, and to do that I must remember what I am saved for, viz.; that the Son of God might be manifested in my mortal flesh. How much attention have I given to the fact that my body is the temple of the Holy Ghost? When the Son of God is formed in me is He able to exhibit His life in my mortal flesh, or am I a living contradiction of what my mouth professes? Am I working out what God works in or have I become divorced from Jesus Christ? I become divorced from Him immediately I receive anything apart from His indwelling. Have I a testimony to give that is not "me"? If my testimony is only a thrilling experience, it is nothing but a dead, metallic thing; it kills me and those who listen to me. But when I am in contact with Jesus Christ every testimony of mine will reveal Him.

"That ye may know what is the hope of His calling, and what the riches . . . of His inheritance in the saints." That which is taken for humility before men is blasphemy before God. To say, "Oh I'm no saint; I can't stand the folks who testify that they are sanctified," is acceptable with men; they will say it is true humility to talk in that way. But say this before God, and though it may sound humble, it is blasphemy because it means—"God cannot make me a saint." The one whom men call proud is really unutterably humble before God—"Nothing in my hands I bring."

2. The Habit of Realising Your Exercises

for if ye do these things . . .

We cannot do anything for our salvation, but we must do something to manifest it; we must work it out. Am I working out my salvation with my tongue, with my brain, and with my nerves? We are all apt to say with Rip Van Winkle—"I won't count this time." We put off the realisation that if we are going to grow up into Him in all things, there are things that we must do. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." said Jesus. Character is the way we have grown to act with our hands and our feet, our eyes and our tongue; and the character we make always reveals the ruling disposition within. "If any man is in Christ, there is a new creation" (RV mg). Where is the new creation? If I am still the same miserable cross-patch, set on my own way, it is a lie to say that I am a new creature in Christ.

Have I learned to submit my will to Jesus? When we are rightly related to God we have uncovered to us for the first time the power of our own wills. Our wills are infirm through sin, but when we are sanctified there is revealed to us the pure pristine will-power with which God created us, and which the Holy Ghost calls into action. Then we have to submit our will to Jesus as He submitted His will to His Father. How was Jesus one with His Father when He was in this human frame? By complete obedience, complete dependence, and complete intercourse with Him all the time.

"If ye do these things"—am I adding resolution to my faith, self-control to my knowledge, steadfastness to my piety? We ought to be infinitely more humble in exercising ourselves in these ways. God's order for the saint is trusting imperially, and working humbly in the midst of things as they are, not thinking imperially, and contemptuously ignoring things as they are. God knows where we are, and His order comes to us moment by moment. We are not called to manifest Jesus in heaven; we have to be the light in the darkness and the squalor of earth. Our place is in the demonpossessed valley, not on the Mount of Transfiguration. It is in the valley that we have to exercise these things.

God will never shield us from any requirements of a child of His. "Think it not strange," says Peter, "concerning the fiery trial which is to try you." God is the Master Engineer; He allows difficulties to come to see if we can vault over them properly. "By my God have I leaped over a wall." Do the thing; it does not matter how it hurts so long as it gives God a chance to manifest Himself in our mortal flesh. May God not find the whine in us any more, but may He find us full of spiritual pluck and athleticism, ready to face anything He brings and to exercise ourselves in order that the Son of God may be manifested in our mortal flesh. Remember, we go through nothing that God does not know about.

3. The Habit of Recognising Your Expectations

What do you expect? One way to detect inordinate imagination is to try and locate to yourself what you expect God to do. One expectation you cannot have, and that is the expectation of successful service. When the Lord sent out the disciples on their first evangelical tour, they came back hilarious over their success—"Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through Thy name." That is all they thought about. Our Lord said, Don't rejoice in successful service, "but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven." We are not called to success but to faithfulness.

The life of our Lord is given to us that we may know the way we have to go when we are made sons and daughters of God. We must be careful not to have the idea that we are put into God's show room. God never has museums. We are to have only one aim in life, and that is that the Son of God may be manifested; then all dictation to God will vanish. Our Lord never dictated to His Father, and we are not to dictate to God; we are to submit our wills to Him so that He works through us what He wants. "I do not know why I should have to go through this"—the moment that thought is produced in us, no matter what our experience may be, we are no longer saints. It is a thought that has neither part nor lot with the life of the Son of God in us, and it must be put away instantly. We are the only ones who should go through these things, though we need not unless we like. If we refuse to, the trample will go back on the Lord, and we will never hear Him complain. We will get off scot free-"That was rather smart of me, that man thought he was going to put on me!" "What is that mark on Thy hand?" "That is the mark of the blow that should have been taken by you, but it came back on Me." Always go the second mile with God. It is never our duty to do it; but if we make duty our god we cease to be Christians in that particular. It is never our duty to go the second mile, to turn the other cheek, but it is what we shall do if we are saints. The Lord is doing it with us just now; we compel Him to go the second mile; we won't do this and that, and He has to do it for us. Are you saying to God, "I shall not accept these circumstances"? God will not punish you; but you will punish yourself when you realise that He was giving you a glorious opportunity of filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ.

It is Peter, the man who denied his Lord and Master, who tells us that we "should follow His steps." Peter had come to a recognition of himself by means of a strange and desperate fall—"Simon, Simon, . . . Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Peter understands these words of Jesus now by the indwelling Spirit bringing them back to his remembrance. Are we following in the steps of His unseen feet? Where did Jesus place His feet? He placed them by the sick and the sorrowful, by the dead, by the bad, by the twisted and by the good. He placed His feet exactly where we have to place ours, either with or without Him, in the ordinary rough and tumble of human life as it is. "I will make the place of My feet glorious." As we walk in this body according to the new life that has been imparted to us by the Holy Spirit, we shall find it is no longer mounting up in ecstasy, running and not being weary, but walking with an infinite, steady, uncrushable, indescribable patience until men take knowledge that the Son of God is walking through us again.

THE HABIT OF WEALTH

You will thus be richly furnished with the right of entry into the eternal realm of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. 2 Peter 1:11 (MOFFATT)

Through the promises we are made partakers of the Divine nature (v. 4); then we have to "manipulate" the Divine nature in our human nature by habits. Jesus prayed "that they may be one, even as We are one," and Paul urges, on the most practical lines, that we form in our actual lives the habits that are in perfect accordance with oneness with God. Our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost in which Jesus Christ is to manifest His life; and He can only do it as we put on the new man and see to it that our external conduct springs from a right relationship to Him. Verses 3–4 describe the super-natural works of grace; then we have to form the habit of working out all that God has worked in. "Add to your faith virtue. . . ." "Add" means there is something we must do.

1. The Habit of Realising the Provision

For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you . . .

The entrance is "by a new and living way," viz., our Lord Jesus Christ, and the outgoing is to God Himself—"filled with all the fulness of God." We get impoverished spiritually because we will stop at the barrier of consciousness. We will believe only in what we consciously possess; consequently we never realise the provision. If the grace and majesty and life and power and energy of God are not being manifested in us to the glory of God (not to our consciousness), God holds us responsible; we are wrong somewhere. There is always a danger of placing experience and consciousness in the wrong place. If we want something conscious from God, it means there is a reserve; the will has not been surrendered; immediately we do surrender, the tidal wave of the love of God carries us straight into all the fulness of God. "O fools, and slow of heart to believe"! We will believe only in what we have experienced. We never can experience Jesus Christ, that is, we can never hold Him within the compass of our own hearts. Jesus Christ must always be greater than our experience of Him, but our experience will be along the line of the faith we have in Him.

"If these things be in you, and abound." Have we formed the habit of wealth spiritually, or are we gambling with what is not ours, hoodwinking ourselves with delusions? "These things"—self-control, patience, love—are not in us if we are not born from above (RV mg). Are we trying to persuade ourselves that we are right with God when we know we are not? Earthly inheritances are particular possessions of our own, and in taking them we may impoverish others; but the marvellous thing about spiritual wealth is that when we take our part in that, everyone else is blessed; whereas if we refuse to be partakers, we hinder others from entering into the riches of God.

"Unto me . . . is this grace given, that I should preach . . . the unsearchable riches of Christ." In the natural world it is ungovernably bad taste to talk about money; one of the worst of lies is tucked up in the phrase we so often hear—"I can't afford it." The same idea has crept into the spiritual domain; and we have the idea that it is a sign of modesty to say at the close of the day—"Well, I have got through, but it has been a severe tussle!" And all the grace of God is ours without let or hindrance⁷ through the Lord Jesus, and He is ready to tax the last grain of sand and the remotest star to bless us. What does it matter if circumstances are hard? Why shouldn't they be! We are the ones who ought to be able to stand them.

It is a crime to allow external physical misery to make us sulky with God. There are desolating experiences, such as the Psalmist describes in Psalms 42-43, and he says, "Then will I go . . . unto God my exceeding joy"—not "with joy," but unto God Who is my joy. No calamity can touch that wealth. No sin is worse than self-pity because it puts self-interest on the throne; it "makes the bastard self seem in the right"; it obliterates God and opens the mouth to spit out murmurings against God; and the life becomes impoverished and mean, there is nothing lovely or generous about it. Always beware of the conscious superiority that arises out of suffering—"I am so peculiarly constituted." If we indulge in the luxury of misery, we become isolated in the conception of our own sufferings; God's riches are banished and selfpity, the deeply entrenched essence of Satanhood, is enthroned in the soul.

2. Rejoicing in the Privilege abundantly into the everlasting kingdom . . .

Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world: if My kingdom were of this world, then would My servants fight," i.e. they would do the same thing that every rational being does, but "My kingdom is not of this world"; it belongs to eternal realities. The idea of a kingdom that is not maintained by might is inconceivable to us, and the "otherworldly" aspect of Jesus Christ's Kingdom is apt to be forgotten. Jesus Christ's kingdom is not built on principles that can be discerned naturally, but on "otherworldliness," and we must never adapt principles that He did not adapt. If we have come to a dead stop spiritually, is it not because we have ceased to be "otherworldly"? Are we prepared to obey the scrutiny of the Holy Ghost when He brings the "otherworldly" standpoint of Jesus to bear upon our practical life? If we are, we shall be considered fools from every standpoint but the standpoint of the Holy Ghost. We are to be in the world but not of it. Are we letting God's light break on us as it did on Jesus? Are we showing in the prevailing bent of our lives the characteristics that were in Him? "The kingdom of God is within you." Jesus Christ is the King and the Kingdom. "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee." Eternal life is God and God is eternal life; and the meaning of the At-one-ment is that Jesus produces that life in us. By sanctification we enter into the kingdom of perfect oneness with Jesus Christ; everything He is, we are by faith. He is "made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption," we have nothing apart from Him. Have we formed the habit of rejoicing in this privilege?

^{7.} without let or hindrance: legal phrase meaning "without obstacle or impediment."

^{8.} mean: as used here, something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

3. Recognising Him Personally

... of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Jesus Christ is Saviour and Lord in experience, and Lord and Saviour in discernment. "Ye call Me, Master and, Lord: and ye say well; for so I am"—but is He? The witness of the Holy Spirit is that we realise with growing amazement Who Jesus is to us personally, our Lord and Master. The baptism of the Holy Ghost makes us witnesses to Jesus, not wonderworkers. The witness is not to what Jesus does, but to what He is. "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me." We have had such an abundant entrance ministered unto us into His Kingdom, i.e. into oneness with Himself, that we are a delight to Him and His heart is being satisfied with us. When God is beginning to be satisfied with us, He impoverishes every source of fictitious wealth. After sanctification God will wither up every other spring until we know that all our fresh springs [PBV]⁹ are in Him. He will wither up natural virtues; He will break up all confidence in our own powers, until we learn by practical experience that we have no right to draw our life from any other source than the tremendous reservoir of the unsearchable riches of Jesus Christ. Thank God if you are going through a drying-up experience! And beware of pumping up the dregs with the mud at the bottom of the well when all the Almighty power and grace of God is at your disposal. We have superabounding supplies, the unsearchable riches of Jesus Christ; and yet some of us talk as if our Heavenly Father had cut us off with a shilling!

What have we to spend this Christmas-time? We ought to be going about like multimillionaires. Externally we may have 2½d. only, but spiritually we have all the grace of God to spend on others.

"He that believeth on Me," out of him "shall flow rivers of living water." If you turn away from the Source and look at the outflow, at what God is doing through you, the Source will dry up and you will sit down on the outskirts of the entrance and howl—"It is dreadfully hard to live the Christian life!" Turn round and enter into the kingdom, pay attention to the Source, our Lord Himself, and you will experience the hilarity of knowing that you see God. Never be surprised at what God does, but be so taken up with Him that He may continue to do surprising things through you.

Are you sulking before God? Are the corners of your mouth, morally and spiritually, getting down and are you feeling sorry for yourself? You have turned your back upon God and are marching away from Him. Get straight to God, be abundantly stamped with His grace and His blessing will come through all the time; and when you get to heaven you will find that God has bound up the brokenhearted through you, has set at liberty the captives through you—but not if you have a murmur in your heart—"God is very hard." There is no self-pity left in the heart that has been bound up and succoured by the Lord Jesus Christ.

As He Walked

The Next Best Thing to Do

Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. (Matthew 7:7)

Experience is not what a man thinks through, but what he lives through. The Bible is like life and deals with facts, not with principles, and life is not logical. Logic is simply a method of working the facts we know; but if we push the logical method to the facts we do not know and try to make God logical and other people logical, we shall find that the experience of life brings us to other conclusions. God sees that we are put to the test in the whole of life. We have to beware of selecting the portions of life only where we imagine we can live as saints and of cutting off any part of life because of the difficulty of being a Christian there. Christian experience means that we go to the whole of life openeyed, wearing no doctrinal or denominational "blinkers" which shut off whole areas of unwelcome fact. Our faith has to be applied in every domain of our lives.

Our Lord's teaching is so simple that the natural mind pays no attention to it, it is only moral perplexity that heeds. For instance, Our Lord said: "Ask, and it shall be given you." These words have no meaning for us if we are wearing any kind of ecclesiastical "blinkers," and are refusing to see what we do not wish to see. "I can live beautifully in my own little religious bandbox." That is not Christian experience. We have to face the whole of life as it is, and to face it fearlessly.

The difficulty of Christian experience is never in the initial stages. Experience is a gateway, not an end.

There are definite stages of conscious experience, but never pin your faith to any experience; look to the Lord Who gave you the experience. Be ruthless with yourself if you are given to talking about the experiences you have had. Your experiences are not worth anything unless they keep you at the Source, viz., Jesus Christ. It is tremendously strengthening to meet a mature saint, a man or woman with a full-orbed experience, whose faith is built in strong emphatic confidence in the One from Whom their experience springs.

The next best thing to do is to ask, if you have not received; to seek, if you have not found; to knock, if the door is not opened to you.

1. "Ask, and It Shall Be Given You"

Nothing is more difficult than to ask. We long, and desire, and crave, and suffer, but not until we are at the extreme limit will we ask. A sense of unreality makes us ask. We cannot bring ourselves up against spiritual reality when we like—all at once the staggering realisation dawns that we are destitute of the Holy Spirit, ignorant of all that the Lord Jesus stands for. The first result of being brought up against reality is this realisation of poverty, of the lack of wisdom, lack of the Holy Spirit, lack of power, lack of a grip of God. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, . . ." but be sure you do lack wisdom. Have you ever asked out of the depths of moral and spiritual poverty?

If you realise you are lacking, it is because you have come in contact with spiritual reality. Don't put your reasonable "blinkers" on again—"Preach us the simple gospel"; "Don't tell me I have to be holy; that produces a sense of abject poverty, and it is not nice to feel abjectly poor." Some people are poor enough to be interested in their poverty, and some of us are like that spiritually. "Ask" means beg. A pauper does not ask from any desire save the abject, panging condition of his poverty.

Never deceive yourself by saying that if you do not ask you will not receive (cf. Matthew 5:45), although you'll never receive from God until you have come to the stage of asking. Asking means that you have come into the relationship of a child of God, and you now realise with moral appreciation and spiritual understanding that "every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights."

"Ye ask, and receive not," says the Apostle James, "because ye ask amiss." We ask amiss when we ask simply with the determination to outdo the patience of God until He gives us permission to do what we want to do. Such asking is mere sentimental unreality. And we ask amiss when we ask things from life and not from God, we are asking from the desire of self-realisation, which is the antipodes of Christian experience. The more we realise ourselves the less will we ask of God. Are we asking things of God or of life? We shall never receive if we ask with an end in view, we are asking not out of our poverty, but out of our lust.

2. "Seek, and Ye Shall Find"

Get to work and seek, narrow your interests to this one thing. Have you ever really sought God, or have you only given a languid cry to Him after a twinge of moral neuralgia? "Seek," concentrate, and you will find. To concentrate is to fast from every other thing. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters"—are you thirsty, or are you smugly indifferent, so satisfied with your experience that you want nothing more of God? If you build your faith on your experience, the censorious, metallic note comes in at once.

You can never give other people what you have found, but you can make them homesick for the same thing. That is the meaning of these words of Our Lord—"Ye shall be My witnesses"—you will exhibit a oneness with Jesus Christ whilst He carries out His will in your life in every detail.

3. "Knock, and It Shall Be Opened unto You"

"Draw nigh to God"—the door is closed, and you suffer from palpitation as you knock. "Cleanse your hands"—knock a bit louder, you begin to discover where you are dirty. "Purify your heart, ye double-minded"—this is more personal and interior still, you are desperately in earnest now, you will do anything. "Be afflicted and mourn and weep"—have you ever been afflicted before God at the state of your inner life? When you get there, there is no strand of self-pity left, only a heart-breaking affliction and amazement at finding the kind of man you are. "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord." It is a humbling thing to knock at God's door, you have to knock with the crucified thief, with the cunning crafty publican, but—"to him that knocketh, it shall be opened."

NOT A BIT OF IT!

Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. (2 Corinthians 5:17)

Christian experience must be applied to the facts of life as they are, not to our fancies. We can live beautifully inside our own particular religious compartment as long as God does not disturb us; but God has a most uncomfortable way of stirring up our nests and of bringing in facts that have to be faced. It is actualities that produce the difficulty—the actual people we come in contact with, the actual circumstances of our lives, the actual things we discover in ourselves; and until we have been through the trial of faith in connection with actualities and have transfigured the actual into the real, we have no Christian experience. Experience is what is lived through.

1. The Experience of Useless Solemnity

Why do we and the Pharisees fast oft, but Thy disciples fast not? (Matthew 9:14)

When the disciples of Jesus were criticised for not fasting and being solemn, Jesus did not apologise for them, all He said was—"They are not in the mood to be gloomy." "Can the children of the bridechamber mourn, as long as the bridegroom is with them?" Our Lord was never careful not to offend the Pharisees, nor careful to warn His disciples not to offend them; but Our Lord never put a stumbling-block in the way of anyone. The one thing about Our Lord that the Pharisees found it hard to understand was His gaiety in connection with the things over which they were appallingly solemn. And what puzzled the religious people of Paul's day was his uncrushable gaiety; he treated buoyantly everything that they treated most seriously. Paul was in earnest over one thing only, and that was his relationship to Jesus Christ. There he was in earnest, and there they were totally indifferent.

Reverence and solemnity are not the same. Solemnity is often nothing more than a religious dress on a worldly spirit. Solemnity which does not spring from reverence towards God is of no use whatever. The religious solemnity of the Pharisees was grossly offended at the social life of Our Lord (see Matthew 11:19). Our Lord paid the scantiest attention to all their solemnity; but one thing Our Lord was never lacking in, and that was reverence. The religion of Jesus Christ is the religion of a little child. There is no affectation about a disciple of Jesus, he is as a little child, amazingly simple but unfathomably deep. Many of us are not childlike enough, we are childish. Jesus said—"Except ye . . . become as little children . . ."

It is part of moral and spiritual education to watch how God deals with prejudices. We imagine that God has a special interest in our prejudices, and we magnify our conceptions and prejudices and put them on the throne. We are quite sure that God will never deal with our prejudices as we know He must deal with other people's. "God must deal very sternly with other people, but of course He knows that my prejudices are all right, they are from Him." We have to learn—not a bit of it! Instead of God being on the side of our prejudices, He deliberately wipes them out by ignoring them. God mortifies our prejudices, runs clean athwart them by His providence. God has no respect for anything we bring Him, He is after one thing only, and that is our unconditional surrender to Him.

2. The Experience of Useless Garments

No man putteth a piece of new cloth unto an old garment, for that which is put in to fill it up taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worse. (Matthew 9:16)

The way the Holy Spirit corrupts our natural virtue when He comes in is one of the most devastating experiences. He does not build up and transfigure what we possess in the way of virtue and goodness by natural heredity; it is corrupted to death, until we learn that we ... dare not trust the sweetest frame, But wholly lean on Jesus, name.

Edward Mote

It is a deep instruction to watch how natural virtues break down. The Holy Spirit does not patch up our natural virtues, for the simple reason that no natural virtue can come anywhere near Jesus Christ's demands. God does not build up our natural virtues and transfigure them, He totally recreates us on the inside. "And every virtue we possess is His alone." As we bring every bit of our nature into harmony with the new life which God puts in, what will be exhibited in us will be the virtues that were characteristic of the Lord Jesus, not our natural virtues. The supernatural is made natural. The life that God plants in us develops its own virtues, not the virtues of Adam but of Jesus Christ, and Jesus Christ can never be described in terms of the natural virtues.

Beware of the hesitation of the natural against being turned into the spiritual—"I do not mind being a saint if I can remain natural and be a saint entirely on my own initiative; if I can instruct God in regard to my temperament, my affinities, and my upbringing." If we have a religious strut about us, some prejudice, some particular refinement, some possession of natural heredity, it is like putting a piece of new cloth into an old garment. All has to go. "If any man be in Christ . . . , old things are passed away." The Holy Spirit begins to work in us the manifestation of the new creation (RV mg) until there comes a time when there is not a bit of the old order left. The old solemnity goes, the old attitude to things goes, the old confidence in natural virtues goes, and a totally new life begins to manifest itself, "and all things are of God."

It is time some of us had a new set of clothes! The outstanding characteristic of Our Lord and His disciples is moral originality.

3. The Experience of Useless Bottles

Neither do men put new wine into old bottles: else the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles perish: but they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preserved. (Matthew 9:17)

The old systems of religion were distinctly ordained of God. All the ordinances to which the Pharisees held had been given by God, but the Pharisees had become second editions of the Almighty, they had usurped the place of God. There is always a danger of Phariseeism cropping up. In our own day its form is evangelical, man becomes a little god over his own crowd doctrinally.

The idea the Pharisees had of the Kingdom of God was that it belonged to certain favourites of God and its laws were to be worked out by the select few. According to Jesus, the Kingdom of God is love. "How sweet and simple," you say! But where are we going to begin? How are we going to have the love that has no lust in it, no self-interest, no sensitiveness to "pokes," the love that is not provoked, that thinketh no evil, is always kind? The only way is by having the love of God shed abroad in our hearts until there is not a bit of the old order left.

The love of God in us will produce an amazing sweetness in disposition towards Jesus Christ; but if we try to put that sweetness into the "bottle" we give to some earthly friend, the bottle will break and the wine will be lost. We have to be careless of the expression and heed only the Source. We say—"No, I must pay attention to the outflow, I am going to try and be a blessing there." We have to pay attention to the Source, Jesus Christ, see that we love Him personally, passionately and devotedly, and He will look after the outflow. Then it is not new wine in old wineskins, it is new wine creating its own wineskin. Is the love that is being exhibited by us the love of God or the love of our own natural hearts? God does not give us power to love as He loves; the love of God, the very nature of God, possesses us, and He loves through us.

How many amateur providences there are! "I must do this and that, and this one must not do this and that," and God retires and lets us go our own way. When we say—"But it is common sense to do this and that," we make our common sense almighty God, and God has to retire right out, then after a while He comes back and asks us if we are satisfied. There must not be a bit of that order left. God totally re-creates us on the inside until "all things are of God." May God enable us to stop trying to help Him, and may we let Him do what He likes with us.

GETTING THERE

Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. (Matthew 11:28)

1. Where the Sin and Sorrow Cease and the Song and the Saint Commence

Come unto Me (Matthew 11:28)

The questions that matter in life are remarkably few, and they are all answered by these words "Come unto Me." Not-"Do this" and "Don't do that," but "Come." "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden"—why "labour"? The word "labour" is a picture of the type of mind that realises that longings and ideals are not being worked out, the reality is not there, and there is an encroachment of sorrow which makes these words a description of the soul. You say—"I have thought about sanctification, and of the way God delivers from sin and gives the Holy Spirit, and alters the shadow of death to life"-but are you actually sanctified? Are you actually delivered from sin, from sorrow, from meanness—are you actually delivered from the things that make you un-Christlike? If you are not, you have no Christian experience. "Come unto Me," says Jesus, and by coming to Him your actual life will be brought into accordance with the reality revealed in Jesus. You will actually cease from sin and from sorrow, and actually find the song of the Lord begin; you will actually find that He has transformed you, the sinner, into a saint. But if you want this actual experience, you must come to Jesus. Our Lord makes Himself the touchstone.

Have you ever come to Jesus? Watch the stubbornness of your heart and mind, you will find you will do anything rather than the one simple, childlike thing—Come. Be stupid enough to come, and commit yourself to what Jesus says. The attitude of coming is that the will resolutely lets go of everything and deliberately commits the whole thing to Jesus. At the most unexpected moments there comes the whisper of the Lord—"Come unto Me," and we are drawn to Him. Personal contact with Jesus alters everything. He meets our sins, our sorrows, and our difficulties with the one word—"Come."

"And I will give you rest." Rest means the perfection of motion. "I will give you rest," that is, "I will stay you." Not—"I will put you to bed and hold your hand and sing you to sleep"; but—"I will get you out of bed, out of the languor and exhaustion, out of being half dead while you are alive; I will so imbue you with the spirit of life that you will be stayed by the perfection of vital activity." It is not a picture of an invalid in a bathchair, but of life at such a pitch of health that everything is at rest, there is no exhaustion without recuperation. Physical health is a delight because it is an exact balance between our physical life and outer circumstances. Disease means that outer circumstances are getting too much for the vital force on the inside. Morally it is the same. No one is virtuous naturally, we may be innocent naturally, but innocence is often a hindrance because it is nothing in the world but ignorance. Virtue can only be the outcome of conflict. Everything that does not partake of the nature of virtue is the enemy of virtue in us. Immediately we fight we become moral in that particular. Spiritually it is the same, everything that is not spiritual will make for our undoing. "In the world ye shall have tribulation," said Jesus, "but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." Spiritual grit is what we need. We become spiritual whiners and talk pathetically about "suffering the will of the Lord." Where is the majestic vitality and might of the Son of God about that! "Come unto Me, . . . and I will give you rest," i.e.; "I will imbue you with the spirit of life so that you will be stayed by the perfection of vital activity." Jesus will produce in us the actual experience that is exactly like the reality; that means that the very life of Jesus will be manifested in our actual lives if we will face the music in His strength. Faith is not a mathematical problem, the nature of faith is that it must be tried. How many of us are laying up "gold" for a rainy day? When we go through the trial of faith we gain so much wealth in our heavenly banking account, and the more we go through the trial of faith the wealthier we become in the heavenly regions.

2. Where the Self-Interest Sleeps and the Real Interest Awakens

Come with Me (John 1:39)

"They abode with Him that day"—that is about all some of us have ever done, and then we awoke to actualities, self-interest arose, and the abiding was over. There is no condition of life in which we cannot abide in Jesus. We have to learn to abide in Him wherever we are placed.

"Thou art Simon. . . . Thou shalt be called Cephas." Jesus writes the new name in those places in our lives where He has erased our pride and self-sufficiency and self-interest. Some of us have the new name in spots only—like sanctified measles. When we have our best spiritual mood on, you would think we were high-toned saints, but don't look at us when we are not in that mood! A disciple is one who has nothing but the new name written all over him; selfinterest and pride have been erased entirely. Pride is the deification of myself, and that nowadays is not the order of the Pharisee, but of the publican—"Oh, I'm no saint." To talk like that is acceptable to human pride, but it is unconscious blasphemy against God. It literally means I defy God to make me a saint. The reason I am not a saint is either that I do not want to be a saint or I do not believe God can make me one. "I would be all right," we say, "if God saved me and took me straight to heaven." That is exactly what He will do! "We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him"—the Triune God abiding with the saint. Do we believe it? It is a question of will. Make your will let Jesus do everything, make no conditions, and He will take you home with Him not only for a day but for ever; self-interest will be done with, and the only thing left will be the real interest that identifies you with Jesus.

3. Where the Selective Affinity Dies and the Sanctified Abandon Lives

Come after Me (Mark 1:17)

If you do come after Jesus, you will realise that He pays no attention whatever to your natural affinities. One of the greatest hindrances to our coming to Jesus is the talk about temperament. I have never seen the Spirit of God pay any attention to a man's temperament, but over and over again I have seen people make their temperament and their natural affinities a barrier to coming to Jesus. We have to learn that Our Lord does not heed our selective natural affinities. The idea that He does heed them has grown from the notion that we have to consecrate our gifts to God. We cannot consecrate what is not ours. The only thing I can give to God is "my right to myself" (Romans 12:1). If I will give God that, He will make a holy experiment out of me, and God's experiments always succeed. The one mark of a disciple is moral originality. The Spirit of God is a well of water in the disciple, perennially fresh. When once the saint begins to realise that God engineers circumstances, there will be no more whine, but only a reckless abandon to Jesus. Never make a principle out of your own experience; let God be as original with other people as He is with you.

"Come unto Me." Have you come? Will you come now? If you do come and abandon yourself to Jesus, He will continue to say "Come" through you to others.

If you have come to Jesus Christ and to the truth of God through a servant or a handmaid of God, you never think of the one who brought you there, because that one is so completely one with the Lord Jesus that the thought of himself or herself is never obtruded. Other people come to Jesus not through you, but through His word speaking through you.

Is your life producing the echo of Christ's "come"?

GET A MOVE ON!

And beside this, giving all diligence, add . . . (2 Peter 1:5)

We are made partakers of the Divine nature through the promises (see v. 4), now, says Peter, "giving all diligence, add . . . ," screw your attention down and form habits. No one is born with habit, we have to form habit, and the habits we form most easily are those which we form by imitation. When we begin to form a habit we are conscious of it. There are times when we are conscious of becoming virtuous and patient and godly, but that is only a stage; if we stop there we get the strut of the spiritual prig.

1. In the Domain of Drudgery

Jesus . . . took a towel . . . , and began to wash the disciples' feet. (John 13:3–5)

Are we refusing to enter the domain of drudgery? Drudgery is the touchstone of character. It is a

"drudging" thing to be virtuous. Necessity is not virtue; virtue can only be the outcome of conflict. The virtuous man or woman is like one who has gone through the fight and has added virtue, added it on the basis of the Divine nature, not on the basis of human determination.

The greatest hindrance of our spiritual life lies in looking for big things to do; Jesus Christ "took a towel. . . ." We are not meant to be illuminated versions; we are meant to be the common stuff of ordinary human life exhibiting the marvel of the grace of God. The snare in Christian life is in looking for the gilt-edged moments, the thrilling times; there are times when there is no illumination and no thrill, when God's angel is the routine of drudgery on the level of towels and washing feet. Are we prepared to "get a move on" there? Routine is God's way of saving us between our times of inspiration. We are not to expect Him to give us His thrilling minutes always.

2. In the Domain of Determination

Abide in Me. (John 15:4)

The secret of bringing forth fruit is to abide in Jesus. "Abide in Me," says Jesus, in spiritual matters, in intellectual matters, in money matters, in every one of the matters that make human life what it is. Beware of putting on your religious "blinkers"—"I can live finely in this type of meeting, or with that particular set." The Christian life is not a bandbox life. We must live where we can be tested by the whole of life. Are we preventing God from doing things in our circumstances because we imagine it will hinder our communion with Him? That is impertinence. No matter what our circumstances are, we can be as sure of abiding in Him in them as in a prayer meeting. We are not to be changing and arranging our circumstances ourselves. Our Lord and Master never chose His own circumstances, He was meek towards His Father's dispensation for Him; He was at home with His Father wherever His body was placed. Think of the amazing leisure of Our Lord's life! For thirty years He did nothing. We keep God at excitement point, there is none of the serenity of the life "hid with Christ in God" about us.

"Abide in Me." Think of the things that might take you out of abiding in Christ—"Yes, Lord, I will abide when once I can get this finished; I will abide, but I must do this first; when this week is over, I shall be all right." Get a move on! Begin to abide now! In the initial stage abiding is a continual effort until it becomes so much of the law of our lives that we abide in Him unconsciously. Watch it in your bodily life, in your social life—are you abiding there? are you bringing forth fruit there? That is where My Father is glorified, says Jesus.

Are our minds stayed on Jesus? Do we brood and dwell on this line of abiding in Him? It takes the breathless panic out of us. Our Lord was never in a panic because with Him the abiding on the inside was unsullied. It is the "plague of flies," mental, moral and spiritual, that annoy us and take us out of abiding in Jesus. There is something in human pride that can stand big troubles, but we need the supernatural grace and power of God to stand by us in the little things.

The tiniest detail in which we obey has all the omnipotent power of the grace of God behind it. When we do our duty, not for duty's sake, but because we believe that God is engineering our circumstances in that way, then at the very point of our obedience the whole superb grace of God is ours. It is the "adding" that is difficult. We say we do not expect God to carry us to heaven on "flowery beds of ease," but we act as if we did!

We have to live in the domain of drudgery by the power of God, and to learn to abide in Him where we are placed. Remember that God gives us the Spirit of Jesus, but He does not give us the mind of Jesus; we have to form the mind of Christ. The Spirit of Jesus is given to us by the marvel of the Atonement, then we have to construct with patience that way of thinking which is exactly in accordance with the mind of our Lord. God will not make us think as Jesus thought, we have to do that ourselves, to bring "into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." Peter's counsel to "add," means to form habits on the basis of the new life which God has put in.

3. In the Domain of Devotion

Ye are My friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. (John 15:14)

God created man to be His friend. If we are the friends of Jesus we have deliberately and carefully to lay down our life for Him. It is difficult, and thank God it is! When once the relationship of being the friends of Jesus is understood, we shall be called upon to exhibit to everyone we meet the love He has shown to us. Watch the kind of people God brings across your path, you will find it is His way of picturing to you the kind of person you have been to Him.—"You are My child, the friend of My Son, now exhibit to that 'hedgehoggy' person the love I exhibited to you when you were like that towards Me; exhibit to that mean, selfish person exactly the love I showed you when you were mean and selfish." We shall find ample room to eat "humble pie" all the days of our life. The thing that keeps us going is to recognise the humour of our heavenly Father in it all, and we shall meet the disagreeable person with a spiritual chuckle because we know what God is doing, He is giving us a mirror that we may see what we have been like towards Him; now we have the chance to prove ourselves His friends, and the other person will be amazed and say—"Why the more I poke her, the sweeter she gets!" and will tumble in where we tumbled in, into the grace of God.

YOU NEED NOT SIN

Romans 6:13-18

How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? (Romans 6:2)

We have to build in faith on the presupposition of the perfect Atonement of Jesus Christ, not build on an experience. If we construct our faith on our experience, we produce that most unscriptural type of holiness, an isolated life, with our eyes fixed on our own whiteness. If we do not base all our thinking on the presupposition of the Atonement, we shall produce a faith conscious of itself, hysterical and unholy, that cannot do the work of the world. Beware of the piety that has no presupposition of the Atonement, it is no use for anything but leading a sequestered life; it is useless to God and a nuisance to man. We have to base resolutely in unshaken faith on the complete and perfect Atonement of Jesus Christ.

"Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." How many of us reckon like that, or do our prayers, our piety, come in the way? Our prayers and our piety are the evidence that we are on the right foundation. Is the Atonement the one thing that exerts a dominating influence in my life?

1. If You Obey in the Matter of Dedication

Yield...your members as instruments of righteousness unto God. (Romans 6:13)

There is something we must do, viz., dedicate our members. Have we ever, as saved souls dedicated our bodies to God? "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God," not "Present your all," but present your body. If you obey in this matter of dedication, you can keep your bodily life free from vice and sin. Sin dwells in human nature, but it has no light there, it does not belong to human nature as God created it. Deny the disposition of sin, says Paul, bring it to the place of crucifixion (v. 6). Let not sin i.e., your right to yourself, rule any longer, deny that disposition and let Jesus Christ rule. Never let any member dominate and say—You must.

2. If You Obey in the Matter of Deliverance

For sin shall not have dominion over you. (Romans 6:14)

"Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body," that is, do not let sin command your body. Sin is a monarch ruling on the outside, demanding obedience on the inside. We can add nothing to the Atonement, we can do nothing for our deliverance, but we must manifest that we are delivered from sin. If you obey in this matter of deliverance, you will realise that there is no bondage in the Atonement. "Even so reckon ye yourselves to be . . . alive unto God in Jesus Christ" (RV).

3. If You Obey in the Matter of Discernment

What then? Shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? (Romans 6:15)

Do you discern that Jesus Christ means His Atonement to be recognised there—in my home life, in my business? The grace of God is absolute, but your obedience must prove that you do not receive it in vain. Continually bring yourself to the bar of judgement and ask-Where is the discernment of the Atonement in this matter and in that? The grace of God in a human being is proved by the discernment of the Atonement in unobtrusive practical ways. The amateur providence element, the insistence of commonsense morality, is the great enemy of the life of Jesus in a saint because it competes with the Atonement— "Of course God does not mean that the Atonement is to be worked out through my finger-tips, in the getting of meals, in my business!" If the Atonement does not work out there, it will work out nowhere. Beware of the piety that denies the natural life, it is a fraud. We can all shine in the sun, but Jesus wants us to shine where there is no sun, where it is dark with the press of practical things.

4. If You Obey in the Matter of Debate

Know ye not, that to whom ye yield [KJV] yourselves as servants unto obedience, his servants ye are whom ye obey? (Romans 6:16 RV)

What do you debate about in your mind? When Jesus speaks, never say: "Let us talk this matter over." Some of us obey God in prayer meetings only or in devotional times; we never think of obeying Him at mealtimes or in our offices, etc. We fail whenever we forget to do in the insignificant details those things we were delighted to see when we were looking into the law of God. (See James 1:22–25.) When things come out against us, do we sit down under them, or have we such a habit of mind that God is always first, not piously and pathetically, but actually? Prayer does not place God first; prayer is the evidence that our minds are fixed on God. We have to get our minds used to putting God first, it is conscious to begin with. The snare is putting common sense first. Jesus says—Reverse the order, put God first. The tiniest thing that comes between you and God will blot God out. A twinge of neuralgia is sufficient to make some of us forget the Atonement.

5. If You Obey in the Matter of Delight

But ye have obeyed from the heart. (Romans 6:17)

"Obedience of the heart is the heart of obedience." Whenever we obey, the delight of the supernatural grace of God meets our obedience instantly. Absolute Deity is on our side at once every time we obey, so that natural obedience and the grace of God coincide. If we look at obedience apart from the presupposition of the Atonement, it makes it seem absurd. Obedience means that we bank everything on the Atonement, and the supernatural grace of God is a delight. We cannot do anything pleasing to God unless there is this deliberate building on the presupposition of the Atonement.

6. If You Obey in the Matter of Devotion

Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness. (Romans 6:18)

Thank God we can do what we ought to do—when? NOW! We are free to become the servants of righteousness. Sin is nothing but a big bully. Sin was killed at the Cross of Christ; it has no power at all over those who are set free by the Atonement of Jesus and are prosecuting their life in Him: "... in nothing terrified by your adversaries."

We have to "grow in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." The more we are taught, the more we can be taught, and the more we are taught the more the growth and the glorifying of God will go on in our souls. Have we ever been taught anything? Being taught of God is a delightful life, it means the discernment is exercised. God does not put us in His "show room," we are here for Him to show His marvellous works in us and to use us in His enterprises.

We have to prosecute our life in Christ, not be dragged in His wake or the strain will be too heavy and down we shall go. The only place to prosecute our life in Christ is just where we are, in the din of things, and the only way in which we can prosecute our life in Christ is to remember that it is God Who engineers circumstances, and that the only place where we can be of use to Him is where we are, not where we are not. God is in the obvious things.

Am I banking in faith on the Eternal Fact of the Atonement? Am I so devoted to my Lord that He is working out His purposes in me? Or am I one of those miserable individuals who is working out his own particular type of religion by himself? We have to measure every type of experience by the Lord Jesus Christ and His Atonement. We must build on the great fact of the Redemption which God has performed through Christ, and continually presuppose that Redemption. If we fail to prosecute our life in Jesus, and build our faith on our experiences only, then the further away we get from our experiences, the dimmer will Jesus Christ become.

WHAT NEXT?

Matthew 5:45-48

1. Deny Yourself More Than Others

That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven. (Matthew 5:45)

According to the Bible, self-seeking did not begin on earth, it began in heaven and was turned out of heaven because it was unworthy to live there, and it will never get back again. If we are to be Christian after the stamp Our Lord requires, we must deny ourselves more than others. Our Lord never taught us to deny sin: sin must be destroyed, not denied. Nothing sinful can ever be good. "If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself" (Matthew 16:24 RV). Our Lord is referring to the natural self which must be denied in order that it may be made spiritual. Our Lord does not teach "Deeper Death to Self"; He teaches death right out to my self, death right out to self-realisation and self-seeing. Sin and self are not the same thing. Sin does not belong to human nature as God created it. Adam was innocent when God created him, and God intended him to take part in his own moral development, and to transform his natural life into a spiritual life by obedience; but Adam refused to do it. Our Lord continually denied the natural and turned it into the spiritual by obedience. With Our Lord everything was spiritual. His eating and drinking were acts of continual subordination to His Father's will (cf. Matthew 4:2-4). We have a natural life to be sacrificed and thereby turned into a spiritual, life. The meaning of sacrifice is giving the best we have to God, denying it to ourselves, that He may make it an eternal possession of His and ours.

2. Devote Yourself to Prayer More Than Others

Lord, teach us to pray. (Luke 11:1)

Pray without ceasing. (1 Thessalonians 5:17)

Never say you will pray about a thing; pray about it. Our Lord's teaching about prayer is so amazingly simple but at the same time so amazingly profound that we are apt to miss His meaning. The danger is to water down what Jesus says about prayer and make it mean something more common sense; if it were only common sense, it was not worth His while to say it. The things Jesus says about prayer are supernatural revelations.

It is not part of the life of a natural man to pray. We hear it said that a man will suffer in his life if he does not pray; I question it. What will suffer is the life of the Son of God in him, which is nourished not by food but by prayer. When a man is born from above (RV mg), the life of the Son of God is born in him, and he can either starve that life or nourish it. Prayer is the way the life of the Son of God is nourished. God has so constituted things that prayer on the basis of Redemption alters the way a man looks at things. Prayer is not a question of altering things externally, but of working wonders in a man's disposition. One great effect of prayer is that it enables the soul to command the body. By obedience I make my body submissive to my soul, but prayer puts my soul in command of my body. It is one thing to have the body in subjection, but another thing to be able to command it. When I command my body, I make it an ally, the means by which my spiritual life is furthered.

"For your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him" (Matthew 6:8). If God sees that my spiritual life will be furthered by giving the things for which I ask, then He will give them, but that is not the end of prayer. The end of prayer is that I come to know God Himself. If I allow my bodily needs to get out of relationship to God, then those needs will keep me morbidly interested in myself all the time, much to the devil's enjoyment. We have to leave ourselves resolutely in God's hands and launch out into the work of intercession on the basis of faith in the perfect Redemption of Jesus.

3. Dedicate Yourself to Love More Than Others

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. (Matthew 22:37–38)

If ye love Me, keep My commandments. (John 14:15)

Before we can love God we must have the Lover of God in us, viz., the Holy Spirit. When the Holy Spirit has shed abroad the love of God in our hearts, then that love requires cultivation. No love on earth will develop without being cultivated. We have to dedicate ourselves to love, which means identifying ourselves with God's interests in other people, and God is interested in some funny people, viz.; in you and in me! We must beware of letting natural affinities hinder our walking in love. One of the most cruel ways of killing love is by disdain built on natural affinities. To be guided by our affinities is a natural tendency, but spiritually this tendency must be denied, and as we deny it we find that God gives us affinity with those for whom we have no natural affinity. Is there anyone in your life who would not be there if you were not a Christian? The love of God is not mere sentimentality; it is a most practical thing for the saint to love as God loves. The springs of love are in God, not in us. The love of God is only in us when it has been shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, and the evidence that it is there is the spontaneous way in which it is manifested.

4. Dispose Yourself to Believe More Than Others

Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God? (John 11:40)

He that believeth on Me, . . . out of [him] shall flow rivers of living water. (John 7:38)

"I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ," said Paul, "for it is the power of God to salvation to everyone that believeth." So as long as we live in a religious compartment, make our own theology, wear doctrinal "blinkers," and live only amongst those who agree with us, we shall not see where the shame comes in; but let God shift us and bring us into contact with those who are indifferent to what we believe, and we shall realise soon the truth of what our Lord said—"therefore the world hateth you." If we really believed some phases of our Lord's teaching it would make us a laughing stock in the eyes of the world. It requires the miracle of God's grace for us to believe as Jesus taught us to.

"Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" Every time our programme of belief is clear to our minds we come across something that contradicts it. Faith, before it is real, must be tried. As we dispose ourselves to believe, we see God all the time, not in spasms. We see His arm behind all the facts in individual life and in history. Are we disposing ourselves to believe more than others?

5. Determine to Know More Than Others

If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of Myself. (John 7:17)

If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them. (John 13:17)

If you believe in Jesus, you will not spend all your time in the smooth waters just inside the harbour, full of exhilaration and delight, but always moored; you will have to go out through the harbour bar into the great deeps of God and begin to know for yourself, begin to get spiritual discernment. If you do not cut the moorings, God will have to break them with a storm and send you out. Why not unloosen and launch all on God and go out on the great swelling tide of His purpose?

"If any man will do His will, he shall know. . . ." When you know you should do a thing and you do it, immediately you will know more. If you revise where you are stodgy spiritually, you will find it goes back to the point where there was one thing you knew you should do, but you did not do it because there seemed no immediate call to, and now you have no perception, no discernment. Instead of being spiritually self-possessed at the time of crisis, you are spiritually distracted. It is a dangerous thing to refuse to go on knowing.

When the Spirit of God has opened your mind by His incoming and you are determining to know more, you will find that external circumstances and internal knowledge go together, and by obedience you begin to fulfil your spiritual destiny. The counterfeit of obedience is the state of mind in which you work up occasions to sacrifice yourself, ardour is mistaken for the discernment built on knowledge. "To obey is better than sacrifice." It is a great deal better to fulfil the purpose of God in your life by discerning His will than it is to perform great acts of self-sacrifice.

Beware of harking back to a past knowledge when God wants to bring you into a new relationship; beware of harking back to what you once were when God wants you to be something you have never been.

PULL YOURSELF TOGETHER

If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. (John 15:7)

In all Christian experience there must be the presupposition of the Atonement; we have to build in faith on the great work which God has performed through Christ. We cannot save ourselves, or sanctify ourselves; we cannot atone for sin; we cannot redeem the world; we cannot make right what is wrong, pure what is impure, holy what is unholy—all that is the sovereign work of God. God has made a perfect Atonement, are we in the habit of realising it? We must never put character in the place of faith, there is a great danger of doing so. Our character can never be meritorious before God: we stand before God on the basis of His grace. Character is the evidence that we are built on the right foundation. What we need is the perfect realisation of the Atonement of Jesus Christ. The need is not to do things, but to believe. "What must I do to be saved? . . . Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."

1. By the Habit of Constantly Realising If ye abide in Me...

If we continue to act and think and work from the centre of abiding in Jesus, then Jesus says that other things will happen, viz., we shall bring forth fruit. Are we abiding in Jesus? Do we take time to abide? What is the dominating factor of power in our lives? Is it work, service, sacrifice for others? The thing that ought to exert the greatest power in our lives is the Atonement. Do we give one minute out of every sixty to make ourselves realise it? We must get into the habit of constantly realising the Atonement, of centralising everything there. To concentrate causes consciousness of effort to begin with. "Abide in Me," says Jesus. It is imperative on our part that we abide in Jesus. It is a responsibility for us to continually realise the Eternal Fact of the Atonement.

2. By the Habit of Constantly Remembering and My words abide in you...

We maintain our relationship to Jesus by the use of the means which He gives us, viz., His words. Some of us can only hear God in the thunder of revivals or in public worship; we have to learn to listen to God's voice in the ordinary circumstances of life. It is not the length of time we give to a thing that matters, but whether the time we give opens the door to the greatest power in our life. The greatest factor in life is that which exerts most power, not the element which takes most time. The five minutes we give to the words of Jesus the first thing in the morning are worth more than all the rest of the day.

Beware of any experience that does not wed itself to the words of Jesus. Experience is simply the doorway into the great revelation of Jesus Christ. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Read the Bible, whether you understand it or not, and the Holy Spirit will bring back some word of Jesus to you in a particular set of circumstances and make it living; the point is—will you be loyal to that word? Never ask anyone else what the word means, go direct to God about it. Are we in the habit of listening to the words of Jesus? Do we realise that Jesus knows more about our business than we do ourselves? Do we take His word for our clothes, our money, our domestic work; or do we think we can manage these things for ourselves? The Spirit of God has the habit of taking the words of Jesus out of their scriptural setting and putting them into the setting of our personal lives.

3. By the Habit of Constantly Requesting ye shall ask what ye will...

This solves the mystery of what we should pray for. If we are abiding in Jesus, we shall ask what He wants us to ask whether we are conscious of doing so or not. "Ye shall ask what ye will," i.e., what your will is in. The meaning of prayer is that we recognise we are in the relationship of a child to his father. "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him." When once we realise that we can never think of anything our Father will forget, worry becomes impossible. Beware of getting into a panic. Panic is bad for the natural heart, and it is destructive to the spiritual life. "Let not your heart be troubled"—it is a command. Are we in the habit of constantly requesting, of continually talking to Jesus about everything? Where we go in the time of trial proves what the great underlying power of our lives is.

4. By the Habit of Constantly Recognising ... and it shall be done unto you.

If we are abiding in Jesus and His words are abiding in us, then Jesus says God will answer our prayers. Do we recognise that? "But," you say, "suppose I ask for something not according to God's will?" I defy you to, if you are fulfilling the abiding in Jesus. The disciple who is in the condition of abiding in Jesus is the will of God, and his apparent free choices are God's foreordained decrees. Mysterious? Logically absurd? But a glorious truth to a saint.

"And whatsoever ye shall ask in My Name, that will I do." Are we performing this ministry of the interior?

Do we pray for those in prominent places, for the "Pauls"? There is no snare or danger of infatuation or pride or the "show business" in prayer. Prayer is a hidden, obscure ministry which brings forth fruit that glorifies the Father. "Severed from Me you can do nothing," i.e., "you will not bear My fruit, you will bear something that did not come from Me at all"; but—"Abide in Me," and you will bring forth fruit that testifies to the nature of the vine, fruit whereby the Father is glorified. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man," one who is abiding, "availeth much." Are we constantly recognising that God does answer prayer if we are abiding in Jesus? Are we building in faith on the presupposition of the Atonement and bringing everything to that one centre, or are we allowing our lives to be frittered away? Is Jesus Christ dominating every interest of our lives more and more? This does not mean that we are to be thinking about God always and giving all our time to so-called religious work, but it does mean that we are to concentrate on the great fact of the Atonement with the greatest amount of our time even to the ordinary things of life as they are engineered for us by God.

Those who use the jargon of "abiding in Christ," if not really abiding are an annoyance and an irritation. If we make the Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ the great exerting influence of our life, every phase of our life will bear fruit for God. Take time and get to know whether the Atonement is the central point of all power for you, and remember that Satan's aim is to keep you away from that point of power. Jesus said that the cares of this world and the lust of other things would choke His word. We can choke God's word with a yawn; we can hinder the time that should be spent with God by remembering we have other things to do. "I haven't time!" Of course you have not time! Take time, strangle some other interests and make time to realise that the centre of power in your life is the Lord Jesus Christ and His Atonement. Paul limited his knowledge to that one thing—"I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.' We have to learn to concentrate our affinities, to determine to be limited.

2 Timothy 3:14–15

1. In What You Have Been Taught

But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned...(2 Timothy 3:14)

We learn very few things, because we learn that only to which we give our wits. Are we sticking to the things we have learned? We say we believe that God is love, but have we learned that He is? Have we assimilated it? We see truths, but we are not yet in the circumstances where we can learn them. Many things are taught, but we cannot learn them all at once. We say—"Oh yes, I would like to be that," then there comes the "stickat-iveness"—sixty seconds every minute, sixty minutes every hour. The only way in which we learn is by the terrific iteration of the commonplace.

Experience is never the ground of our confidence; experience is the opening of the door to a new life which must be continued in. Some of us are continually having doors opened, but we will not go through them. Don't slack off, keep on with the thing which you have learned. We speak about testifying to the experience of sanctification; what we really testify to is not an experience of sanctification but to a revelation granted us by God of what sanctification is: the experience of sanctification is the rest of life from that moment.

2. In What You Have Tested and hast been assured of . . . (v. 14)

Many of us believe, but we will not confess to what we believe, consequently we are assured of nothing. "I did ask God for the Holy Spirit, but I do not feel sure of anything." Confess what you believe for, and instantly the assurance of that for which you believe will be made yours. We are so terribly afraid to venture on what God says. Confession is not for the sake of other people, but for our own sake. Confession means we have trusted God for this thing and we believe on the ground of His word that the work is done. We realise by confessing that we have no one saving God to stand by us. Have we ever taken the cross of confessing? When we believe with the heart, we have to confess with our mouth what we believe to those whose business it is to know. The reason some of us lack assurance is because we do not continue in what we have tested, something has made us slack off.

3. In Loyalty to Your Teachers

knowing of whom thou hast learned them . . . (v. 14)

God brings His own particular teachers into our lives, and we have to watch that we do not slack off in our loyalty to them. Loyalty to teachers is a very rare thing. The man or woman used by God to teach me is not necessarily the one used to teach you. We must not foist our teachers on everyone else. Are we loyal, to our teachers, or are we spiritual butterflies? Does every new-comer on the highway of spiritual life switch us off on to a new line? God very rarely teaches direct from His word until the way for that has been opened by His own order—"and He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers" (Ephesians 4:11). God makes His own teachers; we have to see that we do not slack off in our loyalty to them.

4. In the Scripture Truth and that from \hat{a} child thou hast known the holy scriptures...(v. 15)

It is not the thing on which we spend most time that moulds us, but the thing that exerts the greatest power.

Five minutes with God and His word is worth more than all the rest of the day. Do we come to the Bible to be spoken to by God, to be made "wise unto salvation," or simply to hunt for texts on which to build addresses? There are people who vagabond through the Bible, taking sufficient only out of it for the making of sermons, they never let the word of God walk out of the Bible and talk to them. Beware of living from hand to mouth in spiritual matters; do not be a spiritual mendicant.

Beware of the novel things. Some of us spiritually are independent, impudent travellers—"Oh, I can find my way all right." The thing to do is to keep on the steady track—"Honour thy father and thy mother." "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy," etc. God brings back what is old in order to test our loyalty. All the novel things slip away; the essential track remains.

5. In the Salvation Testimony

... which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. (v. 15)

The Bible is not the word of God to us unless we come to it through what Jesus Christ says. The Scriptures, from Genesis to Revelation, are all revelations of Jesus Christ. The context of the Bible is Our Lord himself, and until we are rightly related to Him, the Bible is no more to us than an ordinary book. We cannot know the Holy Scriptures by intellectual exercises. The key to our understanding of the Bible is not our intelligence, but our personal relationship to Jesus Christ (cf. John 5:39–40). The New Testament was not written in order to prove that Jesus Christ is the Son of God; but written to confirm the faith of those who believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. There are no problems in the New Testament. We take much for granted, but nothing is ever ours until we have bought it by pain; a thing is worth just what it costs. We seem to lose everything when we go through the suffering of experience, but bit by bit we get it back. The Bible treats us as human life does—roughly.

"He wakeneth morning by morning, He wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned." Do we allow ourselves to be arrested when we read the Holy Scriptures? The vital relationship of the Christian to the Bible is not that he worships the "letter," but that the Holy Spirit makes the words of the Bible "spirit and life" to him. When we are born from above (RV mg) the Bible becomes to us a universe of revelation facts whereby we feed our knowledge of Jesus Christ.

PRACTISING GODLINESS

Work out your own salvation... For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure. (Philippians 2:12–13)

When Our Lord is presented to the conscience, the first thing conscience does is to rouse the will, and the will agrees with God always. You say—"I do not know whether my will is in agreement with God"—look to Jesus, and you will find that your will and your conscience are in agreement with God every time. The element in you which makes you say "I shan't" to God is something less profound than your will, it is perversity, or obstinacy, which are never in agreement with God. Obstinacy is a remnant of the disposition of sin, and it fights against that which a man's will and conscience indicate to be right. If we persist in being perverse and obstinate, we shall ultimately get to the place where the emotions of will and conscience are stultified.

Will is the essential element in the creation of man; sin is a perverse disposition that has entered into man. The profound thing in man is his will, not sin. Human nature as God made it was not sinful, and it was human nature as God made it that Our Lord took on Him. Obstinacy is an unintelligent "wodge" that refuses to be enlightened. It continually surprises you—"Why didn't I do that thing?" The only cure for obstinacy is to be blown up by dynamite, and the dynamite is obedience to the Holy Spirit. When the Holy Spirit comes into my human spirit, He makes me one with Jesus as He was one with His Father, it is an identification that raises the personality to its right place.

1. The Way of the Working of God

For it is God which worketh in you to will. . . .

Before a man is rightly related to God, his conscience may be a source of torture and distress to him, but when he is born again it becomes a source of joy and delight because he realises that not only are his will and his conscience in agreement with God, but that God's will is his will, and the life is as natural as breathing, it is a life of proving, or making out, what is "that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

Is it possible for human nature to get to such a standard that it can work out actually what God wills? God's word says it is. God not only gives me supernatural grace, but He is in me to will and to do of His good pleasure, and that means I can do all that God's will and my conscience indicate I should do. If I am a child of God, I realise not only that God is the source of my will, but that God is in me to will. I do not bring an opposed will to God's will, God's will is my will, and my natural choices are along the line of His will. Then I begin to understand that God engineers circumstances for me to do His will in them, not for me to lie down under them and give way to self-pity. We are called to do God's will here and now; are we doing it or are we murmuring—"Why should I be in these trying circumstances?" "Why should I have these disabilities?" That is murmuring. Do God's will. God not only expects me to do His will, but He is in me to do it.

Doing God's will is never hard. The only thing that is hard is not doing His will. All the forces of nature and of grace are at the back of the man who does God's will because in obedience we let God have His amazing way with us. If some of us were taken to be specimens of doing God's will, we should be sorry recommendations! We ought to be superabounding with joy and delight because God is working in us to will and to do of His good pleasure. The "goodest" thing there is is the will of God. God's will is hard only when it comes up against our stubbornness, then it is as cruel as a ploughshare and as devastating as an earthquake. God is merciless with the thing that tells against the relationship of a man to Himself. When once God does have His way, we are emancipated into the very life of God, i.e., into the life that Jesus lived. The only estimate of a consistent Christian character is that the life of the Son of God is being manifested in the bodily life.

2. The Way of the Working of the Godly

Work out your own salvation. . . .

If we are practising godliness, i.e., practising in our life day by day and week by week, working out what God works in, then we shall find when the crisis comes that our nature will stand by us, because we have disciplined and trained our nature to work out what God works in. We make what we practise second nature, and in the crisis as well as in the details of life we find that not only does God's grace stand by us, but also our own nature, we have made it an ally. If we have not been practising in the daily round, it is not God's grace that fails when the crisis comes, but our nature that deserts us, and we fail. God does not make our habits for us or do the practising—God alters our disposition and we are left to work out the new disposition He has put in, by practice and the forming of habits. If we have had a great illumination of God's grace, we have to go on to work out all that God has worked in; the danger is that we become stationary.

"Work out your own salvation. . . ." We have not to work out that which tells for our salvation, but to work out in the expression of our lives the salvation which God has worked in. What does my tongue say? What things do my ears like to listen to? What kind of bodily associates do I like to be with?

These things reveal whether we are working out the salvation God has worked in. The inward working is God's; the outward working is ours. In regeneration God puts us into line with Himself so that by the expression of that union in our bodily lives we may prove Whose we are. The first lesson to learn is that God works on the inside, and we have to work on the outside what He has wrought inside. The place for yielding and surrendering comes just there. We hinder God when we try to work on the inside. So many of us put prayer and consecration in place of God's work; we make ourselves the workers. God is the Worker, and He is after spirituality. God does nothing other than the profound; we have to do the practical. We have to see that we continually work out with concentration and care that which God has worked in, not work our own salvation, but work it out. We have to work out what God works in whilst we base resolutely in unshaken faith on the complete and perfect Redemption of the Lord Jesus Christ.

INTRODUCTION

Source

The material in Our Portrait in Genesis is from lectures by Oswald Chambers to his Old Testament studies class at the Bible Training College, London, from September 1914 to January 1915 and from April to July 1915.

Publication History

- As Articles: "Notes on Genesis," chapters 26 through 37, were published in the BTC Monthly Journal² between April 1941 and May 1943; "Notes on Genesis," chapters 1 through 6, were published between April 1951 and March 1952.
- As a book: Our Portrait in Genesis was first published in 1957. Gems from Genesis (1989) combined Not Knowing Whither (1934) and Our Portrait in Genesis in one volume. In the present collection, these books are presented as two separate volumes, the form in which they were originally published.

Chambers' lectures on Genesis were given in his Old Testament studies class at the Bible Training College between September 1914 and July 1915. Although the lectures covered Genesis chronologically, they were not published in order. The lectures on chapters 12 through 25 appeared in 1934 as Not Knowing Whither, Studies in the Life of Abraham. Twenty-three years elapsed before Mrs. Chambers published her notes from the other chapters as Our Portrait in Genesis.

Neither volume included Oswald's two lectures on Genesis 11, on the tower of Babel. It may have been simply Mrs. Chambers' editorial decision regarding material she considered of greatest interest to the reader. Or, she may have been unable to attend every class and did not have notes on chapter 11—during the eleven-month span of these lectures she had the care of their infant daughter, Kathleen,³ and, as lady superintendent of the college, oversight of myriad daily details, as well as the taking of verbatim shorthand notes of everything her husband said.

Our Portrait in Genesis is the last book published by Mrs. Chambers from her shorthand notes. (The Servant as His Lord, published in 1959, combined four previously published booklets.) In 1960, Mrs. Chambers began to show evidence of severe mental illness, which virtually curtailed her work. She died in 1966.

FOREWORD

Now these things were our examples. 1 Corinthians 10:6

We know nothing of the beginning of life on this planet Earth unless we accept the revealed facts recorded in the Bible. When these early stories are accepted as a true record of individual lives we can learn much about God's dealings with men and women in every age. There are flashes of light on God's relation to fallen Man which can touch a live nerve in a modern wrongdoer, and something of the Divine mercy is seen as it persists with perverse and misguided men.

Oswald Chambers brings out the moral significance of human conduct; the intrusion of sin into human affairs, and God's counter-move against sin and against the Satanic power behind the scenes. "Now these things were our examples," wrote the Apostle Paul in reference to some Old Testament incidents. This can be applied to Cain and Abel, to Noah, and to Abraham ("in these things they became figures of us"—RV margin) as we see the subtle working of sin in the unregenerate human heart; of craftiness and insincerity between man and man; of the law of retribution on the one hand or the due recompense on the other.

Here is a book for to-day. The Spirit of God is revealing the deep things of God, especially as they bear on the deep things of humanity. Above all we hear of the God of all grace, Who gave His Son to be a propitiation for our sins—yours and mine—"and not for ours only, but also for the whole world." I thank God for this gallery of portraits in Genesis, and for the Spirit's illumination through the expositor's instructed and clear-seeing mind.

BEGINNINGS

In the beginning God . . . Genesis 1:1

I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty. Revelation 1:8

The Bible never argues or debates, it states revelation facts, and in order to understand these facts we are dependent entirely, not on intellectual curiosity, but on a relationship of faith. Our perception of Bible truth is of the nature of implicit vision granted by the Holy Spirit, and the remarkable thing about the Holy Spirit's illumination of Bible truth is that it commends itself as being the true interpretation to every child of God who is in the light.

Science (knowledge systematised) is man's intellectual effort to expound established facts, facts which all intelligent men accept as facts; it is his attempt to arrange these facts into some kind of unity which will not contradict the fundamental way man is made. When we are born again we come in contact with another domain of facts, viz., the Bible domain of revelation facts, and there must be an at-one-ment made between the two domains. Scientific "truth" is apt to be accepted readily while we are sceptical over revelations made by the Holy Spirit. Our tendency is to put truth into a dogma: Truth is a Person. "I am . . . the Truth," said Jesus.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void ["waste and void," RV]. (Genesis 1:1–2)

Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear. (Hebrews 11:3)

Fundamentally, chaos—the state of matter before it was reduced to order by the Creator—is not to be regarded necessarily as the result of Divine judgement but as the foundation of cosmos, like a painter's palette where he mixes his colours: he sees in it what you cannot. "Bairns and fools shouldn't see half-done work." We must bear in mind that the constructed world of man we see to-day is not the created world of God. The basis of man's life has had a formation put upon it which is not of God; what is needed is not the re-forming of the basis, but the removal of that which has been erected on the basis. If I build my life on the things which God did not form He will have to destroy them, shake them back into chaos. That is why whenever a man, moral or immoral, sees for the first time the light of God in Jesus Christ it produces conviction of sin, and he cries out, "Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord." When the Holy Spirit comes into a man "his beauty is consumed away," the perfectly ordered completeness of his whole nature is broken up; then the Holy Spirit, brooding over the chaos that is produced, brings a word of God, and as that word is received and obeyed a new life is formed.

"And the Spirit of God moved upon ['was brooding upon,' RV mg] the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light: and there was light." God's word creates, and creates by its own power. God speaks, and His word performs that which He sends it to accomplish (cf. Isaiah 55:11). "And God saw the light, that it was good": The matter of God's creation is a satisfaction to God, and when we come to know God by His Spirit we are as delighted with His creation as He is Himself. A child enjoys all that God has created, everything is wonderful to him.

As in the beginning God's word was the creative fiat, and that word's witness to itself satisfied God, so the work of Christ in a disciple witnesses to Him; it is the Living Word speaking the words, "the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." My value to God is that in obedience to His spoken word I present to Him in actuality His idea in sending it forth, God's word expressed in me becomes its own witness to God. God's word is clear and emphatic, and when we first hear it we are full of joy; then that word has to become its own witness and give Him satisfaction. The fanatic mistakes the vision which the word brings for its expression in actuality. Am I prepared to put God's word into its right place, into the matter of "me"? If I am, it will bring forth, not my idea, but God's idea, viz., the life according to God. It is not my faith laying hold of the word, but the life in the word laying hold on me and faith is as natural as breathing, and I say, "Why, bless God, I know that is true!" Strictly speaking, no seed germ contains in itself the maturer growth, it is the other forces acting outside it as well as its own inherent life that determines what it will be ultimately.

And God saw every thing that He had made, and, behold, it was very good. . . . And God blessed the seventh day, and hallowed it: because that in it He rested from all His work which God had created and made. (Genesis 1:31; 2:3 RV)

Six days God laboured, thinking Creation, until, as He thought, so it was. On the seventh day God rested, not from fatigue, but because that work was finished which enabled Him to rest, immanent in all the laws of Nature, in constant manifestation of His overruling power, so that it were as easy for God to perform a miracle to-day as "in the beginning."

And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground. (Genesis 2:7)

The first man is of the earth, earthy. (1 Corinthians 15:47)

These verses refer to the fundamental nature of man, don't complicate their meaning by introducing the doctrine of sin at the moment. These two things, dust and Divinity, make up man. That he is made of the dust of the ground is man's glory, not his shame it is only his shame in so far as he is a sinner, because in it he is to manifest the image of God. We are apt to think because we are "of the earth, earthy," that this is our humiliation, but it is not so; it is the very thing God's word makes most of. A doctrine which has insinuated itself right into the heart of Christianity and has a hold on it like an octopus, is the inveterate belief that sin is in matter, therefore as long as there is any "matter" about me there must be sin in me. If sin were in matter it would be untrue to say that Jesus Christ was "without sin" because He took on Him our flesh and blood, "becoming in [RV mg] the likeness of men." Sin does not belong to human nature as God designed it, it is abnormal, therefore to speak of sin being "eradicated," rooted up, is nonsense, it never was planted in. I have no business to say, "in Christ I am all right but in myself I am all wrong"; I have to see to it that everything related to my physical life is lived in harmony with and perfect obedience to the life of the Son of God in me.

The Originator and Maintainer of the new life imparted to us by the Redemption is Christ Himself, and our Lord's words in John 6:56 reveal His fathomless conception of that life—"he that eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood, dwelleth in Me, and I in him." Before, the disposition of self-will ruled— You touch my flesh, and I hit you back; you touch my blood, and it boils in passion. Now, says Jesus, let the very corpuscles of your blood, every nerve and cell of your flesh, exhibit the new life which has been created in you. That life is exhibited in this bodily temple of the Holy Ghost ("What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you?"), it is a fleshly temple, not a spiritual one. The whole meaning of being born again and becoming identified with the death of Christ is that His life might be manifested in our mortal flesh. When we are born from above (RV mg) the life of the Son of God is born in us, and the perfection of that life enables us not only to "make out" (MOFFATT) what the will of God is, but to carry out His will in our natural human life.

TEMPTATION IN PARADISE

There is something inconceivable to us in Adam's relationship to God, he saw God as simply as we see one another—"And they heard the voice ['sound,' RV mg] of the LORD God walking in the garden in the cool of the day" (Genesis 3:8). Until Adam fell, he was not interested in God, he was one with God in communion—a man is never interested in that which he is; when Adam fell, he became so appallingly interested in God that he was afraid of Him-"and the man and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the LORD God amongst the trees of the garden" (RV). Sin finds us severed from God and interested only in anything we can be told about Him, consequently there is an element of fear; when we become children of God, there is no fear. As long as a child has not done wrong he enjoys perfect freedom and confidence towards his parents, but let him disobey, and the one he disobeys becomes someone in whom he is interested, with an element of fear. Conscious piety springs from being interested in God—"I want to know whether I am right with God"; if you are right with God, you are so one with Him that you are unconscious of it, the relationship is deeper than consciousness because you are being disposed by the very nature of God.

When the Apostle Paul talks of a man sinning: "Therefore, as through one man sin entered into the world" (RV), remember who it is he refers to, viz., not to a being like you or me, but to the great Federal Head of the human race. Sin is not part of human nature as God designed it, it is extraneous. The Bible looks on sin, not as a disease, but as red-handed rebellion against the domination of the Creator. The essence of sin is—"I won't allow anybody to 'boss' me saving myself," and it may manifest itself in a morally good man as well as in a morally bad man. Sin has not to do with morality or immorality, it has to do with my claim to my right to myself, a deliberate and emphatic independence of God, though I veneer it over with Christian phraseology. If, as a saint, I allow this spirit to get back into me, I become the embodiment of heaven and hell in conflict.

"And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Genesis 2:16–17). "And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die" (3:4). Eve finds that what Satan told her is true, death does not strike them all at once: but its possibility has come in. Death has secretly begun. We transgress a law of God and expect an experience akin to death, but exactly the opposite happens, we feel enlarged, more broad-minded, more tolerant of evil, but we are more powerless; knowledge which comes from eating of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, instead of instigating to action, paralyses.

"For the wages of sin is death"—man becomes subject to death, not because he is a finite being, but because of sin. Whenever a man touches sin, death is the inevitable result, it is the way God has constituted him; when he is "alive" in sin, he is "dead" to God. "And you did He quicken, when ye were dead through your trespasses and sins" (Ephesians 2:1 RV). What every human being inherits is not punishment for sin but the disposition of sin which entered into the world through one man, "and death through sin; and so death passed upon all men for that all have sinned." Death was not in God's purpose for man. When we are born again we have exactly the experience of going through death. "Thou canst not see My face: for man shall not see Me and live" (Exodus 33:20 RV)—and yet we do see God and live, but we only see God by going through death. I must die, die right out to my claim to my right to myself, and receive the gift of eternal life, which is "the gift of God . . . through Jesus Christ our Lord."

"And the man said, The woman whom Thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat." Adam does not blame himself; neither does Eve blame herself: "And the woman said, The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat." They both evade the moral truth. Verbal truth is rarely moral truth. It takes a long time to bring me to the place where I will blame myself. Adam admits, but there is no confession, he implies rather that God is to blame— "You should not have put me in a position where I could disobey; I don't deny I did wrong, but remember the extenuating circumstances, You shouldn't be so stern and holy." That is the first manifestation of the spirit of anarchy. The diabolical nature of sin is that it hates God, because when I am face to face with the holiness of God I know there is no escape, consequently there is nothing the natural heart of man hates like a holy God. We don't live deep enough down to realise this. "If only God would not be so holy as my conscience tells me He is." It is a mixed-up certainty, I know I am not right with God and I don't want to be-and yet I do. I will do anything rather than take the responsibility on myself for having done wrong: or if I do accept the responsibility, I defy God to readjust me, the one is as bad as the other. I either refuse to say I have sinned, or I admit I have sinned and refuse to let God save me: I won't allow God to have the last word; I have the last word and intend to stick to it. That is the attitude of the devil. "If we confess our sins, . . ." says the Apostle John. Whenever conviction of sin comes, out into the light with it, confess it, because when I realise the shame of it and accept God's forgiveness, there is an inwrought energy brought back in place of the energy which went out in the sin; with the majority of us that energy is lost, it does not come back in the fruits of repentance.

"And the LORD God said unto the serpent, . . . I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed . . ." (Genesis 3:14-15). God does not deal with Satan direct, man must deal with Satan because man is responsible for his introduction. That is why God became Incarnate. Put it in any other way—why God could banish Satan in two seconds; but it is man who, through the Redemption, is to overcome Satan, and much more than overcome him, he is to do that which will exhibit the perfect fulfilment of this prophecy. Jesus Christ, the last Adam, took on Him our human form, and it is through His seed in that human form that Satan is to be overcome. "And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly" (Romans 16:20). Everything that Satan and sin have marred, God holds in an unimpaired state for every son of man who will come to Him by the way back which Jesus Christ has made.

MESSAGE OF GOD ON SIN

1. "Sin Coucheth at the Door" (Genesis 4:7)

And it came to pass, when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him. (v. 8)

No man can murder his brother who has not first murdered God in himself. Cain's crime is more than murdering his brother, it is a deeper crime within that crime, viz., the putting up of his whole nature against God, and, finally, accusing God for his punishment—"Of course, my sin is unpardonable if You are a holy God, but You are to blame for being a holy God."

"And the LORD said unto Cain, Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?" (vv. 6-7). These verses present God doing for Cain what He did for Adam and Eve—giving him a Divine opportunity for repentance. Remorse is never repentance, remorse is the rebellion of man's own pride which will not agree with God's judgement on sin but accuses God because He has made His laws too stern and holy. Adam and Eve acknowledged their sin although they never confessed it. Cain evades acknowledgement; first, he lies to God, then he becomes scornful of God—"And the LORD said unto Cain, Where is Abel thy brother? And he said, I know not: am I my brother's keeper?" Sin in Adam and Eve revealed itself as envy of God (see 3:5); in Cain it advances to envy of his brother-"And the LORD had respect unto Abel and to his offering: but unto Cain and to his offering He had not respect. And Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell." Personal vindictive rage is the spirit of murder. "... not as Cain was of the evil one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his works were evil, and his brother's righteous. . . . Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer" (1 John 3:12, 15 RV).

"And He said, What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto Me from the ground" (Genesis 4:10). Murder may be done in a hundred and one ways, think of the number of voices that cry unto God to-day from men who have been murdered in civilised life. The cry of every murdered innocence, every perverted right, is in the ear of God, and in this sense the blood of Abel still speaks and will never be silenced.

2. The Solitariness of Guilt (Genesis 4:11-15)

And now cursed art thou from the ground . . . a fugitive and a wanderer shall thou be in the earth. (vv. 11–12 RV)

Beware of speaking of reaction when God says retribution. The man who has done wrong has such a guilty conscience that he imagines everything is against him: everything is against him—God is against him, every bit of earth is against him; he stands absolutely alone. Nothing associates itself with the sinner saving his sin. Once sin enters in, you are out of gear with God morally and with the universe physically.

And Cain said unto the LORD, My punishment is greater than I can bear. Behold, thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the ground; and from thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a wanderer in the earth. (vv. 13–14 RV)

Cain takes God's punishment, which is His mercy, and perverts it into a penal decree making it impossible for him to come back. He entrenches himself in despair as a garment and spits back accusations against God—"See what You have done; I can't get back." When we are punished by God for wrongdoing our attitude is apt to be—"Oh well, it's no use trying to do any better, God has sent me from His presence, and I can't get back, I can do as I like now." Beware of making the despairing-sulk complaint, which is found in all of us, a threatening accusation against God. God can never forgive despair. The door is always open to God until I shut it. God never shuts it; I shut it, then I lose the key and say, "It's all up; whatever I do now God is entirely to blame."

Look for these things inside yourself; if you don't find them there, you are a humbug to find them outside you. Never disassociate yourself from anything any human being has ever done, that is the delusion of a moral lunatic. God will give you such a knowledge of yourself that you won't be able to say, "I don't know how anyone could do that," you will know humiliatingly before God how the vilest crime could be committed. You won't say, "But I could never do that"; you could. Any human being can do what any human being has ever done. When you see a criminal and feel instantly, "How horrible and vile that man is," it is a sure sign that the Lord is not in you; if He is in you, you will not only feel how horrible and vile he is, you will say, "But for God, I am that, and much worse." But don't use it as a pious phrase; if you don't mean it, never say it.

And Cain went out from the presence of the LORD, and dwelt in the land of Nod [That is, Wandering, RV mg]. (4:16)

Cain had no rest anywhere, the earth spurned him, therefore he went into the land of Wandering and constructed his own world. Men who have sinned and maintain themselves in their sin cannot endure themselves on God's earth, so they must make a world of their own and put it on God's earth. There is no place for sin on God's earth.

And he builded a city. (v. 17)

The first civilisation was founded by a murderer, and the whole basis of civilised life is a vast, complicated, more or less gilded-over system of murder. We find it more conducive to human welfare not to murder men outright, we do it by a system of competition. It is ingrained in our thinking that competition and rivalry are essential to the carrying on of civilised life; that is why Jesus Christ's statements seem wild and ridiculous. They are the statements either of a madman or of God Incarnate. To carry out the Sermon on the Mount is frankly impossible to anyone but a fool, and who is the fool? The man who has been born again and who dares to carry out in his individual life the teaching of Jesus. And what will happen? The inevitable result, not the success he would otherwise have. A hard saying, but true.

THE EVOLUTION OF DEPRAVITY

Genesis 6:1-7

1. The Floods of Elemental Sin

And the LORD saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. (Genesis 6:5 RV)

Depravity must be taken to mean much more than going wrong, it means rather to be so established in the wrong that the result is a real pleasure in it. There is an inspiration in choosing to do wrong, it means a simplification of the life. Immediately you choose to do wrong you are not only conscious that you are without excuse, you become brazenly fixed in the wrong; that is the characteristic of the devil. The revelation the Bible makes is not that men are getting worse, but that men are damnable—consequently they are saveable; the system of things he lives in may get worse, but a man can't be worse than damnable. If the mind of man persistently tries to remove the possibility of damnation he destroys the justice of God, destroys his own manhood, and leaves in its place an evolving animal-life to which God is not necessary.

Matthew 15:19 (RV): "For out of the heart come forth evil thoughts..." (See also Jeremiah 17:9: "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?") refers to the depravity of the human heart apart from God. The elemental fountain of depravity is there, the reason it is not manifested to my consciousness is either sheer ignorance by reason of a refusal to accept Jesus Christ's diagnosis, or because I have been saved and sanctified by God's mighty grace. According to our Lord "these things" are in the mother-heart, that deepest seat of moral character that lies below the conscious, the conscious thought, and still more the conscious purpose. When God's Spirit comes in and opens from underneath our consciousness the abyss we are on, the only thing to do is to completely surrender to Him, and the abyss is closed for ever. It is entire rightness with Jesus Christ alone that prevents elemental depravity working in the heart and out into deeds. If I trust Jesus Christ's diagnosis and hand over the keeping of my heart to Him, I need never know in conscious experience what depravity is, but if I trust in my innocent ignorance I am likely one of these days to turn a corner and find that what He said is true. When the crisis comes and men find that what they took to be their innocent heart is really a sink of iniquity, they would be the first to say, "Why did not God tell us?" "Why were we not warned?" We are warned, perfectly clearly, in order that we need never go through the terrible experience of knowing the truth of what Jesus said—"For from within, out of the heart of men, evil thoughts proceed . . . " (RV) that is the marvellous mercy of God. Jesus Christ's teaching never beats about the bush. Our stupidity is to believe only what we are conscious of and not the revelation He has made. Instead of its being a sign of good taste, it is a sign of shocking unbelief when men won't face what Jesus Christ has put so plainly, so unmistakably plainly, so brutally plainly at times, about the human heart. Again, let me urge you, never trust your innocent ignorance when Jesus Christ's statements contradict it.

Whenever any choice of ours is based on implicit disregard of God, we are depraved, and this possibility remains in every saint. "Now I am saved and sanctified all I choose is sure to be right"; not by any means. "All I think is sure to be right," not so; if our choices and our thinking do not spring from the basis of a determined recognition of God, we are depraved, no matter what our experience spiritually.

2. The Foundation of Eternal Salvation

And it repented the LORD that He had made men on the earth, and it grieved Him at His heart. (Genesis 6:6)

An unemotional love is inconceivable. Love for the good must involve displeasure and grief for the evil. God is not an almighty sultan reigning aloof, He is right in the throes of life, and it is there that emotion shows itself.

"And it repented the LORD. . . . " God does not repent like a man, He repents like God, that is, without change of plan or purpose. "God is not a man, that He should lie; neither the son of man, that He should repent: hath He said, and shall He not do it?" (Numbers 23:19). If God were to say of any sin, "Oh well, he didn't mean it, I will let it go," that would be a change in God's purpose. If God overlooked one sin in me, He would cease to be God. The "repenting" of God in individual cases means that God remains true to His purpose and must mean my condemnation, and my condemnation causes Him grief and agony. It is not that God won't overlook wrong, it is that He cannot, His very love forbids it. When I am saved by God's almighty grace I realise that I am delivered completely from what He has condemned—and that is salvation; I don't palliate it any longer, but agree with God's verdict on it on the Cross. At the back of all the condemnation of God put "Calvary."

THE CALL OF THE FORLORN HOPE

Genesis 6:8-22

But Noah found grace in the eyes of the LORD. . . . Noah was a righteous [RV] man, and perfect ["blameless," RV mg] in his generations: Noah walked with God. (Genesis 6:8–9)

1. Noah Found Grace

Grace is the overflowing immeasurable favour of God; God cannot withhold, the only thing that keeps back His grace and favour is our sin and perversity.

"Noah walked with God." To walk with God means the perpetual realisation of the nature of faith, viz., that it must be tried or it is mere fancy; faith un-tried has no character-value for the individual. There is nothing akin to faith in the natural world, defiant pluck and courage is not faith; it is the trial of faith that is "much more precious than of gold," and the trial of faith is never without the essentials of temptation. It is to be questioned whether any child of God ever gets through the trial of his faith without at some stage being honour-stricken; what God does comes as a stinging blow, and he feels the suffering is not deserved, yet, like Job, he will neither listen to nor tell lies about God. Spiritual character is only made by standing loyal to God's character no matter what distress the trial of faith brings. The distress and agony the prophets experienced was the agony of believing God when everything that was happening contradicted what they proclaimed Him to be; there was nothing to prove that God was just and true, but everything to prove the opposite. The forlornhope aspect is the best, perhaps the only idea, for the godly in Time: all that has been built up on the basis of personal faith in God is contradicted by the immediate present, and it is the man who does not believe in God who has the safest, best time of it in the immediate present. The Bible is full of this attitude to things (e.g., Psalm 73). It is when we forget this aspect of godliness that we cease to walk with God and only pay court visits to Him; we cease to be His children. To walk with God means walking apart from ultimate godless reliances. There is no such thing as a venture of faith, only a determined walk with God by faith.

"And Noah begat three sons" (Genesis 6:10). Noah's sons are mentioned because in them the continuance of the human race is secure. If you are a snob you won't like the Bible genealogies because they have no respect for the aristocratic notion. Snobbery is the insistence on going far enough back—but not too far!

2. "My Spirit Shall Not Strive with Man for Ever"

And God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted His way upon the earth. And God said unto Noah, . . . Behold, I will destroy them with the earth ["from the earth," AV mg]. (Genesis 6:12–13)

It is God's long-suffering patience ultimately coming to the conclusion that He must let the full destruction of His righteousness have its way. "And God looked"—as if until now God had looked away, giving time through Enoch and Methuselah and Lamech, then suddenly He looks, and destruction swift and almighty comes and there is no reprieve, it means judgement, a final sentence. The pronouncement of coming doom is a combining of judgement and deliverance. When God's limit is reached He destroys the unsaveable and liberates the saveable; consequently judgement days are the great mercy of God because they separate between good and evil, between right and wrong. Salvation to be experimental in me is always a judgement inasmuch as it is concerned with some kind of separation. "The Cross condemns men to salvation." I remain indifferent to the Cross until I realise by the conviction of the Spirit of God that there are certain things in me which are damnable. I can always know the kind of disposition I have got by the sword God brings against me, I may plead and pray, but He is merciless, He saves me "so as by fire." When once I am willing to agree with God's condemnation in the Cross on those things, God in His infinite mercy, by bringing His judgement, saves. It is not judgement inaugurating salvation, but judgement that is salvation. The same with nations, and with the human race.

3. "Make Thee an Ark"

The ark stands as a reminder that nothing is until it is. Whenever we say a thing is impossible the reason is twofold—either our prejudices don't wish it to be, or we say it is too wonderful to be possible. From the building of the ark on, just make quite sure a thing is impossible, and God does it. God can only do the impossible. In the realm of our human possible we don't need God, common-sense is our God; we don't pray to God, we pray to an erection of our commonsense. It is God who is the Architect of salvation, therefore salvation is not a common-sense design; what we have to do is to get inside that salvation. If I put my faith in any erection of my own, my vows and decisions, my consecration, I am building something for myself; I must co-operate with God in His plan of salvation. Picture Noah sitting down and saying, "God has given me a wonderful plan, I will watch and see it grow"! "Thus did Noah; according to all that God commanded him" (Genesis 6:22 RV).

"And I, behold, I do bring the flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh . . ." (v. 17 RV). The initiative springs from the Mind of Almighty God, "And I, behold, I do bring . . ."; it is not the natural consequence of cause and effect. "But I will establish My covenant with thee" (RV); with the new humanity after the flood. The "afterwards" of God is never disconnected with the "before" of His promise, and God's "afterwards" is more than the fulfilment of His promise, it is the re-expression of the fulfilment of the "before" of His purpose by my coming into living relationship with Him, if I will.

THE DARK OF FAITH

And the flood was forty days upon the earth... and all the high mountains that were under the whole heaven were covered...: and Noah only was left, and they that were with him in the ark. And the waters prevailed upon the earth an hundred and fifty days. (Genesis 7:17–24 RV)

The ark itself is submerged, saving the top of it, no foothold anywhere. God removed hope from anywhere but Himself. That is a picture of the Kingdom of God in this dispensation, it appears to be completely submerged, yet those very things which look as if they were going to smash it are the things God uses to preserve it.

1. The Express Covenant

But I will establish My covenant with thee. (Genesis 6:18 RV)

"And God remembered Noah" (8:1). This does not mean that God had forgotten Noah; the remembrances of God are sure to those who will put their trust in Him. It is significant to note that whenever the Bible uses terms such as "repent," "remember," "forsake," "love," in connection with God, their human meaning does not apply, e.g., the love of God can only be illustrated by the character of God.

"And after the end of an hundred and fifty days the waters decreased . . ." (v. 3 RV). The "at last" of God is never an anticlimax, it always exceeds any possible human forecast. We must be careful never to compromise over any promise of God when by reason of human limitation there has been only a partial fulfilment. Such a compromise is easily detected whenever you feel, "Oh well, I suppose that is all God meant." Every word God has spoken will be absolutely fulfilled; to climb down from that confidence is to be disloyal to God. Beware, though, of inferring because no good word of God will fail, that I personally will necessarily partake in its fulfilment; I assuredly will not unless I have come into vital relationship with God by determined faith.

"And he stayed yet another seven days" (v. 10). Verses 10–14 indicate the prominent characteristic of Noah, viz., the humility of patience. Patience is not the same as endurance because the heart of endurance is frequently stoical, whereas the heart of patience is a blazing love that sees intuitively and waits God's time in perfect confidence. It is impossible to be patient and proud because pride weakens into lust, and lust is essentially impatient. Noah stands for all time as the embodiment of the patience of hope.

"And God spake unto Noah, saying, Go forth of the ark. . . . And Noah went forth . . . " (8:15-16, 18). As Noah went into the ark at the command of God, so at the command of God he goes forth of the ark. Had Noah been a fanatic, when God said, "Go forth of the ark," he would have said, "No, God said 'Come thou into the ark,' and this must be the voice of the devil." There is always the danger of becoming a fanatical adherent to what God has said instead of adhering to God who said it. Noah waited God's time to go out of the ark. The only way to wait for the Second Coming is to watch that you do what you should do so that when He comes is a matter of indifference. It is the attitude of a child, certain that God knows what He is about. When the Lord does come it will be as natural as breathing. God never does anything hysterical, and He never produces hysterics.

2. The Abiding Relationship (Genesis 9:8–17) And God spake unto Noah, and to his sons with him, saying, and I, behold, I establish My covenant with you, and with your seed after you. . . . (Genesis 9:8–9)

God cannot do certain things without the co-operation of man. We continually ask, "Why doesn't God do the thing instead of waiting for me?" He cannot. It is the same problem as the difference between God's order and His permissive will. His permissive will allows the devil to do his worst and allows me to sin as I choose, until I choose to resist the devil, quit sinning, and come to God in the right relationship of a covenant with Him through Jesus Christ. It is God's will that human beings should get into moral relationship with Him and His covenants are for that purpose. "Why doesn't God save me?" He has saved me, but I have not entered into relationship with Him. "Why doesn't God do this and that?" He has done it, the point is-will I step into covenant relationship with Him? All the great blessings of God are finished and complete, but they are not mine until I enter into relationship with Him on the basis of His covenant. Salvation is not an edict of God; salvation is something wrought out on the human plane through God becoming Man. Waiting for God is incarnate unbelief, it means I have no faith in Him, I want Him to do something in me that I may trust in that. God won't do it, because that is not the basis of the God-and-man relationship. Man has to go out of himself in his covenant with God as God goes out of Himself in His covenant with man. It is a question of faith in God, the rarest thing, we have faith only in our feelings. I don't believe God unless He will give me something in my hand whereby I may know I have it, then I say, "Now I believe." There is no faith there. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved," God says. When I have really transacted business with God on His covenant and have let go entirely, there is no sense of merit, no human ingredient in it at all, but a complete, overwhelming sense of having been brought into union with God, and the whole thing is transfigured with peace and joy.

Chapters 12–25 are dealt with in the book entitled Not Knowing Whither.

ABIDING FACTORS

Genesis 26:1-12

1. Commencement of Destitution

And there was a famine in the land, beside the first famine that was in the days of Abraham. (Genesis 26:1)

Isaac's history commences with the same trial as Abraham's, viz., a famine in the land. Abraham acted according to his own wits, not according to his faith in God: "and Abram went down into Egypt to sojourn there; for the famine was sore in the land" (RV)—destitution in the very land of promise. Watch the destitution of wits that follows quickly on the heels of a Divine revelation. Whenever you get a revelation from God you will be starved at once, starved, that is, in your wits, you can see no way out. Every time your wits compete with the worship of God you had better take a strong dose of Isaiah 30:15–16—"In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength: and ye would not." Beware of restlessness and wits persuading you that God has made a blunder—"God would never allow me to fall sick after giving me such a blessing"; but He has! No matter what revelations God has made to you, there will be destitution so far as the physical apprehension of things is concerned—God gives you a revelation that He will provide, then He provides nothing and you begin to realise that there is a famine, of food, or of clothes, or money, and your commonsense as well as other people's says, "Abandon your faith in God, do this, and that." Do it at your peril. Watch where destitution comes; if it comes on the heels of a time of quiet confidence in God, then thank Him for it and stay starving and He will bring a glorious issue.

2. Command in Trial

And the LORD appeared unto him, and said, Go not down into Egypt; dwell in the land which I shall tell thee of. (Genesis 26:2)

The command to Abraham was to depart; the command to Isaac is to remain. When the "Isaac" life of quietness and confidence in God is born of the "Abraham" life of strenuous separation, don't make any more separations, just be still, and know that God is God. Those who educate you in the things of God will be the first to pull you back when you obey the voice which came through them. God taught you the right thing through them, and now you are obeying they come in with their own wits and say, "Of course we didn't mean you should do that"; but God did. Beware of mixing quietness and confidence with other people's wits.

3. Confirmation of Truth (Genesis 26:3-5)

... because that Abraham obeyed My voice, and kept My charge, My commandments, My statutes, and My laws. (v. 5)

Isaac is promised Divine blessing and protection because of God's oath which He swore to Abraham on account of his obedience. Abraham's obedience was far from perfect, but its great characteristic was its unreservedness. Abandon in the profound sense is of infinitely more value than personal holiness. Personal holiness brings the attention to bear on my own whiteness, I dare not be indiscreet, or unreserved, I dare not do anything in case I incur a speck. God can't bless that sort of thing, it is as unlike His own character as could be. The holiness produced through the indwelling of His Son in me is a holiness which is never conscious of itself. There are some people in whom you cannot find a speck and yet they are not abundantly blessed of God, while others make grave indiscretions and get marvellously blessed; the reason being that the former have become devotees of personal holiness, conscientious to a degree; the latter are marked by abandonment to God. Whatever centres attention on anything other than our Lord Himself will always lead astray. The only way to be kept cleansed is by walking in the light, as God is in the light. Only as we walk in that light is the holiness of Jesus Christ not only imputed, but imparted, to us.

Abraham's aberrations sprang not from disobedience, but from trusting in his own wits. Directly God's command was made known to him, he obeyed; when there was no command he was inclined to trust in his wits, and that is where he went wrong. It is never right to do wrong in order that right may come, although it may seem justifiable from every standard saving one. In the long run you can never produce right by doing wrong, yet we will always try to do it unless we believe what the Bible says. If I tell a lie in order to bring about the right, I prove to my own conviction that I do not believe the One at the back of the universe is truthful. Judge everything in the light of Jesus Christ, who is The Truth, and you will never do the wrong thing however right it looks.

THE TENDER GRACE

Genesis 26:13-33

The only right a Christian has is the right to give up his rights. This is the tender grace which is usually looked upon as an exhibition of lack of gumption. The embarrassing thing about Christian graces is that immediately you imitate them they become nauseating, because conscious imitation implies an affected preference for certain qualities, and we produce frauds by a spurious piety. All the qualities of a godly life are characteristic of the life of God; you cannot imitate the life of God unless you have it, then the imitation is not conscious, but the unconscious manifestation of the real thing. "Pi" people try to produce the life of God by sheer imitation; they pretend to be sweet when really they are bitter. The life of God has no pretence, and when His life is in you, you do not pretend to feel sweet, you are sweet.

1. The External Greatness of Isaac

And the man waxed great, and grew more and more until he became very great. (Genesis 26:13 RV)

Isaac never became great in the way that Abraham did, his greatness is of a different order. Abraham was not only a great man of God, he was a great man. Some lives exhibit grand characteristics and yet there are curious defects; the only standard for judging the saint is Jesus Christ, not saintly qualities. Beware of the snare of taking people as types; no one is a type of anything, he may recall a particular type, but he is always something other than the type. If Abraham is taken as the type of a saint you get embarrassed because of the things in him which are not saintly. We are always inclined to remain true to our own ideas of a person, it does not matter what the facts are, we interpret all that he does according to our idea of him. If I accept you as an expression of my idea of you, I will be unjust to you as a fact; I make you either better or worse than you are, I never hit just "you" until I learn to accept facts as facts.

2. The Extraordinary Gentleness of Isaac (Genesis 26:14–26)

And Isaac's servants digged in the valley, and found there a well of springing ["living," mg] water. And the herdsmen of Gerar strove with Isaac's herdsmen, saying, The water is ours: and he called the name of the well Esek ["Contention," mg]; because they contended with him. (vv. 19–20 RV)

The strife arose around a well of living water, and Isaac let them have it, that is, he refused to drink of the water of "Contention." Whenever a doctrinal well becomes "Esek," give it up; your life with God is more precious than proving you are right doctrinally. It is at the peril of your communion with God that you contend about a doctrine. "And they digged another well, and they strove for that also" (RV): and Isaac surrendered it, calling it Sitnah, that is, "Enmity" (RV mg). It is a great sign of grace not to break your heart because you cannot drink of the water of "Enmity." "And he removed from thence, and digged another well, and for that they strove not: and he called the name of it Rehoboth [that is, 'Broad places,' or 'Room,' RV mg]; and he said, For now the LORD hath made room for us, and we shall be fruitful in the land."

"And the LORD appeared unto him the same night, and said, I am the God of Abraham thy father: fear not, for I am with thee, and will bless thee, and multiply thy seed for My servant Abraham's sake." Isaac has come to a broad place and God appears to him, and for the first time the grand phrase, "I am the God of Abraham" appears. "And he builded an altar there, and called upon the name of the LORD."

When you stand up for another who has been grossly wronged and your stand to be of any avail must have the co-operation of the wronged one, there is nothing more maddening than to find that he is without any resentment. That must have been the heart-breaking embarrassment to the disciples over our Lord; they had built up their own ideas as to how He was going to bring in His Kingdom and they were prepared to fight for Him, then they saw Jesus meekly give Himself up to the power of the world, He did nothing whatever to assert His rights. In the Christian life the problem arises not from the world, which says you are a fool, but from your friends who are prepared to stand up for you.

Inoffensiveness, which is one of the chief characteristics of Isaac, usually means to our natural minds a quality unsuited to a strong personality. We have to bear in mind that the life of our Lord portrayed just this characteristic of inoffensiveness: "As a lamb that is led to the slaughter, and as a sheep that before her shearers is dumb; yea, He opened not His mouth" (RV). "He was crucified through weakness," and, "we also are weak in Him." Anything to do with meekness and submissiveness is antagonistic to robust human nature. Our impatience gets beyond its limit because of the characteristics Jesus Christ insists upon: "Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart. . . . " The natural heart builds on adventure, recklessness, independence, impulse; the characteristics God prizes are produced only in the son of sacrifice. Natural inoffensiveness may be the weakness of constitutional timidity; supernatural inoffensiveness is almighty strength scorning to use the weapons of the flesh. Inoffensiveness is self-control indwelt by the Holy Ghost, "the fruit of the Spirit is . . . self-control [MOFFATT].'

3. The Eternal and the Haphazard (Genesis 26:28–33)

Let there now be an oath... betwixt us and thee, and let us make a covenant with thee.... And he made them a feast and they did eat and drink. And they rose up betimes in the morning, and sware one to another.... And it came to pass the same day, that Isaac's servants came, and told him concerning the well which they had digged, and said unto him, We have found water. And he called it Shibah: therefore the name of the city is Beersheba [Well of the Oath] unto this day. (RV)

All the transactions entered into by both Abraham and Isaac, no matter how temporary or casual, were based on their relationship to God, that is, they used their wits in their worship of Him. This recognition of God began to be lost during Jacob's life, and the children of Israel went on ignoring it until they came to establish all their transactions on their own wits. Our Lord warns against taking an oath (see Matthew 5:33–35), because in the sight of God an oath means the recognition of God in the most temporary transaction. In the Old Testament, and in the record of the Resurrection, we find the temporary matter of eating and drinking put on the eternal foundation of relationship to God. The things which can be most easily ridiculed are the things that have most of God in them. A saint can be ridiculed because he sees haphazard happenings in the light of the eternal—"The Lord guided me here, and there." The fact that a man who is a fraud says the same thing as a saint is proof that he is counterfeiting something which is real. No actual fact has its right name unless you can worship God in it. Remember, whatever happens, God is there. It is easy to fix your mind on God in a lecture, but a different matter to fix your mind on Him when there is a war on.⁵ You never get at God by blinking facts, but only by naming Him in the facts; whether they are devilish or not, say, "Lord, I thank Thee that Thou art here."

PLANS AND PROVIDENCE

And Rebekah heard when Isaac spake to Esau his son. (Genesis 27:5)

Plans arise from the human "must"—the imperative demand of my own undisciplined nature which makes me feel, "I must do something; God is no use here." God rarely rebukes us for our impulsive plans because those plans work their own distress. Plans made apart from trusting God's wisdom are rotten. Providence arises from God's majesty. The wisdom of God can never be according to man's understanding, and in our regenerated lives while we are "climbing the slow ascensions" of our Heavenly Father's wisdom, He engineers our circumstances by His providence and puts within our inmost soul the childlike joy of confidence in Himself. It is always easier not to trust; if I can work the thing out for myself then I am not going to trust in God. I work out a plan whereby I say God must do the thing and I force His hand along certain lines, and when He does what I said I knew He would do, for an exhilarating moment I think I have made Him do it! Then I find I am to be punished for everything I tried to make Him do, though it looks as if my wrong had brought about His good. Beware of egging God on; possess your soul in patience.

Always beware when you can reasonably account to yourself for the action you are about to take, because the source of such clear reasoning is the enthroning of human understanding. It is this element in the personal life of a Christian that fights longest and to the last against the enthronement of Jesus Christ as Lord and Master. "Supposing I do say I will go to the foreign field, what about this, and that?" "I want a reasonable explanation." As long as you argue like that it is all up with devotion to Jesus Christ. He will have no influence over you until your plan is worked out because you have put your own wits on the throne. The reason we know so little about God's wisdom is that we will only trust him as far as we can work things out according to our own reasonable commonsense.

1. Sensitiveness to Divinely Shaped Ends (Genesis 27:6–17)

Now therefore, my son, obey my voice according to that which I command thee. . . . (v. 8)

Still waters run deep, but an able woman is deeper. Abraham made the supreme blunder of trying to help God fulfil His promise; Rebekah repeats the blunder. A woman with a sense of values in the end to be achieved cares nothing about herself in the accomplishing of that end. "And his mother said unto him, Upon me be thy curse, my son: only obey my voice. . . . "When a virtuous woman does wrong she does it with all the characteristic of her virtue transferred to the deception; Rebekah carried out her deception as though she were called and inspired of God to do it. In such a case the sin is not the outcome of impulse, but the deliberate perversion of integrity. In individual experience no one person is ever entirely to blame-"my father is to blame, my mother, my heredity," everybody and everything but myself. It is impossible for human wisdom to apportion the blame. Remember the one fact more which God alone knows.

2. Schemes of Discreet Expectations (Genesis 27:18–25)

And Rebekah took the goodly raiment of Esau her elder son, which were with her in the house, and put them upon Jacob her younger son. . . . (v. 15 RV)

This is the first pious lie enacted in the Bible. Rebekah's motive was born of the oracles of God—"... and the elder shall serve the younger" (25:23):

^{5.} a war on: World War I (1914–18), underway when these lectures were given in 1914–15.

her act was entirely wrong; she enacted a lie in order to help God carry out His purpose. This is very different from the lie told for our own ends. Jacob's enunciation of the lie—"And Jacob said unto his father, I am Esau thy firstborn"—is expressive fundamentally, not of self-seeking, but of devotion to his mother, consequently there is no hesitation or bravado because he is not yet so conscious as he will be of what he is doing. Beware of obeying anyone else's obedience to God because it means you are shirking responsibility yourself.

"And his father Isaac said unto him, Come near now, and kiss me, my son. . . . Be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's sons bow down to thee": The whole lie is now enacted, and Jacob enters into the fullness of the blessing. God fore-ordained that the blessing should come to Jacob, but it was not part of that fore-ordination that Jacob should enter into the blessing in the way he did. There are experiences in human lives which are not part of God's purpose, but the result of human perversity. Remember, trust in God does not mean that God will explain His solutions to us, it means that we are perfectly confident in God, and when we do see the solution we find it to be in accordance with all that Jesus Christ revealed of His character. It is nonsense to imagine that God expects me to discern all that is clear to His own mind, all He asks of me is to maintain perfect confidence in Himself. Faith springs from the indwelling of the life of God in me.

THE LONE QUEST

1. The Discipline of the Unchanging Destiny (Genesis 28:1-9)

And God Almighty bless thee, . . . that thou mayest inherit the land of thy sojournings, which God gave unto Abraham. (vv. 3–4 RV)

Jacob's destiny had nothing to do with his personal character, but his personal character had everything to do with the desperate discipline he went through. God's destiny for a life will be fulfilled though the details of the fulfilment are determined by the individual. The kind of discipline Jacob went through was determined by his perversity. The "lone quest" is never pathetic unless, as in Jacob's case, it is mixed with cunning and sin in motive.

"Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the LORD: yet I loved Jacob; but Esau I hated" (Malachi 1:2-3 RV). In all implicit matters intuition is of more avail than logic. Naturally, we are inclined to love Esau and dislike Jacob. The most undesirable person in later life is often the one who was most desirable when young. A chaotic young life is always the most satisfactory. ". . . yet I loved Jacob"-God loves the man who needs Him. Esau was satisfied with what he was; Jacob wanted more than he was. Esau never saw visions, never wrestled with angels, although God was as near to him as to Jacob. Esau refused to sacrifice anything to the spiritual; he could never think of anything but the present. He was willing to sell the promise of the future for a mess of pottage, and thereby he wronged himself far more than Jacob did.

2. The Dream of the Unimagined Dignity (Genesis 28:10-22)

And he dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven: and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it. And, behold, the LORD stood above it ["beside him," mg], and said, I am the LORD, the God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed; and thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt spread abroad to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south: and in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed. (vv. 12–14 RV)

Jacob's dream was a vision of the purpose of God for all the families of the earth. The destiny of the people known as "Israel" is forecast in this one lonely man. God did not select this people, He elected them. God created them from Abraham to be His servants until through them every nation came to know who Jehovah was. They mistook the election of God's purpose to be the election of God's favouritism, and the story of their distress is due to their determination to use themselves for purposes other than God's. To this day they survive miraculously, the reason for their survival is the purpose of God to be fulfilled through them. They can still wait, still see visions of God, and the time is coming when God's promise shall be fulfilled materialistically. The prophecies are frequently taken as pictures of spiritual blessings; they are much more than that.

"And he dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven." The ladder symbolises communication between God and man. The only Being in whom communication with God was never broken is the Lord Jesus Christ, and His claim is that through the Redemption He can put every one of us in the place where communication with God can be re-established. Paul's phrase "in Christ"—the Mystical Christ, not the Historic Christ—is a revelation of the Redemption at work on our behalf. If I am "in Christ" the angels of God are always ascending and descending on my behalf, and the voice that speaks is the voice of God. (Cf. John 1:51.) Beware of having a measuring-rod for the Almighty, of tying God up in His own laws. This pre-Incarnate vision of God was given to such a man as Jacob was. It is dangerous to have the idea that we merit these things; immediately prayer or devotion is taken as the ground of God's blessing we are off the track. Prayer and devotion are simply the evidence that we are on God's plan; to be devoid of any sense of ill-being spiritually is a sign that we are not on God's plan. Jacob is the man who represents life as it is. The world is not made up of saints or of devils, but of people like you and me, and our real home is at the foot of the ladder with Jacob. Never say that God intends a man to have a domain of dreaming, mighty visions of God, and at the same time be dead towards God in his actual life. Jesus Christ claims that He can make the real and the actual one, as they were in His own life. When the vision comes it does not come to the "Esau" type of man, he is so thickhided that to talk to him about the nearness of God's presence is absurd, there is no meaning in it—that is absolutely true, there is no meaning in it, until he gets to the desolate spot. We cling to the certainty that the rational common sense life is the right one; Jesus Christ stands for the fact that a life based on the Redemption is the only right one, consequently when a man shifts from the one to the other there is a period of desolation. Remember, there is a vast moral distance between Beth-el and Peniel.

3. The Dedication of the Unparalleled Dawn (Genesis 28:16-20)

And Jacob awaked out of his sleep, and he said, Surely the LORD is in this place; and I knew it not. And he was afraid, and said, How dreadful is this place! this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven. (vv. 16–17)

"This place" means just where it is not within the bounds of imagination to infer that God would be. "And he called the name of that place Beth-el ['The house of God,' RV mg]" because there God was revealed unto him. "Every house of God is a gate of heaven where the impossible and the miraculous become the natural breath." There is always an amazed surprise when we find what God brings with Him when He comes, He brings everything! (John 14:23).

It is in the dark night of the soul that the realisation of God's presence breaks upon us: we never see God as long as, like Esau, we are perfectly satisfied with what we are. When I am certain that "in me . . . dwelleth no good thing," I begin to experience the miracle of seeing and hearing, not according to my senses, but according to the way the Holy Spirit interprets the word of God to me. Any number of people are happy without God, because happiness depends on not too profound an understanding of things; "the god of this world hath blinded their minds ('thoughts,' RV mg]" (2 Corinthians 4:4). When the revelation of God's presence does come, it comes to those who are where Jacob was, in downright need and depression, knowing there is no help anywhere saving in God. As long as there is any vestige of human sufficiency it is all up with the message of God as far as we are concerned.

When we come to consider it, the phrase, "the God of Jacob," is the greatest possible inspiration; it has in it the whole meaning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, who said "... for I came not to call the righteous, but sinners." Had we been left with such phrases as "the God of Joseph," or "the God of Daniel," it would have spelt hopeless despair for most of us; but "the God of Jacob" means "God is my God," the God not only of the noble character, but of the sneak. From the sneak to entire sanctification is the miracle of the grace of God.

Love, more than any other experience in life, reveals the shallowness and the profundity, the hypocrisy and the nobility, of human nature. In dealing with all implicit things, such as love, there is a danger of being sentimentally consistent to a doctrine or an idea while the actual life is ignored; we forget that we have to live in this world as human beings. Consistency in doctrine ought to work out into expression in actual life, otherwise it produces the humbug in us; we have the jargon of the real thing, but actually we are not there. Anything that makes a man keep up a posture is not real; e.g., it is not true to say that an understanding of the doctrine of sanctification will lead you into the experience: doctrinal exposition comes after the experience in order to bring the actual life into perfect harmony with the marvel of the work of God's grace.

1. God and the Cult of the Passing Moment (Genesis 29:1-7)

Then Jacob went on his journey, and came to the land of the children of the east. . . . (v. 1 RV)

The true worship of God can only be maintained when the passing moments are seen as occurring in God's order. If you try to forecast the way God will work you will get into a muddle; live the life of a child and you will find that every haphazard occasion fits into God's order. "The cult of the passing moment" means that you resolutely believe that "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose." Don't be your own god in these matters; be concentrated, not on the haphazard, but on God, who comes to you through the haphazard. Jacob is realising God's order in the midst of the haphazard circumstances in which he finds himself; in the coming of Rachel he suddenly meets God.

2. God and the Cult of the Passionate Moment (Genesis 29:8–14)

And Jacob kissed Rachel, and lifted up his voice, and wept. (v. 11)

There is no safer guide in the matter of human love than the Bible, particularly the Old Testament. Solomon says a penetrating thing—"I adjure you, . . . that ye stir not up, nor awaken love, until it please"—before the time (The Song of Songs 2:7 RV), and woe be to any such awakener. Many a man has awakened love before the time, and has reaped hell into the bargain. Love is awakened before the time whenever a man or woman ignores the worship of God and becomes a mere creature of impulsive passions.

God cannot guard the natural heart that does not worship Him, it is at the mercy of every vagrant passion stirred by the nearness of another. Unless you are guarded by God in your human relationships you will get a multitude of haphazard affairs that God is not in; there are the same haphazard affairs in the life of a child of God, but God is in them. Beware of not worshipping God in your emotional history. Watch your fancies and your friends, heed who you love and who loves you, and you will be saved from many a pitfall.

3. God and the Cult of the Parenthetic Moment (Genesis 29:15-20)

And Jacob loved Rachel; and he said, I will serve thee seven years for Rachel. (v. 18)

Jacob was what he was—mean, yet in the most mixed human life there may come a parenthesis which is pure and unsullied. Mark well the parentheses God puts into your human life. There is not a passage in the whole of the Bible to equal verse 20 for a description of pure human love: "And Jacob served seven years for Rachel, and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her." Sacrifice for love is never conscious; sacrifice for duty always has margins of distress. The nature of love is to give, not to receive. Talk to a lover about giving up anything, and he doesn't begin to understand you!

Love is not blind; love sees a great deal more than the actual, it sees the ideal in the actual, consequently the actual is transfigured by the ideal. That is a different thing from "halo-slinging," which means you have your own idea about other people and expect them to live up to it, and then when they don't, you blame them. An ideal is not a halo, it is reality made clear to you by intuition. If you love someone you are not blind to his defects but you see the ideal which exactly fits that one. God sees all our crudities and defects, but He also sees the ideal for us; He sees "every man perfect in Christ Jesus," consequently He is infinitely patient.

4. God and the Cult of the Paralleled Measure (Genesis 29:25–30)

What is this thou hast done unto me? did not I serve with thee for Rachel? wherefore then hast thou beguiled me? (v. 25)

The humour of God is sometimes tragic; He engineers across our path the kind of people who exhibit to us our own characteristics—not very flattering, is it? In this chapter we see the beguiler beguiled; Jacob was deceived, but he also was a deceiver. We say, "I wonder why this should happen to me?" Remember the Apostle Paul's words: "For he that doeth wrong shall receive again for the wrong ['receive again the wrong,' RV mg] that he hath done: and there is no respect of persons" (Colossians 3:25).

DEGENERATION

Genesis 29-30

Degeneration and backsliding are by no means one and the same. Degeneration begins in almost imperceptible ways; backsliding in the scriptural use of the term is a distinct forsaking of what I know of God and a deliberate substitution of something other (cf. Jeremiah 2:13).

A point on which we need to be alert is that the presence of the life of the Son of God in us does not alter our human nature; God does remove the disposition of sin, but He demands of us that our human nature puts on the "new man," and no longer fashions itself according to its former natural desires. This is what the Apostle Paul means by his use of the term "mortify" (Colossians 3:5), viz., destroy by neglect. The spiritual application is that the natural must be sacrificed in order that it may be turned into the spiritual. This law works all through. Esau stands for the natural life refusing to obey. If I maintain my right to my natural self I will begin to degenerate and get out of God's purpose. What happens in my personal life when I am born from above (RV mg) is that the Son of God is born in me, then comes in the law of the sacrifice of the natural to the spiritual, and the possibility of degeneration. If I refuse to sacrifice the natural, the God-life in me is killed.

1. When the Reward of Sin Is More Sinfulness

Chapter 29 records the retribution Jacob experienced for his own deceitfulness—Jacob impersonates Esau; Laban makes Leah impersonate Rachel. Beware what you permit in your relationships because you will "bedone-by-as-you-did," and the reason for it is God. The inexorable law is stated in Matthew 7—"For with what judgement ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." The wrong began with Abraham and Hagar, and it works straight through "the maddening maze of things"; the only line of extrication is through the Redemption. It is one thing to deceive other people, but you have to get up very early if you want to take in God!

2. Where the Ruin of Sanctity Is Mixed Sanctity (Genesis 30:1–24)

Jacob's home becomes a place of friction—no man ever gave his heart to two women—yet gleams of joy come to it, every child is regarded by the Hebrew as a gift of God, and the naming of Jacob's children reveals how closely men felt God to be bound up with their history.

If you indulge in practises which the Holy Spirit condemns, or in imaginations you have no business to indulge in, the appalling lash of ruined sanctity is that my sin finds me out. "If I could only fling the whole thing overboard!"—but you cannot. God has made the way of transgressors hell on earth. The first mark of degeneration is to deem a wrong state permissible, and then propose it as a condition of sanctity. We only turn in disgust from the details in God's Book when we forget who we are. Nothing has ever been done by human nature that any member of the human family may not be trapped into doing; the only safeguard is to keep in the light as God is in the light.

3. Where Retribution of Selfishness Turns to Spite (Genesis 30:25-43)

Jacob has been robbed, and now he retaliates; his aim is to enrich himself at Laban's expense and he succeeds absolutely—"And the man increased exceedingly, and had large flocks, and maidservants and menservants, and camels and asses" (v. 43 RV). Beware of the inspiration that springs from impulse, because impulse enthrones self-lordship as God. My impulses can never be disciplined by anyone saving myself, not even by God. If my impulses are domineered over by somebody else, that one will find sooner or later that he or she has sat on a safety valve-always a risky thing to do. Unless I discipline my impulses they will ruin me, no matter how generous they may be. The revelation to ourselves in studying other people's lives ought to make us eager to realise that "in me . . . dwelleth no good thing."

THE CRISIS IN CIRCUMSTANCES

And the LORD said unto Jacob, Return to the land of thy fathers. Genesis 31:3

No man's destiny is made for him, each man makes his own. Fatalism is the deification of moral cowardice which arises from a refusal to accept the responsibility for choosing either of the two destined ends for the human race—salvation or damnation. The power of individual choice is the secret of human responsibility. I can choose which line I will go on, but I have no power to alter the destination of that line once I have taken it—yet I always have the power to get off one line on to the other.

1. Confusion in Consecration (Genesis 31:4–10)

Jacob would seem to think that to do things openly when you might do them obscurely is a sign of feeble intelligence; all his outwitting has not taught him wisdom. The apparent piece of humbug which these verses record is not really humbug at all, it is a repetition of what happened in the matter of the birthright, in which Isaac and Rebekah, Jacob and Esau, all did wrong, and yet out of it came the fulfilment of God's purpose. The blunder lies in trying to help God fulfil His own word. God's word will be fulfilled, but if I reach its fulfilment through committing sin, God must crush me in chastisement; the chastisement has no part in His order, it comes in under His permissive will.

2. Call to Conscience (Genesis 31:11–13)

Jacob has brought back to him his dream at Beth-el when God appeared to him and spoke to him—"I am the God of Beth-el, where thou anointedst a pillar, where thou vowedst a vow unto Me; now arise, get thee out from this land, and return unto the land of thy nativity" (RV). Jacob's character exhibits human nature as it is better than any other Bible character—the high mountain peaks and the cesspools, they all come out. No man is so bad but that he is good enough to know he is bad. Beware of insisting on attainments which are impossible to human nature before the possibilities of the Divine nature have come in—demanding of human nature that it should be what it never can be. Jesus Christ died for the ungodly, for the weak, for sinners; if we put the fruits of the Redemption as the reason for God's forgiveness, we belittle His salvation. God's call comes, not to human nature, but to conscience, and when a man obeys what God reveals to a thoroughly awakened conscience, then begins the possibility in human nature of the expression of the life of God. To experience conviction of sin is not a cause for misgiving, but an occasion for understanding the impossible thing God has done in the Redemption.

3. Calamity in Estrangement (Genesis 31:14–35)

So he fled with all that he had. . . . (v. 21)

Jacob's flight and its attendant perplexities is the best unveiling of the unutterable muddle the most acute human wisdom can get into, and serves as another indication of the truth of the revelation that "A man's goings are of the LORD; how then can man understand his way?" (RV). Crises reveal that we don't believe this, the only God we worship is our own wits. All through, a personal crisis ought to serve as an occasion for revealing the fact that God reigns, as well as compelling us to know our own character. You may think yourself to be generous and noble until a crisis comes, and you suddenly find you are a cad and a coward; no one else finds it out, but you do. To be found out by yourself is a terrible thing.

"Now Rachel had taken the teraphim . . ." (Genesis 31:34 RV). In the centre of the family is Rachel, and she outwits Laban and Jacob by stealing the household gods. "And Rachel stole the teraphim that were her father's" (v. 19 RV). There are only two beings a woman is not too much for, one is God, the other is the devil. A mascot is a talisman of some sort the presence of which is supposed to bring good luck. The persistence of the superstitious element is one of the most indelible stains on the character of otherwise good people, and it abounds in our own day. A re-awakening of superstition always follows on the heels of gross materialism in personal and in national life. When once the "mascot" tendency is allowed in the temple of the Holy Ghost, spiritual muddle-headedness is sure to result. Beware of excusing spiritual muddle-headedness in yourself; if it is not produced by the "Jacob" reserve, it is produced by the "Rachel" wit, and the only way out of the muddle is to walk in the light.

MAHANAIM

Genesis 32

Of all the Bible characters Jacob ever remains the best example of the recipient of God's life and power, simply because of the appalling mixture of the good and the bad, the noble and the ignoble in him. His nobility is never far to seek in the midst of it all. We have the notion that it is only when we are pure and holy that God will appear to us; that God's blessing is a sign that we are right with Him. Neither notion is true. Our Lord took care to say that God makes His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sends His rain on the just and on the unjust. God's blessings are not to be taken as an indication of the integrity of the character blessed, yet on the other hand the discernment of God's character is determined entirely by the individual character of the person estimating God. "With the merciful Thou wilt show Thyself merciful" (Psalm 18:25). The way I will discern God's character is determined by my own character. God remains true to His character, and as I grow in integrity I discern Him. Jacob's undeservedness, and the fact that God continually blesses him, are brought out very clearly all through his life.

1. The Venture of the Misgiving Way

And Jacob went on his way . . . (Genesis 32:1)

A sense of personal unworthiness is frequently the reaction of overweening conceit; genuine unworthiness has no conscious interest in itself. A genuinely unworthy nature is always possessed of sufficient nobility to face the inevitable—"And Jacob went on his way," that is the noble streak. The study of Jacob under the light of the Spirit of God is not exhilarating, but it is a wholesome cure for spiritual swagger. Whenever you get a real dose of your own unworthiness you are never conscious of it because you are so certain you are unworthy that you have the courage of despair. The first thing the Spirit of God does when He comes in is to bring this sense of unworthiness. Most of us suspend judgement about ourselves, we find reasons for not accusing ourselves entirely, consequently when we find anything so definite and intense as the Bible revelation we are apt to say it exaggerates, until we are smitten with the knowledge of what we are like in God's sight. If you can come to God without a feeling of your own contemptibility it is questionable whether you have ever come. The most humiliating thing in self-examination is that the passion of indignation we indulge in regarding others is the measure of our self detection (see Romans 2:1).

2. The Vision of the Ministering Witnesses ... and the angels of God met him. (Genesis 32:1)

Isn't that indiscreet of God! The appearances of God are not so much a testimony to the goodness of the individual as the revelation of God Himself. Every estimate of God must be brought to the standard of the revelation made of Him by our Lord. The appearance of the angels of God is apt to be looked upon as the result of disordered nerves, but it is only when external conditions are hopeless to the human outlook that we are in a fit state to perceive the revelation. We are content where we are as long as things have not got to the hopeless condition, and when we do get there we are sentimentally interested in our own pathos-"Whatever shall I do when this, or that, happens?" When it does happen, you will see the angels of God. There is no such thing as dull despair anywhere in the Bible, there is tragedy of the most appalling order, but an equally amazing hopefulness—always a door deeper down than hell which opens into heaven.

3. The Voice of the Mastering Wonder

And Jacob said when he saw them, This is God's host: and he called the name of that place Mahanaim. (Genesis 32:2 RV)

The sight of the two hosts, the earthly and the heavenly, is a fitting revelation of God's rule and government in this order of things. The reason so few of us see the hosts of God is that we have never let go of things as they are, never let go of our small parochial notions, of the sense of our own whiteness and respectability, consequently there is no room for God at all. Beware of the abortion of God's grace which prostitutes the Holy Spirit to the personal private use of my own whiteness, instead of allowing God by His majestic grace to keep me loyal to His character in spite of everything that transpires. Faith in God does not mean that He presents me as a museum specimen, but it does mean that however ignoble I may feel, I remain true to God's character no matter what perplexities may rage.

God's angelic hosts are like His visible mercies, countless. We are economically drunk nowadays, everybody is an economist, consequently we imagine that God is economical. Think of God in Creation! Think of the number of trees and blades of grass and flowers, the extravagant wealth of beauty no one ever sees! Think of the sunrises and sunsets we never look at! God is lavish in every degree. For God's sake, don't be economical, be God's child.

MISGIVING

Genesis 32:3-21

Misgiving is the pathetic poem of the whole of human life in a word; it signifies the destruction of confidence. Many things will destroy confidence; as in the case of Jacob, cunning and sin will do it, or cowardice; but in every experience of misgiving there is an element which it is difficult to define, and the shallow element is the most difficult. "I can't understand why I have no confidence in God"; the reason may be a matter of digestion, not enough fresh air, or sleep, too much tea—something slight. It is the shallow things that put us wrong much more quickly than the big things. The great object of the enemy of our souls is to make us fling away our confidence in God; to do this is nothing less than spiritual suicide. When we experience misgiving because we have sinned there is never any ambiguity as to its cause, the Holy Spirit brings conviction home like a lightning flash.

1. The Appointment of the Messengers (Genesis 32:3-5)

Jacob has had a vision of God's power, but now he begins to put prudent methods on foot in case God should be obliged to let him down on account of his cunning. We have all got "Uriah Heep" tucked away somewhere, his original form is found in Jacob. Every one of us has the possibility of every type of meanness any human being has ever exhibited; not to believe this is to live in a fool's paradise.

2. The Apprehension of the Manœuvres (Genesis 32:6-8)

Then Jacob was greatly afraid and was distressed. (v. 7 RV)

Jacob has still no intention of confessing his wrong, and his apprehensiveness on this account leads him to manœuvre. Beware of the "yes-but," of putting your prudence-crutch under the purpose of God when you find His engineering of things has nearly unearthed your own little bag of tricks. Whenever you debate with a promise of God, watch how you begin to manœuvre by your own prudence—but you can't sleep at night. Whenever you manœuvre it keeps up a ferment because it indicates a determination not to confess where you know you are wrong, and when we experience misgiving on account of wrongdoing which we do not intend to confess we are always inclined to put a crutch under God's promise—"Now I see how I can make atonement for my wrongdoing." Nothing can act as an atonement for wrong saving an absolutely clean confession to God. To walk in the light with nothing folded up is our conscientious part, then God will do the rest.

3. The Appeal of Misgiving (Genesis 32:9–12) Deliver me, I pray Thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau: for I fear him. . . . (v. 11)

Prayer in distress dredges the soul (cf. Psalm 107). It is a good thing to keep a note of the things you prayed about when you were in distress. We remain ignorant of ourselves because we do not keep a spiritual autobiography. Jacob's misgivings while in the attitude of prayer arise from the fact that while there is that in him which causes him to obey God, he is apprehensive lest God should punish him for his wrongdoing; he has to come to the place where he willingly confesses his guilt before God. Remember. Jacob did not turn back; he was cunning and crafty, but he was not a coward. There was not a strand of the physical coward in Jacob, but he was a moral coward by reason of his guilty conscience. His misgivings arose from his misdeeds.

Beware of having plans in your petitions before God; they are the most fruitful source of misgiving. If you pray along the line of your plans misgivings are sure to come, and if the misgivings are not heeded you will pervert God's purpose in the very thing which was begun at His bidding. God begins a work by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit for His own ends entirely and we get caught up into His purpose for that thing, then we begin to introduce our own plans—"I want this to produce that," and we storm the throne of God along that line; and the first thing God does is not to do it, and we say, "That must be the devil." Beware of making God an item, even the principal item, in your programme. God's ways are curiously abrupt with programmes, He seems to delight in breaking them up.

4. The Atonement for Misdeeds (Genesis 32:13-21)

And he lodged there that night: and took of that which he had with him a present for Esau his brother. (v. 13 RV)

Watch your motive for giving presents; it is a good way of discerning what a mean sneak you are capable of being. The giving of presents is one of the touchstones of character. If your relationship with God is not right in your present-giving, you will find there is an abomination of self-interest in it somewhere, even though you do it out of a warm-hearted impulse; there is a serpent-insinuation in it. It creeps into all our charity unless the life is right with God.

The cunning way in which the present is made to Esau is obvious, and yet Jacob is getting near the place where "Peniel" is possible. Restitution in some form or other is as certain as that God is on His throne. Restitution on the human plane is the evidence that it was God who designed human nature. Watch the almost uncanny accuracy with which the Holy Spirit will bring a thing back—"Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest," the Spirit of God brings it to you direct, "... go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother." Beware how you deal with yourself when God is educating you down to the scruple, 7 it is nearly always some ridiculously small thing that keeps you from getting through to God. Human nature looks for something big, yet it is some little thing, but behind it is the disposition of my prideful right to myself. "First go..."

PENIEL

Peniel means "face of God," and the word to Moses stands—"And He said, Thou canst not see My face: for there shall no man see Me, and live" (Exodus 33:20). This gives peculiar force to Jacob's words, "I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved," for Jacob did see God face to face, and he did die, so profound a death that God gave him a new name. "Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel."

That is always the test of the reality of sanctification, not so much that I have received something, but that I have ceased to be my old self. Through disillusionment and shattering Jacob comes out on God's side with a changed name; we drag the purpose of God through our own plans and change His name. We have to learn to distinguish between the impression made on us by a vision, and identification with the One who gave us the vision. The love of God and His forgiveness are the first things we experience, we are not prepared as yet to recognise His other attributes of holiness and justice because that will mean death to everything that does not partake of God's nature.

1. The Struggle of Anguish

This phrase is significant because in his loneliness Jacob goes through the decisive struggle of his life. We are dealing in this chapter with Jacob the giant, not with the mean man. "... and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day." Jacob tried to strangle the answer to his own prayer; his wrestling represents the human fighting with God. The nobler ones in God's sight are those who do not struggle but go through without demur. Abraham did not wrestle, neither did Isaac; Jacob struggles for everything. If a man has difficulty in getting through to God we are apt to imagine it is an indication of a fine character, whereas the opposite is true; he is refusing to yield and is kicking, and the only thing God can do is to cripple him. The characteristics exhibited by Jacob are those of Peter before Pentecost, of Saul of Tarsus before his conversion, a mixture of the dastardly and the heroic, the mean and the noble, all jumbled up. Jacob's wrestling is a profounder thing than the meeting with his brother, there is not one word about Esau in all that follows. Jacob is face to face with his need to acknowledge God and be blessed by Him.

2. The Surrender of All

I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me. (Genesis 32:26)

This is the picture of Jacob's full renunciation. When the supreme crisis is reached in a mixed soul like Jacob something must die, either self-realisation or God. To the simpler nature the crisis need not come at all, but to the mean, the ambitious, and the proud, it must come, and God does not show Himself as gentleness, but as adamant. It means death without the slightest hope of resurrection. What it is that goes to death depends on me. Am I willing to let the wrong in me that cannot dwell with God go to death, or willing to let the life of God die out in me? The crisis may be reached in an apparently placid commonplace life, there may be no external sign of it, but there is an internal crumbling away from all that is pure and holy. Jacob was not like that, he did not refuse to go through the inward struggle of his own nature against the blazing holiness of God.

3. The Solicitation of Appeal

And He said unto him, what is thy name? And he said, Jacob. (Genesis 32:27)

The confession has to be made: That is my name—supplanter; sneak; there is no palliation. Jacob had to get to the place where he willingly confesses before God the whole guilt of usurping the birthright. This is full and profound and agonising repentance. "And he said, Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel: for thou hast striven with God and with men, and hast prevailed" (RV). The warrior of God is not the man of muscle and a strong jaw, but the man of un-utterable weakness, the man who knows he has not any power; Jacob is no longer strong in himself, he is strong only in God, his life is no longer marked by striving, but by reliance on God. You cannot imitate reliance on God.

Not by wrestling, but by clinging Shall we be most blest;

Unconditional surrender Brings us God's own peace.

Jacob's wrestling means that he did not want to go through the way he knew he must, he had to come to the end of the best of his natural self, and he struggled in order not to. Then he came to the place where his wisdom was crippled for ever; "and he halted upon his thigh." The symbol is expressive of what it looks like in the eyes of shrewd worldly wisdom to cast your self unperplexed on God. When we cling to God we learn to kneel for the first time.

If you have never been to "Peniel" you are sure to come across things that will put your human wisdom into a panic; if you have seen God face to face your circumstances will never arouse any panic in you. We run off at a tangent—anywhere but Peniel, where we would see God "face to face."

THE STILL SMALL VOICE

On the surface everything seemed right enough to Jacob in Shechem, but underneath the surface every thing was wrong. Everything is always wrong when the children of God dwell in Shechem instead of at Beth-el. This chapter is the unveiling by God of the actuality of sin.

"And Jacob came in peace to the city of Shechem" (Genesis 33:18 RV). One day the hollow "Shechem" peace was shaken by an earthquake— Dinah's fall, and her brothers' crime, rudely awakened Jacob; then God's voice was heard: "Arise, go up to Beth-el, and dwell there." To enter into peace for ourselves without becoming either tolerantly un-watchful of other lives or an amateur providence over them, is supremely difficult. God holds us responsible for two things in connection with the lives He brings around us in the apparent haphazard of His providence, viz., insistent waiting on God for them, and inspired instruction and warning from God to them. The thing that astonishes us when we get through to God is the way God holds us responsible for other lives.

1. The Awakening Voice of God

And God said unto Jacob, Arise, go up to Beth-el, and dwell there. . . . (Genesis 35:1)

This must be the voice of God; no human voice would ever have said what these words imply. Think what Beth-el meant to Jacob in memory—Beth-el was the geographical place of God to him: "How dreadful is this place! this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." Beth-el was the place where the Divine promises had been given, and vows made, not yet fulfilled. To go back to Bethel meant to acknowledge error. The voice of God to an awakened soul, when it has heard the voice before, is never to go forward, but to go back. When the blood runs high and impulse worships at the shrine of the heroic, and the nerves strain for the actual doing of something, we not only do not hear God's voice, we don't want to hear it. Then when events have produced an earthquake in the personal life, we find that God was not in the earthquake, but in the still small voice, "Go to Beth-el, and stay there."

2. The Arousing Virtue of God (Genesis 35:2-4)

Then Jacob said unto his household, and to all that were with him, Put away the strange gods that are among you...(v. 2)

Now that Jacob has heard the voice of God speaking to him he is not afraid to assert his authority in his household. When you come across a man or woman who talks to you from God, you know it by the intuition of your spirit and you obey him, scarcely realising what you are doing; on looking back you become aware that it was not a human voice at all but the voice of God. Simulated authority should be laughed at, and it is a downright sensible human duty to do so, but when the authority of God comes to you through anyone, to rebel against it would be to rebel against God. But beware of trying to be consistent to the authority that God gives you over any life on a particular occasion; you know that God used you then in that life and you say, "Now I am always going to have this authority"—that is wrong. Authority never comes from you, but from God through you, therefore let God introduce or withhold as He chooses.

3. The Appreciated Value of God

And let us arise, and go up to Beth-el; and I will make there an altar unto God . . . (v. 3)

Every expansion of heart or brain or spirit must be paid for in added concentration. In the meeting with Esau and the marvellous experience of reconciliation with him, Jacob had an expansion of heart, but he did not pay for it afterwards in concentration; he lived loosely in the exalted peace of the expanded life, and suddenly a terrible tragedy breaks up the whole thing. In our personal lives every expansion of heart, whether it is the awakening of human love, or bereavement, must be paid for by watchfulness; if it is not, looseness, the feeling of all-abroadness, ending in moral collapse, is sure to result. It is because people do not understand the way they are made that all the havoc is produced in the lives of those who really have had times with God and experienced expansions of heart, but they have forgotten to concentrate, and the general feeling of looseness is a sure sign that God's presence has gone.

... who answered me in the day of my distress, and was with me in the way which I went.

The implication is, "when God answered me and brought deliverance, I forgot all about Him." Jacob settled down in the peace of Shechem, Dinah went to hell, and her brothers to the devil; then God spoke to Jacob. If you allow your mind to be expanded and forget to concentrate on God, the thing that happened in Jacob's domestic life on the big scale will happen in your bodily life on the narrow scale. The vision of what God wants must be paid for by concentration on your part, if it is not, you begin to get all abroad, and in come the "little foxes," in comes inordinate affection, in come a hundred and one things that were never there before, and down you go. It is not that these things may happen, they will happen as sure as God is God, unless you watch and pray, that is, concentrate until you are confirmed in the ways of God. Innocence must be transfigured into virtue by moral choices. We are all apt to be taken in by a frank nature. The man we call frank says of a wrong thing, "I'm sorry I did it," and promptly does it again, and we forgive him, while all the time the deepest deviltry goes on. The frank nature brings the glamour of virtue without its reality and stings innocence to death. Innocence is not purity, innocence is right for a child, but criminal for a man or woman. Men and women have no business to be innocent, they ought to be virtuous and pure. Character must be attained. Individuality, impulse, and innocence are the husk of personal life. Individuality, if it goes beyond a certain point, becomes pigheadedness, determined in dependence. I have to be prepared to give up my independent right to myself in order that my personality may emerge. Impulse is a subtle snare, always and every time; it may start right, but it is a short-cut to fame or infamy, and it is along the line of impulse that lust and temptation comes. Hold back the impulse and you discipline it into character, and it becomes something altogether different, viz., intuition. The same thing with innocence; innocence must be transformed into purity by a series of moral choices. There is no virtue that has not gone through a moral choice. A great many of us make virtues out of necessity.

THE BOY OF GOD

1. Ideals of Seventeen

Joseph, being seventeen years old . . . (Genesis 37:2)

The Bible always incarnates ideals in great personalities, and Joseph stands for the magnificent integrity of boyhood; no man thinks so clearly or has such high ideals as in his teens, but unless our ideals find us living in accordance with them they become a mockery. The Bible pays no attention to intellectual and emotional conceptions, but only to the actual manifestation of the ideal. A man may have remarkable conceptions, fine intellectual views, noble ideals and his actual life be beneath contempt, proving that all the high ideals and intellectual conceptions in the world have not the slightest power to bring the life into contact with Reality. There is no room whatever in our Lord's teaching for ideals and a stumbling walk of the feet; there must be an at-one-ment between the God-inspired conceptions and actual life, and the only way this can be brought about is by "Coming to Me." Joseph was amazingly susceptible to God, and he "dreamed dreams" (see 37:5, 9). The dreams of the Old Testament are the touch of God on the spirit of a man; always reverence such dreams. "And they hated him the more for his dreams, and for his words" (37:8). The hatred produced by a sense of superiority in another is the most venomous. This gives the inner meaning of our Lord's words: "They hated Me without a cause." Beware what you brood on in secret for the fateful opportunity will come when God and the devil will meet in your soul, and you will do according to your brooding, swept beyond all your control. This is a law as sure as God is God. The fateful opportunity came to the brethren who hated Joseph—"And when they saw him afar off, even before he came near unto them, they conspired against him to slay him." Beware of saying, "Oh well, it doesn't matter much what I think about in secret"; it does, for the opportunity will come when what you think about in secret will find expression and spurt out in an act. The Bible always speaks of sin as it appears in its final analysis. Jesus does not say, "You must not covet because it will lead to stealing"; He says, "You must not covet because it is stealing." He does not say, "You must not be angry with your brother because it will lead to murder"; He says, "You must not be angry with your brother because it is murder." "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer" (1 John 3:15). When the climax of these things is reached we begin to see the meaning of Calvary.

2. "His Strength Was as the Strength of Ten"

And the LORD was with Joseph, and he was a prosperous man; and he was in the house of his master the Egyptian. (Genesis 39:2)

A life with presence, i.e., an uncommon spirit, redeems any situation from the commonplace. It may be cleaning boots, doing house work, walking in the street, any ordinary thing at all, but immediately it is touched by a man or woman with presence it ceases to be commonplace. The rarest asset to a godly life is to be practically conscientious in every situation. "But the LORD was with Joseph, . . . and gave him favour in the sight of the keeper of the prison" (39:21).

Joseph's adaptability was superb. Adaptability is not tact—tact is frequently nothing but the moral counterpart of hypocrisy. Adaptability is the power to make a suitable environment for oneself out of any set of circumstances. Most of us are all right if we can live in our own particular setting, with our own crowd, but when we get pitchforked somewhere else either we cannot adapt ourselves, or we adapt ourselves too easily and lose God. Joseph did not lose God; God was with Joseph in Egypt as in Canaan; with him in the prison as in the house of his master. If I simply delight in a godly atmosphere and refuse to appropriate God for myself, when I have to leave the godly atmosphere I will find myself God-less; then my natural adaptability becomes the adaptability to degenerate.

3. "Complete Steel"

How then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God? (Genesis 39:9)

The phrase "complete steel" is Milton's definition of chastity, and is peculiarly appropriate to Joseph. Personal chastity is an impregnable barrier against evil. Like virtue, chastity is not a gift, but an attainment of determined integrity. Unsoiledness may be nothing more than necessity, the result of a shielded life, and is no more chastity than innocence is purity. Virtue and chastity are forged by me, not by God. You can't drown a cork, and you can't defile Joseph.

Four times over in this chapter is the statement made, "the LORD was with Joseph." It is the presence of God that is the secret of victory always. The fear of the Lord creates an atmosphere in which impure thoughts and unholy desires die a natural death. "But so did not I, because of the fear of God" (see Nehemiah 5:15). Joseph knew that the God whom he worshipped was "of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity." The outstanding value of the Bible is that it makes shameful things appear shameful because it never analyses them.

The discovery of the desperate recesses in the human heart is the greatest evidence of the need for the Redemption. The experiences of life awaken possibilities of evil that make you shudder, and as long as we remain under the refuge of innocence we are fools. The appalling things revealed in human lives confirm the words of the great Master of the human heart. Our Lord did not say, "into the heart of man 'these things' are injected," but, "from within, out of the heart of men, proceed..." and then follows the terrible catalogue. We ought to get into the habit of estimating ourselves by this rugged standard. The important thing to remember is that we are better trusting the revelations of Jesus Christ than our own innocence. The only thing that safeguards is the Redemption.

And God sent me before you to preserve you a remnant in the earth, and to save you alive by a great deliverance. (Genesis 45:7 RV)

That was Joseph's high vocation, to preserve life. God brings His purposes to pass in spite of all men may do, and often through what they do, and He will utilise the very things which look as if they were going dead against their fulfilment; God goes steadily on and involves us in the fulfilment.

So now it was not you that brought me hither, but God. (45:8)

But as for you, ye meant evil against me; but God meant it unto good. (50:20 RV)

Source

This material is gathered from Sunday sermons in various churches in Britain between 1908 and 1915; lectures at the Bible Training College; London, from 1911 to 1915; and talks to soldiers in Egypt from 1915 to 1917.

Publication History

 As a book: Many of these lectures and talks were first published as articles and pamphlets before they were combined into a book in 1935.

The origin of the first chapter, from which the book takes its name, is best described by Mrs. Chambers:

I recall vividly the place of the "birth" of this article; my husband dictated it to me during our stay in America in 1910, when we spent a little while in the exceedingly grand and beautiful Catskill mountains, amidst scenery which left us with the sense of worship expressed by Isaiah "The whole earth is full of His glory."

May every thought of the one, who so continually lifted our eyes from the "hills" to God Himself, be a mighty inspiration to us all to so "dwell in the shadow of the Almighty" that our lives may be a sacrament whereby God can be revealed as our "refuge and strength and very present Help."

As we sang the Scotch version of the Psalm at the graveside God's presence was memorably near, and we realised in a new way the reality of the truths His servant had so untiringly imparted to us by his teaching and life. The words "Greater works than these shall ye do because I go unto my Father" were among the last he spoke in this life, and our prayer is that the Lord Jesus Christ shall "see of the travail of His soul" in us and be satisfied.

Shortly after Oswald Chambers died in November 1917, one of his close associates, Jimmy Hanson,² suggested to Mrs. Chambers that they print one of Oswald's messages and send it out to the soldiers to whom he had ministered in Egypt.³ They chose "The Place of Help," and it became the forerunner of many OC messages printed and distributed without cost to the recipients.

The messages in this book provide a chronicle of Oswald Chambers' public ministry with a variety of audiences during the last decade of his life.

FOREWORD

The honour of framing this brief foreword the writer owes to the fact of being one of the very few who heard all, or almost all, the addresses at the time they were given, and of having thus been able to sense the spirit of their setting.

In their selection no strict sequence as to dates has been observed, but they are roughly grouped as follows. The undated sermons were preached in England either to Sunday congregations in various places in country or in town (1908–15), or at the Bible Training College, Clapham Common (1911–15): the dated ones belong to the period of Oswald

Chambers' ministry under the Y.M.C.A. at Zeitoun, Egypt, a centre to which men came from almost every unit of the Army in the Near East (1915–17).

The sermons entitled "Spiritual Discipleship" and "Sacramental Discipleship" were preached on the Sunday before Oswald Chambers sailed for Egypt in October 1915.

The talks at the B.T.C. were teaching talks. They lack of necessity the asides and illustrations that lit them up so delightfully, but it is easy in many cases to trace in the scriptural references the line of Bible Study being pursued at the time each was delivered.

The sermons at Zeitoun in those years of strain and stress were the very sacrament of preaching: no one could doubt it who heard with the keen hearing of the spiritual ear the miracle of authentic stillness that falls upon an assembly of men in those rare moments when a man speaks to his hearers; spirit to spirit, and he and they alike know it. The moment passes, but the "inward and spiritual grace" abides—a sacramental permanent possession.

To all who knew Oswald Chambers, his life was the interpretation of his teaching; to those to whom it comes now in another form the meaning opens in the hidden individual ways of God. The writer believes that the Spirit of God is using this teaching in many lands to very many lives as a corrective to the wave of shallow thinking, and of shallower religious values that has swept across a section of the Christian communities everywhere.

By Oswald Chambers men's minds are thrown back upon the deep fundamental things that govern human life in its threefold aspect of spirit, soul, and body: Divine Redemption is brought down to the very shores of our daily living: the Cross of Calvary is shown to men as being the very heart and centre of the Revelation of God in the Person of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Now "Unto Him that loved us, . . . to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever." Amen.

THE PLACE OF HELP

I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the LORD. (Psalm 121:1–2)

The marginal rendering puts it in the form of a question. "Shall I lift up mine eyes to the hills? from whence should my help come?" and recalls Jeremiah's statement: "In vain is help looked to from the mountains" (RV). I want to apply that statement spiritually.

Great Aspirations

Mountains stir intense hope and awaken vigour, but ultimately leave the climber exhausted and spent. Great men and great saints stir in us great aspirations and a great hopefulness, but leave us ultimately exhausted with a feeling of hopelessness; the inference we draw is that these people were built like that, and all that is left for us to do is to admire. Longfellow says: "Lives of great men all remind us we can make our lives sublime," but I question whether this is profoundly true. The lives of great men leave us with a sense of our own littleness which paralyses us in our effort to be anything else. Going back to the setting of this Psalm, one realises that the exquisite beauty of the mountain scenery awakens lofty aspirations; the limitless spaces above the highest mountain-peak, the snow-clad summit, and the scarred side ending in foliage and beauty as it sweeps to the valley below, stand as a symbol for all that is high and lofty and aspiring. When one is young this is the type of scenery most revelled in, the blood runs quicker, the air is purer and more vigorous, and things seem possible to the outlook that were not possible when we lived in the valleys; but as one gets older, and realises the limitation not only of physical life but in the inner life, the remembrance of the mountains and of mountain-top experiences leaves us a little wistful with an element of sadness, an element perhaps best expressed by the phrase, "What might have been, had we always been true to the truth, had we never sinned, had we never made mistakes!" Even such simple considerations as these bring us to the heart of the Psalmist's song in this Pilgrim Song Book⁵—"Shall I lift up mine eyes to the hills?" "Is that from whence my help is to come?" And the Psalmist answers, "No, my help cometh from the Lord Who made the hills"—and there we have the essence of the spiritual truth. Not to the great things God has done, not to the noble saints and noble lives He has made, but to God Himself does the Psalmist point.

The study of biography is always inspiring, but it has this one drawback, that it is apt to leave the life more given to sentiment and thinking and perhaps less to endeavour than is usually supposed; but when we realise what the Psalmist is pointing out and what the New Testament so strongly insists on, viz., "the Lord is our help," we are able to understand such a mountain character as the Apostle Paul saying "Follow my ways which be in Christ." We have not been told to follow in all the footsteps of the mountainlike characters, but in the footsteps of their faith, because their faith is in a Person.

Great Attainments

This is such an important theme that it will profit us to look at it from another aspect. This is the age when education is placed on the very highest pinnacle. In every civilised country we are told that if we will educate the people and give them better surroundings, we shall produce better characters. Such talk and such theories stir aspirations, but they do not work out well in reality. The kingdom within must be adjusted first before education can have its true use. To educate an unregenerate man is but to increase the possibility of cultured degradation. No one would wish to belittle the lofty attainments of education and culture, but we must realise we have to put them in their high, mighty, second place. Their relationship in human life is second, not first. The man whom God made is first, and the God Who made him is his only Help. God seems to point this out all through His Book—Moses, learned in all the learning of the Egyptian schools, the highest and ablest prophet-statesman conceivable, realises with a keenness and poignancy the bondage and degradation of his brethren, and sees that he is the one to deliver them: but God sends him for forty years into a wilderness to feed sheep. He removes first of all the big "I am" and then the little "I am" out of him. Read the account carefully; you will find that at the end of those forty years, when God spoke to Moses again, saying "Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth My people," Moses said "Who am I?" All this points out one thing, that the ability of a man to help his brother man lies lastingly with God and is not concerned with his aspirations or his education or his attainments.

The same thing emerges in the 15th chapter of St. John's Gospel where our Lord instructs His disciples about the new dispensation "I am." "I am the Vine. . . . " If the dominant identity of the disciple is not built up by God Himself, in vain are the mountains looked to for help. There may be some who are trying by aspiration and prayer and consecration and obedience, built up from looking at the lives that stand like mountain peaks, to attain a like similarity of character, and they are woefully lagging behind; their lips, as it were, have grown pale in the intense struggle, and they falter by the way, and the characters that used to stir intense hopefulness leave the soul sighing over "what might have been," but now can never be. To such a reader let the message of this 121st Psalm come with new hope, "My help cometh from the Lord Who made the hills." A strong saintly character is not the production of human breeding or culture, it is the manufacture of God.

Great Admirations

Take it from another aspect. There are people to-day who are exalting our Lord as a Teacher, saying, in effect, that they believe in the Sermon on the Mount and its high ideals but not in the Cross; that all that is necessary is to place the pure noble ideals of the Sermon on the Mount before mankind and let men strive to attain; that there is no need for a sacrificial death. When minds and men and countries are very young in thinking, this sort of statement and teaching has a wonderful fascination, but we sooner or later learn that if Jesus Christ was merely a Teacher, He adds to the burdens of human nature, for He erects an ideal that human nature can never attain. He tantalises us by statements that poor human nature can never fit itself for. By no prayer, by no self-sacrifice, by no devotion, and by no climbing can any man attain to that "Blessed are the pure in heart," which Jesus Christ says is essential to seeing God.

When we come to the New Testament interpretation of our Lord we find He is not a Teacher, we find He is a Saviour. We find that His teaching is but a statement of the kind of life we will live when we have let Him re-make us by means of His Cross and by the incoming of His Spirit. The life of Jesus is to be made ours, not by our imitation, not by our climbing, but by means of His Death. It is not admiration for holiness, nor aspirations after holiness, but attainment of holiness, and this is ours from God, not from any ritual of imitation.

I would like to commend this thought for the instruction and courage of those whose hearts are fainting in the way, from whom the ideals of youth have fled, to whom life holds out no more promises. For thirty years or more it may be that life has been a boundless romance of possibilities; beckoning signs from lofty mountain peaks have lured the spirit on; but now the burden and the heat of the day have come and the mountain tops are obscured in a dazing, dazzling heat, and the road is dusty and the mileage long, and the feet are weak and the endeavour is exhausted. Let me bring the message contained in this Psalm, even as a cup of water from the clear sparkling spring of life. "My help cometh from the Lord Who made heaven and earth." He will take you up, He will re-make you, He will make your soul young and will restore to you the years that the cankerworm hath eaten, and place you higher than the loftiest mountain peak, safe in the arms of the Lord Himself, secure from all alarms, and with an imperturbable peace that the world cannot take away.

This Psalm is one of the fifteen that the people sang and chanted on their ways of weary pilgrimage to the mighty concourse and festivity of God's hosts, and it is well called one of the "Pilgrim Psalms." The Psalmist goes on to say—"The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night. The LORD shall preserve thee from all evil," so that there be no fainting by the way. "The LORD shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore."

To whom are you looking? To some great mountainlike character? Are you even looking at the Lord Jesus Christ as a great mountain-like Character? It is the wrong way; help does not come that way. Look to the Lord alone, and come with the old pauper cry—

Just as I am, without one plea
But that Thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bid'st me come to Thee—
O Lamb of God, I come.

Any soul, no matter what his experience, that gets beyond this attitude is in danger of falling from grace. Oh, the security, the ineffable rest of knowing that the God Who made the mountains can come to our help! Let us hasten at once under the "shadow of the Almighty," to the "secret place of the Most High," for there shall no evil befall us. Jesus said, "him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out."

THE WAY

The Waylessness

To the prophets and poets of the Bible, life is a wayless wilderness. In it there are many voices crying, "This is the way," many ideals with signposts claiming to point out the way. It would be interesting to trace the sadness that lays hold of the minds of those who have never known the one and true Living Way, in whose outlook the waylessness of life seems to be the dominant note. Take, for instance, Thomas Carlyle; his mighty literary genius and his instinct for God made him ask in an insurgent manner why God kept silence, why He did not manifest Himself amid all the corruption and shams of life. No wonder his mind deepened into a dark stoicism, since he never saw that God had manifested Himself in that He had pointed the way out of all the mysteries of life in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. Or take our poets, those who have never known The Way—their "sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest thought." The feeling of uncertainty as to the issue, and the strange vagueness of the way is the inspiration of their thought. Or take our own personal moods when we are roused out of our commonplace equilibrium and the sense grows upon us strongly of the implicit kinship of the human spirit with the untrodden waylessness of life—until a man finds the Lord Jesus Christ, his heart and brain and spirit will lead him astray.

There are many ways in which a man's life may be suddenly struck by an immortal moment, when the true issues of his life, "the spirit's true endowments stand out plainly from its false ones," and he knows in that moment whether he is "pursuing the right way or the wrong way, to its triumph or undoing." Such a moment may come by conviction of sin, or it may come through the opening up of the vast isolation of a man's own nature which makes him afraid. Or it may come with the feeling that somewhere he will meet One Who will put him on the way to solve his implicit questions, One Who will satisfy the last aching abyss of the human heart, and put within his hands the key to unlock the secret treasures of life. There are many gates into the Holy City, and many avenues by which God may enter the human soul.

To all whose souls have been awakened by these moods or by conviction of sin, for whom life has been profoundly altered so that it can never be the same again—to all such the voice of the Lord Jesus Christ comes as the voice of the Eternal: "I am the Way." If a man will resign himself in implicit trust to the Lord Jesus, he will find that He leads the wayfaring soul into the green pastures and beside the still waters, so that even when he goes through the dark valley of the shadow of some staggering episode, he will fear no evil. Nothing in life or death, time or eternity, can stagger that soul from the certainty of the Way for one moment.

The Wayfinder

The Way is missed by everyone who has not the childlike heart; we have to go humbly lest we miss the way of life just because it is so simple. God has hidden these things from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto babes. When a man has been found by the Lord Jesus and has given himself to Him in unconditional surrender, the fact that he has found The Way is not so much a conscious possession as an unconscious inheritance. Explicit certainty is apt to make a man proud, and that spirit can never be in the saint. The life of the saint who has discovered The Way is the life of a little child; he discerns the will of God implicitly.

One of the significant things about those who are in The Way is that they have a strong family likeness to Jesus, His peace marks them in an altogether conspicuous manner. The light of the morning is on their faces, and the joy of the endless life is in their hearts. Wherever they go, men are gladdened or healed, or made conscious of a need.

The way to the fulfilment of all life's highest ideals and its deepest longings is the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. How patiently He waits until, having battered ourselves against the impregnable bars of our universe, we turn at last, humbled and bruised, to

His arms, and find that all our fightings and fears, all our wilfulness and waywardness, were unnecessary had we but been simple enough to come to Him at the first. "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." God grant that for our own sakes, for the sake of those near and dear to us, for the sake of the wide world, and for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ, we may come to this New and Living Way, where "the wayfaring men . . . shall not err therein . . . but the Redeemed shall walk there . . . with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads."

TWO SIDES TO FELLOWSHIP

What I tell you in the darkness, speak ye in the light: and what ye hear in the ear, proclaim upon the housetops. (Matthew 10:27 RV)

"What I tell you in the darkness . . ." Let it be understood that the darkness our Lord speaks of is not darkness caused by sin or disobedience, but rather darkness caused from excess of light. There are times in the life of every disciple when things are not clear or easy, when it is not possible to know what to do or say. Such times of darkness come as a discipline to the character and as the means of fuller knowledge of the Lord. Such darkness is a time for listening, not for speaking. This aspect of darkness as a necessary side to fellowship with God is not unusual in the Bible (see Isaiah 1:10; 5:30; 1 Peter 1:6-7). The Lord shares the darkness with His disciple—"What I tell you in the darkness . . . " He is there. He knows all about it. The sense of mystery must always be, for mystery means being guided by obedience to Someone Who knows more than I do. On the Mount of Transfiguration this darkness from excess of light is brought out—"They feared as they entered into the cloud," but in the cloud "they saw no one any more, save Jesus only with themselves."

In this side of fellowship with God the disciple must not mourn or fret for the light, nor must he put forth self-effort or any determination of the flesh or kindle a fire of his own. Many tendencies which lead to delusion arise just here. When the disciple says in his heart—"there must be a break; God must reveal Himself," he loses sight altogether that in the darkness God wants him to listen and not fuss. "In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength."

A disciple must be careful not to talk in the darkness; the listening ear is to be his characteristic, not listening to the voice of sympathising fellow disciples, or to the voice of self-pity, but listening only to the voice of the Lord, "Wherefore whatsoever ye have said in the darkness shall be heard in the light; and what ye have spoken in the ear in the inner chambers shall be proclaimed upon the housetops." Not what the disciple says in public prayer, not what he preaches from pulpit or platform, not what he writes on paper or in letters, but what he is in his heart which God alone knows, determines God's revelation of Himself to him. Character determines revelation (see Psalm 18:24–26). "With the merciful Thou wilt show Thyself merciful" (v. 25). "Say unto them, As I live, saith the LORD, surely as ye have spoken in Mine ears, so will I do to you" (Numbers 14:28 RV).

There is another side to fellowship: "What I tell you in the darkness, speak ye in the light." What are we speaking in the light? Many talk glibly and easily about stupendous truths which they believe, but the Lord has never revealed them to them in darkness. God's providential leadings will take the one who proclaims those glorious truths into tribulation and darkness whereby they can be made part of his own possession. Jesus tells us what we are to speak in the light: "What I tell you in the darkness."

All servants and handmaidens of the Lord have to partake in this discipline of darkness, to have the ear trained to listen to their Master's words. Our Lord never gives private illuminations to special favourites. His way is ever twofold: the development of character, and the descent of Divine illumination through the Word of God. Many are talking in the light today, and many voices have gone forth, but Jesus says, "My sheep hear My voice." "A stranger will they not follow but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers." At the beginning of a disciplining spell of providential darkness, the tumult and the noise may hinder the spirit from hearing the voice of the Lord, but sooner or later the disciple, at first inclined to say it thundered and to be afraid, says,

"Thy voice is on the rolling air; I see Thee in the setting sun, and in the rising, Thou art fair."

The voice of the Lord listened to in darkness is so entrancing that the finest of earth's voices are never afterwards mistaken for the voice of the Lord. Where are those in this fellowship of the Lord found to-day? "If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another." The fellowship of the disciples is based not on natural affinities of taste but on fellowship in the Holy Ghost, a fellowship that is constrained and enthralled by the love and communion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. When both sides of this fellowship, listening in darkness and speaking in light, are realised, no darkness can terrify any more.

Thou hast done well to kneel and say, "Since He Who gave can take away, And bid me suffer, I obey!"
And also well to tell my heart
Thy goodness in the bitterest part,
And thou wilt profit by her smart...
Nor with thy share of work be vexed;
Though incomplete and e'en perplexed,
It fits exactly to the next.
What seems too dark to thy dim sight

May be a shadow, seen aright, Making some brightness doubly bright— The flash that struck thy tree—no more To shelter thee—lets Heaven's blue floor Shine where it never shone before.

Adelaide Ann Proctor

Oh, the unspeakable benediction of the "treasures of darkness"! But for the night in the natural world we should know nothing of moon or stars, or of all the incommunicable thoughtfulness of the midnight. So spiritually it is not the days of sunshine and splendour and liberty and light that leave their lasting and indelible effect upon the soul but those nights of the Spirit in which, shadowed by God's hand, hidden in the dark cleft of some rock in a weary land, He lets the splendours of the outskirts of Himself pass before our gaze. It is such moments as these that insulate the soul from all worldliness and keep it in an "otherworldliness" while carrying on work for the Lord and communion with Him in this present evil world.

"Even the darkness hideth not from Thee, but the night shineth as the day; the darkness and the light are both alike to Thee."

DISSIPATED DEVOTION

Take heed to thyself that thou offer not thy burnt offerings in every place that thou seest: but in the place which the LORD shall choose in one of thy tribes, there thou shalt offer thy burnt offerings, and there thou shall do all that I command thee. (Deuteronomy 12:13–14)

An unusual theme, but this Old Testament ritual which refers to the people of God having too many shrines, has a lesson of penetrating importance for us in the New Testament dispensation, i.e., that there is a wilful element in our consecration that must be exterminated.

The impulse of worship is natural in the majority of human beings, and we must make the distinction very clear between the impulse of worship in an unregenerate spirit and the impulse of worship in a saint. Natural devotion chooses its own altars, its own setting, the scene of its own martyrdom. It would be very entrancing if a human being could go to martyrdom in such moods, having arranged the spectators and the scenery to suit his own ambition; but this Old Testament passage says that God chooses the place for the offering. This aims at the very root of the whole matter. We do not consecrate our gifts to God, they are not ours to have; we consecrate ourselves to God, that is, we give up the right to ourselves to Him.

Place of Consecration

A remarkable thing is that the place of the altar is not mentioned because evidently it was continually being changed. If it had been always at one place, the people would have become devoted to that place and would have made it a scene of religious festival without any indication of real devotion to God.

All through the prophets one hears the continual cry that the people have fasted or feasted for their own pleasure, they have been religious because it suited them; but the only devotion which is acceptable to God is the devotion on the part of a regenerate soul that starts from a full-hearted consecration, which by binding the sacrifice of itself to the altar of God, receives from God the supreme sanctification which identifies it for ever with the life of the Lord. The place of this devotion can never be discovered by human intelligence, or natural spirituality, but only by the Spirit of God.

It must be borne in mind that the burnt offering is not the sin offering. The Apostle Paul shows us distinctly the place of the altar, and the sacrifice God wants, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, ..." literally, give up your right to yourself. That people find it extremely difficult to get to this place is true, and the reason is not difficult to find. We choose our own altars, and say, "Yes, we will devote ourselves to the foreign field," or "we will give ourselves to slum work," "to work in some orphanage" or to "rescue work." All this commends itself thoroughly to the natural heart of a man, but it is not the place the Lord chooses.

That place is discernible only by the Holy Spirit, and the offering is prompted not by devotion to duty, or devotion to a doctrine, but by devotion to a Divine Being. When our Lord talked to the woman of Samaria He pointed out that both Jews and Samaritans had begun to worship a place instead of God, but He said, "the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and truth."

Purpose of Consecration

In the general aspect of consecration one is easily misled by those who are possessed of natural piety. People talk about seeing God in nature, and are in danger of mistaking the impulse that seeks after God for God Himself. Paul makes that distinction very clear in Acts 17:27, "that they should seek God, if haply they might feel after Him, and find Him, though He is not far from each one of us." The natural heart of man interprets that to mean that the instinct to worship, and to make an altar of devotion where he chooses, is the very instinct of God, whereas Paul implies that it is instinct feeling after God.

The altar of God's choosing is not approached by feelings of devotion or emotions of worship; that is why it is difficult to discover it. All natural religion reaches its climax in ritual, in the beauties of aesthetic and sensuous worship. God's altar is discerned only by the Holy Spirit when that Spirit is in a man.

The dissipation of devotion is seen over and over again in the practical issues of our lives. People give their lives to many things they have no business to. No one has any right to give up the right to himself or to herself to anyone but God Almighty, and devotion to a cause, no matter how noble or how beautiful, nowhere touches the profundity of this lesson. When we are told we must give up our right to ourselves to Jesus Christ, we are bound to ask—if we do not ask, we have not grasped the situation thoroughly—"Who is it that asks this tremendous devotion? Is there any principle, any cause, any enterprise on the face of the earth of such importance that a man has to give the very highest he has, viz., his right to himself, for it?" The only Being Who dare ask of me this supreme sacrifice is the Lord Jesus Christ.

Satan's great aim is to deflect us from the centre. He will allow us to be devoted "to death" to any cause, any enterprise, to anything but the Lord Jesus. Is anyone roused by the Spirit of God to wonder whether the object to which he is devoting his life has been chosen in a selfish consecration or not? It is so easy for a young convert, after listening to a missionary, to say God has given him a call there, and deliberately to choose to consecrate his life to that place. And that sort of thing is commended all over the Christian world, but I question whether it is commended by God. The tremendous world-wide instinct is of God. No soul has ever been saved or sanctified who did not instantly lose sight of country and of kindred, of kith and kin in the determination to do God's will; but immediately the desire and ambition of the individual chooses the altar, the scene of sacrifice, his devotion is dissipated.

Whenever our Lord talked about discipleship He brought out that fundamental thought—"If any man will come after Me, let him . . . take up his cross daily and follow Me." Jesus Christ distinctly stated that He came to do the will of His Father. "I must work the works of Him that sent Me." His first obedience was not to the needs of men, but to the will of God. He nowhere chose the altar of His sacrifice, God chose it for Him. He chose to make His life a willing and obedient sacrifice that His Father's purpose might be fulfilled, and He says, "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (RV).

Position of Consecration

Are we putting the needs of mankind, heathen or otherwise, as the ground of our consecration? The amount of mistaken zeal and energy and passion and martyrdom thrown into work for God, that has to come under the category of dissipated devotion, because people have chosen the scene of their own worship, is appalling. God grant that we may accept the primary call of the saint, viz., to do the will of his Lord, and the one vivid experience in the heart is personal, passionate devotion to Jesus Christ.

Paul actually says, "If I give my body to be burned, but have not love, it profiteth me nothing" (RV). This is the place in which nine out of every ten of us are deluded. Because men and women devote themselves to martyrdom for a cause, they think they have struck the profoundest secret of religion; whereas they have but exhibited the heroic spirit that is in all human beings, and have not begun to touch the great fundamental secret of spiritual Christianity, which is wholehearted, absolute consecration of myself to Jesus, not to His cause, not to His "league of pity," but to Himself personally. "For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and ourselves as your servants for Jesus' sake," as Paul says in 2 Corinthians 4:5 (RV). We are the servants of men, says Paul, not primarily because their needs have arrested us, but because Jesus Christ is our Lord; not because we feel the clamant needs of our age or any such sounding timbrel, but that the Lord Jesus Christ has saved and sanctified us and now He is Lord of our lives and makes us unconsciously the servants of other men, not for their sakes but for His own. This is the secret of presenting the burnt offering on the altar that God chooses.

Passion of Consecration

When the "passion for souls" has not this centre it is a dangerous passion. The socialist has a passion for souls, but the saint's passion for souls is not for man's sake primarily, but for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ. This is the source of all evangelical missionary enterprise. The appeal is not to be put on the ground that the heathen are perishing without the knowledge of God; that appeal awakens a wilful devotion which dissipates the energies of the life. But let the preacher take back his hearer and his would-be devotee to the Garden of Gethsemane, to the still midnight in the quiet wood, to the pale moon's passionless gleam on each tree, and then in imagination again picture all prostrate on the ground, our King, Redeemer, God, Whose bloody sweat, like heavy dew, stains the sod, and let the Holy Spirit ring through the preacher's and the hearer's heart, "This is the cost of having loved you."

And let him take the hearer and his own heart back to Calvary, to that "historic pole" of Time and Eternity, the Cross of Christ, and then let the passion and power of the Holy Ghost so seize hold of heart and brain and imagination that the sacrifice is bound with cords unto the horns of the altar and the life is entirely at the disposal of God.

It is one thing to behold the haggard, starved, sinstained, brokenhearted faces of men, but that is not sufficient for Christian enterprise. At the back of these faces must ever be seen the "Face marred more than any man's," until the passion of the whole world's anguish that forced its way through His heart, may force its way through our hearts too, until we are His for ever, having drunk the cup of communion with His cross that shall identify us body, soul and spirit as Christ's.

SKILFUL SOUL-WINNING

He must increase, but I must decrease. (John 3:30)

Decreasing into His Purpose

The most delicate mission on earth is to win souls for Jesus without deranging their affections and affinities and sympathies by our own personal fascination. There is neither discouragement nor pensive humility in John's statement, but the passionate realisation of his position. As Christian workers we are about the most sacred business, seeking to win souls to the Lord Jesus, ministering to the holy relationship of Bridegroom and bride. That is our business, and we must be watchful lest any mood or disposition of our own should give a false impression of the Bridegroom and scare away the prospective bride. We are here for His sake, and we have to take care lest we damage His reputation. It may sometimes mean scaring a soul away from ourselves in order that Jesus Christ's attraction may tell.

Be jealously careful lest the impression given of our Lord in a public address is effaced when we come into the homes of the hearers. A beautiful saint may be a hindrance because he does not present Jesus Christ, but only what He has done, and the impression is left—"What a fine character!" The worker is increasing all the time, not Jesus Christ.

Decoying into His Power

Spiritual moods are as sensitive and delicate as the awakenings of early love; the most exquisite thing in the human soul is that early mood of the soul when it first falls in love with the Lord. By Christian courtesy to Jesus Christ, we should confirm the desire and love which has been awakened in souls wooed by our messages until we see them consorts of Him Who is the chiefest among ten thousand, the altogether lovely One. It means no rest in intercession until the soul has long lost sight of the worker, he needs him no more because he has got the Lord. We are apt to interfere in lives and produce fanatics instead of men and women devoted to Jesus because we have not been friends of the Bridegroom. We decoy them into our sect or our personal point of view instead of into His power. John's joy is this—At last they are to see the Bridegroom! "He must increase, but I must decrease"! It is said not in sadness but in joy.

The watcher of souls for God has to get them not so much out of sin and wrong as to see Jesus. If you become a necessity to a soul you have got out of God's order, your great need as a worker is to be a friend of the Bridegroom. Your goodness and purity ought never to attract attention to itself, it ought simply to be a magnet to draw others to Jesus; if it does not draw them to Him it is not holiness of the right order, it is an influence which will awaken inordinate affection and lead souls off into side issues. Over and over again we come in and prevent and say, This, or that, must not be, and instead of being friends of the Bridegroom we are sympathising snares, and the soul is not able to say, "He or she was a friend of the Bridegroom," but, "He or she was a thief and stole my affections away from Jesus Christ and located them elsewhere, and so I lost the vision."

Delighting in His Provision

When once you see a soul in sight of the claims of Jesus, you know your influence has been in the right direction, and instead of putting out a hand to withhold the throes, pray that they grow ten times stronger until no power on earth or in hell can ever hold that soul from Jesus Christ (cf. Luke 14:26). Beware of rejoicing in the wrong thing with a soul, but see that you rejoice at the right thing. "The friend of the Bridegroom, which standeth and heareth Him, rejoiceth greatly because of the Bridegroom's voice: this my joy therefore is fulfilled."

It is not sin that hinders, but our not living as friends of the Bridegroom. Suppose you talk about depending on God and how wonderful it is, and then others see that in your own immediate concerns you do not depend on Him a bit, but on your own wits, it makes them say, "Well, after all, it's a big pretence, there is no Almighty Christ to depend on anywhere, it is all mere sentiment." The impression left is that Jesus Christ is not real to you. "John indeed did no sign: but all things whatsoever John spake of this Man were true" (John 10:41 RV).

Devoted to Him Personally

In order to maintain friendship and loyalty to Christ, be much more careful of your moral and vital relationship to Him than any other thing, even obedience. Sometimes there is nothing to obey, the only thing to do is to maintain your vital connection with Jesus Christ, to see that nothing interferes with your relationship to Him. Only at occasional times do we have to obey; when a crisis arises we have to find out what God's will is, but the greater part of our life is not conscious obedience, but this maintained relationship. To have our eyes on successful service is one of the greatest snares to a Christian worker, for it has in it the peril of evading the soul's concentration on Jesus Christ, and instead of being friends of the Bridegroom we become antichrists in our domain, working against Him while we use His weapons; amateur providences with the jargon of Divine providence, and when the Bridegroom does speak we shall not hear His voice. Decreasing to the absolute effacing of the worker, till he or she is never thought of again, is the true result of devotion, and John says, That is my joy. Watch until you hear the Bridegroom's voice in the life of a soul, never mind what havoc, what upset it brings, what crumblings of health. Rejoice with divine hilarity over that soul because the Bridegroom's voice has been heard.

LOVE—HUMAN AND DIVINE

Love never faileth. (1 Corinthians 13:8 RV)

"Love never faileth"! What a wonderful phrase that is! but what a still more wonderful thing the reality of that love must be; greater than prophecy—that vast forth-telling of the mind and purpose of God; greater than the practical faith that can remove mountains; greater than philanthropic self-sacrifice; greater than the extraordinary gifts of emotions and ecstasies and all eloquence; and it is this love that is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.

The Highest Human Love

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. (John 15:13)

This wonderful verse, quoted so often during this terrible war,⁶ has suffered from contortions of belittling as well as of exaggeration; but the great words stand as those of the Lord Jesus Christ. They exhibit the highest human love, not the highest Divine love. The love that lays down the life for a man's friends is irrespective of religious faith or of lack of it. Atheists and pagans, saints and sinners alike, have exhibited this highest human love.

The revival of this greatest human love has been superb during this war, but there has not been as yet any sign of a corresponding great revival of self-sacrificing love on the part of the Church of Christ. Self-regarding love is part weakness, part selfishness, and part romance; and it is this self-regarding love that so counterfeits the higher love that, to the majority, love is too often looked upon as a weak sentimental thing.

"My Utmost for the Highest" was the motto of the great artist G. F. Watts, and it has very evidently been the watchword of thousands of young men whose names only figure now on the list of the killed. But let it never be forgotten that the highest human love has nothing to do with religious faith, and the distortion of this mighty statement of Christ Jesus arises from the misunderstanding of this point.

Probably the finest scriptural incident illustrating the highest human love is recorded in 2 Samuel 23:15–17.

The Highest Divine Love

But God commendeth His own love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. (Romans 5:8 RV)

This is the characteristic of the Divine love: not that God lays down His life for His friends, but that He lays down His life for His enemies (v. 10). That is not human love. It does not mean that no human being has ever laid down his life for his enemies, but it does mean that no human being ever did so without having received the Divine nature through the Redemption of our Lord.

This statement is alien to many modern minds imbued with evolutionary conceptions, because that type of intellectual thinking dislikes any break between the human and the Divine; it is easy to say that human love and Divine love are one and the same thing; actually they are very far from being the same. It is also easy to say that human virtues and God's nature are one and the same thing; but this, too, is actually far from the truth. We must square our thinking with facts. Sin has come in and made a hiatus between human and Divine love, between human virtues and God's nature, and what we see now in human nature is only the remnant and refraction of the Divine. Our Lord clearly indicates that a man needs to be born from above (RV mg) before he can possess or exhibit the oneness of the human and Divine in his own person. In theoretic conception the human and the Divine are one; in actual human life sin has made them two. Jesus Christ makes them one again by the efficacy of the Atonement. Hence the distinction is not merely theological, but experimental.

"God commendeth His own love" (RV). Human relationships may be used to illustrate God's love, e.g., the love of father, mother, wife, lover; but illustration is not identity. Human love may illustrate the Divine, it is not identical with the Divine love because of sin. God's own love is so strange to our natural conceptions that we see no love in it; not until we are awakened by the conviction of our sin and anarchy do we realise God's great love towards us—"while we were yet sinners."

Tennyson's phrase, "We needs must love the highest when we see it, not Lancelot, nor another," is sufficiently true to be dangerously wrong; for when the religious people of our Lord's day saw the Highest incarnate before them, they hated Him and crucified Him.

The words of the prophet Isaiah are humiliatingly true of us. When we see the Highest, He is to us as "a root out of a dry ground: He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we see Him, there is no beauty that we should desire Him" (Isaiah 53:2 RV). The highest Divine love is not only exhibited in the extreme amazement of the tragedy of Calvary, but in the laying down of the Divine life through the thirty years at Nazareth, through the three years of popularity, scandal, and hatred, and furthermore in the long pre-incarnate years (cf. Revelation 13:8).

The Cross is the supreme moment in Time and Eternity, and it is the concentrated essence of the very nature of the Divine love. God lays down His life in the very creation we utilise for our own selfish ends. God lays down His life in His long-suffering patience with the civilised worlds which men have erected on God's earth in defiance of all He has revealed. The Self-expenditure of God for His enemies in the life and death of our Lord Jesus Christ, becomes the great bridge over the gulf of sin whereby human love may cross over and be embraced by the Divine love, the love that never fails (RV).

The Highest Christian Love

No longer do I call you servants; . . . but I have called you friends. (John 15:15 RV)

This is the wonderful way in which our Lord connects the highest human love with the highest Divine love; the connection is in His disciples. The emphasis is on the deliberate laying down of the life, not in one tragic crisis, but in the grey face of actual facts unillumined by romance, obscured by the mist of the utter commonplace, spending the life out deliberately day by day for my Divine Lord and His friends—this is the love that never fails (RV); and mark, the love that never fails is not human love alone, nor Divine love alone, but the at-one-ment of them in the disciples of Jesus.

We reveal the impoverished meanness⁸ of our conceptions by the words we use in the actual business of life—"economy," "insurance," "diplomacy." These words cover by euphemism our ghastly disbelief in our Heavenly Father. "Be ve therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect," and the connection of this perfection with its context must be observed. Its context is Matthew 5:45, "that ye may be sons of your Father which is in heaven: for He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust." Our Lord means by being perfect then obviously that we exhibit in our actual relationships to men as they are, the hospitality and generosity our Heavenly Father has exhibited to us. In 2 Corinthians 4:7-11 Paul makes it plain that there are no ideal conditions of life, but "My Utmost for His Highest" has to be carried out in the actual conditions of human life.

^{7.} the killed: military personnel killed in World War I (1914-18).

^{8.} mean: as used here, something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

The highest Christian love is not devotion to a work or to a cause, but to Jesus Christ. In the early days of our Lord's life the grief and astonishment of Mary and Joseph was caused by this very thing, "And He said unto them, How is it that ye sought Me? wist ye not that I must be in My Father's house? And they understood not the saying which He spake unto them" (Luke 2:49–50 RV). Causes are good, and work is good, but love in these fails. The laying down of the life for Jesus Christ's sake exhibits the Christian love that never fails. Our Lord was viewed as wild and erratic because He did not identify Himself with the cause of the Pharisees or with the Zealots, yet He laid down His life as the servant of Jehovah. "Wherefore Jesus also, that He might sanctify the people through His own blood, suffered without the gate," and the writer immediately follows it up with the injunction, "Let us therefore go forth unto Him without the camp, bearing His reproach. For we have not here an abiding city, but we seek after the city which is to come" (Hebrews 13:12–14 RV).

Thank God that we have the glorious fighting chance of identifying ourselves with our Lord's interests in other people in the love that never fails, for that love "suffereth long, and is kind; . . . envieth not; . . . vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not its own, is not provoked, taketh not account of evil; rejoiceth not in unrighteousness, but rejoiceth with the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth" (RV).

THE PASSION FOR CHRIST

Ye shall be witnesses unto Me. (Acts 1:8)

These words of our Risen Lord were spoken just before His Ascension. We have to be careful lest we make the passionate watchwords—"a passion for souls" and "a passion for Christ" into rival cries. The great passion which the Holy Ghost works in us, whereby He expresses the Redemption of our Lord in and through us in practical ways, is the passion for Jesus Christ Himself. "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me"—not witnesses only to what Jesus has done or can do, but witnesses who are an infinite satisfaction to His own heart wherever they are placed. The danger in the modern form of Christianity is its departure more and more from the great central Figure of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Christian experience does not mean we have thought through the way God works in human lives by His grace, or that we are able to state theologically that God gives the Holy Ghost to them that ask Him—that may be Christian thinking, but it is not Christian experience. Christian experience is living through all this by the marvellous power of the Holy Ghost.

The Holy Ghost working in me does not produce wonderful experiences that make people say "What a wonderful life that man lives"; the Holy Ghost working in me makes me a passionate, devoted, absorbed lover of the Lord Jesus Christ. "Passion" is a wonderful word, it is all that we mean by passive suffering and magnificent patience, and spiritually, all that is meant by human passion is lifted to the white, intense, welding heat of enthusiasm for Jesus Christ. God grant that we may be possessed by the Holy Ghost in such fullness that we may be witnesses unto Jesus Christ.

John 7:39; 14:16; 20:22, all these references to the Holy Ghost are anticipatory. The Holy Spirit's influence and power were at work before Pentecost, though He was not here. It is not the baptism of the Holy Ghost that changes men, but the power of the Ascended Christ coming into men's lives by the Holy Ghost that changes men. The baptism of the Holy Ghost is the evidence of the Ascended Christ. The Holy Ghost works along the line of the Redemption of our Lord, and along that line only. The mighty power of the Holy Ghost brings back to God the experiences of saved men and women, and ultimately, if one may put it so, will bring back to God the experiences of a totally redeemed world, a new heaven and a new earth.

"When He . . . is come, . . . He shall glorify Me." May God bring straight home to us that no human heart can love the Lord Jesus in the degree that He demands, e.g. Luke 14:26. There stands the claim of Jesus, tremendously strong, our love for Him must be overwhelmingly more passionate than every devoted earthly relationship. How is it to be done? There is only one Lover of the Lord Jesus and that is the Holy Ghost; when we receive the Holy Ghost He turns us into passionate human lovers of Jesus Christ. Then out of our lives will flow those rivers of living water that heal and bless, and we spend and suffer and endure in patience all because of One and One only. It is not the passion for men that saves men; the passion for men breaks human hearts. The passion for Christ inwrought by the Holy Ghost is deeper down than the deepest agony the world, the flesh and the devil can produce. It goes straight down to where our Lord went, and the Holy Ghost works out, not in thinking, but in living, this passion for Jesus Christ in any setting of life any human being indwelt by the Holy Ghost can get into, until Jesus can see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied.

God does not ask us to believe that men can be saved; we cannot pull men out of hell by believing that we can pull them out. When we see a man in hell, every attitude of our souls and minds are paralysed; we cannot believe he can be saved. God does not ask us to believe that he can be saved; He asks us whether we will believe that Jesus believes He can save him. The facts of life are awful, men's minds are crushed by the terrible facts of evil all around. When the Holy Ghost indwells us, He does not obliterate those facts, but slowly through all the features of crime and evil and wrong, there emerges the one great wonderful Figure, the Lord Jesus Christ, and the men possessed by the Holy Ghost, and having the Redemption of Christ inwrought in them, say "Lord, Thou knowest," and the saving work goes on.

Galatians 2:20 is not a theological statement, it is a statement of Christian experience wrought by the Holy Ghost. "I am Christ's and He is mine." It is the language of real passion, and it is not too strong an expression for stating the wonderful experience of oneness with Jesus Christ. Paul is so absorbed with Jesus that he does not think of himself apart from this marvellous identification with Jesus Christ. It is closer than a union, it is a oneness illustrated by the vine and the branches. "I am the Vine," not the root, but the Vine, "ye are the branches." The oneness is as close as that. "One, even as We are one."

Paul had one volcanic moment in his life when all his stubbornness was destroyed by the dynamite of the Holy Ghost. Some folk go through tremendous smashings and breakings, but there is no need for them to go that way. The great crashings and upsets and disappointments come because of stubbornness. Our great need is to ask for and receive the Holy Ghost in simple faith in the marvellous Atonement of Jesus Christ, and He will turn us into passionate lovers of the Lord. It is this passion for Christ worked out in us that makes us witnesses to Jesus wherever we are, men and women in whom He delights, upon whom He can look down with approval; men and women whom He can put in the shadow or the sun; men and women whom He can put upon their beds or on their feet; men and women whom He can send anywhere He chooses. God grant that our watchword may be a "passion for Christ," and that the Holy Ghost may work out in us the experience of Christ being all, so that He may do exactly what He likes with us.

PARTAKERS OF HIS SUFFERINGS

But, insomuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings rejoice. (1 Peter 4:13 RV)

If we are going to be used by God, He will take us through a multitude of experiences that are not meant for us at all, but meant to make us useful in His hands. There are things we go through which are unexplainable on any other line, and the nearer we get to God the more inexplicable the way seems. It is only on looking back and by getting an explanation from God's Word that we understand His dealings with us. It is part of Christian culture to know what God is after. Jesus Christ suffered "according to the will of God"; He did not suffer in the way we suffer as individuals. In the Person of Jesus Christ we have the universal presentation of the whole of the human race.

Jesus Christ looked upon His life as one of temptation; and He goes through the same kind of temptation in us as He went through in the days of His flesh. The essence of Christianity is that we give the Son of God a chance to live and move and have His being in us, and the meaning of all spiritual growth is that He has an increasing opportunity to manifest Himself in our mortal flesh. The temptations of Jesus are not those of a Man as man, but the temptations of God as Man. "Wherefore it behoved Him in all things to be made like unto His brethren" (Hebrews 2:17 RV). Jesus Christ's temptations and ours move in different spheres until we become His brethren by being born from above (RV mg). "For both He that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren" (Hebrews 2:11). By regeneration the Son of God is formed in me and He has the same setting in my life as He had when on earth. The honour of Jesus Christ is at stake in my bodily life; am I remaining loyal to Him in the temptations which beset His life in me?

Temptation is a short cut to what is good, not to what is bad. Satan came to our Lord as an angel of light, and all his temptations centre around this point—"You are the Son of God, then do God's work in Your own way; put men's needs first, feed them, heal their sicknesses, and they will crown You King." Our Lord would not become King on that line; He deliberately rejected the suggested short cut, and chose the long trail, evading none of the suffering involved (cf. John 6:15).

"He answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." It is a long time before we are able to listen to every word of God; we listen to one word—"bread" when we are hungry, but there is more than that. The fanatic hears only the word of God that comes through the Bible. The word of God comes through the history of the world, through the Christian Church, and through Nature. We have to learn to live by every word of God, and it takes time. If we try to listen to all the words of God at once, we become surfeited.

What, could ye not watch with Me one hour? (Matthew 26:40)

Am I watching with Jesus in my life? Am I looking for what He is looking for, or looking for satisfaction for myself? Very few of us watch with Jesus, we have only the idea of His watching with us. He is inscrutable to us because He represents a standard of things that only one or two of us enter into. We are easily roused over things that hurt us; we are scandalised at immorality because it upsets us. There is something infinitely more vital than the horror roused by social crimes, and that is the horror of God's Son at sin. In the Garden of Gethsemane the veil is drawn aside, and it reveals the suffering that realises the horror of sin. Are we more horror-struck by the pride of the human heart against God than we are by the miseries and crimes of human life? That is the test.

"If Thou art the Son of God, cast Thyself down" (RV)—"You will win the Kingship of men if You do something supernatural, use signs and wonders, bewitch men, and the world will be at Your feet." Jesus said, "Again it is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God" (RV). Are we going to tempt Him again? "If God would only do the magical thing!" We have no right to call on God to do supernatural wonders. The temptation of the Church is to go into the "show business." When God is working the miracle of His grace in us it is always manifested in a chastened life, utterly restrained. Have I spurned the "long trail" and taken the "short cut" of self-realisation?—"Why should I not satisfy myself now? Why should I not do this or that? Why should I not devote myself to the cause I see?" I have no right to identify myself with a cause unless it represents that for which Jesus Christ died. If I allow Jesus Christ to realise Himself in me, I shall not find that I am delivered from temptation, but that I am loosened into it, introduced into what God calls temptation. Am I prepared for God to stamp my personal ambitions right out, prepared for Him to destroy by transfiguration my individual determinations, and bring me into fellowship with the sufferings of His Son? God's purpose is not seen on the surface; it looks as if He is permitting the breaking up of things; but Jesus Christ's hope is that the human race will be as He is Himself, perfectly at one with God. "When the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?"

The Strain of the Last Terror of Love (Matthew 12:46–50; John 19:25–27)

Who is My mother? (Matthew 12:48)

Behold thy mother! (John 19:27)

The greatest benefits God has conferred on human life, e.g., fatherhood, motherhood, childhood, home, become the greatest curse if Jesus Christ is not the Head. A home that does not acknowledge Jesus Christ as the Head will become exclusive on the line of its own affinities; related to Jesus Christ, the home becomes a centre for all the benedictions of motherhood and sonhood to be expressed to everyone—"an open house for the universe." By His Death and Resurrection our Lord has the right to give eternal life to every man; by His Ascension He enters Heaven and keeps the door open for humanity.

Through the travail of the nations just now the Spirit of God is working out His own purpose; no nation is exclusively God's. When the Holy Spirit enters a man, instantly he feels called to be a missionary; he has had introduced into him the very nature of God which is focused in John 3:16—"God so loved the world. . . ." The Holy Spirit sheds abroad in our hearts the love of God, a love which breaks all confines of body, soul and spirit. The Holy Spirit severs human connections and makes connections which are universal—a complete union of men and women all over the world in a bond in which there is no snare. God's call is for the world; the question of location is a matter of the engineering of God's providence.

Some things work suddenly and are seen; others, such as the life in a seed, work slowly and silently. There are some points of view which we do not see but they see us; that is, they take us into themselves; and some points of God's truth are like that. You say, "I don't understand this"—because you are part of it. We do not take God into our consciousness: God takes us into His consciousness, and that means we are taken up into His purpose, not into conscious agreement with His purpose; there is always more than we are conscious of. God's order comes to us in the haphazard. Things look as if they happen by chance, but behind all is the purpose of God, and the New Testament reveals what that purpose is. We are made partakers of Christ's sufferings; then, says Peter, rejoice, because when His glory is revealed you will be glad also with exceeding joy.

There is no snare of pride along any of these lines because there is no aim of our own in them; there is only the aim of God.

THE THEOLOGY OF REST

Mark 4:35-41

"Come unto Me, . . . and I will give you rest," i.e., build you up into a stable life in which there is neither weariness nor cessation from activities. The Bible never glorifies our natural conception of things; it does not use the words "rest" and "joy" and "peace" as we use them, and our common-sense interpretation of words must be keyed up to the way God uses them, otherwise we lose the "humour" of God.

The incident recorded in Mark 4:35-41 is not an incident in the life of a man, but in the life of God as Man. This Man asleep in the boat is God Incarnate. Jesus had said to the disciples, "Let us go over unto the other side" (RV), but when the storm arose, instead of relying upon Him, they failed Him. The actual circumstances were so crushing that their common sense was up in alarm, their panic carried them off their feet, and in terror they awoke Him. When we are in fear, we can do nothing less than pray to God, but our Lord has the right to expect of those who name His Name and have His nature in them an understanding confidence in Him. Instead of that, when we are at our wits' end we go back to the elementary prayers of those who do not know Him, and prove that we have not the slightest atom of confidence in Him and in His government of the world: He is asleep—the tiller is not in His hand, and we sit down in nervous dread. God expects His children to be so confident in Him that in a crisis they are the ones upon whom He can rely. A great point is reached spiritually when we stop worrying God over personal matters or over any matter. God expects of us the one thing that glorifies Him—and that is to remain absolutely confident in Him, remembering what He has said beforehand, and sure that His purposes will be fulfilled.

Always beware of the thing that shuts you up but does not convince you—common sense will do that. What is common sense worth in such a crisis as is symbolised here? It simply disturbs God. In this incident our Lord answered the disciples' cry, but He rebuked them for their lack of faith, "Why are ye fearful? have ye not yet faith?" (RV). What a pang must have shot through their hearts—"Missed it again!" And what a pang will come through our hearts when we realise we have done the same thing, when we might have produced downright joy in the heart of Jesus by remaining absolutely confident in Him, no matter what was ahead. The joy that a believer can give to God is the purest pleasure God ever allows a saint, and it is very humiliating to realise how little joy we do give Him. We put our trust in God up to a certain point, then we say, "Now I must do my best." There are times when there is no human best to be done, when the Divine best must be left to work, and God expects those of us who know Him to be confident in His ability and power. We have to learn what these fishermen learned, that the Carpenter of Nazareth knew better than they did how to manage the boat. Is Jesus Christ a Carpenter, or is He God to me? If He is only man, why let Him take the tiller of the boat? Why pray to Him? But if He be God, then be heroic enough to go to the breaking-point and not break in your confidence in Him.

If we have faith at all it must be faith in Almighty God; when He has said a thing, He will perform it; we have to remain steadfastly obedient to Him. Are we learning to be silent unto God, or are we worrying Him with needless prayers? In this terrific crisis of war many of us have lost our wits, we see only breakers ahead, with nothing for us to do but watch the whole thing go to ruin; and yet He said—"Let us go over unto the other side" (RV). Just as a general looks for the man who keeps his head in the fight, so the Lord looks for the man who will keep his faith in Him. "When the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" (Luke 18:8). There is no more glorious opportunity than the day in which we live for proving in personal life and in every way that we are confident in God.

The stars do their work without fuss; God does His work without fuss, and saints do their work without fuss. The people who are always desperately active are a nuisance; it is through the saints who are one with Him that God is doing things all the time. The broken and the jaded and the twisted are being ministered to by God through the saints who are not overcome by their own panic, who because of their oneness with Him are absolutely at rest, consequently He can work through them. A sanctified saint remains perfectly confident in God, because sanctification is not something the Lord gives me, sanctification is Himself in me. There is only one holiness, the holiness of God, and only one sanctification, the sanctification that has its origin in Jesus Christ. "But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, Who was made unto us . . . sanctification" (1 Corinthians 1:30 RV). A sanctified saint is at leisure from himself and his own affairs, confident that God is bringing all things out well.

Spiritual realities can always be counterfeited. "Rest in the LORD" can be turned into pious "rust" in sentiment. What is all our talk about sanctification going to amount to? It should amount to that rest in God which means a oneness with Him such as Jesus had—not only blameless in God's sight, but a deep joy to Him. God grant we may be.

2 Corinthians 1:8-10

For we would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning our affliction which befell us in Asia. . . . (2 Corinthians 1:8 RV)

Human fellowship can go to great lengths, but not all the way. Fellowship with God can go all lengths. The Apostle Paul literally fulfilled what we mean by this phrase, the altar of fellowship; he offered himself liberally and freely to God, and then offered himself at the hands of God, freely and fully, for the service of God among men, whether or not men understood him. "And I will very gladly spend and be spent for you; though the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved." Do we know anything about this altar of fellowship whereby we offer back to God the best He has given us, and then let Him re-offer it as broken bread and poured-out wine to His other children?

Disasters of Fellowship

insomuch that we despaired even of life . . .

There are disasters to be faced by the one who is in real fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ. God has never promised to keep us immune from trouble; He says "I will be with him in trouble," which is a very different thing. Paul was "an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God," and it is this fact that accounts for the crushing criticism and the spiteful treatment to which he was subjected by those who could not discern on what authority he based his apostleship.

Paul was a Pharisee of the Pharisees, he stood in the fore rank of learning until Jesus appeared to him, staggered him, blinded him, extinguished all his personal aims, and sent him out to be an apostle to the Gentiles—"I have chosen him." That was the ground Paul stood on, and that only—he was an apostle "by the will of God" (see Galatians 1:15–16).

If you are experiencing the disasters of fellowship, don't get into despair, remain unswervingly and unhesitatingly faithful to the Lord Jesus Christ and refuse to compromise for one second. Don't say "it can't be done" because you see a thing is going to crush your physical life. Calculate on the disaster of fellowship, because through it God is going to bring you into fellowship with His Son. This is also true of work for God—"except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die. . . . "

Discipline of Fellowship

Yea, we ourselves have had the answer of death within ourselves . . . (RV)

If I am in fellowship with Jesus Christ and am indwelt by Him, I have the answer of death in myself, and nothing the world, the flesh or the devil can do can touch me. This divine light came to Paul out of his desperate experience in Ephesus; he realised then that nothing could any more affright him. The discipline of fellowship brought about in Paul's experience the assimilation of what he believed. We say many things which we believe, but they have never been tested. Discipline has to come through all the things we believe in order to turn them into real spiritual possessions. It is the trial of our faith that is precious. "Hang in" to Jesus Christ against all odds until He turns your spiritual beliefs into real possessions. It is heroism to believe in God.

Devotion of Fellowship

that we should not trust in ourselves . . .

Whenever we begin to note where we are successful for God, we do trust in ourselves. In Luke 10:20 our Lord says, in effect, "Don't rejoice in successful service, but rejoice that you are rightly related to Me." The Lord Jesus Christ is the beginning, the middle and the end. Many are willing to accept sanctification, but they do not want the One Who is sanctification. "I am looking to see whether I am a blessing." Supposing Paul had looked to see the result of his work amongst the Corinthians! It seemed disaster all along the line. The devotion of fellowship means we are persuaded, like Paul, that "neither death, nor life . . . nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." God has become to us the one vital Reality.

The Declaration of Fellowship

... but in God which raiseth the dead.

"According to my earnest expectation and hope, . . . Christ shall be magnified in my body" (Philippians 1:20). Paul argues—"whether that means life or death, no matter!" "I trust in God, and know He will do all He intends to do through me, and that nothing and no one can thwart His purpose."

Do I know anything about the altar of fellowship? Am I related to things, whether they be disastrous or delightful, from the standpoint of my oneness with the Lord Jesus Christ? The one dominating enthusiasm of the Apostle Paul's life was his personal, passionate devotion to Jesus Christ. "In all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us."

THE EVENING TEST OF LOYALTY

For Joab had turned after Adonijah, though he turned not after Absalom. (1 Kings 2:28)

Is there an equivalent to this in your life? Do you find you are turning away from loyalty to Jesus for some insignificant thing? There was a time when you stood magnificently for God, days when heart and brain and body were ablaze in absolute devotion to Jesus Christ, you would have gone anywhere for Him. The prince of this world came and found nothing in you in those days; the lusts of the world found you adamant. Has God been lifting the veil and do you find the enthusiasm is gone, the great passionate devotion to Jesus is gone? The prince of this world has begun to find something in you at last, and what a miserably insignificant thing it is that has turned you! The reason you are not so zealous for the glory of God as you used to be, not so keen about the habits of your spiritual life, is because you have imperceptibly begun to surrender morally.

Beware of the Spiritual Undertime

With freedom did Christ set us free: stand fast therefore, and be not entangled again in a yoke of bondage. (Galatians 5:1 RV)

Joab stood the big test and was not turned by the fascinations of Absalom, but towards the end of his life he was turned by the craven Adonijah. Always remain alert to the fact that where anyone has gone back is exactly where we all may go back ("Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall"). You have borne the burden and heat of the day, been through the big test, now beware of the undertime, the after-part of the day spiritually. We are apt to forget that there is always an afterwards, and that it comes close on the heels of the present. You made a big break with all that Absalom represents, and you are apt to say nothing will have any effect on you now, but it certainly will. You stood the big test with Absalom; don't turn after Adonijah. It is in the aftermath of a great spiritual transaction that the "retired sphere of the leasts" begins to sap. "Now that I have been through the supreme crisis, it is not in the least likely that I shall turn to the things of the world." It is the least likely thing that is the peril. The Bible characters never fell on their weak points but on their strong ones; unguarded strength is double weakness. It is in the after-part of the day spiritually that we have to be alert. This does not mean that you are to be morbidly introspective, looking forward with dread, but that you keep alert; don't forecast where the temptation will come. One of the best things for your spiritual welfare is to keep recounting the wonders God has done for you, record them in a book; mark the passage in your Bible and continually refer to it, keep it fresh in your mind. Thomas Boston¹⁰ used to pray—"O Lord, keep me strong in the sense of Thy call." We do not keep the ideal of our attachment to Jesus constantly enough before us.

Be Alert for the Spiritual Undertow

Ye were running well; who did hinder you . . . ? (Galatians 5:7 RV)

An undertow is an undercurrent flowing in a different direction from the water at the surface. It is the undercurrent that drowns; a swimmer will never plunge into an undercurrent, a fool will. The spiritual undertow that switched away the Galatians was Judaism, formalism. It was not dominant, but hidden; it ran in exactly the opposite direction to the current of liberty into which they were being brought by Christ. Instead of going out to sea, out into the glorious liberty of the children of God, they were being switched away. "Ye were running well . . ." (RV)—they had been heading straight for the ocean, but the undercurrent of ritualism bewitched them, hindered them from obeying the truth. After a big transaction with God the current of your life heads you straight out to sea, right over the harbour bar, every sail set; now be alert for the spiritual undertow that would suck you back. The undercurrent is always most dangerous just where the river merges with the sea. The undercurrent is of the same nature as the river and will take you back into its swirling current; not out into the main stream, but back to the shipwrecks on the bank. The most pitiable of all wrecks are those inside the harbour.

Now that you have been swept out into the realisation of God's purpose, be alert over the things which used to be strong in the upper reaches of your life. The surface current, the current in which God has set your life, is the most powerful; but be alert for the spiritual undertow, the current that sets in another direction. It is after the floodtide of a spiritual transaction that the undertow begins to tell, and to tell terribly. The undercurrent for each one of us is different. It is only felt at certain stages of the tide; when the tide is full there is no undercurrent.

Be Careful of the Spiritual Undertone

For Demas forsook me, having loved this present world. . . . (2 Timothy 4:10 RV)

In music an undertone is a tone not quite in tune. When waves occur in a chord it is because the organ or piano is a half semitone out of tune. The Vox Humana stop, which gives the effect of the human voice, is tuned a half semitone flat to the rest of the notes, which accounts for the peculiar wave, almost a discord. It is the same spiritually. As you listen carefully to the music God is producing in your life, is there an undertone, something not in full harmony, a least thing, that you will not detect unless you are spiritually expert? The undertone was represented in Demas by his love of the world. Earlier Paul has referred to him with joy as "my fellow-worker" (Philemon 24 RV), but now the undertone of worldliness has begun to tell and is switching him off. The undertone in music is the fascinating thing that lends bewitchment; and spiritually it is the undertone that puts the tiniest tang of danger into the life. Be careful of it. The least likely thing is that we should turn away from God, but it is the least likely thing that will trip us up if we are not warned.

You have been having big transactions with God and are being taken right out into the purpose of God, now beware of the undertime, the after-part of the spiritual day. You have remained true to God under great tests, now be alert over the least things. "Mighty events turn on a straw" (Carlyle). 11 To be forewarned is to be forearmed. The way to keep alert is to keep your memory bright before God; ask Him never to allow you to forget what you have been in relation to Him. Is God saying to you—"You are not in love with Me now, but I remember the time when you were"—"I remember . . . the love of thine espousals"? If you find as you recall what God remembers about you, that He is not what He used to be to you, let it produce shame and humiliation, because that shame will bring the godly sorrow that works repentance. Don't merely accept the rebuke—receive it, and alter your conduct at once. Our only safety is to abide in Him. "Kept by the power of God."

THE DISCIPLINE OF DISILLUSIONMENT

To be disillusioned means that for us there are no more false appearances in life. A disillusionised person, although all he says may be correct, is often cynical and unkindly severe about other people. The disillusionment which comes from God is just as accurate and clear and understanding, but there is no cynicism in it. "But Jesus did not trust Himself unto them, . . . for He Himself knew what was in man" (John 2:24–25 RV).

The discipline of disillusionment brings us to the place where we see men and women as they are, and yet there is no cynicism, we have no stinging, bitter things to say. Many of the cruel things in life spring from the fact that we will suffer from illusions, we are not true to one another as facts, we are only true to our ideas of one another. Everything is either delightful and fine, or else mean¹² and dastardly, according to our own ideas. Jesus Christ is the Master of the human soul, He knows what is in the human heart (see Mark 7:21–22), and He has no illusions about any man.

Few of us believe what Jesus Christ says, we prefer to trust our illusion of innocence. When we trust our own innocence, we enthrone our illusion and discard Jesus Christ, and it is likely that something will happen to awaken us to the fact that what Jesus Christ says is true. If we give our hearts to Him to be kept, we need never know this experimentally. A certain type of innocence is culpable. Innocence is the characteristic of a child, but innocence in a man or woman is culpable and wrong. It means that their own whiteness is so guarded that they are unfit for life. Men and women must be pure and virtuous, and virtue is always the outcome of conflict.

Most of the suffering in human life comes because we refuse to be disillusioned. For instance, if I love a human being, and do not love God, I demand of that man or woman an infinite satisfaction which they cannot give. I demand of them every perfection and every rectitude, and when I do not get it, I become cruel and vindictive and jealous. Think of the average married life after, say, five or ten years; too often it sinks down into the most commonplace drudgery. The reason is that the husband and wife have not known God rightly, they have not gone through the transfiguration of love, nor entered through the discipline of disillusionment into satisfaction in God, and consequently they have begun to endure one another instead of having one another for enjoyment in God. The human heart must have satisfaction, but there is only one Being Who can satisfy the last aching abyss of the human heart, and that is our Lord Jesus Christ. That is why He is apparently so severe in regard to every human relationship. He says if we are going to be His disciples, occasion may arise when we must hate both father and mother, and every closest tie there is. Our Lord has no illusions about men, and He knows that every relationship in life that is not based on loyalty to Him will end in disaster.

In Rectitude through Suffering

I shall go softly [as in solemn procession, RV mg] all my years. (Isaiah 38:15)

A peculiar nobility, a stately element, comes into the life that has had to face death; that man sees things in their real perspective. It is through suffering that we are disillusioned, but selfish suffering does not disillusionise. A man may be perfected through suffering or be made worse through suffering, it depends on his disposition. Am I in the place of disillusionment, or have I refused to be disillusioned when God has tried to talk to me through difficulties and in sufferings? If I have, it is a sign that I am still suffering from illusions; I am still culpably innocent. God is not to blame; I am to blame.

The moral calibre of a man shows itself in the way he conducts himself in the shallow things of life. Our lives are divided into two domains, the shallow and the profound. Jesus Christ was considered to be so shallow by the religious people of His day that they said He was a gluttonous man and a winebibber. His was such a full-orbed natural life that no attention was paid to Him, He was easily ignored and made of no account. Men were blind to the real profundity of His life. Our profound, solitary life is with God alone, and we have no business to obtrude it before others, unless God is bringing them there too. The shallow means the actual surface life we all live with one another. Am I prepared to let God dominate both the shallow and the profound?

The test of our spiritual life is how we behave when we ought to be shallow for God. It is easy to behave at a prayer meeting; it takes all the grace of God to behave at a marriage feast. We must not obtrude the prayer meeting conduct into the shallow things. We have to carry out our relationship with God in the shallow things, without any illusions.

No one ever became spiritual without being fanatical for a season. The shallow intercourse of our lives falls away and people object to us, because, if we are right, they are wrong. It is the swing of the pendulum to the opposite extreme of what the life used to be. My "right hand" is the thing that makes me delightful to other people, yet Jesus Christ says, "If your right hand causes you to stumble in your walk with Me, cut it off." The maimed stage is only for a season; the example for a Christian is not a maimed life, but the life of the Lord Jesus Christ (see Matthew 5:29–30, 48).

In Realisation through Salvation

Thou hast loved my soul from the pit. (Isaiah 38:17 RV mg)

This is the greatest revelation that ever struck the human life, viz., that God loves the sinner. God so loved the world when it was sinful that He sent His Son to die for it. Our Lord has no illusions about any of us. He sees every man and woman as the descendants of Adam who sinned, and with capacities in our hearts of which we have no idea. Natural ability has nothing to do with fitness for God's salvation, it may have to do with fitness for Christian work, that is a matter of civilisation.

Hezekiah begins to see himself exactly as he is in God's sight. When once a man has been "undressed" by the Holy Ghost, he will never be able to despair of anyone else. External sins are to a large extent the accident of upbringing, but when the Spirit of God comes in and probes to the depths and reveals the disposition of sin, we begin to understand what salvation is. God cannot take anything from the sinner but his solid sin, otherwise salvation would have no meaning for him (see 2 Corinthians 5:21).

Have I realised disillusionment through salvation? Think of the worst man or woman you know, do you believe that that one can be presented perfect in Jesus Christ? If you do not, it is because you are still under an illusion about yourself, you still have a notion that there is something in your virtues that will save you. There are men and women, such as the rich young ruler and Mary of Bethany, who are utterly unsullied until they receive the Spirit of God, and then a remarkable thing happens—the corruption to themselves of their natural virtues. It is a difficult thing to state because so few try to state it. When someone who is possessed of patience naturally is born again, he becomes impatient; or if someone has been pure and upright and worthy naturally, he may begin to have thoughts of evil such as he never dreamed of before. Our natural virtues break down because they are not promises of what we are going to be, but remnants of what we once were, remnants of the man God made and sin ruined. Jesus Christ does not patch up our natural virtues. He creates a new man, "Wherefore if any man is in Christ, he is a new creature: the old things are passed away; behold, they are become new" (2 Corinthians 5:17 RV), and we find that "every virtue we possess, is His alone."

Jesus Christ cannot be spoken of in terms of the natural virtues, as a patient Man, or a pure, noble Man. He is the Man from heaven, the full-orbed Man, and the New Testament says we have to live as He lived. Our old way of reasoning and looking at things must go, and all things must become new. The way we act when we come up against things proves whether we have been disillusioned or not; do we trust in our wits or do we worship God? If we trust in our wits, God will have to repeat the same lesson until we learn it. Whenever our faith is not in God, and in Him alone, there is still an illusion somewhere.

In Revelation through Submission

They that go down into the pit cannot hope for Thy truth. (Isaiah 38:18 RV)

Submission does not mean that I submit to the power of God because I must. A stoic submits without passion, that is slavery; a saint sees God's will and submits to it with a passionate love, and in his daily life exhibits his love to God to Whom he has submitted. The real meaning of submission is seen in the Sermon on the Mount. Jesus says, "If you are rightly related to God, show that relationship to men; submit enough to live it out in your daily life." It will mean that you do not take the law into your own hands, you do not refuse to be hit. You never need be hit or hurt, but every time you refuse to be, your Lord takes the blow. Think of the honour our Lord confers on us; we have the power to prevent Him being stabbed by taking the stab ourselves. "Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake, and fill up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for His body's sake" (Colossians 1:24 RV). When someone over-reaches us, every logical power in us says—Resent it. Morally speaking we should, but Jesus Christ says—If you are My disciple, you will go the second mile; immediately we do, men will cast out our names as evil, as He said they would.

Until we are rightly related to God, we deify pluck and heroism. We will do anything that is heroic, anything that puts the inspiration of strain on us; but when it comes to submitting to being a weak thing for God, it takes Almighty God to do it. "We are weak in Him." Some of us have still to go through disillusionment on this line, we have not learned to submit, we prefer to stand on our rights. "Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me," says Jesus. Am I loyal to Him or am I clinging to my own rights? Is my tongue God's, or is there the poison of asps under it?

In Rejoicing through Sacrifice

Therefore we will sing my songs to the stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of the LORD. (Isaiah 38:20 RV)

Hezekiah is not lying in a stately armchair with a sentimental atmosphere around him, he is still sick with a boil, but he says, "I will offer to Thee the sacrifice of praise." Praising costs. If you are in the dumps, sing! Sacrifice means giving up something that we mind giving up. We talk of giving up our possessions; none of them are ours to give up. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Our Lord tells us to give up the one thing that is going to hurt badly, viz., our right to ourselves.

Jesus Christ taught hypocrisy to His disciples! "But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thy head, and wash thy face, that thou be not seen of men to fast" (RV). Don't say you are fasting, or that you spent the night in prayer, wash your face; and never let your dearest friend know what you put yourself through. Natural stoicism was created by God, and when it is transfigured by the indwelling Holy Ghost, people will never think of you. "He must increase, but I must decrease." John is not saying that with a quivering mouth, or out of modesty; he is expressing the spiritual delight of his life. I am to decrease because He has come! He says it with a manly thrill. Is Jesus Christ increasing in my life, or am I taking everything for myself? When I get disillusioned I see Him and Him alone, there are no illusions left. It is a matter of indifference how I am hurt, the one thing I am concerned about is that every man may be presented "perfect in Christ Jesus."

DID JESUS CHRIST COME FOR PEACE?

His Name shall be called . . . Prince of Peace. (Isaiah 9:6)

The Christmas Message

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom He is well pleased. (Luke 2:14 RV)

Not a Prophecy but a Proclamation

The average views of Christianity seem to be right until they are made explicit. For instance, the average view that Christianity stands for peace, for the brotherhood of men, for the peace and prosperity of nations is true generally speaking; but if you look at it narrowly you will find there is a great deal that does not fit into that view, and the critic (not necessarily a captious critic, but a man with an open mind, facing things as they are to-day) asks—"What does it all amount to? Twenty centuries have passed since Jesus, the Prince of Peace, came and the angels prophesied peace on earth, but where is peace?" The New Testament does not say that the angels prophesied peace: they proclaimed peace—"on earth peace among men in whom He is well pleased" (RV), i.e., peace to men of goodwill towards God. Jesus Christ came to manifest that God was with man, "and they shall call His Name Emmanuel, which is being interpreted, God with us" (RV). Jesus Christ is a unique Being-God-Man, and by Him any man can be made a son of God according to the pattern of Jesus Christ. This is the Christian revelation. Jesus says, "Come unto Me," and when a man does come to Jesus he is born into another domain and his whole outlook is altered. Deliverance from sin is only part of the meaning of being born from above (RV mg), the reason it is so important to us is because we are sinners; but the meaning of new birth from God's side is that a man is brought into the viewpoint of His Son. The Christmas message crystallises the whole thing: God manifest in the flesh is what has become profoundly possible for any man on the basis of Redemption.

The Christ Menace

Think not that I came to cast[mg] peace on the earth: I came not to cast [mg] peace, but a sword. (Matthew 10:34 RV)

Not a Propaganda but a Personal Power

Is that the average view of what Jesus Christ came to do? The average view is that He came as a meek and mild and gently-dispositioned Person to spread peace and love all around and to make life infinitely more beautiful. But Jesus says here—"Do not allow yourselves to think that that is what I came to do; I did not come to fling peace abroad indiscriminately. I came to send a sword." We build our ideas on what we are taught about Jesus Christ, not on what the New Testament says. We are taught that Jesus Christ was meek and loving, and He was; but we forget the times when He was ablaze with zeal for His Father's honour. In the Temple instead of seeing a "meek and mild and gentle Jesus," we see a terrible Being with a whip of small cords in His hand, driving out the money-changers. "I am meek and lowly in heart," says Jesus, but His meekness was towards God, not towards men. God the Father could do what He liked with His Son, and the Son received with absolute meekness the dispensations of the Father.

"I came not to cast [mg] peace, but a sword" (RV). Immediately the Holy Spirit brings you face to face with a presentation of truth which you never saw before, your peace is gone, and instead there is the sword of conviction. The coming of Jesus Christ is not a peaceful thing, it is a disturbing thing, because it means the destruction of every peace that is not based on a personal relationship to Himself. If once the moral equilibrium has been upset by conviction of sin, holiness is the only result or no peace for ever. "I was alive without the law once," says Paul. Immediately a man comes to see what Jesus Christ demands, his peace of mind is upset. "If I had not come, they had not had sin." Then why did He come? People say—"The Sermon on the Mount is good enough for me" (I should think it was!), "but I do not see the need for preaching the Atonement and the Cross of Christ." But where are you going to begin to be what the Sermon on the Mount says you must be? Jesus Christ's demand is that we be as holy as He is Himself, that we reach the "whiter than snow-shine" in our conduct, that we are unfathomably pure in heart. Are you so pure in heart that you never lust, never have a thought in the background of your mind that God could censure? If all Jesus Christ came to do was to put before us an ideal we cannot attain, we are happier without knowing it. But Jesus Christ did not come primarily to teach: He came to put within us His own disposition, viz., Holy Spirit, whereby we can live a totally new life. By conviction of sin a man is probed wide awake and made to realise that he needs to be regenerated; when he gets there, Jesus says—"Blessed are you." The one essential thing which makes a man a Christian is not what he believes in his head but what he is in disposition. Jesus Christ comes to the central part of a man's life, and the bedrock of Christianity is that Jesus Christ has done something for me I could not do for myself. Christianity is not adherence to a set of principles or to a plan of salvation, but a personal relationship to Jesus Christ; consequently the spontaneous working of the Holy Spirit in a man may make him appear inconsistent. A Christian is not consistent to hard and fast creeds, he is consistent only to the life of the Son of God in him.

The Christian Meaning

Wherefore if any man is in Christ, he is a new creature. (2 Corinthians 5:17 RV)

Not a Preaching but a Purity

If we are saved by the grace of God it means not only that we are delivered from perdition, but that we are a new creation (RV mg). The condemnation is to know a thing and not work it out. We know we have experienced the grace of God, but are we living the life of regeneration in our actual experience? We take the Christian view up to a certain point and exploit it according to our belief. The average Christian says-"Oh, yes, I am saved." Well, produce your goods! Where are the characteristics in you that Jesus Christ taught us to expect in a Christian? In what way are you different from other men? Are you just as hard in driving a bargain as they are? If Christianity does not affect my money and my marriage relationships, it is not worth anything. To-day men are asking not so much—Is Christianity true; but is it real? Does it amount to anything in actual life? If I have a personal relationship to Jesus on the basis of His Redemption, it will show in the way I live, in the way I act towards men; "old things are passed away; behold all things are become new.'

Did Jesus Christ come for peace? He did; but it is a peace that is characteristic of Himself, not peace at any price. "My peace I give unto you." The peace that Jesus gives is never engineered by circumstances on the outside; it is a peace based on a personal relationship that holds all through. "In the world ye shall have tribulation: . . . in Me . . . peace."

Oh, the peace my Saviour gives, Peace I never knew before, is a biblical thought. That peace is the deepest thing a human personality can experience, it is almighty, a peace that passes all understanding.

SPIRITUAL EDUCATION

In your patience ye shall win your souls. (Luke 21:19 RV)

Education is a bringing out of what is there and giving it the power of expression, not packing in what does not belong; and spiritual education means learning how to give expression to the Divine life that is in us when we are born from above (RV mg).

"In your patience ye shall win your souls" (RV), said Jesus to His disciples. Soul is the expression of my personal spirit in my body, the way I reason and think and act, and Jesus taught that a man must lose his soul in order to gain it; he must lose absolutely his own way of reasoning and looking at things, and begin to estimate from an entirely different standpoint. We have the Spirit of Jesus gifted to us, but we have to form the mind which was also in Christ Jesus. No man has the mind of Christ unless he has acquired it.

Dimensions of Divine Love

For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son. . . . (John 3:16)

... the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge ... (Ephesians 3:18–19 RV)

The first thing we need to be educated in spiritually is a knowledge of the dimensions of Divine love, its length and depth and breadth and height. That God is love is a revelation. Unless I am born from above (RV mg), what is the use of telling me God is love? To me He is not love. Where is the love of God in war? in suffering? in all the inevitable inequalities of life? No one who faces facts as they are could ever prove that God is love unless he accepts the revelation of His love made by Jesus Christ. John 3:16 does not begin to have any meaning to the natural man who knows nothing whatever of the domain Jesus Christ represents; but let him come up against things and be brought to his wits' end, and then let him read John 3:16. Not until we realise that there is something tragic at the basis of human life shall we recognise the love of God.

In the Cross we may see the dimensions of Divine love. The Cross is not the cross of a man, but the exhibition of the heart of God. At the back of the wall of the world stands God with His arms outstretched, and every man driven there is driven into the arms of God. The Cross of Jesus is the supreme evidence of the love of God (Romans 8:35–39). "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" (v. 35).

The Cross of Christ reveals that the blazing centre of the love of God is the holiness of God, not His kindness and compassion. If the Divine love pretends I am all right when I am all wrong, then I have a keener sense of justice than the Almighty. God is a holy God, and the marvel of the Redemption is that God the Holy One puts into me, the unholy one, a new disposition, the disposition of His Son.

Direction of Divine Living (1 Corinthians 13:4-8)

Love is the sovereign preference of my person for another person, and Jesus demands that that other Person be Himself; and the direction of Divine living is that I deliberately identify myself with Jesus Christ's interests in other people. "Love suffereth long, and is kind; love envieth not; love . . . seeketh not its own, is not provoked, taketh not account of evil; . . . beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth" (RV). That is Christian living in actual life. If I have the disposition of a fault-finder, I am a most uncomfortable person to live with, but if the love of God has been shed abroad in my heart, I begin to see extraordinary self-sacrifice under the roughest of exteriors. I begin to see nobility where before I only saw meanness, 13 because I see only what I bring with me the power of seeing—a most humiliating thing to realise!

The direction of Divine living is that I identify myself with God's interests in other people, and He is interested in some funny people, viz., you and me! We see the humour of our Heavenly Father in the way He brings around us the type of people who are to us what we have been to Him; now He will watch how we behave to them. How did Jesus treat us? With infinite patience, with amplitude of forgiveness and generosity. "Now," He says, "treat them in the same way." "But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

Never try to be right with an abstract enemy, but get right with the enemy you have got. It is easy to talk about loving the heathen; never go off on the abstract. The direction of Divine living is that I have to be as kind to others as God has been to me, not the others I have not met, but those I have met. "... that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven."

Another direction of Divine living is the realising that a Christian has the right not to insist on his rights; this is only learned by the sharpest and most severe lessons. In the Sermon on the Mount our Lord teaches us not to look for justice, but never to cease to give it. That is not common sense, it is either madness or Christianity. To look for justice is to educate myself not in the practise of Divine living, but in my "divine" right to myself. Beware of looking to see where other people come short. God expects us to be exactly what we know the other person should be—when we realise that, we will stop criticising and having a measuring rod for other people.

When the love of God is in me I must learn how to let it express itself; I must educate myself in the matter; it takes time. Acquire your soul with patience, says Jesus. Never give way to this spirit—"Oh, well, I have fallen again, I will stay down now." Have patience with yourself, and remember that this is salvation not for the hereafter, but for here and now.

Lovest thou Me? . . . Feed My sheep. (John 21:17)

Is that what we have been doing, feeding Jesus Christ's sheep? Take a rapid survey—have we been nourishing the lives of people in the understanding of Jesus, or has our aim been to maintain our particular deposit of doctrine? "Divine loyalty," says Jesus, "is that you feed My sheep in the knowledge of Me, not feed them with your doctrine." Peter had boasted earlier of his love for Jesus—"though all men shall be offended because of Thee, yet will I never be offended," but there is no brag left in him now—"Lord, Thou knowest all things; Thou knowest that I love Thee." "Feed My sheep." The discipline of Divine loyalty is not that I am true to a doctrine, but so true to Jesus that other people are nourished in the knowledge of Him. Get rid of the idea that you must do good things, and remember what Jesus says, if you believe on Me, out of you will flow rivers of living water. In the Christian life it is never "Do, do," but "Be, be, and I will do through you." The type of man produced by the Spirit of Jesus is the one who bears a growing family likeness to Jesus.

Am I getting nobler, better, more helpful, more humble, as I get older? Am I exhibiting the life that men take knowledge of as having been with Jesus, or am I getting more self-assertive, more deliberately determined to have my own way? It is a great thing to tell yourself the truth.

These are some of the lines of spiritual education: learning the dimensions of Divine Love, that the centre of that love is holiness; that the direction of Divine living is a deliberate surrender of our own point of view in order to learn Jesus Christ's point of view, and seeing that men and women are nourished in the knowledge of Jesus. The only way that can be done is by being loyal to Jesus myself.

THE MAKE-UP OF A WORKER

1 Timothy 1:12-17

The Service of Memory

And last of all, as unto one born out of due time, He appeared to me also. (1 Corinthians 15:8 RV)

For ye have heard of my manner of life in time past ... how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God. . . . (Galatians 1:13 RV)

Paul refers to himself as "one born out of due time."

Every worker for God has that feeling about himself—"If only I had known this before"; or, "If only I had made better use of my time." There is always the feeling that we have certain drawbacks. These thoughts continually recur on the threshold of the mind of the worker, and they have to be overcome. The only way we can serve God is by having "no confidence in the flesh."

When Paul says "forgetting those things which are behind," he is not referring to his past life; Paul never forgot that he had been "a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious"; but he determinedly forgot all he had attained to in the Christian life, because he was always pressing on to "the things which are before." The Gospel of the grace of God takes the stain of memory from a worker, not by making him ignore the past, but by enabling him to see that God can make it of service in his work for God. A worker should never tell people to forget the past; preachers of the "gospel of temperament" do that. If we forget the past we will be hard and obtuse. If we are hard, we are of no use to God; and unless we know the Cross of Christ as the power which takes the stinging stain out of memory and transforms it, we are of no use to others. Unless a worker has had the experience of the grace of God transforming the stain of memory into a personal experience of salvation, there will be a weakkneed-ness and a feeble-handed-ness about him that will hinder God's message. If there is no sense of sin, no stain in memory to be transformed, the trend of the teaching is apt to be the line of higher education and culture and rarely the neat line Paul was always on. The Gospel can never be preached by sinless lips, but only by the lips of those who have been saved from sin by the Atonement. Angels cannot preach the Gospel, only beings such as Paul and you and I can preach the Gospel. We say that Jesus preached the Gospel, but He did more: He came that there might be a Gospel to preach.

The first element in the make-up of a worker is that he knows the service of memory, not a memory of things that he can excuse, but a memory out of which God has taken the sting, so that he is in the place where he can become the minister of salvation to others. The Holy Spirit will bring the worker back again and again to the stained places in memory and will make them the sweetest, the most radiant portion of that one's inner life with God. The great marvel of God's grace is that "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."

The "Seeing" of the Disciples

Then after three years I went up to Jerusalem to visit Cephas, and tarried with him fifteen days. (Galatians 1:18 RV)

Think of Paul after three years in Arabia, where he was altogether broken and then re-made by the grace of God, coming to Peter and being with him for fifteen days—can you imagine what happened? How Peter would go over the whole story, beginning with the scenes on the lake right on to the Garden of Gethsemane and the Cross; and Peter would take Paul to the Communion service, and they would see widows there, made so by Paul. Think what a memory like that would mean to a man of acute sensitiveness. It takes great courage for a forgiven man to come in contact with those whom he has wronged. Paul was ever after solicitous for the widows and orphans, remembering what he had done. It was these things that brought Paul to the place of saying—"I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." This element comes into our lives too. Every time the Spirit of God puts His finger on some wrong in the past and the tears of the soul commence, it is that He may show the marvel of His salvation.

Spiritual Appreciation

Wherefore we henceforth know no man after the flesh: even though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now we know Him so no more. (2 Corinthians 5:16 RV)

"From the Old Testament point of view the progress is made from the knowledge of Christ to the knowledge of Jesus; from the New Testament point of view the progress is made from the knowledge of Jesus to the knowledge of Christ" (Bengel). 14 With us the progress is neither of these. It is from the standpoint of a personal emancipation that we begin to learn Who the historic Jesus Christ was. The phrase "Back to Jesus" is right only if we go back to Jesus and know Him in the way Paul knew Him, viz., after the Spirit. ". . . Who being in the form of God"-part of the Trinity—He "emptied Himself" (RV) of that form and took on Him another form, the form of a servant. Paul knew Jesus Christ in neither of these forms; he never saw Him in the form of God, because no man has ever seen God; and he never saw Him in the days of His flesh. Paul only knew Jesus Christ after He was glorified, a unique Being-God manifested in glorified flesh; consequently Paul reasons differently from the other apostles: he is the one used by the Holy Ghost to give us the doctrine of the Person of Christ. We can never know Jesus "after the flesh" as the early disciples did, we know Him only after the Spirit, hence the insistence on receiving the Spirit.

Are we putting anything that Christ has done in the place of His Cross? It is a snare that continually besets us until we learn the passion of Paul's life: the only thing I am determined to know among you is Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. What constitutes the call of God to preach? Not that I have a special gift, not that God has sanctified me; but that by the marvel of His grace I have caught God's meaning in the Cross of Christ, and life can never be the same again. Many of us who call ourselves Christian workers ought to be learners in God's school of Calvary. It is of immense value to know what the Cross of Christ can do for me, but that does not constitute a preacher: a preacher is constituted by the fact that he has seen God's heart revealed in the Cross of Christ, and says—"I am determined henceforth to preach nothing but Jesus Christ, and Him crucified," not—"myself crucified with Christ," that is a mere experience; but—"the one Figure I am determined to present is Jesus Christ, and Him crucified."

LOYALTY TO THE FORLORN HOPE

If I had said, I will speak thus; behold, I had dealt treacherously with the generation of thy children. (Psalm 73:15 RV)

Loyalty to God and to God's children is the supreme test in the life of a saint. We are never free from disloyalty unless we are actually loyal. The Psalmist realised that to speak as he had been doing was to be a traitor to God's children. With whom are we standing in this generation? Are we being loyal to God and to His saints? Indignation towards every yoke but the yoke of Christ is the only attitude for the saint. Our discouragement arises from egotism. Discouragement is "disenchanted egotism"—the heart knocked out of what I want. A saint cannot be discouraged any more than Jesus Christ could be. "He shall not fail nor be discouraged." Why? Because He never wanted anything but His Father's will. We become discouraged because we do not like being told the truth; we look only for those things that will quicken and enliven us.

Faith in God Reigning over the World (Psalm 73:1–14)

It is easy to say God reigns, and then to see Satan, suffering and sin reigning, and God apparently powerless. Belief in God must be tried before it is of value to God or to a child of His. It is the trial of our faith that makes us wealthy in God's sight. We begin by saying—"I know that God is love, that He is just and holy and true"; then we come up against commonsense facts that flatly contradict what we said we believed. Are we going to succumb, as the Psalmist nearly did, to pessimistic moods of intellect and say—"After all I must abandon that view of God"? If we try to answer the problems of this world by intellectual or scientific methods we shall go mad, or else deny that the problems exist. Never get into the ostrich-like attitude of Christian Science, and say that there is no such thing as death or sin or pain. Jesus Christ makes us open our eyes and look at these things. God is the only Being Who can stand the slander that arises because the devil and pain and sin are in the world. Stand true to the life hid with Christ in God and to the facts you have to face. You will have no answer intellectually, but your faith in God will be so unshakeably firm that others will begin to see there is an answer they have never guessed. "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

Metaphysically it may be true to say that suffering is the outcome of sin, but what about the problems that theory produces? What is needed is not a solution satisfying to the mind, but a moral conception, a solution that comes through a personal relationship to God Whose character we believe in but Whose ways we are unable to explain as yet. We are not true to God's character to-day, but to our creeds, to our presentations of truth, and to our experiences; but these do not cover all the facts. The question is, will the child of God in the "in between" of this life where sin and Satan are rampant, remain true to God when everything is going contrary to what he believes God's character to be?

"For I was envious at the fools [RV mg], when I saw the prosperity of the wicked." The prosperity of the wicked remains a problem to everyone who is outside the life hid with Christ in God. It is only from that centre that we come slowly by faith to a solution. The problem persists, and it cannot be answered intellectually or psychologically. Moral and spiritual integrity cannot be measured by God's blessings. God sends His favours on good and bad alike. The blessings of God are an indication that God is overflowing in grace and benediction irrespective of a man's relationship to Him. Men may partake of the blessings of God and yet never come into relationship with Him. (See Matthew 5:45–48.)

It is concentration on God that keeps us free from moral and spiritual panic. The one message all through the Sermon on the Mount is—Concentrate on God, and be carefully careless about everything else. To-day we are evading concentration on God and devoting ourselves to the cause of Christian work. The busyness of duties will knock us out of relationship to God more quickly than the devil. Most of us are surrounded with Christian fellowship and live such sheltered lives that we forget there are those who have to live a life of unspotted holiness in the midst of moral abominations, and God does not take them out of it. If once we lose sight of the personal relationship to God, right and wrong become relative, not absolute. "Make allowances." Never! We can only learn by the life hid with Christ in God with what a fierce purity we must confront the horror of the world. The purity of Christ is not a winsome thing, it hurts perilously everything that is not pure. "For our God is a consuming fire." If you stand true to the purity of Christ, you will have to meet problems connected with the margins of your bodily life, and if you turn for one second in public or in secret from walking in the light as God is in the light, you will lose the distinction between absolute right and wrong and make the word "affinity" an excuse to further orders. 15 Test every emotional affinity in this way—If I let this thing have its way, what will it mean? If you can see the end of it to be wrong, grip it on the threshold of your mind, and at the peril of your soul never let it encroach again upon your attention. Whenever you meet with difficulties, whether they are intellectual or circumstantial or physical, remain loyal to God. Don't compromise. If you do, everyone around you will suffer from your faithlessness, because you are disloyal to Jesus Christ and His way of looking at things. Never run away with the idea that you can ever do a thing or have an attitude of mind before God which no one else need know anything about. A man is what he is in the dark. Remain loyal to God and to His saints in private and in public, and you will find that not only are you continually with God, but that God is counting on you.

Faith in God Recognising His Own Word (Psalm 73:23-28)

God and His promises are eternal. "The gift of God is eternal life." Jesus Christ came to give us eternal life, a life in which there is neither time nor space, which cannot be marked with suffering or death; it is the life Jesus lived. Some prayers are so big, and God has such a surprising answer for us, that He keeps us waiting for the manifestation. The saint is one who knows—"Nevertheless I am continually with Thee," in Thy presence, consequently there is no perplexity or confusion if the manifestation of the answer in a particular domain is withheld. There is no logic for faith or for suffering. The region in which God deals with us is the region of implicit life that cannot be put into words.

When we try to carry out the commands of Christ it is the Christians who say—"Don't be so stupid; don't strain human nature; do you think you are a special favourite of God's?" That is the way loyalty to God is deflected. Our minds have to remain loyal to God and to His saints, and we must crucify resolutely every impression that is contrary. If we give way to a dark mood of depression, we sin against God and His saints. The purpose of God through every experience is to make us un-learn what we bring with us until we are as simple as children before Him.

SPIRITUAL EVOLUTION

The world to-day is obsessed with the idea of evolution, we hear speculations about the superman, we are told we are getting better and better; but we are tending towards we don't know what. The remarkable thing about the spiritual evolution represented by Jesus Christ is that the goal is given to us at the start, viz., Jesus Christ Himself. The natural view and the Bible view of man are different—the natural point of view is that man is a great being in the making, his achievements are a wonderful promise of what he is going to be; the Bible point of view is that man is a magnificent ruin of what God designed him to be. The Bible does not look forward to an evolution of mankind: The Bible talks of a revolution— "Ye must be born again." That is not a command but the statement of a foundation fact. There must be a break in a man's life before he enters into the spiritual realm. God and man as God created him were at one, but severance came with the introduction of sin; then Jesus Christ came, and in Him God and man are again made at one. Jesus Christ did not evolve out of history, He came into history from outside history;

He is not the best human being the world has ever seen, He is a Being who cannot be accounted for by the human race at all. Jesus Christ is the First and the Last, and Paul uses the figure of Jesus as the goal to which the whole human race is to attain—"until we all attain unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

Strive to enter in at the strait gate. (Luke 13:24)

Everyone has to begin with this struggle for self, and striving to enter in at the strait gate is a picture of the struggle. Anything that does not enter in at the strait gate, e.g., selfishness, self-interest, self-indulgence, ends in destruction. The struggle to enter in, no matter with what it may be in connection, braces us morally. Self-indulgence is a refusal to struggle, a refusal to make ourselves fit. We must be right ourselves before we can help others to be right.

If you make a moral struggle and gain a moral victory, you will be a benefit to all you come across, whereas if you do not struggle, you act as a moral miasma. Gain a moral victory in chastity or in your emotional life, it may be known to no one but yourself, and you are an untold benefit to everyone else; but if you refuse to struggle everyone else is enervated. This is a recognised psychological law, although little known. Struggle to gain the mastery over selfishness, and you will be a tremendous assistance; but if you don't overcome the tendency to spiritual sluggishness and self-indulgence, you are a hindrance to all around you. These things are intangible, but they are there, and Jesus says to us, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate." You never get through alone. If you struggle to get through, others are the stronger and better for knowing you. The men and women who lift and inspire us are those who struggle for self, not for selfassertiveness, that is a sign of weakness, but for the development of personality. There are some people in whose company you cannot have a mean 16 thought without being instantly rebuked.

Struggle for Others

And the second [commandment] is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. (Mark 12:31)

Whenever you touch your own true interests, others are involved at once. No man can gain a moral or spiritual victory without gaining an interest in other men. If you struggle and overcome, you will see that the other man gets a chance to fight his own moral battle too. The danger of false moral training is that it does not allow a man the chance to fight for himself or for others. We are inclined to be amateur providences over other lives spiritually, to so shield them that they are brought up like hothouse plants instead of being where moral victories should be gained. No man or woman ought to be innocent, a woman ought to be pure and a man ought to be virtuous. Innocence has to be transformed into purity through being brought into contact with things that are impure and overcoming them, thus establishing purity. A virtuous man or a pure woman is a tremendous assistance wherever he or she goes.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends"—and Jesus says—"I have called you friends." The characteristic of your life if you are devoted to Jesus, is that you lay down your life for Him, not die for Him, but lay down your life for Him. Paul puts it—"... ourselves as your servants for Jesus' sake" (RV). You are the servant of other men for His sake. If you are devoted to the cause of humanity, you will soon be exhausted and have your heart broken by ingratitude, but if the mainspring of your service is love for Jesus, you can serve men although they treat you as a door-mat. Never look for justice in this world, but never cease to give it. If you do look for justice, you cease to struggle for your true self.

Struggle for Co-Relation

Be ye therefore imitators of God, as beloved children; and walk in love, even as Christ also loved you. . . . (Ephesians 5:1–2 RV)

If I struggle for myself on the right line, I struggle for others also, and the struggle establishes a co-relation between God and myself, and the characteristic of the life is a strong family likeness to Jesus. A self indwelt by Jesus becomes like Him. "Walk in love, even as Christ also loved you" (RV). Jesus has loved me to the end of all my meanness 17 and selfishness and sin; now, He says, show that same love to others. "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you"—that is, I am to ask to be forgiven, not on the ground of the Atonement, but because I forgive. "But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." That is hard hitting. Am I prepared to show the man who does evil to me the love God has shown to me? I have to learn to identify myself with God's interests in other people, and God's interests are never my selfish interests, but always His interests. When the Spirit of God comes into a man, He gives him a world-wide outlook. God has no favourites. "... that we may present every man perfect in Christ; whereunto I labour also, striving according to His working, which worketh in me mightily" (RV). The benefit of my life to others is in proportion to whether I am making this struggle for the self God designed me to be, and my worth to God is in proportion to my getting into co-relation with Him, getting His point of view about everything.

AT GOD'S DISCRETION

It is the glory of God to conceal a thing. (Proverbs 25:2)

This is not an isolated phrase, the idea runs all through the Bible, see Deuteronomy 29:29: "The secret things belong unto the LORD our God: but the things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children for ever" (RV); Romans 11:33: "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God! how unsearchable are His judgements, and His ways past tracing out!" (RV). The purpose of mystery is not to tantalise us and make us feel that we cannot comprehend; it is a generous purpose, and meant to assure us that slowly and surely as we can bear it, the full revelation of God will be made clear.

It is the glory of God to conceal His teaching in obedience: we only know as we obey. "If any man willeth to do His will, he shall know of the teaching. . . ." It is only by way of obedience that we understand the teaching of God. Bring it straight down to the commonplace things: have I done the duty that lies nearest? have I obeyed God there? If not, I shall never fathom the mysteries of God, however much I may try. When once I obey there, I receive a revelation of the meaning of God's teaching for me. How many of us have obeyed the bit of God's truth we do know?

Experience is a gateway to understanding, not an end in itself. We can be bound in other ways than by sin; we can be bound by the limits of the very experiences that were meant to lead us into the secrets of God. The faith of many really spiritual Christians is eclipsed to-day, and the reason it is eclipsed is that they tried to remain true and consistent to the narrow confines of their experience instead of getting out into the light of God. God wants to get us into the place where He holds absolutely, and experiences never bother us. Oh, the relief of it! The burden gone, the effort gone, no conscious experience left, because Jesus Christ is All and in All.

God has hidden the glory of His teaching in the experience of temptation. "Count it all joy, my brethren, when ye fall into manifold temptations" (RV), says the Apostle James. "To him that overcometh, to him will I give of the hidden manna" (RV). The feast is just beyond the fight; when you have been through the fight, there is the wondrous joy and triumph of the feast. We learn to thank God for the trial of our faith because it works patience. The thing that is precious in the sight of God is faith that has been tried. Tried faith is spendable; it is so much wealth stored up in heaven, and the more we go through the trial of our faith, the wealthier we become in the heavenly regions.

"Blessed are the pure in heart." If we go on obeying God, we shall find that "light is sown for the righteous." We are so impatient—"I thought God's purpose was to make me full of happiness and joy." It is, but it is happiness and joy from God's standpoint, not from ours. God always ignores the present perfection for the ultimate perfection. We bring God to the bar of our judgement and say hard things about Him—"Why does God bring thunderclouds and disasters when we want green pastures and still waters?" Bit by bit we find, behind the clouds, the Father's feet; behind the lightning, an abiding day that has no night; behind the thunder a still small voice that comforts with a comfort that is unspeakable.

It is the glory of God to conceal His treasures in embarrassments, i.e., in things that involve us in difficulty. "I will give thee the treasures of darkness." We would never have suspected that treasures were hidden there, and in order to get them we have to go through things that involve us in perplexity. There is nothing more wearying to the eye than perpetual sunshine, and the same is true spiritually. The valley of the shadow gives us time to reflect, and we learn to praise God for the valley because in it our soul was restored in its communion with God. God gives us a new revelation of His kindness in the valley of the shadow. What are the days and the experiences that have furthered us most? The days of green pastures, of absolute ease? No, they have their value; but the days that have furthered us most in character are the days of stress and cloud, the days when we could not see our way but had to stand still and wait; and as we waited, the comforting and sustaining and restoring of God came in a way we never imagined possible before.

God wants us to realise His sovereignty. We are apt to tie God up in His own laws and allow Him no free will. We say we know what God will do, and suddenly He upsets all our calculations by working in unprecedented ways; just when we expected He would do a certain thing, He did the opposite. There are unexpected issues in life; unexpected joys when we looked for sorrow, and sorrow when we expected joy, until we learn to say, all my expectations are from Thee.

Again, God disciplines us by disappointment. Life may have been going on like a torrent, then suddenly down comes a barrier of disappointment, until slowly we learn that the disappointment was His appointment. God hides His treasures in darkness, and many a radiant star that was not seen before comes out. In some lives you can see the treasure, there is a sweetness and beauty about them, "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit," and you wonder where the winsome power of God came from. It came from the dark places where God revealed His sovereign will in unexpected issues. "Thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress."

"It is the glory of God to conceal a thing." God will not have us come with an impatient curiosity. Moral or intellectual or spiritual insanity must result if we push down barriers which God has placed before our spiritual progress is fit for the revelation.

This is a day of intolerant inquisitiveness. Men will not wait for the slow, steady, majestic way of the Son of God; they try to enter in by this door and that door. "And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, the Lion that is of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, hath overcome, to open the book and the seven seals thereof" (Revelation 5:5 RV). The barriers are placed by a Holy God, and He has told us clearly—"Not that way." God grant we may accept His clouds and mysteries, and be led into His inner secrets by obedient trust.

CELEBRATION OR SURRENDER?

But far be it from me to glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, through which the world hath been crucified unto me, and I unto the world. (Galatians 6:14 RV)

We are much more ready to celebrate what Jesus Christ has done than to surrender to Him. I do not mean the initial surrender to God of a sinner, but the more glorious surrender to God of a saint.

Triviality, i.e., Taken Up with Externals

Paul is writing to really spiritual people, but they were being made the centre of a conflict of rival paths to perfection. He says—"When I 'placarded' Christ crucified before you, you were fascinated at once; now others are 'placarding' ritual and laws, and you are heeding them." If rites and ceremonies are put as a road to perfection they will become the path away from it. To put prayer, devotion, obedience, consecration, or any experience, as the means of sanctification is the proof that we are on the wrong line. In sanctification the one reality is the Lord Himself; if you know Him, you will pay no attention to experiences. Experiences are only a doorway to lead us into the awe and wonder of the revelation of God. Let experiences come and go; bank on the Lord.

The Galatians were relapsing not into sin, but into fixity; they had the jargon of sanctimoniousness, but no real vigorous life. It is easy to think that we are to be specimens of what God can do. According to the New Testament, a saint is a piece of rugged human stuff re-made by the Atonement into oneness with God by the power of the Holy Ghost. The tendency to stereotype Christian experience is an abiding danger; it leads to the amateur providence attitude—"I am not likely to go wrong, but you are." I become, as it were, god almighty over a particular doctrine and imagine that everyone else is off on a side track. For example, when I think I can define what sanctification is, I have done something God refuses to do. Books about sanctification are much clearer than the Bible. The Bible is uncommonly confusing, so is human life. There is only one thing that is simple, and that is our relationship to Jesus Christ. What is needed to-day is not so much a revival as a resurgent form of awakening, the incoming of the tremendous life of God in a new form.

The cure for triviality spiritually is a new note of greatness born of the realisation of what it cost Jesus Christ to produce His salvation in us. Only when we continually face the Cross are we safe from the danger of triviality and internal hypocrisy. To-day the clamour is "do"; but the great need is to face our souls with God until the sterling stamp and testimony of the life is—"But far be it from me to glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ" (RV). We are so taken up with actual happenings that we forget the one fundamental thing, viz., the Cross. Beware of any fascination that takes you away from the centre.

Temporariness, i.e., Uncertainty of Foundations (Galatians 4:9-11)

Paul was alarmed over these Galatian Christians because they were losing the foundation setting. He says, "I am afraid of you. . . ." (Galatians 4:11). The reason for temporariness is because we will not think. It is much easier not to think, much more peaceful. A devotee to doctrines does not need to think, but a man who is devoted to Jesus Christ is obliged to think, and to think every day of his life, and he must allow nothing to dissipate his thinking. It is not courage men lack, but concentration on Jesus Christ. We have to get out of our laziness and indifference and excuses, and rouse ourselves up to face the Cross of Christ.

The cure for uncertainty is a new note of intercessory prayer. The reason for perplexity in meeting the actual occurrences of life is because we are losing face-to-face contact with Jesus Christ through His Cross. We must get back to the place where we are concerned only about facing our own inner souls with Jesus Christ Who searches us right down to the inmost recesses. If we will face the tremendous moral earnestness at the back of the Cross, a new note will be struck in the life which will work the wonders Jesus said it would. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do" (John 14:13). Prayer prevails with God for men and with men for God. Can I by the passion of my prayer, pierce the darkness of a soul and give the Holy Ghost a chance to work, or do I sit mourning on the outskirts as though God had no more power than I have to lift that life? The passionate note of intercession is born in the secret places before God. Salvation is so wonderful, so full of ease and power, because of what it cost Jesus Christ. How much of the tremendous generating power of prayer that is born at the foot of the Cross are those of us who recognise the eternal realities behind the actual happenings of life, putting in for others?

Toughness, i.e., Spiritual Self-Satisfaction

We are so happy, so sure and so satisfied, that we have lost altogether the note of surrender which marked the life of Jesus. He sacrificed His holy Self to His Father, "for their sakes I sanctify Myself"; and we have the same privilege of sacrificing ourselves to Him. Jesus Christ submitted His intelligence to the word and will of His Father; are we submitting our intelligence to Jesus Christ, or are we being caught up on the line of spiritual insubordination? False revivals come along this line. Insubordination means we will not submit our impulses and intuitions and all the forces of the inner life to Jesus Christ; we will not turn to see the voice that speaks. "And I turned to see the voice which spake with me" (Revelation 1:12 RV). Will is the whole man active, and the whole active power and force of the saint is to be laid at the feet of Jesus Christ. We busy ourselves with work for Him while He waits for all our individual energy to be curbed and submitted to Him that He may re-direct it into the channels He wants. "He that believeth on Me," out of him "shall flow rivers of living water."

Are we more anxious to be winsome to men and women than to be loval to God? More anxious to be friends of men than friends of God? More anxious to sympathise with men and women who are wrong than to sympathise with God? Are we getting unstable on the foundation truths of the Redemption? Beware lest it be said of us that we are "enemies of the cross of Christ." May the great note of our lives be—"In the cross of Christ I glory"; no more feeble celebrations, but the great note of surrender, "I am not my own; I am bought with a price." Keep that sterling note in front of your soul, in front of your heart and mind. In Christ's Name, what do we know about the craving for Jesus Christ's honour, the tremendous heart hunger and passion of a man like the apostle Paul—"I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren"? The servant of Jesus Christ has no private history other than his private history with his Lord.

"What is wanted is the re-statement of our creeds." No, what is wanted is to be brought face to face with the one abiding Reality, God Himself; to know that only through the Cross, and the efficacy of the Holy Spirit at work through the Cross, can men be lifted up. The test of Jesus Christ's salvation is that it produces Christ-likeness, a life of absolute simplicity before God. Let us be what will satisfy His heart.

THE SACRAMENT OF SILENCE

Psalm 62:5-6

My soul, wait thou only upon God ["be thou silent unto God," RV mg]. (Psalm 62:5)

A great deal of silence arises from sullenness or from exhaustion, but the silence the Psalmist is alluding to is the silence which springs from the absolute certainty that God knows what He is doing. The Psalmist is determined to break up the drowsiness of his own soul and to bring himself into a watchfulness before God. Silent prayer is, in reality, concentration on God. You say—"But it is not easy to concentrate on God"; it is just because it is not easy that so few learn the secret of doing it. We need to rouse ourselves up out of our indifference, out of drifting into mere jabbering before God, and get into an attitude of fruitful vigilance. Is silent prayer to us an experience of waiting upon God, or is it a "cotton wool" experience? utterly dim and dark? a time which we simply endure until it is over? If you want discerning vision about anything, you have to make an effort and call in your wandering attention. Mental wool-gathering can be stopped immediately the will is roused. Prayer is an effort of will, and the great battle in prayer is the overcoming of mental wool-gathering. We put things down to the devil when we should put them down to our own inability to concentrate. "My soul, wait thou only upon God" i.e., "pull yourself together and be silent unto God."

MY SOUL, wait thou only upon God . . .

Soul is my personal spirit as it reasons, and thinks, and looks at things; I have to call my powers together and concentrate on God. It is possible to concentrate and yet not concentrate on God. We may have a dead set about our lives, but it may be a dead set on comfort or on money, not a dead set on God and on the wonder and majesty of His dealings. The rich fool in our Lord's parable did not ask his soul to consider God, but to consider his possessions—"Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, be merry." Be careful to concentrate on a worthy object. "Wait thou only upon God." Stop all false hurry and spend time in communion with God. Think of the benediction which comes to your disposition by waiting upon God! Some of us are in such a hurry that we distort God's blessings for ourselves and for others. "Wait thou only upon God"; to do that will demand at the beginning the severest mental effort we have ever put forth.

To be "silent unto God" (RV mg) does not mean drifting into mere feeling, or sinking into reverie, but deliberately getting into the centre of things and focusing on God. When you have been brought into relationship with God through the Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ and are concentrating on Him, you will experience wonderful times of communion. As you wait only upon God, concentrating on the glorious outlines of His salvation, there will come into you the sleeping peace of God, the certainty that you are in the place where God is doing all in accordance with His will. In this earnest life of communion with God, the stress of the life is in the right place, i.e., you are not in earnest in order that God may recognise you as His child; your earnestness is the outcome of real communion with God.

My soul, WAIT thou only upon God . . .

To wait upon God is not to sit with folded hands and do nothing, but to wait as men who wait for the harvest. The farmer does not wait idly but with intense activity, he keeps industriously "at it" until the harvest. To wait upon God is the perfection of activity. We are told to "rest in the LORD," not to rust. We talk of resting in the Lord but it is often only a pious expression; in the Bible, resting in the Lord is the patience of godly confidence. "In returning and rest shall ye be saved. . . . But ye said, No, for we will flee upon horses"; i.e., we will take the initiative. When we take the initiative we put our wits on the throne, we do not worship God. God never guides His children by their own initiative. The only initiative we have to take is the initiative of worshipping God.

For my expectation is from Him . . .

Watch the moon as it shines across the sea; there is a silver pathway of light across the billows straight from the distant horizon to the shore, a line of communication over everything between. If you are God's child, there is this expectant line of communication always between you and God. Your experience may be a dreary wilderness, a sea of despair, a dusty, sandy waste with no shade—but over all is a line of communication between you and God. "An highway shall be there, and a way." Or yours may be the experience of having to walk at the bottom of the sea—"All Thy waves and Thy billows are gone over me"; yet—"When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee." Or it may be the extraordinarily consuming difficulties that make up the burden of life—is there a line of communication there? "The hills melted like wax at the presence of the LORD." "My expectation is from Him." Have we learned this sacrament of silence, this secret of inner communion with God?

He only is my rock . . .

A rock conveys the idea of an encircling guard, as that of a mother watching her child who is learning to walk; should the child fall, he falls into the encircling love and watchfulness of the mother's care. "The LORD is my rock," my encircling guard. Where did the Psalmist learn this truth? In the school of silent waiting upon God. The Rock of Ages is the great sheltering encirclement; we are watched over by the Mother-guardianship of God. "I am El-Shaddai," the Father-Mother God. He is my high tower and my defence. The Lord Himself is our inviolable place of safety. There is a loftiness and an inaccessibility about the heavenly places in Christ Jesus. The higher you climb the purer the air until you come to the place where the least microbe is unable to live, and spiritually there is an inaccessible place of absolute security. "Thou hast set thine house of defence very high."

... I shall not be moved.

God lifts us up and poises us in Himself as surely as He has established the stars.

"My soul, be thou silent unto God" (RV mg). Rouse your soul out of its drowsiness to consider God. Fix your attention on God, on the great themes of His Redemption and His holiness, on the great and glorious outlines of His character, be silent to Him there; then be as busy as you like in the ordinary affairs of life. Be like the Lord Jesus; when He was sound asleep in the fishing-boat He knew that His Father would waken Him when He wanted Him. This is a marvellous picture of confidence in God.

My soul, wait thou only upon God.

SPIRITUAL CONFUSION

Ye know not what ye ask. (Matthew 20:22)

At times in spiritual life there is confusion, and the usual way out is to say there ought to be no confusion. Some of us are inclined to be fanatical, we won't pay any attention to things that are not black or white, right or wrong. There are very few things that are black or white, right or wrong, and until we recognise this we are apt to be insolent or indifferent towards anything in between. A fog is as real as clear sunshine; if we don't pay any attention to the fog, we shall come to disaster. There are things in the spiritual life which are confused, not because we have disobeyed, but owing to the very nature of things. The confusion arises from being unschooled spiritually.

The Shrouding of His Friendship (Luke 11:5–8)

And he from within shall answer and say, Trouble me not: the door is now shut . . . (Luke 11:7)

There is a time in spiritual life when God does not seem to be a friend. Everything was clear and easily marked and understood for a while, but now we find ourselves in a condition of darkness and desolation. The parable of the importunate friend is the illustration Jesus gives of how the Heavenly Father will appear in times of spiritual confusion—as a man who does not care for his friends. We are in need, or our friends or our homes are in need, and though we go to God Who has been our Friend all through, He does nothing at all. It is as if Jesus said to His disciples—"There are times when the Heavenly Father will look like that, but don't give up, remember I have told you—everyone that asks receives." In the meantime the friendship of God is completely shrouded. There are things that have no explanation, but maintain your relationship to God, "hang in" in confidence in Him, and the time will come when everything will be explained. It is only by going through the confusion that we shall get at what God wants us to get at.

Never say God has done what He has not done because it sounds better to say it; never pretend to have an answer when you have not. Jesus said "Every one that asketh receiveth"; we say—"I have asked but I have not received." It is because we ask in spiritual confusion. Jesus said to James and John: "Ye know not what ye ask"; they were brought into fellowship with Jesus Christ's cup and baptism, but not in the way they expected.

And of which of you that is a father shall his son ask a loaf, and he give him a stone? (Luke 11:11 RV)

Jesus says there are times when our Heavenly Father will appear as if He were a most unnatural father, callous and indifferent—I asked for bread and He gave me a stone, and there is a shadow on His Fatherhood. But remember. says Jesus, I have told you—everyone that asks receives. When we get into spiritual confusion the usual way out is to say we have made a blunder, and we go back instead of forward. "I don't know what to do; I am up against a stone wall." Will you "hang in" to what Jesus said? If there is a shadow on the face of the Fatherhood of God just now, remain confident that ultimately He will give His clear issue as Jesus said. It is not a question of black or white, of right or wrong; of being in communion or out of communion; but a question of God taking us by a way which in the meantime we do not understand.

The Strangeness of His Faithfulness (Luke 18:1–8)

And shall not God avenge His elect, which cry to Him day and night, and He is longsuffering over them? (Luke 18:7 RV)

There are times when the Heavenly Father will look as if He were an unjust Judge, but remember, Jesus says, He is not. In the meantime there is a cloud on the friendship of the heart, and even love itself has to wait often in pain and tears for the blessing of fuller communion. The time is coming when we shall see perfectly clearly, but it is only through confusion that we can get to a clear outline.

State definitely to yourself the things that are confused; note the things that are not clear black and white. There are no problems at all over right and wrong. Human life is not made up of right and wrong, but of things which are not quite clear—"I do not know what God would have me do in this matter." Stand off in faith that what Jesus said is true—everyone that asks receives, and in the meantime do the duty that lies nearest, waiting and watching. If the friendship of God is shrouded and it looks as if He is not going to do anything, then remain dumb. The real problems are very heavy. Instead of God being a Father loving and kind, it looks at times as if He were totally indifferent. Remember, God has bigger issues at stake on the ground of His Redemption than the particular setting in which we ask. In the meantime we do not know what God is doing, but we are certain that what Jesus says is true. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" and when we are the possessors of the Holy Spirit we shall justify God all through.

Until we have been disciplined properly by means of spiritual confusion we shall always want to bank on God's miracles and refuse to do the moral thing ourselves. It is much easier to ask God to do our work for us than to do it ourselves—"Oh well, I will pray and ask God to clean this thing up for me." God won't. We must do our own work. Prayer is always a temptation to bank on a miracle instead of a moral issue until we are disciplined. God will do more than we can do, but only in relationship to our spiritual growth. When we have received the gift of the Holy Spirit, we have to learn to obey God in every detail, then the shroudings will be lifted, the shadows will disappear, the strangeness will go, and we shall begin to understand the Friendship and the Fatherhood and the Faithfulness of God with regard to our lives.

"Howbeit when the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?"(RV). Will He find the faith that banks on Him in spite of the confusion?

THE LONG TRAIL TO SPIRITUAL REALITY

But now we see not yet all things subjected to Him. (Hebrews 2:8 RV)

When we are busy with our own outlook on life, it seems as if God were indifferent. Our human patience, as well as our impatience, gets to the point of saying—"Why does not God do things?" Redemption is complete; we believe that Our Lord has all power in heaven and on earth, then why is it such a long while before things happen? Why is God so long in making actual His answers to our prayers? When in such a state of mind we are capable of becoming bitter against God unless we are led into the inner secret of our Lord's own attitude.

The Vision of the Long Way (Matthew 4:1)

For thirty years Jesus had remained unknown, then He was baptised and had a wonderful manifestation of the Father's approval, and the next thing we read is that He is "led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil." The same thing puzzles us in our own spiritual experience; we have been born from above (RV mg), or have had the wonderful experience of the baptism of the Holy Ghost—surely we are fit now to do something for God; and God deliberately puts us on the shelf, amongst the dust and the cobwebs, in an utterly unaccountable way.

The agony Jesus went through in the Temptation was surely because He had the vision of the long way and saw the suffering it would entail on men through all the ages if He took His Father's way. He knew it in a way we cannot conceive. His sensitiveness is beyond anything we can imagine. If He had not been true to His Father's way, His own home would not have been upset, His own nation would not have blasphemed the Holy Ghost. The way to approach Gethsemane is to try to understand the Temptation.

Each of the temptations presented to our Lord by Satan had this as its centre: "You will get the Kingship of men and the Saviourhood of the world if You will take a 'short cut'—put man's needs first, and he will crown You King; do something extraordinarily wonderful, indicative of Your power, and man will crown You King; compromise with evil, and You will get the Kingship of men." Jesus could have brought the whole thing about suddenly (cf. John 6:15); but He did not. He withstood Satan and took the stupendously long way.

When we obey Jesus Christ it is never a question of what it costs us—it does not cost us anything, it is a delight—but of what it costs those whom we love, and there is always the danger of yielding to the temptation of the "short cut." Am I prepared to let my obedience to God cost other people something? Jesus deliberately took the long trail, and He says "the disciple is not above his Master." "Because thou hast kept the word of My patience . . ." We want to hurry things up by revivals. Over and over again we take the devil's advice and say, "It must be done quickly—the need is the call; men must be saved." An understanding of the inwardness of our Lord's temptation will throw light on the progress of Christian history as well as on personal experience.

Why does God take such a long time? Because of what He is after, viz., "bringing many sons unto glory." It takes time to make a son. We are not made sons of God by magic; we are saved in the great supernatural sense by the sovereign work of God's grace, but sonship is a different matter. I have to become a son of God by deliberate discernment and understanding and chastisement, not by spiritual necromancy, imagining I can ascend to heaven in leaps and bounds. The "short cut" would make men mechanisms, not sons, with no discernment of God. If God did not shield His only Begotten Son from any of the requirements of sonship ("Though He was a Son, yet learned obedience by the things which He suffered"— Hebrews 5:8 RV), He will not shield us from all the requirements of being His sons and daughters by adoption.

The Valley of the Long Wait

For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to us-ward. (Romans 8:18 RV)

It is a long wait until the sons of God appear, and they only appear by the deliberate simplicity of obedience to Him. When the Spirit of God comes into a man the first thing that happens is the corruption of the natural virtues. Natural virtues are remnants of the human race as God designed it; when a man is born again his natural virtues begin to crumble, and he is plunged into perplexity. Natural good has to die in me before the best can come. That is the keynote of spiritual reality. It is not the bad that is the enemy of God, but the good that is not good enough. We say that sin is the enemy of God—sin is our enemy. The enemy of God in me is morality based on a denial of Jesus, i.e., the rectitude that is not based on spiritual regeneration.

Jesus does not take men and say—"This is the truth and if you don't believe it you will be damned." He simply shows us the truth—"I am . . . the Truth," and leaves us alone. We name His Name, but is He the Truth to us in our bodily life, in our commonsense life, in our intellectual and emotional life? It takes a long while for us to begin to see that Jesus Christ is The Truth. Truths exist that have no meaning for us until we get into the domain of their power, ". . . Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born anew, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:3 RV). We want to get at truth by "short cuts"; the wonder is our Lord's amazing patience. He never insists that we take His way; He simply says—"I am the Way." We might as well learn to take His way at the beginning, but we won't, we are determined on our own way. Do I believe that God can only come to other men in the way He comes to me?

"Except ye . . . become as little children . . ." We won't become as little children, we have notions of our own, somewhere within us all is the "superior person." There is nothing simpler or more exquisite than a little child, and Jesus says you must become like that. We say—"But I am so and so, and I have had these experiences, and I have ideas of my own." Or we may not say it, but we think it. It takes a long time to realise what Jesus is after, and the person you need most patience with is yourself. God takes deliberate time with us, He does not hurry, because we can only appreciate His point of view by a long discipline. The grace of God abides always the same. By His grace we stand on the basis of His Redemption; but we ought to be making headway in the development of our personal sonship.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF COMMUNION WITH GOD

And after the earthquake a fire; but the LORD was not in the fire: and after the fire a still small voice. (1 Kings 19:12)

What is mirrored in the unique, solitary figure of Elijah is not something we all experience, although it explains what we experience. An expositor must deal with exceptional cases, but we blunder if we look in our own experience for the exceptional and sensational. There are ways in our lives about which we cannot be articulate, they go beyond our exact expression, we do not know why we are moved as we are; the explanation for it is not to be found in ourselves but in the experience of some greater soul. If we study Elijah in this experience of gloom and isolation, we shall find a line of understanding for ourselves.

Interior desolation serves a vital purpose in the life of a Christian. At the beginning of the spiritual life the consciousness of God is so wonderful that we are apt to imagine our communion with God depends upon our being conscious of His presence. Then when God begins to withdraw us into Himself, and things become mysterious, we lose our faith and get into the dark, and say-"I must have backslidden," and yet we know we have not, all we know is that we have lost our consciousness of God's presence. Madame Guyon, ¹⁸ in commenting on her own experience, puts it thus—"To complete my distress I seemed to be left without God Himself Who alone could support me in such a distressing state." "The misfortune," she adds, "is that people wish to direct God instead of resigning themselves to be directed by Him." Out of this experience of desolation, Madame Guyon learned this truth, that our faith must be built on the reality of being taken up into God's consciousness in Christ, not on our taking God into our consciousness. This means entering into a relationship with God whereby our will becomes one with the will of God. To the thought of the saints God is never far enough away to think about them, there is no separation; He thinks them. How we get there, I cannot tell you, but it is by the processes of God's training.

Elijah took his own initiative in telling Ahab "there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word" (1 Kings 17:1), and during the drought God made him go up and down the land and see the havoc that drought brought about. Now, when Elijah is isolated and spiritually baffled, God brings before him in miniature, a great and strong wind, an earthquake, and fire, as much as to say that these had been used as His instruments, "but the LORD was not in the wind," etc. Elijah's conception undoubtedly was that God was in them, but he had to learn that God was not there.

To-day there are colossal forces abroad and God is using them as His instruments, but He is not "in" them, that is, they are not God. It is a misconception to imagine that God is bound up in His instruments; He uses forces and powers for His own ends, but they must never be mistaken for Himself. An instrument conveys God's message, and a man used by God ought to be a holy man: but it does not always follow that he is (cf. Matthew 7:21–22).

Conscientious Introspection before God (1 Kings 19:3-4, 10, 14)

Elijah did an actually cowardly thing, yet he was not a coward. He ran away because he was absolutely baffled, he could not understand what God was doing. We cannot judge men by what they actually do, because the reasons of two men who do the same thing may be entirely different. Another man might have run away because he was a craven coward. Elijah fled because it seemed as if he had been let down by God in everything in which he had stood for Him. "Why is my pain perpetual, and my wound incurable, which refuseth to be healed? wilt thou indeed be unto me as a deceitful brook, as waters that fail?" (Jeremiah 15:18 RV). This sense of being baffled knocks everything out; a man is like a sparrow in a gale. It is not a question of losing his wits, but of realising that he has none. The battle in spiritual life is, on whom or on what am I building my confidence?

The striking thing about Job in his experience of being baffled was that he was strictly true to what he knew; he stuck to it all through—"I will not accept a credal statement of God that denies the facts I know." Job would not tell a lie for the honour of God; neither would Elijah. "I have been very jealous for the LORD, the God of hosts; . . . and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away" (RV). "I have spent everything for Your honour, expecting You to see me through, and now I am the only one left, and I don't want the only one left standing for You to be crushed out." Elijah was conscientious before God; his baffling went deeper than discouragement, which is "disenchanted egotism." He feared that God had failed; that He had taken on too much. The greatest fear a man has is that his hero will not get through; fear for himself is child's play. Is God going to get through? Is everything going to prove a "washout"? Is my faith in God nonsense? Can Jesus Christ do what He said He could?

Consciousness of Instruction by God (1 Kings 19:5, 7, 9, 12–13, 15)

The angel did not give Elijah a vision, or explain the Scriptures to him, or do anything remarkable; he told Elijah to do the most ordinary thing, viz., Arise and eat." The ministrations of God come over and over again in the most commonplace manner possible. We look for some great big alteration, something marvellous like the wind, or an earthquake, or fire; and the voice of God tells us to do what the most ordinary voice we know might tell us to do. "And after the fire a still small voice"—i.e., "a sound of gentle stillness" (RV mg)—the one thing the Lord was in. Then came the command—"Go, return. . . ." God sent Elijah right back, after giving him an extraordinary heartening, to do what He had told him. The haphazard may tumble about as it likes now; Elijah has learned that God's order comes that way.

The experience of being baffled is common to us all, and the more religious and thoughtful a man is, the more intensely is he baffled. With regard to your own baffling, recognise it and state it, but don't state it dishonestly to yourself. Don't say you are not baffled if you are, and don't tell a lie in order to justify your belief in God. If you are in the dark, don't take refuge in any subterfuge which you know is not true. Never take an answer that satisfies your mind only; insist on an answer that satisfies more than your mind, an answer that satisfies by the "sound of gentle stillness" (RV mg). Jesus describes it as "My peace," the witness of God that goes all through you and produces a complete calm within. The first thing to do is the most obvious commonsense thing possible, the thing that is absolutely natural. When God has produced the "sound of gentle stillness" in your spirit, you will hear Him speak. "What I tell you in the darkness, that speak ye in the light." Then with renewed strength you go and do the thing God had already told you to do, but with the realisation that you are backed by God.

IS HE YOUR MASTER?

Ye call Me, Master, and, Lord: and ye say well; for so I am. (John 13:13 RV)

The most remarkable thing about the mastership of Jesus Christ is that He never insists on being Master. We often feel that if only He would insist, we would obey Him. Obedience to Jesus Christ is essential, but never compulsory; He will never take means to make me obey Him. Jesus Christ will always make up for my deficiencies, He always forgives my disobedience; but if I am going to be a disciple, it is essential for me to obey Him. In the early stages we have the notion that the Christian life is one of freedom, and so it is; but freedom for one thing only—freedom to obey our Master.

The Great Conception

Ye call Me, Master, and, Lord . . .

We must have our Christian conception right, and this is the right conception, that Jesus Christ is our Master. We do not give enough time to brooding on this conception of our Lord; we do not do enough at it. An artist or a musician must know how to brood on his conception. It is no use being the home of furtive ideas and having conceptions that come floating through like sunrise clouds. The artist has to go after the idea and stick to it until it is wrought into the character of his conception. It is not easy to maintain the conception of Jesus Christ as Master. Spiritual concentration is needed to do it.

The conception of mastership which we get from our natural life is totally different from the mastership of Jesus Christ, because He never insists on our obedience. He simply says, "If ye love Me, ye will keep My commandments" (RV). That is the end of it. If I do not keep His commandments, He does not come and tell me I have done the wrong thing, I know it, there is no getting away from it. If once I have been indwelt by the Holy Spirit, He will always discern that I have done the fundamentally wrong thing when I disobey Jesus Christ. Let me disobey Him, and I am the most miserable wretch out of hell. He never punishes, yet I know that His consciousness of Himself is right, that He is Master.

When we are born from above (RV mg) and have the Holy Spirit within, He delights to glow on the Lord Jesus Christ until His features are transfigured for us. Natural love does not grow if we do not do anything at it. It is the most ordinary business to fall in love; it is the most extraordinary business to abide there. The same thing with regard to the love of our Lord. The Holy Ghost gives us the great power to love Jesus Christ. That is not a rare experience at all; the rare experience is to get into the conception of loving Him in such a way that the whole heart and mind and soul are taken up with Him. This experience is symbolised in Mary of Bethany when she sat at the feet of Jesus. We have to sit at His feet in disposition. A thousand and one things crowd into our everyday lives, do we bring them into this conception of Jesus as Master, or have we forgotten His counsel and called ourselves master in these details? We have the conception of Him as Master with regard to a prayer meeting, but we have not the conception of Him as Master over our tongues, over our fingers, over our possessions, over everything that belongs to us. We call ourselves master in those domains, that is, we have the conception that we are responsible for them. As saints we are responsible for one thing only, viz., to maintain our conception right in relationship to God; this is the whole secret of the devotional life of a saint. The right conception is not Christian duty or service to men, but keeping Jesus as Master. How much time do I give to brooding on the conception that makes me call Him Master?

The Great Certainty

At the beginning of the human race the conception was that Adam was to be master over everything but himself. He was to have dominion over the life on the earth and in the air and in the sea, but he was not to have dominion over himself, God was to have dominion over him. The temptation came on this line—"Disobey, and you will become as God." Man took dominion over himself and thereby lost his lordship over everything else. According to the Bible, the disposition of sin is my claim to my right to myself.

"The disciple is not above his Master." The life of our Lord is our pattern, not a good man, and the one characteristic of our Lord's human life was that He was not His own Master. He said, in effect, "I do not speak from My right to Myself, I speak what My Father tells Me to speak. I do not work from Myself, I work the works of My Father. I do not maintain My right to Myself, I sanctify Myself to God's holy purposes." The New Testament describes how our Lord was perfected as a human being for redemptive purposes, "though He was a Son, yet learned obedience by the things which He suffered" (Hebrews 5:8 RV), and if I am a disciple of Jesus Christ, the great certainty is that I have to be perfected as my Master, and not think it strange concerning the things God puts me through.

The Great Consciousness

 \dots for so I am.

We are apt to end where we begin, viz., in our own consciousness. Christianity is not my consciousness of God, but God's consciousness of me. We must build our faith on the reality that we are taken up into God's consciousness in Christ, not that we take God into our consciousness. This is the meaning of our Lord's counsel "consider the lilies," and it is also the explanation of the inordinate desire for manifestly successful Christian work. The great consciousness in our Lord's mind is that He is man's Master, and we have to get into His consciousness. The wonderful thing about our Lord is that He will not master us. He becomes the dust under our feet. He becomes less than the breath we breathe. He becomes Someone we can jeer at and utilise, Someone we can do anything we like with; yet all the time He is Master. We can crucify Him, we can spit on Him, we can slander Him, we can ignore Him, we can hurt Him; yet He is Master. And when He shows Himself at the end of the dispensation, every man will recognise Him as Master, and those who have done the cruel things to Him will be so appalled at the revelation that they will call on the rocks to cover them, and the rocks in that day will reveal that they and the earth belong to their Master.

Is He your Master? This is the true and lasting and eternal conception, and to have it will produce confusion in every other conception of Jesus. I am not a devotee of any cause, or an advocate of any creed; I am His. "Ye are not your own." I must beware of the tendency to become dissipated in my conception by false notions of Christian work, or by ideas as to what I ought to be doing. I ought to be nothing but a disciple of Jesus Christ; He will be doing through me all the time. Jesus Christ's consciousness being what it is, viz., that He is Master, if I am rightly related to God and walking in the light, no matter what happens to me, it is His look-out, not mine. I have simply to abandon to Him and smilingly wash my hands of the consequences. He will engineer my circumstances, He will dump me down where He chooses, He will give me money or give me none, as He likes; all I have to do is to keep my soul carefully in the conception of Him as Master. "For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and ourselves as your servants for Jesus' sake" (RV).

WHY ARE WE NOT TOLD PLAINLY?

... He charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, save when the Son of man should have risen again from the dead. (Mark 9:9 RV)

Because of the Unbearable Things

I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. (John 16:12)

Our Lord does not hide things from us, but they are unbearable until we are in a fit condition of spiritual life to receive them; then the word our Lord has spoken becomes so plain that we are amazed we did not understand it before. We could not understand it before because we were not in the place either in disposition or in will where it could be borne. There must be communion with the resurrection life of Jesus before a particular word can be borne by us. "Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man is risen from the dead" in you—until the life of the risen Christ so dominates you that you understand what the historic Christ taught.

Obtuseness is valuable sometimes. It is of God's infinite mercy that we do not understand what He says until we are in a fit condition. If God came down with His light and power, we should be witless; but our Lord never enthrals us. Satan tempted Jesus to use the power of enthralment, and false methods of service are built up on that line. When we first know the Lord we are always tempted by the "show business," our prayers are really dictation to God. God will take us out of the obtuse stage immediately we let the resurrection life of Jesus have its way with us.

Do we know anything about the impartation of the risen life of Jesus Christ? The evidence that we do is that His words are becoming interpretable to us. God cannot reveal anything to us if we have not His Spirit. If we have made up our minds about a doctrine, we cannot get any more light from God about it, light will never come to us on that line. An obstinate outlook will effectually hinder God revealing anything to us. It is not sin, but unenlightenment caused by the absence of the resurrection life of Jesus.

Because of the Unbelievable Things

By this we believe. . . . Jesus answered them, Do ye now believe? (John 16:30–31)

We need to rely much deeper down consciously on the resurrection life of Jesus; to get into the habit of steadily referring everything back to Him. Instead of that, we make our commonsense decisions and say we hope God will bless them. He cannot—they are not in His domain. "But if I do my duty, I shan't go astray." You will; it is unbelievable, but true. You will go wrong, because you have put something that can be stated in abstract form on the throne instead of our Lord. As God's children we are never told to walk in the light of conscience or of a sense of duty; we are told to walk in the light of the Lord. When we do things from a sense of duty, we can back it up by argument; but when we do things out of obedience to the Lord there is no logical argument possible. That is why a saint can easily be ridiculed.

Tell no man, till the Son of Man is risen from the dead. Is Jesus Christ risen in us? Is He getting His way? When we look back on the choice of our life work, or of our friends, or of what we call our duty, is He really the dominating One? We can soon know whether He is. We say—"Now . . . we believe. . . . " and Jesus says—"Do ye now believe? Behold, the hour cometh, . . . that ye . . . shall leave Me alone." Many a Christian worker has left his Lord alone and gone into work from a sense of duty woven out of a need, or of a call arising from his own particular discernment. There is no sin in it, and no punishment attached, but when that one realises that he has hindered his understanding of what Jesus says and produced for himself perplexities and sorrows, it is with shame and contrition he has to come back like a little child and ask the Lord to teach him all over again. "Except ve . . . become as little children." When we do a thing from a sense of duty, we become amateur providences and the child attitude is gone; the power of the resurrection life of Jesus is not there. We have put up a standard in competition with our Lord, and have got out of contact with Him by leaning to our own understanding.

"Tell the vision to no man. . . ." So many do tell, they tell what they saw on the Mount and testify to it, but the actual life does not tally with the vision; the Son of Man is not yet risen in them. The words sound all right, but He is not there. There is no communication of His life through the words, no illumination or understanding given to seeking souls, because the Son of Man is not yet risen in them. I wonder when He is going to be formed in us? "My little children, of whom I am again in travail until Christ be formed in you" (Galatians 4:19 RV). When are we going to believe that unbelievable thing, that we will leave Him alone, in spite of all we say?

Because of the Unquestioned Things

... the hour cometh, when I... shall tell you plainly of the Father. (John 16:25 RV)

And in that day ye shall ask Me nothing. (John 16:23)

When is "that day"? When the resurrection life of the Lord Jesus is the portion of our life. In that day we shall be one with the Father as Jesus said we should be, because the Holy Spirit has brought us there. No one can receive the Holy Spirit unless he is convinced of his own poverty. When we receive the Holy Spirit, He imparts the risen life of Jesus and there is no distance between the Father and His child. Have we come to this unquestioning place where there is no more perplexity of heart in regard to God? Any number of things may be dark and unexplained, but they do not come in between the heart and God. "In that day ye shall ask Me nothing"-you do not need to, you are so certain that God will bring it all out in perfect accordance with His will; John 14:1 ("Let not your heart be troubled") has become the real state of your life. Until the resurrection life of Jesus Christ is manifested, we do want to ask questions; whenever we take a new step in God's providence we want to ask this and that. When the point of entire reliance on the resurrection life of Jesus is reached, and we are brought into perfect contact with the purpose of God, we find all our questions have gone. Are we living that life now? If not, why shouldn't we?

What is it makes us say—"I wish God would tell me plainly"? Never look for an explanation from without or in your own mind, look for it in your disposition. The reason anything is a mystery and is coming in between yourself and God, is in the disposition, not in the intellect. When once the disposition is willingly submitted to the life of Jesus, the understanding becomes perfectly clear. "If any man willeth to do His will, he shall know of the teaching" (RV).

THE TRANSFIGURED EXPERIENCE OF LIFE

And suddenly looking round about, they saw no one any more, save Jesus only with themselves. (Mark 9:8 RV)

There was no other moment not even the Resurrection of our Lord, so transcendent and amazing in the experience of Peter and James and John as the moment on the Mount of Transfiguration. Peter takes care to emphasise that it was when "we were with Him in the holy mount" that he saw and heard and understood Who Jesus was, we "were eye-witnesses of His majesty." In his Epistle, James makes the practical application of this wonderful experience; and John, whilst he does not record the Transfiguration, writes his Gospel from this standpoint, the standpoint of the exceeding majesty of the Lord Jesus.

The Immortal Moments of Life

Jesus... bringeth them up into a high mountain apart by themselves: and He was transfigured before them. (Mark 9:2 RV)

We all have what are called "brilliant moments." We are not always dull, not always contented with eating and drinking. There are times when we are unlike our usual selves, both in the way of depression and of brilliance, when one moment stands out from every other, and we suddenly see the way which we should go. And there is the counterpart in spiritual experience of those times in the natural life. There are tides of the spirit, immortal moments, moments of amazing clearness of vision, and it is by these moments and by what we see then, that we are to be judged. "While ye have the light, believe on the light," said Jesus—do not believe what you see when you are not in the light. God is going to judge us by the times when we have been in living communion with Him, not by what we feel like to-day. God judges us entirely by what we have seen. We are not judged by the fact that we live up to the light of our conscience; we are judged by The Light, Jesus Christ. "I am the light of the world"; and if we do not know Jesus Christ, we are to blame. The only reason we do not know Him is because we have not bothered our heads about Him. Honestly, does it matter to us whether Jesus lived and died, or did anything at all? "But there are so many humbugs." There is no counterfeit without the reality. Is Jesus Christ a fraud? We are to be judged by Him. "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved the darkness rather than the light." We are not judged by the light we have, but by the light we have refused to accept. God holds us responsible for what we will not look at. A man is never the same after he has seen Jesus. We are judged by our immortal moments, the moments in which we have seen the light of God.

The Isolation Moments of Life

... they became sore afraid. And there came a cloud overshadowing them. (Mark 9:6–7 RV)

Something desolating, as well as something wonderful, happened to the disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration; they were transfixed with wonder at the sight of Who Jesus was, then an isolating shadow came over them: they do not know the Jesus Whom they are seeing now, and they are sore afraid, there is a chill over heart and life.

"For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." There is scenery surrounding the human soul of which we are unconscious, supernatural powers and agencies we know nothing about. Many a one has come to the place of the isolation moment, where it is cloudy and overshadowed. What are we going to do in these times of isolation? It would be an appalling thing to go through life unshielded by Jesus. We are inclined to be flippant, until God lifts the veil a little, then we get terrified. Let a little puff of wind blow over us, and instantly the "terror by night" isolates us in the alarm of the spirit. It is in these periods of isolation that our Lord keeps us. The Atonement of Jesus means safeguarding in the Unseen, safeguarding from dangers of which we know nothing.

Never be afraid because you do not understand yourself, and never be sour because no one else understands you. There is only One Who understands us, and that is God (see the 139th Psalm). Our lives are lived in two compartments, the shallow and the profound, and both domains are to be God's. There is always the temptation to live only in the profound, and to despise others for not understanding our profundity. We are apt to forget that God is in the shallow as well as in the profound. We have to see that we live our shallow life in as godly a manner as we live the profound.

The Identified Meaning of Life

... they saw no one any more, save Jesus only with themselves (Mark 9:8 RV)

It was not that they saw no one else, but they saw no one else without seeing Jesus. The identified meaning of life is that we see "every man perfect in Christ Jesus." We do not need a transfiguration experience to see meanness, because we are mean; ¹⁹ we do not need a transfiguration experience to see sin, because we are sinners; but we do need a transfiguration experience to see Christ Jesus in the mean, in the sinner, in the all-but-lost, in the wrong and in the evil, so that it can be true of the experience of every saint—"they saw no one any more, save Jesus only with themselves." That is what contact with Jesus means. It is easy to see the specks and the wrong in others, because we see in others that of which we are guilty ourselves. "Wherefore thou art without excuse, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest dost practise the same things" (Romans 2:1 RV). The greatest cure for spiritual conceit is for God to give us a dose of the plague of our own heart.

What a wonderful thing it will be for us if we enter into the transfigured experience of life! There is never any snare in the man or woman who has seen Jesus. Have you anyone "save Jesus only" in your cloud? If you have, then it will get darker. You must get to the place where there is "no one any more, save Jesus only."

THE DAWN THAT TRANSFIGURES TEARS

Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? (John 20:15)

"And God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes" (RV). Unless God wipes away our tears, they will always return. The day to which our Lord rose is a day in which tears are not done away with, but transfigured—a day that has no twilight, nor evening nor night. This does not mean that no more tears will be shed, but that they will never be shed again in the way they were before. We do not know what will take the place of tears, but a life in which there is no equivalent to tears would be intolerable to the imagination.

He is not here. (Matthew 28:6 RV)

(a) The End of the Three Years

... sitting over against the sepulchre. (Matthew 27:61)

Those years had been a time of marvellous delight and joy, but they are finished now, and there is the pressure of pain in the termination of them. No greater sadness than that of the disciples can be imagined. They owed everything to Jesus, and now "He is not here," and life has nothing more to hold out for them. We have all had the equivalent of those three years, a time of great joy while it lasted, but it is finished now, and we too have sat "over against the sepulchre."

(b) The End of the Thrilling Yesterdays
And he went out, and wept bitterly. (Matthew 26:75
RV)

Peter was a loyal, strong, warm-hearted man, swayed by impulse; and now all the aspirations of his life have come to an end. We have all known the thrilling yesterday—when we first entered into the realisation of love, or of friendship, or of the joy of life. If all that we have is the human, it will end in bitter tears—not sometimes, but every time. The only way in which bitter tears can be evaded is either by a man's shallowness, or by his coming into a totally new relation to the Lord Jesus Christ through His Resurrection.

(c) The End of Tender Yearnings

What communications are these that ye have one with another, as ye walk? (Luke 24:17 RV)

These words represent all we understand by tender yearnings. There are things in our lives that terminate; it is a universal human experience. Things come to an end and it produces unutterable sadness.

"He is not here." These are the saddest words on earth. Think what such words mean to mothers who have lost their sons in war, to wives who have lost their husbands. Yet in this connection they are extraordinarily joyful words—"He is not here, for He is risen." He is not here, in the ordinary sense of the word—not merely as One Who can sympathise with sorrow: He is here—but as the Risen Lord! If we pour out sympathy upon one who is bereaved, all we do is to make that one more submissive to his grief. The unique thing about Jesus is that He comes to sorrowing men as a complete Saviour from all sorrow.

The Power in the Proclamation of the Impossibilities for He is risen.

Jesus is not in the sitting by the sepulchre; He is not in the bitter tears; He is not in the sad communings. The place where we will find Jesus is just where common sense says it is impossible to find Him. It was no use for the disciples to imagine they were going to have a recurrence of those three years; it was impossible to recall the thrilling yesterdays; it was impossible for the two on the way to Emmaus to have a return of the fellowship they yearned for; but there was something infinitely better for them. "For He is risen, even as He said." Impossibility had wedded itself to what Jesus had said. The proclamation of the impossible springs from the supernatural, not from common sense. The supernatural figures largely all through the life of our Lord. At His birth the angels proclaimed that He should be called Jesus "for He shall save His people from their sins." We shall not think of our Lord as a Saviour if we look at Him in the light of our own minds, because no natural man imagines he needs to be saved. Do we make room in our faith for the impossible along the line of the supernatural? or have we reduced our religion to such commonsense platitudes that there is no need for Jesus to have lived at all?

At His Resurrection, the angels proclaimed—
"He is not here; for He is risen, even as He said." The disciples' common sense would tell them that what the angel said was an impossibility. Do we believe the proclamation of the supernatural, or do we refuse to believe what we say is impossible? It is "impossible" for God to be born into human flesh; but Jesus was. It is "impossible" for a dead man to rise again; but Jesus rose. It is "impossible" for a man, even if he rose from the dead, to ascend into heaven; but Jesus did. When we reach the limit of what our common sense tells us can be done, then the word comes—"With God all things are possible." The limit of the possible means that God has a word of impossibility which He will perform in us if we have faith.

The Passing to the Path of Joy

And go quickly . . . , and lo, He goeth before you.

"He is not here"—not here in your imitations, not here in your way of looking at things; He is going before you all the time, and the rousing inspiration is—"go quickly, and tell His disciples."

Think of the unspeakable thrill that must have come to this broken-hearted woman. She had had her thrilling yesterday, Jesus had cast out of her seven devils, and all her faith and hope was in Him; but He is dead. . . . Now the angel proclaims that He is risen—"Fear not ye . . . and go quickly, and tell His disciples." All that stands for tears comes with limitation. When limitation touches us and the tears come, we are apt to say—"It is all finished now," and we are too dispirited to do anything. Then comes the inspiration—"Go quickly," get on your feet and go at once. It is not an inspiration according to common sense, but an arresting inspiration of astonishment. "Lo, He goeth before you." We take the next step in limitation and are met with limitless Divine power. We have to go as if God were not there, to take the first step without Him, and we find He is there all the time. We do not go alone, we go into the realisation of the wonder of His presence. "Lo, I have told you." The supernatural character of the angel is at stake in the accepting of the inspiration. When we talk unguardedly to a child, we speak real truth because a child sees what no one else sees; when we talk to grownup people we speak acquired common sense. We need to get back to the "angel" talk.

The Pledge of the Promise of Sight

... there shall ye see Him.

We shall not see Jesus if we sit still, or if we pray and long for Him, but if we go quickly, "there shall ye see Him." Go in your mind, rouse yourself up, indulge no more in reminiscent worship. That is a danger that persists until we realise that Jesus is risen not to the old life but to an inconceivably new life, and that our relationship to Him now is to be an altogether different one. "Touch Me not; . . . but go unto My brethren" (RV). We have to go on to the next thing, and there we shall see Him. We enthrone our reason and say "seeing is believing." Have we the simple childlike faith to believe that if we do the next thing we shall see Him just there? To "wash one another's feet" is a commonplace thing to do, but it is there that we see Him. Do we believe in a perfect, present, absolute Redemption—a Redemption that is complete and finished? That Redemption is the work of the Risen Lord. His Resurrection is the Dawn that transfigures tears.

THE SACRAMENT OF SACRIFICE

He that believeth on Me, . . . out of [him] shall flow rivers of living water. (John 7:38)

Jesus Christ did not say, "He that believeth on Me, in himself shall realise the blessing of the fulness of God," but "out of him shall escape everything he has received." Our Lord always preaches anti-selfrealisation; He is not after developing a man at all, He is after making a man exactly like Himself, and the measure of the Son of God is self-expenditure. If we believe on Jesus Christ it is not what we gain but what He pours through us that counts. It is not that God makes us beautifully rounded grapes, but that He squeezes the sweetness out of us. We cannot measure our lives by spiritual success, but only by what God pours through us, and we cannot measure that at all. Who can measure the influence of a star or of a lily? Yet these are the things our Lord told us to consider. "He that believeth on Me"-"through him will I pour everything, leaving him nothing." A sacrament is the real Presence in the actual elements; in this connection the actual elements are our lives.

The Waters of Satisfaction Scattered

And the three mighty men brake through the host of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Bethlehem, . . . and brought it to David: but he would not drink thereof, but poured it out unto the LORD. (2 Samuel 23:16 RV)

I can never sanctify to God that with which I long to satisfy myself. If I am going to satisfy myself with the blessings of God, they will corrupt me; I have to sacrifice them, pour them out, do with them what any commonsense man would say is an absurd waste. Take it in the case of friendship, or of blessing, or of spiritual experiences, immediately I long to hold any of these for myself I cannot sanctify them to the Lord. David had the right idea when he poured out the water before the Lord.

What has been like water from the well of Bethlehem to you recently? Love, friendship, spiritual blessing? Then at the peril of your soul, you take it to satisfy yourself. If you do, you cannot pour out before the Lord. How am I to pour out spiritual gifts, or natural friendship or love? How can I give them to the Lord? In one way only—in the determination of my mind, and that takes about two seconds. If I hold spiritual blessings or friendships for myself they will corrupt me, no matter how beautiful they are. I have to pour them out before the Lord, give them to Him in my mind, though it looks as if I am wasting them; even as when David poured the water out on the sand, to be instantly sucked up.

There are certain acts of other people one could never accept if one did not know God, because it is not within human power to repay them, all we can do is to pour it out before the Lord. If I take such a line as—"Oh, I am so winsome they have to do this for me," I have turned it into poison, and it cannot be consecrated to God. But immediately I say—"This is too great and worthy a thing for me, it is not for a human being at all, I must pour it out before the Lord," then these things pour out in rivers of living water all around. Until we do pour these things out before the Lord they will always endanger those we love, because they turn to lust. We can be lustful in things that are not sordid and vile. Love has to get to its transfiguration point of being poured out before the Lord, otherwise it will get sordid. If you have got bitter and sour, you will probably find it is because God brought you a blessing and you clutched it for yourself; whereas if you had poured it out unto the Lord, you would have been the sweetest person out of heaven. If we are craving spiritual sponges, always taking these things to ourselves, we shall become a plague; other people will not get their horizon enlarged through us because we have never learned to pour out anything unto the Lord.

The Way of Salvation

... because He poured out His soul unto death ... (Isaiah 53:12 RV)

This is the greatest love of God. No man ever laid down his life for his enemies unless he was indwelt by God. By the original design of God human nature is so built that men will always answer to the heroic. John 15:13 has reference to the love of man; that sacrifice is the exhibition of the sublime height to which human nature can rise with nothing of the love of God in it. Is Jesus Christ the Saviour of the world to me, or am I so overtaken with delight and reverence at the sacrifice of men that I make the Atonement of no account? Then the pleasure of the Lord is not possible in me, it only prospers in the hands of the man who makes his soul an offering. We too often make it salvation by preaching instead of preaching salvation. We have to work on the accomplished Redemption of the world, and not for it; we are here to proclaim that God has delivered men from sin, not that a man by sacrifice can save his own soul. Our salvation comes to us so easily because it cost God so much.

The Waste of Sentiment

... and she brake the cruse, and poured it over His head. (Mark 14:3 RV)

It was an act no one else saw any occasion for, they said it was "a waste." It was not an extraordinary occasion, and yet Mary broke the box of ointment and spilt the whole thing. It was not a useful thing, but an act of extravagant devotion, and Jesus commended her and said wherever His gospel was preached, this also should be spoken of for a memorial of her.

God spilt the life of His Son that the world might be saved. Am I prepared to spill my life out for Him? Our Lord is carried beyond Himself with delight when He sees any of us doing what Mary did, extravagantly wasting our substance for Him; not set for this or that economy, but being abandoned to Him.

In the Bible there is always a oneness between the spiritual and the material. It takes the incarnation of the Holy Ghost in a man's body to make him what Jesus Christ wants him to be. Unless the blessings of God can deal with our bodies and make them the temples of the Holy Ghost, then the religion of Jesus Christ is in the clouds. If I cannot exhibit the sentiment of the Holy Ghost in the sordid actualities of life and in doing menial things from the highest motive, I am not learning to pour out unto the Lord.

"He that believeth on Me," out of him shall flow—not, he shall gain, but hundreds of others shall be continually refreshed. It is time now to break the life, to cease craving for satisfaction, and to spill the thing out. The Lord is asking for thousands of us to do it for Him.

SPIRITUAL DISCIPLESHIP

For whosoever would save his life shall lose it: and whosoever shall lose his life for My sake shall find it. (Matthew 16:25 RV)

"Spiritual" is used here in the sense of real, i.e., that which lies behind the actual and which we cannot get at by our senses. In the beginning we call the actual things real; but when we are born again we discern that reality and actuality are not one and the same thing, and we understand the distinction Paul makes when he says—"the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." The Redemption of our Lord Jesus Christ is the great abiding Reality; to be spiritual disciples means that we have been brought into experimental contact with Redemptive Reality by the power of the grace of God.

The Source of Spiritual Discipleship

For whosoever would save his life [soul] shall lose it . . .

Soul is my way of reasoning and looking at things, it is the expression of my personal spirit in my body. Here our Lord is saying—"If you are going to be My disciple, you must lose your soul"—am I prepared to lose my soul? When I am born from above (RV mg) and the Redemption has been made experimentally real in me by the Spirit of God, then I have to begin to reason about things as Jesus did, I have to form the mind of Christ, and it will mean a right-about face in every way. If I said I have always looked at things in this way and I always shall, then I will never become a spiritual disciple.

We are apt to confound the strong-minded man with the obstinate man. An obstinate man refuses to be reasoned with; his argument is—"I have said it and I will stick to it." Spiritually the strong-minded man is one who has learned to construct his reasoning on the basis of the Redemption, he faces every issue of life in the light of the Lord Jesus.

There is a difference between being saved and being a disciple. Some of us are saved, "yet so as through fire" (RV). We are grateful to God for saving us from sin, but we are of no use to Him in so far as our actual life is concerned. We are not spiritual disciples. Our Lord's last command was not—"Go and save men," but-"Go . . . and make disciples" (RV), we cannot make disciples of others unless we are disciples ourselves. When a man comes to Jesus it is not sin that is in the way, but self-realisation, pride, his claim to himself. "I must realise myself, I must be educated and trained, I must do those things that will help me to develop myself." Self-realisation is anti-Christian. All this is vigorous paganism, it is not Christianity. Jesus Christ's attitude is always that of anti-self-realisation. His purpose is not the development of man at all; His purpose is to make man exactly like Himself, and the characteristic of the Son of God is not self-realisation but self-expenditure. Spiritual selfishness must goam I prepared for it to go? "If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself" (RV), that is, "let him give up his right to himself to Me."

"Present your bodies a living sacrifice," says Paul. He does not say "present your all." "All" is an elusive word, because no one knows what his "all" is. Paul says—"Present your bodies. . . ." Do not ask God to take your body, but give your body to God. I beseech you—I passionately entreat you—says Paul, present your bodies a living sacrifice. That is spiritual sacrifice. God does not ask us to give up things for the sake of giving them up; He asks us to sacrifice them, to give back to Him the best He has given us in order that it may belong to Him and us for ever. Sacrifice is the source of spiritual discipleship.

The Supremacy of Spiritual Discipleship

Many people lose their lives, but not for Christ's sake. "For My sake"—that is the supreme surrender. God does not transform a man's life by magic, but through the surrender of the man to Himself. The thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians is the description of the way love works out in actual life. To most of us love is a curiously useless word. The love Paul refers to is the sovereign preference of my person for another person, and that other Person Jesus Christ. That sovereign preference works out in the deliberate identification of myself with God's interests in other people, and God is interested in some strange people; He is interested in the man whom I am inclined to despise.

As a spiritual disciple I have to lose my individuality for ever. Individuality is self-assertive and independent, it is all elbows. It is natural for a child to be strongly marked by individuality, but it is a despicable thing for a man or woman to be hide-bound by individual peculiarities. It means that the personality has never been transfigured, never been filled with the Holy Ghost, never come to the source of spiritual Reality. Our Lord can only be defined in terms of personality, never in terms of individuality. "I and My Father are one," and our Lord's conception of human personality is that it can be merged and made one with God without losing its identity. If we are going to be disciples we have to break the bands of individuality which cabin and confine, and launch out in abandon to Jesus Christ.

We cannot get at Reality by thinking or by emotion, but only by conscience, and the Spirit of God working through conscience brings a man straight to the Redemptive Reality of our Lord, then there follows a life of spiritual discipleship, pouring out for others for His sake. The saint must become like his Master, utterly unobtrusive. For "we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord; and ourselves as your servants for Jesus' sake" (RV). If you are serving men for their sakes you will soon have the heart knocked out of you; but if you are personally and passionately devoted to the Lord Jesus Christ, then you can spend yourselves to the last ebb because your motive is love to the Lord.

We never want Jesus Christ in the actual turmoil of life unless we have found Him in the Real, but when we have found Him there He brings into actual life a transfiguring touch. He makes the Real and the Actual one. Jesus Christ is the At-one-ment, and I can only get the Atonement made real in me by being born from above (RV mg) into the realm Jesus Christ came to lift me into. God grant we may be amongst those who are prepared to be spiritual disciples. As disciples we must give up spiritual selfishness; we must make the spiritual sacrifice of presenting our bodies to God, and we must live the superlative life of being identified with God's interests in other people.

SACRAMENTAL DISCIPLESHIP

1 Corinthians 1:17–18

Christ did not send me to baptize but to preach the gospel. And to preach it with no fine rhetoric, lest the Cross of Christ should lose its power! (1 Corinthians 1:17 MOFFATT)

The word "sacrament" is used in connection with the Lord's Supper and means the real Presence of God coming through the actual elements. The real Presence of God is brought to us also in the actual things of life by means of the sacramental element in Redemption. It is a trick of our minds to think that God and actual things are one and the same; God comes to us in actual things, but actual things are not God. "In every thing give thanks," says Paul, not—Give thanks for everything, but give thanks that in everything that transpires there abides the real Presence of God. God is more real than the actual things—"therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed." We think that our actual life is profound until something happens—a war or a bereavement, and we are flung clean abroad, then through the agony of the mystery of life we cry out to God and there comes the voice of Jesus—"Come unto Me."

The Sacrament of the Historic Cross

"Christ did not send me to baptize"—to put religious rites in the front—"but to preach the gospel" (MOF-FATT). The gospel is not so much good news to man as good news about God. "And to preach it with no fine rhetoric." It is one thing to thrill an audience with fine rhetoric, or by a magnetic personality, but the New Testament order of preaching is that of John the Baptist—"He must increase, but I must decrease." The one thing for Paul was Christ and Him crucified, not Christ risen and exalted, but Christ "crucified." Paul had only one passion, and that was the exposition and the emphasis and the re-emphasis of the Cross. The New Testament emphasises the death of Christ because the Cross is the Centre that reveals the very heart of God. The death Jesus died was not the death of a martyr, it was the revelation in actual history of the very nature of God. "But we preach Christ crucified, unto Jews a stumbling-block" (RV), a distress and a humiliation; "and unto Gentiles" (those who seek wisdom), "foolishness; but unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God" (RV).

It seems so remote from actual things to say that the preaching of the Cross conveys the Presence of God, but God has chosen to save in this way. "It was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of the preaching to save them that believe" (RV), because behind the preaching of the Gospel is the creative Redemption of God at work in the souls of men. That is the miracle of God. If you can tell how a corn of wheat when put into the ground will bring forth what it never was before, you can also tell how the Word of God put into a man's soul will bring forth what was not there before—a new life. The same God is the Author of both. How are men born of the Spirit? By the proclaiming of the historic Cross of Christ. "The wind bloweth where it listeth . . . so is every one that is born of the Spirit." The simple proclaiming of the gospel of God creates the need for the gospel. Nothing can satisfy the need but that which creates the need. The inner reality of Redemption is that it creates all the time. "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Myself" (RV). Once let Jesus be lifted up and the Spirit of God creates the need for Him.

Unless we are born from above (RV mg), the Cross of Christ means nothing to us; it does not matter whether Jesus lived or died; the New Testament is an exquisitely beautiful record of a life, but it conveys nothing. The words of Isaiah 53:2 are humiliatingly true of us all. When we see the Highest, He is to us as a root out of a dry ground, thoroughly disadvantaged. When the religious people of His day saw the Highest incarnate before them, they hated Him and crucified Him. It is only when a man gets to his wits' end and is stabbed wide awake that he realises for the first time the meaning of the Cross—"I thought that He was stricken, smitten by God and afflicted; now I see that He was wounded for my transgression."

"The Lamb that hath been slain from the foundation of the world" (RV). In the Cross God is revealed not as One reigning in calm disdain above all the squalors of earth, but as One Who suffers more keenly than the keenest sufferer—"a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." This rules out once and for all the idea that Jesus was a martyr. Jesus did not die the death of a martyr: He died the death not of a good man, but the death due to a bad man, with the vicarious pain of Almighty God at His heart. That pain is unfathomable to us, but we get an insight into it in the cry upon the Cross, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" The death of Jesus goes away down underneath the deepest, vilest sin that human nature ever committed. Every pious mood must be stripped off when we stand before the Cross. The Cross in actual history is the point where the real Presence of God enters human history; and the point where the real Presence of God enters human life is the moment of absolute surrender, not of religious sentiment. The first step to sacramental discipleship is the crowning of Jesus as Lord.

The Sacrament of the Scriptures

Ye search the Scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have eternal life; and these are they which bear witness of me. (John 5:39 RV)

The Scriptures do not give us life unless Jesus speaks them to us. Jesus Christ makes His words spirit and life to us if we will obey them. If we are not born again the Word of God is nothing to us. When men tear this Book of God to pieces it reveals how blind they are. To the saint this Book of God is a sacrament, it conveys the real Presence of God. God by His providence puts needs in our actual life which drive us to search the Scriptures, and as we search them, the sacrament of God's Presence comes to us through the words of His Book.

The Sacrament of the Saint

Lovest thou Me? . . . Feed My sheep.

A saint must measure his life by self-expenditure, that is, by what God pours through him. Just as the real Presence of God comes through the preaching of the crucified Christ, and through the words of the Bible, so it comes through His children. "Lovest thou Me? . . . Feed My sheep"—and Jesus gave Peter nothing to feed them with. The disciple has himself to be the very bread of God by the power of the Redemption at work in him. Just as our Lord was made broken bread and poured-out wine for our salvation, so He makes us broken bread in His hands. Thank God for all those who are sacramental saints; they have been through the furnace with God, and the Presence of God comes through their actual lives.

The secret of sacramental discipleship is to be so abandoned to the disposition of God in us that He can use us as broken bread and poured-out wine for His purpose in the world, even as He broke the life of His own Son to redeem us.

SERMON AT EGYPT GENERAL MISSION, APRIL 16, 1916

THE LIMIT OF DEDICATION

She hath done what she could. (Mark 14:8)

Mary Magdalene, the woman who was a sinner, and Mary of Bethany, the one who made this spontaneous dedication to Jesus, represent the three types of womanhood for whom Jesus Christ is sufficient—the tortured, the worst, and the best. Mary of Bethany stands as the noblest type of womanhood in our Lord's day. Her compeer is the rich young ruler, but he failed in relation to Jesus Christ exactly where Mary did not fail.

The Unconscious Spontaneity of Love

... as He sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster cruse of ointment of spikenard very costly; and she brake the cruse, and poured it over His head. (Mark 14:3 RV)

If human love is always discreet and calculating, never carried beyond itself, it is not of the true nature of love. The characteristic of love is that it is spontaneous, it bursts up in extraordinary ways; it is never premeditated. The reason Jesus called Mary's act a 'good work" was because it was wrought out of spontaneous love to Himself. It was neither useful nor her duty; it was an extravagant act for which no one else saw any occasion. "But Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on Me." The disciples were indignant—"Why was this waste of the ointment made?"—"If she had only sold the ointment and given us the money, we would have used it for the poor." Money is one of the touchstones in our Lord's teaching. Nowadays we are taken up with our ideas of economy and thrift, and never see that those ideas are not God's ideas. The very nature of God is extravagance. How many sunrises and sunsets does God make?

Gloriously wasteful, 0 my Lord, art Thou! Sunset faints after sunset into the night. . . .

How many flowers and birds, how many ineffable beauties all over the world, lavish desert blossoms, that only His eye sees? Mary's act was one of spontaneous extravagance because it sprang out of the heart of a child. When our Lord said—"Except ye . . . become as little children . . ." He was not setting up a little child as a standard, but as the exact expression of an implicit relationship to Himself.

The Unconscious Sympathy of Life

For ye have the poor always with you, and whensoever ye will ye can do them good: but Me ye have not always. She hath done what she could: she hath anointed My body aforehand for the burying. (Mark 14:7–8 RV)

Jesus is pointing out that the great note of our lives as His disciples is not sympathy with the poor, not an understanding of the needs of men, but an understanding of His point of view. "Watch with Me"; "Give Me to drink"; "Continue with Me." No one can understand Jesus Christ's point of view unless he has His Spirit, The need is never the call; the need is the opportunity. The call is defined in John 17:18— "As Thou didst send Me into the world, even so sent I them into the world." The first obedience of our Lord was not to the needs of men but to the will of His Father; and our first obedience is to Jesus Christ, not to the poor and the despised and afflicted. My sympathy with them is the proof that I have a loving sympathy greater than them all, viz., sympathy with my Lord. Mary of Bethany revealed in her act of extravagant devotion that the unconscious sympathy of her life was with Jesus Christ. "She hath done what she could"—to the absolute limit of what a woman can do. It was impossible to do more.

"She hath anointed My body aforehand for the burying" (RV). Mary did not know that she was anointing the body of Jesus for His burial. Her heart was bursting with love to Jesus, and she took this opportunity of giving it expression. Love is the sovereign preference of my person for another person, and if I am a disciple of Jesus, that sovereign preference is for Him. "O forgotten and neglected Jesus, mine eyes have looked on Thee." That means I am spoilt for everything saving as I can be used to glorify Him.

The Unconscious Service of Loyalty

The only thing Jesus ever commended was this act of Mary's, and He said: "Wheresoever the gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, that also which this woman hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her" (RV), because in the anointing our Lord saw an exact illustration of what He Himself was about to do. He put Mary's act alongside His own Cross. God shattered the life of His own Son to save the world; are we prepared to pour out our lives for Him? Our Lord is carried beyond Himself with joy when He sees any of us doing what Mary of Bethany did. The one thing He looks for in a disciple is abandon. Abandon to God is of more value than personal holiness. Personal holiness focuses our eyes on our own whiteness; when we are abandoned to God, He works through us all the time. When David's three mighty men brought him the water from the well of Bethlehem, we read that "he would not drink thereof, but poured it out unto the LORD." David saw in their devotion something worthy only to be poured out before God.

Have I ever produced in the heart of the Lord Jesus what Mary of Bethany produced? "She hath done what she could"—to the absolute limit. I have not done what I could until I have done the same.

[The Distinguished Service Order (D.S.O.) is a British military decoration awarded for special services in action.]

THE SPIRITUAL "D.S.O."

If any man serve Me, let him follow Me; and where I am, there shall also My servant be: if any man serve Me, him will the Father honour. (John 12:26 RV)

The Service of Passionate Devotion

If any man serve Me, let him follow Me . . .

Our idea of service is often the outcome of devotion to a principle, but Jesus is here dealing with the service that is devotion to Him. With us, Christian service is something we do; with Jesus Christ it is not what we do for Him, but what we are to Him that He calls service. Our Lord always puts the matter of discipleship on the basis of devotion not to a belief or a creed, but to Himself. There is no argument about it, and no compulsion, simply—"If you would be My disciple, you must be devoted to Me."

(a) The Source of Devotion

"... What must we do, that we may work the works of God? ... This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him ..." (John 6:28–29 RV). Where is the devotion to spring from? "Believe also in Me." Do I believe Jesus, not believe about Him, but believe Him? Peter, when he confessed that our Lord was the Son of God, was talking out of the spontaneous originality of his own heart. With a tremendous amazement he said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," and instantly Jesus says, "Blessed art thou," you did not guess it, it was an intuition from My Father, and on this rock (the rock of the revelation in personal life of Who I am) I will build My Church.

Have I realised Who Jesus is to me? We substitute credal belief for personal belief. The intuitive heart of a man is suddenly touched by the Spirit of God and he says, "Now I see Who Jesus is," and that is the source of devotion.

(b) The Secret of Disaster

"He that is a hireling . . . fleeth . . ." (John 10:12 RV). Am I out for my own? Am I utilising membership of the Christian Church to further my own ends? If a preacher uses his position to further his own ends, he is heading for disaster. There are many devoted to causes, but few devoted to Jesus Christ. If I am devoted to a particular cause only, when that cause fails I fail too. The secret of a disciple's life is devotion to Jesus Christ, and the very nature of the life is that it is unobtrusive; it falls into the ground and dies: but presently it springs up and alters the whole landscape (see John 12:24). The illustrations Jesus uses are always drawn from His Father's work—"Consider the lilies of the field—Behold the birds of the heaven" not things with tangible external results, but lilies and trees, things with nothing pretentious about them.

(c) The Spring of Direction

"Lovest thou Me? . . . Feed My sheep" (John 21:17). If you love Me, says Jesus, "Feed My sheep." "Don't make converts to your way of thinking, but look after My sheep, see that they are nourished in the knowledge of Me." Our Lord's first obedience was to the will of His Father, and He said, "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (RV). It sounds the right thing to say that Jesus Christ came here to help mankind: but His great desire was to do the will of His Father, and our Lord was misunderstood because He would not put the needs of men first. He said the first commandment is "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength."

Jesus Christ is a source of deep offence to the educated trained mind of to-day that does not want Him in any other way than as a Comrade. Many do not want to be devoted to Him, but only to the cause He started. If I am only devoted to the cause of humanity, I will be soon exhausted and come to the point where my love will falter, but if I love Jesus Christ I will serve humanity, though men and women treat me like a door-mat.

The Society of Personal Dedication and where I am, there shall also My servant be . . .

Anywhere the man who is devoted to Jesus Christ goes, Jesus Christ is there with him.

(a) Felicity of Faithfulness

"Well done, good and faithful servant; . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord" (Matthew 25:23). The joy of a thing lies in fulfilling the purpose of its creation. Jesus Christ's joy is that He fulfilled the design of His Father's will, and my joy is that I fulfil God's design in calling me, viz., to make me a follower of Him.

(b) Fulness of Following

"If a man love Me, he will keep My word: and My Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him" (John 14:23 ASV). Here is the description of the society of a man devoted to Jesus Christ in this actual life, whether in a camp or an office or the Bush. Imagine the sublime society of a man—he has God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost with him wherever he goes.

(c) Fruitfulness of Friendship

"I have called you friends" (John 15:15). The fruitfulness of friendship is described in verse 13, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." If I am a friend of Jesus Christ, I lay down my life for Him. That does not mean that I go through the big crisis of death; it means that I lay down my life deliberately as I would lay out a pound note. I have this to lay out and expend; I have a day before me, and I am going to lay it out for Jesus Christ; I have my duty to perform, but I am going to lay it out in devotion to Jesus Christ all through. It is difficult, and thank God it is difficult. Salvation is easy because it cost God so much, but the manifestation of it in my life is difficult. God does expect a man to be a man. God saves a man and endues him with His Holy Spirit, and says in effect, "Now it is up to you to prove it, work it out; be loyal to Me while the nature of things round about you would make you disloyal. I have called you friends, now stand loyal to your Friend." His honour is at stake in our bodily life.

The Seal of Perfect Discipline

... if any man serve Me, him will the Father honour.

If it were necessary for every man to lay down his life in a heroic way, as men have done in Gallipoli and in Flanders, what about the men and women who never get a chance of doing anything heroic? Everybody is not noble or generous or great; a great number of men are despicable beings. Is God going to put them on the scrap heap? "If you confess Me," Jesus says, as it were, "God Almighty will give you the D.S.O.—not if you are a good man, or have done wonderful things, but if you have served Me."

(a) The Drill in Purity

"These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth" (Revelation 14:4). Actually pure in their natural walk, they followed the Lamb in their actual lives, and were consciously redeemed by the blood of Christ. There is a difference between innocence and purity. Innocence is the characteristic of a child, purity is the characteristic of a man or woman who knows what the tendencies and temptations to go wrong are, and who has overcome them. Virtue is not in the man who has not been tempted, neither is purity. When a man is tempted and remains steadfastly unspotted, then he is virtuous.

Jesus Christ says in effect, "If you will serve Me, you will keep your chastity," that means there has to be a fight; you realise that all the power of God is behind you as you make the fight. You may be pure and unsullied for months, when all of a sudden there will be the insinuation of an idea, grip it on the threshold of your mind in a vice instantly, and do not allow it any more. If I am to serve Jesus Christ, I have to remember that my body is the temple of the Holy Ghost. Talk about it being a "soft" thing to be a follower of Jesus Christ! It is about the sternest and most heroic thing a man ever "struck" in his life to keep himself absolutely undefiled, one who by chastity maintains his integrity. It is a discipline, and thank God for the discipline.

(b) The Duty of Patience

"Because thou didst keep the word of My patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of trial, that hour which is to come upon the whole world" (Revelation 3:10 RV). Jesus says we are to keep the word of His patience. There are so many things in this life that it seems much better to be impatient about. The best illustration is that of an archer, he pulls the string further and further away from his bow with the arrow fixed, then, when it is adjusted, with his eye on the mark he lets fly. The Christian's life is like that. God is the archer; He takes the saint like a bow which He stretches, and we get to a certain point and say "I can't stand any more, I can't stand this test of patience any longer," but God goes on stretching. He is not aiming at our mark, but at His own, and the patience of the saints is that we hold on until He lets the arrow fly straight to His goal.

PAIN IN THE DAWN OF ETERNAL HOPE

2 Corinthians 4:16-18

For our light affliction, which is for the moment, worketh for us more and more exceedingly an eternal weight of glory. (2 Corinthians 4:17 RV)

The basis of human life is tragedy. It is difficult to realise this until one gets through the experiences that are on the surface of life, and we discover we are built with a bigger capacity for pain than for joy, that the undertone of all our life is sorrow, and the great expression and revelation of God in the world is the revelation of the Cross, not of joy. It is one of the things which makes the Bible seem so utterly unreal so long as we are healthy and full of life and spirits. Tragedy is something in which all the forces make for disaster. Paul in writing about human life always wrote from the Bible standpoint, viz., that the basis of things is not reasonable but tragic. Sin has made a gap between God and the human race, and consequently when we try to explain our lives on the line of logic or reason, we find things don't work out that way. Then when we go through disasters such as are being produced by this war, we are more prepared to look at the Bible and its point of view. Jesus Christ stands outside the majority of our lives in the usual run because He deals with the fundamentals; we do not, we deal with the external actual, and it is only when the external actuals are ploughed into by sorrow or bereavement that we begin to find there is only one Reality—our Lord Jesus Christ, and only one Book that brings light.

Our Life in Tragedy

But though our outward man is decaying . . . (RV)

"But though our outward man is decaying"—not may decay, but our outward man is built that way. That in itself is a tragedy; a beautiful physical life, a beautiful child's life, is all built at present on decay. It makes us rebel and produces almost spite against the Creator, but the Bible reveals that the reason for it all is the hiatus between God and man caused by sin.

(a) Pain of Sensibility

"I will greatly multiply thy sorrow" (Genesis 3:16). We are introduced into this order of things by pain to someone else, not necessarily pain to ourselves but pain to our mothers. The basis of the bearing into this life of sensibility is pain. This is a fundamental revelation in God's Book.

(b) Pain of Salvation

"Because Christ also suffered for sins once, the righteous for the unrighteous, that He might bring us to God: being put to death in the flesh, but quickened in the spirit" (1 Peter 3:18 RV). The phrase "born from above" (RV mg) as our Lord used it does not mean being saved from hell or from sin, but that I am born into the reality in which He lives. We are born again by pain, not necessarily pain to ourselves any more than our natural birth means pain to us. We are born into the realm where our Lord lives by pain to God, and the pain of God is exhibited on Calvary.

(c) Pain of Sanctification

"I have been crucified with Christ; yet I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me: and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, Who loved me, and gave Himself up for me" (Galatians 2:20 RV). We are dealing with fundamental pain, the basis of which is tragedy—all the forces making for disaster. "I have been crucified with Christ"—crucifixion is a painful thing. It means, not in the theological sense, but in the spiritual sense, being made one with Jesus Christ, and that costs me pain. I have deliberately to be willing to give up my right to myself, that has now been put to death by mine own determination, and "that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God," literally, the faith that was in Jesus Christ is now in me.

These are the three big fundamental things in our human life, and the basis of each is pain. They are not things to preach about, but rather matters for our consideration. In the light of this terrible tragedy of war where pain is sweeping the whole universe until there is scarcely a home that has not been touched by it, there is again a chance to witness the incoming of the quiet power of our Lord Jesus Christ. I do not believe we shall see the incoming power of denominationalism or "Churchianity" or creed; but I do believe that the Spirit of God is pushing His way into people's lives on the only line of emancipation there is, viz., through the Cross, and we are realising that the revelation given to us of God is of a God Who suffers. We see more into the real tragedy of life when we have been hit hard by bereavement or unrequited love, or by some great elemental pain that has shocked the externals. The human mind instantly says, Why should these things be? They are unreasonable. Emphatically so, we may rage as we choose, but we come to the conclusion that the Bible is right—the basis of things is tragic, not mathematical. As soon as we recognise life is based on tragedy, we won't be too staggered when tragedy emerges, but will learn how to turn to God.

Our Light in Tragedy

For our light affliction, which is for the moment, worketh for us more and more exceedingly an eternal weight of glory. (RV)

Where are we to get our light in all this appalling tragedy? It is obvious nonsense to say that suffering makes saints, it makes some people devils. Hebrews 12:11 is referring to the suffering that comes to a person who is being exercised by the Spirit of God. We all know people who have been made much meaner and more irritable and more intolerable to live with by suffering: it is not right to say that all suffering perfects. It only perfects one type of person—the one who accepts the call of God in Christ Jesus.

(a) Undiscouraged by Decay

"Wherefore we faint not; but though our outward man is decaying, yet our inward man is renewed day by day" (RV). There is nothing, naturally speaking, that makes us lose heart quicker than decay—the decay of bodily beauty, of natural life, of friendship, of associations, all these things make a man lose heart; but Paul says when we are trusting in Jesus Christ these things do not find us discouraged, light comes through them. "For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and ourselves as your servants for Jesus' sake" (RV). That is the rock on which Paul stands, and that is where he gets his light. It does not matter what happens, there may be disasters or casualties, or wars or bereavements and heartbreaks, but the marvellous thing in the man who is rightly related to Jesus Christ is that he is not discouraged. That is supernatural, no human being can stand these shocks and not be discouraged unless he is upheld by the supernatural grace of God. The counterfeit of true spirituality is that produced by creeds. When one has been bereaved the most trying person is the one with a creed who can come with didactic counsel with regard to suffering; but turn to a book like the Book of Job where nothing is taught at all, but wonderful expression is given to the real suffering of life, and the mere reading of it brings consolation to a breaking heart. The standards of personal relationship to Jesus Christ leave a man undiscouraged by decay. The books and the men who help us most are not those who teach us, but those who can express for us what we feel inarticulate about.

(b) Undeceived by Disillusionment

There are times in sorrow when we are disillusionised, our eyes are opened, and we see people in their true relationships, and often we get completely disheartened and feel we won't trust anyone any more. But when we are trusting to our Lord Jesus Christ, this kind of light affliction leaves us with a true discernment, we are not deceived, we see men and women in their right relationship, and light comes all through. Whatever happens, our relationship to Jesus Christ works through it. We have to learn to take up pain and weave it into the fabric of our lives.

(c) Undistracted by Discernment

"While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." The things we see are actual, but not eternal, and the curious thing about actual things is that we cannot see the real, eternal things without them. The fanatic won't have actual things at all, he pretends he can see God and God's purposes apart from actual present circumstances. That is not so, we only see by means of the actual, and when we are going through the experience of the actual we come to tragedy and sorrow and difficulty, but if we are trusting in God we are undistracted by it.

Our Love in Tragedy

While we look . . . at the things which are not seen.

That is the description of love.

(a) The Blindness of Insight

Love is not blind. Love has insight, it sees the things that are not seen. We are told that when we are in love with a person we do not see his defects: the truth is that we see what others do not see, we see him in the ideal, in the real relationship. The actual things in life are sordid and decaying and wrong and twisted, but we do not look at them, we look at the eternal things beyond, and the consequence is that in the actual tribulations and circumstances of the moment, pain works for us an eternal hope. We have all had the experience that it is only in the days of affliction that our true interests are furthered.

(b) The Blundering of Intellect

The intellect only looks for things that are seen and actual, draws its inferences from these and becomes pessimistic and loses heart.

(c) The Benediction of Inspiration

The Benediction of Inspiration—is that we know that "the things which are not seen are eternal." Love, joy, peace, these things are not seen, yet they are eternal, and God's nature is made up of these things. The Lamb breaks the seals—the eternal and abiding gentleness of God undoes everything.

"Our light affliction . . . "—To escape affliction is a cowardly thing to do; to sink under it is natural; to get at God through it is a spiritual thing. Most of us have tried the first, a good many of us have known the second, and the Spirit of God in us knows the third, getting through into the weight of glory. That means we become people of substance spiritually; we can be relied on when others are in pain or sorrow, and after this war is done there will be a call for every one of us to be of use for God in that direction, not to be didactic and set on our own views, but simply to be ourselves rightly related to our Lord Jesus Christ so that through us the presence of God may come to others. Rational common-sense talk does not deal with eternal things, and is an insult when we are dealing with the things that are not seen. We have to learn to live in the reality of the eternal things.

Y.M.C.A. HUT, NOVEMBER 5, 1916

Galatians 2:20

Redemption is the basis of things, it is God's "bit"; we have to live our actual life on that basis. We are apt to get a conception of the Redemption that enables us to "hang in" to Jesus mentally and do nothing else. This seems the natural outcome of the way Redemption has too often been presented. God expects us to maintain in our individual lives the honour of a saint. It is up to us to live the life of a saint in order to show our gratitude to God for His amazing salvation, a salvation which cost us nothing but which cost God everything.

In this passage Paul describes how this point of honour was reached in his life—"I have been crucified with Christ . . . and that life which I now live in the flesh . . ." (RV). The word "now" is very annoying, if only Paul had said "hereafter"—"this is the kind of life I am going to live after I am dead and in heaven; down here I am compassed about with infirmities and am a miserable sinner." But he did not, he said "now," "that life which I now live in the flesh . . ." i.e., the life men could see, ". . . I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God."

The Moral Death of Self-Will

I have been crucified with Christ . . . (RV)

Paul is referring to a deliberate act on his own part, he has given over to death his self-will. Will is, me, active, not one bit of me but the whole of me. Self-will is best described as the whole of myself active around my own point of view, and Paul is speaking of moral death to that,—he says, "I have deliberately identified myself with the death of Jesus, and I no longer work around my own point of view." The reference to the death of Christ is not merely to our Lord's sacrificial death with which we have nothing to do—the death of Jesus is the death of God on the plane of human history for one purpose, the justification of the holiness of God and the manifestation of the true nature of God—Paul is stating as a fact that he has morally identified himself with that death. For us it means that we deliberately and actually identify ourselves with the death of Jesus, and accept God's verdict on the things which He condemns in that death; in other words, we deliberately give up our right to ourselves to God. Whenever our Lord speaks about discipleship, it is this point He emphasises—"If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself," i.e., let him give up his right to himself. No one can bring us to this denial, even God Himself cannot, we must come there of our own accord, and the length of time it takes to do so depends entirely on whether we want to come or not. If we give way to the play of our emotions and do not intend deliberately to come to the point of identification, we will get off on to spiritual sentimentality and end nowhere.

(a) Disentangling the Inner Life

"Simon Peter answered Him, Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." John 6 contains a description of the sifting out of the disciples from the crowd round about, until there were just the twelve left, and to them Jesus says—"Would ye also go away?" Some who had been following Jesus had not gone too far to turn back, and "they went back, and walked no more with Him." But Peter has gone too far to turn back and he says, "Lord, to whom shall we go?" There is a stage like that in our spiritual experience, we do not see the Guide ahead of us, we do not feel the joy of the Lord, there is no exhilaration, yet we have gone too far to go back, we are up against it now. It might be illustrated in the spiritual life by Tennyson's phrase, "a white funeral."20 When we go through the moral death to self-will we find we have committed ourselves, there are many things that must go to the "white funeral." At the first we have the idea that everything apart from Christ is bad; but there is much in our former life that is fascinating, any amount of paganism that is clear and vigorous, virtues that are good morally. But we have to discover they are not stamped with the right lineage and superscription, and if we are going to live the life of a saint we must go to the moral death of those things, make a termination of them, turn these good natural things into the spiritual.

(b) Disciplining the Intuitive Light

"While ye have the light, believe on the light, that ye may become sons of light" (John 12:36 RV). Intuition in the nature world means that we see or discern at sight, there is no reasoning in connection with it, we see at once. When the Spirit of God is in us He gives us intuitive discernment, we know exactly what He wants; then the point is, are we going through identification with our Lord in order that that intuitive light may become the discipline of our lives? It is this practical aspect that has been ignored. We have not sufficiently emphasised the fact that we have to live as saints, and that in our lives the honour at stake is not our personal honour, but the honour of Jesus Christ.

When we are beginning to be spiritual by means of the reception of the Holy Spirit, we get moments of intuitive light. We are not always dull, there are moments when we are brilliant, and Jesus says, "While ye have the light, believe on the light" (RV). We are apt to believe what we saw in the dark, and consequently we believe wrongly. We have to believe what we saw when we were in the light, "hang in" to it, discipline the whole of our lives up to it. If the Holy Spirit is working in our hearts, all this becomes implicitly clear to us. The Holy Spirit is honest, and we know intuitively whether we have or have not been identified with the death of Jesus, whether we have or have not given over our self-will to the holy will of God.

(c) Discovering the Inspired Loyalty (John 21:15–18)

"Lovest thou Me? . . . Feed My sheep . . . " (John 21:17). When we do decide to go to the death of self-will, we discover that the inspired loyalty of our lives is devotion to Jesus. "Lovest thou Me?" Then-"Feed My sheep." Jesus did not say—"Go out and spread propaganda," but "Feed My sheep." They are not our sheep, but His. We are apt to take lovalty to convictions to be the same as loyalty to Christ. Convictions mean a great deal in our mental make-up, but there are stages when conscience and Christ are antagonistic. Paul said, "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth" (Acts 26:9). Inspired loyalty is not loyalty to my attitude to the truth, but loyalty to The Truth—Jesus Christ. Conscience simply means that power in me that affiliates itself with the highest I know; if I do not know Jesus, then my conscience will not be loyal to God as revealed in Him. It is possible for conscience and Christ to go together, but it is not necessarily so. We see saints hard and metallic because they have become loyal to a phase of truth, instead of remembering that Jesus does not send His disciples out to advocate certain phases of truth, but to feed His sheep and tend His lambs. The inspired loyalty is to Jesus Himself.

John 21:18 is the symbol of the moral death of self-will. "When thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself, and walkedest whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, . . . another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not." When we are young in the spiritual life we do practically exactly what we want to do, then there comes a time when we have to face this question of moral death to self-will. Am I determined to go through the discipline of identification with my Lord's point of view and no longer make my own point of view the centre of my life? If I am going to maintain the honour of a saint, I have deliberately to go to the death of my self-will.

yet I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me ... (RV)

(a) The Blood of Christ

"But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus His ^{20. &}quot;white funeral of the single life": phrase from Tennyson's poem "To H.R.H. Princess Beatrice"; to Chambers, a white funeral meant a passage from one stage of life to another; leaving the past behind and moving into the future; he often used it to mean death to self and a complete surrender to God.

Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7 RV). When we speak of the blood of Jesus Christ cleansing us from all sin, we do not mean the physical blood shed on Calvary, but the whole life of the Son of God which was poured out to redeem the world. All the perfections of the essential nature of God were in that blood, and all the holiest attainments of mankind as well. It was the life of the perfection of Deity that was poured out on Calvary, ". . . the church of God, which He purchased with His own blood" (Acts 20:28 RV). We are apt to look upon the blood of Jesus Christ as a magic-working power instead of its being the very life of the Son of God poured forth for men. The whole meaning of our being identified with the death of Jesus is that His blood may flow through our mortal bodies. Identification with the death of Jesus Christ means identification with Him to the death of everything that never was in Him, and it is the blood of Christ, in the sense of the whole personal life of the Son of God, that comes into us and "cleanseth us from all sin."

(b) The Blood of Personality

"That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, becoming conformed unto His death" (Philippians 3:10 RV). Paul's whole personality was passionately devoted to Jesus—"that I may know Him." As soon as that note dominates a personality everything is simplified. It is impossible for the natural man once born, to have a single motive. We know when the love of God has been shed abroad in our hearts because of this miracle of a single motive. The moral discipline of spiritual will is that I rerelate myself all through according to this motive. It is no longer my claim to my right to myself that rules my personal life—I am not dead, but the old disposition of my right to myself has gone, it is Jesus Christ's right to me that rules me now, "and that life which I now live in the flesh" I live from that centre. The attitude of a saint is that he is related to God through Jesus Christ, consequently the spring of his life is other than the world sees.

(c) The Blood of Prayer

"If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you" (John 15:7). "... and whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do" (John 14:13). "Ask whatsoever ye will," i.e. not what you like, but ask that which your personal life is in. There is very little that our personal life is in when we pray, we spell out platitudes before God and call it prayer, but it is not prayer at all. What is my personal life really in when I come before God? Jesus has pledged His honour that everything I ask with the blood of my life in, I shall have. No false emotion is necessary, we have not to conjure up petitions, they well up. The "greater works" are done by prayer because prayer is the exercise of the essential character of the life of God in us. Prayer is not meant to develop us naturally, it is meant to give the life of the Son of God in us a chance to develop that the natural order may be transfigured into the spiritual.

Moral Devotion to the Sovereign Will

... and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, Who loved me, and gave Himself up for me. (RV)

The Gospel of Jesus always forces an issue of will. Do I accept God's verdict on sin in the death of Christ, viz., death? Do I want to be so identified with the death of Jesus that I am spoiled for everything saving Himself? The great privilege of discipleship is that I can sign on under His Cross—and that means death to sin.

(a) Sovereign Preference

"For to me to live is Christ . . ." (Philippians 1:21). Love is literally the sovereign preference of my person for another person, and Jesus says that spiritually that preference must be for Himself. When Paul said, "For me to live is Christ," he did not mean that he did not live for anything else; but that the dominant note, the great consuming passion underneath everything, was his love for Jesus Christ-it explained everything he did. We are not always conscious of the sovereign preference, but a crisis will reveal it. So many make the blunder of mistaking the ecstasy of the first introduction into the Kingdom of God for the purpose of God in getting them there; the purpose of God for us is that we realise what the death of Christ meant for us. When we tell God that we want at all costs to be identified with the death of Jesus Christ, at that instant a supernatural identification with His death takes place, and we know with a knowledge that passes knowledge that our "old man" is crucified with Christ, and we prove it for ever after by the amazing ease with which the supernatural life of God in us enables us to do His will. That is why the bed-rock of Christianity is personal, passionate devotion to the Lord Jesus.

(b) Sacred Presence

"And lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world" (Matthew 28:20). On the threshold of every new experience of life we are conscious of it, and this is true in regard to our life with God. When we are born from above (RV mg) we are conscious of God until we get into the life of God, then we are no longer conscious of Him because our life is "hid with Christ in God." "I don't feel God's presence," you say; how can you when you are in God and God is in you? By asking God to give you "feelings" you are pressing back to the entrance into life again.

The moral honour of a saint is to recognise that "Christ touches us more deeply than our pain or our guilt." It is a question of the inner life between myself and God. If I am set on my own holiness, I become a traitor to Jesus. The note of the Christian life is abandonment to Jesus Christ. That life is not a hole-and-corner business whereby I look after my own speckless whiteness, afraid to do this and that, afraid to go anywhere in case I get soiled. The whole life is summed up in a passionate absorbing devotion to Jesus and the realisation of His presence.

(c) The Sublime Passion

"For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified" (1 Corinthians 2:2). The word "passion" has come down in the world; with us it usually means something from which human nature suffers. Passion is really the transfiguration of human plod and perseverance and patience; and when we use the word "passion" in connection with our Lord, we refer to the whole climax of His personality flashing out in an extraordinary manner, exhibiting His patience and His power and the whole personality of His life. Paul's supreme passion was for Jesus Christ. When once the Holy Spirit has come in, the thought of sacrifice never occurs to a saint because sacrifice is the love passion of the Holy Ghost. Christianity is not devotion to a cause or to a set of principles, but devotion to a Person, and the great watchword of a Christian is not a passion for souls, but a passion for Christ.

YEARNING TO RECOVER GOD

Genesis 28:10-22

Jacob was a man who could dream and wait, and that is the essential nature of a true religious life. We are not all excellent supermen, walking the earth with unsullied tread; a good many of us are "Jacobs," as mean and subtle as can be; yet Jacob is the man who had the vision, and he is taken as the type of the ancient people of God. Jacob was the man to whom God appeared, and whom God altered. "Jacob I loved" (RV). Esau is the home of all the natural vices and virtues. Perfectly contented with being once born, he does not need God, he is happy and healthy and a delight to meet; Jacob was the opposite. God loves the man who needs Him.

The Disposition of Self-Assertion

And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go . . . then shall the LORD be my God, . . . and of all that Thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto Thee. (Genesis 28:20–22)

Our true character comes out in the way we pray. This is an assertive natural prayer, there is nothing noble or fine about it. All Jacob's prayers are selfish, self-assertive and self-centred, he cares for little else outside himself. It is this kind of thing that puts Jacob where we live. A carnal will cannot rule a corrupt heart. That is the first big lesson in spiritual life. The word "carnal" is used by St. Paul of a religious man, never of an irreligious one. The carnal mind is the result of the Spirit of God being in a man but who has not quite yielded to Him—"For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; for these are contrary the one to the other; that ye may not do the things that ye would" (Galatians 5:17 RV). It is "enmity against God." Instead of the Spirit of God bringing you peace and joy and delight, as the shallow evangelist too often puts it, His incoming has brought disturbance. In some ways you were better off before than you are now; the incoming of the Spirit of God has brought another standard and outlook, it upsets a man. "Think not that I came to send peace on the earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matthew 10:34 RV). The natural pagan, a man whose word is as good as his bond, a moral and upright man, is more delightful to meet than the Christian who has enough of the Spirit of God to spoil his sin but not enough to deliver him from it.

Self-assertion is an indication that there is a struggle going on and we have to decide who is going to rule. We rarely take the standard of the Christian life laid down in the New Testament, viz., Jesus Christ, we make excuses. If I am yearning to recover God I have to come to the place where this disposition of self-assertion is located in me. One of the reasons we lose fellowship with God is that we will explain and vindicate ourselves; we will not let God hunt through us and chase out the interests of self-will and self-assertion. We are spiritual "Jacobs," men wrestling with God in prayer; to wrestle before God is another matter. Jacob tried to break the neck of God's answer to his prayer, and he hirpled²¹ all the rest of his life because of the struggle. "If God will give me what I want, I will do this thing." We cannot go on spiritually if we are self-assertive.

The Dreaming of Supreme Apprehension

And he dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven: and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it. (Genesis 28:12 RV)

If the vision had come to a man like Joseph or Daniel, fine unsullied men of God, we should not have been surprised, but the vision came to a mean²² man. The dream was a pre-Incarnation vision of God, symbolising that communication between God and man is open, there is no break now. (John 1:51 RV, "And He saith unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto you, ye shall see the heaven opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man.") The only Being in Whom that ever took place was Jesus Christ, and He claims that He can put us where we can have the vision fulfilled in our own lives. Never say that God intends man to have a domain of dreaming, having mighty visions of God, and living an actual life that is dead to God at the same time. Jesus Christ claims that He can put into us the thing that connects the two. It is a great thing to be able to dream; it would be awful never to be touched by anything higher than the sordid. When we feel our deadness the consolation is that this vision came to Jacob. God transformed Jacob into "Israel," indicating one who strives with God. When a man is born again of the Spirit of God he has the nature of Jesus Christ imparted to him. If we are yearning to recover God, what we need is to get to the point of deciding against the self-assertiveness of our own hearts, and letting God teach us how to pay the price of our dreams.

The Devotion of Spiritual Aspiration (Genesis 28:19–22)

And he called the name of that place Beth-el. (v. 19)

Jacob could dream and wait; the biggest test is to wait. The difference between lust and love comes just here. Lust is-I must have it at once. Love can wait. Lust makes me impulsively impatient, I want to take short cuts, and do things right off. Love can wait endlessly. If I have ever seen God and been touched by Him and the Spirit of God has entered into me, I am willing to wait for Him; I wait in the certainty that He will come. The difference between a spiritual man and a man who is not spiritual is just in this power to wait. The best illustration of waiting upon God is that of a child at his mother's breast. We draw our nourishment from no one but God. The test of the strength of spiritual aspiration is-will I wait for God like that? Do I believe Jesus Christ can turn me into His disciple if I let Him have His way? Then I will wait for Him, and "hang in" until He does it.

In this way we may become a sacrament of the love of God. "Sacrament" means the real Presence of God coming through the common elements. A great point in the sacramental teaching of the New Testament is that God brings His real Presence through the common elements of friendship, and air, and sea, and sky. Very few of us see it. It is only when we develop in spiritual devotion to Jesus Christ that we begin to detect Him in our friendships, in our ordinary eating and drinking. The ecclesiastical doctrine of the sacraments with too many of us confines it to a particular thing, and we do not scent that it is a symbol of all life that is "hid with Christ in God." Jesus Christ teaches that He can come to us through anything, and the great sign of a Christian man is that he finds God in ordinary ways and days, and partakes of the sacrament of His Presence here

SPIRITUAL INEFFICIENCY

If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them. John 13:17 (RV)

That is the big test in spiritual life. Most of us are spiritually inefficient because we cannot do certain things and remain spiritual. We can be spiritual in prayer meetings, in congenial spiritual society, in what is known as Christian work, but we cannot be spiritual in drudgery. We are all capable of being spiritual sluggards; if we live a sequestered life and continually don't do what we ought to do, we can develop a spiritual life, but in actual things we are easily knocked out. We are trying to develop a life that is sanctified and holy but it is spiritually inefficient—it cannot wash feet, it cannot do secular things without being tainted. Spiritual means real, and the only type of spiritual life is the life of our Lord Himself; there was no sacred and secular in His life, it was all real. Jesus Christ did secular things and was God Incarnate in doing them. "Then He poureth water into the bason, and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith He was girded." If Christianity means anything, it means that He can produce that kind of life in us.

We may know all this, but, says Jesus, "you are only happy if you really do it." Very few of us are blessed; we lose the blessing immediately we have to wash feet, and all that that symbolises. It takes God Incarnate to do ordinary drudgery and maintain blessedness. The great marvel of the Incarnation is just here.

Expression and Experience (Matthew 7:21-22)

It is not sufficient to have an experience. If all I can do is to preach and recount the experiences God has given me, it is dangerously insufficient. Unless my life is the exact expression of the life of Jesus Christ, I am an abortion, a bastard. Experience must be worked out into expression; the expression is a strong family likeness to Jesus, and its mark is found in the secular life, not in the sequestered life. Our Lord Himself is the one Standard, and to the people of His day He seemed unutterably secular.

Jesus Christ is infinitely bigger than any of my experiences, but if in my experiences I am coming to know Him better, then the expression will come out in the life, and its sign is the fruit of the Spirit— "love, joy, peace . . ." The fruit of the Spirit is the exact expression of the disposition of Jesus. We cannot pretend to have the fruit of the Spirit if we have not; we cannot be hypocritical over it. Expression is always unconscious. "His name shall be in their foreheads"—where everyone can see it saving the man himself. We test men spiritually by the fact that they preach the gospel, that they cast out devils, that they have an experience of these things. There are many who have these experiences, and yet Jesus said He will say of such—"I never knew you: depart from Me, ye that work iniquity." The man who is "of Me," says Jesus, is the man who is an exact expression of "your Father which is in heaven" (Matthew 5:45).

Energy and Enchantment (Acts 1:6-8)

But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be My witnesses. . . . (v. 8 RV)

It is quite possible to be enchanted with Jesus Christ and with His truth and yet never to be changed by it. The disciples are enchanted; their Lord is risen from the dead and He is telling them wonderful things about His Kingdom; they are enthralled, enamoured, then Jesus suddenly brings them down to earth by saying—"It is not for you to know times or seasons. . . . But ye shall receive power . . . , and ye shall be My witnesses" (RV). Literally, "the Holy Ghost coming upon you will make you witnesses unto Me, not witnesses of what I can do, not recorders of what you have experienced, but witnesses who are a satisfaction to Me." The baptism of the Holy Ghost is usually illustrated by the fact that "there were added unto them in that day about three thousand souls" (RV). That was a manifestation of the power of God, but it was when the apostles were persecuted and scattered, that the real energy of the Holy Ghost showed itself. Men "took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus." A witness is not one who is entranced by Jesus, by the revelation He gives, by what He has done; but one who has received the energy Jesus Himself had, and is become a witness that pleases Him, wherever he is placed, whatever he is doing, whether he is known or unknown. The energy in him is the very energy of the Holy Ghost, and the expression of it in life makes a witness that satisfies Jesus Christ.

There is a real peril in being enchanted but unchanged. I may be enchanted by the truth Jesus presents, but when it comes to my life being marked in all its secular details with the disposition of the Holy Spirit, then I am out of it; I prove spiritually inefficient, of no worth at all to Jesus Christ. Experiences are good, enchantment is good, but it all makes for spiritual inefficiency unless the experience is turned into the expression of a strong family likeness to Jesus, and the enchantment is transformed into the energy of the Holy Spirit.

Ye are our epistle, written in our hearts, known and read of all men. (v. 2)

An "epistle of Christ" means a re-incarnation of Jesus. Thank God for experiences, for the power to be enchanted, but this is the thing that tells—"Christ in you." I may be able to expound the Word of God, I may be an expert in a great many things, but unless my experience shows in expression a strong family likeness to Jesus, it is making me spiritually inefficient; I may be enchanted with the truth, but unless my enchantment is transformed into the energy which bears the mark of the disposition of Jesus, it is making for spiritual inefficiency. I may be expert in the knowledge of Scripture and expert in Christian work, but if all this is not turning me into an epistle in which men can read "Jesus," it is making for spiritual inefficiency. Is the expression in my life more and more the expression of the indwelling Holy Ghost? Is my energy the energy that comes direct from my Risen Lord? Is my life an epistle that spells only one thing—God? Is the dominating interest in my life God? Have I any other dominating interest? If I have, then none of my energy or expert knowledge is telling in the tiniest degree for Jesus.

The spiritual life can never be lived in religious meetings, it can only be lived on sordid earth, where Jesus lived, amongst the things that make human life what it is. "If I then, the Lord and the Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet" (RV). That is the only way we can justify what we say we have experienced of the grace of God. Our visions of God, our enchantment of His power, our expert knowledge of Him, will all amount to nothing unless it is made manifest in our actual life.

Y.M.C.A. HUT, MARCH 18, 1917

WITH GOD AT THE FRONT

Behold, we go up to Jerusalem. Luke 18:31

Jerusalem stands in the life of our Lord for the place where He reached the full climax of God's will. That will was the one dominating interest all through His life, and the things He met on the way, joy or sorrow, success or failure, never deterred Him from His purpose, He steadfastly went up to Jerusalem. The same thing is true of us, there is one definite aim in every Christian life, and that aim is not ours, it is God's. In our natural life our ambitions are our own. In the Christian life we have no aim of our own, and God's aim looks like missing the mark because we are too short-sighted to see what He is aiming at. The great thing to remember is that we go up to Jerusalem to fulfil God's purpose, not our own.

The Big Compelling of God

And He took unto Him the twelve . . .

One needs to dwell on this aspect of the big compelling of God. There is so much talk about our decision for Christ, our determination to be Christians, our decisions for this and for that. When we come to the New Testament we find that the other aspect, God's choosing of us, is the one that is brought out the oftenest. "Ye did not choose me, but I chose you ..." (John 15:16 RV). We are not taken up into conscious agreement with God's purpose, we are taken up into His purpose without any consciousness on our part at all; we have no conception of what God is aiming at, and it gets more and more vague as we go on. At the beginning of our Christian life we have our own particular notions as to what God's purpose is—we are meant to go here, or there; or, God has called us to do this or that piece of work. We go and do the thing and still we find the big compelling of God remains. The majority of the work we do is so much scaffolding to further the purpose of the big compelling of God. "He took unto Him the twelve." He takes us all the time; there is more than we have got at, something we have not seen.

As we go on in the Christian life it gets simpler, for the very reason that we get less inclined to say, "Now, why did God allow this and that?" When the Holy Spirit of God enters into a man, it is the same Spirit that was in Jesus Christ. "God so loved the world . . ." and the Holy Spirit implants the same kind of love in our hearts. The thing that compels us to take the line we do is never discernible to ourselves, it is symbolised spiritually by this compelling. "And He took unto Him the twelve, and said unto them, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem." How perplexing it must have sounded to them!

The main thing about Christianity is not the work we do, but the relationship we maintain. The only things God asks us to look after are the atmosphere of our life and our relationships, these are the only things that preserve us from priggishness, from impertinence and from worry, and it is these things that are assailed all through.

Immediately I complain and say, "why does God allow this?" I am not only useless but dangerous, I am taken up with compelling God. It is rarely the big compellings of God that get hold of us in our prayers, instead we tell God what He should do, we tell Him that men are being lost and that He ought to save them. This is a terrific charge against God, it means that He must be asleep. When God gets me to realise that I am being taken up into His enterprises, then I get rest of soul, I am free for my twenty-four hours. Whenever I have an important fuss on, I have no room for God; I am not being taken by God, I have an aim and purpose of my own. In laying down His conditions for discipleship in Luke 14:26-33, our Lord implies—"the only men I will use in My enterprises, are those of whom I have taken charge." The illustration is that of a soldier who has forsaken all to fight. I am not out for my own end and purpose, the great campaign is God's, not mine. What man gives his life for his King and Country only? Not one man. That is a very shallow watchword. Every man who has given his life has given it for something infinitely bigger, there is something entirely other and different behind. We may try to serve our own ends, but underneath is the compelling of another purpose, and it is to be hoped that the Empire to which we belong is seeing the bigger purpose.

How can I know my way when it is God Who is planning it out for me? How can I understand the Architect's plan? To have a purpose of my own will destroy the simplicity and the gaiety of a child of God, and the leisureliness which enables me to help other people. When a man is taken up into the big compellings of God, God is responsible. Amidst all the terrors of war there is one remarkable thing, and that is, apart from grousings, the spirit of freedom and gaiety in the very bondage of it. The man who joins up has to have his individuality trampled on so that his personality might be merged into the personality of his regiment, he ceases to be of any account at all as an individual, responsibility is not his any longer.

The Brave Comradeship of God

Behold, we go up to Jerusalem . . .

The bravery of God in trusting us! It is a tremendously risky thing to do, it looks as if all the odds were against Him. The majority of us don't bother much about Him, and yet He deliberately stakes all He has on us, He stands by and lets the world, the flesh and the devil do their worst, confident we will come out all right. All our Lord succeeded in doing during His life on earth was to gather together a group of fishermen—the whole Church of God and the enterprise of our Lord on earth in a fishing boat!

We say "It seems out of all proportion that God should choose me—I am of no value"; the reason He chooses us is that we are not of any value. It is folly to think that because a man has natural ability, he must make a good Christian. People with the best natural equipment may make the worst disciples because they will "boss" themselves. It is not a question of our equipment, but of our poverty; not what we bring with us, but what He puts in us; not our natural virtues, our strength of character, our knowledge, our experience; all that is of no avail in this matter; the only thing that is of avail is that we are taken up into the big compelling of God and made His comrade (1 Corinthians 1:26-28). His comradeship is made out of men who know their poverty. God can do nothing with the men who think they will be of use to Him. "If we can only add him to our cause"—that is where the competition comes in. We are not out for our cause at all as Christians, we are out for the cause of God, which can never be our cause. It is not that God is on our side, we must see that we are on God's side, which is a different matter. We do not know what God is after, but we have to maintain our relationship to Him whatever happens. Never allow anything to injure your relationship to God, cut it out at once; if you are getting out of touch with God, take time and get it right.

The Baffling Call of God

... and all the things that are written by the prophets shall be accomplished unto the son of man. (RV)

God called Jesus Christ to unmitigated disaster; Jesus Christ called His disciples to come and see Him put to death; He led every one of those disciples to the place where their hearts broke. The whole thing was an absolute failure from every standpoint but God's, and yet the thing that was the biggest failure from man's standpoint was the ultimate triumph from God's, because God's purpose was not man's.

In our own lives there comes the baffling call of God. "Let us pass over unto the other side," Jesus said to His disciples; they obeyed, but as soon as they got into the boat there arose a great storm of wind and there was a squall that nearly drowned them. The call of God cannot be stated explicitly, it is implicit. The call of God is like the call of the sea, no one hears it but the man who has the nature of the sea in him. You cannot state definitely what the call of God is to; it is to be in comradeship with God for His own purposes, and the test of faith is to believe God knows what He is after. The fact that history fulfils prophecy is a small matter compared to our maintenance of a right relationship to God Who is working out His purposes. The things that happen do not happen by chance at all, they happen entirely in the decrees of God.

To be "with God at the front" means the continual maintenance of our relationship to Him. If I maintain communion with God and recognise that He is taking me up into His purposes, I will no longer try to find out what those purposes are. The war has hit every kind of cause there is, but that does not mean it has hit God. Behind it all are the big compellings of God, and in it we see the brave comradeship of God. If God has been brave enough to trust me, surely it is up to me not to let Him down, but to "hang in." You say "God has been very unwise to choose me because there is nothing in me." As long as there is something in you He cannot choose you, because you have ends of your own to serve; but if you have let Him bring you to the end of your selfsufficiency, then He can choose you to go with Him to Jerusalem, and that means the fulfilment of His purposes which He does not discuss with you at all.

We go on with Him, and in the final wind-up the glory of God will be manifested before our eyes. No wonder our way is inscrutable! "There's a divinity that shapes our ends"; we may take what ways we like, but behind them come the big compellings of God. The Christian is one who trusts the wisdom of God, not his own wits. The astute mind behind the saint's life is the mind of God, not his own mind.

AOTEA HOME, JUNE 10, 1917

THE UNSPEAKABLE WONDER

In new birth God does three impossible things, impossible, that is, from the rational standpoint. The first is to make a man's past as though it had never been; the second, to make a man all over again, and the third, to make a man as certain of God as God is of Himself. New birth does not mean merely salvation from hell, but something more radical, something which tells in a man's actual life.

Of the Road Back to Yesterday

And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmerworm, my great army which I sent among you. (Joel 2:25)

Through the Redemption God undertakes to deal with a man's past, and He does it in two ways: by forgiving him, and by making the past a wonderful culture for the future. The forgiveness of God is a bigger miracle than we are apt to think. It is impossible for a human being to forgive; and it is because this is not realised that we fail to understand that the forgiveness of God is a miracle of Divine grace. Do I really believe that God cannot, dare not, must not forgive me my sin without its being atoned for? If God were to forgive me my sin without its being atoned for, I should have a greater sense of justice than God. It is not that God says in effect, "I will pay no more attention to what you have done." When God forgives a man, He not only alters him but transmutes what he has already done. Forgiveness does not mean merely that I am saved from sin and made right for heaven; forgiveness means that I am forgiven into a recreated relationship to God.

Do I believe that God can deal with my "yesterday," and make it as though it had never been? I either do not believe He can, or I do not want Him to. Forgiveness, which is so easy for us to accept, cost God the agony of Calvary. When Jesus Christ says "Sin no more," He conveys the power that enables a man not to sin any more, and that power comes by right of what He did on the Cross. That is the unspeakable wonder of the forgiveness of God. To-day men do not bank on what Jesus Christ can do, or on the miraculous power of God; they only look at things from their side—"I should like to be a man or a woman after God's heart, but look at the mountain of my past that is in the way." God has promised to do the thing which, looked at from the basis of our own reason, cannot be done. If a man will commit his "yesterday" to God, make it irrevocable, and bank in confidence on what Jesus Christ has done, he will know what is meant by spiritual mirth—"Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing." Very few of us get there because we do not believe Jesus Christ means what He says. "It is impossible! Can Jesus Christ re-make me, with my meanness and my criminality; re-make not only my actual life, but my mind and my dreams?" Jesus said, "With God all things are possible." The reason God cannot do it for us is because of our unbelief; it is not that God won't do it if we do not believe, but that our commitment to Him is part of the essential relationship.

Of the Renewal of Youth

But Jesus said, Suffer the little children, and forbid them not, to come unto Me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven. (Matthew 19:14 RV)

Jesus Christ uses the child-spirit as a touchstone for the character of a disciple. He did not put up a child before His disciples as an ideal, but as an expression of the simplehearted life they would live when they were born again. The life of a little child is expectant, full of wonder, and free from self-consciousness, and Jesus said, "Except ye turn, and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven" (RV). We cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven head first. How many of us thought about how we should live before we were born? Why, none. But numbers of people try to think of how to live as Christians before they are born again. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born anew" (RV), that is, become as little children, with open-hearted, unprejudiced minds in relation to God. There is a marvellous rejuvenescence once we let God have His way. The most seriously minded Christian is the one who has just become a Christian; the mature saint is just like a young child, absolutely simple and joyful and gay. Read the Sermon on the Mount—"Take no thought," (i.e., no care), "for your life." The word "care" has within it the idea of something that buffets. The Christianity of Jesus Christ refuses to be careworn. Our Lord is indicating that we have to be carefully careless about everything saving our relationship to Him. Fuss is always a sign of fever. A great many people mistake perspiration in service for inspiration in devotion. The characteristic of a man who has come to God is that you cannot get him to take anyone seriously but God.

Spiritually beware of anything that takes the wonder out of life and makes you take a prosaic attitude; when you lose wonder, you lose life. The Spirit of God creates the intuitions of a child in a man and keeps him in touch with the elemental and real, and the miracle of Christianity is that a man can be made young in heart and mind and spirit.

Of the Repleteness of "Yes"

And in that day ye shall ask Me nothing. Verily, verily, I say unto you, If ye shall ask anything of the Father, He will give it you in My name. (John 16:23 RV)

When once we strike the "Everlasting Yes," there is something positive all through our life. So many of us never get beyond the "Everlasting No," there is a nebulous "knockoutedness" about us—"Oh yes, I will pray, but I know what the answer will be." When we come to the repleteness of "Yes," the moral miracle God works in us is that we ask only what is exactly in accordance with God's nature, and the repleteness begins, the fulness and satisfaction of the "Everlasting Yes." "And in that day ye shall ask Me nothing." That does not mean that God will give us everything we ask for, but that God can do with us now exactly what He likes. We have no business to tell God we cannot stand any more; God ought to be at liberty to do with us what He chooses, as He did with His own Son. Then whatever happens our life will be full of joy.

Anyone who has not found the road back to yesterday, who has not experienced the renewal of youth, and the repleteness of the "Everlasting Yes," has farther to go. The unspeakable wonder is that God undertakes to do all this with the human stuff of which we are made. The emphasis put on the nobility of man is largely a matter of fiction. Men and women are men and women, and it is absurd to pretend they are either better or worse than they are. Most of us begin by demanding perfect justice and nobility and generosity from other people, then we see their defects and become bitter and cynical. Jesus Christ never trusted human nature, yet He was never cynical, never in despair about any man, because He trusted absolutely in what the grace of God could do in human nature.

ACQUAINTANCE WITH GRIEF

But this is your hour, and the power of darkness. (Luke 22:53)

There are times when God distinctly allows the wrong thing to have its hour; every one of us more or less has had this experience in his own life. We are not "acquainted with grief" in the way our Lord was; we endure it, we get through the thing, but we do not get intimate with anything in it.

Reconciling One's Self to the Fact of Sin

The climax of sin is that it crucified Jesus Christ. When we begin our life we do not reconcile ourselves to the fact of sin; we take a rational view of life and say that a man by looking after his own instincts, educating himself, controlling the ape and the tiger in him, can produce that life which will slowly evolve into the life of God. But as we go on we find there is something that we have not taken into consideration, viz., sin, and it upsets all our calculations. Sin has made the basis of things not rational, but wild. Take the life of Jesus Christ, it seems an anticlimax that the end of that life should be a tragedy, yet it did end that way. All He succeeded in doing was to gather together a handful of fishermen as disciples, one of whom betrayed Him, another denied Him, and all of whom "forsook Him, and fled."

We do not get reconciled to the fact of sin, we do not think it should be there. Take the attitude of men's minds with regard to this war; they said that it was impossible for war to be, it was out of all reason to imagine that Christian nations would tear one another to pieces, yet that is what is actually happening. To be "acquainted with grief" and to reconcile one's self to the fact of sin is the biggest factor in our life and outlook. Men say if God had ordered the world otherwise, there would be no sin; Jesus Christ would not have been killed, men would not be at war; but men are at war, and sin is, and everywhere Jesus Christ's words are proving true: "This is your hour and the power of darkness." There is a time when the hour of sin is unhindered, it is deliberate and emphatic and clear. I have to recognise that sin is a fact, not a defect; it is red-handed mutiny against God, and acquaintance with the grief of it means that unless I withstand it to the death, it will withstand me to the death. If sin rules in me, the life of God will be killed in me; if God rules in me, sin will be killed in me. There is no possible ultimate but that.

In our mental outlook we have to reconcile ourselves to the fact that sin is the only explanation as to why Jesus Christ came, the only explanation of the grief and the sorrow that there is in life. There may be a great deal that is pathetic in a man's condition, but there is also a lot that is bad and wrong. There is the downright spiteful thing, as wrong as wrong can be, without a strand of good in it, in you and in me and in other people by nature, and we have to reconcile ourselves to the fact that there is sin. That does not mean that we compromise with sin, it means that we face the fact that it is there. If we try to estimate ourselves or to estimate human history and ignore sin, we are not reconciling ourselves to the fact of sin; we are not becoming acquainted with the grief produced by sin, and unless we do we shall never understand why Jesus Christ came as He did, and why He said, "this is your hour and the power of darkness."

At present in the history of the world it is the hour and the power of darkness. During the war some of the biggest intellectual juggling tricks have been performed trying to make out that war is a good thing; war is the most damnably bad thing. Because God overrules a thing and brings good out of it does not mean that in itself that thing is a good thing. We have not been getting "acquainted with grief," we have tried to juggle with the cause of it. If the war has made me reconcile myself with the fact that there is sin in human beings, I shall no longer go with my head in the clouds, or hidden in the sand like an ostrich, but I shall be wishing to face facts as they are.

It is not being reconciled to the fact of sin that produces all the disasters in life. We talk about noble human nature, self-sacrifice and platonic friendshipall unmitigated nonsense. Unless we recognise the fact of sin, there is something that will laugh and spit in the face of every ideal we have. Unless we reconcile ourselves to the fact that there will come a time when the power of darkness will have its own way, and that by God's permission, we will compromise with that power when its hour comes. If we refuse to take the fact of sin into our calculation, refuse to agree that a base impulse runs through men, that there is such a thing as vice and self-seeking, when our hour of darkness strikes, instead of being acquainted with sin and the grief of it, we will compromise straight away and say there is no use battling against it. To be "acquainted with grief" and with the fact of sin means that I will endure to the crack of doom, but will never compromise with it. The man who accepts salvation from Jesus Christ recognises the fact of sin, he does not ignore it. Thereafter he will not demand too much of human beings.

Receiving One's Self in the Fires of Sorrow

Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour. But for this cause came I unto this hour. (John 12:27)

Jesus Christ is asking God to save Him out of the hour, not from it. All through, that is the inner attitude of Jesus Christ, He received Himself in the fires of sorrow; it was never "Do not let the sorrow come." That is the opposite of what we do, we pray, "Oh, Lord, don't let this or that happen to me"; consequently all kinds of damaging and blasphemous things are said about answers to prayer. You hear of one man who has gone safely through battles, and friends tell him it is in answer to prayer; does that mean that the prayers for the men who have gone under have not been answered? We have to remember that the hour of darkness will come in every life. It is not that we are saved from the hour of sorrow, but that we are delivered in it. "But ye are they which have continued with Me in My temptations" (Luke 22:28 RV). Our Lord said He prayed for Peter, not that Satan should not sift him, but that his faith should not fail. The attitude of Jesus Christ Himself to the coming sorrows and difficulties was not to ask that they might be prevented, but that He might be saved out of them.

People say there ought to be no sorrow; but the fact remains that there is sorrow, there is not one family just now without its sorrow, and we have to learn to receive ourselves in its fires. If we try to evade sorrow and refuse to lay our account with it, we are foolish, for sorrow is one of the biggest facts in life, and there is no use saying it ought not to be, it is. It is ridiculous to say things ought not to be when they are. A man who wants to find an explanation of why things are as they are is an intellectual lunatic. There is nothing gained by saying, "Why should there be sin and sorrow and suffering?" They are; it is not for me to find out why God made what I am pleased to consider a mistake; I have to find out what to do in regard to it all.

Jesus Christ's attitude is that I have to receive myself in the fires of sorrow. It is never those who go through suffering who are in doubt, but those who watch them suffer. In the majority of cases those who have gone through the sorrow have received their "self" in its fires. That is not the same as saying that they have been made better by it; sorrow does not necessarily make a man better; sorrow burns up a great amount of unnecessary shallowness, it gives me my self, or it destroys me. If a man becomes acquainted with sorrow, the gift it presents him with is his self.

We cannot receive ourselves in success, we lose our heads; we cannot receive ourselves in monotony, we grouse; the only way we can find ourselves is in the fires of sorrow. Why it should be so I do not know, but that it is so is true not only in Scripture, but in human life. The people who have gone through the fires of sorrow in this war have not become sceptical of God; it is those who have watched others going through it who have become bitter. The letters written by friends to friends during the calamitous disasters and fires of sorrow in this war in which they have discovered themselves, will be most marvellous to read after the war is over.

Recognising One's Self in the Fulness of Sanctity

And for their sakes I sanctify Myself. (John 17:19)

Jesus Christ was holy, then why did He say "I sanctify Myself"? Jesus Christ took His holy Self and deliberately gave it to God to do what He liked with. The spiritual order of Jesus Christ in my life is that I take what God has given me and give it back to Him; that is the essence of worship. The purpose of salvation and sanctification is that we may be made broken bread and poured-out wine for others as Jesus Christ was made broken bread and poured-out wine for us. When we recognise God's purpose we hand ourselves back to God to do what He likes with. He may put me in the front of things, or He may put me on the shelf if He wants to. I separate the holy thing God has created to the Holy God

To come back to our personal relationships. Have we made allowance there for the hour and the power of darkness, or do we take the recognition of ourselves that misses it out? In our own bodily relationships, in our friendships, do we reconcile ourselves to the fact that there is sin? If not, we will be caught round the next corner of the high-road and begin to compromise with it. If we recognise that sin is there we will not make that mistake. "Yes, I see what that means and where it would lead me." Always beware of a friendship, or of a religion, or of a personal estimate of things that does not reconcile itself to the fact of sin; that is the way all the disasters in human friendships and in human loves begin, and where the compromises start. Jesus Christ never trusted human nature, but He was never cynical, He trusted absolutely what He could do for human nature. The safeguarded man or woman is the pure man or woman. No man or woman has any right to be innocent. God demands of men and women that they be pure and virtuous. Innocence is the characteristic of a child, but it is an ignorant and blameworthy thing for a man or woman not to be reconciled to the fact that there is sin. To be forewarned is to be forearmed.

Instead of the recognition of sin destroying the basis of friendship, it establishes a mutual regard founded on the fact that the basis of life is tragedy.

Again, in sorrow—you have some personal grief, it may be a question of bereavement, of unrequited love, or of any of those things that bite desperately. Have you received your self out of it yet? or are you ignoring it? It is a foolish thing to ignore the fact that you are hurt, the only thing to do is to receive yourself in the fires of the sorrow. Am I receiving myself in sorrow, or am I getting meaner and more spiteful? If I am getting sarcastic and spiteful, it is an indication that I am being sorely bitten by the fire, but am not receiving my self in its fires. The attitude of anyone watching a person going through sorrow and becoming cynical is not to condemn that one, but to realise that he is being hurt, and badly hurt. Cynicism is never the outcome of being hurt in the fires of sorrow, but of not recognising that through the sorrow comes the chance to receive one's self.

Through the fires of suffering emerges the kind of manhood and womanhood Peter mentions in his Epistle—"Wherefore let them also that suffer according to the will of God commit their souls in well-doing unto a faithful Creator" (RV). You always know the person who has been through the fires of sorrow and has received himself; you never smell the fire on him, and you are certain you can go to him when you are in trouble. It is not the man with the signs of sorrow on him who is helpful, but the one who has gone through the fires and received himself; he is delivered from the small side of himself, and has ample leisure for others. The one who has not been through the fires of sorrow has no time for you and is inclined to be contemptuous and impatient. If I have received myself in the fires of sorrow, then I am good stuff for other people in the same condition.

What standard have I for the outcome of my life? The standard of Jesus Christ is that I may be perfect as my Father in heaven is perfect. Jesus Christ is not after making a fine character or a virtuous man; those are ingredients to another end: His end is that we may be children of our Father in heaven. The best way to know whether I am recognising myself in the fullness of sanctity is to watch how I behave towards the mean²³ folks who come around. If I am learning to behave to them as God behaved to me in Jesus Christ, then I am all right; but if I have no time for them, it means that I am growing meaner and more selfish. Our Father is kind to the unthankful, to the mean. Now, He says, you be the same. The idea of sanctity is that we must be perfect in these relationships in life.

ENTHUSIASTIC AND CAPABLE

The Rejoicing Inspiration of Life

Be filled with the Spirit. (Ephesians 5:18)

We think that sobriety and capability go together, but it is not always so. A man may be sober and incapable as well as drunk and incapable. Paul warns against the enthusiasm according to wine, but he says we have no business to be nondescript, negative people, drunk neither one way nor the other; we must be enthusiastic. "Be being filled." The teaching of the New Testament presents the passion of life. Stoicism has come so much into the idea of the Christian life that we imagine the stoic is the best type of Christian; but just where stoicism seems most like Christianity it is most adverse. A stoic overcomes the world by passionlessness, by eviscerating all personal interest out of life until he is a mere submissive recording machine. Christianity overcomes the world by passion, not by passionlessness. Passion is usually taken to mean something from which human nature suffers; in reality it stands for endurance and high enthusiasm, a radiant intensity of life, life at the highest pitch all the time without any reaction. That is what Paul means by "Be being filled."

If a grain of radium is kept in a box the light will remain for a while after the radium is removed, but it becomes imperceptibly fainter, and at last fades away. The spiritual life of many Christians is like that; it is borrowed and not real; for a time it looks magnificent, but after a while it wilts clean out because it has no life in itself, it has to be kept alive by meetings and conventions.

The Radiant Intensity of Life

These things have I spoken unto you, . . . that your joy may be fulfilled. (John 15:11 RV)

The emphasis of the New Testament is on joy, not on happiness. The one thing about the apostle Paul that staggered his contemporaries was his unaccountable gaiety of spirit: he would not be serious over anything other than Jesus Christ. They might stone him and imprison him, but whatever they did made no difference to his buoyancy of spirit. The external character of the life of our Lord was that of radiant sociability; so much so, that the popular scandalmongering about Him was that He was "a gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!" The fundamental reason for our Lord's sociability was other than they knew; but His whole life was characterised with a radiant fulness, it was not an exhausted type of life. "Except ye . . . become as little children . . ." If a little child is not full of the spontaneousness of life there is something wrong. The bounding life and restlessness is a sign of health, not of naughtiness. Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Be being filled with the life Jesus came to give. Men who are radiantly healthy, physically and spiritually, cannot be crushed. They are like the cedars of Lebanon, which have such superabounding vitality in their sap that they intoxicate to death any parasites that try to live on them.

Awake, thou that sleepest. (Ephesians 5:14)

Have I awakened into this radiance of life, the real incoming life of God? St. Augustine said he did not want to be roused out of his sleep—"I want to live in the twilight a bit longer and not be roused up to vitality just yet." Has the twilight we desired been turned into trembling? We all like the twilight in spiritual and moral matters, not the intensity of black and white, not the clear lines of demarcation—saved and unsaved. We prefer things to be hazy, winsome and indefinite, without the clear light. When the light does come difficulty is experienced, for when a man awakens he sees a great many things. We may feel complacent with a background of drab, but to be brought up against the white background of Jesus Christ is an immensely uncomfortable thing.

"Arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee" (RV). If you arise from the dead, Christ will give you light. The one thing that Jesus Christ does for a man is to make him radiant, not artificially radiant. There is nothing more irritating than the counsel, "keep smiling"; that is a counterfeit, a radiance that soon fizzles out. The joy that Jesus gives is the result of our disposition being at one with His own disposition. The Spirit of God will fill us to overflowing if we will be careful to keep in the light. We have no business to be weak in God's strength.

"Look therefore carefully how ye walk" (RV). We have to walk in the light "as He is in the light," keep continually coming to the light, don't keep anything covered up. If we are filled with the life of Jesus we must walk circumspectly, keep the interest in life going, have nothing folded up. The evidence that we are being filled with the life of God is that we are not deceived about the things that spring from ourselves and the things that spring from Jesus Christ. "If you have sinned," says John, "confess it, keep in the light all through."

Y.M.C.A. HUT, AUGUST 5, 1917

THE THROES OF THE ULTIMATE

1 Peter 1:3-9

Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a little while, if need be, ye have been put to grief in manifold temptations. (1 Peter 1:6 RV)

By "the ultimate" is meant here the real aim and end that God has in view. Once we get caught up into that life, Peter says, we will find there are throes in it, what we understand in physical life by "growing pains." When we think on unusual lines we get a headache because our brains are rusty. This accounts for the inevitable throes of getting at an ultimate end in our thinking. The same thing is true spiritually, no man can be virtuous without throes-without pangs and pains. The difference between Esau and Jacob lies here, that Esau was not concerned about virtue. The man who gets into the throes of a moral ultimate and determines to be something in his moral life, knows all about the pangs of producing a virtuous life. No man is born virtuous, we are born innocent; virtue is the outcome of conflict. Any man who lives a merely natural life is an animal, and he will know it himself better than anyone before long.

"Though for a little while, if need be, ye have been put to grief . . ." (RV). There is only one Judge of the "need be," and that is our Father in heaven. We cannot judge what seasons are best for the natural world, nor yet for our soul's life, but whatever the seasons may be, He is bringing it all out towards one end. Peter would have us remember that there are times when we are in heaviness, when it looks as if God did not answer our prayer, as if faith had no lift about it, as if everything we ever believed in was nothing at all. Then is the time to "hang in," says Peter, remember what you saw when you had the light. No matter how manifold the temptations may be, God is producing a good thing.

The Undefiled Inheritance

Unto an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you. (1 Peter 1:4 RV)

"... reserved in heaven for you." This is a great conception of the New Testament, but it is a conception lost in modern evangelism. We are so much taken up with what God wants us to be here that we have forgotten heaven. There are one or two conceptions about heaven that have to be traced back to their home to find out whether they have their root in our faith or whether they are foreign flowers. As, for instance, during this war men are producing flowers of scepticism which are not home-grown at all, but which are covers to hide the real throes of a man's mind, so there are conceptions of heaven which have not their root in Christianity. One of these is that heaven is a state and not a place; that is only a partial truth, for there cannot be a state without a place. The great New Testament conception of heaven is "here-after" without the sin, "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness"—a conception beyond us. Peter is reminding every Christian that there is an undefiled inheritance awaiting us which has never yet been realised, and that it has in it all we have ever hoped or dreamed or imagined, and a good deal more. It is always Better to come in the Christian life until the Best of all comes.

There is another flower abroad to-day which has not its root in the New Testament—the idea that when a man dies for his King and Country he has thereby redeemed his soul; that is a flower which does not belong to the Christian faith. People say if a man dies in doing his duty, surely that is acceptable to God. Of course it is, but a man cannot redeem his own soul by so doing, that is God's business, and the revelation given through Iesus Christ is that the human race has been redeemed. "It is finished," and in the Cross of Jesus Christ all men are condemned to salvation. That is very different from what is called Universalism. The redemption is of universal application, but human responsibility is not done away with. Universalism looks like a Christian flower, but it has not its roots in the Christian faith. Jesus Christ is most emphatic on the fact that there are possibilities of eternal damnation for the man who positively neglects or positively rejects His redemption. In John 3:19, our Lord is talking about individual lives on the experimental line. "This is the judgement," i.e., the critical moment—not the sovereign purpose of God, nor the decree of God, but the critical moment in individual experience—"that the light," Jesus Christ, "is come into the world, and men," individual men, "loved the darkness," their own point of view, their own prejudices and preconceived determinations, "rather than the light." That, says Jesus, is the judgement.

This, then, is the basis of our faith. Peter says, despair of no man, and remember that there is an undefiled inheritance ahead. That is the ultimate, and we have to live in the light of it. It is a wonderful thing to see a man or woman live in the light of something you cannot see. You can always tell a man or woman who has a standard of life other than you can see; there is something that keeps them sweet when from every other consideration they ought to be sour. That is a mark of the Christian, he does not go under in the difficulties; the thing that keeps him is that he has an anchor that holds within the veil. The mainspring of a man's action is further in than you can see in his actual life and it accounts for his outlook. When a man has his anchorage in Jesus Christ and knows what is awaiting the human race—that there is a time coming when all things shall be explained fully, it keeps his spirit filled with uncrushable gaiety and joy.

The Unrelieved Rigours

That the proof of your faith, being more precious than gold that perisheth though it is proved by fire, might be found unto praise and glory and honour at the revelation of Jesus Christ. (1 Peter 1:7 RV)

Peter says that there are times when you won't see the vision, when you won't feel the touch of Jesus Christ, when there is no kind of inspiration at work in you, when it is all heaviness through unrelieved rigours and temptation. Jesus Christ was alone in the desert with wild beasts—the last rugged touch of human isolation. "Then the devil leaveth Him; and behold, angels came and ministered unto Him" (RV). That is the proof that you have come through the trial of your faith all right. You have no trophy, it has been a desperate time, you seem to have lost your hold on everything you can state, there has been no inspiration and no joy and you have nothing to bring away, all you can do is to dumbly "hang in" to your undefiled inheritance. The sign that you have gone through the trial rightly is that you retain your affinity with the highest. Do you feel yourself just as fond of the best as you were? Just as full of affinity with the most spiritual people when you meet them? As full of affection for those who live the highest and talk the purest? If so, you have gone grandly through.

Faith must be tried or it is not faith, faith is not mathematics nor reason. Scriptural faith is not to be illustrated by the faith we exhibit in our commonsense life, it is trust in the character of One we have never seen, in the integrity of Jesus Christ, and it must be tried. "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven . . . for where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also" (RV). You have your time of unrelieved rigour when commonsense facts and your faith in Jesus Christ do not agree, and you are stepping out in the dark on His word; when you have gone through the test and are standing firm, that gives you, as it were, so many pounds in the bank, and when the next trial comes, God hands out to you a sufficient amount of your own wealth to carry you through. "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven," and it is the trial of faith that does it. "Oh yes, I believe God can do everything," but, have I proved that He can do one thing? If so, the next time the trial comes, I can not only hold myself, but someone else. It is a great thing to meet a man who believes in God, one who has not only retained his faith in God, but is continually getting a bigger faith.

There is no evidence of God outside the moral domain. The New Testament increases and educates the faith of those who know God. I do not need anyone to tell me about Iesus Christ. I know Him on the inside. It is a wonderful thing to be able to give a hand to a man who is in the turmoil, and I cannot do it by giving him platitudes. It is easy to say "Oh yes, just trust in God." If the man sees you are not doing so yourself, it won't help him; but if he sees you are trusting God, there will come through you a tremendous assistance. When I see a person who has been through trial and who knows God, going under in some trial of his faith, I feel inclined to hang my head in shame. To see a Christian going under either in moods or in circumstances is to me a slander against Jesus Christ. It is an awful thing to see a man or woman who knows Jesus Christ begin to get sulky and dumpy under difficulties (there is a difference between this and going through the first trial of faith); begin to sink and forget the inheritance undefiled; forget that the honour of Jesus Christ is at stake in His disciple. It is dishonourable, it is caddish. Buck up and face the music, get rerelated to things. It is a great thing to see physical pluck, and greater still to see moral pluck, but the greatest to see of all is spiritual pluck, to see a man who will stand true to the integrity of Jesus Christ no matter what he is going through.

If you know a man who has a good spiritual banking account, borrow from him for all you are worth, because he will give you all you want and never look to be paid back. Here is the reason a saint goes through the things he does go through—God wants to know if He can make him good "bread" to feed other people with. The man who has gone through the crucible is going to be a tremendous support to hundreds of others.

The Unrecorded Revelation

Whom not having seen ye love; on Whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice greatly with joy unspeakable and full of glory: receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls. (1 Peter 1:8–9 RV)

"Soul" means a great deal more than we mean when we talk about a "saved soul." "Receiving the end of your faith," the issue of your faith—the whole of your reasoning and conception of things will be completely saved, saved into the perfect light and liberty of God. If you stick stedfastly, not to your faith, but to the One Who gives you the faith, there is a time coming when your whole way of being impressed, and your reasoning, will be made clear to your own satisfaction. In the meantime you have to be quiet about a good many things. You cannot stand up for Christ other than spiritually. A man slanders Jesus Christ and says "Why does not God end the war?" and you cannot say a thing; if you do, it is nonsense. At present you have one of the hardest humiliations to stand because you have a faith that apparently in the meantime is flatly contradicted, a faith marked out by your own inconsistencies and by other people's. Peter counsels, "Now you are in manifold temptations, but 'hang in,' remember the inheritance undefiled, look to Jesus, and you will receive the end of your faith." There is a time coming when everything that at present is a problem will be perfectly solved; in the meantime are you prepared to let men gibe at you, to let them have their immediate triumph over the matter, while you "hang in" to your grander horizon, to the very essence of Christianity, which is personal relationship to Jesus Christ? Look unto Him, which means spiritual discernment, remembering it is a crime to be weak in God's strength, a crime to go under in anything when Jesus Christ is what He is. If you have a trial of faith, endure it till you get through. If you have been through trials of faith in the past God is bringing across your path immature souls, and you have no business to despise them but rather to help them through—be to them something that has to be "sucked." He perceived that virtue had gone out of Him, and you will feel the same thing: there are people who spiritually and morally have to suck the vitals out of you, and if you don't keep up the supply from the life of Jesus Christ, you will be like an exhausted volcano before long. You must keep that up and let them nourish themselves from you until they are able to stand on their own feet and take direct life from Him.

The throes of the ultimate! Carlyle said of Tennyson: "Alfred is always carrying about chaos with him and turning it into cosmos." It is a good thing to be chaotic; it means there is a terrific possibility of development. The same thing spiritually, there is chaos in our lives that God is turning into the right cosmos; in the meantime, look unto Jesus and take the next step as it comes. If it is unrelieved rigours, get through the thing and you will be a tremendous assistance to men who are going through the same thing. It is not for you to "lambaste" them for not being where you are, but for you to see to it that you are good nourishing stuff for them in God's hands.

Let the redeemed of the LORD say so. (Psalm 107:2)

We are apt to use words without having any idea of their meaning. In a crisis a word is really an "open sesame," and in certain spiritual, moral and emotional crises if we do not say the word, emancipation will never be ours. Think of it in a simple way. When a child knows it has done something wrong and you want him to say he is sorry, the natural inclination of the child is stubbornly to refuse to say he is sorry; but until he does say so, there is no emancipation for him on to a higher level in his own life. This is the key to the way we are built all through; it is true not only in a child's life but in the moral domain, and emphatically true in the spiritual domain. Many of us are on the verge of a spiritual vision the realisation of which never becomes ours because we will not open our mouths to "say so." We have to "say so" before we "feel so." The writer to the Hebrews speaks of the "sacrifice of praise." If we only praise when we feel like praising, it is simply an undisciplined expression, but if we deliberately go over the neck of our disinclination and offer the sacrifice of praise, we are emancipated by our very statements. We can slay a grousing mood by stating what we believe, and we are emancipated into a higher level of life immediately; but the "say so" must come before the emancipation is ours.

The Reserve That Ruins Spirituality

With the heart man believeth; . . . with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. (Romans 10:10)

That is, unto the realisation of the salvation for which we believe. In the Bible confession and testimony are put in a prominent place, and the test of a man's moral calibre is the "say so." I may try and make myself believe a hundred and one things, but they will never be mine until I "say so." "With the heart man believeth..." "Heart" means all that is meant by "me." If I say with my self what I believe and confess it with my mouth, I am lifted into the domain of that thing. This is always the price of spiritual emancipation. If a child is to be taken out of his sulky mood he has to go across the disinclination of his reserve and say something; and this is true of all moral and spiritual life. If I will not confess with my mouth what I believe in my heart, that particular phase of believing will never be mine actually. Assurance of faith is never gained by reserve but only by abandonment. In the matter of human love it is a great emancipation to have it expressed; there may be intuitions of the love, but the realisation of it is not ours until it is expressed. Morally and spiritually we live, as it were, in sections, and the door from one section to another is by means of words, and until we say the right word the door will not open. The right word is always based on the killing of the disinclination which belongs to a lower section.

Reserve is an unmitigated curse, not the reserve which indicates that there is power behind, but the reserve that refuses to go over the neck of its own pride. "If I confess this thing I shall have to forgo my reserve and take a further step on." That is the reserve that ruins spirituality. Emancipation comes through the "say so"; immediately we confess, the door opens, and life rushes on to a higher platform.

The Realisation That Really Speaks

When ye pray, say, Our Father. (Luke 11:2)

"But I don't feel that God is my Father": Jesus said, "Say it"-"say, Our Father," and you will suddenly discover that He is. The safeguard against moral imprisonment is prayer. Don't pray according to your moods, but resolutely launch out on God, say "Our Father," and before you know where you are, you are in a larger room. The door into a moral or spiritual emancipation which you wish to enter is a word. Immediately you are prepared to abandon your reserve and say the word, the door opens and in rushes the Godward side of things and you are lifted on to another platform immediately. "Speech maketh a full man." If you want to encourage your own life in spiritual things, talk about them. Beware of the reserve that keeps to itself, that wants to develop spirituality alone; spirituality must be developed in the open. Shyness is often unmitigated conceit, an unconscious over-estimate of your own worth; you are not prepared to speak until you have a proper audience. If you talk in the wrong mood, you will remain in the wrong mood and put the "bastard self" on the throne; but if you talk in the mood which comes from revelation, emancipation will be yours. A preacher has no business to stir up emotions without giving his hearers some issue of will on which to transact.

The Revelation That Rightly Sees

Go ye, and stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this Life. (Acts 5:20 RV)

A man may betray Jesus Christ by speaking too many words, and he may betray Him through keeping his mouth shut. The revelation that perceives is that which recklessly states what it believes. When you stand up before your fellow-men and confess something about Jesus Christ, you feel you have no one to support you in the matter, but as you testify you begin to find the reality of your spiritual possessions, and there rushes into you the realisation of a totally new life. "Be still, and know that I am God." When a man is able to state that he believes in God, it reacts on all his relationships. The thing that preserves a man from panic is his relationship to God; if he is only related to himself and to his own courage, there may come a moment when his courage gives out.

Some of us are living on too low a level, and remember, the door is shut on our side, not on God's. Immediately we will "say so," the door opens and the salvation for which we believe is ours in actual possession. Things only become clear as we say them. Too often we are like the child who will not do anything but murmur. We grouse and refuse to say the emancipating word which is within our reach all the time. Immediately we say the emancipating word, we undo the door and there rushes into us a higher and better life, and the revelation becomes real. "I must get out of this cabined, confined place," then say the right word. If you have not received, ask; if you have not found, seek; if the door is shut, knock. When you are up against barriers, the way out is to "say so," then you will be emancipated, and your "say so" will not only be an emancipation for yourself, but someone else will enter into the light. We have to get rid of the reserve which keeps us starved and away from our fellow-men, that keeps us from getting what we should have. We have no business to live a drivelling kind of life with barely sufficient for our own needs, we ought to enter into the store-house and come out with riches for ourselves and ample to hand on to others. There are some people we are always the better for meeting, they do not talk piously, but somehow they give us a feeling of emancipation, they have a larger horizon. The reason is that they have opened the door for themselves by their "say so," and now the Word of God becomes spirit and life through them to others.

THE PLANE OF SPIRITUAL VIGOUR

Forasmuch then as Christ suffered in the flesh, arm ye yourselves also with the same mind; for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin. 1 Peter 4:1 (RV)

Peter is dealing with the dangers that beset the spiritual man, dangers of which the average man is unaware. As long as a man sets out to be merely healthy-minded, the further he keeps away from Jesus Christ the better. The spiritual man must deliberately enter into the zone where he suffers in the flesh. If I am to be identified with Jesus Christ in this life, I must lay my account with the fact that I am going to be troubled in the flesh in a way I would not be if I were not so related to Him, because the last stake of the enemy is in the flesh.

The Discipline in the Flesh

Forasmuch then as Christ suffered in the flesh . . .

Suffering

How did Jesus Christ suffer in the flesh? Not because He was diseased or because He was more delicately strung than we are, but because He was differently related to God, He suffered "according to the will of God," that is, He let Almighty God do His whole will in and through Him without asking His permission; He did not live His life in the flesh from the point of view of realising Himself. Any number of us suffer in the flesh who have not ceased from sin, but Peter's meaning is, "he that hath suffered in the flesh 'as Christ suffered in the flesh' hath ceased from sin."

God will not shield us from the requirements of saints. When once we are related to life as Jesus was on the basis of Redemption, He expects us to be to other people what He has been to us, and that will mean suffering in the flesh because it entails losing the aim of self-realisation and basing everything on Christ realisation, and immediately we do that, other people will wipe their feet on us. No man is designed by nature to take the wiping of other people's feet, he can only do it when he can say with the apostle Paul, "I know how to be abased." Beware of the line of thinking which has sympathy with your sufferings but has no sympathy with Jesus Christ. Arm yourself with the mind of Christ, and the very suffering you go through will benefit others.

The Discipline in the Mind arm ye yourselves also with the same mind . . .

Strenuousness

Some people have on an armour of innocence, like Tennyson's knight whose "strength was as the strength of ten because his heart was pure"; others have on an armour of love. Paul says, "Put on the whole armour of God." Don't rely on anything less than that, clothe yourself with your relationship to God, maintain it. If you do not arm yourself with the armour of God, you are open to interferences in your hidden personal life from supernatural powers which you cannot control; but buckle on the armour, bring yourself into real living contact with God, and you are garrisoned not only in the conscious realm but in the depths of your personality beneath the conscious realm. "Praying always," says Paul. Every time we pray our horizon is altered, our attitude to things is altered, not sometimes but every time, and the amazing thing is that we don't pray more. Prayer is a complete emancipation, it keeps us on the spiritual plane. When you are at one with another mind there is a telepathic influence all the time, and when born from above (RV mg) the communion is between God and yourself; "Keep that going," says Peter. "Arm ye yourselves also with the same mind."

Are you neglecting prayer? No matter what else is neglected, switch back at once, if you don't you will be a dangerous influence to the people round about you. Watch the snare of self-pity—"Why should I go through this?" Be careful, you are a danger spot. I feel as if Jesus Christ were staggered with surprise at some of us, amazed at the things we say to Him, astonished at our attitude to Him, at the sulks we get into, because we have forgotten to arm ourselves with the same mind.

The Discipline in the Experience

... for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin.

Sanctification

The characteristic of the life now that you have ceased from sin is that you no longer do the things you used to do. "For the time past may suffice to have wrought the desire of the Gentiles, . . . wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them into the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you" (1 Peter 4:3–4 RV). "Let all that finish for you," says Peter, "stand now on a new basis, on the plane of the spiritual. See that you remain in identification with the sufferings of Jesus, and fill up that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ." That is the plane of spiritual vigour.

How am I going to maintain my relationship to God on the spiritual plane, and keep the broad horizon that will help other men? "Believe on Me," says Jesus, "and out of you will flow rivers of living water." The radiating influence from one person rightly related to God is incalculable; he may not say much, but you feel different, the pressure has gone, you are in contact with one who is on a different plane.

Arm yourselves with the mind of Christ, maintain your life on the plane of spiritual vigour, and you will find that other people will suck nourishment and sustenance for their life out of you. Virtue will go out of you, and if you do not remain true to Jesus, you will collapse; there must be the continual supply, the continual drawing on the unsearchable riches of Jesus.

THE SENSE OF AWE

The Dread Face of His Detachment

And they that followed were afraid. (Mark 10:32 RV)

The disciples had been living in closest intimacy with Jesus, but now they begin to see that there is a dread side to His life. He has an attitude to things which is not easy to understand, and it fills them with fear. There are different kinds of fear. We know what fear is in the physical domain, and in the moral domain; but in the spiritual domain a man's fear is not for his own skin at all, but, as it were, fear that his Hero won't get through. This was the disciples' fear; it seemed as if all they had expected Jesus to do would end in nothing. Not one of them knew what Jesus was after, but still they followed, and they were afraid. Many of us are supernaturally solemn about our religion because it is not real. Immediately our religion becomes real, it is possible to have humour in connection with it. There are occasions, nevertheless, when there is not only no humour, but when humour is unfit; there is a dread sense of detachment from our ordinary attitude to things which fills us with awe. We are all apt to interpret Jesus from our own standpoint, we get too familiar with Him, and a moral surgery of events is necessary before we can understand His standpoint. We get a glimpse of what Jesus is after, and His attitude makes it look as if He were absolutely insensitive to our aims; or else He has a point of view of which we know nothing and the sense of detachment continually comes. Jesus is treating us as He treated Martha and Mary—because He loved them He stayed two days where He was, and did not come in answer to their prayer. Jesus Christ can afford to be misunderstood; we cannot. Our weakness lies in always wanting to vindicate ourselves. Jesus never takes the trouble to alter mistakes; He knows they will alter themselves.

All through our Lord's life this note continually recurs—"Behold, we go up to Jerusalem"; yet He was not in a panic to get there. He set His face like a flint to go to Jerusalem, the place where He was to reach the climax of His Father's will. There was no misunderstanding as to what it would mean when He got there, viz., death, with a peculiar significance. Whenever Jesus talked to His disciples about His Cross, they misunderstood Him; until at last they began to see a deeper depth than they had ever thought, a relation to things in His life about which they knew nothing. They did not know what Jesus was heading for, and as they followed they were afraid.

It is a most humiliating thing to find that we have estimated the man with whom we are familiar on too low a level; to discover that after all he has a bigger relation to things than we have ever had. If we are going to estimate another man's point of view (which is as valuable as our own), we must take the trouble to find out the kind of man he is behind his words. When we take Jesus Christ's words about His Cross, the least thing we can do is to endeavour to get at His mind behind His words. Jesus says things from a different point of view from ours, and unless we receive His Spirit, we do not even begin to see what He is driving at. "He . . . saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost" (John 20:22). ". . . the Comforter, even the Holy Spirit, . . . He shall teach you all things . . ." (John 14:26 RV).

The Disciplining Force of His Delays

I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. (John 16:12)

"Why cannot I follow Thee even now?" asked Peter. "Thou canst not follow Me now," said Jesus, "but thou shalt follow afterwards." The delays of Jesus discipline us while they continually tantalise us. "If thou art the Christ, tell us plainly" (RV). Jesus answered them, "I told you, and ye believe not" (RV); they were not in the place where they could understand. Understanding comes only by obedience, never by intellect. Our Lord does not hide things from us, but they are unbearable until we get into a fit condition of life on the inside. "Why does not God tell us these things?" we say. He is telling us all the time, but we are unable to perceive His meaning. The force of the disciplining delays lies in the fact that God is engineering our circumstances in order to bring us into a fit moral state to understand. "Before I was afflicted I went astray: but now have I kept Thy word." The delay in interpretation depends on our willingness to obey. Obedience is always the secret of understanding. For instance, if there is the tiniest grudge in our spirit against another, from that second, spiritual penetration into the knowledge of God will cease. "If therefore thou art offering thy gift at the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift," says Jesus, "and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift" (RV).

It is a great emancipation in a man's life when he learns that spiritual and moral truths can only be gained by obedience, never by intellectual curiosity. All God's revelations are sealed, and they will never be opened by philosophy, or by thinking; whereas the tiniest fragment of obedience will bring a man right through into the secret of God's attitude to things. Mere intellectual training turns a man into a psychological ostrich; his head is all right, but in actual life he is left floundering. How are we going to make plain the things which are obscure to us just now? Intellectual curiosity will not take us one inch inside moral problems, but immediately we obey, in the tiniest matter, instantly we see.

The Dawning Fear of His Deity

And when I saw Him, I fell at His feet as one dead. (Revelation 1:17 RV)

These words were uttered by the disciple who knew Jesus most intimately, the one who laid his head on Jesus' bosom, the disciple "whom Jesus loved"—when he saw Him in His unveiled Deity, he fell at His feet as one dead, paralysed with amazement; then there came the voice he had learned to know in the days of His flesh, saying, "Fear not, I am the first and the last."

Has our discipleship to Jesus a sense of awe about it, or do we patronise Him? At the beginning we were sure that we knew all about Jesus, but now we are not quite so sure; He is taken up with a point of view we know nothing about, and we can no longer be familiar with Him. Instead of walking to triumph as the disciples expected Jesus to do, He goes to disaster; instead of bringing peace, He brings a sword. In every way Jesus enters into "somewhere" that fills us with awe. A time comes when He is no longer Counsellor and Comrade. With one stride He goes deliberately in front and says, "Follow Me," and the things that lie ahead are wildly terrible to us. There is nothing familiar now about Jesus, and there is a dread sense of detachment.

It may be that in our inner life Jesus is teaching us by the disciplining force of His delays. "I expected God to answer my prayer, but He has not." He is bringing us to the place where by obedience we shall see what it is He is after. It may be that, like John, we know Jesus intimately, then suddenly He appears with no familiar characteristic at all, and the only thing we can do is to fall at His feet as one dead. There are times when God cannot reveal Himself in any other way than in His majesty. And out of the midst of the terror there comes the voice we know, saying to us personally—"Fear not." When once His touch comes like that, nothing can at all cast us into fear again.

Y.M.C.A. HUT, SEPTEMBER 23, 1917

SPIRITUAL MALINGERING

O fools, and slow of heart to believe. . . . (Luke 24:25)

To believe is literally to commit. Belief is a moral act, and Jesus makes an enormous demand of a man when He asks him to believe in Him. To be "a believer in Jesus" means to bank our confidence in Him, to stake our soul upon His honour—"I know whom I have believed. . . ." We pray, "Lord, increase our faith," and we try to pump up faith, but it does not come. What is wrong? The moral surrender to Jesus has not taken place. Will I surrender to Jesus from the real centre of my life, and deliberately and wilfully stake my confidence in what He says? Many of us use religious jargon, we talk about believing in God, but our actual life proves that we do not really believe one tithe of what we profess.

If you can solve your problems without Jesus, then solve them, but don't blink any of the facts. "Let not your heart be troubled," says Jesus. Does Jesus really mean that He wants us to be untroubled in heart? "Believe also in Me," i.e., make room for Me, especially in the matters where you cannot go. As we bring the child mind to what Jesus says about things, we will begin to manifest the miracle of an undisturbed heart. In the Cross our Lord deals with everything that keeps a man's heart disturbed.

Unrealised Forgiveness

... to preach ... the unsearchable riches of Christ. (Ephesians 3:8 RV)

"The unsearchable riches of Christ"—yet we often live as if our Heavenly Father had cut us off with a shilling! We think it a sign of real modesty to say at the end of a day—"Oh well, I have just got through, but it has been a severe tussle." We carry our religion as if it were a headache, there is neither joy nor power nor inspiration in it, none of the grandeur of the unsearchable riches of Christ about it, none of the passion of hilarious confidence in God. And the word of our Lord comes home to us that we are half-imbecile children with regard to the things of God—"When will you believe what I say?" Instead of our life being a recommendation of Christianity it is apt to make others say-"Is that what you call Christianity? Why, I have a good deal more moral life than there is in that kind of anaemic whine!" There is nothing in it of the robust strength of confidence in God which will go through anything, and stake its all on the honour of Jesus Christ. Christianity is the vital realisation of the unsearchable riches of Christ.

"In Whom we have our redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of our trespasses . . ." (Ephesians 1:7 RV). Brood on that statement. Divine forgiveness is part of the unsearchable riches that is ours through the Redemption, and it is because we do not realise the miracle of God's forgiveness that spiritual malingering results, that is, we remain feeble and weak in Christian faith in order to evade the enormous demands that our faith makes on us. We talk glibly about forgiving when we have never been injured; when we are injured we know that it is not possible, apart from God's grace, for one human being to forgive another. "I will say no more about it, but I do not intend to forget what you have done." The forgiveness of God is altogether different. When God forgives, He never casts up at us the mean, miserable things we have done. "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins." A cloud cannot be seen when it is gone.

"But that man will take advantage of God's forgiveness." Will I take advantage of God's forgiveness? No one on earth is more mean than I am, no one more capable of doing wrong, and yet we are always more afraid of the other fellow than of ourselves. The forgiveness of God means that we are forgiven into a new relationship, viz., into identification with God in Christ, so that the forgiven man is the holy man. The only explanation of the forgiveness of God and of the unfathomable depth of His forgetting is the blood of Jesus. We trample the blood of the Son of God under foot if we think we are forgiven in any other way. Forgiveness is the Divine miracle of grace.

Unexplored Prayer Zone

Having . . . boldness to enter into the heart by the blood of Jesus. (Hebrews 10:19)

We are apt to think of prayer as an aesthetic religious exercise. The revelation made here is that we have freedom to go straight to the heart of God, as simply as a child going to his mother, by "the new and living way which He hath consecrated for us." Our approach is due entirely to the vicarious identification of our Lord with sin. It is not our earnestness that brings us into touch with God, not our stated times of prayer, but the vitalising death of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Unselfish Sanctification

Wherefore Jesus also, that He might sanctify the people through His own blood . . . (Hebrews 13:12)

"For their sakes I sanctify Myself." Jesus separated His holy Self to the will of His Father. The one characteristic of our Lord's human life was His submission to His Father. "The Son can do nothing of Himself." Our Lord did not come to do His own will. And we are not made holy for ourselves. Sanctification means being identified with Jesus until all the springs of our being are in Him. "... one, even as We are one." We do not experience sanctification for any purpose other than God's purpose.

Forgiveness of sins is the gift of God; entrance into the holiest is the gift of God; sanctification is the gift of God. A man cannot save his own soul, or forgive his sins, or get hold of God in prayer, or sanctify himself; but Jesus reveals that God has done all this in Redemption—are we going to bank on what He has done? As we do, new forces will come into our experimental life drawn entirely from the unsearchable riches, ours through the Redemption. Christian faith means putting our confidence in the efficacy of Christ's work.

When God says we have "our redemption through His blood" (RV), are we going to commit ourselves to Him and bank on His word? When God says; we have "boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus," are we going to draw near in faith? There is boundless entrance into the holiest by the way He has consecrated for us. When God says "Jesus also, that He might sanctify the people through His own blood ..." (RV), are we going to believe Him? By sanctification we understand experimentally what Paul says in 1 Corinthians 1:30—"But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, Who was made unto us ... sanctification" (RV). Sanctification is an impartation, a gift, not an imitation. Sanctification means "Christ formed in you." Jesus gives us the life inherent in Himself.

"When the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?"—the faith that banks on Him in spite of all the confusion? Or will we have to say—"No, Lord, I never trusted You for one moment, I used religious jargon, I put on a religious plaster when I was sore, but I had no confidence whatever in anything You said." We have made Christianity to mean the saving of our skins. Christianity means staking ourselves on the honour of Jesus; His honour means that He will see us through time, death and eternity. Do we credit Jesus Christ with knowing what He is talking about, or are we half imbecile with regard to these truths? When we are standing face to face with Jesus, and He says "Believest thou this?" our faith is as natural as breathing, and we say—"Yes, Lord," and are staggered and amazed that we were so stupid as not to trust Him before.

Y.M.C.A. HUT, SEPTEMBER 30, 1917

THE DEEP EMBARRASSMENTS OF GOD

Hosea 11

When a man who has known God turns away from Him, it is God Who brings out his embarrassments and engineers his enemies. There are barriers placed by God, entanglements of embarrassment, by means of which God says to the personal spirit of the man, "Not that way, My son; if you go that way, you will break your neck and be ruined." It is impossible for a man to go wrong easily; he may drift a tremendously long way easily, he may come to have different standards easily; but if a man has known better than he does now, he has not arrived there easily. "The way of transgressors is hard."

The Mothering Affection of God (Hosea 11:1)

When Israel was a child, then I loved him . . .

The mothering affection of God is revealed all through the Old Testament. A man won't talk of it because it is too precious. "I have nourished and brought up children" (Isaiah 1:2). "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you" (Isaiah 66:13). "I remember for thee the kindness of thy youth" (Jeremiah 2:2 RV). When a man is born again of the Spirit of God, he does not walk by faith, but by sight, everything thrills, it is a delight to be spiritual.

We have all felt the mothering affection of God; are we departing from what we saw then? "My people are bent to backsliding from Me." Backsliding is turning away from what we know to be best to what we know is second-best. If you have known God better than you know Him to-day and are deliberately settling down to something less than the best—watch, for you will not escape, God will bring embarrassments out against you, in your private life, in your domestic life, He will enmesh you on the right hand and on the left. Compare your life with the life of one who has never known God—"they are not in trouble as other men; neither are they plagued like other men."

The Maturity of Attainment (Hosea 11:5–7)

And My people are bent to backsliding from Me. . . . (v. 7)

Never estimate a man under thirty as you would estimate him when over forty. The vices of a man who has not reached maturity are nearly always worse than he really is and his virtues better than he really is. After maturity is reached no vice or virtue is an accident, it is a dead set of attainment. The same is true spiritually. For a while God seems to overlook the blunders and wrongdoing of His children—"The times of ignorance therefore God overlooked; but now He commandeth men that they should all everywhere repent" (Acts 17:30 RV); but when they come to maturity He makes no allowance. Spiritual maturity is not reached by the passing of the years, but by obedience. When Solomon attained to maturity, this significant thing was said of him, that his heart was turned away after other gods; God brought out his embarrassments and engineered his enemies and the things that brought him confusion and distress.

It is easy to have the attitudes of religion, but it is the temper of our mind we have to watch. It is not the wrong things, but our temper of mind in serving God that will turn us from Him. A man may have preached to others and have attained, but now the secret defects of his devotion have come to light, his heart is turned away from God. If we only believe in Jesus because He delivers us from hell, we will forsake Him in two seconds if He crosses our purposes or goes contrary to our personal disposition of mind.

It is the motive in doing right things that may be wrong. Doing a wrong thing may be a haphazard affair to a large extent, but a wrong temper of mind is never a haphazard affair. It is a determined enthronement of something other than God. A man may look all right in his ostensible religious life, he may have had a vivid religious history, but his private life may be rotten. It is a terrible thing to become blunt and insensitive. Sin destroys the power of knowing that we sin, and one of the dangerous outcomes of a mood that is not right with God is that it turns a man into a prig.

It will be a question of slaughter, upset and disaster, then, says God, "they shall follow Me again." If a man has reached maturity and has deliberately put something other than God before him, and is not walking humbly with God, then God will bring things out against him, his enemies will be organised by God. God brought out against His own people nations that did not know Him. Others seem to do wrong and escape, but God is gathering you round, He comes up against you on the right hand and on the left. If you have known Me, says Jesus, and pretend to be abiding in Me and yet are not bringing forth fruit, either My Father will remove you, or if you persist in masquerading, men will gather you and burn you in the fire. The exposing of hypocrisy is never a shock to the cause of God. Judgement begins at the house of God. No man is ever a stumbling-block in the way of another who does the thing he ought to do.

"While ye have light, believe in the light." Believe what you see in your best mood and not what you see in a dark mood. Watch the temper of your mind. Why do you pray? Why are you religious? Because of a consuming passion for a particular set of your beliefs to be enthroned and proved right, or because of a consuming passion for Jesus Christ? If you are religious, beware lest you are keener on the plan of salvation than on the Saviour.

GETTING INTO GOD'S STRIDE

Enoch walked with God. (Genesis 5:24)

The test of a man's religious life and character is not what he does in the exceptional moments of his life, but what he does in the ordinary times when he is not before the footlights, when there is nothing tremendous or exciting on. John looked upon Jesus "as He walked, and saith, Behold, the Lamb of God!" (RV). In learning to walk with God there is the difficulty of getting into His stride; when we have got into His stride, what manifests itself in the life is the characteristic of God. The idea in the Bible is not only that we might be saved, but that we might become sons and daughters of God, and that means having the attitude of God to things.

Individual Discouragement and Personal Enlargement (Exodus 2:11-14)

And it came to pass in those days, when Moses was grown up, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their burdens. (v. 11 RV)

Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, he was a mighty man and a great statesman, and when he saw the oppression of his people he felt that God had called him out to deliver them, and in the righteous indignation of his own spirit he started to right their wrongs. God is never in a hurry. After the first big strike for God and for the right thing, God allowed Moses, the only man who could deliver his own people, to be driven into the desert to feed sheep—forty years of blank discouragement. Then when God appeared and told him to go and bring forth the people, Moses said—"Who am I, that I should go?" The big "I am" had gone, and the little "I am" had taken its place. At first, Moses was certain he was the man, and so he was, but he was not fit yet. He set out to deliver the people in a way that had nothing of the stride of God about it. Moses was right in the individual aspect, but he was not the man for the work until he had learned communion with God, and it took forty years in the desert while God worked through him in ways of terrific personal enlargement before he recognised this.

We may have the vision of God, a very clear understanding of what God wants-wrongs to be righted, the salvation of sinners and the sanctification of believers; we are certain we see the way out, and we start to do the thing. Then comes something equivalent to the forty years in the wilderness, discouragement, disaster, upset, as if God had ignored the whole thing. When we are thoroughly flattened out, God comes back and revives the call, and we get the quaver in, and say "Oh, who am I, that I should go?" We have to learn the first great stride of God—I AM THAT I AM . . . hath sent thee." We have to learn that our individual effort for God is an impertinence, our individuality must be rendered incandescent by a personal relationship to God, and that is not learned easily. The individual man is lost in his personal union with God, and what is manifested is the stride and the power of God. "I indeed baptise you with water unto repentance: but He that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: He shall baptise you with the Holy Ghost and with fire" (Matthew 3:11). Moses had to learn this, and our Lord taught His disciples the same thing—"Ye did not choose Me, but I chose you, and appointed you, that ye should go and bear fruit, and that your fruit should abide: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in My name, He may give it you" (John 15:16 RV), and He emphasises it in John 17:22—"that they may be one, even as We are."

How many of us have gone through this experience of getting into the stride of God? We have the vision, the real life is there, but we have not got into God's stride about the work and we fix on the individual aspect—"This is what God wants me to do." That is only my individual interpretation of what God wants me to do. Our efforts spring from the certainty that we understand God, and in our prayers we dictate to God what we think He ought to do. The individuality suffers terrible discouragement until we learn to get into personal union with God, then we experience an extraordinary enlargement. When the Spirit of God gets me into stride with God, He sheds abroad the love of God in my heart—"God so loved the world . . ." (John 3:16). I have my personal life, my home life, my national life, my individual attitude to things, and it takes time for me to believe that the Almighty pays no regard to any of these; I come slowly into the idea that God ignores my prejudices, wipes them out absolutely.

So the Spirit lifted me up, and took me away: and I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit, and the hand of the LORD was strong upon me. (v. 14 RV)

Ezekiel was inspired of God, God's message was blazing in him—"Wait till I get to the people, I'll tell them what God has said." But when he did get there, he sat down flabbergasted and was dumb for seven days, all his message gone from him, he hadn't the heart to say a solitary word. He was inspired surely enough, directed by God, the blazing message of God was in his heart; but when he saw the condition of his fellow exiles, all he could do was to sit down amongst them in their circumstances and let their circumstances talk to him. Ezekiel had his message, but he had not the communion of God's personal attitude expressed in the particular circumstances, and he sat dumbfounded for seven days. Then his attitude was—"Have I still to give Your message?" And God said, "Yes, now you can give it free from individual spleen in a way which gives exactly My interpretation." Ezekiel had the same message, but when he had come to the inspired direction of God he understood things differently.

We have a blazing inspiration from God, we see perfectly well that certain things are wrong and we know that God will not palliate wrong, but we do not yet understand how to deal rightly with these things. We have our inspired direction, we know that God says men are to be delivered, but we have to remember that when we sit down as Ezekiel did where people are, there is a danger lest we lose all moral distinctions and powers of judging. The danger is that we are so completely overcome with pain over the result of sin in men's lives that we forget to deliver God's message. God says—"Remember, I am a holy God, and when you have come into right relationship with Me, then give My message." When Jesus said to the scribes and Pharisees, "How can ye escape the damnation of hell?" He was speaking not out of personal vindictiveness but with a background of the inevitable—"I have exhibited God before you, yet you turn from Me and despise Me." These words were uttered by the Being Who died on Calvary, and must be read in the light of the Cross.

And he was three days without sight, and did neither eat nor drink.

Saul of Tarsus was "knocked out," and it took him three days to get his breath before he could begin to get into the stride of God. Who was Saul of Tarsus? A Pharisee of the Pharisees, a man of superb integrity and conscientiousness. If there ever was a conscientious objector it was Saul—"I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." He was conscientious when he hounded the followers of Jesus Christ to death. Then came disaster, all his world was flung to pieces. God arrests him, "he was three days without sight, and did neither eat nor drink"; but out of the inscrutable disaster and upset God brought him into a personal experience of Himself. "But when it was the good pleasure of God, Who separated me, even from my mother's womb, and called me through His grace, to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him among the Gentiles; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood" (Galatians 1:15–16 RV). For three years Saul went round about Sinai while the Holy Ghost blazed into him the things that became his Epistles.

It is a painful business getting through into the stride of God, it means getting our "second wind" morally and spiritually. When I start walking with God, I have not taken three strides before I find He has outstripped me; He has different ways of doing things and I have to be trained and disciplined into His ways. It was said of Jesus, "He shall not fail nor be discouraged," because He never worked from His own individual standpoint, but always from the standpoint of His Father. Discouragement is "disenchanted egotism." We learn spiritual truth by atmosphere not by intellectual reasoning; God's spirit alters the atmosphere of our ways of looking at things and things begin to be possible which never were possible before.

If you are going through a period of discouragement there is a big personal enlargement ahead. We have the stride of Divine Healing, of Sanctification, of the Second Coming; all these are right, but the stride of God is never anything less than union with Himself.

Notes of the last sermon preached at Zeitoun, October 14, 1917

DISABLING SHADOWS ON THE SOUL

Yea, they shall be afraid of that which is high, and terrors shall be in the way; and the almond tree shall blossom, and the grasshopper shall be a burden, and the caper-berry shall fail: because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets. (Ecclesiastes 12:5 RV)

Solomon is describing the last lap of a man's life when his nerves give way, and little things become an intolerable burden. There are things like this that come across us naturally and we have difficulty in tracing where they come from; they make us irritable or melancholy. Times when a fly or a mosquito is more annoying than the devil himself. And the same thing is true spiritually; there are times when little things pester and annoy and there is nothing in us big enough to cope with them. This verse is a picture of the shadows which come across a man's soul not because he has done wrong or has backslidden; there is nothing definite about it, but he finds himself belittling everything, there is no vision or power or grandeur in anything. Nothing has been done wrong, there is no reason why you should feel your feet like lead and your heart like ice, and yet you seem about three inches high, with the mind of an insect, irritated and annoved over everything there is. "What is the good of anything at all? What is the good of having done my duty? of praying, or believing in God?" That aspect of things comes over and over again in the Bible and in our own experience. It happens out here physically; you suddenly feel "knocked out" and you don't know why you should. It is a symbol for what happens spiritually.

The Weariness of the Way

And let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. (Galatians 6:9 RV)

When a man sins magnificently he is always punished monotonously, that is the ingenuity of punishment (e.g. Samson). We know about the weariness that comes from wrongdoing, but Paul says, "Don't be weary in welldoing." We all experience the weariness that comes from wrongdoing, but I want to mention the weariness which annoys us because we don't know how it came; why our life suddenly lost all its interest. The point to note is that weariness does come in well-doing, when everything becomes listless. It has no business to be though—it is a sickness of the soul. What is the cure? The cure is that of a right vision. Every man has the power to slay his own weariness, not by "bucking up" as you do physically, but by suddenly looking at things from a different standpoint. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise Him, Who is the health of my countenance, and my God" (Psalm 42:11). It is a tremendous thing to know that God reigns and rules and rejoices, and that His joy is our strength. The confidence of a Christian is that God is never in the sulks. "... the Father of lights, with Whom can be no variation, neither shadow that is cast by turning" (RV).

The Wasting in the Way

Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday. (Psalm 91:6)

In our modern Christian vocabulary we have lost sight of a sin the monks used to recognise, the sin of "Accidie." It took hold of a man at noon and he suddenly became vilely irritable. It is the inarticulate things which are the most devastating of all. Dante places in the deepest cycle of hell the people who were guilty of the sin of gloom. This wasting in the way shows itself in irritability, bad temper and melancholy; you don't seem able to "buck yourself up." If you sit down when you are in the dumps, you are a plague spot to all around you.

The Wandering from Worship

If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on My holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight . . . (Isaiah 58:13)

If I have known God and have seen Him in my clear moments, and in any moment of lassitude have turned away from Him, instantly weariness comes. In spiritual life the danger is to make the effect the cause. Immediately I make doing right my aim, I get weary. This is the right attitude: "For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and ourselves as your servants for Jesus' sake" (2 Corinthians 4:5 RV). When I get my eyes off Him I begin to get weary. I am kept from wasting in the way only as I abide under the shadow of the Almighty and stake my all in confidence in God. I have nothing to do with the results, but only with maintaining my relationship to Him.

"If you refrain from doing your own pleasure on My day." In every family, and in every Christian community, keeping the Sabbath day holy is a chance for ostensibly declaring to the world that we recognise that God is the Head.

Wandering from the vision you once had accounts for weariness and wasting. When you were in your best moments you saw things in a certain way. Believe what you saw then; don't believe what you saw in the lower mood (see John 12:36). The best tonic you can have comes from the man or woman who is merciless to your weariness or wandering; to pander to weariness which has no definite cause is iniquitous. If you are sick or ill that has to be handled in a different way; but if there is weariness or wasting and you cannot get at the cause of it, this is the reason—you have neglected private prayer, neglected worship, neglected doing something you know perfectly well you should have done. It hasn't yet come the length of sin; it is a defect no one notices, but sadness creeps on my soul whenever I deflect from the highest I know.

You have nothing to do with anyone else; look after the vision of your own life, and you will be a benediction to every one with whom you come in contact (John 7:38). Don't try and find out whether you are a blessing, pay attention to the Source, then out of you will flow rivers of living water that you know nothing about. But if you cut yourself off from the Source, and gloom away from God, your weariness and wasting is worse than an epidemic, it is a heavy disease to the spiritual community around.

Let me watch whether I am wandering from worship, from the highest I know; I do not wander alone. The wasting that destroys me in the noontide of my spiritual life, or the weariness that comes over me, is a thing that hinders others. Let me get back again to the place where the airs and the light and the liberty of God come, and all the time there flows through the inspiration to others.

Source

The material in The Psychology of Redemption is taken from lectures at the Bible Training College, London,¹ from April 15 through June 31, 1915, and from talks on "Christian Psychology" given in the evening class at Zeitoun, Egypt,² January 24 through February 8, 1916.

Publication History

- As articles: It is unusual that the material was never published as articles, as most of the other OC books were. The publication of the book predates the existence of the BTC Monthly Journal, which was published from 1932 to 1952, and the lectures never appeared in Spiritual Life, the League of Prayer⁴ magazine.
- As a book: In 1919, Mrs. Chambers and her daughter, Kathleen, 5 returned to England from Egypt. In 1922, they were living in Yarnton, in a small cottage with no electricity or running water. With financial help from friends, she had The Psychology of Redemption printed in Oxford, the first book after her return. The second edition was published in 1930, and the third edition in 1935.

In David Lambert's⁶ foreword to the second edition, he notes that he first heard these lectures at the convention of the League of Prayer held in Perth, Scotland, in August 1914. Mrs. Chambers did not attend that convention with Oswald, so her notes came, as she states in her foreword, from the lectures at the BTC⁷ and in Egypt.

The outline reproduced at the beginning of the first chapter is typical of Chambers' teaching method. Through the use of large chalkboard outlines for virtually all his lectures, he created visual and verbal keys to aid his students in remembering the content.

^{1.} Bible Training College (BTC): residential school near Clapham Common in southwest London; sponsored by the League of Prayer; operated from 1911 until it closed in July 1915 because of World War I. Oswald Chambers was principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers, his wife, was lady superintendent.

Zeitoun (zay TOON), Egypt: six miles northeast of Cairo; site of a YMCA camp, the Egypt General Mission compound, and, from 1916 to 1919, the Imperial School of Instruction, training base for British, Australian, and New Zealand troops during World War I.

FOREWORD (TO THE FIRST EDITION)

This book is compiled from verbatim notes taken of lectures given in 1915 to the students at the Bible Training College, Clapham, and in the following year to men of the Egyptian Expeditionary force in the Y.M.C.A. Hut, Zeitoun, Egypt.

"Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on Me through their word" (John 17:20). This book is just the "word" of a disciple of Jesus Christ's, and it is sent out with the prayer that it may be the "great disposing word" of God in many lives.

FOREWORD TO THE SECOND EDITION

I have rough notes of these lectures as given in their first form at the Perth Convention⁹ in 1914. I sat enthralled at the beauty and power of the truth being given to us. The essential message of this book was expressed then in these words: "In the Life of our Lord, as Son of Man, when He transformed innocence into holiness by a series of moral choices, He gave the pattern forever of how a holy character was to be developed." It is a basic book. It reminds me of Henry Scougal's Life of God in the Soul of Man, a volume that greatly influenced Whitefield and the Wesleys. That Aberdeen Professor wrote in 1668, "The power and life of religion may be better expressed in actions than in words. . . . They are perfectly exemplified in the Holy Life of our Blessed Saviour, a main part of whose business in this world was to teach by His practice what He did require of others; and to make His own conversation an exact resemblance of those rules which He prescribed. So that if ever true goodness was visible to mortal eyes it was then when His Presence did beautify and illustrate this lower world."

Oswald Chambers here shows us the parallel between our Lord's wondrous life on earth and our life lived in His Name. The psychology of the sanctified life is perfectly illustrated in our Lord's life as set forth in the Gospels. The First Adam mishandled and disarranged his human nature. The Last Adam restored Human Nature to a right working relation to God. When through the Atonement and the New Birth we are lifted into the shared life of our Risen Lord, the same laws of development operate for us as with Him. And "Christian psychology is not a knowledge of man, but a knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." To profit by this book demands concentrated thought, with Bible in hand, and with a humble eagerness to "act on the Word, instead of merely listening to it and deluding yourselves,' James 1:22 MOFFATT. This book meets a timely need because it shows how "holiness" works out in human nature as we know it. It shows how sin has taken possession of human nature, but that sin is abnormal. Sin is the outcome of a relationship which God never ordained. Our Lord in His Human Nature cancelled that wrong relationship through His Cross; and established a new relationship. It is in that new relationship we work out that holiness of life and thought and feeling and purpose and service which is the fulfilment of the New Covenant promise, Hebrews 8:10-12.

I pray that the book may prove as great a blessing to many thoughtful students as it has been to some of us for years, bringing them to the Apostolic climax of confession, "For to me to live IS CHRIST."

WHERE TO START THESE STUDIES

1 Corinthians 2:11-15

1 Corinthians 15:45-50

First Man—Adam Living Soul (v. 45)	Second Man—Christ Quickening Spirit (v. 45)	New Man—Saint Earthy and Heavenly Image (v. 48)
Natural (v. 46)	Spiritual (v. 46)	Earthy Effaced by Heavenly Image (v. 49)
Earthy (v. 47)	Heavenly (v. 47)	Divinely Inherited Kingdom of God (v. 50)

Christian Psychology is based on the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, not on the knowledge of ourselves. It is not the study of human nature analysed and expounded, but the study of the new life that is born in us through the Redemption of our Lord, and the only Standard of that new life is our Lord Himself; He is formed in us by regeneration (Galatians 1:15–16). We are apt to start with the way we are made naturally and to transfer our reasonings on that to Jesus Christ, inferring that to understand ourselves is to understand Him. In Christian Psychology we have not to introspect as we do in natural psychology; we have to accept the revelations given to us in and through our Lord Jesus Christ; that is, we must take all our bearings from the Son of God, not from our natural wits. We have not to study and understand ourselves; but to understand the manifestation in us of the life of the Son of God Who became Son of Man, the Lord Jesus Christ.

According to the Bible, there are only two Men: Adam and Jesus Christ, and God deals with them as the representatives of the human race, not as individuals. All the members of the human race are grouped round these two Men. The first Adam is called "the son of God"; the last Adam is the Son of God, and we are made sons of God by the last Adam. The Christian is neither Adam nor Jesus Christ, the Christian is a new man in Christ Jesus. The first Adam and the last Adam are the only two Men according to God's norm, and they both came into this world direct from the hand of God.

First Man

Living Soul

The first man Adam was made a living soul. (1 Corinthians 15:45)

Beware of dividing man up into body, soul and spirit. Man is body, soul and spirit. Soul is the expression of man's personal spirit in his body. Spirit means I, myself, the incalculable being that is "me," the essence that expresses itself in the soul. The immortal part of a man is not his soul, but his spirit. Man's spirit is as indestructible as Almighty God; the expression of his spirit in the soul depends on the body. In the Bible the soul is always referred to in connection with the body. The soul is the holder of the body and spirit together, and, when the body disappears, the soul disappears, but the essential personality of the man remains. In the resurrection there is another body and instantly the soul life is manifested again (John 5:28–29). It is not a resurrection of spirit, i.e., personality, that never dies, but of body and soul.

A "living soul" means man expressing himself as God designed he should. God created man a splendid moral being, fitted to rule the earth and air and sea, but he was not to rule himself; God was to be his Master, and man was to turn his natural life into a spiritual life by obedience. Had Adam done so, the members of the human race would have gone on developing until they were transfigured into the presence of God; there would have been no death. Death to us has become natural, but the Bible reveals it to be abnormal. Adam refused to turn the natural into the spiritual; he took dominion over himself and thereby became the introducer of the heredity of sin into the human race (Romans 5:12), and instantly lost his control over the earth and air and sea. The entrance of sin means that the connection with God has gone and the disposition of self-realisation, my right to myself, has come in its place.

"For by Him were all things created . . ." (Colossians 1:16). Did God then create sin? Sin is not a creation; sin is the outcome of a relationship which God never ordained, a relationship set up between the man God created and the being God created who became the devil. God did not create sin, but He holds Himself responsible for the possibility of sin, and the proof that He does so is in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. Calvary is God's responsibility undertaken and carried through as Redemption. The essential nature of sin is my claim to my right to myself, and when sin entered in, the connection between man and God was instantly severed; at-oneness was no longer possible.

Natural

Unless we are born again, we will always be "natural" men. In John 3, our Lord is not talking about sin and hell, He is talking to a religious leader, a cleanliving, upright, good, noble man—a natural man and it was to him that He said—"Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." The general idea is that a man must be a blackguard before Jesus Christ can do anything for him. The average preaching of the Gospel deals mainly with the scenic cases, with people who have gone through exceptional experiences. None of the early disciples had had these exceptional experiences; they saw in Jesus Christ what they had never seen before—a Man from another realm, and they began to long after what He stood for. We preach to men as if they were conscious of being dying sinners; they are not, they are having a good time, and our talk about being born again is from a domain of which they know nothing. The natural man does not want to be born again.

Earthy

This is man's glory, not his shame, because it is in a creature made of the earth that God is going to manifest His glory. We are apt to think that being made of the earth is our humiliation, but it is the very point that is made much of in God's word. In the Middle Ages it was taught that sin resided in the actual fleshly body, and that therefore the body was a clog and a hindrance. The Bible says that the body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, not a thing to be despised. Sin is not in having a body and a nature that needs to be sacrificed; sin is in refusing to sacrifice them at the call of God. Sin is a disposition which rules the body, and regeneration means not only that we need not obey the disposition of sin, but that we can be absolutely delivered from it (Romans 6:6).

Second Man

Quickening Spirit
The last Adam was made a quickening spirit. (1 Corinthians 15:45)

Jesus Christ came into the human race from the outside, and when we are born again, His life comes into us from the outside. Jesus Christ is the normal man, and in His relationship to God, to the devil, to sin and to man we see the expression in human nature of what He calls "eternal life." We try to enter the life of Jesus in the wrong way. We do not enter into His life by imitation: we enter into it by its entering into us by means of His death. Jesus Christ gives us His life, viz., Holy Spirit. When we ask God for the Holy Spirit, we receive the very nature of God, Holy Spirit. We become regenerate, born from above (RV mg), by the gift of life from the last Adam, then we have to live in obedience to that Spirit which has come into our spirit.

The records in the Gospels are given, not so much that we might understand the Person of our Lord from the natural standpoint, but that we might understand how to exhibit His life in us when we are born from above (RV mg). We have to take our instructions for this from Jesus Christ. The danger is lest we praise God's salvation and sovereign grace while we refuse to manifest His salvation in our human nature.

Spiritual

That which is not earthy, but in accordance with the nature of spirit. There are counterfeit spiritualities, but the spirituality of Jesus Christ is a holy spirituality. Jesus Christ worked from a spiritual standpoint, the Spirit of God so indwelt Him that His spirituality was manifested in His ordinary soul life.

Heavenly

The second man is the Lord from heaven. (1 Corinthians 15:47)

The Second Man is the Son of God historically manifested, and the prophecy of what the human race is going to be. In Him we deal with God as Man, the God-Man, the Representative of the whole human race in one Person. Jesus Christ is not a Being with two personalities; He is Son of God (the exact expression of Almighty God), and Son of Man (the presentation of God's normal man). As Son of God, He reveals what God is like (John 14:9); as Son of Man, He mirrors what the human race will be like on the basis of Redemption—a perfect oneness between God and man (Ephesians 4:13).

New Man

Earthy and Heavenly Image

As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy: and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. (1 Corinthians 15:48)

The "natural" has not life in itself, therefore we must be born from above (RV mg). To be born from above means that we are lifted into heavenly places in our personal spirit by the Holy Spirit Who comes into us, He quickens us all through. The Holy Spirit does in us what Jesus Christ did for us. Holy Spirit is essential Deity, and He energises our spirit and presences us with Deity as our Lord was presenced. Holy Spirit never becomes our spirit, He quickens our spirit, and instantly we begin to express a new soul.

When God's Spirit comes into our personality, our soul life begins to be upset, and the bodily life often gets disorganised. Health is simply the balance of our bodily life with external circumstances, anything that upsets the equilibrium on the inside upsets the bodily equilibrium on the outside, consequently when a man is convicted of sin, his "beauty consumes away like a moth" (Psalm 39:11). Beauty means the perfectly ordered completeness of a man's nature. A man into whom the Spirit of God has entered is for a while out of harmony. The Spirit of God brings upset and conviction, He throws light on what is dark, He searches the recesses of the disposition; consequently the preaching of the Gospel, while it awakens an intense craving, awakens an equally intense resentment. Conviction of sin means that we realise that our natural life is based on a disposition that will not have Jesus Christ. If the man will obey the Holy Spirit, the new balance of holiness will be set up, the balance of his disposition with the law of God. Then he must obey God's will in his body, and this will mean crucifying the flesh with its affections and lusts (Galatians 5:24).

Earthy Effaced by Heavenly Image

And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. (1 Corinthians 15:49)

Have you never seen the earthy effaced by the heavenly? Watch the face of a man or woman who has been born again and who is going on with God; there is a change in the features which cannot be defined. The explanation of it is that when God makes us all over again, our bodies are moulded by the new Spirit within and begin to manifest that Spirit (2 Corinthians 5:17). When we receive the Holy Spirit, He lifts us into the realm where Jesus Christ lives, and all things become new. We cannot estimate Jesus Christ along the natural line, He does not belong to this order of things, and He says that if we want to belong to His order we must be born from above (John 3:3, 7 RV mg). Tolstoi taught the principles of Jesus, but he ignored the need to be born again. Let a man receive the Holy Spirit, and Jesus Christ will do in him all that he ever imagined He would do, and he will find that it works all the time.

Nothing is born without pain, and a man cannot be born into the Kingdom of God without pain. He must have his conscience and his mind readjusted, and this will mean pain. Redemption makes a man right for heaven, but there is much more in it than that. New birth has to do with being of value to God in this present order of things.

Divinely Inherited Kingdom of God

Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. (1 Corinthians 15:50)

The characteristics of the natural man, apart from sin, are independence and individuality. Individuality is the strong and emphatic and somewhat ugly husk that guards the personal life. Individuality is a right characteristic in a child, but in a man or woman it is not only objectionable but dangerous, because it means independence of God as well as of other people, and independence of God is of the very nature of sin. The only way we can get rid of the pride of individuality and become one with Jesus Christ is by being born from above (RV mg).

Sin dwells in human nature, but the Bible makes it very clear that it is an abnormal thing, it has no right there, it does not belong to human nature as God designed it. Sin has come into human nature and perverted and twisted it. The Redemption of God through our Lord Jesus Christ delivers human nature from sin, and then begins the possibility of the manifestation of the life of Jesus in our mortal flesh. We are saved by God's grace, but, thank God, we have something to do. We must take care to meet God's supernatural work of grace by our human obedience. When we have been delivered from sin, the characteristics of our natural life have to be sacrificed, not murdered, not denied in the sense of being ignored, but sacrificed, that is, transformed into agreement with the heavenly by obedience (Ephesians 4:23). We are saved from sin and readjusted to God, but we are still human beings, and we have to take the trouble to actually prove what God has really done in us. God never saves men and women the trouble of manifesting the fact that He has made them His sons and daughters. We begin all right, but it is easy to get switched off. If we do not continue to live in the right place, we will get back into "Adam" sympathies. It is on "Adam" sympathies that much of our Christian work is based, not on sympathy with Jesus Christ, the last Adam. Satan's temptations of our Lord were based on sympathy with the first Adam—"Put men's needs first." Jesus Christ says—"Do not think first of the needs of the people; think first of the commands of God" (Mark 12:29-31).

Natural individuality holds strongly to natural relationships. The natural relationships on which individuality is based are—father, mother, brothers and sisters, husband and wife, children, self-interest. These are the relationships with which our Lord says we are likely to clash if we are going to be His disciples. If the clash comes, He says it must be instant obedience to Him (Luke 14:26). Our obedience to Jesus Christ is going to cost other people a great deal, and if we refuse to go on because of the cost to them, or because of the stab and the jeer, we may find that we have prevented the call of God coming to other lives; whereas if we will go through with God, all these natural relationships will be given to our credit spiritually in the final wind-up.

The Records of Christ (John 5:39 RV)

The Realisation of Christ (1 Corinthians 1:30)

Some Things to Realise

The Evangelical Experience (The Synoptic Gospels and St. John)

The Examined Experience (The Epistles)

The Exercised Experience (The Present Obedience)

The basis of Christian Psychology is not a knowledge of man, but a knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is easy to put up our Lord as an Example, but according to the New Testament He is much more. He is the Redeemer, One who can reproduce His own life in us. To be born from above (RV mg) means more than conversion. It means that Christ is formed in us, and the Christ in us must be exactly like the Christ outside us. The characteristics that Jesus Christ exhibited in His human life are to be exhibited in the Christian. Christian Psychology is based on our realisation of Who the Lord Jesus Christ is and on an experimental understanding of His life in us.

There is a difference between sight and the organ of sight. Most of us are quite content to see, we do not bother about the organ of sight. But when something goes wrong with the organ of sight those of us who can see only are of no use to put the eye right; we must know how the organ of sight is constructed.

The Christian worker is apt to say—"Oh, well, I have been saved by God's grace and that is sufficient." It may be sufficient for you, but if you are going to be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed," you must do more than "be saved," you must take the trouble to find out what the Bible says about that salvation. Most of us are like the folks who are content with being able to see; but the organ of sight spiritually in many has gone wrong, and we have no knowledge of how to deal with it, all we can do is to give our testimony. That is not good enough. The point of the study of Christian Psychology is not only that we might understand salvation for ourselves, but that we might understand how to assist others.

Some Things to Remember The Revelation of Christ

And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven. (Matthew 16:16–17)

The Lord Jesus Christ is not a commonsense fact, that is, we do not understand Him by means of our common sense. The disciples at this stage only knew Jesus Christ by means of their common sense—by their eyes and ears and all the powers of commonsense men; they had never discerned Who He was. Our Lord is a revelation fact, and when Peter confessed, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Jesus Christ recognised from Whom he had received the revelation, not from his common sense, but from God. Is Jesus Christ a revelation to me, or is He simply an historical character?

The Bible is the universe of revelation facts; the natural world is the universe of commonsense facts, and our means of communication with the two universes is totally different. We come in contact with the natural universe by our senses, our intellect has to be curious. Scientific knowledge, which is systematised common sense, is based on intense intellectual curiosity. Curiosity in the natural world is right, not wrong, and if we are not intellectually curious we shall never know anything, God never encourages laziness.

When we come to the universe of the Bible, the revelation facts about God, intellectual curiosity is not of the slightest use. Our senses are no good here, we cannot find out God by searching. We may have inferences from our common-sense thinking which we call God, but these are mere abstractions. We can only get at the facts that are revealed in the Bible by faith. Faith is not credulity; faith is my personal spirit obeying God. The Bible does not deal in commonsense facts; the natural universe deals in commonsense facts, and we get at these by our senses. The Bible deals with revelation facts, facts we cannot get at by our common sense, facts we may be pleased to make light of by our common sense. For instance, Jesus Christ is a revelation fact, sin is another, the devil is another, the Holy Spirit is another. Not one of these is a common-sense fact. If a man were merely a common-sense individual, he could do very well without God.

In order to get scientific knowledge we must use our common sense; but if we are going to know the facts with which Jesus Christ deals, the facts which He says belong to the Kingdom of God, we must have them revealed to us. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again," before you can come into contact with the domain in which I live. The domain in which Jesus Christ lives is the domain of Bible facts. How are we to get the revelation of Jesus Christ? Very simply, if we want it. Jesus Christ said that the Holy Spirit would glorify Him, and we can receive Holy Spirit for the asking (Luke 11:13). Then we too shall be in the same category as Peter, and Jesus Christ will say to us, "Blessed art thou, . . . for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven." Jesus Christ is a Revelation, and we can get the revelation of Him by receiving the Holy Spirit. Jesus Christ continually said things (such as Luke 11:13) the meaning of which cannot be got at by common sense. Have we ever received Holy Spirit? If we refuse any one way of getting at the truth because we do not like that way, we are dishonest.

The Records of Christ

Ye search the scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have eternal life. (John 5:39 RV)

The Scriptures, from Genesis to Revelation, are all revelations of Jesus Christ. The context of the Bible is our Lord Himself, and until we get rightly related to Him, the Bible is no more to us than an ordinary book. Common sense does not reveal Jesus Christ; to common sense He is nothing more than a Nazarene carpenter who lived twenty centuries ago. No natural man can know Jesus Christ (Matthew 11:27). Higher criticism, so called, works on the lines of common sense, consequently when it deals with our Lord (Whose highest sense is not common sense, but Deity), He has to be explained away, His Person is "dissolved by analysis" (1 John 4:1–3). The findings of higher criticism may be logically proved, but the biggest facts in life are not logical. If they were, we should be able to calculate our ends and make sure of things on rational logical lines. Logical truth is merely the explanation of facts which common sense has gathered. Men say, "I must have these things proved to my reason." How much good spiritually did a man ever get by proving things to his reason? In spiritual matters logical processes do not count. Curiosity does not count, nor argument, nor reasoning; these are of no avail for spiritual discernment. There is only one golden rule for spiritual discernment, and that is obedience. We learn more by five minutes' obedience than by ten years' study. Logic and reasoning are methods of expounding Reality, but we do not get at Reality by our intellect. Reality is only got at by our conscience. When we deal with the records of Christ we are dealing with fundamental realities, not with intellectual problems. Faith in God is the only way of coming in touch with the fundamental realities, and there is nothing logical about faith; it is of the nature of life.

After we are born again, the Bible becomes a new Book to us, and we search the Scriptures, not to get "life" out of them, but to know more about Jesus Christ. "Ye search the scriptures, because ye think that in them ye have eternal life, . . . and ye will not come to Me that ye might have life" (John 5:39–40 RV). The vital relationship which the Christian has to the Bible is not that he worships the letter, but that the Holy Spirit makes the words of the Bible spirit and life to him. Before we are born from above (RV mg) the Bible is only an ordinary book; after we are born from above, the Bible becomes a universe of revelation facts whereby we feed our knowledge of Jesus Christ.

The Realisation of Christ

But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. (1 Corinthians 1:30)

In Proverbs 8, we read of Pre-incarnate Wisdom, and in John's Gospel that Wisdom is referred to as the Logos, or Word. Historically, the Word was called Jesus Christ. The whole wisdom of God has come down to the shores of our lives in a flesh and blood Man, and John says, we have seen Him and we know Him. How are we to realise Jesus Christ? He says "Come unto Me," and there is no profounder word in human language than that. The one thing that keeps us from coming to Jesus Christ is obstinacy; we will do anything rather than come. It is not God's will that a man should be smashed before he is saved, it is the man's obstinacy that does it. There is no need to go through the agonies and distresses that so many do go through, it is because men will not come. If we want to realise Jesus Christ, He says "Come unto Me," and when we do come, God makes Him "unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." If Jesus Christ is not revealed to us it is because we have views of our own, and we want to bend everything to those views. In order to realise Christ we must come to Him. That is, we must learn to trust Someone other than ourselves, and to do this we must deliberately efface ourselves. Devotion and piety are apt to be the greatest opponents of Jesus Christ, because we devote ourselves to devotion instead of to Him. To surrender to God is not to surrender to the fact that we have surrendered. That is not coming at all. To come means that we come to God in complete abandonment and give ourselves right over to Him and leave ourselves in His hands. The Lord Jesus Christ is the one Person to Whom we ought to yield, and we must be perfectly certain that it is to Himself that we are yielding. Do not be sorry if other appeals find you stiff-necked and unyielding; but be sorry if, when He says "Come unto Me," you do not come. The attitude of coming is that the will resolutely lets go of everything and deliberately commits all to Him.

Some Things to Realise

The Evangelical Experience

The Synoptics are the first three Gospels; John's writings include his Epistles and the Apocalypse as well as his Gospel. Our Lord neither talked of Conversion and Regeneration and Sanctification in stages; neither does the Apostle John. If we get hold of books which talk in the stages of experience and then come to the Gospels where those stages are not marked, we are apt to get embarrassed. The Gospels always present truth in "nugget" form, and if we want to know the stages of evangelical experience, we must go to the Epistles which beat out into negotiable gold the nuggets of truth presented by our Lord. In John 3, our Lord is not talking about the stages of conversion; He is talking in the great terms of what He came to do-viz., to make Redemption the basis of human life. We can introduce other things into His words if we like, but we must not say He said them. Our Lord is not examining the evangelical experience, He is stating it. He said to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again." That is not a command, but the statement of a foundation fact.

We mean by the Evangelical Experience an experience based on the fact that the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, that is, His death, is the gateway for us into His life. We delight to hear about the life of Jesus, it captivates our imagination to hear sermons on following in His steps—until we find that we cannot begin to do it. "Jesus Christ was a great Teacher." So He was, an amazing Teacher, but where are you going to begin to carry out what He says? The Sermon on the Mount is exquisitely beautiful teaching, and it fascinates us so long as we deal with it intellectually only, but when it comes down to our daily life, practical and sordid and real, we find we cannot begin to carry it out. We may give our mental assent to it, but our actual life won't walk that road. The teachings of Jesus must produce despair, because if He meant what He said, where are we in regard to it? The revelation of the New Testament is not that Jesus Christ came to teach primarily but that He came to redeem, to make us what He teaches we should be. Then the teachings of Jesus become the description of what God has undertaken to make a man if he will let the power of God work through him. Redemption means that Jesus Christ can give us His own disposition, and all the standards He gives are based on that disposition—i.e., His teaching is for the life He puts in us. We enter into the life of Jesus by means of His death, that is our only door of entrance. We may try and batter through some other way if we choose—through Bethlehem, through the teachings of Jesus, but we cannot get in. Those ways in would produce frauds and humbugs. If a teacher or preacher has not an evangelical experience himself, his preaching and teaching will degenerate into mere intellectual common sense. It may be smeared over with the teachings of Jesus and may sound beautiful, but there is no power in it to alter anything in us. We cannot get into the life of Jesus by imitation, by trying to do the right thing, because something in us will not do it. We can only enter in by identification with His death. The Cross of Jesus Christ is not the cross of a martyr, but the door whereby God keeps open house for the universe. Anyone can go in through that door. The Cross is the historical presentation of the one Reality there is, viz., Redemption, and if we come to Jesus that Reality works in us by the incoming of the Holy Spirit and we find that we are brought into a new Kingdom. There is something totally different now, we can do what we could not do before. We can show in our bodily life the disposition of Jesus Christ which we receive by means of His Cross, we can begin now to live the kind of life He lived.

The Examined Experience

The evangelical experience is stated in the Synoptics and in John's writings in its great wonderful revelation form, not in its examined stages; but if we want to have the experience examined and stated so that we can see its stages and get a grasp of it, we must turn to the Epistles. The Epistles are the posthumous writings of the Ascended Lord; He sent the Holy Ghost, and the "pens" used were the apostles, and the expositions given are from the Holy Ghost. Our Lord's teachings and the expositions given in the Epistles stand or fall together. The Epistles are our guide in finding out the stages of the experience. There we will find all about Conversion, about Regeneration, and about Sanctification. We will find the stages all carefully set forth, but we must take the trouble to find them out. Acts 26:18 gives the examined experience in condensed form better than any other passage in the New Testament. We so often try to worry out Jesus Christ's statements apart from the guidance of the Holy Spirit. It is the workman of God who can rightly divide the word of truth who becomes the expert in the things of God, and when anyone is being led astray by false doctrines, the expert can show what is wrong.

The Exercised Experience

If we have experienced regeneration, we must not only talk about the experience, we must exercise it and work out what God has worked in (Philippians 2:12-13). We have to show it in our fingertips, in our tongue, and in our bodily contact with other people, and as we obey God we find we have a wealth of power on the inside. The question of forming habits on the basis of the grace of God is a very vital one. To ignore it is to fall into the snare of the Pharisee—the grace of God is praised, Jesus Christ is praised, the Redemption is praised, but the practical everyday life evades working it out. If we refuse to practise, it is not God's grace that fails when a crisis comes, but our own nature. When the crisis comes, we ask God to help us, but He cannot if we have not made our nature an ally. The practising is ours, not God's. God regenerates us and puts us in contact with all His divine resources, but He cannot make us walk according to His will. If we will obey the Spirit of God and practise through our physical life all that God has put in our hearts by His Spirit, then when the crisis comes we shall find that we have not only God's grace to stand by us but our own nature also, and the crisis is passed without any disaster, but exactly the opposite happens, the soul is built up into a stronger attitude towards God.

HIS BIRTH AND OUR NEW BIRTH

Do I seek for signs of the kingdom of God, or do I see the rule of God?

(John 3:3)

Do I seek to stop sinning, or have I stopped sinning? (1 John 3:9)

The basis of Christian Psychology is in Jesus Christ, not in Adam. Therefore, if we are to study the characteristics of the Christian soul, we must not look to Adam or to our own experience, but to Jesus Christ, the Foundation. Christian Psychology is the study of a supernatural life made natural in our human life by the Redemption. We do not know Jesus Christ by knowing ourselves; to think we do is a modern fallacy. "No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him" (Matthew 11:27). If we are ever going to know the Father and the Son, we must have their nature, and we are not born with it. The meaning of New Birth is that we know God by a vital relationship, not only by our intellect. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God . . . which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John 1:12-13). The characteristics of the new-birth life are not the characteristics of our natural life, but the supernatural characteristics of our Lord's life, which we have to see are manifested in our natural life. Jesus Christ sets the standard of God's life in us. We have not to ask what good men have experienced, but to go direct to the Lord Jesus Christ and study His exhibition of the character of God's normal man.

His Birth in History

And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God. (Luke 1:35)

Jesus Christ was born into this world, not from it. He came into history from the outside of history; He did not evolve out of history. Our Lord's birth was an advent; He did not come from the human race, He came into it from above. Jesus Christ is not the best human being, He is a Being Who cannot be accounted for by the human race at all. He is God Incarnate, not man becoming God, but God coming into human flesh, coming into it from the outside. His Life is the Highest and the Holiest entering in at the lowliest door. Our Lord entered history by the Virgin Mary.

His Birth in Me

My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you. (Galatians 4:19)

Just as our Lord came into human history from the outside, so He must come into us from the outside. Have we allowed our personal human lives to become a "Bethlehem" for the Son of God? The modern tendency is to talk of birth from beneath, not of birth from above, of something rising up out of our unconscious life into our conscious life, not of something coming into us from above. This preaching has so permeated people's views to-day that many who name the Name of Christ and are supposed to be preaching His Gospel are at the same time undermining the very foundations of their own faith.

We cannot enter into the realm of the Kingdom of God unless we are born from above (RV mg), by a birth totally unlike natural birth (John 3:5). People have the idea that because there is good in human nature (and, thank God, there is a lot of good in human nature) that therefore the Spirit of God is in every man naturally, meaning that the Spirit of God in us will become the Christ in us if we let Him have His way. Take that view if you like, but never say it is the view of the New Testament. It certainly is not our Lord's view. He said to Nicodemus, "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again," that is, something must come into you from the outside. To-day people are dethroning Jesus Christ and belittling the need of salvation by making new birth to mean nothing more than a rising up from beneath. The conception of new birth in the New Testament is of something that enters into us, not of something that springs out of us.

We are dealing with New Birth as our Lord presents it. The Holy Spirit, sent by Jesus after He was glorified, is the One Who expounds the various stages in the experience of new birth. Our Lord never speaks in stages of experience, and the reason people divide into stages what our Lord said to Nicodemus is that they have taken their light from the Epistles. We are not dealing just now with the stages of experience, but with the fact of new birth—Christ formed in me. This does not correspond to what is evangelically known as being saved, but rather to the Methodist doctrine of entire sanctification, which is but the beginning of the purpose of the Christian life. If we are to understand how the new birth is to work, we must look at the Epistles. Paul alludes to the new birth life at work when he says, "I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you." It is the travailing of one who has himself been born from above (RV mg). How many of us know anything about this travailing for those who have been really quickened by the Holy Spirit until Christ is formed in them? We are apt to rejoice in the number of souls who are evangelically described as being saved, but what becomes of them all? They have been introduced into the Kingdom of God, but as yet there is no evidence that Christ is formed in them. Jesus Christ sent His disciples to "disciple" all nations. The regeneration of souls is God's work; our work as saved souls is to work under His orders on the basis of Redemption, and Galatians 4:19 is an indication of what that work is. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into His harvest" (Matthew 9:38). The labour is prayer. We labour on the ground of our Lord's Redemption in simple confidence in Him.

Do I come to Jesus because of what they say or because of what I see?

But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, . . . which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. (John 1:12–13)

The Life after new birth has very simple characteristics. In order to know whether we have been born from above (RV mg), we must be guided by the revelation given by our Lord. One great characteristic of new birth is that we come to Jesus not only because of what we have heard about Him, but because of what we see He is to us now. Our Lord did not send forth His disciples on the ground of what He had done for them; He sent them because they had seen Him after His resurrection, and because they knew Who He was—"Now go and tell My brethren." Mary Magdalene was His first apostle, she was the one out of whom our Lord had cast seven devils, but that was not to be the ground of her going. It was not until she had realised Who her Lord was after His resurrection, and the altered relationship in which she now stood to Him, that He said—"Go." If Christ is formed in us, the great characteristic is that we know Him and perceive Him for ourselves. We do not need anyone to tell us about Him now, He is our Lord and Master.

Another characteristic of new birth is that Jesus Christ is easily first. Where do we go in a crisis? If we are born from above (RV mg) and Jesus Christ is Lord and Master, we will go direct as a homing pigeon to Him. The reason the majority of us know so little about the Lordship of Jesus Christ is that we only know the quickening of His Spirit, we have not gone on to the experience of Christ being formed in us. We know a great deal about the evangelical doctrine of being saved from hell, but very little about Galatians 1:15-16. In Acts 1:8 our Lord said this striking thing—"Ye shall be witnesses unto Me." When Christ is formed in us, we are a satisfaction to our Lord and Master wherever He places us. The point of importance is to know that we are just exactly where He has engineered our circumstances. There is no "foreign field" to our Lord. The reason we feel called to foreign mission work is because God introduces His own nature into us when we are identified with Jesus Christ (John 3:16). We know what the nature of God is like, because we see it manifested in Jesus Christ. Immediately Christ is formed in us, His nature begins to work through our hearts and to alter our conceptions.

Do I seek for signs of the kingdom of God, or do I see the rule of God?

Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. (John 3:3)

Another evidence of new birth is that we see the rule of God. We no longer see the haphazard of chance or fate, but by the experience of new birth we are enabled to see the rule of God everywhere. "Who hath believed that which we have heard? And to whom hath the arm of the LORD been revealed?" (Isaiah 53:1 RV mg). Literally, "Who has the power to discern the arm of the LORD?" We all see the common occurrences of our daily life, but who amongst us can perceive the arm of the Lord behind them? The saint recognises in all the ordinary circumstances of his life the hand of God and the rule of God, and Iesus savs we cannot do that unless we are born from above (RV mg). In the beginning we only discern the rule of God in exceptional things, in crises like a friendship, or marriage, or death, but that is an elementary stage. As we go on we learn to see God's rule in all the ordinary haphazard circumstances of a common-sense life, and to say, "I shall never think of anything my Heavenly Father will forget, then why should I worry?" Are we irritable and worried? Then do not let us say we are born from above, because if what Jesus says is true, how can we worry? Worry means one of two things—private sin, or the absence of new birth. Nothing happens by chance to a saint, no matter how haphazard it seems. It is the order of God, and the experience of new birth means that we are able to discern the order of God.

The Sermon on the Mount is not a set of principles to be obeyed apart from identification with Jesus Christ. The Sermon on the Mount is a statement of the life we will live when the Holy Spirit is getting His way with us. The Holy Spirit applies the principles of Jesus to our circumstances as God engineers them, and we have to see that we exhibit the new birth life at work. Tolstoi made the blunder of applying the principles of Jesus straight away to practical circumstances while he ignored the need for the new birth. Jesus Christ does not lay down the statements in the Sermon on the Mount as principles and say, "Now work them out," He is describing what the new life is in its working from His standpoint. When circumstances arise by God's providential engineering, and the Holy Spirit brings back some word to our remembrance, are we going to obey our Lord in that particular? Never debate when the Holy Spirit brings back a word of Jesus Christ. A fanatic is one who takes the statements of Jesus and tries to live up to the standard of them while he ignores the necessity of a personal relationship with God through new birth. We have not to live according to maxim, but according to the new life in us in which Jesus Christ is manifested.

Do I seek to stop sinning, or have I stopped sinning?

Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God. (1 John 3:9)

Do we seek to stop sinning, or have we stopped sinning? We are always inclined to make theoretical what God makes practical. Learned divines and others talk about the sin question, and make it a doctrinal matter of dispute. In the Bible it is never, Should a Christian sin? The Bible puts it emphatically: A Christian must not sin. The confusion arises when the practical experimental doctrine is made a philosophical doctrine to do with God's election.

Deliverance from sin is not a question of God's election, but of an experience in human life which God demands. The effective working of the new birth life in us is that we do not commit sin, not merely that we have the power not to sin, but that we have stopped sinning—a much more practical thing.

The one thing that will enable us to stop sinning is the experience of new birth, i.e., entire sanctification. When we are born into the new realm the life of God is born in us, and the life of God in us cannot sin (1 John 3:9). That does not mean that we cannot sin; it means that if we obey the life of God in us, we need not sin. God never takes away our power to disobey; if He did, our obedience would be of no value, for we should cease to be morally responsible. By regeneration God puts in us the power not to sin. Our human nature is just the same after new birth as before, but the mainspring is different. Before new birth we sin because we cannot help it; after new birth we need not sin. There is a difference between sin and sins; sin is a disposition, and is never spoken of as being forgiven, a disposition must be cleansed. Sins are acts for which we are responsible. Sin is a thing we are born with, and we cannot touch it; God touches sin in redemption. If we have been trying to be holy, it is a sure sign we are not. Christians are born, not made. They are not produced by imitation, nor by praying and vowing; they are produced by new birth. "By the grace of God I am what I am."

The characteristic of new birth is that we deliberately obey all that God reveals through His Spirit. We yield ourselves so completely to God that Christ is formed in us. When He is formed in us, the characteristics of His life in our mortal flesh are that we see Jesus for ourselves; we see the rule of God; and we quit sinning—all by the wonder of His supernatural new birth in us, and that is how it works all through.

The new birth is illustrated by the supernatural advent of our Lord, not by the birth of a child into the world. Just as our Lord came into history from the outside, so He comes into our human nature from the outside. Our new birth is the birth of the Son of God into our old human nature, and our human nature has to be transfigured by the indwelling life of the Son of God. Mary, the mother of our Lord, is the type of our natural human life, which at critical moments so misunderstands the aims and objects of the Son of God. It was so in the historic life of our Lord, and it is true in our own personal experience. We make the blunder of imagining that when we are born from above (RV mg), we cease to be ordinary human beings, whereas we become much more ordinary human beings than we were before. Our human nature goes on all the time. All through the unrecorded years of our Lord's life His ordinary human life was being lived, nothing is recorded simply because there is nothing to record. After our birth from above there is a corresponding phase in our lives when the life of God goes on in the deep unconscious part of our lives and there is nothing to record.

The new birth is not the working of a natural law. The necessity for being born again is indicative of a huge tragedy. Sin has made the new birth necessary; it was not in the original design of God. New birth does not refer simply to a man's eternal salvation, but to his being of value to God in this order of things.

The Unrecorded Years

And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon Him. (Luke 2:40)

When a young life passes from early childhood into girlhood or boyhood, there is a new birth of the mind, and the boy or girl becomes interested in literature, in poetry, and usually in religion; but that is not spiritual new birth, and has nothing to do with the working of the Spirit of God; it has to do with the ordinary natural development of the life. At this stage great devotion to God and to Christian service may be manifested, and this is apt to be looked on as an evidence of the work of the Spirit of God, whereas it is the mere outcome of the natural life beginning to unfold itself in the process of development. These things always go together—physical development, an alteration in bodily organs, and mental, moral, and spiritual development. The boy or girl sees more purely and clearly than the man or woman. No man thinks so clearly at any time or is ever so thrilled as he is in his "teens." Generally speaking, thirty years of age is the age of maturity. Some reach maturity before thirty and some after, but round about thirty is the age at which all the bodily and personal powers are matured. Up to that age, or what is represented by that age, life is full of promise, of visions, of uncertainties and expectations; after that there is no more promise, no more vision, the life has to be lived now in accord with all the visions it has had. There is a stage in ordinary natural life when maturity is reached, and if it is not reached someone is to blame. That is in the physical domain. In the spiritual domain the passing of the years counts for nothing. When we are born from above (RV mg) and the Son of God is formed in us, it is not the passing of the years that matures His life in us, but our obedience.

The angel said to Mary, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the most High shall overshadow thee: wherefore also the holy thing which shall be born shall be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:35 see RV mg). That is symbolical of what happens when the Holy Ghost overshadows us: our natural life is made the mother of the Son of God. What have we done with Him? Has He grown and developed? Has He been nourished and looked after, or has He been buried? When God comes does He find something dead in us instead of the real living Son of God? We have to nourish the life of the Son of God in us, and we do it by obedience, that is, by bringing our natural life into accordance with His life and transforming it into a spiritual life.

There is another element in this new life which is often overlooked, viz., that it is unconscious in its growth. When Jesus said "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow," He was referring to the new life in us. If we make His words apply to the natural life only, we make Him appear foolish. If we are born of God and are obeying Him, the unconscious life is forming in us just where we are. God knows exactly the kind of garden to put His lilies in, and they grow and take form unconsciously. What is it that deforms natural beauty? Overmuch cultivation; and overmuch denominational teaching will deform beauty in the spiritual world. Our danger is to take the place of God in regard to the new life. Jesus said, "Disciple in My Name," My nature. The new life is in Him, and we have to remember that it grows like the lily. The right atmosphere for the new life to grow in is exactly where our natural life is placed. The things we cannot touch are not things for us to pout over, but things for us to accept as God's providential order for us. As natural men, we are not inclined to like the things God makes. At certain stages of our life we much prefer the friends we make to our God-made relations, because we can be noble with our friends, we have no past history with them. We cannot be noble with our relations, because they knew us when we were mean, 10 and now when we are with them we cannot put on the pretence, it won't work.

The new life must go on and take form unconsciously. God is looking after it, He knows exactly the kind of nourishment as well as the kind of disintegration that is necessary. Be careful that you do not bury the new life, or put it into circumstances where it cannot grow. A lily can only grow in the surroundings that suit it, and in the same way God engineers the circumstances that are best fitted for the development of the life of His Son in us. It is the unconscious form that is continually alluded to in the New Testament. We must allow plenty of time for God to develop that life.

We hear it asked, "What is the good of all this study and reading of the Bible? We get no 'change' out of it." Most of us want something to show for what we do. We are not interested in God's life in us, but only in our life in God. We are not after the development of the unconscious life of the Son of God in us, but after the "small change" which enables us to say, "I did this and that." The life of the Son of God grows feebler in a life of that order.

Every mind has two storeys, the conscious and the unconscious. Most of what we hear passes out of our conscious mind into our unconscious mind and we think we have forgotten it, but we have not, we never forget anything; we cannot always recall it when we want to, but that is a different matter. We forget nothing; it is there, although not in the conscious mind, and when certain circumstances arise, suddenly the thing we thought we had forgotten is there to our amazement right enough. This is exactly what Jesus said the Holy Ghost would do, "He shall . . . bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you." The Holy Spirit is forming the unconscious mind all the time, and as we "mop up" His teaching simply take it in, not try to estimate it as we would a mathematical study—we shall find God is putting in the right soil for His life to grow in. Our one concern is to keep in the right atmosphere. Where we are actually is the Almighty's business, not ours. "Consider the lilies." Our Lord knows what to do with His own lilies; if we try to transplant them they will die. We are in such a desperate hurry, but it is in the unrecorded years, the times we are apt to think are of no account, that we are developing most for the value of the Son of God. There is a time coming when He will give an unveiled year, as He did in the life of His Son, and show what has been going on all the time.

The Unveiled Year

And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon Him. . . .

And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man. (Luke 2:40, 52)

In the Temple the Child Jesus was astonished that even His mother did not understand what He was doing. The one thing in us that makes us misunderstand Jesus Christ is our "Mary" life, i.e., our natural life.

God will bring us to an unveiled year, when we will realise how we have grown without knowing it, things have altered amazingly. For example, we go through a great personal crisis in our life with God, and we conjure up all kinds of imaginary difficulties as to how things are going to fit in now with this person and with that; but when we come up to the circumstances there is no external crisis at all, only the revelation of the tremendous alteration that has gone on in us unconsciously. When a crisis does come, it reveals that a tremendous alteration has taken place in us, and if there is any astonishment, it is in the fact that those whom we had thought would have understood us do not. Crises always reveal character. A great snare about crises is that we want to live for them. If we have had one great crisis in which the revelation has come of how wonderfully God has altered us, we will want another crisis. It is a risky business to live in crises. Most of our life is lived in ordinary human affairs, not in crises. It is comparatively easy for human nature to live in a big strain for a few minutes, but that is not what human nature is called upon to do. Human nature is called upon to live a life of drudgery. The intense awful crisis of the war¹¹ will be followed by years of drudgery for the lives that are left—shattered nerves, maimed men, and marred lives. We get our moments of light and insight when we see what God is after, and then we come to where there is no crisis, but just the ordinary life to be lived. By and by God will give an unveiled year and reveal the wonder of what He has been doing in us all the time.

His Environment and Ours

And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young child to destroy Him. When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt. . . . (Matthew 2:13–14)

We each make our own environment; it is our personality that does it. Our Lord in His historic life came up against the providential order of tyranny, to which He submitted; He also met hatred and detestation and compromise; and He is born into the same kind of circumstances in our bodily lives. So beware of getting on the line of "Oh, well, if only I had better circumstances." The circumstances of our Lord were anything but ideal, they were full of difficulties. Perhaps ours are the same, and we have to watch that we remain true to the life of the Son of God in us, not true to our own aims and ends. There is always a danger of mistaking our own aim and end for the aim of the life of God in us. Take it regarding the great subject of the Call of God. The call of God is a call according to the nature of God; where we go in obedience to that call depends entirely on the providential circumstances which God engineers, and is not of any moment. The danger is to fit the call of into the idea of our own discernment and say, "God called me there." If we say so and stick to it, then it is good-bye to the development of the life of God in us. We have deliberately shifted the ground of His call to fit our own conception of what He wants.

The curse of much modern religion is that it makes us so desperately interested in ourselves, so overweeningly concerned about our own whiteness. Jesus Christ was absolutely interested in God, and the saint is to be a simple, unaffected, natural human being indwelt by the Spirit of God. If the saint is paying attention to the Source, Jesus Christ, out of him and unconsciously to him are flowing the rivers of living water wherever he goes (John 7:37–39). Men are either getting better or worse because of us.

His Intimates and Ours

Is not this the carpenter's son? is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas? And his sisters, are they not all with us? Whence then hath this man all these things? (Matthew 13:55–56; see also Mark 3:21; Luke 2:51; John 7:5)

These were the intimates our Lord grew up with in His own historic life. We say, "Oh, but the Lord must have had a sweet and delightful home life." But we are wrong. He had an exceedingly difficult home life. Jesus Christ's intimates were brothers and sisters who did not believe in Him, and He says that the disciple is not above his Master (Luke 6:40). Jesus Christ was a Man among men, a Man living in unsullied communion with God. That is the kind of man He expects us to be through His regeneration of us. He went down to Nazareth, and "was subject unto them." An amazing submission! The next time you feel inclined to grouse over uncongenial companions, remember that Jesus Christ had a devil in His company for three years.

Our Lord preached His first public sermon in the place where He was brought up, where He was most intimately known, and they smashed up His service and tried to kill Him. "Oh, but," we say, "I expected that when I was saved and sanctified, my father and mother and brothers and sisters would be made right, but instead they seem to be all wrong." If the mother of our Lord misunderstood Him, and His brethren did not believe in Him, the same things will happen to His life in us, and we must not think it strange concerning the misunderstandings of others. The life of the Son of God in us is brought into the same kind of circumstances that the historic life of Jesus Christ was brought into, and what was true of Him will be true also of His life in us.

It is not only our intimates who will misunderstand Him, but we ourselves. There is a good deal in our natural human nature that will not understand the life of the Son of God, that will say to Him, as His own mother did, "Now is Your time to work a miracle." The natural in us will always want the Son of God to work in our way. Jesus said, "Woman, what have I to do with thee? Mine hour is not yet come," and Mary accepted the rebuke. Some of the things which belong to the life of the Son of God in us do not look sane or practical to the natural man, and when Christ is formed in us by His regenerating power, our natural life experiences what Mary experienced, "A sword shall pierce through thy own soul also," a sword we should never have known if we were not born of God; a type of suffering we should have known nothing about if the Son of God had not been formed in us. A sword had to go through the heart of Mary because of the Son of God, and because of the Son of God in us, a sword must go through our natural life, not our sinful life.

His Imagination and Ours

And He said unto them, How is it that ye sought Me? wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business? (Luke 2:49; see also Colossians 3:1–3)

Our Lord was absolutely taken up with His Father, that was the inner state of His mind. To Jesus the earth was His Father's house, and His Father's concerns possessed His imagination. The teaching in the Sermon on the Mount is on this line. Jesus says—"Don't make the ambition of your life in accordance with your old human nature, but be the children of the Highest—put your concentration on the things of God." Jesus Christ is not simply making fine characters or virtuous men; His end and aim is that we may be the children of our Father in heaven (Matthew 5:48).

Where is our imagination? In Colossians 3, we are told to set our affections on things above. That means concentration, and concentration is spiritual determination to fix the mind on the things of God. Don't say, "What shall I eat? What shall I drink?" but seek first the Kingdom of God. "Oh yes, I did get born again, but . . . " "Yes, God did do something for me, but . . ." You will soon "but" the whole thing out and leave yourself as you were before. Jesus says, "Be anxious for nothing, fix your mind on Me, be carefully careless about everything saving your relationship to Me." This will take time to do. When the unveiled year came it revealed where our Lord's mind was, and He was amazed that His mother's mind was not there too. "Wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business?" It was the question of an amazed and wistful child who felt His mother should have understood. Neither have we any excuse for not understanding what Jesus Christ is after; when we are born again, we ought to know exactly why His life is born into us—for the glory of God.

His Unageing Youth

Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am. (John 8:58; see also Matthew 18:3–5)

Spiritually we never grow old; through the passing of the years we grow so many years young. The characteristic of the spiritual life is its unageing youth, exactly the opposite of the natural life. "I am . . . the First and the Last." The Ancient of Days represents the Eternal Childhood. God Almighty became the weakest thing in His own creation, a Baby. When He comes into us in new birth we can easily kill His life in us, or else we can see to it that His life is nourished according to the dictates of the Spirit of God so that we grow "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." The mature saint is just like a little child, absolutely simple and joyful and gay. Go on living the life that God would have you live and you will grow younger instead of older. There is a marvellous rejuvenescence when once you let God have His way. If you are feeling very old, then get born again and do more at it.

The Appointment of the Saint in Himself (Philippians 3:10)

The age of thirty represents the perfection of physical, mental, and spiritual powers. Jesus Christ was thirty years of age when He was baptised; all His powers were fully matured. For thirty years our Lord had done nothing in public, then at the preaching of John the Baptist He emerged and was baptised with the baptism of John, which is a baptism of repentance from sin. Our Lord's baptism is not an illustration of the Christian rite of baptism, nor of the baptism of the Holy Ghost. At His baptism our Lord accepted His vocation, which was to bear away the sin of the world (RV mg). We have no corresponding experience to that. Jesus Christ did not come to do anything less than to bear away the sin of the world, that is His vocation as Son of Man. By His bearing away the sin of the world, the way is opened up for every human being to get to God as if there had been no sin. The revelation in the Bible is not that Jesus Christ was punished for our sins; but that He took on Him the sin of the human race and put it away—an infinitely profounder revelation (see 2 Corinthians 5:21; Hebrews 9:26). All through the Bible it is revealed that our Lord bore the sin of the world by identification, and not by sympathy. He deliberately took upon His own shoulders, and bore in His own person, the whole massed sin of the human race. Our Lord knew what He had come to do, and His baptism is the first public manifestation of His identification with sin with a conscious understanding of what He was doing. At His baptism He visibly and distinctly and historically took upon Him His vocation.

The Anticipations of John

John answered them, saying, I baptize with water: but there standeth one among you, whom ye know not; He it is, who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose. . . . And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon Him. And I knew Him not: but He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on Him, the same is He which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God. (John 1:26–34)

The anticipations of John, which were built upon the Old Testament, begin to be fulfilled in our Lord's baptism (Matthew 3:10–12). Jesus Christ is the true Baptiser; He baptises with the Holy Ghost. He is the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world, my sin (1 John 2:1). He is the One Who can make me like Himself; the baptism of John could not do that.

The Anticipations of God

But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that He by the grace of God should taste death for every man. For it became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. (Hebrews 2:9–10)

God's anticipations work in us because our Lord accepted His vocation. God anticipates that He is going to bring sons and daughters, not "saved souls," to glory. A saved soul is simply one who has partaken of the mighty efficacy of Redemption. A son or daughter of God is one who has not only partaken of Redemption, but has become of value to God in this order of things.

We must ever make a practical distinction in our minds between the revelation of Redemption and the conscious experience of salvation. Redemption is absolutely finished and complete, but its reference to individual men is a question of their individual action. The whole human race is condemned to salvation by the Cross of our Lord. God nowhere holds a man responsible for having the heredity of sin; the condemnation begins when a man sees and understands that God can deliver him from the heredity of sin and he refuses to let Him do it; at that moment he begins to get the seal of damnation. John 3:19 is the final word of condemnation—"This is the judgement," i.e., the critical moment, "that the light is come into the world, and men loved the darkness rather than the light; for their works were evil."

Is God realising His anticipations in our lives? Is the Son of God reaching His maturity in us? The formation of the Son of God in us and our putting on of the new man must go together. We are brooded over by the Holy Ghost (Luke 1:35), and that which is formed in us is the Holy Son of God (Galatians 1:15–16). His life is formed in our human nature and it develops quietly in the unrecorded years. We live our ordinary life as human beings, remembering that our natural life, although delivered from sin, is continually in danger of misunderstanding the Son of God, just as Mary misunderstood her own Son.

In a hundred and one ways we can prefer that the sword should go through the Son of God in us rather than through our natural life, and that our natural impressions should have the ascendancy rather than the Son of God. The putting on of the new man means that we must not allow our natural life to dictate to the Son of God, but see to it that we give Him ample chance to dominate every bit of us. He has delivered us from sin, now we must see that He dominates our natural life also, until the life of Jesus is manifested in our mortal flesh.

This is the meaning of bringing a son or daughter to glory, and it is also the meaning of the efficacy of our Lord's baptism and the acceptance of His vocation being worked out in individual lives. Our Lord's vocation, which He accepted at His baptism, was His identification with sin. Our vocation is to fulfil the anticipations of God and to become His sons and daughters. The majority of us so harp on the ordinary evangelical line that we thank God for saving us and then leave the thing alone. We cannot grow into holiness, but we must grow in it. Are we accepting our vocation and determining to let the Son of God manifest Himself in our mortal flesh? If we are, it will mean that our human nature must be perfectly obedient to the Son of God and that we must bring all our imagination and fancies and thoughts into captivity to the obedience of Christ.

The Attitude of Jesus Himself

And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan. And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descending upon Him: And there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. (Mark 1:9–11)

The baptism of our Lord was an extraordinary spiritual experience to Himself. "And there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." We have no experience like that; it stands unique. There is only one beloved Son of God; we are sons of God through His Redemption. John's baptism was a baptism of repentance from sin, and that was the baptism with which Jesus was baptised. He was baptised into sin, made to be sin, and that is why His Father was well pleased with Him. When our Lord took on Him His vocation as sin-bearer the Holy Ghost descended, and the voice of the Father came. The Holy Ghost descended on Him as a dove; He comes to us as fire. The descent of the Holy Ghost and the voice of the Father were to our Lord the seal on His accepted vocation.

The Cross of Jesus Christ and His baptism express the same thing. Our Lord was not a martyr; He was not merely a good man; He was God Incarnate. He came down to the lowest reach of creation in order to bring back the whole human race to God, and in order to do this He must take upon Him, as representative Man, the whole massed sin of the race. That is why He is called "the Lamb of God." It was in this connection also that God said, "Thou art my beloved Son." "Though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered." The Son of God alone can redeem, and because He was the Son of God, He became Man that He might bring man back to God.

We so continually run down the revelations of the New Testament to the level of our own experience. That is wrong; we must let God lift up our experience to the standard of His word.

The Attitude of the Saint Himself

For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in His presence. (1 Corinthians 1:26–29)

This is our calling as saints, and it is the only line on which the Holy Spirit will witness to us. He will never witness to our wits, or to our intelligence, or to our physical perfections, or to our insight or genius, or to anything at all that is natural to us; He will only witness to that which has been produced in us by His Redemption. Are we watching our experience, or are we estimating the witness of the Holy Ghost? The Holy Ghost witnesses only to the Son of God, and not according to our fleshly estimates of things (2 Corinthians 5:16), and if we try and estimate Jesus Christ according to the flesh, we shall find there is no reality in it.

Spiritually, God always builds upon the weakest link, never on the strong link. The empires of the world were all founded on strong men, consequently they broke, because no chain is stronger than its weakest link. God Almighty became Incarnate as a helpless Babe in Bethlehem, and Jesus Christ begins His life in us by a new birth. Do we realise that our human nature has to become the birthplace of the Son of God, or have we only realised the miracle of God's changing grace? "Bring up this child for me." How is the life of the Son of God growing in our bodily life? Are we putting on the new man in keeping with the Son of God born in us? How is the Son of God progressing in the affections of our heart and the imaginations of our mind? Have we crushed Him? The historic Son of God was put to death because the wits and wisdom of this world could not agree with Him, but blasphemed Him and crucified Him, and the same thing may happen in any individual life. Watch the barriers God puts into your life. The natural life says, "I ought to be this and that." But God has told you you cannot. Woe be to you if you hanker for a second after the thing about which God has said "No" to you. If you do, you will put to death the life of God in you. Are you willing to accept the barrier from Him? It may be a barrier with regard to personal ambition for His service. This must be our attitude to ourselves—fellowship with the things that are despised, the things that look ostensibly weak to the wise things of the world. They are not weak to God because they are based on His Redemption. When we accept our vocation of sons and daughters of God, we become identified with the Son of God, Who was Himself despised and rejected of men.

The Acceptations of Jesus for Himself

Now when all the people were baptized, it came to pass, that Jesus also being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened, and the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon Him, and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art My beloved Son; in Thee I am well pleased. And Jesus Himself began to be about thirty years of age, being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli. (Luke 3:21–23)

We read that Jesus was in communion with His Father at the time of His baptism, "Jesus also being baptized, and praying." Our Lord accepted His vocation in the centre of His spirit, consequently the temptations when they came made no appeal to Him although they were based on amazingly wise strategy. Satan could not get near Him. The vocation our Lord had accepted was that of sin-bearer, not of dominating world-lord. Satan's aim was to get Him to fulfil His vocation on another line, "There is no need to die for sin, You can fulfil Your vocation by a 'short cut' and evade the cross." Our Lord came here for one purpose only—to bear away the sin of the world in His own Person on the Cross. He came to redeem men, not to set them a wonderful example.

But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God. (Acts 20:24)

"None of these things move me," says Paul. What things? The things that were to smash Paul's heart, crumple up his body, and extinguish all his earthly ambitions. Have we accepted that kind of vocation, or are we only concerned that we get deep conscious communion with God? The acceptation of the saint for himself is that he is concerned about nothing at all saving this one thing, "that I might finish my course with joy," not happiness. Joy is the result of the perfect fulfilment of what a man is created for. Happiness depends on things that happen, and may sometimes be an insult. It is continually necessary to revert to what the New Testament asks us to accept about ourselves. Have we received this ministry from Jesus, "As Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world"? How did the Father send Him? For I came down from heaven, not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." The first obedience of Jesus was to the will of His Father, not to the needs of men. Then our first accepted vocation is not to help men, but to obey God, and when we accept that vocation we enter into relationship with the despised and the neglected. It is always easy to neglect a man or woman who deliberately accepts the aim of his life from the Lord Jesus. Many of us are imitators of other people; we do Christian work because someone has asked us to do it. We must receive our ministry, which is to testify the gospel of the grace of God, from Jesus Christ Himself, not from other Christians. Paul determined to relate everything to Jesus Christ and Him crucified (1 Corinthians 2:2). "You may do what you like with my external circumstances, but you shall not deflect me by making me consider myself, I have only one end—to fulfil the ministry I have received of the Lord Jesus." Just as our Lord accepted His vocation and Satan could not turn Him from it, so we as sons of God through His Redemption have to accept our vocation and to fulfil the ministry we receive from Him. All the onslaught of Satan gathered round the Son of God to prevent Him from fulfilling His vocation, and Jesus says the same thing will happen to us. We must beware of affections, of imaginations, of successes, of practical work, of organisations—of everything and everyone that would deflect us for one second from Jesus Christ's purpose in our life. It will mean going "without the camp," the camp that wants to dictate over the head of Jesus Christ, "bearing His reproach."

The Appointment of Jesus in Himself

Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. But John forbad Him, saying, I have need to be baptized of Thee, and comest Thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. (Matthew 3:13–15)

John knew Who Jesus Christ was, viz., the One Who was to baptise with the Holy Ghost and fire, and yet that One comes to him to be baptised with the baptism of repentance. No wonder John was amazed, and he refused to baptise Jesus until Jesus said, "Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." John as the forerunner of the Messiah had no business to introduce his own conceptions as to what was fitting for the Messiah; John had to obey just as the Messiah did. The vocation of our Lord was His identification with sin; He became absolutely and entirely identified with sin, and His baptism is the sign before the whole world of the acceptation of His vocation "This is what I am here for." It was not a baptism into power and dominion, but a baptism into identification with sin. The disposition of sin, i.e., my claim to my right to myself, entered into the human race by one man (Romans 5:12), and the Holy Spirit entered into the human race by another Man, so that "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." Jesus Christ by His death bore away the sin of the world (RV mg), and by our identification with His death we can be delivered from the heredity of sin and can receive a new heredity, the unsullied holiness of Jesus Christ. We receive this new heredity not by imitation, but by identification, by giving up our right to ourselves to Jesus Christ (Galatians 2:20).

The Appointment of the Saint in Himself That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death. (Philippians 3:10)

It is one thing to recognise what God is doing with us, but another thing to deliberately accept it as His appointment. We can never accept the appointment of Jesus Christ and bear away the sin of the world (RV mg), that was His work; but He does ask us to accept our cross. What is my cross? The manifestation of the fact that I have given up my right to myself to Him for ever. Self-interest, self-sympathy, self-pity—anything and everything that does not arise from a determination to accept my life entirely from Him will lead to a dissipation of my life. How many of us have dispassionately and clearly looked at Philippians 3:10? Paul is not speaking poetically but expressing plain, blunt, simple, spiritual, heroic fact. "That I may know Him"; not what He can do, nor what I can proclaim that He has done for me, but "that I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection"; that I continually receive my life from Him by deliberate appointment on my own part; "and the fellowship of His sufferings"; that I enter determinedly into His relationship with things, which means going contrary to my natural intuitions, "being made conformable unto His death." It is appalling how few are willing to efface their natural nobility. Fasting from food is an easy business, but fasting in its true nature means to fast from everything that is good until the appointments of God in my soul are accepted. For instance, there are times when a preacher if he is eloquent or poetical must fast from his own conceptions of things until he has accepted the appointment of God for his life. The One Who is being hit hardest in this war is Jesus Christ, and those of us who should have been fasting in fellowship with His sufferings have been out on the "noble natural" line, and the sword that was thrust at Him we have not turned aside but have lashed into Him, and been applauded for doing it. Being made conformable unto

His death"; that I may be identified with the things in which He has interests; "if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead"; that I may have a resurrection like His, not merely the resurrection of a saved soul, but of one who has proved himself a son of God by the redemption of our Lord.

Many of us are not living in the domain in which Christianity can alone be lived—the domain of deliberate identification with Jesus Christ. It takes time, and it ought to take time, and the time is not mis-spent for the soul who will wait before God and accept His appointment for his individual life.

The Limit to Temptation

Temptation is not sin; we are bound to meet it if we are men. Not to be tempted would be to be beneath contempt. Temptation is a suggested short cut to the realisation of the highest at which we aim. The way steel is tested is a good illustration of temptation. Steel can be "tired" in the process of testing, and in this way its strength is measured. Temptation is the testing by an alien power of the possessions held by a personality in order that a higher and nobler character may come out of the test.

This makes the temptation of our Lord explainable. He held in His own Person His unspotted sanctity and the fact that He was to be the King of men and the Saviour of the world; and Satan was the alien power that came to test Him on these lines. The period of temptation came immediately after one of spiritual exaltation (Matthew 3:16–17; 4:1). It was a period of estimating forces, and the records reveal how our Lord faced and rejected the visions of a swift fulfilment of His vocation presented to Him by Satan. Jesus Christ in His baptism had accepted His vocation of bearing away the sin of the world, and immediately He was put by God's Spirit into the testing machine of the devil. But He did not "tire"; He retained the possessions of His personality intact. He was tempted, "yet without sin."

The temptations of our Lord have no home at all in our human nature; they do not appeal to us because they are removed from any affinity with the natural. Our Lord's temptations and ours move in different spheres until we become His brethren, by being born again (Hebrews 2:11). The temptations of Jesus are not those of Man as man, but the temptations of God as Man. The statement that our Lord was tempted as ordinary men are is readily accepted, but the Bible does not say that He was so tempted. Jesus Christ was not born with a heredity of sin; He was not tempted in all points as ordinary men are, but tempted like His brethren, those who have been born from above (RV mg) by the Spirit of God and placed in the Kingdom of God by supernatural regeneration.

The records of our Lord's temptations are given not that we might fathom Him, but that we might know what to expect when we are regenerated. When we are born again of the Spirit of God and enter into fellowship with Jesus Christ, then the temptations of our Lord are applicable to us. We are apt to imagine that when we are saved and sanctified we are delivered from temptation; we are not, we are loosened into it. Before we are born again, we are not free enough to be tempted, neither morally nor spiritually. Immediately we are born into the Kingdom of God, we get our first introduction into what God calls temptation, viz., the temptations of His Son. God does not shield any man or woman from the requirements of a full-grown man or woman. The Son of God is submitted to temptations in our individual lives, and He expects us to remain loyal to Him (Luke 22:28).

The honour of Jesus Christ is at stake in our bodily life. Are we remaining loyal to the Son of God in the things, which beset His life in us? The personality of a saint holds all that God intends a man or woman to be, and the temptation to him comes along the line it came to our Lord—to fulfil what his personality holds on a line other than God intends.

The Isolation of Mastership (Matthew 4:1–11)

Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. And when He had fasted forty days and forty nights, He was afterward an hungred. (Matthew 4:1–2)

The Spirit of God drove our Lord into the wilderness for one purpose—to be tempted of the devil, not only to test Him, but to reveal what Christian mastership means. In that isolation the Lord Jesus Christ met the strong man and overcame him and bound him, and He gives us "power . . . over all the power of the enemy." The writer to the Hebrews does not say, "When you are tempted, imitate Jesus"; he says, "Go to Jesus, and He will succour you in the nick of time." That is, all His perfect overcoming of temptation is ours (Hebrews 2:18).

The Bible reveals that man is responsible for the introduction of Satan. Satan is the result of a communication between man and the devil, and man must deal with Satan; God does not deal with him direct. Satan is to be overcome and conquered by human beings. That is why God became Incarnate. It is in the Incarnation that Satan is overcome.

The Inner Martyrdom

Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when His glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. (1 Peter 4:12–13)

In the history of the Church inner martyrdom and external martyrdom have rarely gone together. We are familiar with external martyrdom, but inner martyrdom is infinitely more vital. Paul deals with it in Philippians 2. "Christ Jesus . . . made Himself of no reputation"; that is, He annihilated by His own deliberate choice all His former position of glory, "and took upon Him the form of a servant." If we are to be in fellowship with Him we must deliberately go through the annihilation, not of glory, but of our former right to ourselves in every shape and form. Until this inner martyrdom is gone through, temptation will always take us unawares. Peter says, "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you." The internal distresses are accounted for by the fact that the saint is being taken into an understanding of what our Lord went through when He was driven by the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted. Satan tried to put Jesus Christ on the way to becoming King of the world and Saviour of men in a way other than that pre-determined by God. The devil does not tempt us to do wrong things; he tries to make us lose what God has put into us by regeneration, the possibility of being of value to God. When we are born from above (RV mg) the central citadel of the devil's attack is the same in us as it was in our Lord—viz., to do God's will in our own way.

His Watch in Faith

And when the tempter came to Him, he said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. But He answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. (Matthew 4:3–4)

In each of the three never-to-be-forgotten pictures which our Lord has given us the temptation of Satan centres round this point—"You are the Son of God, then do God's work in Your own way; assert Your prerogative of Sonship." The first temptation was to set up a Selfish Kingdom. "You are the Son of God, then command these stones to be made bread; You do not need to be hungry; satisfy Your own needs and the needs of men, and You will get the Kingship of men." Was Satan right? Read John 6:15—"Jesus perceived that they would come and take Him by force, to make Him a king." Why? He had just fed five thousand of them! It must have been a dazzling vision that Satan presented to our Lord, for who could ever have such sympathy with the needs of men as He? For one impressive moment He must have wondered. But our Lord would not be King of men on that line. "But He answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." He deliberately rejected the suggested "short cut," and chose the "long, long trail," evading none of the suffering involved.

In His temptation our Lord does not stand as an individual Man; He stands as the whole human race vested in one Personality, and every one of us when regenerated can find his place and fellowship in those temptations.

Our Lure of Wits

And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Me. (Matthew 11:6)

The deep dejection of John is the dejection of a great man (Matthew 11:11). John's misgivings arose from the fact that the wonderful things God had told him about the Messiah, Whom he foreran, seemed to be without application to Jesus Christ (Matthew 3:11–12). It was a case of wits versus revelation.

The first temptation of our Lord comes to us on this line—"Be sensible, You are here for the service of men, and surely it is the most practical thing to feed them and satisfy their needs." The clamour abroad to-day is all on this line, "Put man's needs first; never mind about the first commandment, the second commandment is the all-important one" (see Mark 12:29–31). This advice sounds sensible and right, but at its heart is the temptation of Satan to put men's needs first. The insistent demand in the world to-day to put men's needs before God's will is the outcome of the reasoning of human wits and wisdom, and who can say that the demand is a wrong one? So long as our wits and human solutions are on the throne, to satisfy the needs of men is ostensibly the grandest thing to do. Every temptation of Satan will certainly seem right to us unless we have the Spirit of God. Fellowship with our Lord is the only way to detect them as being wrong.

The conditions of our civilised life to-day ought to be realised more keenly by the Christian than by the natural man, but we must see that the worship of God is put on the throne and not our human wits. The evidence of Christianity is not the good works that go on in the world; these are the outcome of the good there is in human nature, which still holds remnants of what God designed it to be. There is much that is admirable in the civilisation of the world, but there is no promise in it. The natural virtues exhaust themselves; they do not develop. Jesus Christ is not a social reformer; He came to alter us first, and if any social reform is to be done on earth, we will have to do it. Social reform is part of the work of ordinary honourable humanity and a Christian does it because his worship is for the Son of God, not because he sees it is the most sensible thing to do. The first great duty of the Christian is not to the needs of his fellow-men, but to the will of his Saviour. We have to remember the counsel of our Lord, given from the centre of His own agony, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation," keep stedfastly true to what you know is God's order and listen to no suggestions from elsewhere. The one thing that will keep us watching and praying is continuing to worship God while we do our duty in the world as ordinary human beings.

His Wait in Hope

Then the devil taketh Him up into the holy city, and setteth Him on a pinnacle of the temple, and saith unto Him, If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down: for it is written, He shall give His angels charge concerning thee: And in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone. Jesus said unto him, It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. (Matthew 4:5–7)

This temptation presents a wild reach of possibility: "You are the Son of God, then fling Yourself off the pinnacle of the temple; do something supernatural; use signs and wonders and bewitch men so that they will be staggered out of their wits by amazement, and the world will be at Your feet. Set up a Spectacular Kingdom." Our Lord never once used signs and wonders to get a man off his guard and then say, "Now believe in Me." Jesus Christ never coerced anybody, He never used supernatural powers or the apparatus of revival; He refused to stagger human wits into submitting to Him, He always put the case to a man in cold blood, "Take time and consider what you are doing" (cf. Luke 9:57-62). Jesus Christ is engaged in making disciples in the internal sense, consequently He never entrances a man by rapture, or enamours him out of his wits by fascination. Instead, He puts Himself before a man in the baldest light conceivable, "If you would be My disciple, these are the conditions" (see Luke 14:26-27 and 33). A man must believe in Jesus Christ by a deliberate determination of his own choice. The temptation to the Church is to go into the "show business." Our Lord told His disciples they would be witnesses unto Him, a satisfaction to Him wherever they were placed (Acts 1:8).

Our Light of Wisdom

These things understood not His disciples at the first: but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of Him, and that they had done these things unto Him. (John 12:16)

Our Lord's temptations are carefully presented so that we may know the kind of temptation to expect when His life is formed in us. This temptation is apt to come with tremendous lure after the experience of sanctification—"Now that I am saved and sanctified, God will surely turn the world upside down and prove what a wonderful thing He has done in me—every unsaved soul will be saved, every devil-possessed man delivered, and every sick person healed!" "You will easily get Your Kingship of men if You will use signs and wonders and stagger men's wits," said Satan to our Lord, and the same temptation comes to the Church and to individual Christians, His brethren. It sounds right to ask God to produce signs and wonders, and all through the twenty centuries of the Christian era this temptation has been yielded to, every now and again, in the most wild and inordinate manner. For the past ten years or more it has been in our midst in the Tongues movement, and hundreds of those who were really enlightened by the Spirit of God have gone off on the line of this temptation.

We are apt to have the idea that we can only estimate what God is in us by what He does through us. What about our Lord and Master, what did He do?

The marvellous thing about Him is what He did not do. Think what an ignominious failure His life was, judged from every standpoint but God's. Our Lord did not say that signs and wonders would not follow, but that the one set purpose for us is that we do God's will in His way, not in our way. All the wisdom seems to be with the temptations, but our Lord by the light of the Holy Ghost reveals where they are wrong. Are we prepared to continue with the Son of God in His temptations in us, or are we going to betray Him and say, "Now that I am saved and sanctified, I must expect God to do wonders"? It sounds right and wise, and it commends itself to our natural wisdom if once we forget our Lord's counsel to watch and pray.

His Way of Love

Again, the devil taketh Him up into an exceeding high mountain, and showeth Him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; And saith unto Him, All these things will I give Thee, if Thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve. (Matthew 4:8–10)

Our Lord was then asked to compromise: "You will become the king of men and the Saviour of the world by judicious compromise; build Your Kingdom on broadminded lines; be judicious, You know there is evil in the world; then use it wisely, and don't be so intense against sin; don't talk about the devil and hell; don't be so extreme and say a man needs to be born from above (RV mg). Tolerate my rule of the world, call things 'necessary evils'; tell men sin is not anarchy, but a disease; fall down and worship me and my way of looking at things, and I will withdraw and the whole world will be Yours. Establish a Socialistic Kingdom." The first sign of the dethronement of Jesus is the apparent absence of the devil, and the peaceful propaganda that is spread after he has withdrawn. Will the Church that bows down and compromises succeed?

Of course it will; it is the very thing that the natural man wants. This line of temptation as revealed by our Lord is the most appallingly subtle of all.

Temptation yielded to is lust deified. In the Bible, the term "lust" is used of other things than merely of immorality. It is the spirit of, "I must have it at once, I will have my desire gratified, and I will brook no restraint." Each temptation of our Lord contains the deification of lust—"You will get the Kingship of the world at once by putting men's needs first; use signs and wonders, and You will get the Kingship of men at once; compromise with evil, judiciously harmonise with natural forces, and You will get the Kingship of men at once." At the heart of every one of our Lord's answers are these words: "For I came down from heaven not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me" (John 6:38), that is "I came to do God's work in His way, not in My own way, although I am the Son of God."

The temptation to win and woo men is the most subtle of all, and it is a line that commends itself to us naturally. But you cannot win and woo a mutiny; it is absolutely impossible. You cannot win and woo the man who, when he recognises the rule of God, detests it. The Gospel of Jesus Christ always marks the line of demarcation, His attitude all through is one of sternness, there must be no compromise. The only way in which the Kingdom of God can be established is by the love of God as revealed in the Cross of Jesus Christ, not by the lovingkindness of a backboneless being without justice or righteousness or truth. The background of God's love is holiness. His is not a compromising love, and the Kingdom of our Lord can only be brought in by means of His love at work in regeneration. Then when we are regenerated we must not insult God by imagining that in dealing with our fellow-men we can afford to ignore the need for Redemption and simply be kind and gentle and loving to all.

Our Liberty of Wonders

Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you. (Luke 17:21)

"The Kingdom of God is within you"—uncompromisingly within you. We must never compromise with the kingdoms of this world; the temptation the devil presents is that we should compromise. We recognise his temptation in the teaching which proclaims that there is no such being as the devil and no such place as hell; much that is called sin is a mere defect; men and women are like poor babes lost in the wood; just be kind and gentle with them; talk about the Fatherhood of God, about Universalism and Brotherhood, the kindness of Providence and the nobility of man. Our Lord's temptations reveal where the onslaught will come. To-day, through an overplus of Christian activities, Jesus Christ is being dethroned in hearts and Christian wits and wisdom are taking His place; consequently, when trials and difficulties come most of us are at our wits' end because we have succumbed to one or another of these temptations.

The Limit to the Devil

Then the devil leaveth Him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto Him. (Matthew 4:11)

The sign of victory is that the temptation has been gone through with successfully. If our Lord had failed in any degree, the angels would have had no affinity with Him. The affinities of a man after a period of temptation prove whether he has yielded to it or not. The practical test for us when we have been through a season of temptation is whether we have a finer and deeper affinity for the highest. Temptation must come, and we do not know what it is until we meet it. When we do meet it, we must not debate with God, but stand absolutely true to Him no matter what it costs us personally, and we will find that the onslaught will leave us with higher and purer affinities than before.

The Limit to Temptation

There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it. (1 Corinthians 10:13)

God does not keep us from temptation, He succours us in the midst of it. Temptation is not something we may escape; it is essential to the full-orbed life of a son of God. We have to beware lest we think we are tempted as no one else is tempted. What we go through is the common inheritance of the race, not something no one ever went through before. It is most humiliating to be taken off our pedestal of suffering and made to realise that thousands of others are going through the same thing as we are going through. Under the three pictures presented by our Lord every temptation of the devil is embraced; we must ever remember the counsel of our Lord to watch and pray lest we enter into temptation. Prayer is easy for us because of all it cost the Son of God to make it possible for us to pray. It is on the basis of His Redemption that we pray, not on the basis of our penetration, or of our wits or understanding.

As has been already stated, Christian Psychology is not the study of human nature Christianised, but the endeavour to understand the wonder and the mystery of "Christ in you, the hope of glory." Jesus Christ must ever be profoundly more than we can fathom, but we must study Him in order to get to know the characteristics of the new life which is to be manifested in our mortal flesh.

The Apostle John does not allude to the Transfiguration in his Gospel, yet his Gospel is written from that standpoint, the standpoint of the exceeding majesty of the Lord Jesus Christ.

According to the revelation of the Bible, our Lord is not to be looked upon as an individual Man, but as the One Who represents the whole human race. At His Baptism our Lord accepted His vocation as sin-bearer, the Holy Ghost descended upon Him as Son of Man, and the voice of God came with the Divine approval; and at the Transfiguration the voice of God came again. The Baptism and the Transfiguration reveal Who our Lord is, and the secret of the Christian is that he knows the absolute Deity of Jesus Christ.

The Transfiguration occurs practically in the centre of our Lord's earthly ministry. The fulfilment of the Transfiguration is the Ascension. These two mountain peaks, without the Cross and the Resurrection, would portray the development of human life had there been no sin. The Cross and the Resurrection deal with sin and the need of Redemption.

Our Lord's Attitude

And it came to pass about an eight days after these sayings, He took Peter and John and James, and went up into a mountain to pray. (Luke 9:28)

In our Lord's presentation, prayer is the point where the Reality of God merges with human life. Until we are born from above (RV mg), prayer with us is honestly nothing more than a mere exercise; but in all our Lord's teaching and in His own personal life, as well as in the emphasis laid on prayer by the Holy Ghost after He had gone, prayer is regarded as the work (see John 14:11–13). Prayer in the Son of God as Son of Man is amazingly significant. If prayer is the highest reach of communion possible between Almighty God and the Son of Man, what part ought prayer to play in our lives? Prayer with us often becomes merely a way of patronising God. Our Lord's view of prayer is that it represents the highest reach possible to a man or woman when rightly related to God, perfectly obedient in every particular, and in perfect communion with Him. Prayer is not meant to develop us, but to develop the life of God in us after new birth.

The Attitude of the Disciples

But Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep. (Luke 9:32)

The natural must sleep. If we are ever going to know Who the Lord Jesus Christ is we must be born from above (RV mg) into another Kingdom, and discern by a power other than our natural wits. The natural is not sinful, but the natural is not spiritual. When the Redemption of God has dealt with sin and delivered from it, then the natural must be sacrificed. Simeon said to the mother of Jesus, "Yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also," but not because of sin. Mary was the natural mother of the Son of God, and in that wonderful experience of the incoming of the Son of God into the human race she stands for our human nature. The natural has to be transfigured and subordinated to the spiritual; it must not obtrude itself.

It was required of Adam, the Federal Head of the human race, that he should turn his natural life into a spiritual life by obedience. That is, he was to have dominion over the life in the air and in the earth and in the sea, but he was not to have dominion over himself; God was to have dominion over him, and as he obeyed God his natural life would be turned into a spiritual life. Adam represented what Jesus Christ represents, viz., the whole human race, and if Adam had obeyed and transformed his innocence into holiness by a series of moral choices, the transfiguration of the human race would have happened in due course. But Adam disobeyed, and there entered in the disposition of sin, the disposition of self-realisation—I am my own God. This disposition may work out in a hundred and one different ways, in decorous morality or in indecorous immorality, but it has the one basismy claim to my right to myself. That disposition was never in our Lord. Self-will, self-assertiveness, self-seeking were never in Him. When we become rightly related to God, we are not simply put back into the relationship Adam was in, but into a relationship Adam was never in; we are put into the Body of Christ, and then God does not shield us from any of the requirements of sons. We have the notion at first that when we are saved and sanctified by God's supernatural grace, He does not require us to do anything, but it is only then that He begins to require anything of us. God did not shield His own Son; not only did He not shield Him, but He allowed Him to be driven into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. After the baptism of Jesus and the descent of the Holy Ghost upon Him, God took His sheltering hand off Him, as it were, and let the devil do his worst. So after the work of sanctification, when the life of a saint really begins, God lifts His hand off and lets the world, the flesh, and the devil do their worst, for He is assured that "greater is He that is in you, than he that is in the world."

The trouble comes when we forget that the Son of God is born into our old human nature. Whether we are six years old or sixty, our human nature is thousands of years old. Jesus Christ says that His Father makes His revelations, not to the virtues of human nature, not to the astute wisdom accumulated by the ages, but to "babes." Our Lord's words can only be understood by those who are born from above (RV mg), and He reveals Himself only to such. The Church of Jesus Christ is built on these two things: the Divine revelation of Who Jesus Christ is, and the public confession of it (see Matthew 16:13–19).

Our Lord's Aspect

And as He prayed, the fashion of His countenance was altered, and His raiment was white and glistering. (Luke 9:29)

Our Lord had emptied Himself of His glory for the purposes of the Incarnation, and the Transfiguration reveals His glory again. The subliminal nature of Jesus was absolute Deity, and it was that subliminal nature, the glory which He had with the Father before the world was, that suddenly burst through on the Mount of Transfiguration, and gave the manifestation of God and Man in perfect oneness-in His Son, God became His own Incarnation. The Apostle John is insistent that any tendency to dissolve the Person of Jesus by analysis is anti-Christ (1 John 4:1–3). It is this pre-Incarnate glory that is being dissolved to-day. The dissolving of the Person of Jesus by analysis is prevalent because men refuse to know Him after the Spirit, they will only know Him after the reasoning of their own minds. The test of any teaching is its estimate of Jesus Christ. The teaching may sound wonderful and beautiful, but watch lest it have at its centre the dethroning of Jesus Christ.

The Aspect of the Disciples

And when they were awake, they saw His glory, and the two men that stood with Him. (Luke 9:32)

The disciples were with Jesus Christ on the Mount, and in his Epistle, Peter records what they saw there; he says, "we were eyewitnesses of His majesty" (2 Peter 1:16). Jesus Christ is no Comrade to Peter, He is absolute King of kings. In the Apocalypse the Apostle John gives the same revelation of the appalling and sublime majesty of Jesus Christ. The disciples are fully awake now and face to face with Reality.

Intellectual thinking and reasoning never yet got a man to Reality, because these are instruments of life, and not the life itself. Our only organ for getting at Reality is conscience, and the Holy Spirit always deals with conscience first. Intellect and emotions come in afterwards as the instruments of human expression.

The disciples came down from the Mount into the demon-possessed valley, but it was not until after the Cross and the Resurrection that they began to understand what they had seen, the reason being that what they had seen in vision on the Mount had to be worked out into actual experience in their lives. By the presence of the Holy Ghost in us we know Who the Lord Jesus is. We know Him after the Spirit. The Holy Spirit glorifies the Lord Jesus to us and in us until we know Who He is, and know the exceeding majesty of Him Who said, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." We do not know this by our intellect or by our sensible reasoning, but by the real witness of the Paraclete of God. The eyes of the disciples needed to be opened by the impartation of quickening life from our Lord after the Resurrection before they knew Him (Luke 24:16, 31); and the only way in which we can know our Lord is by His Spirit.

Our Lord's Attendants

And there appeared unto them Elias and Moses: and they were talking with Jesus. (Mark 9:4)

Jesus was standing in the full blaze and glory of His pre-Incarnate glory while the two representatives of the Old Covenant talked with Him about the issue which He was about to accomplish at Jerusalem. Then He turned His back upon that glory, and came down from the Mount to be identified with fallen humanity, symbolised by the demon-possessed boy. Had He gone back into the glory which was His before the Incarnation having only reached the Mount of Transfiguration, He would have left the human race exactly where it was; His life would only have been a sublime ideal. There are many who look at the life of Jesus Christ as an ideal and nothing more—"His teachings are so fine, we do not need to have anything to do with the Atonement, or with those crude doctrines of the apostle Paul's about the Cross and personal apprehension; it is quite enough for us to have the Sermon on the Mount." I should think it was! If Jesus Christ came to be an Example only, He is the greatest torturer of the human race. But our Lord did not come primarily to teach us and give us an example; He came to lift us into a totally new kingdom, and to impart a new life to which His teachings would apply.

The Attention of the Disciples

And when they were awake, they saw His glory, and the two men that stood with Him. (Luke 9:32)

The disciples were eye- and ear-witnesses of all that transpired on the Mount. There is a curious insistence in the records on the fact that our Lord at His Transfiguration and in the Garden of Gethsemane, took His disciples to be witnesses of things which they could never experience. We see one reason why Jesus took them in Peter's Epistles and in John's Gospel. The Christian faith must stand in an Almighty Christ, not in a human being who became Divine.

Our Lord's Attention

Who appeared in glory, and spake of His decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem. (Luke 9:31)

The visitants on the Mount talked to Jesus in all His majesty and glory of Almighty God, but they spoke of His death, not of His glory. Does not that seem an appalling anticlimax? The whole of their attention is centred on the death of the Lord Jesus. The word "death" has the meaning of "issue." They spake of the issue He was about to accomplish at Jerusalem by His death, viz., the historic manifestation of the Redemption of the human race.

The Redemption of the human race does not necessarily mean the salvation of every individual. Redemption is of universal application, but human responsibility is not done away with. Jesus Christ states emphatically that there are possibilities of eternal damnation for the man who positively¹² neglects or positively rejects His Redemption.

Jesus Christ emptied Himself of His glory a second time; He came down from the Mount of Transfiguration and accomplished His death at Jerusalem—for what purpose? That any individual of the human race might go straight to the heart of God without the slightest fear, because of what Jesus did on the Cross. This is the great effective working of Redemption in human experience. Our Lord's death is not the death of a martyr; it is the exhibition of the heart of God, broken in order to bring the whole human race back into perfect oneness with Himself.

The death of Jesus is the only entrance into the life He lived. We cannot get into His life by admiring Him, or by saying what a beautiful life His was, so pure and holy. To dwell only on His life would drive us to despair. We enter into His life by means of His death. Until the Holy Spirit has had His way with us spiritually, the death of Jesus Christ is an insignificant thing, and we are amazed that the New Testament should make so much of it. The death of Jesus Christ is always a puzzle to unsaved human nature. Why should the Apostle Paul say, "For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified"? Because unless the death of Jesus has the meaning the Apostle Paul gave to it, viz., that it is the entrance into His life, the Resurrection has no meaning for us either. The life of Jesus is a wonderful example of a perfect human life, but what is the good of that to us? What is the good of presenting to us a speckless holiness that is hopeless of attainment? It would simply tantalise us. Unless Jesus Christ can put a totally new heredity into us, there is no use asking us to think about the wonderful life He lived. The revelation made by the Redemption is that God can put into us a new disposition whereby we can live a totally new life.

Now we can see why our Lord lived the life He did for thirty-three years. Before He made the entrance into that life possible for any human being, He had to show us what the life of God's normal man was like. The life of Jesus is the life we have to live here, not hereafter. There is no chance to live this kind of life hereafter, we have to live it here. Our Lord's death is not the death of a martyr, not the death of a good man; His cross is the Cross of God, whereby any human being can enter into a totally new life. The way into the life of Jesus is not by imitation of Him, but by identification with His Cross. That is the meaning of being born from above (RV mg): we enter into His life by its entering into us.

We talk about imitating Jesus, but isn't it highly absurd! Before we have taken three steps, we come across lust, pride, envy, jealousy, hatred, malice, anger—things that never were in Him, and we get disheartened and say there is nothing in it. If Jesus Christ came to teach the human race only, He had better have stayed away. But if we know Him first as Saviour by being born again, we know that He did not come to teach merely: He came to make us what He teaches we should be; He came to make us sons of God. He came to give us the right disposition, not to tell us that we ought not to have the wrong one; and the way into all these benedictions is by means of His death.

To Christianise human nature is simply to veneer that which is not real. The life of Jesus Christ is the Standard, and we receive His life by means of His Death. The emphasis on His death is explained when we remember that His teaching only applies to His life in us. When we preach Christ, it is not His birth that we preach, but His Cross, and we bring ourselves face to face with the wonder and the power of His resurrection life.

The Amazement of the Disciples

And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias. For he wist not what to say; for they were sore afraid. (Mark 9:5–6)

Peter wist not what to say, then why did he say it? Have you never said things you should not have said? If we get a great grasp in vision of Who Jesus is and try to work it out in our ordinary human life by the energy of the flesh, we shall do what Peter did, talk nonsense through sheer bewilderment. When we come to Peter's Epistles, there is nothing hysterical about them. Peter has gone through disillusionment about himself; he has gone through seeing the death of his Lord and through identification with His death; through the experience of receiving from the Risen Lord the gift of the Holy Ghost, and he says, we are not hysterical, we were eyewitnesses of His majesty when we were with Him in the holy mount.

Repeatedly the vision of entire sanctification, or of the baptism of the Holy Ghost, is mistaken for the actuality. The only test of the actuality is when we are brought down into things as they are; it is then that the reality must manifest itself. When Jesus had healed the demoniac boy, the disciples asked Him, "How is it that we could not cast it out?" and Jesus said unto them, "This kind can come out by nothing, save by prayer and fasting," by spiritual concentration on Him. We can ever remain powerless, as were the disciples, by trying to do God's work through ideas drawn from our own temperament instead of by concentration on His power.

Never mistake the wonderful visions God gives you for reality, but watch, for after the vision you will be brought straight down into the valley. We are not made for the mountains, we are made for the valley. Thank God for the mountains, for the glorious spiritual realisation of Who Jesus Christ is; but can we face things as they actually are in the light of the Reality of Jesus Christ? or do things as they are efface altogether our faith in Him and drive us into a panic? When Jesus said, "I go to prepare a place for you," it was to the Cross He went. Through His Cross He prepared a place for us to "sit with Him in the heavenly places, in Christ Jesus" now, not by and by. When we get to the Cross we do not go through and out the other side, we abide in the life to which the Cross is the gateway; and the characteristic of the life is deep and profound sacrifice to God. We know Who our Lord is by the power of His Spirit, we are strongly confident in Him, and the reality of our relationship to Him works out all the time in the actualities of our ordinary life.

Almighty God's Ascription

And there came a voice out of the cloud saying, This is My beloved Son: hear Him. (Luke 9:35)

It is the same voice that spoke at our Lord's baptism. God emphatically states, "This is My beloved Son": this Man, known to men as the humble Nazarene Carpenter, is Almighty God presented in the guise of a human life; "hear Him." How many of us do hear Him? We always hear the thing we listen for, and our disposition determines what we listen for. When Jesus Christ alters our disposition, He gives us the power to hear as He hears.

The Awe of the Disciples

There came a cloud, and overshadowed them: and they feared as they entered into the cloud. (Luke 9:34)

When the clouds around are dark and terrible, thank God, the saints know that they are but "the dust of His feet," and when they fear as they enter into the cloud, they see "no man any more, save Jesus only with themselves."

HIS AGONY AND OUR FELLOWSHIP

Matthew 26:36-46 Matthew 4:1-11

His Destiny (Matthew 26:36–41; Matthew 4:1–4) Our Destiny as His Disciples (Matthew 20:22–23; 1 Peter 2:21)

His Dread (Matthew 26:42–43; Matthew 4:5–7) Our Dread as His Disciples (Philippians 3:10; John 12:27)

His Devotion (Matthew 26:44–46; Matthew 4:8–11)

Our Devotion as His Disciples (Luke 12:49; Colossians 1:24)

We can never fathom the agony in Gethsemane, but at least we need not misunderstand it. It is the agony of God and Man in one, face to face with sin. The agony or our Lord in Gethsemane is not typical of what we go through, any more than His Cross is typical of our cross. We know nothing about Gethsemane in personal experience. Gethsemane and Calvary stand for something unique; they are the gateway into Life for us. We are not dealing here with the typical experience of the saint, but with the way the saintly life has been made possible.

We must read the record of the agony in the light of the temptation three years previously. There are three recorded temptations, and three recorded spells of agony in Gethsemane, "And when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from Him for a season." In Gethsemane he came back, and was again overthrown. Put away the reverential blasphemy that what Jesus Christ feared in Gethsemane was death on the cross. There was no element of fear in His mind about it; He stated most emphatically that He came on purpose for the Cross (Matthew 16:21). His fear in Gethsemane was that He might not get through as Son of Man. Satan's onslaught was that although He would get through as Son of God, it would only be as an isolated Figure; and this would mean that He could be no Saviour.

Notice again the curious insistence in the records on the fact that our Lord took His disciples with Him, not to share His agony, but to witness it.

Then cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane, and saith unto the disciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder. . . . (Matthew 26:36; cf. Matthew 4:1–4)

At His Baptism the Son of God as Son of Man, i.e., as the whole human race rightly related to God, took on Himself the sin of the whole world; that is why He was baptised with John's baptism, which was a baptism of repentance from sin. It was at His Baptism that the Holy Ghost descended in the form of a dove, and God said, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased"; and before His birth the angel proclaimed that He should be called Jesus, "for He shall save His people from their sins."

This is our Lord's destiny. No human being has a destiny like His; no human being can be a Saviour. There is only one Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, and the profundity of His agony has to do with the fulfilling of His destiny. The only possibility of God being satisfied with the human race is when the whole human race lives as the Son of God lived; and God became Incarnate that through His Son every one of us might be enabled to live as He lived.

In God's programme Holy Spirit and man are always identified. Adam was created to be indwelt by Holy Spirit, and God intended him to transform his innocence into holiness by a series of moral choices. But Adam refused to do this; instead, he started up a wrong relationship with the devil, and thereby became the introducer of the heredity of sin into the human race (Romans 5:12). The entering in of sin meant the departing of the Holy Spirit from the home of man's body, not the departing from him of the Spirit of God as Creator. "Elohim" has reference to God in correspondence with human flesh. When Adam sinned, this correspondence with God ceased until God became manifest in the flesh in Jesus Christ. At His Baptism the Holy Ghost came upon Him as Son of Man, and His coming was the seal of our Lord's accepted vocation. Jesus Christ represented "Elohim," God manifest in the flesh, God and man one in the Person of the Son of Man. The sin of the world upon the Son of God rent the Holy Ghost from Him on the Cross, and the cry on Calvary is the cry of the Holy Ghost to Jesus Christ-"My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" It was not the cry of Jesus Christ to His Father. Jesus never spoke to God as "God"; He spoke to Him always as "Father." "Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, . . . He said, It is finished." These words of our Lord mean that God and the human race in the Person of the Son of Man are now one for ever in that one Person. Holy Spirit may be partaken of by any one. Anyone can enter into real fellowship with God, into fellowship as real as the communion which Jesus had with His Father, and the way into it is by means of His agony. Ephesians 4:13 is a picture of the human race redeemed by Jesus Christ. He is God's revelation in one Person of the human race as God intends it to be.

We are dealing here with revelation, not with experience. Revelation is that upon which we must nourish our faith; experience is that which encourages us that our faith is on the right track. The need to connect revelation and experience must never be overlooked.

In the temptation of our Lord, Satan's first attack was in the physical domain. In Gethsemane his onslaught is against our Lord as Son of Man, not against Him as Son of God. Satan could not touch Him as Son of God, he could only touch Him as Son of Man; and this is his final onslaught on the Son of God as Son of man. "You will get through as Son of God, I cannot touch You there, but You will never get one member of the human race through with You. Look at Your disciples, they are asleep, they cannot even watch with You. When You come to the Cross Your body will be so tortured and fatigued, so paralysed with pain, and Your soul will be so darkened and confused, that You will not be able to retain a clear understanding of what You are doing. Your whole personality will be so clouded and crushed by the weight of sin that You will never get through as Man." If Satan had been right, all that would have happened on the Cross would have been the death of a martyr only, the way into Life for us would never have been opened. But if Jesus Christ does get through as Son of Man, it means that the way is open for every one who has been born or ever will be born to get back to God. Satan's challenge to our Lord was that He would not be able to do it; He would only get through as Son of God, because Satan could not touch Him there. The fear that came upon our Lord was that He might die before He reached the Cross. He feared that as Son of Man He might die before He had opened the gate for us to get through, and He "was heard in that He feared," and was delivered from death in Gethsemane.

When our Lord came to the Cross, His body, soul, and spirit were completely triumphant, there was perfect self-possession. Did the pain of the body cloud His mind? "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." His mind was as clear as a sunbeam—"Woman, behold thy son!" And He was so triumphant in spirit, in His essential personality, that He cried with a loud voice, "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit."

The Garden of Gethsemane is the agony of Almighty God: the Cross of Christ is one terrific triumph, a triumph for the Son of Man. The cry, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" is not the cry of the Son of God in destitution; it is the cry of the Holy Ghost being torn from the Son of God by the weight of sin upon Him. Gethsemane is the agony of the Son of God fulfilling His destiny as the Saviour of the world, and the veil is taken aside to show us what it cost Him to make it easy for us to become sons of God.

Our Destiny as His Disciples

But Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto Him, We are able. And He saith unto them, Ye shall drink indeed of My cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on My right hand, and on My left, is not Mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of My Father. (Matthew 20:22–23; see also 1 Peter 2:21)

Our destiny is determined by our disposition. Our Lord's destiny was determined by His disposition. Our destiny is preordained, but we are free to choose which disposition we will be ruled by. We cannot alter our disposition, but we can choose to let God alter it. If our disposition is to be altered, it must be altered by the Creator, and He will introduce us into a totally new realm by the miracle of His sovereign grace. Redemption means that Jesus Christ can give us a new disposition. At regeneration the Holy Spirit puts in us a totally new disposition, and as we obey that disposition the life of the Son of God will be manifested in our mortal flesh.

Within certain limits we have the power to choose, for instance, a man has the power to refuse to be born again, but no man has absolute free will. There comes a time when the human will must yield allegiance to a force greater than itself. God is the only Being Who can act with absolute free will, and when His Spirit comes into us, He makes us free in will, consequently our obedience becomes of value. It is not obedience when a man does a thing because he cannot help it, but when a man is made a son of God by Redemption, he has the free power to disobey, therefore the power to obey. If we have no power to disobey, we have no power to obey. Our obedience would be of no value at all if the power to sin were taken away.

Our destiny as His disciples is to be in fellowship with God as Jesus was. The cup and the baptism of our Lord are the gateways for every human being to get into perfect oneness with God. Jesus Christ gives us salvation and sanctification, but the places we take hereafter depend upon our obedience and the disposal of the Father. There is no respect of persons with God for salvation, but there are degrees of position hereafter. We are all saved by the cup and the baptism of our Lord, but the position we take individually depends entirely upon our obedience to Him. We are born again through our Lord's cup and baptism, i.e., through His fulfilling of His destiny; we do not have to agonise and suffer before we can be born from above (RV mg). All the distress and all the sacrifice in the world will never atone for sin. We must be born again through His sacrifice into the Kingdom where He lives, and when we are there we have to follow in His steps, and we find we can follow now that we have His Spirit, His nature. Our fear starts when we imagine that we have to live this new life by the energy of our human nature, because we know that it cannot be done, and every time we think of what we were before, we falter. The Bible reveals that when the Holy Spirit has come into us, every command of God is an enabling. Jesus Christ gives the power of His own disposition to anyone, that is why He is apparently so merciless on those of us who have received the Holy Spirit, because His demands on us are made according to His disposition, and not according to our human nature. The old nature says it cannot be done. Jesus Christ says it can be done—"I did it, and I can do it in you if you will enter My life by means of My death." It is no use trying to be what we are not. We are children of God when we are born from above (RV mg), and God will never shield us from the requirements of being His children. "Follow His steps" —that is the conduct of regenerate human nature. The life of Jesus is the life of the normal man of God, but we cannot begin to live it unless we are born from above. Unless we have been taken up into His destiny, we cannot fulfil our own destiny. If we are born from above, are we trying to follow His steps, trying to work out in our mortal flesh that which God has worked in? (Philippians 2:12–13). Salvation is a sovereign gift of the Redemption of the Lord Jesus. Many will be saved through the fulfilling of the destiny of the Son of Man who have not been worth anything to God in this life, their life has been self-centred and wrong, it has not been lived on the foundation of the Son of God. Our destiny is to work out what God works in. It is not that our eternal salvation depends upon our doing it, but our value to God does, and also our position in the Kingdom of God.

His Dread

He went away again the second time, and prayed, saying, O My Father, if this cup may not pass away from Me, except I drink it, Thy will be done. (Matthew 26:42–43; cf. Matthew 4:5–7)

The disciples are the representatives of the human race in connection with Redemption, and Satan's sneer in Gethsemane is, "You will never do it, these men are the specimens of the best You have, and they are asleep. You should have gone to heaven from the Mount of Transfiguration, but instead, You came down and declared You would redeem the human race, and I am determined that You shall not." Our Lord's dread in Gethsemane was born of the knowledge that if He did not get through as Son of Man, the redemption of mankind was hopeless; we could only then have imitated Him, we could never have known Him as Saviour.

This is the agony of God as Man, not a human agony. Our Lord did not want human sympathy, His agony was infinitely profounder than human sympathy could come anywhere near. The darkness was produced because it looked as if Satan were going to triumph, and the disciples, who represented the new humanity, were without the slightest element of understanding what Jesus Christ was doing. He "offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto Him that was able to save Him from death, and was heard in that He feared." His prayer was answered every time, and when He came to the Cross His relationship to His mother, and to John, and to His murderers, showed that His mind and His reason were triumphantly clear. It was not only a sign that our Lord had triumphed, but that He had triumphed to save the human race, so that every human being can get through into the presence of God because of all the Son of Man went through. Jesus Christ is either all that the New Testament claims Him to be—the Redeemer of the human race, or else a futile dreamer, and the only proof is in personal experience. Can God form the life that His Son lived in us? Jesus Christ claims that He can. Then have we let Him do it?

Our Dread as His Disciples

That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death. (Philippians 3:10; see also John 12:27)

Our dread as His disciples is lest we fail Jesus Christ in our service, lest in our experience of the revelation we forget the God Who gave us the experience, forget all about Jesus Christ. As disciples we have not to serve God in our own way, not to tell Him what we are going to do for Him, not to ask Him to baptise us with the Holy Ghost to make us something. "If you would be My disciple," says Jesus, "give up your right to yourself to Me, and take up your cross daily." No man can carry the cross of God. The Cross of God is the Redemption of the world. The cross we have to carry is that we have deliberately given up our right to ourselves to Jesus Christ, and we steadily refuse to be appealed to on any other line than He was appealed to on when He was here. With regard to all the pleasures and sciences and interests of this life, push this simple consideration, "Is this the kind of thing the Son of God is doing in the world, or is it what the prince of this world is doing?" Not, "Is it right?" but "Is it the kind of thing the Son of God would be doing in the world?" If it is not, then don't touch it. If you only give up wrong things for Jesus Christ, don't talk any more about being in love with Him. If you want to do a thing all the time, it is no virtue not to do it! Jesus Christ takes the "want to" out of us and enables us to do in this world the things He would be doing if He were here. We say, "Why shouldn't I? it isn't wrong!" What a sordid thing to say! When we love a person, do we only give up what is wrong for him? Love is not measured by what it gets, but by what it costs, and our relationship to Jesus Christ can never be on the line of, "Why shouldn't I do this?" Our Lord simply says, "If any man will be My disciple, those are the conditions" (see Luke 14:26-27 and 33). Is He worth it? Will He cast it up at us that we never gave up anything for Him? No, He will never do that, He will never tell us what sneaks we have been, but we will find it out (Matthew 10:26). Our dread is to be lest we forget Him. Do we know Jesus Christ better to-day than ever we did?

If we have been put right with God through the agony of the Son of God, have we enthroned Him as Lord and Master as well? (Luke 6:46; John 13:13). Is He absolute Master of our body? (1 Corinthians 3:16– 17). We have no business to be master of our own body. Our dread is lest we forget that our body is the temple of the Holy Ghost. We are to know Jesus Christ and the power of His resurrection in our body, to know the fellowship of His sufferings in our body. "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself." There is no "if" in connection with salvation, only in connection with discipleship. The conditions of discipleship are found in Luke 14:26-27 and 33. If the commands of Jesus Christ in our life clash with the most sacred relationships on earth, it must be instant obedience to Him. We must hate the claim that contends with His claim; hate it that is, in comparison with our love to Him. We must abandon to God at all costs. Abandon is of infinitely more value than self-scrutiny.

His Devotion

And He left them, and went away again, and prayed the third time, saying the same words. Then cometh He to His disciples, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. Rise, let us be going: behold, he is at hand that doth betray Me. (Matthew 26:44–46; cf. Matthew 4:8–11)

"Still sleeping? It is all right now, it is all finished, the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners." That is a joyful utterance. Our Lord is absolutely sure that as representative Man before God He will get the whole human race through, in spite of everything the devil can do, and the Cross is an absolute triumph. Our Lord, as Son of Man, has been through the depths of His agony in Gethsemane, and He has won at every point. He has won for the bodies of men, He has won for the minds and souls of men and for the spirits of men; everything that makes up a human personality is redeemed absolutely, and no matter whether a man be a vile sinner or as clean as the rich young ruler, he can enter into the marvellous life with God through the way made by the Son of Man.

"Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit," that is, the spirit of the Son of Man, the spirit of the whole human race represented by the Son of Man getting through to God on the Cross. "Though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered" (Hebrews 5:8). He did not learn to be a Son, He was a Son, and He came to redeem as

Man, and He learned obedience as Redeemer by suffering. His agony is the basis of the simplicity of our salvation. His suffering is the basis of all our light and liberty and joy. His Cross makes it simple enough for any one to get into the presence of God.

Our Lord in His agony was devoted to God's purpose. The supreme obedience of Jesus was never to the needs of men, but always to the will of His Father. The Church goes astray whenever she makes the need the call. The need is never the call; the need is the opportunity; the call is the call of God.

Our Devotion as His Disciples

I am come to send fire on the earth; and what will I, if it be already kindled? (Luke 12:49; see also Colossians 1:24)

"Our God is a consuming fire," and when God comes on to this earth in the effective working of the Redemption of Jesus Christ, He brings pain and havoc and disaster (Matthew 10:34). The first result of the Redemption of Jesus Christ in human life is havoc. If any human life can stand before God on its own basis, Calvary is much ado about nothing. If it can be proved that rationalism is the basis of human life, then the New Testament is nonsense; instead of its being a revelation, it is a cunningly devised fable. There is no need for redemption, Jesus Christ is nothing but a martyr, one of whom it was true that He was stricken, smitten of God and afflicted. If we can stand before God apart from Jesus Christ, we have proved that Calvary is not needed. Immediately Jesus Christ comes in, He produces havoc, because the whole world system is arrayed against His Redemption. It was the world system of His day, and particularly the religious system, that killed the Son of God.

"And fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh"—for Redemption's sake? No, "for His body's sake, which is the church." On the ground of Jesus Christ's Redemption, we can enter into identification with His sufferings, but we do not need to unless we like. First Corinthians 13 and Matthew 5:43–48 are practical home-coming Christian truths. "Come unto Me. . . . Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me," "then go and bear with others for My sake." What have we suffered for Jesus Christ? Think of the passionate indignation we get into when someone slanders us!—"Consider Him." We do not need to take the blow, but if we do not, it will go back on Him. We will get off scot free, and everyone will applaud us for doing so, but the blow will fall upon Jesus Christ. If we let it come on us, it will not fall on Him. We have always the privilege of going the second mile. It is never our duty to do it, but will we go the second mile with God? Are we deliberately filling up that which remains behind of His sufferings, or becoming mere critical centres? If we have been brought into a right relationship with God by the Redemption of Jesus Christ, He expects us to put on His yoke and to learn of Him.

The devotion of the saint is to "fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ for His body's sake," nothing remains behind to be filled up for Redemption's sake. How did Jesus Christ suffer? Because people misunderstood Him? Because He was persecuted? Because He could not get on with men? No, He suffered for one thing only—that men might be saved; He let Almighty God do His whole will in and through Him without asking His permission. He suffered "according to the will of God."

How can we fill up the sufferings that remain behind? First John 5:16 is an indication of one way, viz., that of intercession. Remember, no man has time to pray, he has to take time from other things that are valuable in order to understand how necessary time for prayer is. The things that act like thorns and stings in our personal lives will go instantly we pray; we won't feel the smart any more, because we have got God's point of view about them. Prayer means that we get into union with God's view of other people. Our devotion as saints is to identify ourselves with God's interests in other lives. God pays no attention to our personal affinities; He expects us to identify ourselves with His interests in others.

HIS CROSS AND OUR DISCIPLESHIP

The Collision of God and Sin (Acts 2:36)
The Sacrifice to Christ of Myself (Romans 12:1–2; Matthew 16:24; Luke 9:23)

The Contradiction of God and Satan (John 12:31–33)

The Suffering for Christ of Myself (Colossians 1:24; 2 Corinthians 1:5; Philippians 3:10)

The Centre of God and Salvation (2 Corinthians 5:14)

The Sacrament of God in Myself (Acts 20:24; 1 Corinthians 15:30)

There is a difference between revelation and experience. As Christians we must have an experience, but we must believe a great deal more than we can experience. For instance, no Christian can experience the Cross of Christ; but he can experience salvation through the Cross. No Christian can experience God becoming Incarnate; but he can experience the incoming of the life of God by regeneration. No Christian can experience the personal advent of the Holy Ghost on to this earth; but he can experience the indwelling of the Holy Ghost. A New Testament Christian is one who bases all his thinking on these revelations. He experiences the regenerating power of God, and then goes on to build up his mind in the most holy faith. Until a man is born again, he cannot think as a Christian. Belief of doctrine does not make a man a Christian. There are those who emphasise doctrine, they would go to martyrdom for the faith; whilst others emphasise experience, and take everything revealed in the Bible as picturing our experience. Either of these views is likely to become a dangerous side track.

Jesus Christ took thirty-three years over the historic completion of Redemption in order to exhibit what God's normal Man was like. He lived the pattern normal life of a man as God wants it to be lived, and He demands of us that we live as He did. But how are we to begin to do it? We did not come into this world as God Incarnate came. He came from pre-existing Deity; we are born with the heredity of sin. How are we to enter into the life He lived? By His Cross and by no other way. We do not enter into the life of God by imitation, or by vows, or by ceremonies, or by Church membership; we enter into it by its entering into us at regeneration. The Cross of Jesus Christ is the gateway into His life.

The Cross is not the cross of a man but the Cross of God, and the Cross of God can never be realised in human experience. Beware of saying that Jesus Christ was a martyr. Nowadays He is frequently looked upon as a martyr, His life is acknowledged to be very beautiful, but the Atonement and the Cross are not being given their rightful place, and the Bible is being robbed of its magnitude and virility. The death of our Lord was not the death of a martyr, but the exhibition of the heart of God, and the gateway whereby any member of the human race can enter into union with God. The Cross is the centre of Time and of Eternity, the answer to the enigmas of both.

The Collision of God and Sin

Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ. (Acts 2:36)

The Cross of Jesus is the revelation of God's judgement on sin. It is not the cross of a martyr; it is the substitution of Jesus for sinful humanity. The Cross did not happen to Jesus, He came on purpose for it. The whole purpose of the Incarnation is the Cross—"the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." The Cross is beyond Time; the actual crucifixion is the historical revelation of the heart nature of the Trinity of God. The symbolic figure of the nature of God is not a circle, complete and self-centred; God is not all. The symbol of God's nature is the Cross, whose arms stretch out to limitless reaches.

The Cross of Jesus Christ is a revelation; our cross is an experience. If we neglect for one moment the basal revelation of the Cross, we will make shipwreck of our faith, no matter what our experience is. The test of our spiritual life is our understanding of the Cross. The Cross of Jesus is often wrongly taken as a type of the cross we have to carry. Jesus did not say, "If any man will come after Me, let him take up My cross, but, "let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me." Our cross becomes our divinely appointed privilege by means of His Cross. We are never called upon to carry His Cross. We have so hallowed the Cross by twenty centuries of emotion and sentiment that it sounds a very beautiful and pathetic thing to talk about carrying our cross. But a wooden cross with iron nails in it is a clumsy thing to carry. The real cross was like that, and do we imagine that the external cross was more ugly than our actual one? Or that the thing that tore our Lord's hands and feet was not really so terrible as our imagination of it?

Do we agree with God's judgement upon sin in the Cross? There is a difference between sin and sins. Sin is a heredity; sins are acts for which we are responsible. Sin is a thing we are born with and we cannot touch it. God touches sin in Redemption, and the Cross reveals the clash of God and sin. If we do not put to death the things in us that are not of God, they will put to death the things that are of God. There is never any alternative, some thing must die in us—either sin or the life of God. If we agree theologically with God's condemnation of sin on the Cross, then what about sin in our own heart? Do we agree with God's verdict on sin and lust in our lives? The moment we do agree, we may be delivered from it. It is a question of agreeing with God's verdict on sin and of will. Will we go through the condemnation now? If we will, there is no more condemnation for us, and the salvation of Jesus Christ is made actual in our lives. Unless our salvation works out through our finger tips and everywhere else, there is nothing to it, it is religious humbug.

The Sacrifice to Christ of Myself

I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God. (Romans 12:1–2; see also Matthew 16:24; Luke 9:23)

"Present your bodies a living sacrifice." We cannot present an unholy thing at the altar, and Paul's word "brethren" means saints. It is only from the standpoint of sanctification that these verses apply. Our Lord says to those who have entered into His life by means of His Cross, "Let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me." Not, "Let him give up sin"; any man will give up sinning if he knows how to, but, "Let him deny himself," that is, "give up his right to himself to Me." Our cross is what we hold before the world, viz., the fact that we are sanctified to do nothing but God's will. We have given away our right to ourselves for ever, and the cross we take up is a sign in heaven, on earth and to hell, that we are His and our own no longer. The right to ourselves is the only thing we have to give to God. We cannot give our natural possessions, because they have been given to us. If we had not our right to ourselves by God's creation of us, we should have nothing to give, and consequently could not be held responsible.

Jesus Christ is not dealing with sin here (sin is dealt with by His Cross), but with what has been referred to as the natural life, the life symbolised by Mary, the mother of Jesus, which must be sacrificed, not annihilated. The idea of sacrifice is giving back to God the best we have in order that He may make it His and ours for ever. Have we done it? Have we as saints given up our right to ourselves to Him? or do we while accepting His salvation thoroughly object to giving up our right to ourselves to Him? Sanctification has to do with separating a holy life to God's uses. "And for their sakes I sanctify Myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth" (John 17:19).

We are apt to imagine that the cross we have to carry means the ordinary troubles and trials of life, but we must have these whether we are Christians or not. Neither is our cross suffering for conscience' sake. Our cross is something that comes only with the peculiar relationship of a disciple to Jesus Christ; it is the evidence that we have denied our right to ourselves. "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me" (Galatians 2:20). It is not only that we give up our right to ourselves to Jesus Christ but that determinedly we relate ourselves to life so that we may be appealed to only by the things that appeal to Him, and do in the world only the things with which He is associated. There are myriads of right things in this world that our Lord would not touch, relationships which He described by the "eye," and the "right arm." Our right arm is not a bad thing, it is one of the best things we have, but Jesus said, "If it offends you in your walk with Me, cut it off." Most of us balk this; we do not object to being delivered from sin, but we do not intend to give up the right to ourselves to Him. The only right a Christian has is the right to give up his rights. Unless we are willing to give up good things for Jesus Christ, we have no realisation of Whom He is. "But really I cannot give up things that are quite legitimate!" Then never mention the word love again in connection with Jesus Christ if you cannot give up the best you have for Him. This is the essential nature of love in the natural life, otherwise it is a farce to call it love, it is not love, but lust; and when we come to our relationship with Jesus Christ, this is the love He demands of us. If we have entered into the experience of regeneration through His Cross, these are the conditions of discipleship (Luke 14:26–27 and 33). Always notice the "If" in connection with discipleship, there is never any compulsion. "If any man come to Me, and hate not . . . , he cannot be My disciple." He may be anything else, a very fascinating person, a most delightful asset to modern civilisation, but Jesus Christ says, "he cannot be My disciple." A man may be saved without being a disciple, and it is the point of discipleship that is always kicked against. Our Lord is not talking of eternal salvation, but of the possibility of our being of temporal worth to Himself. How many of us are of any worth to Jesus Christ? Our attitude is rather that we are much obliged to God for saving us, but the idea of giving up our chances to realise ourselves in life is too extravagantly extreme. Some of us will take all God has to give us while we take good care not to give Him anything back.

The sacrifice of myself to Christ is not a revelation, but an experience. Have I sacrificed myself to Him, or have I refused to give up my right to myself to Him because there are several things I want to do? "There are so many other interests in my life, and, of course, God will not expect it of me." Always state things to yourself in order to realise whether you ruggedly are what you sentimentally think you ought to be, and you will soon know the kind of humbug you are. Spiritual reality is what is wanted. "I surrender all"—and you feel as if you did, that is the awkward thing. The point is whether, as God engineers your circumstances, you find that you really have surrendered. Immediately you do surrender, you are made so much one with your Lord that the thought of what it cost never enters any more.

Now is the judgement of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out. And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me. This He said, signifying what death He should die. (John 12:31–33)

The prince of this world and Satan are synonymous terms. Satan is the manifestation of the devil for which man is held responsible, that is, Satan is the result of a communication between man and the devil (Genesis 3). Our Lord did not say to Peter, "Get thee behind Me, 'devil,' but, 'Satan'"; and then He defined Satan—"thou savourest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men." What was it that Peter savoured? Self-pity; "Pity Thyself, Lord: this shall not be to Thee," and Jesus "turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind Me, Satan: thou art an offence unto Me." Peter's appeal was made on the ground of selfinterest, and the prince of this world governs everything on that basis. Self-realisation is the essential principle of his government. "Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." The world is that system of things which organises its life without any thought of Jesus Christ. Paul says that the lost are those whose minds are blinded by the god of this world (2 Corinthians 4:3–4). Nothing blinds the mind to the claims of Jesus Christ more effectually than a good, clean-living, upright life based on self-realisation. For a thing to be Satanic does not mean that it is abominable and immoral. The satanically managed man is moral, upright, proud, and individual; he is absolutely self-governed and has no need of God. The prince of this world is judged for ever at the Cross. If we enter into the Kingdom of God through the Cross of Christ, self-realisation cannot get through with us, it must be left outside. The Cross of Christ reveals the contradiction of God and Satan. The disposition of self-realisation is the manifestation in us of the devil as Satan, and when we come to the Cross we leave Satan outside, Satan cannot take one step inside the Cross.

The Suffering for Christ of Myself

Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for His body's sake, which is the church. (Colossians 1:24; see also 2 Corinthians 1:5; Philippians 3:10)

That is suffering without any notice from the world, saving its ridicule. It is not suffering like Christ, it is suffering for Christ. It is not suffering for the sake of Redemption; we have nothing to do with Redemption; that is completed. We have to fill up "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ for His body's sake, which is the church." When by the Cross of Christ we have entered into the experience of identification with our Lord, then there comes the practical working out of Matthew 11:29, "Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart." When we learn of Jesus we shall not "grouse" at a dispensation of God's providence that we cannot understand; we shall not give way to self-pity and say, "Why should this happen to me?" Jesus said—"Let him . . . take up his cross, and follow Me." This means putting into exercise 1 Corinthians 13 and deliberately identifying ourselves with God's interests in others, and it involves a moral decision on our part. God will bring across our path people who embody the characteristics that we have shown to Him—stubbornness, pride, conceit, opinionativeness, sensuality, a hundred little meannesses. "Now," He says, "love them as I have loved you." It works in this way, we see that someone is going to get the better of us, and every logical power in us says—"Resent it." Morally speaking, we should, but Jesus Christ says, "When you are insulted, not only do not resent it, but exhibit the Son of God." The disciple realises that his Lord's honour is at stake in his life, not his own honour. A coward does not hit back because he is afraid to; a strong man refuses to hit back because he is strong; but in appearance they are both the same, and that is where the intense humiliation of being a Christian comes in. The Lord is asking us to go the second mile with Him, and if we take the blow, we will save Him. We can always avoid letting Jesus Christ get the blow by taking it ourselves. Be absolutely abandoned to God; it is only your own reputation that is at stake. People will not discredit God; they will only think you are a fool.

After the Resurrection, Jesus Christ did not invite the disciples to a time of communion on the Mount of Transfiguration, He said—"Feed My sheep." When God gives a man work to do, it is seldom work that seems at all proportionate to his natural ability. Paul, lion-hearted genius though he was, spent his time teaching the most ignorant people. The evidence that we are in love with God is that we identify ourselves with His interests in others, and other people are the exact expression of what we ourselves are; that is the humiliating thing! Jesus Christ came down to a most miserably insignificant people in order to redeem them. When He has lifted us into relationship with Himself, He expects us to identify ourselves with His interests in others.

The Centre of God and Salvation

For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead. (2 Corinthians 5:14)

We cannot be saved by consecration, or by praying, or by giving ourselves up to God. We can only be saved by the Cross of Jesus Christ. Salvation is an absolutely free, unmerited gift of God. We would a hundred times rather that God told us to do something than we would accept His salvation as a gift. The centre of salvation is the Cross of Jesus Christ, and why it is so easy to obtain salvation is because it cost God so much; and why it is so difficult to experience salvation is because human conceit will not accept, nor believe, nor have anything to do with unmerited salvation. We have not to experience God saving the world; it is a revelation that God has saved the world through Christ, and we can enter into the experience of His salvation through the Cross. The Cross is the point where God and sinful man merge with a crash, and the way to life is opened, but the crash is on the heart of God. God is always the sufferer.

The Sacrament of God in Myself

But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God. (Acts 20:24; see also 1 Corinthians 15:30)

"Neither count I my life dear unto myself." Paul was absolutely indifferent to any other consideration than that of fulfilling the ministry he had received. He could never be appealed to by those who urged him to remain in a certain place because he was being of so much use there. Watch our Lord also. He went through villages and cities where He was marvellously used, but the great characteristic of His earthly life was that He stedfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem; He never stayed in a place because He had been of use there (Mark 1:37-38). Beware of the sweet sisters and beloved brothers who say to you, "Now do consider whether you will not be of more use here than anywhere else." Probably you will, and in the passing of the months you will become mouldy bread instead of eating bread. We have nothing to do with God's purpose, but only with the sacrament of God in us, that is, the real Presence of God coming through the common elements of our lives (John 7:37-39). The measure of our service for God is not our usefulness to others. We have nothing to do with the estimate of others, nor with success in service; we have to see that we fulfil our ministry. "As Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world" (John 17:18). Our Lord's first obedience was not to the needs of men, not to the consideration of where He was most useful, but to the will of His Father, and the first need of our life is not to be useful to God, but to do God's will. How are we to know the will of God? By living in Romans 12:1-2. By being renewed in the spirit of the mind and refusing to be conformed to this age, we shall make out "the will of God, even the thing which is good and acceptable and perfect" (RV mg).

HIS RESURRECTION AND OUR LIFE

His Resurrection Destiny (Luke 24:26) Our Experimental Life (Philippians 3:10; Romans 6:23)

His Resurrection Deity (John 20:17) Our Entire Life (Colossians 3:1–4) We must always distinguish between the truths we receive as revelations and what we experience of God's grace. We experience the wonderful reality of God's salvation and sanctification in our actual lives, but we have also to receive into our minds and souls Divine revelations which we cannot experience. We cannot experience Jesus Christ rising from the dead; we cannot experience His Destiny or His Deity, but we must understand where the regenerating forces in our lives come from. The New Testament insists on an instructed mind as well as a vital experience.

His Resurrection Declared

And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted. And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted: ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: He is risen; He is not here: behold the place where they laid Him. (Mark 16:5–8)

Our Lord died and was buried and He rose again, and this is the declaration of the Resurrection in all its incredibleness. Any question that arises in connection with the Resurrection arises in the minds of those who do not accept the necessity of being born from above (RV mg). There is always a quarrel between our common sense and the revelations made in God's Book. We must lose our soul in order to find it. We have to be born from above and receive Holy Spirit into our spirit, and then begin to construct another soul, or way of reasoning, and to do this we must accept not only the facts that come to us through our common sense, but the facts that come by revelation. We say seeing is believing, but it is not. We must believe a thing is possible before we should believe it even though we saw it (John 20:29).

Our Eternal Life

And when He had said this, He breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost. (John 20:22)

Eternal life is the gift of the Lord Jesus Christ. "He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life" (John 6:47), i.e., the life He manifested in His human flesh when He was here, and says Jesus, "Ye have not [that] life in yourselves" (John 6:53 RV). His life is not ours by natural birth, and it can only be given to us by means of His Cross. Our Lord's Cross is the gateway into His life; His Resurrection means that He has power now to convey that life to us (John 17:2).

The onslaught of Satan in Gethsemane was that Jesus Christ would never get through His agony as Son of Man. As Son of God, Satan could not prevent His getting through, but his challenge was that he would prevent Jesus Christ bringing one soul through with Him—and Satan was hopelessly defeated. By the death of the Son of Man upon the Cross, the door is opened for any individual to go straight into the presence of God; and by the Resurrection our Lord can impart to us His own life. When we are born from above (RV mg) we receive from the risen Lord His very life, our human spirit is quickened by the incoming of the life of God. That is the marvel of the power of the Lord Jesus Christ through His resurrection. "I would know Him in the power of His resurrection" (Philippians 3:10 MOFFATT).

Holy Spirit, Salvation, and Eternal Life are interchangeable terms. "Holy Spirit" is the experimental name for eternal life working in human beings here and now. The only thing that makes eternal life actual is the entrance of the Holy Spirit by commitment to Jesus Christ. Our beliefs will mock us unless something comes into us from God, because nothing has any power to alter us save the incoming of the life of God. The Holy Spirit is the One Who makes experimentally real in us what Jesus Christ did for us. The Holy Spirit is the Deity in proceeding power Who applies the Atonement to our experience. Jesus Christ came to redeem us; to put us right with God; to deliver us from the power of death; to reveal God the Father; and when we receive the Holy Spirit He will make experimentally real in us all that Jesus Christ came to do. The great need for men and women is to receive the Holy Spirit. Our creeds teach us to believe in the Holy Spirit; the New Testament says we must receive Him (Luke 11:13). Are you powerless in your life? Then, for Christ's sake, get at Reality! Ask God for the Holy Spirit, i.e., His eternal life, and you will begin to manifest in your mortal flesh the life of Jesus. One day we shall have a body like His body, but we can know now the efficacy of our Lord's resurrection. We can receive the Holy Spirit and experimentally know His salvation.

His Resurrection Destiny

Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into His glory? (Luke 24:26)

The sufferings of Jesus Christ were not an accident, they are what He came for; He knew that His life was to be a ransom for many. The men who do not suffer in this world are not worth their salt. The finest men and women suffer, and the devil uses their sufferings to slander God. God is after one thing-bringing many sons to glory, and He does not care what it costs us, any more than He cared what it cost Him. God has taken the responsibility for the possibility of sin, and the proof that He did so is the Cross. He is the suffering God, not One Who reigns above in calm disdain. "Though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered." He did not learn to be a Son, but because He was a Son, He deliberately chose to obey God through suffering. His resurrection destiny is to suffer and to enter into glory in order that He may bring "many sons unto glory."

We must beware lest we put the emphasis of strain and suffering on the wrong thing. Salvation and eternal life are easy for us to obtain because of what they cost God. If we find it difficult to come to God, it is because we will try to drag our human pride through. If we will only come with the simplicity of a child, there is no need for any agony at all; we can receive the marvellous revelation of salvation and experience the impartation of the life of the risen Lord Jesus; but self-realisation and self-interest and sin must all be renounced. Never sympathise with a soul who finds it difficult to get through to God. It is perilously easy to sympathise with Satan instead of with God (Matthew 16:23). No one can be more tender to men and women than God. We are slandering God if we sympathise with the wilfulness of a person and think how difficult God makes it for him. It is never hard to get to God unless our wilfulness makes it hard.

Our Lord rose to an absolutely new life, to a life He did not live before He was Incarnate, He rose to a life that had never been before. There had been resurrections before the resurrection of Jesus Christ, but they were all resuscitations to the same kind of life as heretofore. Jesus Christ rose to a totally new life, and to a totally different relationship to men and women. The resurrection of Jesus Christ grants Him the right to give His own destiny to any human being—viz., to make us the sons and daughters of God. His Resurrection means that we are raised to His risen life, not to our old life. "Like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life . . . we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection" (Romans 6:4–5).

Our Experimental Life

That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death. (Philippians 3:10; see also Romans 6:23)

Eternal life is not a present given to me by God, it is Himself. "The gift of God," not from God. How is the life of God going to work out in us? First of all, it will manifest itself in our mortal flesh in the way of death. The surging life of God instantly hates to death the things which have nothing to do with God. We experience exhaustion, a drying up of the springs of intellectual and physical life, the reason being that God is teaching us that all our life is now in the hand of God. Then the Holy Spirit will experimentally reveal the power of His resurrection. If we are right with God, physical exhaustion will always bring its own recuperation. The exhaustion does not tell because He recuperates all the time. It is not a question of being buoyed up with excitement, it is a superabounding supply of life all the time. If we live in touch with our Lord's life experimentally, we realise that our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost. This comes to us first as a revelation, not as something to be experienced only. If we live on the experimental side alone, we shall get distracted. The Resurrection of Jesus Christ has given Him the right, the authority, to impart the life of God to us, and our experimental life must be constructed on the basis of His life. "All my fresh springs shall be in Thee" (Psalm 87:7 PBV). 13 Watch the things that exhaust you, and you will find you are doing something outside God's arrangement for you. There are things for which His life supplies no energy and we get spent right out. If we are doing things inside God's arrangement for us, the natural exhaustion is so quickly recuperated by the resurrection life of Jesus that we do not feel the exhaustion. We must find out whether we are instructing ourselves in the Christian revelation. Do we know the power of His resurrection? are we making that the centre of our profound life? If we are, the experimental reality will work all through.

His Resurrection Deity

Jesus saith unto her, Touch Me not; for I am not yet ascended to My Father: but go to My brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto My Father, and your Father; and to My God, and your God. (John 20:17)

The risen Lord as Son of Man is talking to a particular representative of humanity, the woman out of whom He had cast seven devils. Our Lord is the same, yet so indefinably altered by His death and resurrection that Mary did not recognise Him at first. Then when He said to her, "Mary," she flung herself at His feet with a complete thrill of expectancy-"He is back again, and all things will be well!" Mary had to learn that the relationship she was now to be in to her Lord was not one that could be discerned by her natural senses, but a relationship based on an impartation of life from Himself. "I ascend unto My Father, and your Father." It was to be a relationship in which she was made one with Jesus Christ. His Resurrection Deity means that He can take us into union with God, and the way into that relationship of oneness is by the Cross and the Resurrection. The weakest saint can experience the power of the Deity of the Son of God if he is willing to "let go." The whole almighty power of God is on our behalf, and when we realise this, life becomes the implicit life of the child. No wonder Jesus said—"Let not your heart be troubled"! The characteristic of the saintly life is abandon to God, not a settling down on our own whiteness. God is not making hot-house plants, but sons and daughters of God, men and women with a strong family likeness to Jesus Christ.

Our Entire Life

If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your attention on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory. (Colossians 3:1–4)

We starve our minds as Christians by not thinking, and we cannot think as Christians until we are born from above (RV mg). So many of us have a good spiritual experience, but we have never thought things out on Christian lines. It is just as true that a man may live a Christian life without thinking as that a man may think a Christian life without living it. We have to learn to combine the two, and to do this we must build up our minds on these great truths.

If we have been born from above (RV mg), we must seek the things that are above. To any one who is not born from above, it sounds mystical and remote, but there is nothing too profound for a saint. We can always know a saint because he discerns the revelations of God, while the unspiritual man who has not been born from above looks puzzled. Truth is not discerned intellectually, it is discerned spiritually.

The power of the Resurrection is to work out in these mortal bodies. Provided we are alive when our Lord comes again, we shall be changed, Paul says, and he goes on to expound the marvellous transformation that will take place in a flash in everything to do with the natural.

"Your life is hid with Christ in God." Christ is our entire life. When once we realise this, certain forms of doubt and perplexity vanish for ever. If we set our affection on things above, those perplexities will never trouble us any more because we know the Lord Jesus, and He is not distracted by these present perplexities. The things that are obscure to the natural man become clear to the penetration of the mind that sets itself on the things above. Such an one does not pretend not to have doubts, we know he has not got them; his is not a stoical calm. The reason is that he has been living for a long time in Colossians 3, the entire life is hid with Christ in God, the whole set of the mind is on the things above, and the things on earth are transfigured.

Thank God that the almighty power of Jesus Christ is for us. All power is vested in Him in heaven and on earth, and He says, "Lo, I am with you all the days" (RV mg). All the power of the Deity of Christ is ours through His Resurrection.

HIS ASCENSION AND OUR UNION

Luke 24:50-51; Acts 1:9-10

His Transfiguration Consummated (John 17:5) Our Supernatural Salvation (Acts 2:33)

His Transformation Completed (Matthew 28:18) Our Sanctified Security (John 14:13)

His Trustiness Continued (Acts 7:56) Our Simple Satisfaction (John 17:23)

All the events in our Lord's life to which we have no corresponding experience happened after the Transfiguration. From then onwards our Lord's life was altogether vicarious. Up to the time of the Transfiguration, He had exhibited the normal perfect life of a man; from the Transfiguration onwards, everything is unfamiliar to us. Gethsemane, the Cross, the Resurrection—there is nothing like these experiences in our human life. From the Transfiguration on, we are dealing not so much with the life our Lord lived as with the way He opened the door for us to enter into His life. At His Ascension our Lord enters Heaven and keeps the door open for humanity. His Cross is the door for every member of the human race to enter into the life of God. Because of His Resurrection our Lord has the right to give eternal life to every individual man (John 17:2); and by His Ascension He becomes the possessor of all power in heaven and in earth (Matthew 28:18).

His Transfiguration Consummated

And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was. (John 17:5)

When our Lord as a Man had fulfilled all God's demands of Him, and when by obedience He had transformed His natural life into a spiritual life, He reached the place where it was all spiritual, earth had no more hold on Him, and on the Mount of Transfiguration His real nature, viz., His essential Deity, broke all through the natural and He was transfigured. He had fulfilled all the requirements of His Father for His earthly life, and God's presence, symbolised in the cloud, waited to usher Him back into the glory which He had with the Father before the world was. But He turned His back on the glory, and came down from the Mount to identify Himself with fallen humanity, because through Calvary there was to issue the newly constructed humanity. If Jesus Christ had gone to heaven from the Mount of Transfiguration, He would have gone alone. He would have been to us a glorious Figure, One who manifested the life of God's normal man and how wonderful it is for God and man to live as one, but what good would that have been to us? We can never live in the power of an ideal put before us. What is the use of Jesus Christ telling us we must be as pure in heart as He is when we know we are impure? But Jesus Christ did not go to heaven from the Mount. Moses and Elijah talked with Him, not of His glory, nor of His Deity, but of His death, the issue which He was about to accomplish at Jerusalem. By His death on the Cross Jesus Christ made the way for every son of man to get into communion with God.

It was on this point that the enemy of God and of man assailed our Lord in the Garden of Gethsemane: "You will never get through as Son of Man; You will get through as Deity, but not as Deity Incarnate." Our Lord's object in becoming Deity Incarnate was to redeem mankind; and He did get through as Son of Man, which means that any and every man has freedom of access straight to God by right of the Cross of Jesus Christ. That is regeneration being made effectual in human lives, and the Holy Spirit is the One Who makes this marvellous Redemption actual in us.

On the Mount of Ascension the Transfiguration is completed. There is a similarity in the details of the two scenes, because the Ascension is the consummation of the Transfiguration. Our Lord does now, without any hesitation, go back into His primal glory; He does now go straight to the fulfilment of all the Transfiguration promised. But He does not go back simply as Son of God: He goes back to God as Son of Man as well as Son of God. The barriers are broken down, sin is done away with, death is destroyed, the power of the enemy is paralysed, and there is now freedom of access for anyone straight to the very throne of God by the Ascension of the Son of Man. As He ascended our Lord stretched out His hands, the hands that He deliberately showed to the disciples after His resurrection, and the last the disciples saw of Him was His pierced hands. Those pierced hands are emblematic of the Atonement, and the angels' declaration was that it is "this same Jesus" Who is to come again, with the marks of the Atonement upon Him. The Atonement means that the whole of the human race has been atoned for, Redemption is complete, and any man can get straight to the throne of God without let or hindrance¹⁴ through the wonder of all that our Lord has done. He is now at the right hand of the Father, not only as Son of God (John 1:18), but as Son of Man.

Our Supernatural Salvation

Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear. (Acts 2:33)

Salvation means the incoming into human nature of the great characteristics that belong to God, and there is no salvation that is not supernatural. It is easy to say that human love and Divine love are one and the same thing; actually they are very far from being the same. It is also easy to say that human virtues and God's nature are one and the same thing; but this, too, is actually far from the truth. We must square our thinking with facts. Sin has come in and made a hiatus between human and Divine love, between human virtues and God's nature, and what we see now in human nature is only the remnant and refraction of the Divine. Human virtues according to the Bible are not promises of what human nature is going to be, but remnants of what human nature once was. This explains why we so often see remnants of original nobility in men and women who have not been born again into the Kingdom of God. As Christians we must learn to trace things to their right source. God makes very distinct the difference between the qualities that are Divine and those that are human. John 15:13 has reference to human love, which lays down its life for its friends. Romans 5:8 has reference to the Divine love, which lays down its life for its enemies, a thing human nature can never do. This does not mean that human beings cannot forgive; they can and do forgive; but forgiveness is not human, it belongs entirely to the Divine nature, and is a miracle when exhibited in the human.

Beware of philosophies. It is much more satisfactory to listen to a philosopher than to a proclaimer of the Gospel, because the latter talks with the gibes and the cuts of God, and they go straight to that in man which hates the revelation of the gap there is between man and God. If we accept the revelation, it will mean that we must be born from above (RV mg), and the Gospel message is that we can be born from above the second we want to.

Intellectually, we are inclined to ignore sin. The one element in man that does not ignore sin is conscience. The Holy Spirit deals with conscience first, not with intellect or emotions. When the Holy Spirit gets hold of a man and convicts him of sin, he instantly gets to despair, for he recognises that the holiness of Jesus Christ is the only thing that can ever stand before God, and he knows there is no chance for him. When conviction of sin comes in this way there is only one of two places—either suicide or the Cross of Jesus Christ. The majority of us are shallow, we do not bother our heads about Reality. We are taken up with actual comforts, with actual ease and peace, and when the Spirit of God comes in and disturbs the equilibrium of our life we prefer to ignore what He reveals.

Salvation is always supernatural. The Holy Ghost brings me into union with God by dealing with that which broke the union. It is dangerous to preach a persuasive gospel, to try and persuade men to believe in Jesus Christ with the idea that if they do, He will develop them along the natural line. Jesus Christ said, "I did not come to send peace, but a sword"; there is something to be destroyed first. Jesus Christ does not produce heaven and peace and delight straight off, He produces pain and misery and conviction and upset, and a man says, "If that is all He came to do, then I wish He had never come." But this is not all He came to do: He came to bring us into a supernatural union with His Father. When a man believes in Jesus Christ, i.e., commits himself to Jesus Christ—belief is a moral act, not an intellectual act—then the Ascended Lord, by the Holy Ghost, brings the man into oneness with His Father, it is a supernatural union.

The two centres of Christian life are Experience and Revelation. Are we thinking along the line of the revelations Jesus Christ has given? We can never get into touch with God by our own effort; but we must maintain touch with God by our own effort (Philippians 2:12–13). Jesus Christ can take anyone, no matter who he is, and presence him with His wonderful Divine salvation. The nature of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, but we have to maintain contact with His nature by obedience. Some sections of the Christian community teach that because we are all right in the anticipation of God, therefore it does not matter how we live actually. That is not true; we must not only be right in heart towards God, our life must show that we are right. Jesus Christ's life must work through our flesh, and that is where we have to obey. So many go into raptures over God's supernatural salvation, over the wonderful fact that God saves us by His sovereign grace (and we cannot do that too much), but they forget that now He expects us to get ourselves into trim to obey Him. We have to live in this mortal flesh as sons and daughters of God; we have to bring out to our finger tips the life that is hid with Christ in God, and we can do it because our ascended Lord has all power. If our flesh and blood does not allow the Son of God to manifest Himself in us, we are actually anti-Christ, we preach what our life denies, we proclaim a creed which our practical life spits at in ridicule. It is unconscious blasphemy to deny by our life that Jesus Christ can do what He claims He can. If we are born again, we are born into the life of God, and we have to see to it that we obey His life, and the faithfulness of the Holy Spirit is shown by the way He conscientiously chases us into a corner by touching every point where we have not been obeying.

His Transformation Completed

And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. (Matthew 28:18; cf. Matthew 11:27)

In Matthew 11:27 our Lord states that the revelation of the Father is entirely confined to the Son, He is the only Medium for revealing the Father. In Matthew 28:18 He says, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." Then has He power to make a saint of me? If not, He has totally misunderstood Himself and has misled me. Has He all power on earth? What about this "piece of earth" I have to look after, has He power over it? Am I professing by my lips that I am a Christian while my actual "piece of earth" laughs to scorn what Jesus Christ says? He says, "All power is given unto Me"; am I demonstrating that He has no power at all?

As Son of Man Jesus Christ deliberately limited omnipotence, omnipresence, and omniscience in Himself; now they are His in absolute full power. As Deity, they were always His; now as Son of Man they are His in absolute full power. At the throne of God, Jesus Christ has all power as Son of Man. That means He can do anything for any human being in keeping with His own character.

Our Sanctified Security

And whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. (John 14:13)

That is where our salvation abides in its perfect security. Couple with these words our Lord's other statement, "All power is given unto Me." You say, "Oh well, then I can ask anything I like." Try it! I defy you to do it. Our Lord says also, "Ask what you will," i.e., what your will is in. There is very little our wills are in, consequently it is easy to work up false emotions. When you have been touched by the Holy Spirit and have received His quickening, note what you evade in prayer. There is nothing that will detect spiritual rottenness quicker than to ask, i.e., with the will. We shall find we have to stop asking a number of things, and this will simplify prayer. Our Lord says, "Ask," and we will always find that we do not ask when we talk about it. "I'll pray about it"—but we won't. To say we will pray about a thing often means we are determined not to think about it. Contact with Jesus Christ made the disciples realise that they were paupers, and they said, "Lord, teach us to pray" (Luke 11:1).

If we are perplexed over the question of sanctification, or about the baptism of the Holy Ghost, we ourselves are the reason why we are bothered. God has written a Book, and the phrases "sanctification" and the "baptism of the Holy Ghost" are His, not man's; why do we not go to Him about it? We are the reason why we do not go; we dare not go. If we honestly ask God to baptise us with the Holy Ghost and fire, anything that happens is His answer, and some appalling things happen. If we accept the revelation that our body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, are we prepared to ask God to fulfil the purpose of the Holy Ghost in our body? If we are, watch the consequences—that friendship must go, that book, that association, everyone of them must decay off like a lightning flash. If anyone has a difficulty in getting through to God, it is never God who is to blame. We can get through to Him as soon as we want to, there is nothing simpler. The trouble is when we begin to sympathise with the thing that is proud and strong in independence of God.

If we have been supernaturally saved by the Redemption of Jesus Christ, we know we are unfit, therefore we do not bother any more about ourselves, and as we walk in the light we have perfect freedom of access into the very heart and presence of God. The life of communion with God that Jesus lived on earth is what He has made possible for us by His Ascension.

Do not ask others to pray for you; our Lord says, "Pray yourself, ask." We each have our families, our Sunday School classes, our communities, our nation; how many of us are praying for them, or are we shirking the responsibility? We have to ask the thing that our will is in, and we cannot put our will into things God has not brought before us. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in My Name, that will I do." "In My name," not in Christian jargon, or in the piety of spurious devotion, but "in My nature." "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." The prayers of some people are more efficacious than those of others, the reason being that they are under no delusion, they do not rely on their own earnestness, they rely absolutely on the supreme authority of the Lord Jesus Christ (Hebrews 10:19).

And said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God. (Acts 7:56)

Stephen sees our Lord after His Ascension, and He is the same Jesus (cf. Revelation 1:7–15). Some teach that the Jesus of actual history is not the Christ, and that the risen Jesus is a conception of the divinely inspired imagination of the disciples. But it was "this same Jesus" that ascended—the marks of the Atonement were upon Him. When we look for the characteristics of the ascended Lord in the accounts of the historic Jesus, we are on the right track. We will find His characteristics in the New Testament, and He will exhibit these same characteristics to us in almighty power.

Our Simple Satisfaction

That they may be made perfect in one. (John 17:23)

The baptism of the Holy Ghost delivers us from the husk of independent individuality. By personality is meant the thing in every individual that the Spirit of God awakens and brings out into real communion with God. Individual self-assertiveness is the husk, personal identity with our Lord is the kernel. Individuals can never be made one; persons can. Individuality is all "elbows," it separates and isolates. A child is an individual, and it ought to be independent. Our Lord can never be defined in terms of individuality and independence, but only in terms of personality. The thing that is marked all through His life is personality, not independence and self-assertiveness. In the natural life when two people fall in love with one another, the individuality is transfigured because the personalities are merged. Identity is not domination, but oneness between two distinct persons in which neither dominates, but the oneness dominates both. In the natural life if the individuality re-asserts itself, there will be hitches and difficulties, and the same with the spiritual life. Jesus said, "If you would be My disciple, you must deny yourself, give up your right to yourself to Me." The natural independence of individuality springs from independence of God. If I will give up my right to myself to Him, the real true nature of my personality will answer to God straight away by the indwelling Holy Ghost. Jesus prayed, "that they may be one, even as We are one"; and when Paul urges us to put on the new man, he is urging on the most practical line that we put on in our actual life the habits that are in perfect accordance with this oneness with God, and that we do it all the time. Then there will come the simple satisfaction of knowing that God is answering the prayer of Jesus Christ. If you want to know what God is after in your life, read John 17—He prays that "they may be one, even as We are one." How close to God is Jesus Christ? "I and My Father are One." That is what He asks for us, and the Father will not leave us alone until the prayer is answered. Are we hindering the power of God in our life? Then never let us blame God. We may not only be supernaturally saved, we may be supernaturally sanctified. If we will submit to God and obey Him, we shall know that all that the Lord Jesus is in Himself is ours straightaway with the greatest ease and power and satisfaction by the right of His Ascension. He is King of kings and Lord of lords from the day of His Ascension until now.

HIS GLORIFICATION AND OURS

His Former Form of God (John 17:5) Our Present Glorying (Galatians 6:14)

His Fulfilled Fitness in God (1 Corinthians 15:28) Our Prevailing Glory (Romans 8:30)

His Faithful Face of God (John 1:14) Our Perpetual Glory (John 17:24)

As already stated, we must have Christian experience, but we must have more. Many of us are kindly interested in Christianity and in being devoted to Jesus Christ, but we have never received anything from Him. If we told ourselves the truth, we could not say that God had regenerated us experimentally. If we are not to be merely sentimental Christians, we must know what it is to be born into the kingdom of God and to find out that God has altered the thing that matters to us. That must be made perfectly clear first, and we have the experience described in Acts 26:18. We must have the experience of the new life, and then we have to see that the new life is instructed by the facts in God's Book. There are things that we cannot experience as Christians, yet we must build our faith upon them and not choose according to the predilections which are the outcome of our own experience.

His Former Form of God

And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was. (John 17:5)

Jesus Christ came from somewhere to here, and the "somewhere" whence He came was Absolute Deity. Jesus Christ was not a Being Who became Divine, He was the Godhead Incarnated—"Who, being in the form of God . . ." The "form" of God originally in Absolute Deity is not the form we understand by the body, but "glory," the completeness of God, a form inconceivable to our human minds, in which what we call the Trinity was an absoluteness. The term "Trinity" is not a Bible word, but a term that arose in the throes of a great conflict of minds, and is the crystallised attempt to state the Godhead in a word.

One element of the Godhead became, through the Word of God, the Incarnate Son of God. Beware of separating God manifest in the flesh from the Son becoming sin. In other words, never separate the doctrine of the Incarnation and the doctrine of Redemption. The Incarnation was for purposes of Redemption. The New Testament reveals that God became Incarnate only for the purpose of putting away sin. God did not become Incarnate for the purpose of Self-revelation.

When the Son of God, Who became Son of Man, has done His work, He will be resolved back again into Absolute Deity (1 Corinthians 15:28; cf. John 17:5). This is where our vocabulary will not go. We get into difficulties over God becoming Incarnate when we bring in our own conceptions. For instance, we say that the essential nature of God is omnipotence, omnipresence, and omniscience; the New Testament reveals that the essential nature of God is holiness, and that He became the weakest thing in His own creation, viz., a Baby. Are we prepared to abandon our own conceptions? We are all idolaters, we do mentally what Isaiah ridiculed the people in his day for doing (Isaiah 24:9-20). Our ideas have no more power over us than we choose to give them. We bring God to the bar of the judgement of our ideas. Jesus Christ said that His Father made His revelations to babes. Are we modest enough, and humble enough, and regenerate enough, to accept Him as Master of our brains as well as of our souls? Are we willing to be as submissive to Incarnate Reason as we are to Incarnate God? Incarnate Reason is the Lord Jesus, and any man who exercises his reason in contradiction to Incarnate Reason is a fool. We must never take our Lord's words and interpret them by our own human reason; we must always interpret them by His life. Am I prepared to be a believer in Jesus Christ? To believe in Jesus means much more than the experience of salvation in any form, it entails a mental and moral commitment to our Lord's view of the world, of the flesh, of the devil, of God, of man, and of the Scriptures. To "believe also in Me" means that we submit our intelligence to Jesus Christ our Lord as He submitted His intelligence to His Father. This does not mean that we do not exercise our reason, but it does mean that we exercise it in submission to Reason Incarnate.

"And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was" (John 17:5). Our Lord is referring to the former form of God. No human being has any conception of what that is, it is a revelation. The insidious teaching abroad to-day, the heresy that dissolves the Person of Jesus Christ, has crept in everywhere. Jesus Christ asks in His prayer, from His position as Son of Man, that He might be taken back to His former glory. "I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do." What was that work? To rehabilitate the human race, to bring the human race back to God—that is the work which God had given Him to do. Jesus Christ made the way clear for man to get straight into at-one-ment with God. Now that that work is completed—completed in His will, and soon to be completed in actuality—our Lord prays that He may be in the former form of God. There is no human connection in His prayer, it is superbly Divine.

Is Jesus Christ to me what He is in His estimate of Himself? He makes the destiny of the whole human race depend upon their relationship to Him. It is not the Divinity but the Deity of Jesus Christ that is the important thing.

Our Present Glorying

But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. (Galatians 6:14)

Glorying is the experience of joy on the inside, associated with the fame of God on the outside. Paul says his glorying is in the Cross of Christ, "and God forbid that I should glory in any other thing." Joy is neither happiness nor brightness, joy is literally the nature of God in my blood, no matter what happens. The joy that Jesus exhibited in His life was in knowing that every power of His nature was in harmony with His Father's nature, therefore He did with delight what God designed Him for as Son of Man. Anything that exactly fulfils the purpose of its creation experiences joy, and Paul states that our joy is that we fulfil the purpose of God in our lives by being saints. How are we going to be saints? We all like to listen to the life of Jesus and to His teaching, but what does it all amount to? Ask the one who has been born again, and he will tell you, to the limit of his language, the difference it has made. It has made an absolute difference, because by the Cross of Jesus Christ, we enter into the life of the Son of God. What is the sign that we are born from above (RV mg)? That we see the rule of God.

Have we got in us the new power, the new life, the new disposition that actually works itself out in our actual life? Our Lord did not tell us to ask for peace or for joy or for life, He told us to ask for the Holy Spirit (Luke 11:13), and when we ask, the honour of Jesus Christ is at stake. The reason God gives us the Holy Spirit so easily is because of what His Son has done, and yet He never emphasises what it cost, that is in the background altogether.

Our glorying is in the Cross of Jesus Christ because it is through this doorway that all the new life comes in (1 Corinthians 2:2). The normal life that God wants us to live is the life of the Lord Jesus Christ; but what good does it do us to talk about the speckless perfection of Jesus Christ? It would be a tantalising thing if all Jesus Christ gave us was the example of His own life. If a man is in earnest, it produces absolute despair. What is the good of teaching the Beatitudes, the Sermon on the Mount? They are out of our reach altogether. Once we remember that the normal life, the life of perfect oneness with God, is ours by means of Jesus Christ's death, it is all explained. We can enter there by His Cross. Have we entered there? It does not matter who the man is, how degraded or how moral, he can enter in at the door of His death, and then never cease to thank God that this is the crown of his joy. It is through the Cross of Jesus Christ that we begin to fulfil all that we are created for, and the great aim of the life is for the fame of God, not for the needs of men. Human sympathy has swamped the commands of God in the average Christian. Instead of the need being the opportunity it is made to be the call. The first of all the commandments is—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength."

The basis of Reality is Redemption and not reason. Reason is the basis of the way we work on reality, it is an instrument. Thank God for logic and for reason, they are instruments for expressing our life, but life itself is not reasonable. Man's intellect has no power to lead him; his intellect makes him either a polished hypocrite or, in the case of a disciple of Jesus Christ, it becomes the bond slave of the right discernment of God's will (John 7:17).

His Fulfilled Fitness in God

And when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all. (1 Corinthians 15:28)

This is the fulfilment of the prayer in John 17:5. When the Redemption wrought by the Son is actually fulfilled and all things are subdued unto Him, and when the whole human race and God are at one, then the Son of Man will cease to be by resolving back again into Absolute Deity. "And when all things shall be subdued unto Him"—remember everything is not yet subdued unto Him. Redemption does not only mean personal salvation and the redemption of our body, it means the absolute and complete redemption of the whole material earth in every iota, and not only the earth, but the whole material universe—"a new heaven and a new earth." It means that all relegated authority shall pass and God will be the absolute Authority, "that God may be all in all." There is a time coming, thank God, when everything shall be under the direct rule of God in every detail. We look for new heaven and a new earth, and then shall the human race stand before God as Jesus Christ stood before Him when He was here. Jesus Christ, Son of God and Son of Man, is not a mere individual, He is the One Who represents the whole human race. In order to see the human race as God intends it to be, look at the life of Jesus; and by the Redemption the human race is to be brought there. When the human race is actually there, Jesus Christ as Son of Man ceases to be and becomes absolute Deity again. The Son becomes subject to the Father, and God remains all in all. Our Lord's prayer is answered. "And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was." That glory is to be in God.

Our Prevailing Glory

And whom He justified, them He also glorified. (Romans 8:30)

In John 17:5 we see the transcendent revelation of the Absolute Deity of our Lord; in John 17:22 He speaks of a second glory, "and the glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them." What glory had Jesus when He became the Son of Man vicariously, when He became the whole human race in one Person? what was His glory then? Did every one who saw Him say, "That is God Incarnate"? No, Isaiah said He shall be "as a root out of a dry ground," utterly disadvantaged. Is this true? Look in your own heart and you will see it is true. "He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see Him, there is no beauty that we should desire Him." It is not true that "we needs must love the highest when we see it"; the human beings of His own day saw the Highest, and they hated Him. It needs the transformation of an inward surgery, being born from above (RV mg), to see that He is the altogether lovely One. The glory of Jesus was not an external thing; He effaced the Godhead in Himself so effectually that men without the Spirit of God despised Him. His glory was the glory of actual holiness. What is holiness? Transfigured morality blazing with indwelling God. Any other kind of holiness is fictitious and dangerous. One of the dangers of dealing too much with the Higher Christian Life¹⁵ is that it is apt to fizzle off into abstractions. But when we see holiness in the Lord Jesus, we do know what it means, it means an unsullied walk with the feet, unsullied talk with the tongue, unsullied thinking of the mind, unsullied transactions of the bodily organs, unsullied life of the heart, unsullied dreams of the imagination—that is the actual holiness Jesus says He has given them. This is the meaning of sanctification. Paul says, and no wonder, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you." The holiness of the Son of God is to be actually manifested in our ordinary bodily lives. This is the actual experience of sanctification working out in each detail.

This is our prevailing glory; Paul is not talking about being justified and glorified hereafter, but now. Thank God, the joy of the Lord is an actual experience now, and it goes beyond any conscious experience, because the joy of the Lord takes us into the consciousness of God, and the honour at stake in our body is the honour of God. Have we realised that the Son of God has been formed in us by His wonderful Redemption? Are we putting on the habits that are in keeping with Him? This is the glory of the saint here and now—the glory of actual holiness manifested in actual life. Whether it comes out in eating and drinking or in preaching, it must show in every detail straight through until the whole limit actually manifests the complete new life.

His Faithful Face of God

And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth. (John 1:14)

In Genesis 1:2–3 we read that the Spirit of God brooded, the word of God was spoken, and creation was begun. John takes us back there; see also Proverbs 8—The Word has become Incarnate in the Lord Jesus Christ. He is the Word of God Incarnated, made flesh, and in Him we see the Face of God. All that our Lord said about Himself is in perfect accordance with this. "I and My Father are One." He did not say, "I and Humanity are one." Jesus nowhere said that God and man are one; He nowhere said "He that hath seen man hath seen the Father." Jesus nowhere taught that God was in man; but He did teach that God was manifested in human flesh in His own Person that He might become the generating centre for the same thing in every human being, and the place of His travail pangs is the Incarnation and Calvary and the Resurrection. Jesus Christ did not say that human beings were all specimens of God, as some men try to prove from conceptions of their own. "Reason being God, there can be nothing unreasonable; sin is not a positive thing, it is a defect in the desire to grasp hold of God." These blasphemies start from a thing that looks so humble, "God is all." God is not all. I am not God, neither are you. Jesus Christ reveals God as the Father. "I am the Way, . . . no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me." Jesus Christ is not the way to God, not a road we leave behind us, a fingerpost that points in the right direction; He is the way itself. "Abide in Me"; consequently the Lord satisfies the last aching abyss of the human heart. Has He satisfied yours? If not, why are you in Christian work? What is the explanation of the great craving for the salvation of the souls of men? If it is not born of the Holy Ghost experimentally realised in us, it is nothing in the world but the introduction of sordid commercialism into religion (Matthew 23:15). Why do we want people to be saved? Has Jesus Christ made such a difference to us that we cannot rest day or night till by prayer we get all our friends there? That is the passion for souls born of the Holy Ghost because its experimental reality is with us every day.

If we want to know what God is like, let us study the Lord Jesus. "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." How did people see Him in the days of His flesh? By their natural eyes? No, after His resurrection they received Holy Spirit, and their eyes were opened and they knew Him. We do not know Him by the reasoning of our minds, but by the new life. Jesus Christ is to us the faithful Face of God. Could anyone be in doubt any more after they had seen Jesus Christ by the Holy Ghost? Think of the absurd, painful, distressing, never-to-be-answered questions we ask—"Shall I know those whom I love after death?" Wild, vagrant, wrong, stupid, painful questions. Look at Jesus Christ, get into contact with Him by the Holy Spirit, and those questions are impossible. He says—"Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in Me." The Face of God is the Lord Jesus Christ. It always comes back to the simple point, "Come unto Me."

Our Perpetual Glory

Father, I will that they also, whom Thou hast given Me, be with Me where I am; that they may behold My glory, which Thou has given Me. (John 17:24)

Now our Lord is speaking of the glory which we are only to behold. We are not to be absorbed into God as drops in an ocean, we are to be lifted into perfect oneness with Him until God and the glory of perfected human redemption are transfigured by a mutual love. "I want those whom Thou hast given Me," says Jesus, "to behold My glory." What is His glory? "The glory which I had with Thee before the world was," and our perpetual glory is not only that we are saved and sanctified and redeemed and lifted into the glory of unspeakable things as the result of our Lord's Redemption, but something other—we shall see God face to face, an inconceivable beatific vision. This is what Jesus Christ has prayed for His saints. This is not the glory we have here, but the glory we are going to have, the glory of beholding His glory.

The Philosophy of Sin

The Philosophy of Sin is taken from lectures by Oswald Chambers at the Bible Training College, ¹ London, and at other meetings.

Publication History

 As articles: The lectures were published in the Bible Training Course (BTC) Monthly Journal² from April 1935 through March 1936, under the topic "Talks on Moral Foundations." Two sermons on "Sin" published in God's Revivalist

- magazine in 1908 contain a number of the same concepts presented in this book.
- As a book: The Philosophy of Sin was published in 1937

Although the exact dates of these talks cannot be pinpointed, the essence of the material was delivered on many different occasions. It forms the bedrock of OC's teaching about human need and the provision of God to meet it. The biblical truths that burned in the soul of Oswald Chambers are stated and restated throughout this volume.

FOREWORD

The Philosophy of Sin is a subject of perennial interest, because the dreadful fact of sin is always with us. In every age there are the plain signs of some disruptive force at work among men. Hearts are being broken, lives are being spoiled, humanity is overclouded. Our Christian Faith sees that the underlying cause is Man's sin—his fundamental dislocation from God, with all its bitter consequences. A book like this, dealing with sin and its remedy, is to be welcomed, for it helps us to a clearer understanding of what is wrong with humankind, and of how the basic wrong can be put right—through Christ's Atonement making possible Man's repentance and appropriating faith. The salvation that blots out sin is here disclosed. "Sin is the radical twist with a supernatural originator, and salvation is a radical readjustment with a supernatural Originator." That is Good News indeed to every sinner; and every man finds out at last that he is that, if he is a seeker after the truth. There are many other matters treated here. There are problems of conscience, of outward conduct, of the emotional life, the intellect, the bodily life, of circumstances, nerves, spiritual reality, the natural instincts, and of true inward adjustment to God. No one can ponder these themes as here treated without profit. The one great aim is to show modern Christians the way to the high levels of true holiness and righteousness, so that we may well use Dora Greenwell's³ prayer,

And Oh, that He fulfilled may see The travail of His soul in me And with His work contented be, As I with my dear Saviour!

THE PHILOSOPHY OF SIN

Departure from God's love is the common nature of all sin; and when the departure from this love was associated with a desire to progress in the direction of a selfishly appointed end, rather than of the end divinely appointed, this was the common nature of the primal sin of the world-spirit and of humanity.

Franz Delitzsch

The Bible is the only Book that tells us anything about the originator of sin. There is a difference between an experimental knowledge of sin and an intellectual understanding of what sin is. We seem to be built on the following plan: at first we experience a need, then we hunt for the satisfaction of that need; when the need is supplied we turn our whole nature in the direction of an explanation of how the need was supplied. When we are convicted of sin, we are convicted of the need of a Saviour; and we seek for the Saviour intellectually and in various other ways till we meet with our Lord by the power of His Spirit and experience salvation; then comes the great need we are trying to insist on in these talks, the need of turning the whole nature to understand how God supplied the need. That is what Christians are neglecting, they have the experience but they have left their minds to stagnate, they have not turned back again and tried to find out what God reveals about sin, about salvation, and about the whole life of man. According to the Bible, God is only manifested at the last point; when a man is driven by personal experience to the last limit, he is apt to meet God. The same thing is true in thinking, we can do very well without God in thinking as long as we think only as splendid animals. As long as we are not at the last place, not facing our problems at all, but simply pleased to be in existence, pleased to be healthy and happy, we will never find God, we do not see any need for Him. But when we are driven in thinking to the last limit, then we begin to find that God manifests Himself there. To people who are satisfied on too shallow a level the Bible is a book of impertinences, but whenever human nature is driven to the end of things, then the Bible becomes the only Book and God the only Being in the world.

1. The Masked Origin of Satan's Primal Sin (Isaiah 14:12–15)

We are dealing not so much with the experience of sin as with the light God's Word throws on how sin began; we must have a basis for thinking. If we have been delivered from sin by the power of God within us, thank God for it; but there is something more than that, we have now to allow God to illuminate our darkness by His revelation.

We take this passage in Isaiah as the early Christian fathers did, as an exposition of Satan behind his material puppets. One of the significant things the Bible reveals about Satan is that he rarely works without being incarnated. (See Genesis 3:15 and Matthew 16:23.) God's Spirit and our Lord trace Satan behind men and women who are really time-manifestations of Satan. That is the region in which we are to look for the obscure origin of sin; it does not look as if sin came in that way at all. Only when we are driven to extremes do we realise that the Bible is the only Book that gives us any indication of the true nature of sin, and where it came from.

- (a) Marvellous Originator of Sin (Isaiah 14:12) An angel next in power to God is revealed to be the originator of sin.
- (b) Mystic Order of Revolt (v. 13) In this verse the Mystic Order of Satan's Revolt is revealed, it was a purely spiritual revolt against God.
- (c) Mad Outrival of God (v. 14) A determination to outrival God.

These three points are nonsense unless we are driven to the last limit. The fact that people ridicule the belief in Satan and sin is simply an indication of the principle we have laid down, that we do not see God till we get to the last point and His Word has no meaning for us until we get there; but when the soul of man is driven to the last lap of trying to find out things, then the Bible becomes the only Book there is, and this "theory," as men call it, is seen to be the revelation of God about the origin of sin. Sin is that factor in human nature which has a supernatural originator who stands next to God in power. The sin of Satan is revealed only dimly, but the dim outline indicates that it was the summit of all sin, full, free, conscious, spiritual sin; he was not entrapped into it, he was not ensnared into it, he sinned with the full clear understanding of what he was doing. We know that much, so far the veil is transparent.

2. The Masked Outguards of Satan's Primal Snare (Genesis 3:6-7)

Satan guards the main body of his purpose; neither Eve nor Adam had the slightest notion who he was; he was as far removed in his first snare from his real body of intent as could possibly be. We have to remember that God created Adam a "son of God," and God required Adam to develop himself by obeying Him; that obedience necessarily involved the sacrifice of the natural life to transform it into spiritual life, and this was to be done by a series of moral choices. Satan lays his first snare there, the first outguard⁵ of his snare is away altogether from the main body of his purpose, he does not reveal what he is after in the beginning.

(a) Soul Stained by Natural Interest (Genesis 3:6)

Verse 6 reveals that Satan was part of God's natural creation, he spoke to the woman first, who represented all we understand by the affinities of a human soul for the natural life, unsuspecting, unsuspicious, sympathetic and curious. In looking at sin in its beginnings, we find its true nature in all its working. Our Lord spoke about men as sheep; a sheep has no set conscious purpose to go wrong, it simply wanders; and our Lord used the illustration for men; the majority of men wander like sheep without any conscious bad intent at all. That is the first outwork or outguard of Satan, he gets us all here like silly stupid sheep; he has never altered his way of working, and although it is written clearly in God's Book, we never seem to be forewarned that the soul is stained through natural interest.

(b) Soul Snared by Natural Intimacy (Genesis 3:6)

The two intimacies indicated in verse 6 are, first, intimacy with the object desired, and, second, intimacy with the closest vital relationship; when Eve saw the food was good she fetched her husband. To sin alone is never possible. In writing of Eve, Paul says that Satan "beguiled" her, meaning by that that there was no clear understanding on her part of the wrong she had done; but "Adam was not beguiled" (RV). "He did eat" (Genesis 3:6). Adam's sin was the perfect conscious realisation of what he was doing.

(c) Soul Sin by Natural Influence (Genesis 3:7)

Adam was required by God to take part in his own development, i.e. he had to transform the life of nature into the spiritual life by obeying God. The life of nature is neither moral nor immoral; our bodies are neither moral nor immoral, we make them moral or immoral. Our Lord had a body, and we read that He hungered; it was not a sin for Him to be hungry, but it would have been a sin for Him to have eaten during the forty days in the wilderness, because His Father's word at that time was that He should not eat. It is not a sin to have a body, to have natural appetites, but it is a sin to refuse to sacrifice them at the word of God. Satan's first fundamental outguards are in the innocence of nature. We say, "But it cannot be wrong to have a little sympathy here, a little curiosity there"; the Bible lifts the veil just enough to show there is a great supernatural force behind that entices for one purpose, to get us away from obeying God's voice.

3. The Masked Overset of Spiritual Surrender (Genesis 3:1-7)

Satan succeeded in putting his outguards so far away from the main body of his purpose that no one but God Himself knew what he was doing. Unsuspecting Eve was as far removed from understanding what Satan was doing as we are when we sin, but where both are culpable in every respect is in the refusal to obey God; and whenever there is a refusal to obey God, instantly Satan's first snare is entered into. When once the first snare has caught us we are done for, the rest is as easy as can be; once let the principle of refusing to sacrifice the life of nature to the will of God have way, and all the rest happens easily.

(a) Infused Suspicion of the Innermost (Genesis 3:1)

It was the internal region of man, the innermost, that yielded first; bodily action was last; the first thing that yielded was the mind. The Bible reveals that human nature possesses an incurable suspicion of God. Its origin is explained in the Bible; two great primal creatures of God, the angel who became Satan, and Adam, negotiated a relationship which God never sanctioned. That was how sin was introduced into the world. As long as we live on the surface of things merely as splendid animals, we shall find the Bible nonsense. We are reverent over the Bible simply because our fathers and mothers taught us to be reverent; but we find no practical reason for reverence until we get to the last lap, until we are pressed out of the outer court into the inner, then we find there is no mind among men that has ever penned words that are sufficient for us there; we begin to find that the only Book there is the Bible.

When we get to the last point the only exact counterpart for our natural life is this Book.

When the Bible touches the question of sin, it always comes right down to this incurable suspicion of God which never can be altered apart from the Atonement because it is connected with a great supernatural power behind. Paul talks about it and calls it the "carnal mind," he does not say it is at enmity with God, because that might mean it could be cured; he says it is "enmity against God." Remember the summit of all sin was a conscious red-handed revolt against God. Adam's sin was not a conscious revolt against God; it worked out ultimately through the race as a revolt against God, but Adam's sin instead of being at the summit of all sin is at the foundation of all sin. Consequently whatever sin you take, you will get the characteristics that were in this first sin, viz., the principle and the disposition of this infused suspicion, "Yea, hath God said . . ." (Genesis 3:1). Absolute devastation awaits the soul that allows suspicion to creep in. Suspicion of God is like a gap in a dike, the flood rushes through, nothing can stop it. The first thing you will do is to accept slanders against God. Because it is peculiar to you? No, because it is according to the stock that runs right straight through the human race, from this first sin of infused suspicion in the intelligence, in the innermost part of man.

The majority of us prefer to trust our innocence rather than the statements of Jesus. It is always risky to trust your innocence when the statements of Jesus are contrary to it. Jesus says that "from within, out of the heart of men, proceed...," then comes the awful catalogue. You say, "Why, that is nonsense, I never had any of those things in my heart, I am innocent." Some day you will come up against a set of circumstances which will prove that your innocence was a figment, and that what Jesus said about the human heart was perfectly true.

(b) Irresistible Sensuality of the Inner (Genesis 3:5) Once allow suspicion of God and of His goodness and justice to enter into a man's mind and the floodgates of sensuality are opened. We mean by "sensuality," the life that draws its sustenance from natural surroundings, guided by a selfishly appointed purpose. We used to mean by sensuality gross awful and shocking sins; the word means that but a great deal more. Sensuality may be refined down to the thinness of a cloud. It is quite possible to be grossly sensual and spiritual. It is possible to say, "I have one desire in being good, in being saved and sanctified, a particular end of my own"; that is sensuality. Once suspicion of God is allowed to come in, there is no limit to the flood of sensuality. Lust, too, is a word that the Bible uses in a different way. We use the word lust for the gross abominable sins of the flesh only, but the Bible uses it for a great deal more than that. Lust simply means, "I must have this at once"; it may be a bodily appetite or a spiritual possession. The principle lust works on is, "I must have it at once, I cannot wait for God's time, God is too indifferent," that is the way lust works. Watch how our Lord faced men, He always faced this disposition of sin, He never summed men up by their external conduct. He was not driven into panics by immorality and fleshly sordidness, that sort of sin never seemed to bother Him half as much as the respectable pride of men and women who never were guilty of those things. The mainspring of such lives is a wise judicious working which keeps all outward circumstances in harmony with the one ruling desire. The soul, remember, is simply the spirit of a man expressing itself. The spirit of a child can rarely express itself, the soul has not become articulate. "Soul" in the Bible nearly always refers to the fleshly nature, it is the only power a man has for expressing his true spirit. "God is always manifested in the ultimates" (Goethe). That is what we mean by saying that God is only revealed at the last point. If we are only living on the surface of things the Bible line will appear stupid, but if we have had a dose of the plague of our own heart, and realise what God has delivered us from, we know much too much ever to accept man's definition of sin, we know that there is no other explanation than the Bible one, and nothing but pity is awakened when we hear people trying to explain sin apart from the Bible.

"Iniquitous" means an unjust and unequal twisting; and "individual" means here the whole person going out in a definite act. Suspicion first, sensuality next, and manifest ruin last. If sin is a radical twist with a supernatural originator, salvation is a radical readjustment with a supernatural Originator. To present salvation as less than that is deplorable. If all Jesus Christ can do is to run a parallel counteraction with what Satan can do, His right name is "Culture," not "Saviour"; but His revealed nature was stated by the angel to Mary, and repeated over and over again, "Thou shalt call His name Jesus; for He shall save His people from their sins." The slight views of salvation, the sympathetic drifty views that all Jesus Christ can do is to put in us a principle that counteracts another principle, will cause anyone who has got to the last limit to blaspheme God for a thing like that. It all comes from a flimsy, wrong view of sin. If that is all He can do, what is the good of calling Him Saviour? No one who has ever faced sin in its reality would ever give one cent for that kind of salvation, it is nothing but the exalting of education, culture will do that, or cunning. When you come to the New Testament and to your own experience you find that salvation is as radical as sin, and if God has not radically altered your heredity, thank God you may know He can by the power of Jesus Christ's Atonement. It is only the right view of sin and right thinking about sin that ever will explain Jesus Christ's Life and Death and Resurrection. It is sin that He came to cope with; He did not come to cope with the poor little mistakes of men, they cope with their own mistakes; He came to give them a totally new stock of heredity, that is, He came to implant into them His own nature, so that Satan's power in the soul is absolutely destroyed, not counteracted.

When God has put His Spirit in you and identified you with Jesus Christ, what is to be your attitude to your bodily life? You have the same body, the same appetites and the same nature as before, your members used to be servants of sin; but Jesus Christ is your Example now. He sacrificed Himself to His Father's will, see that you do the same as a saint. He submitted His intelligence to His Father's will, see that you do the same as a saint. He submitted His will to His Father, see that you as a saint do the same. Jesus Christ did all that Adam failed to do. Satan met our Lord with his masked outguards exactly as he met Adam, and the Spirit of God drove Jesus into the wilderness to meet these outguards of Satan. "If Thou be the Son of God . . ." Satan tried to insinuate the first suspicion, but it would not work, Jesus refused to be suspicious of God. He overcame by obeying the word of His Father, that is, He transformed His natural life into a spiritual life by obeying the voice of God, and as saints we have to obey Jesus Christ and sacrifice the life of nature to His will.

EDUCATIVE INSIGHT INTO REDEMPTION

How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without blemish unto God, cleanse your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? (Hebrews 9:14 RV)

1. True to the Cross

As we go on with God the Holy Spirit brings us back more and more to the one absorbing theme of the New Testament, viz. the death of the Lord Jesus Christ and its meaning from His standpoint. Our right to ourselves in every shape and form was destroyed once and for ever by the death of Jesus, and we have to be educated into the realisation of what this means in all its fulness. We have to come to a relationship to the Cross in thought as well as in life.

"How much more . . . " How much more is there to know, for instance, after sanctification? Everything! Before sanctification we know nothing, we are simply put in the place of knowing; that is, we are led up to the Cross; in sanctification we are led through the Cross—for what purpose? For a life of outpouring service to God. The characteristic of a saint after identification with the death of Jesus is that he is brought down from the ineffable glory of the heavenly places into the valley to be crushed and broken in service for God. We are here with no right to ourselves, for no spiritual blessing for ourselves; we are here for one purpose only—to be made servants of God as Jesus was. Have we as saints allowed our minds to be brought face to face with this great truth. The death of Jesus not only gives us remission from our sins, it enables us to assimilate the very nature of Jesus until in every detail of our lives we are like Him. "How much more" does the death of Jesus mean to us to-day than it ever has before? Are we beginning to be lost in wonder, love and praise at the marvellous loosening from sin, and are we so assimilating the nature of Jesus that we bear a strong family likeness to Him?

"shall the blood of Christ..." It was not the blood of a martyr, not the blood of goats and calves, that was shed, but "the blood of Christ." The very life of God was shed for the world—"the church of God which He purchased with His own blood" (Acts 20:28 RV). All the perfections of the essential nature of God were in that blood; all the holiest attainments of man were in that blood. The death of Jesus reaches away down underneath the deepest sin human nature ever committed. This aspect of the death of Jesus takes us into a spiritual domain beyond the threshold of the thinking of the majority of us. The cry on the Cross, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" is unfathomable to us. The only ones—and I want to say this very deliberately—the only ones who come near the threshold of understanding the cry of Jesus are not the martyrs, they knew that God had not forsaken them, His presence was so wonderful; not the lonely missionaries who are killed or forsaken, they experience exultant joy, for God is with them when men forsake them: the only ones who come near the threshold of understanding the experience of God-forsakenness are men like Čain—"My punishment is greater than I can bear"; men like Esau, ". . . an exceeding bitter cry"; men like Judas. Jesus Christ knew and tasted to a fuller depth than any man could ever taste what it is to be separated from God by sin. If Jesus Christ was a martyr, our salvation is a myth. We have followed cunningly devised fables if Jesus Christ is not all that this cry represents Him to be—the Incarnate God becoming identified with sin in order to save men from hell and damnation. The depth of this cry of Jesus is deeper than any man can go because it is a cry from the heart of God. The height and depth of our salvation are only measured by God Almighty on His throne and Jesus Christ in the heart of hell. The most devout among us are too flippant about this great subject of the death of Jesus Christ. When we stand before the Cross, is our every commonplace pious mood stripped off, or do we get caught up by the modern spirit and think of the Cross only as delivering us from sin, or as a type of sanctification? Thank God for salvation through the Cross, for sanctification through the Cross; but thank God also for insight into what it cost God to make that salvation and sanctification possible. God grant that the pulsing power of identification with the death of Jesus may come again into our testimony and make it glow with devotion to Him for His unspeakable salvation.

"Who through the eternal Spirit . . ." The life of Jesus portrays the handiwork of the Holy Spirit; we know what the Holy Spirit will be in us if we let Him have His way. The underlying consciousness of Jesus was the Eternal God Himself; the Eternal Spirit was behind all He did. It is not so with us. There is a fundamental difference as well as a similarity between the Spirit in Jesus and the Spirit in us. The Eternal Spirit was incarnated in Jesus; He never is in us. By regeneration and sanctification He energises our spirits and brings us into oneness with Jesus Christ, so that our underlying consciousness is "hid with Christ in God." We are only made acceptable to God by relying on the Eternal Spirit Who was incarnated absolutely in Jesus Christ. The Spirit in us will never allow us to forget that the death of Jesus was the death of God Incarnate. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself" (2 Corinthians 5:19).

"offered Himself without blemish unto God . . ." Who offered Himself? The Son of God. He was immaculate, without blemish, yet He was crucified. This rules out once and for ever the conception that Jesus died the death of a martyr; He died a death no martyr could touch. He died the death not of a good man but of a bad man, with the vicarious pain of Almighty God in His heart.

Our hearts are wrung with pathos when we read of the offering of Isaac and the sacrifice of Jephthah's daughter, for they are unbearably pathetic. The offering of Jesus is not pathetic in the tiniest degree; it is beyond all pathos. There is something infinitely profounder than pathos in the death of Jesus; there is a mystery we cannot begin to touch. The death of Jesus is the death of God, at the hands of man, inspired by the devil. He gathered round Him the raging hate of humanity, and was crucified. He offered Himself through the Eternal Spirit—He died in the Spirit in which He lived.

Are we being true to the Cross in our preaching, putting first the holiness of God that makes men know that they are sinners? When we preach the love of God there is a danger of forgetting that the Bible reveals not first the love of God but the intense, blazing holiness of God, with His love as the centre of that holiness. When the holiness of God is preached, men are convicted of sin; it is not the love of God that first appeals but His holiness. The awful nature of the conviction of sin that the Holy Spirit brings makes us realise that God cannot, dare not, must not forgive sin; if God forgave sin without atoning for it our sense of justice would be greater than His.

2. True to Conscience

How does all the profound thought underlying the death of Jesus touch us? The writer to the Hebrews instantly connects it with conscience—"How much more shall the blood of Christ, . . . cleanse your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" (RV). Has conscience the place in our salvation and sanctification that it ought to have? Hyperconscientious people blind themselves to the realisation of what the death of Jesus means by saying, "No, I have wronged this person and I must put the thing right." It springs from the panging remorse that we experience when we realise we have wronged another. "All you say about the Cross may be true, but I have been so mean⁶ and so wrong that there are things I must put right first." It sounds noble to talk like that, but it is the essence of the pride that put Jesus Christ to death. The only thing to do is to cast the whole thing aside: "My God, this thing in me is worthy only of death, the awful death of crucifixion to the last strand of life. Lord, it is my sin, my wrong, not Jesus Christ, that ought to be on that Cross." When we get there and abandon the whole thing, the blood of Christ cleanses our conscience and the freedom is ineffable and amazing.

The greatest problems of conscience are not the wrong things we have done, but wrong relationships. We may have become born again, but what about those we have wronged? It is of no use to sit down and say, "It is irreparable now, I cannot alter it." Thank God He can alter it! We may try to repair the damage in our own way, by apologising, by writing letters; but it is not a simple easy matter of something to apologise for. Behind the veil of human lives God begins to reveal the tragedies of hell. Or we may say, "I have been atoned for, therefore I do not need to think about the past." If we are conscientious, the Holy Spirit will make us think about the past, and it is just here that the tyranny of nerves and the bondage of Satan comes in. The shores of life are strewn with ruined friendships, irreparable severances through our own blame or others', and when the Holy Spirit begins to reveal the tremendous twist, then comes the strange distress, "How can we repair it?" Many a sensitive soul has been driven into insanity through anguish of mind because he has never realised what Jesus Christ came to do, and all the asylums in the world will never touch them in the way of healing; the only thing that will is the realisation of what the death of Jesus means, viz., that the damage we have done may be repaired through the efficacy of His Cross, Jesus Christ has atoned for all, and He can make it good in us, not only as a gift but by a participation on our part. The miracle of the grace of God is that He can make the past as though it had never been; He can "restore . . . the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmerworm" (Joel 2:25).

How Jesus Christ does cleanse our conscience! It is freedom not only from sin and the damage sin has done, but emancipation from the impairing left by sin, from all the distortions left in mind and imagination. Then when our conscience has been cleansed from dead works, Jesus Christ gives us the marvellously healing ministry of intercession as "a clearinghouse for conscience." Not only is all sense of past guilt removed, but we are given the very secret heart of God for the purpose of vicarious intercession (see Romans 8:26–27).

"from dead works . . . " What are "dead works"? Everything done apart from God. All prayer, all preaching, all testifying, all kind, sacrificial deeds done apart from God, are dead works that clog the life. Never forget for one moment that you are what you are by the grace of God. If you are not what you are by the grace of God, then may God have mercy on you! Everything we are that is not through the grace of God will be a dead clog on us. Oh believe me, the curse of the saint is his goodness! Let the whole thing go, be true to the Cross, and let Jesus Christ cleanse your conscience from dead works. Many saints misunderstand what happens to the natural virtues after sanctification. The natural virtues are not promises of what we are going to be, but remnants of what God created man to be. We have the idea that we can bank on our natural patience and truthfulness and conscientiousness; we can bank on nothing in heaven above or earth beneath but what the grace of God has wrought in us. Everything we possess in the way of moral property, of noble spiritual property, severs us from God; all must go. "Nothing in my hands I bring. . . ." Immediately we abandon like that, we experience what Paul says in Galatians 2:20—"I have been crucified with Christ" (RV), and the reconstruction of our lives proves that God has cleansed us from all dead works.

". . . to serve the living God." This means a life laid down for Jesus, a life of narrowed interests, a life that deliberately allows itself to be swamped by a crowd of paltry things. It is not fanaticism, it is the steadfast, flint-like attitude of heart and mind and body for one purpose—spoilt for everything saving as we can be used to win souls for Jesus. It is not "a passion for souls," but something infinitely profounder than that, it is the passion of the Holy Ghost for Jesus Christ. There are things that are too humanly tender for this kind of service. There are lives prevented by claims that are not God's, prevented by the tender, passionate love of others who have come in between. Oh the amount of wasted service for God, the agonies of weeping and self-pity, the margins of mourning over wasted opportunities! Jesus Christ never spent one moment of His life mourning in that way. The kind of things we grieve over is the evidence of where our life is hid. Some of us have a social conscience, we are shocked at moral crime; some of us have a religious conscience, we are shocked at the things that go against our creeds. The conscience formed in us by the Holy Spirit makes us amazingly sensitive to the things that tell against the honour of God.

I am convinced that what is needed in spiritual matters is reckless abandonment to the Lord Jesus Christ, reckless and uncalculating abandonment, with no reserve anywhere about it; not sad, you cannot be sad if you are abandoned absolutely. Are you thankful to God for your salvation and sanctification, thankful He has purged your conscience from dead works? Then go a step further; let Jesus Christ take you straight through into identification with His death until there is nothing left but the light at the foot of the Cross, and the whole sphere of the life is hid with Christ in God.

SALVATION

Ye that have escaped the sword, go ye, stand not still; remember the LORD from afar, and let Jerusalem come into your mind. (Jeremiah 51:50 RV)

Salvation is the biggest, gladdest word in the world; it cannot mean pretence in any shape or form, therefore suppression is no element of the word, neither is counteraction. Salvation is God's grace to sinful men, and it takes a lifetime to say the word properly. Most of us restrict the meaning of salvation, we use it to mean New Birth only, or something limited. We are dealing with the subject here practically, not theologically.

1. The Element of Destruction in Salvation

Ye that have escaped the sword . . .

The 51st chapter of Jeremiah almost burns the page, it is so full of strong and intense destruction; but it gives the keynote to the purpose of God in destruction, viz., the deliverance of the good. You will never find in the Bible that things are destroyed for the sake of destruction. Human beings destroy for the sake of destruction, and so does the devil; God never does, He destroys the wrong and the evil for one purpose only, the deliverance of the good.

(a) The Purpose of the Sword

The purpose of the sword is to destroy everything that hinders a man being delivered. The first thing in salvation is the element of destruction, and it is this that men object to. With this thought in mind, recall what our Lord said about His own mission: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matthew 10:34). Our Lord reveals Himself as the destroyer of all peace and happiness, and of ignorance, wherever these are the cloke for sin (cf. Matthew 3:10). It sounds a startling and amazing thing to say that Jesus did not come to send peace, but He said He did not. The one thing Jesus Christ is after is the destruction of everything that would hinder the emancipation of men. The fact that people are happy and peaceful and prosperous is no sign that they are free from the sword of God. If their happiness and peace and well-being and complacency rests on an undelivered life, they will meet the sword before long, and all their peace and rest and joy will be destroyed.

(b) The Peril of the Sword

To say that "God loves the sinner, but hates his sin" sounds all right, but it is a dangerous statement, because it means that God is far too loving ever to punish the sinner. Jesus Christ came to save us so that there should be no "sinner" left in us. The phrase "a sinner saved by grace" means that a man is no longer a sinner; if he is, he is not saved. If I refuse to let God destroy my sin, there is only one possible result—I must be destroyed with my sin. The light of the Lord's presence convicts of sin. (See John 15:22-24.) Sin is never imputed unless it is conscious. These verses reveal the very essence of the destructive element of salvation. I can easily say I am not convicted of sin; but immediately I stand face to face with Jesus Christ I know the difference between Him and myself; I have no cloke and no excuse, and if I refuse to allow the Lord to deliver me from all that He reveals, I shall be destroyed with the thing He came to destroy. "To this end was the Son of God manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil" (1 John 3:8 RV).

(c) The Power of the Sword

An ancient legend tells of a blacksmith who became famous for the magnificent swords he made; he claimed that they could cut a coat of armour in two with one sweep. The king hearing of this boast, summoned the blacksmith to his presence and told him to cut through his coat of armour and if he could not do it, he would be put to death for his boasting. The blacksmith swung his sword round and put it back in its sheath; the king was about to challenge him, when the blacksmith said, "Shake yourself, your majesty"; the king shook himself, and fell in two. The legend is an illustration of the tremendous power of the sword in God's hands, "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." "The word of God is . . . sharper than any twoedged sword," and it deals effectually with the sin in us; for a while we may not be conscious that anything has happened, then suddenly God brings about a crisis and we realise that something has been profoundly altered. No one is ever the same after listening to the word of God, you cannot be; you may imagine you have paid no attention to it, and yet months after maybe a crisis arises and suddenly the word of God comes and grips you by the throat, so to speak, and awakens all the terrors of hell in your life, and you say, "Wherever did that word come from?" Years ago, months ago, weeks ago, it sank straight into your unconscious mind, God knew it was there though you did not, and it did its damaging work, and now it has suddenly come to light. The question is, will you allow yourself to escape the edge of the sword, or will you be destroyed with the thing the sword has pierced?

Look back over your own life and examine the points of view you have now and the points of view you once had. At one time you were violently opposed to the views you now hold; what has altered you? You cannot honestly say it was conscious study. God says that His word shall not return unto Him void (Isaiah 55:10-11)—the abiding success of the word of God! The word of God is never without power, and as a servant or handmaid of God you have nothing whatever to do with whether people dislike and reject the word of God, or "purr" over it. See you preach it no matter what they think of you, that is a matter of absolute indifference, sooner or later the effect of that word will be manifested. The great snare is to seek acceptance with the people we talk to, to give people only what they want; we have no business to wish to be acceptable to the people we teach. "Study to show thyself approved"—unto the saints? No, "unto God." I have never known a man or woman who taught God's word to be always acceptable to other people. As a worker for God truths are all the time coming into your own life which you would never have seen for yourself, and as you give other people truths they never saw before, they will say—"I don't agree with that." It is foolish to begin to argue, if it is God's truth leave it alone; let mistakes correct themselves. When a crisis comes that shakes the life, they will find the old dominating power is not there at all. What has happened? The destruction of God has gone on. Then comes the critical moment, will I go with the thing that is destroyed, or will I stay by the hand that holds the sword?

The best measure of the profundity of any religious doctrine is given by its conception of sin and its cure of sin.

Do I believe that sin needs to be corrected or killed? If sin only needed to be corrected, the symbol would have been a lash, not a sword; but God uses the symbol for killing. Beware of getting into your mind ideas which never came from God's word, the idea, for instance, that we sin a little less each day; if we do, the salvation of Jesus Christ has never touched us. If we grow in grace a little more every day, it is a sign that the destructive power of God has been at work, and that we have been delivered from the thing that hindered us growing. The view men have of sin is always the test of their view of salvation, and to-day views are creeping into God's Book that never came from Him. Sin must be destroyed, not corrected; it is the destruction of something in order to lead to emancipation. It is always God rescuing Israel from Babylon; always Jesus Christ rescuing His people from their sin.

2. The Element of Direction in Salvation Go ye, stand not still . . .

To study the teaching of our Lord in connection with the verb "to go" would amaze us. How often do you hear in meetings the word "go," and how often do you hear the word "get"? We emphasise "get"; the New Testament emphasises "go." If you have escaped the edge of the sword, go!

(a) The Paralysis of Sin

Slaves born in slavery and suddenly freed, will often prefer to go back. When the slaves in America were freed, they did not know what to do with their freedom, they were amazed and dazed and stupid, they had never been master of themselves before, and many pleaded with their masters to be taken back. That moment of paralysis is the natural result of being suddenly delivered. A sinner when first delivered from sin has such moments, he wishes God would take him safe to heaven where he would be secure from temptation. We may not say it, but it is common to us all to look at things in this way in the implicit region, if not in the explicit—"Yes, I believe God does deliver from sin and fill with the Holy Spirit, and if He would only take me straight to heaven it would be all right, but I have to live amongst people who are wrong, in the midst of a people of unclean lips and the memory of how continually I fell in the past makes me fear I shall do it again in the future."

Satan takes advantage of these moments of paralysis; consequently there is need for direction. A snare in many evangelistic meetings is that people are taught to say, "Thank God, I am saved," or, "Thank God I am sanctified," but no line of direction is given. The counsel in God's Book is—Testify to the truth God has revealed to you, and go on. People begin to degenerate because they don't know what to do; the direction given in God's Book has never been put in its right place. The direction is summed up in this one word, Go.

(b) The Pain of the Saved

When a limb that has long been cramped is released, there is the experience of excessive pain, but the pain is the sign of life. The first moment of realising God's truth is usually a moment of ecstasy, the life is brimming over with joy and happiness and brightness, there is no pain, nothing but unspeakable, unfathomable joy. Then the verb "to go" begins to be conjugated, and we experience the "growing pains" of salvation, and Satan comes as an angel of light and says, "Don't go on, stand still," and, in the language of the hymn, 'sing yourself away to everlasting bliss"! We do not consider enough the necessity of learning how to walk spiritually. Remember, when we are saved, we have been cramped in sin. Paul puts it in this way—"You used to use your members as servants for sin, now you are emancipated from sin, use your members as servants to righteousness," that is, use them in a different way. (See Romans 6:19.) If a man has used his arm only for writing, and then becomes a blacksmith, he will groan for days with the tremendous pain in the deltoid muscle until by practice the time comes when there is no more pain because the muscle has become rightly adjusted to its new work. The same thing happens spiritually, God begins to teach us how to walk and over and over again we begin to howl and complain. May God save us from the continual whine of spiritual babes—"Teach us the same things over and over again, don't give us the revelations of God which are painful, give us the 'simple gospel,' i.e. what we have always believed, don't tell us of things we have never thought about before, because that causes pain" (cf. Hebrews 5:12). Of course it does. Thank God there is a pain attached to being saved, the pain of growing until we come to maturity where we can do the work of a son or daughter of God.

(c) The Passion in the Saving

The application of our Lord's phrase, "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem," is this passion not to stand still, but to go on. Look back over your life in grace, whether long or short, and ask yourself which are the days that have furthered you most in the knowledge of God—the days of sunshine and peace and prosperity?

Never! The days of adversity, the days of strain, the days of sudden surprises, the days when the earthly house of this tabernacle was strained to its last limit, those are the days when you learned the meaning of this passion of "Go." Any great calamity in the natural world—death, disease, bereavement—will awaken a man when nothing else would, and he is never the same again. We would never know the "treasures of darkness" if we were always in the place of placid security. Thank God, salvation does not mean that God turns us into milksops; God's salvation makes us for the first time into men and women. The passion of the Holy Ghost means that we go on with God exactly on the lines God wants; the Holy Ghost will give the direction, and if we do not know it we are to blame. "My people doth not consider," says God; they won't heed this Book. We say, "I don't like studying these subjects, I have no affinity for them." We do not say it actually, but over and over again these thoughts keep us from going on with God. The Holy Spirit will make us face subjects for which we have no affinity naturally in order that we may become full-orbed as God's servants.

3. The Element of Discipline in Salvation

... Remember the LORD from afar, and let Jerusalem come into your mind.

In the midst of an alien land, afar off from the home of God, the remembrance of the Lord will make you strong with the strength of ten. Note carefully in this connection our Lord's use of the phrase "Do this in remembrance of Me." The ordinance of the Lord's Supper is not a memorial of One Who has gone, but of One Who is always here.

(a) The Dangerous Infatuation

Infatuation means a stupid sense of my own security. A sick person has often the dangerous infatuation that he is all right. This danger overtakes a saint on what Bunyan calls "the enchanted ground." (Cf. 2 Peter 1:12–13.) Whenever we come to the state of feeling, "Well, it's all right now and I can rest here," we are in danger. There is only one point of rest, and that is in the Lord, not in our experiences. We are never told to rest in the experience of salvation or of sanctification or in anything saving the Lord Himself. Whenever you rest in the dangerous infatuation, "Thank God, I know I am all right," you will go down as sure as Satan is Satan and you are you.

(b) The Divine Imperative

"Remember the LORD from afar." The command to remember does not simply mean to recall, but to reidentify yourself in imagination with your Lord. The passive stage is a great danger—

When obstacles and trials seem like prison walls to be, I lay me down and go to sleep and leave it all to Thee!

That is the stage of spiritual dry rot. There is nothing more difficult to get rid of than the encroachments of this spiritual sickness; it is not physical weariness, that will come over and over again, but spiritual weariness, and spiritual weariness coins such phrases as "Once in grace always in grace, no matter how disgraceful you are." "The Lord is far too good to let me go." "I have been so much used in days gone by, I am all right." It is rather a certainty that you are spiritually sick. Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life," not laziness. Whenever we are in danger of nestling in spiritual armchairs, the clarion voice of the Lord comes and bids us neither "sit nor stand but go!" Look back over your life and you will see whenever there was the danger of spiritual dry rot or of getting off on to enchanted ground, God in mercy to your soul allowed an earthquake to come, and the whole thing went to pieces and you with it; for a while you were dazed and amazed, and then all of a sudden He set you on your feet again. "For we have not here an abiding city" (RV). To "remember the LORD from afar" means to remember that we have to be like Him.

(c) The Devoted Intellect

"And let Jerusalem," the God-lit city, "come into your mind." Ask yourself—"What do I let come into my mind?" If a man lets his garden alone, it pretty soon ceases to be a garden; and if a saint lets his mind alone, it will soon become a garbage patch for Satan's scarecrows. Read the terrible things that Paul says will grow in the mind of a saint unless he looks after it (e.g., Colossians 3:5). The command to let Jerusalem come into our mind means we have to watch our intellect and devote it for one purpose; let only those things come in that are worthy of the God-lit city. "Let . . . " it is a command. See to it by the careful watching of your mind that only those thoughts come in that are worthy of God. We do not sufficiently realise the need to pray when we lie down at night, "Deliver us from the evil one" (RV). It puts us in the attitude of asking the Lord to watch our minds and our dreams, and He will do it.

REALITY

It seems to me that somewhere in my soul
There lies a secret self as yet asleep;
No stranger hath disturbed its slumber deep,
No friend dispersed the clouds that round it roll.
But it is written on my Fortune's scroll
That should some hand the chords of being sweep
And speak a certain sound, this self would leap
To fullest life and be awake and whole.

Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler

And He said unto all, If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me. (Luke 9:23 RV)

By Reality we mean that all the hidden powers of our life are in perfect harmony with themselves and in perfect harmony with God. None of us are real in the full sense of the word; we become real bit by bit as we obey the Spirit of God. It is not a question of sham and reality or of hypocrisy and reality, but of sincerity being transformed into reality. It is possible to be perfectly real to ourselves but not real to God; that is not reality. It is possible to be perfectly real to ourselves and real to other people, but not real in our relationship to God; that is not reality. The only reality is being in harmony with ourselves and other people and God. That is the one great reality towards which God is working, and towards which we are working as we obey Him.

1. Self-Realisation—Naturally

If any man would come after Me . . . (RV)

It is a painful process becoming conscious of one's self; we are not conscious of ourselves at the beginning of life. A child has no realisation of himself as distinct from those round about him, consequently he is in complete harmony. When a child begins to realise himself he becomes self-conscious and his distress begins; he begins to find he is different from everyone else and thinks that no one understands him, and he becomes either conceited or depressed.

(a) Sense of Individualism

The critical moment in a man or woman's life is when they realise they are individually separate from other people. When I realise I am separate from everyone else, the danger is that I think I am different from everyone else. Immediately I think that, I become a law to myself; that means I excuse everything I do, but nothing anyone else does. "My temptations are peculiar," I say; "my setting is very strange; no one knows but myself the peculiar forces that are in me." When first that big sense awakens that I am different from everyone else, it is the seed of all lawlessness and all immoralities.

(b) Sense of Intuition

This sense that I know what other people do not know, that I have a special intuition that tells me things, is even more dangerous than the sense of individualism because it leads to spiritual deception in a religious nature and to hard intellectual conceit in a natural nature.

(c) Sense of Isolation

When a person realises he is alone the danger of inordinate affection arises. Have you ever noticed the remarkable phrase in the Song of Songs-"... stir not up, nor awaken . . . love, until it [RV mg] please"? The forces of the world, the flesh and the devil are set to do that one thing, to awaken the soul's love before the true Lover of the soul, the Lord Jesus Christ, has been revealed. It would serve us well if we thought a great deal more from the ethical side of our Christian work than we do. We think of it always from the spiritual side because that is the natural way for us, but when we think of it from the ethical side we get at it from a different angle. More damage is done because souls have been left alone on the moral side than Christian workers ever dream, simply because their eyes are blinded by seeing only along the spiritual line. When once the powers of a nature, young or old, begin to awaken it realises that it is an individual; that it has a power of knowing without reasoning, and it begins to be afraid because it is alone and looks for a companion, and the devil is there always to supply the need. Remember the old proverb—"If you knock long enough at a door the devil may open it." The Bible indicates that there is a wrong as well as a right perseverance.

Self-realisation naturally means—I must develop my nature along its natural line: I am an individual, therefore I shall take care that no one who is not like me teaches me; I have gifts of soul that make me feel a strong affinity for, certain natures, those I shall foster; I feel very much alone, therefore I shall select another person or persons to comrade me. The Spirit of God counteracts these tendencies of the nature which He has created until they flow into the right channels.

There are many signs of religiosity in a young life that arise simply from natural physical development and are not spiritual at all. A boy or girl in their teens often shows amazingly religious tendencies and these are mistaken for the real work of the Spirit of God; they may or may not be. The need for spiritual discernment on this point in those of us who are workers is intense. Whenever there is real spiritual life, Jesus Christ is in the first place; when it is not the work of the Spirit of God there are vague notions about God, aspirations after this and that, and great strivings that may end anywhere, towards God or not. The great need is for the Holy Spirit to introduce Jesus Christ. The supreme moment for Our Lord in any life is when that individual life is beginning to awaken. The incalculable power of intercession comes in here. A Christian father or mother or teacher or friend can anticipate that moment in the life of their child or teacher or friend, so that when the awakening comes, the Spirit of God in answer to believing prayer holds off the world, the flesh and the devil and introduces the Friend of friends, the Lord Jesus Christ. I wish I could convey to you the imperative importance of intercessory prayer. If the devil is anxious about one thing he is anxious not to allow us to see this; if we will only say, "Well, prayer does not much matter; they are very young and inexperienced." Forestall the time; hold off the devil! We do not know when a nature begins to awaken along the line of self-realisation, it may be very early in life or later on; but I do believe that by intercessory prayer, as Jesus Himself has told us, the great power of God works in ways we cannot conceive. I think sometimes we will be covered with shame when we meet the Lord Jesus and think how blind and ignorant we were when He brought people around us to pray for, or gave us opportunities of warning, and instead of praying we tried to find out what was wrong. We have no business to try and find out what is wrong, our business is to pray, so that when the awakening comes Jesus Christ will be the first they meet. The one who meets a nature at its awakening has the opportunity of making or marring that life. As soon as Jesus Christ touches "the chords of being," the nature is fascinated by Him, as the early disciples were—no work of regeneration as yet, simply the holding of the nature entranced by Jesus Christ. The chances for the devil in that life are very poor indeed; but if the world, the flesh and the devil get the first touch, a long line of havoc may follow before Jesus Christ has His chance.

2. Christ-Realisation

let him deny himself...

Jesus is talking to men who have reached the point of self-realisation naturally; now He is requiring from them an identification with Himself. It is not only that they identify themselves in a fidelity which is indistinguishable from that which is due to God alone, but that He, in the most solemn, explicit, and overpowering words, requires from them that identification, and makes their eternal destiny depend upon it.

Denney⁷

Self-realisation naturally cares nothing about God, it does not care whether Jesus lived or died or did anything at all. For ourselves we live and for ourselves we die; that is self-realisation that leads to death and despair; it is absolutely and radically opposed to Christ-realisation. True self-realisation is exhibited in the life of Our Lord, perfect harmony with God and a perfect understanding of man; and He prays "that they may be one, even as We are one."

(a) Power of Asceticism

Asceticism is the passion of giving up things, and is recognisable in a life not born again of the Spirit of God. It is all very well if it ends in giving up the one thing God wants us to give up, viz., our right to ourselves, but if it does not end there, it will do endless damage to the life. In a sanctified soul the power of asceticism shows itself in an understanding of the mighty place of martyrdom in Our Lord's programme for a disciple. "Let him deny himself." These words of Jesus reveal the line He continually worked on when He talked to the disciples; He introduced the closest ties and said that at times even these have to be severed if we are to be true to Him. That sounds harsh to anyone if he has not come into the understanding of Jesus that we get after sanctification.

Consider how great this Man is who declares that the final destiny of men depends on whether or not they are loyal to Him, and who demands absolute loyalty though it involve sacrifice of the tenderest affections, and the surrender of life in the most ignominious death.

(b) Passion of Absorption

When Jesus Christ is seen by a newly awakened nature His fascination is complete—no conviction of sin, no reception of the Holy Spirit, no believing even, but an absorbing passion for Jesus Christ. There are a great number of Christians in this immature stage, they write books and conduct meetings along the line of being absorbed in Jesus, but we have the feeling as we listen—"There is something lacking—what is it?" What is lacking is the realisation that we have to be brought by means of the death of Jesus into the relationship to God that Our Lord Himself had. The hymns that are written by people in this stage emphasise the human aspect of Jesus, but there is no real gripping power in them for the saint.

The passion of absorption is also recognisable in the initial stages of sanctification, perhaps more so than at any other stage; there is no consciousness of a separate life. To talk about suffering and crossbearing and self-denial is not only outside the soul's vocabulary but outside the possibility of his thinking, he seems to be absolutely absorbed in Christ. This stage is excessively dangerous unless it leads to one thing, identification with the death of Jesus.

(c) Perseverance of Adoration

When Jesus touches a nature, a long series of devotional hours characterises the life—always wanting times of being alone with God, always wanting to pray and read devotional books. In some natures it goes as far as ecstasy. After sanctification the characteristic of the life is clear—Jesus Christ first, Jesus Christ second and Jesus Christ third, all that the Lord wants; the life goes on with a flood of intense energy, adoration unspeakable "I live," said Paul, "and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me" (RV). The identity is changed, the very faith, the very nature that was in Jesus is in us now, and we with all other saints may grow into the full realisation of God's purpose in Redemption. "... till we all attain unto the unity of the faith" (RV). We cannot attain to it alone.

3. Self-Realisation—Spiritually

... and take up his cross daily, and follow Me.

In the first experience of sanctification we lose altogether the consciousness of our own identity, we are absorbed in God; but that is not the final place, it is merely the introduction to a totally new life. We lose our natural identity and consciously gain, the identity that Jesus had, and it is when God begins to deal with sanctified souls on that line that darkness sometimes comes and the strange misunderstanding of God's ways. They are being taught what God taught Abraham:

My goal is God Himself, not joy, nor peace, Nor even blessing, but Himself, my God.

Frederick Brook

Jesus said to His disciples, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." They could not bear them until the Holy Spirit brought them into the realisation of Who Jesus was.

(a) Patient Dedication and take up his cross..." The immature stage of the life of sanctification merges into a clear, patient dedication to Jesus Christ; free from all hurry spiritually and all panic there is a slow and growing realisation of what Jesus meant when He said, "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (RV). Our cross is the steady exhibition of the fact that we are not our own but Christ's, and we know it, and are determined to be unenticed from living a life of dedication to Him. This is the beginning of the emergence of the real life of faith.

(b) Plain Daylight

"daily . . . " The life of manifestations is a critical stage in the saint's experience. The real life of the saint on this earth, and the life that is most glorifying to Jesus, is the life that steadfastly goes on through common days and common ways, with no mountain-top experiences. We read that John the Baptist "looked upon Jesus as He walked. . . ."—not at Jesus in a prayer meeting or in a revival service, or Jesus performing miracles; he did not watch Him on the Mount of Transfiguration, he did not see Him in any great moment at all, he saw Him on an ordinary day when Jesus was walking in an ordinary common way, and he said, "Behold the Lamb of God!" That is the test of reality. Mounting up with wings as eagles, running and not being weary, are indications that something more than usual is at work. Walking and not fainting is the life that glorifies God and satisfies the heart of Jesus to the full—the plain daylight life, unmarked, unknown, only occasionally, if ever, does the marvel of it break on other people.

(c) Persistent Devotion

"... and follow Me." This is the life of martyrdom with the glowing heat of perfect love at its heart. Only one figure ahead and that the Lord Jesus, other people, saints or sinners, shadows. The mark of this life of devotion is its persistence. Spasms are a sign of returning or departing life. The continual feeling, "I must wind myself up, I have been letting things go, I must screw my life up⁸ and get to work," may be a sign that we are coming nearer the source of the true life or it may be exactly the opposite, it may be a sign that we are declining into death. God and ourselves are the only judges of that. The one thing to fix on is that the life Jesus lived is the pattern of what our lives will be when once we come to the place of self-realisation spiritually.

No one is worthy of Jesus who does not follow Him, as it were, with the rope round his neck—ready to die the most ignominious death rather than prove untrue.

Denney

The idea of martyrdom is the very essence of the saint's life. Jesus Christ always used the figure of martyrdom when He spoke of this stage of the Christian life (see John 21:18). The saint at this stage is leagues beyond the point of asking—"Am I doing God's will?" he is God's will; leagues beyond the point of saying—"I do want God to bless me here and use me there"; leagues beyond the point of saying—"I have got the victory" and praising God for it; he is in the place where God can make him broken bread and poured-out wine just as He made His Son broken bread and poured-out wine for us.

May this message make clear to our hearts and minds the purpose of God in our salvation and sanctification. God's purpose is to make us real, that is, to make us perfectly at one with all our own powers and perfectly at one with God, no longer children but understanding in our heads as well as in our hearts the meaning of the Redemption, and slowly maturing until we are a recommendation to the redeeming grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. As the angels look down on us, do they see something that makes them marvel at the wonderful workmanship of Jesus Christ—"When He shall come to be glorified in His saints, and to be marvelled at in all them that believed"? (RV).

IUDGEMENT

Oh, we're sunk enough here, God knows!
But not quite so sunk that moments,
Sure tho' seldom, are denied us,
When the spirit's true endowments
Stand out plainly from its false ones,
And apprise it if pursuing
Or the right way or the wrong way,
To its triumph or undoing.

R. B. (Robert Browning)

And this is the judgement, that the light is come into the world, and men loved the darkness rather than the light; for their works were evil. (John 3:19 RV)

The healthiest exercise for the mind of a Christian is to learn to apprehend the truth granted to it in vision. Every Christian with any experience at all has had a vision of some fundamental truth, either about the Atonement or the Holy Spirit or sin, and it is at the peril of their souls that they lose the vision. By prayer and determination we have to form the habit of keeping ourselves soaked in the vision God has given. The difficulty with the majority of us is that we will not seek to apprehend the vision, we get glimpses of it and then leave it alone. "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision," says Paul. It is one of the saddest things to see men and women who have had visions of truth but have failed to apprehend them, and it is on this line that judgement comes. It is not a question of intellectual discernment or of knowing how to present the vision to others, but of seeking to apprehend the vision so that it may apprehend us. Soak and soak and soak continually in the one great truth of which you have had a vision; take it to bed with you, sleep with it, rise up in the morning with it, continually bring your imagination into captivity to it, and slowly and surely as the months and years go by God will make you one of His specialists in that particular truth. God is no respecter of persons.

1. The Master Meaning of Crisis

And this is the judgement . . . (RV)

"And this is the judgement," i.e. the critical moment. A man is not judged by his ordinary days and nights because in these he is more or less a creature of drift, but a crisis is immediately his test. A crisis is a turning-point that separates, and it will always reveal character. If, after a crisis is passed, you will take the trouble to go back, you will find there was a moment away back when a clear idea was given you of what God wanted you to do and you did not do it; the days have gone on and suddenly the crisis comes, and instantly judgement is passed. The thing that tells is the crisis. The generality of men drift along without bothering their heads about anything until a crisis comes, and it is always critical.

(a) The Critical Issue (Mark 6:16)

"But Herod, when he heard thereof, said, John, whom I beheaded, he is risen" (RV). The crisis in the case of Herod was brought about by the disciples' preaching of Jesus; when "His name had become known" (RV), Herod was mastered and made known to himself; the crisis revealed a terror-stricken conscience. Herod was a Sadducee and Sadducees said that there is no resurrection, but when the name of Jesus was noised abroad, he was superstitiously terrified and said, "John, whom I beheaded, he is risen."

(b) The Convicting Idea (Mark 6:18)

"For John said unto Herod, It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife" (RV). The convicting idea was produced by what Herod heard; the truth had been spoken to him, he had been convicted by it—"he heard him gladly," and "did many things [RV mg]" (v. 20), but not the one thing. Herod refused to obey the light when it was given, and it was that moment that determined how he would show himself in the crisis.

(c) The Confirming Intention (Mark 6:21)

"And when a convenient day was come . . ." The convenient day will always come, the convenient day for the satisfaction of sin. This is a general principle which the generality of Christian workers do not seem to realise. Sin has got to be satisfied, or else strangled to death by a supernatural power. Hell is the satisfaction of all sin. Sentimentalism arises in the nature that is unused to facing realities. People will pile on Christian work, will do anything, will slave to further orders,⁹ rather than let you touch the thing that is wrong. Great oceans of penitence and confession are shown, but when all that is through you find there is one fact more, one blind spot which the one you are dealing with refuses to look at or to let you look at. If you are a servant of God, you must ruthlessly rip up the sentimental humbug and go direct to the one thing.

These three things play their part in every crisis. Be careful to note, however, that a crisis does not make character; a crisis reveals character. No sane person is allowed by God to live continually in the light of his conscience. The characteristic of the life of a saint is essential elemental simplicity. Apart from moments of crisis, character is not consciously known. You can see this every day you live; we all say—"If I had been in your place, I should have done so and so." You have no means of knowing what you would have done; the nature of a crisis is that it takes you unawares, it happens suddenly, and the line you take reveals your character; it may also reveal something that amazes you. For instance, you may think a certain person selfish, self-interested and self-satisfied, but a crisis comes, bereavement or a business disaster or sickness, and to your amazement you find he or she is not the self-interested person you thought they were at all, there are whole tracts of generosity in their nature of which you knew nothing. Or you may think a person very generous and kind and loving, and when a crisis occurs, to your amazement and every one else's, they show themselves mean and selfish and cruel. The crisis is always the judgement.

2. The Moral Majesty of the Criterion

That the light is come into the world . . . (RV)

What does Jesus Christ say the standard of God's judgement is for us all? The Light that has come into the world. Who is the Light of the world? The Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God and Son of Man.

To judge is to see clearly, to care for what is just, and therefore to be impartial and impersonal.

Amiel¹⁰

A few moments' consideration will reveal what a difficult task the Holy Spirit has in bringing even the best of saints to this impersonal standard of judgement. This idea, which shows our personal way of looking at things, is always lurking about us—"Oh well, God knows I really meant to devote myself to Him and to obey Him, but so many things have upset me; I have not had the opportunities I should have had." "I don't really mean to speak and act as I do, but I shall not count it this time." All this shows how difficult it is for the Holy Spirit to bring us to apply the standard of Jesus Christ to ourselves, we will apply His standard to other people; but Jesus Christ brings it home to us. Am I willing to obey the light? We have to beware of personal interests which blur the mind from accepting Our Lord's standard. To walk in the light, as God is in the light, is the one condition of being kept cleansed from all sin.

(a) The Standard for the Heathen (Matthew 25:31-46; John 1:9; Romans 2:11-16)

The first thing to ask in regard to this standard is—what about the people who have never heard of Jesus Christ, and may never hear of Him, how are they judged? The passages given all refer to God's standard of judgement for the heathen, viz., the light they have, not the light they have never had and could not get. Conscience is the standard by which men and women are to be judged until they have been brought into contact with the Lord Jesus Christ. The call to preach the Gospel to the heathen is not the frenzied doctrine that the heathen who have never known Jesus Christ, and never had the chance of knowing Him, are going to be eternally lost, but the command of Jesus Christ—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

(b) The Standard for Christendom (John 3:18)

"He that believeth on Him is not judged: he that believeth not hath been judged already, because he hath not

^{9. &}quot;to further orders": ad infinitum; endlessly; of military origin, meaning continuing the present action until one receives different orders believed on the name of the only begotten Son of God." The standard for the judgement of Christendom is not the light it has received but the light it ought to have received. Every country in Christendom has had plenty of opportunity of knowing about Christ, and the doom of a soul begins the moment it consciously neglects to know Jesus Christ or consciously rejects Him when He is known. Beware of applying Our Lord's words in Matthew 25 to Christians; Matthew 25 is not the standard for the judgement of Christians, but the standard for the judgement of the nations that do not know Christ. The standard for the judgement of Christians is Our Lord.

(c) The Standard for the Church (Ephesians 4:11–13)

"And He gave some to be apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; . . . till we all attain unto the unity of the faith." These verses do not refer to individual Christian lives but to the collective life of the saints. The individual saint cannot be perfected apart from others. "He gave some to be apostles . . . ," for what purpose? To show how clever they were, what gifts they had? No, "for the perfecting of the saints." In looking back over the history of the Church we find that every one of these "gifts" has been tackled. Paul says that apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers, are all meant for one thing by God, viz., "for the perfecting of the saints, ... unto the building up of the body of Christ." No saint can ever be perfected in isolation or in any other way than God has laid down. There are very few who are willing to apprehend that for which they were apprehended, they thank God for salvation and sanctification and then stagnate, consequently the perfecting of the saints is hindered.

3. The Making Moment of Choice

... And men loved the darkness rather than the light; for their works were evil. (RV)

Our choice is indelibly marked for time and eternity. What we decide makes our destiny, not what we have felt, nor what we have been moved to do, or inspired to see, but what we decide to do in a given crisis, it is that which makes or mars us. Sooner or later there comes to every life the question—Will I choose to side with God's verdict on sin in the Cross of Christ? I may say "I won't accept," or "I will put it off," but both are decisions, remember.

(a) The Prejudice for Darkness (Matthew 6:23)

"If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" The disposition of a man determines the way he will decide when the crisis comes, but the only One Who knows the disposition other than the man himself is God. The unaltered, natural disposition of a man is called by our Lord "darkness," that means prejudice against the light.

(b) The Persistence of Direction (Mark 6:26-27)

"And the king was exceeding sorry; but for the sake of his oaths, and of them that sat at meat, he would not reject her. And straightway the king sent forth a soldier of his guard, and commanded to bring his head . . ." (RV). John the Baptist represented the voice of God to Herod; Herod decided to silence the voice of God. He had one subsequent twinge (see Mark 6:16–18); then his conscience never bothered him again, and Jesus Christ and all He represented became a farce to him. We read in Luke 23:8-9, that "when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad: for he was of a long time desirous to see Him, . . . and he hoped to see some miracle done by Him. And he questioned Him in many words; but He answered him nothing" (RV). Herod had ordered the voice of God to be silent, and it was; and now all sails are set for perdition. His was "a ghastly smooth life, dead at heart." That is the awful condition to which a man may get where he no longer believes in goodness or purity or justice; but the Bible never allows that a man can get there without being culpable in God's sight. Whenever you see a soul in danger of closing over one sin, go at it no matter how it hurts or how annoyed that soul is with you, go at it until the sin is blasted right out, never palliate it or sympathise. Very few voices rise up against the sins that make for the seal of silence on men and women and churches. This is what is lacking to-day.

(c) Pronouncement of Destiny (Luke 23:9)

"And he questioned Him in many words; but He answered him nothing" (RV). The reason "He answered him nothing" is to be found in Mark 6:26–27. Herod decided to silence the voice of God in his life, and when the Son of God stood before him, he saw nothing in Him; there was no more compunction of conscience. Whenever a man makes the decision that Herod made—"I don't want to hear any more about the matter," it is the beginning of the silence of God in his soul. To silence the voice of God is damnation in time; eternal damnation is that for ever. "God . . . answereth me no more" (1 Samuel 28:15) is an expression of damnation in time. Divine silence is the ultimate destiny of the man who refuses to come to the light and obey it.

It is a terrible thing in the spiritual career not to be apprehended by the light that has been given; it may have been at some midday or midnight; in childhood or in the early days of your Christian life, or as recently as last week, you know exactly when it was, it is between you and God, are you going to decide along that line—"My God, I don't know all that it means, but I decide for it"? Whenever any light is given you on any fundamental issue and you refuse to settle your soul on it and apprehend it, your doom is sealed along that particular line. If when a clear emphatic vision of some truth is given you by God, not to your intellect but to your heart, and in spite of it all you decide to take another course, the vision will fade and may never come back.

There are men and women who ought to be princes and princesses with God but they are away on God's left, they may even be sanctified, but they are left at a particular stage because they chose to be left; instead of obeying the heavenly vision, the natural judicious decisions of an average Christian life have been preferred. It has nothing to do with salvation, but with lost opportunities in service for God. "Many are called, but few chosen" (RV), i.e., few prove themselves the chosen ones. Whenever the vision comes, let me plead with you, as though God were intreating by me, do not be disobedient to it, because there is only one purpose in our lives, and that is the satisfaction of the Lord Jesus Christ.

BACKSLIDING

The tendencies that make temptation possible are inherent in man as God created him, Adam and Our Lord Jesus Christ being witnesses; and we have to bear in mind that regeneration does not remove those tendencies but rather increases them. The possibility of temptation reaches its height in Jesus Christ.

1. Tendency to Repose

It takes so much effort to maintain one's self in an exceptional point of view that one falls back into prejudice by pure exhaustion.

The tendency to repose physically is a right law of our physical nature; morally and spiritually it is a tendency towards immorality and unspirituality.

(a) The Desire for Rest—The Arrest of Desire (John 6:10–15)

The desire at the heart of true spiritual life is for union with God; the tendency to rest in anything less than the realisation of this desire becomes the arrest of desire. Whenever we seek repose in any blessing spiritually, sleeping sickness begins. The tendency to rest in any of the blessings which are the natural outcome of union with God is the beginning of backsliding. Is my desire for union with God, or am I like the people who sought to make Jesus King—for what purpose? If Jesus could feed their bodies without their having to work, that was the very thing they wanted. The incident is symbolic of the tendency to repose which is inherent in human nature, but if this desire were satisfied it would be the destruction of all character.

(b) The Decay of Reality—The Dawn of Death (John 6:30–31)

Reality means that which is in perfect accord with God. If I accept any blessing of God, e.g. sanctification, as the final end and aim of my life, from that moment decay begins in my spiritual life. Sanctification is the gateway to real union with God, which is life unutterable. Peter points out this very thing in his Epistles; he says, you know these things and are established in the truth, but you are going to sleep, you are in danger of mistaking this for the final place; it is not, it is only the introduction (2 Peter 1:12–13). Are we sufficiently well taught of the Holy Spirit to stir up souls who have got right with God, until they come to the reality of realities, absolute oneness with God?

The tendency to backslide begins right in the very secret places. No wonder Jesus urged His disciples to watch and pray, "that ye enter not into temptation." The possibility of backsliding is so full of peril that the only safety is to look to Jesus, relying on the Holy Spirit, and never to allow the repose which is a necessity physically to come into the life of the spirit. The arrest of desire begins when I want to rest in spiritual blessings; and the dawn of death in spiritual life begins when I become smugly satisfied with my attainments—"This is all God wants of me." What God wants of me is all that He has revealed in Jesus Christ—"till we all attain unto the . . . measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Ephesians 4:13 RV). The rest which is the outcome of entire sanctification is not the rest of stagnation, but the rest of the reality of union with God.

(c) The Dreams of Repose—The Night of Disaster (John 6:34–35)

These words of Our Lord are a puzzle to an unspiritual mind, and an unspiritual mind is produced by allowing visions and dreams of spiritual repose which Jesus Christ continually discourages. What do I dream about and allow my mind to fancy when in communion with God? One of the greatest snares in spiritual life is to foster dreams and fancies of our own which do not tally with the statements of Jesus, instead of bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. People who go off at a tangent and are led astray by Satan as an angel of light are deceived just here. Disaster spiritually follows whenever the tendency to repose is yielded to. "Forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before" (RV) is the only attitude for a saint.

2. The Tendency to Revert

Is not life the test of our moral force, and all these untold waverings are they not temptations of the soul?

Amiel Henri-Frédéric

In all organic life there is a tendency to revert to the original type. Flowers and plants may be highly developed and cultivated, but if afterwards they are left alone year after year they will revert to the original type from which they sprang. The spiritual application of this is that there is the possibility in every child of God of reverting to the original type of self-interest; but thank God there is also the possibility of being transformed into the image of God's Son (Romans 8:29).

(a) Possibility of Offence (John 6:52)

The possibility of offence can only come when two persons have somewhat the same nature. People who have no affinity with Jesus run no risk of being offended with Him; but no Christian is ever free from that possibility (cf. Matthew 11:6). Satan comes to us with suggestions—"Surely God would never ask you to do such and such a thing? God would never guide you in such a way?" But God does. The possibility of offence is there immediately I become a child of God.

(b) The Perversity of the Offended (John 6:60–61)

Perversity means to turn away from one to whom I have been devoted because he says things that do not suit my ideas. There is a stage in spiritual experience, it may be before or after sanctification, when this perversity is possible. Someone comes with an exposition of a truth of God I have never realised before and at once the possibility of perversity is awakened and I say, "No, I am sure God would never have revealed this truth to you if He has not revealed it to me." The possibility of offence is always there, and perversity is the next step. As soon as I am offended I become perverse, my eyes are blinded and I see only along the line of my prejudices. There are saints, for instance, who resolutely shut their minds against the truth that they can draw upon the Lord's life for their bodies, or against the need for being continually renewed in their minds. This will lead not only to stagnation spiritually but to perversity. The only safety is to keep in the light as God is in the light.

(c) The Perfidy of the Offended (John 6:66)

"Upon this many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him" (RV). Reversion to self-will, and insisting on my own way of serving God, is not only utter faithlessness to Jesus Christ, but active working against the particular truth which has offended me. The people who are most perverse against the truth are those who know it. This is stated in its most extreme form in Hebrews 6:4–6.

If God were to remove from us as saints the possibility of disobedience there would be no value in our obedience, it would be a mechanical business. To say after sanctification, "Now I can do what I like," is a perilously dangerous statement. If it were true, it would never have been recorded that "even Christ pleased not Himself." The possibility of disobedience in a child of God makes his obedience of amazing value. The one who is not a child of God is the slave of the wrong disposition, he has not the power to obey; immediately God delivers him from the wrong disposition, he is free to obey, and consequently free to disobey, and it is this that makes temptation possible. Temptation is not sin; temptation must always be possible for our sonship to be of worth to God. It would be no credit for God to bring mechanical slaves to glory—"for it became Him . . . in bringing many sons unto glory"—not slaves, not useless channels, but vigorous, alert, wide-awake men and women, with all their powers and faculties devoted absolutely to God.

3. Tendency to Revolt

The independence which is the condition of individuality is at the same time the eternal temptation of the individual.

Amiel Henri-Frédéric

Spiritual revolt means the deliberately forsaking of God and signing on under another ruler. We must distinguish between degeneration and revolt. We have been dealing with the tendencies that lead to degeneration, no positive side has been taken yet, but there is a distinct disinclination to go on further-"I am thankful I am here, and here I am going to stay"—without realising that we cannot stay where we are, we must either go on or go back—and that leads ultimately to revolt, not mere declension but a deliberate signing on under another ruler. "For My people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me the fountain of living waters"—that is not backsliding; that is degeneration; "and have hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water"—these two things together constitute backsliding. The words God uses in connection with backsliding are terrible. He uses words that shock us as moral individuals in order to portray what backsliding is in His sight (e.g. Jeremiah 3:8).

(a) The Reaction of the Unattained (John 6:41, 52) When a soul realises the truth of God and fails to attain it, there lies within him a power of reaction which not only means he will try no more but he will dissuade others. If once we have had a vision from God of His purpose for us and we leave it unattained, the tendency is to say, "Oh well, it may be meant for other people, but it isn't for me." This tendency is in every one of us, we scarcely discern it, but it is there. For anyone to leave unattained anything Our Lord has revealed as possible for him, is the beginning of Satan's chance over that soul. Our Lord makes no allowance for not attaining because by means of His Cross we have all the marvellous grace of God to draw upon, all the mighty life of the Lord Jesus Christ to enable us to attain. A great many of us try and attain without having received the life of Jesus and we are bound to fail; that is not a matter of reaction, it is inevitable. But if we have received the life of Jesus, it is unconscious blasphemy in God's sight to stop short of attaining anything He reveals as possible for us. Our Lord's illustration of salt that has lost its savour is applicable. "Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost its savour, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men" (RV). Savourless salt is a most cursed influence in the physical world, and a saint who has lost his saintliness is a pestilential influence in the spiritual world. We lose saintliness whenever we take our eyes for one second off the Source of our life, the Lord Jesus Christ. Whenever we do, all these errors begin to be possible. But if we keep in the light with God, our life is that of a child, simple and joyful all through. It is sufficient for a child to know that his father wishes him to do certain things and he learns to draw on a strength greater than his own and attains and attains. If he does not, he runs the risk of becoming a prodigal.

(b) The Reviling of the Unreached (John 6:61)

If a man has really tasted the life of God and knows God's purpose for him, or did know it months or years ago, but has never fulfilled that purpose through obedience, the tendency to revile the standard is irresistible. We must revile a standard we have not reached when we know we ought to have reached it. It is not something that can be prevented, it is inevitable. If once we deliberately stop short and refuse to let God's life have its way with us, we shall revile the truth because it has not been reached.

There are two things which keep us from going on with God—first, the "show business"; by the "show business" we mean the desire to appeal to the largest number: if you do that, you will have to lower the standards of Jesus Christ; and second, sympathy. Sympathy with one another that does not spring from sympathy with God's interests in that one will always end in reviling some standard of God's truth. It will not mean you use reviling language, you may use very pious and sighing language—"Oh no, I could never attain to that." You may preach entire sanctification and your message may be couched in beautiful language, then you say—"This is God's standard, but of course I am not there." There can be only one result in the souls of those who listen, and that is the reviling of the standard, for which you and I will be called to account. The glibness and ease with which men proclaim the great standards of Jesus Christ and then sweep them away by saying, "God forbid I should say I am there," makes one tremble, because such a statement implies, Jesus Christ cannot bring me there, it is an ideal to which I cannot attain. When we come to the New Testament there is the quiet and grandly-easy certainty that we can attain. All God's commands are enablings. Never sympathise with a soul who cannot get through to God on Jesus Christ's lines. The Lord is never hard nor cruel, He is the essence of tender compassion and gentleness. The reason any soul cannot get through is that there is something in him that won't budge; immediately it does, Jesus Christ's marvellous life will have its way.

(c) The Renunciation by Unbelief (John 6:70-71)

Not only is it possible for a soul to revile the standards set up by Jesus, but it is possible to do what Judas did, renounce Him by unbelief. It is easy to make Judas the arch-sinner, but he is the type of what is possible in every one of us. Thank God that the Apostle Paul is also a possible type for every one of us, but do not forget that Judas is a possible type too.

These are terrible truths, but it is the terrors of the dark night which drive us closer to the haven of unutterable security, the Lord Jesus Christ. No wonder God's Book says, "the way of transgressors is hard." Could God have made it more terrible than He has for man to go astray? Could He have put the danger signals more clearly than He has? The way is absolutely strewn with alarm signals; it is impossible to go wrong easily.

Thus in new ways we learn the profound beauty of Our Lord's words: "Come unto Me"; "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

TEMPTATION

1 Corinthians 10:12-13

The word "temptation" has come down in the world, we use it wrongly nowadays. Temptation is not sin, it is the thing we are bound to meet if we are men; not to be tempted would be to be beneath contempt. Temptation is something that exactly fits the nature of the one tempted, and is therefore a great revealer of the possibilities of the nature. Every man has the setting of his own temptation. A good illustration of temptation is the way steel is tested. Steel can be "tired" in the process of testing, and in this way its strength is measured. Temptation means the test by an alien power of the possessions held by a personality. This makes the temptation of Our Lord explainable: He held in His Person the fact that He was to be the King of men and the Saviour of the world, and the alien power that came to test Him on these lines is called in the Bible, Satan.

Temptation is also a severe test to fulfil the possessions of personality by a short cut. Temptation trains innocence into character or else into corruption. There are some temptations, however, by which we have no business to be tempted any longer; we should be on a higher plane dealing with other temptations. We may have our morality well within our own grasp and be comparatively free from temptation, but as soon as we are regenerated by the Spirit of God we begin to understand the force of spiritual temptations of which we were unconscious before.

1. Temptation v. Sin (James 1:12–15)

Temptation and sin are profoundly different. Temptation is a pathway to the end desired, but it leads to a perplexing situation, inasmuch as it makes a man decide which factor he will obey in the dilemma. The possibility of sin and the inclination to sin are different things. Every man has the possibility of committing murder, but the inclination is not there. The inclination is as the deed, whether it is carried out or not (Romans 2:1; 1 John 3:15). Satan had the possibility of disobedience and when the temptation producing the dilemma came, he inclined to rebellion against God. Adam had the possibility of disobedience, and when temptation came to him producing the dilemma, he deliberately inclined to disobedience, and the disposition to disobey God became the inheritance of the whole of the human race, "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Romans 5:12). The disposition of sin is fundamental anarchy against God's rule over me, and as long as that disposition remains, temptation finds an inclination to sin in me; but when Our Lord delivers me from the disposition of sin, the hour of temptation discovers no inclination to sin, it tests the door of possibility only. "But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life" (Romans 6:22). Our Lord Jesus Christ had the possibility of disobedience, but when the temptation producing the dilemma came to Him, it found no inclination to disobedience; and everyone that is saved by Him is put in the position He was in when He was tempted (see Hebrews 2:11; 4:15–16). Until a man is regenerated and sanctified the general character of Our Lord's temptation is unguessed.

The sinless perfection heresy arises out of this confusion—it says that because the disposition of sin is removed, it is impossible to sin. The inclination to sin, thank God, is removed, but never the possibility. If the power to disobey were removed, our obedience would be of no value, for we should cease to be morally responsible. It is gloriously possible not to sin, but never impossible to sin, because we are moral agents. Morality must be militant in this order of things, but we can be "more than conquerors" every time.

The temptation James speaks of is the temptation we know naturally—"Each man is tempted, when he is drawn away by his own lust, and enticed" (RV). Until we are born again we only understand this kind of temptation, but by regeneration we are lifted into another realm and have other temptations to face, viz., the kind of temptations Our Lord faced. The temptations of Jesus have no home at all in our natural human nature, they do not appeal to us. A man's disposition on the inside, i.e. what he possesses in his personality, determines by what he is tempted on the outside, and the temptation will always come along the line of the ruling disposition. Sin is a disposition of self-love that obeys every temptation to its own lordship. Sin is literally self-centred rule, a disposition that rules the life apart from God.

Naturally we are taught by this disposition to lust for what we desire, and lust will warp character from rectitude to ruin—"drawn away by his own lust, and enticed" (RV). The destiny of lust is peculiarly fascinating. It presents a wild reach of possibility, and lust stampedes when it is not constrained by the consideration that it will lead the character to infamy, not fame. Lust means "I must have it at once, I will have my desire satisfied, and will brook no restraint."

Temptation yielded to is the birth of sin in the personal life and ends in death. The verses in James 1 are the natural history of temptation. Lust is used in other ways in the Bible than merely of immorality, it is the spirit of "I must have it at once," no matter what it is. Temptation yielded to is lust deified.

The period of temptation in Our Lord's life came immediately after a time of spiritual exaltation (see Matthew 3:16–17; 4:1); it was a period of estimating forces, and the historic temptations of Jesus Christ are pictorial records of wrong ways to the kingdoms of God. At His Baptism Jesus Christ accepted the vocation of bearing away (RV mg) the sin of the world, and immediately He was put by God's Spirit into the testing machine of the devil. But He did not "tire"; He went through the temptations "without sin" and retained the possessions of His personality intact.

"Then the devil leaveth Him, and behold angels came and ministered unto Him" (Matthew 4:11). The sign that you have gone through temptation rightly is that you retain your affinity with the highest.

2. Temptation and Jesus Christ (Matthew 4:1, 11; Hebrews 2:18; 4:15–16)

External circumstances are made to form an exact counterpart of the internal desire, which is different in different men. For example, the temptation of Our Lord was quite different from the temptation of Judas Iscariot, because the inner disposition was different. We have to beware of saying that because Jesus was Divine, temptation to Him was not real. If that is so, then the record in the Bible of Our Lord's temptations is a mere farce and is misleading, and the writer to the Hebrews is untrue when he says of Jesus, "tempted—vet without sin."

Could Jesus Christ be tempted? Undoubtedly He could, because temptation and sin are not the same thing. The temptation James speaks of, and the temptation of Jesus, are very different in character. The temptations which beset us as ordinary men gather round the disposition of sin.

In Luke 3:23 we read "... and Jesus Himself began to be about thirty years of age." That is the time in human life when man reaches maturity and all his powers are perfected; the time when he is spared no requirement of his manhood. Up to that time, life is full of promise, after that it is a matter of testing and attainment. After the baptism of Jesus and the descent of the Holy Ghost upon Him, God, as it were, took His sheltering hand off Him and let the devil do his worst.

Our Lord's temptation and ours move in different spheres until we are born again and become His brethren (Hebrews 2:11). The records of the temptation of Jesus are the records of how God as man is tempted, not of how man is tempted as man. The temptations of Jesus are not those of a man as man, but the temptation of God as man. Jesus Christ was not born with an heredity of sin. "Wherefore it behoved Him in all things to be made like unto His brethren" (RV). His "brethren" are those in whom He is born. It is nowhere said that Jesus Christ was "tempted like as we are" as ordinary human beings. By regeneration the Son of God is formed in us, and He has the same setting in our physical life as He had when He was on earth. Are we remaining loyal to Him in the things which beset His life in us? The devil does not need to bother about the majority of us; we have enough lust on the inside to keep us in sin, but when once a man is born from above (RV mg), the temptations alter instantly, and he realises where the temptation is aimed, viz., at the disposition.

Our Lord was tested for the fulfilment of what He held in His own personal life, viz., the Saviourhood of the world and the Kingship of men, and the temptation by Satan was that He should fulfil these by a short cut. Our Lord's temptations were set by His disposition; He could not be tempted by lust, but He was tempted to the fulfilment of His incarnation along a line other than that marked out by His Father. Satan came to Him as an "angel of light," and the central citadel of the temptations was—"You are the Son of God, then do God's work in Your own way." And at the heart of every one of Our Lord's answers is this-"I came to do My Father's work in His way, not in My own way" (see John 6:38). Satan was right every time in his promise of what would happen if Our Lord took his suggested short cuts (see John 6:15); but Our Lord would not be King of men on that line. He deliberately chose the "long, long trail," evading none of the suffering involved (see Hebrews 2:9-10).

3. Temptation, the Sinner and the Saint (Matthew 26:41; Luke 22:28; James 1:14-15)

We all of us suffer from temptations we have no business to be suffering from, simply because we refuse to let God lift us to a higher plane where we would have other temptations to face of another type. The temptations of Jesus are removed from any affinity with the natural; but when we are born again we realise the meaning of Our Lord's words to Peter, "Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat."

In our natural life we possess the possibility of self-realisation—"I am going to get the best out of myself, and train myself for my own ends." Until we are born from above (RV mg) the highest standpoint we have is that of self-realisation, and the particular possessions of our personality will be tested by the alien power to see whether that power can "tire" it. Temptation is not towards what we understand as evil, but towards what we understand as good (cf. Luke 16:15). Temptation is something that for a while completely baffles us, we do not know whether it is towards a right thing or not.

Spiritual life is attained, not by a necromantic magic pill, but by moral choices, whereby we test the thing that presents itself to us as being good. The basis of natural life and moral and spiritual life is the same. The way we maintain health in each of these domains is by fight. Health is the balance between my physical life and external nature. If the fighting force on the inside begins to dwindle or is impaired, I get diseased, things outside begin to disintegrate my vital force. The same is true of my moral life, everything that does not partake of the nature of virtue is the enemy of virtue in me, and it depends on how much moral calibre I have whether I overcome and produce virtue. The same is true spiritually; if I have enough spiritual fighting capacity, I will produce a character like Jesus Christ's. Character must be attained, it is never given to us.

The devil does not tempt to wrong things, he tries to make us lose what God has put into us by regeneration, viz., the possibility of being of value to God. The central citadel of the devil's attack on Jesus Christ is the same in us when we are born from above (RV mg), viz., my right to myself. Satan's aim is to dethrone God, and his whole purpose through the disposition of sin is to get us to the same place. Satan is never represented in the Bible as being guilty of sins, of doing wrong things; he is a wrong being.

There is a limit to temptation. "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able." God does not save us from temptations, but He succours us in the middle of them. In Hebrews 4:15 the writer is not referring to the temptations common to man as fallen man, but to the temptations common to the sanctified soul. And when Our Lord taught His disciples to pray, "Lead us not into temptation," He is not referring to the temptation James refers to, but to the temptation He Himself was led into by the Spirit of God. After the baptism of Jesus and the descent of the Holy Ghost upon Him, God, as it were, took His sheltering hand off Him. So also after the work of sanctification, when the life of the saint really begins, God lifts His hand off us and lets the world do its worst, for He is assured that He that is in him is greater than he that is against him.

CONSCIENCE

Conscience is that innate faculty in a man's spirit that attaches itself to the highest the man knows, whether he be an atheist or a Christian. The highest the Christian knows is God: the highest the atheist knows is his principles. That "Conscience is the voice of God" is easily proved to be absurd. If conscience were the voice of God, it would be the same in everyone. "I verily thought with myself," said Paul, "that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth" (Acts 26:9). Paul acted according to his conscience; and Our Lord said, "Whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service" (John 16:2)—they will obey their conscience in putting you to death.

The eye in the body records exactly what it looks at. The eye simply records, and the record is according to the light thrown on what it looks at. Conscience is the eye of the soul which looks out on what it is taught is God, and how conscience records depends entirely upon what light is thrown upon God. Our Lord Jesus Christ is the only true light on God. When a man sees Jesus Christ he does not get a new conscience, but a totally new light is thrown upon God, and conscience records accordingly, with the result that he is absolutely upset by conviction of sin.

1. The Articles of Conscience

By the "articles" of conscience we mean the regulations of conscience in man fresh from the hand of his Creator, and those articles are—God is Love; God is Holy; God is Near. The Bible records that "God is love"; but it must be borne in mind that it is the love of God, and that love, which is inexpressible bliss to a Being like Jesus Christ, or to a being like Adam as God created him, is a veritable hell of pain to those of us who are not like either. To know that God is love, God is holy, God is near, is pure delight to man in his innocent relationship to God, but a terror extreme since the fall. God can never leave a man until He has burned him as pure as He is Himself. It is God's love that forbids He should let him go.

These regulations of conscience are ingrained in the spirit of fallen man as they are in the spirit of a man who is born from above (RV mg).

2. The Attitudes of Conscience

When God is revealed as Love, as Holy, and as Near, it is man's conscience that alarms him from his sleep of death; it makes hell for a man instead of a life of peace. "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matthew 10:34). Wherever Jesus comes He reveals that man is away from God by reason of sin, and he is terrified at His presence. That is why men will put anything in the place of Jesus Christ, anything rather than let God come near in His startling purity, because immediately God comes near, conscience records that God is holy and nothing unholy can live with Him, consequently His presence hurts the sinner. "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloke for their sin" (John 15:22).

(a) Self-Consciousness

The first thing conscience does is to rouse up selfconsciousness, and that produces embarrassment. A little child is full of winsome beauty because he is utterly free from self-consciousness; when he begins to be conscious of himself he becomes awkward and shy and does all kinds of affected things; and when once the conscience of man is roused by the presence of God, it produces a consciousness of self that makes us scuttle out of His presence like bats out of the light. Most of us know much too little about what conscience succeeds in doing when we stand in the presence of God. We talk much too lightly about sin. Stand one second in the presence of God, in the light of conscience with the Spirit of God illuminating it, without Jesus Christ, and instantly you are conscious of what is stated in Genesis 3:7, viz., your kinship with the brute creation, with no God-quality in you.

(b) World-Consciousness

One effect of the disturbance caused by the light of conscience is to drive us into the outside hubbub of things. In the early days of Christianity men brooded on their sins, nowadays psychologists tell us the more wholesome way is to forget all about sin—fling yourself into the work of the world. Rushing into work in order to deaden conscience is characteristic of the life we live today. "Live the simple life; keep a healthy body; never let your conscience be disturbed; for any sake keep away from religious meetings; don't bring before us the morbid tendency of things." We shall find that the morbid tendency of things is the conviction of the Holy Ghost.

(c) God-Consciousness

The consciousness of God will break out in spite of all our sense of uncleanness, in spite of all our rush and interest in the work of the world, and in spite of all our logic, the implicit sense of God will come and disturb our peace.

We are laying down the fundaments of the way God has constituted man. God is holy, therefore nothing that does not partake of His holiness can abide in His presence, and that means pain. When conscience begins to be awakened by God, we either become subtle hypocrites or saints, that is, either we let God's law working through conscience bring us to the place where we can be put right, or we begin to hoodwink ourselves, to affect a religious pose, not before other people, but before ourselves, in order to appease conscience—anything to be kept out of the real presence of God because wherever He comes, He disturbs.

3. The Awakening of Conscience

(a) Armoured in Sin

The majority of men are dead in trespasses and sins. Our Lord illustrates this—"When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace: but when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils" (Luke 11:21–22). When the prince of this world rules, men are armoured in sin, not necessarily in wrongdoing, but in a wrong attitude, consequently they have no disturbance, no trouble, no perplexity. As the Psalmist says, "They are not in trouble as other men; they have more than heart could wish. . . . There are no pangs in their death" (see Psalm 73:4–7 RV).

(b) Awakened in Sin

How is conscience in men like that to be awakened? No man can awaken another man; the Spirit of God alone can awaken him. Our Lord did not say that the strong man battles with the stronger man: He says, "When a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him . . ." When once the Spirit of God shows Jesus Christ to a man in that condition, his armour is gone, and he experiences distress and pain and upset, exactly as Jesus said he would. Before, he had been armoured with the peace of "the prince of this world and his conscience recorded that everything was all right. Immediately Jesus Christ is presented, conscience records what the man is in the light of God, and the garrison within is disturbed, his peace and joy are gone, and he is under what is called conviction of sin.

(c) Awakening to Holiness

"And He, when He is come, will convict... of sin" (RV). We are apt to put conviction of sin in the wrong place in a man's life. The man of all men who experienced conviction of sin was the saintly apostle Paul. "For I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died" (Romans 7:9). There is no mention of conviction of sin in Paul's account of his conversion, only conviction of darkness and distress and of being out of order. But after Paul had been three years in Arabia with the Holy Ghost blazing through him, he began to write the diagnoses of sin which we have in his Epistles. The sense of sin is in proportion to the sense of holiness. The hymn has it rightly—

And they who fain would serve Thee best Are conscious most of wrong within.

It does not mean that indwelling sin and indwelling holiness abide together: indwelling sin can never abide with indwelling holiness; it means exactly what Paul said, "I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing . . ." (Romans 7:18), "But we had the sentence of death in ourselves that we should not trust in ourselves . . . " (2 Corinthians 1:9). The majority of us have caught on the jargon of holiness without the tremendous panging pain that follows the awakening to holiness. The Spirit of God brings us to face ourselves steadily in the light of God until sin is seen in its true nature. If you want to know what sin is, don't ask the convicted sinner, ask the saint, the one who has been awakened to the holiness of God through the Atonement; he is the one who can begin to tell you what sin is. The man writhing at the penitent form is affected because his sins have upset him, but he has very little knowledge of sin. It is only as we walk in the light as God is in the light that we begin to understand the unfathomable depths of cleansing to which the blood of Jesus Christ goes (1 John 1:7). Every now and again the Spirit of God allows the saint to look back as the apostle Paul did when he said, "I was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious" (RV). Paul was a mature saint at this time, but he is looking back into what he was before Jesus Christ apprehended him.

Conscience is the internal perception of God's moral law. Have you ever been convicted of sin by conscience through the Spirit of God? If you have, you know this—that God dare not forgive you and be God. There is a lot of sentimental talk about God forgiving because He is love: God is so holy that He cannot forgive. God can only destroy for ever the thing that is unlike Himself. The Atonement does not mean that God forgives a sinner and allows him to go on sinning and receiving forgiveness; it means that God saves the sinner and turns him into a saint, i.e. destroys the sinner out of him, and through his conscience he realises that by the Atonement God has done what He never could have done apart from it. When people testify you can always tell whether they have been convicted by the Spirit of God or whether their equilibrium has been disturbed by doing wrong things. When a man is convicted of sin by the Spirit of God through his conscience, his relationship to other people is absolute child's play. If when you were convicted of sin, you had been told to go and lick the dust off the boots of your greatest enemy, you would have done it willingly. Your relationship to men is the last thing that bothers you. It is your relationship to God that bothers you. I am completely out of the love of God, out of the holiness of God, and I tremble with terror when I think of God drawing near. That is the real element of conviction of sin, and it is one of the rarest things nowadays because men are not uplifting the white light of Jesus Christ upon God, they are uplifting arbitrary standards of right. They are uplifting, for instance, the conduct of man to man; they are telling us we should love our fellow men. The consequence is the majority of us get off scot-free, we begin to feel very self-righteous, "... but they . . . comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise." But when conscience is illuminated by the Holy Ghost, these three amazing articles—God is Love, God is Holy, God is Near—are brought straight down to our inner life and we can neither look up nor down for terror. When a man begins his life with God there are great tracts of his life that he never bothers his head about, but slowly and surely the Spirit of God educates him down to the tiny little scruple. 11 Every crook and cranny of the physical life, every imagination and emotion is perfectly known to God, and He demands that all these be blameless. That brings us to absolute despair unless Jesus Christ can do what He claims He can. The marvel of the Atonement is just this very thing, that the perfect Saviour imparts His perfections to me, and as I walk in the light as God is in the light, every part of bodily life, of affectionate life and of spirit life are kept unblameable in holiness; my duty is to keep in the light, God does all the rest. That is why the life of God within the saint produces agony every now and again, because God won't leave us alone, He won't say, "Now that will do." He will keep at us, blazing and burning us, He is a "consuming fire." That phrase becomes the greatest consolation we ever had. God will consume and shake, and shake and consume, till there is nothing more to be consumed, but only Himself—incandescent with the presence of God.

HUMANITY

Psalm 2

God does His business, do yours.

Amiel

The tendency nowadays is to take the management of the universe out of God's hands, while at the same time neglecting our business, viz., the government of our own universe within.

1. Enthusiasm for Humanity (Psalm 2:2)

The main line indicated in the Bible with regard to the human race and God's purpose for it is that God allows the human race full liberty, and He allows the spirit of evil, viz., Satan, nearly full liberty also. Peter says that God is longsuffering (2 Peter 3:9); He is giving us ample opportunity to try whatever line we like both in individual and in national life, but the Bible reveals that in the final end of all things, men will confess that God's purpose and His judgement are right. We must disabuse our minds of the idea that God sits like a Judge on a throne and batters humanity into shape. He is sometimes presented in that way, not intentionally, but simply because the majority of people have forgotten the principle laid down by Jesus, that "there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known"; and that in the end, God's judgements will be made utterly plain and clear, and men will agree that they are right. Meantime, God is giving humanity and the devil ample opportunity to try and prove that His purposes and His judgements are wrong.

Enthusiasm means intensity of interest. Enthusiasm for Humanity is one thing; enthusiasm for saints is another, God's purpose is the latter. In order that we may see exactly the forces and the problems that are at work morally, we will look at these heads:

(a) The Master Man (Romans 5:12)

Adam stands as the Federal Head of the race, he is the master key to the virtues that still remain in sinful men. These virtues must be understood as remnants left of God's original design, and not promises of what man is going to be. The moral problem comes in this way: we inherit by nature certain strong cardinal virtues, but these are not the slightest atom of use to us, and when a man or woman is born again of the Spirit of God, these virtues are nearly always a hindrance instead of a benefit. Think of the virtues which Jesus Christ demands in His teaching and compare them with the cardinal virtues left in us as the remnants of a ruined manhood, not as promises of the new manhood, and you will see why it is that we cannot patch up our natural virtues to come anywhere near Jesus Christ's demands. We must be re-made on the inside and develop new virtues entirely, "a new man in Christ Jesus." This is one part of the problem which no teacher outside the Bible deals with. Books on ethics and morals take the natural virtues as promises of what a man is going to be; the Bible indicates that they are remnants of what man once was, and the key to these virtues is Adam, not Jesus Christ. This accounts for our Lord's attitude, a strange perplexing attitude until we understand this point. Jesus loves the natural virtues, and yet He refers to them in a way which makes them seem utterly futile. Take the natural virtues in the rich young ruler, we read that Jesus looking on him, "loved him." Natural virtues are beautiful in the sight of Jesus, but He knows as none other could know, that they are not promises of what man is going to be, but remnants, "trailing clouds of glory," left in man, and are not of the slightest atom of practical use to him. Jesus Christ told the rich young ruler that he must strip himself of all he possessed, give his manhood to Him and then come and follow Him; in other words he must be re-made entirely.

(b) The Muddle of Men (Romans 5:12)

The "muddle of men" refers to the whole of the human race since Adam; we are all a muddle, "for that all have sinned." Since Adam, men, individually and collectively, tells us how the moral muddle has been produced, viz., by sin. In those in whom the cardinal virtues are strong and clear, there is another element which the Bible calls sin (no one else calls it sin), and it is this element which makes men and women a complete muddle; you do not know how to sort them out. In some particulars they are good, and in others they are bad, and the problem arises when you fix on one point of their personality as if it were the only point. For example, when Oscar Wilde wrote "De Profundis" in prison, he allowed one point of his personality to have way, viz., his sentimental intellectual interest in Jesus Christ, and the book was written from that point of view. He wrote sincerely, but he overlooked all the other points of his personality which contradicted that particular one, and when he came out of prison it was those other points that dominated. That is what we mean by "the muddle of men," and everyone who touches it, outside the Bible, instead of clearing it up makes it worse. The muddle is explained by one word: sin.

(c) The Mystery Man (2 Thessalonians 2:3-4)

The Bible reveals that the sin which muddles men and society is ultimately going to appear in an incarnation called the man of sin, or the Antichrist. The enthusiasm of humanity for itself in its present state simply means irrevocable disaster ultimately. Nowadays people talk about the whole human race being in the making, that our natural virtues are promises of what we are going to be; they take no account at all of sin. We have to remember that an enthusiasm for humanity which ignores the Bible is sure to end in disaster; enthusiasm for the community of saints means that God can take hold of the muddle and can re-make men, not simply in accordance with the Master man before the fall, but "conformed to the image of His Son" (Romans 8:29).

2. The Embarrassment of Humanity (Psalm 2:4-6)

(a) Bastard Solidarity (Genesis 6:5; Hebrews 12:8) Solidarity means consolidation and oneness of interest, the solidarity of the human race means that every member of the race has one point of interest with every other member. Notice how the whole of Scripture is knit together over this false solidarity of sin. It is quite possible for the human mind to blot God out of its thinking entirely, and to work along the line of the elements which are the same in every man, and to band the whole of the human race into a solid atheistic community. The only reason this has not been done up to the present is that the human race has been too much divided, but we shall find that these divisions are gradually resolving themselves. There are elements in human nature that are the same in everybody, and if once the human mind succeeded in obliterating God, the whole of the human race would become one vast phalanx of atheism.

(b) Babel of Souls (Genesis 11:1-9)

This is the first time solidarity was attempted, away in hoary antiquity. What encumbers and embarrasses humanity is an uncomfortable feeling that God is laughing at them all the time, and in the history of men up to the present time the hindrance to perfectly organised atheism has been the saints who represent the derision of God: if they were removed, we should find perfectly organised atheism.

(c) Body of Sin (Romans 6:6)

The body of sin is this tremendous possibility of solid atheism underlying humanity; the share of individual men and women in that body is called "the old man." Every time a man or woman by identification with Jesus enters into the experimental knowledge that his "old man" is crucified with Christ, the ultimate defeat and destruction of the body of sin becomes clearer. The body of sin is not in a man; what is in a man is "the old man," the carnal mind, which connects him with the body of sin. The Solidarity of sin forms the basis of the power of Satan, and it runs all through humanity, making it possible for the whole human race to be atheistic. Sin in its beginning is simply being without God. Paul's argument is that the purpose of "the old man" being crucified with Christ, is that the body of sin might be destroyed, i.e. that the connection with the body of sin might be severed. Everyone who becomes identified with the death of Jesus Christ aims another blow at Satan and at the great solidarity of sin. There are two mystical bodies—there is the mystical body of Christ, and the mystical body of sin which is anticipated in the man of sin. When a man begins to go wrong, he says, "I can't help it"; perfectly true. God's Book reveals the great oracle of evil, the tremendous power behind wrongdoing; it is a supernatural power antagonistic to God. We do not battle against flesh and blood but "against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." When a man is saved and sanctified, he is severed from the body of sin, and consequently all the powers of darkness backed by Satan make a dead set for that soul. The only thing that can keep a sanctified soul is the almighty power of God through Jesus Christ, but kept by that power he is perfectly safe. When once the saints are removed, the world will be faced with the menace of the solidarity of sin and atheism.

The question of the moment is: A God that serves Humanity, or a Humanity that serves God?

Forsyth¹²

When men depart from the Bible they call humanity "God" in differing terms; the use of the term "God" means nothing to them, God is simply the name given to the general tendencies which further men's interests. This spirit is honeycombing everything, we find it coming into the way we talk of Christian experience; there is creeping in the idea that God and Jesus Christ and the Holy Ghost are simply meant to bless us, to further our interests. When we come to the New Testament we find exactly the opposite idea, that by regeneration we are brought into such harmony and union with God that we realise with great joy that we are meant to serve His interests.

^{12.} Peter Taylor Forsyth (1848–1921): British Congregationalist minister and theologian. Chambers read many of Forsyth's books and valued his insights.

3. The Embroilment of Humanity (Psalm 2:7–9)

Embroilment means to involve in perplexity. It is the presence of the saints that upsets the calculations of Satan; and it is the presence of Jesus that involves not only Satan but humanity in all kinds of distractions. If men and Satan could only get rid of Jesus Christ, they would never be involved in perplexity, never be upset. Jesus put it very clearly: "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloke for their sin" (John 15:22). The greatest annoyance to Satan and to humanity is Jesus Christ. Twenty centuries ago the Apostle John wrote, "every spirit which confesseth not Jesus" (RV mg, "annulleth Jesus"—dissolves Jesus by analysis) "is not of God: and this is the spirit of the Antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it cometh" (1 John 4:3 RV). Watch the tendency abroad to-day; people want to get rid of Jesus Christ, they cannot prove that He did not live, or that He was not a remarkable Man; but they set to work to dissolve Him by analysis, to say He was not really God Incarnate. Jesus Christ always upsets the calculations of humanity; that is what made Voltaire say "Crucify the wretch, stamp Him and His crazy tale out," because He was the stumbling-block to all the reasonings of men. You cannot work Jesus Christ into any system of thinking. If you could keep Him out, everything could be explained. The world could be explained by evolution, but you cannot fit Jesus Christ into the theory of evolution. Jesus Christ is an annovance to Satan, a thorn in the side of the world at large, an absolute distress to sin in the individual. If we could crucify Him and stamp Him out, the annoyance would cease. In dealing with the carnal mind, Paul says it is "enmity against God."

(a) The Past Watchword—a religion that utilises humanity. The error in the past on the part of religious teachers has been to present God as a great sovereign power Who utilises humanity without rhyme or reason.

(b) The Present Watchword—a humanity that utilises God—is the opposite, viz., that God is a great aimless, loving tendency that humanity utilises to forgive itself, to cleanse itself, and to justify itself.

(c) The Persistent Word—a Christ that unites God and Man in love—through both the errors is this, the Lord Jesus Christ, Who can unite a holy God and an un-holy humanity by means of His wonderful Redemption. In this connection, Jesus Christ stands as the type of man, and the only type of man, who can come near to God. "Christ is for the central figure of a glorified humanity to develop by Christ's aid the innate spiritual resources of a splendid race." Jesus Christ is the One Who has the power to impart His own innate spiritual life, viz., Holy Spirit, to unholy men, and develop them until they are like Himself.

That is why the devil hates Jesus Christ, and why he tries to make men calculate without Him.

4. The Emancipation of Humanity (Psalm 2:10-12)

When any sinful man accepts morally the verdict of God on sin in the cross of Christ, he becomes emancipated. A moral decision is different from a mental decision, which may be largely sentiment. A moral decision means—"My God, I accept Thy verdict against sin on the cross of Jesus Christ, and I want the disposition of sin in me identified with His death"—immediately a man gets there, all that we understand by the Holy Ghost working in His tremendous power through the Redemption takes place, and the emancipation of humanity is furthered. "Christ is for the central figure of a glorious God, and Humanity's chief end is to develop from reconciliation, redemption, and subjection to God's will."

(a) The Second Man (2 Corinthians 5:17–18)

God emancipates the human race through this second Man, the Lord Jesus Christ. That is why Paul called Jesus Christ "the last Adam." If the first Adam is the key to the muddle of men, Jesus Christ, the last Adam, is the key to the emancipation of men. Jesus Christ stands for all that a man should be, and to the saints He stands for all that God is.

(b) Sanctified Men (Ephesians 2:1-10)

A sanctified man has not only had the disposition of sin crucified, but he is emancipated from his connection with the body of sin and is lifted to the heavenly places where Jesus lived when He was here. This marvellous revelation is summed up in 1 John 1:7, "But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." This is the enthusiasm for the communion of saints in contrast to the enthusiasm for humanity. It is by thinking along these lines that we are enabled to prove experimentally what we know in our minds; and we should live with far greater power if only we would let our pure minds be stirred up by way of remembrance (2 Peter 3:1). While we are on this earth, living in alien territory, it is a marvellous emancipation to know, that we are raised above it all through Jesus Christ, and that we have power over all the power of the enemy in and through Him.

(c) Supreme Mystery (Ephesians 5:32)

Around the saints is the great power of God which keeps watch and ward over them so that "that wicked one toucheth them not." What is true of saints individually is true of all saints collectively, viz., that the elements which under Satan make for the solidarity of atheism, make for the solidarity of holiness under

God. "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom," a tiny insignificant crowd in every age. Christianity has always been a forlorn hope because the saints are in alien territory; but it is all right, God is working out His tremendous purpose for the overthrow of everything Satan and sin can do. "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh." Everything that sin and Satan have ruined is going to be reconstructed and readjusted through the marvellous Redemption of our Lord Jesus Christ.

HARMONY

1. Health—Physical Harmony. Peace of Fact (Genesis 2:1–9, 15–17)

Harmony means a fitting together of parts so as to form a connected whole, agreement in relation. Health, or physical harmony, is God's plan from the very beginning. The first mention of any subject in the Book of Genesis colours every allusion to that subject throughout the Bible. Health (physical harmony), Happiness (moral harmony) and Holiness (spiritual harmony) are all divergent views as to what is the main aim of a man's life. Health, or physical harmony, is a perfect balance between our organism and the outer world.

(a) The Cult of the Splendid Animal (Psalm 147:10) There always have been and always will be people who worship splendid, well-groomed health. This verse reveals that God places health, or physical harmony, in a totally different relationship from that which it is put in by man. The modern name for the worship of physical health is Christian Science. The great error of the healthy-minded cult is that it ignores a man's moral and spiritual life.

(b) The Cult of the Sick Attitude (Psalm 39:6–11)

A great many people indulge in the luxury of misery; their one worship is of anguish, agony, weakness and sensitiveness to pain. The cult of the sick attitude is well established in human history by the fact that most of the great men and women whose personalities have marked the life of their time have been to some degree deranged physically. Amiel, a highly sensitive and cultured man, almost too morbid to exist, was a lifelong invalid, and he wrote thus in his Journal: "The first summonses of illness have a divine value, so that evils though they seem, they are really an appeal to us from on high, a touch of God's Fatherly scourge." The healthy-minded people do not agree with that attitude, and sick people are inclined to worship it. The attitude to sickness in the Bible is totally different from the attitude of people who believe in faith-healing. The Bible attitude is not that God sends sickness or that sickness is of the devil, but that sickness is a fact usable by both God and the devil. Never base a principle on your own experience. My personal experience is this: I have never once in my life been sick without being to blame for it. As soon as I turned my mind to asking why the sickness was allowed, I learned a lesson that I have never forgotten, viz., that my physical health depends absolutely on my relationship to God. Never pin your faith to a doctrine or to anyone else's statement, get hold of God's Book, and you will find that your spiritual character determines exactly how God deals with you personally. People continually get into fogs because they will not take God's line, they will take someone else's line. God's Book deals with facts. Health and sickness are facts, not fancies. There are cases recorded in the Bible, and in our own day, of people who have been marvellously healed, for what purpose? For us to imitate them? Never, but in order that we might discern what lies behind, viz., the individual relationship to a personal God. The peace arising from fact is unintelligent and dangerous, e.g. people who base on the fact of health are at peace, but it is often a peace which makes them callous. On the other hand, people who accept the fact of being sick are inclined to have a jaundiced eye for everything healthy. For a man to make health his god is to put himself merely at the head of the brute creation.

I am purposely leaving the subject vague and without an answer; there can be no answer. The great difficulty is that people find answers which they say came from God. You cannot prove facts; you have to swallow them. The fact of health and the fact of sickness are there; we have nothing to do with choosing them, they come and go. We have to get on to another platform, the moral platform, and then the spiritual platform, before we can begin to get an explanation of these facts.

2. Happiness—Moral Harmony. Peace of Principle

Happiness or moral harmony is a perfect balance between our inclination and our environment. The peace of principle keeps a man's moral nature in a state of harmony.

(a) Pride of Integrity (Luke 18:11)

Integrity means the unimpaired state of anything, and pride in the integrity of a man or woman's morality will produce happiness. They have no need of prayer, or if they do pray it is a soliloquy of peace before high heaven. The Pharisee in Our Lord's parable was happy; he was not praying to God, or that others might hear; he was praying "with himself"—"God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican." Look at him, then put your own name behind him and you have got his portrait exactly; you know where he lives and everything about him. Beware of calling this type of happiness self-righteousness; the phrase which gives the true meaning would be "happy satisfaction with my intellectual and moral conduct." That happiness is impregnable to God and to the devil; its true emblem is ice. If you want to find an analysis of every kind of moral and immoral character, the Bible is the place to look for it. This picture in Luke 18 is not the picture of a man of the world, but of a religious man. As Christians we have to beware of Pharisaic holiness along the line of sanctification.

(b) The Pain of Iniquity (Luke 18:13)

This is the stage when the peace of principle has broken down. "When Thou with rebukes doth correct man for iniquity, Thou makest his beauty to consume away like a moth" (Psalm 39:11). According to the steadily reiterated teachings of Jesus Christ, a man who is in moral harmony with himself without being rightly related to Jesus Christ, is much nearer the devil than a bad-living man.

Harmony, both physical and moral, is Godordained, i.e. it is God's will that a man's body with all its component parts should be in perfect harmony with themselves and with the outer world, and it is God's will that a man should be in moral harmony with himself and happy in that sense; and yet, as we have pointed out, the Bible reveals that a man can have physical health at the cost of his moral welfare, and happiness at the cost of spiritual welfare.

3. Holiness—Spiritual Harmony. Peace of God

Holiness, or spiritual harmony, is a perfect balance between our disposition and all the law of God. Never trust your temperament, i.e. your sensibility to things. When God makes a saint He plants a new disposition in him, but He does not alter his temperament; the saint has to mould his temperament according to the new disposition. Take your own experience, think of the time before you knew God, before God gave you the Holy Spirit, before you entered into the life of sanctification, your temperament and your sensibilities produced in you a horror for certain things which now you look at from a totally different attitude, and you begin to say, "Why, I must be getting callous!" Nothing of the sort, you have a new disposition with which your temperament is being brought into harmony, and that disposition being God-given is bringing you into sympathy with God's way of looking at things so that you are no longer the creature of your sensibilities. If you have begun to get discouraged over the difficulty of disciplining your sensibilities, don't be discouraged, get at it again. At the beginning we are apt to be tripped up by our sensibilities because they have not yet been brought into complete subjection to the Lord Jesus Christ. Remember, although Jesus Christ is on the throne, you are "prime minister" under Him.

(a) Untouched by Panic (Psalm 112:7)

Our Lord never suffered from physical or moral or intellectual panics, because He was fixed in God. "But Jesus did not commit Himself unto them, because He knew all men, . . . for He knew what was in man" (John 2:24–25). Look at your own experience and see how your sensibilities will run you into panics and try and make you believe a lie. It is through their sensibilities that Satan tries to get hold of the saints. God said to Satan about Job, "Behold, all that he hath is in thy hand [RV mg]; only upon himself put not forth thine hand" (Job 1:12). For our present argument may this not mean that Satan cannot touch the ruling disposition; but that if we are not on the watch at all the loopholes, he will get hold of the sensibilities and try to bring us into bondage? Whenever you feel bondage spiritually, smell brimstone, you are on a wrong tack. Panics are always wrong, there is nothing in them. What a blessing it is to know someone who never gets into a panic! someone you can always depend on. You go to them in a flurry, with fired and jangled nerves, brain like cotton-wool, heart panting like a butterfly nearly dead, and in two or three minutes everything is quietened. What has happened? The difference in you has come about because that one is paying no attention to his sensibilities but only to the one bed-rock reality of the life, viz., God. Holiness is untouched by panic. "In tumults," says Paul. What is a tumult? Watch a porridge-pot boiling, that is a tumult; to be inside that, undisturbed, means something, and that type of character is the only one that can stand as a worker for God in this world. A man or woman with that disposition in them can stand where Jesus Christ stood, because it is His own disposition that is in them, and that disposition cannot be upset, it cannot be made to take account of the evil. In the eyes of the world the way a saint trusts God is always absurd, until there is trouble on, then the world is inclined to kneel down and worship the saint.

(b) Undeterred by Persecution (Psalm 112:10)

God's Book reveals all through that holiness will bring persecution from those who are not holy. Our Lord taught His disciples to be conspicuous. "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill"; and He taught them never to hide the truth for fear of wolfish men (Matthew 10:16). Personal experience bears out the truth that a testimony to holiness produces either rage or ridicule on the part of those who are not holy. We are all cowards naturally; we are only not cowards when God has altered our disposition, because the disposition God puts in keeps us fixed in a right relationship to Himself. The one dominant note of the life of a saint is first of all sympathy with God and God's ideas, not with human beings. A twofold line runs all through God's Book, and especially in the Epistles of St. Paul, with regard to public preaching and teaching and dealing with people in private: Be as stern and unflinching as God Almighty in your preaching, but as tender and gentle as a sinner saved by grace should be when you deal with a human soul. To-day the order is being reversed and modern teaching is amazingly "easy-osy." Look at the standard of the preaching of to-day; sympathy with human beings is put first, not sympathy with God, and the truth of God is withheld. It must be withheld, it dare not be preached, because immediately the fullness of a personal salvation is preached—which means I must be right with God, must have a disposition which is in perfect harmony with God's laws and which will enable me to work them out, it produces conviction and resentment and upset. Jesus Christ taught His disciples never to keep back the truth of God for fear of persecution. When we come to dealing with our fellow-men, what is our attitude to be? Remember yourself, remember who you are, and that if you have attained to anything in the way of holiness, remember Who made you what you are. "But by the grace of God I am what I am," says the Apostle Paul (1 Corinthians 15:10). Deal with infinite pity and sympathy with other souls, keeping your eye on what you once were and what, by the grace of God, you are now.

In dealing with yourself be as patient as God is with you. Beware of the spiritual sulks which spring from thinking that because I, a two-year-old in sanctifying grace, am not as big and mature and strong as the twenty-year-old in grace, I can't be sanctified rightly! There is more danger there than most saints think. (See Hebrews 12:5–11.) The devil tries to make us think that when we have entered into the sanctified life, all is done; it is only begun. We have entered into Jesus Christ's finished work, but remember, says Paul, you have attained to nothing yet; everything is perfectly adjusted, now begin to attain and to "grow up into Him in all things."

These three things develop slowly together: first, the basis of spiritual holiness; second, the building of moral happiness; and third, the decoration of physical health. A full-grown man in Christ Jesus is one who has become exactly like Christ Jesus. "Till we all come . . . unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Ephesians 4:13).

Publication History

 As a book: Run Today's Race was first published in 1968.

Oswald Chambers firmly believed in the concept of "seed thoughts"—brief, pithy sayings designed to arrest attention and stimulate thinking. The entry for December 9 perhaps best expresses his conviction on how to affect a person's mind and behavior:

Our Lord was never impatient. He simply planted seed thoughts in the disciples' minds and surrounded them with the atmosphere of His own life. We get impatient and take men by the scruff of the neck and say: "You must believe this and that." You cannot make a man see moral truth by persuading his intellect. "When He, the Spirit of truth is come, He shall guide you into all truth." (RV)

At the Bible Training College, ¹ London, and at the Zeitoun² YMCA Camp in Egypt, Chambers always posted a daily thought on a centrally located notice board. The daily words ranged from a spiritual challenge to humor. After a deluge that left the Zeitoun camp flooded, the board outside Oswald's study hut read: "Closed during submarine manoeuvres!" The day before, the board had proclaimed: "Beware! there is a religious talk here each evening!"

While Mrs. Chambers was still in Egypt after her husband's death, she published the first Seed Thoughts Calendar, containing a brief thought from Oswald's teachings for each day of the year. The small, thin book fit easily into the breast pocket of a soldier's uniform. Other versions of the Seed Thoughts Calendar followed through the years.

In the two forewords included in this volume, Kathleen Chambers³ explains the origin of the 1968 edition, and in the second, she comments for the first time on the mental illness that clouded her mother's final years.

^{1.} Bible Training College (BTC): a residential school near Clapham Common in southwest London. Sponsored by the League of Prayer; operated from 1911 until it closed in July 1915 because of World War I. Oswald Chambers was principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers, his wife, was lady superintendent.

^{2.} Zeitoun (zay TOON), Egypt: six miles northeast of Cairo; site of a YMCA camp, the Egypt General Mission compound, and, from 1916 to 1919, the Imperial School of Instruction, training base for British, Australian, and New Zealand troops during World War I.

FOREWORD (TO THE FIRST EDITION—1968)

There's a harvest in a grain of wheat If given to God in simple trust For though the grain doth turn to dust It cannot die! It lives; it must For the power of God is behind it.

Anon.

Seed Thoughts Calendar was the name given to a small book first printed in 1918 in Egypt. That publication contained short sentences from my father's messages to the soldiers camped in the desert⁴ outside Cairo.

For over twenty years it has not been reprinted. Now a similar selection appears under a new title. My mother felt, very strongly, that a new series should be prepared and in 1961 she collected and typed the first three months of these new Seed Thoughts and I have completed the work.

May God bless all those who read this book and may these thoughts live because "the power of God is behind them."

FOREWORD TO THE REPRINTED EDITION (1997)

There's a harvest in a grain of wheat If given to God in simple trust For though the grain doth turn to dust It cannot die! It lives; it must For the power of God is behind it.

Anon.

Seed Thoughts Calendar was the name given to a small book first printed in 1918 in Egypt. That publication contained short sentences from my father's messages to the soldiers camped in the desert outside Cairo. My mother wanted a similar small book to be printed.

Towards the end of my mother's life, God allowed her to become very ill with a mental illness (not senility) and her mind became clouded and tormented. She received treatment and became restored for nearly a year, before the illness returned to stay until she went into God's presence. During the time my mother's mind was freed, she typed the first three months of a Seed Thoughts Calendar. After she died, I looked up the other nine months' quotations and this book was then printed under the title Run Today's Race. It's wonderful to know that Almighty God held my mother safe in the centre of His will and His purposes were not thwarted.

May God bless all those who read this book and may these thoughts live because "the power of God is behind them."

January

- 1 God is so immediately near and so immensely strong that I get more and more joyous in my confidence in Him and less and less careful how I feel.
- 2 The very life of Jesus is given to us unstintedly if we will identify ourselves with His Death. At the back of us stands the Risen Life of Jesus that nothing can overcome.
- 3 The Spirit of God alters my dominating desires; He alters the thing that matters, and a universe of desires I had never known before, suddenly comes on the horizon.
- 4 It is a great moment when we realise we have the power to trample on certain moods, a tremendous emancipation to get rid of every kind of self-consciousness and heed one thing only: the relationship between God and myself.
- 5 Faith for my deliverance is not faith in God. Faith means, whether I am visibly delivered or not, I will stick to my belief that God is love. There are some things only learned in a fiery furnace.
- 6 It is easy to turn our religious life into a cathedral for beautiful memories, but there are feet to be washed, hard flints to be walked over, people to be fed. Very few of us go there, but that is the way the Son of God went.
- 7 Believe what you saw when you were in the light, and when you are in the ploughed field and God's moral seasons are going over you—the remainder of the cold, hard winter, the beginnings of the strange, painful stirrings of spring—keep abandoned to Him. He knows the seasons to bring to your soul as He does in the natural world.
- 8 The tendency is strong to say—"O God won't be so stern as to expect me to give up that!" but He will; "He won't expect me to walk in the light so that I have nothing to hide," but He will; "He won't expect me to draw on His grace for everything" but He will.
- 9 God narrows our "shan'ts" to one explosive point. I don't need to go that way, but God will have to bring me there if I persist in the little disobediences which no one knows but myself, because it is engendering in me a spirit God cannot allow.
- 10 The Christian life is the simplest, the gayest, the most regardless-of-consequences life, lived as it is taught by Jesus. The plan of our life comes through the haphazard moments, but behind it is the order of God.

- 11 Prayer with most of us is turned into pious platitude, it is a matter of emotion, mystical communion with God. It is no use praying unless we are living as children of God. Then Jesus says—"Every one that asketh receiveth."
- 12 Humility is the one stamp of a saint. Beware of the complacency of superiority when God's grace has done anything for you.
- 13 When you are brought face to face with something in God's word, watch your circumstances: the tyranny of things will either imperil your faith or increase it.
- 14 God has to rebuke us for our flippant, unthinking familiarity with Jesus Christ; we have forgotten Who He is.
- 15 Beware of the storms of spiritual misgiving. The security of the saint's life is his relationship to Jesus and obedience to His Word.
- 16 It is easy to trust in God when we have not to hunt for money, but immediately the penny that is not there looms large, we allow the mosquito of worry to irritate our whole life away from rest in God.
- 17 If you are a saint God will continually upset your programme, and if you are wedded to your programme you will become that most obnoxious creature under heaven, an irritable saint.
- 18 The Apostle James will have nothing to do with pious talk that is not backed by the life. Pious words without works are so much wind.
- 19 Reserve gives us an air of aloofness, and though it may start with being outward only, it will slowly and surely eat its way into the heart and result in a base form of self-centredness.
- 20 A sense of possession is sufficient to render us spiritually dense. Watch the havoc the winds of God play with possessions.
- 21 There is never any risk in love that is "talked." If love is reticent it becomes a secret treasure that enervates. Keep it in the open, have nothing hidden to brood over.
- 22 The resentment of discipline of any kind will warp the whole life away from God's purpose.
- 23 God always answers the stumbling questions which arise out of personal problems. We bristle with interrogation points, but we don't wait for the answer because we do not intend to listen to it.
- 24 When God puts His Spirit within us, we can say—"even now" it is as black as night, but I will not accept a slander against Jesus Christ.

- 25 "That we may know what is the hope of His calling"—have I allowed my mind to get stagnant about Jesus Christ's hope and taken another aim for my life? Sooner or later we must come, either with a sense of havoc or a sense of rejoicing, to Jesus Christ's standard for us.
- 26 Peter couples suffering "according to the will of God" with active well-doing (1 Peter 4:19). The folk who are most actively beneficent to you are those who are being crushed with suffering that would send you staggering.
- 27 "Until Christ be formed in you"—that brings me to the margin of my responsibility. Am I allowing Him to manifest Himself, or am I saying: "I shall not submit to that." Then the blow will fall on the Son of God.
- 28 The one great enemy of discipleship is obstinacy, spiritual obstinacy. We deify independence and wilfulness and call them by the wrong name.
- 29 When we lie like fallow ground, God puts in new seeds and the harvest is the ripe fruit of God; otherwise it is ripe fruit of naturalness only. Lying fallow is always the secret of spiritual growth.
- 30 When by God's grace you become possessed of a new disposition, your nerves which have been used to obeying the wrong disposition are sure to say "I can't" and you must say "You must," and to your amazement you find you can.
- 31 Let me plead with you, as though Christ besought you, do not be disobedient to the heavenly vision. There is only one purpose for your life, and that is the satisfaction of the Lord Jesus Christ.

February

- 1 Interest is natural, attention must be by effort. One of the great needs of the Christian life is to have a place where we deliberately attend to realities. That is the real meaning of prayer.
- 2 Christianity makes no allowance for heroic moods. It is easy to feel heroic in an armchair, when everything goes well, but Christianity deals with God's standard in the common days when you are out of your armchair, and when things are not going well.
- What we call crises, God ignores, and what God reveals as the great critical moments of a man's life we look on as humdrum commonplaces. When we become spiritual we discern that God was in the humdrum commonplace and we never knew it.

- 4 Revise in your mind silences in prayer, in praise, or for the Truth, when you were so greedy for your own sensitiveness that you would not speak the word which might have saved a soul from a terrible blunder.
- 5 Pride, disdain for the people you talk to, will shut your mouth quicker than anything. When you speak, see that behind your voice is the life of God.
- 6 Fearless devotion to Jesus Christ ought to mark the saint today, but more often it is devotion to our set that marks us. We are more concerned about being in agreement with Christians than about being in agreement with God.
- 7 You will find nothing more searching than what the New Testament has to say with regard to the miserable, petty line of insisting on my rights. The Holy Ghost gives me power to forgo my rights.
- 8 Always beware of vowing, it is a risky thing. If you promise to do a thing and don't do it, it means the weakening of your moral nature. We are all so glib in the way we promise and don't perform and never realise that it is sapping our moral energy.
- 9 How often we have faced difficulties that never came, and every time we faced them we unfitted ourselves for the duty that lay before us. I have no business to be thinking about something else, my duty is always the duty that lies nearest.
- 10 If you have a passion for souls is it because your salvation has made such a practical change in you that you would part with your right hand to get every man there too?
- 11 We would never know that our spirit was wrong unless Jesus rebuked it, because it is so emphatically right according to our reason (Luke 9:55). The one thing to mark is the effect on our conscience—does my spirit bear the mark of native self-assertiveness or of disciplined self-conquest?
- 12 The reason there is so much going off on side issues is because of spiritual insubordination that refuses to wed itself to Jesus Christ and His Word.
- 13 It is possible for practical Christian work to be active disobedience to God. We would rather work for God than sit for one moment before Him and let the Spirit riddle us through with His light.
- 14 The cross of discipleship is that I daily and hourly delight to tell my human nature that I - am not my own, I no longer claim my right to myself.

- 15 Insist on taking the initiative for God in every place you are in. As a worker, always determine to give God "the first foot."
- 16 "Trust in the LORD with all thine heart." It is this state of mind and heart which is absolutely free to do the duty that lies nearest without any flutter.
- 17 You will always know whether you believe in God personally by your impertinent insistence on being an amateur providence for someone else.
- 18 To be continually worrying—"Does God want me to say this or do that?" is to be in an infirm condition. There is no light of the knowledge of the glory of God in that, it means I am a self-conscious spiritual prig.
- 19 Watch spiritual hardness, if ever you have the tiniest trace of it, haul up everything else till you get back your softness to the Spirit of God.
- 20 Never let common sense obtrude and push the Son of God on one side. Common sense is a gift which God gave to human nature; but it is not the gift of His Son; never enthrone common sense. The Son detects the Father; common sense never yet detected the Father and never will.
- 21 God's providences come to you unawares and they produce flurry or faith. If they produce flurry there is no nourishment in God's Word. The tiniest touch of the wing of God's providential angel is enough to keep you from concentration on God, and the Bible is of no practical use.
- 22 Men do wrong things because they have no dominant interest, once a crisis comes, the vacuity is gone.
- 23 There was nothing secular in our Lord's life and in the saint the sacred and the secular must be all His, the one must express the other. If I have to turn consciously from the shallow to the profound, there is something radically wrong, not in the shallow, but in the profound.
- 24 It takes a long time to realise that God has no respect for anything I bring Him; all He wants from me is unconditional surrender.
- 25 There is nothing that detects spiritual rottenness so unerringly as to ask not with the lips, but with the will. "Ye shall ask what ye will" said Jesus.
- 26 The great characteristic of the supernatural grace of God in a life is put by Jesus on the line of forgiveness. Forgiveness is the supernatural manifestation of a miracle in you and me.

- 27 The secret of our inefficiency for God is that we do not believe what He tells us about prayer. Prayer is not rational but Redemptive. Little books of prayer are full of "buts." The New Testament says that God will answer prayer every time. The point is not—"will you believe?" but "will I, who know Jesus Christ, believe on your behalf?" (see 1 John 5:14–16).
- 28 A man is never the same after he has seen Jesus Christ. We are to be judged by our immortal moments.
- 29 In every place you are in, insist on taking the initiative for God. Every time you pray your horizon is altered, your disposition and relationship to things is altered, and you wonder why it is you don't pray more.

March

- 1 Grousing destroys generosity like a moth does a garment, slowly but completely.
- 2 If there is the tiniest grudge in your mind against any one, from that second, your spiritual penetration into the knowledge of God stops.
- 3 "I have chosen you." Keep that note of greatness in your creed. It is not that you have got God, but that He has got you. Why is God at work in me, bending, breaking, moulding, doing just as He chooses?—for one purpose only—that He may be able to say, "This is My man, My woman."
- 4 Humility is not an ideal, it is the unconscious result of the life being rightly related to God.
- We get the idea that the best thing to do is to hurry over our work in order to get a time alone with God, and when we do get it along that line it is mildewed, not fresh and vigorous, and we feel dissatisfied instead of refreshed. Then sometimes in the midst of our work there suddenly springs up a wonderful well of inner contemplation, which is so full of recreation that we thank God for it, and we don't know how it came.
- 6 The only simplicity there is, is a simplicity of life which is true to Jesus, not to a theory about Him (2 Corinthians 11:3). You can't tie yourself up in anything logically consistent.
- If you cannot express yourself on any subject, struggle till you can. You must struggle to get expression experimentally, then there will come a time when that expression will become the very wine of strengthening to someone else. Try to re-state to yourself what you implicitly feel to be God's truth, and you give God a chance to pass it on to someone else through you.

- 8 Quiet trust in God is the state of mind and heart that is fittest to do the duty that lies nearest without any fluster.
- 9 We have judged our fellow men as sinners. If God should judge us like that we would be in hell. God judges us through the marvellous Atonement of Jesus Christ.
- 10 A God who did not know the last depth of sorrow and suffering would be a God "whom to be God is not fit."
- 11 You can never make yourself holy by external acts, but, if you are holy, your external acts will be the natural expression of holiness.
- 12 Don't waste time asking God to keep you from doing things—don't do them!
- 13 God delights to put me in a place where He can make me wealthy. Follow Me, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven.
- 14 It is easy to get lost in mists when we talk about the will of God, but if we don't know what it is, we are to blame.
- 15 The more complicated the actual conditions are, the more delightfully joyful it is to see God open up His way through.
- 16 When we lean to our own understanding we do away with prayer and bank all on service. Consequently by succeeding in the external we fail in the eternal. In the eternal we succeed only by prevailing prayer.
- 17 The world, the flesh and the devil will put imaginary grief in your way just when Jesus Christ is wanting you to enter into fellowship with His sufferings.
- 18 There are not three stages in spiritual life—worship, waiting and work. Some of us go in jumps like spiritual frogs, we jump from worship to waiting, and from waiting to work. God's idea is that the three should go together. They were always together in the life of our Lord.
- 19 God grant we may get to the place where discouragement is as impossible to us as it was to the Lord Jesus. The one dominant note of His life was the doing of His Father's will.
- 20 When we receive the Holy Ghost He turns us into passionate followers of Jesus Christ. Then out of our lives will flow those rivers of living water that heal and bless, and we spend and suffer and endure in patience all because of One, and One only.

- 21 When we try to reserve our strength it works out in weariness. Spend to the hilt all we have got and God's recreating power is greater than all the expended power.
- 22 "It is good that man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the LORD"—quietly wait, submit to the yoke, sit silent. All these are characteristics the world ridicules. There is nothing that so quickly reveals whether we are one with Jesus as derision. If we are not one with Him, we always want to explain ourselves.
- 23 Beware every time you notice yourself doing a good thing, because you ruin it by the notice (Matthew 6:2).
- 24 Our notion of sacrifice is the wringing out of us something we don't want to give up, full of pain and agony and distress. The Bible idea of sacrifice is that I give as a love-gift the very best thing I have.
- 25 Unless in the first waking moment of the day you learn to fling the door wide back and let God in, you will work on a wrong level all day; but swing the door wide open and pray to your Father in secret, and every public thing will be stamped with the presence of God.
- 26 God comes in where my helplessness begins, that is the bedrock of entering the kingdom of heaven. "Blessed are the poor in spirit."
- 27 God cannot trust us with His unsearchable riches if we are not faithful in the least things. "The cares of this world" will make us put the least things as the most important.
- 28 Never blink facts because they don't agree with your theory.
- 29 "Why not rather be defrauded?" asks Paul. Who can be defrauded better than a Christian? Yet we take our standards from the world and insist on our rights.
- 30 "They feared as they entered the cloud." Is there anyone "save Jesus only" in your cloud? If so, it will get darker; you must get into the place where there is "no one save Jesus only."
- 31 "And He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief." If we really believed that God meant what He said—what should we be like? Dare I really let God be to me all that He says He will be?

April

- 1 My personal life may be crowded with small, petty incidents altogether unnoticeable and mean, but if I obey Jesus Christ in the haphazard circumstances, they become pinholes through which I see the face of God and when I stand face to face with God I shall discover that through my obedience thousands were blessed.
- 2 To be shallow is not a sign of being wicked, nor is shallowness a sign that there are no depths; the ocean has a shore. The shallow amenities of life, eating, drinking, walking, talking are all ordained by God. These are the things in which our Lord lived. He lived in them as the Son of God, and He said that "the disciple is not above his Master."
- 3 Shut out every other consideration and keep yourself before God for this one thing only— "My Utmost for His Highest." I am determined to be absolutely and entirely for Him and for Him alone.
- Whenever God's will is in the ascendant all compulsion is gone. When we choose deliberately to obey Him, then with all His almighty power He will tax the remotest star and the last grain of sand to assist us.
- 5 Identification with the death of Jesus Christ means identification with Him to the death of everything that never was in Him.
- 6 Intercession leaves you neither time nor inclination to pray for your own "sad sweet self." The thought of yourself is not kept out because it is not there to keep out, you are completely and entirely identified with God's interest in other lives.
- 7 Belief must be the will to believe. There must be a surrender of the will, not a surrender to a persuasive power, but a deliberate launching forth on God, and on what He says, until I am no longer confident in what I have done, I am confident only in God. The hindrance is that I will not trust God, but only my mental understanding.
- 8 Notion your mind with the idea that God is there. Nothing happens in any particular unless God's will is behind it, therefore you can rest in perfect confidence in Him.
- 9 "If God so clothe the grass of the field . . . how much more . . ." Jesus says that if we obey the life God has given us, He will look after all the other things. Has Jesus Christ told us a lie? If we are not experiencing the "much more" it is because we are not obeying the life God has given us; we are taken up with confusing considerations.

- 10 All I do ought to be founded on a perfect oneness with Him, not a self-willed determination to be godly. The God of Israel is He that giveth strength and power to His people.
- 11 There are certain tempers of mind in which we never dare indulge. If we find they have distracted us from faith in God, then until we get back to the quiet mood before God, our faith in Him is nil, and our confidence in the flesh and human ingenuity is the thing that rules.
- 12 Whenever the insistence is on the point that God answers prayer, we are off the track. The meaning of prayer is that we get hold of God, not of the answer.
- 13 One of the most amazing revelations of God comes when we learn that it is in the commonplace things that the Deity of Jesus Christ is realised.
- 14 Sanctification means intense concentration on God's point of view. It means every power of body, soul and spirit chained and kept for God's purpose only.
- 15 Remember whose you are and whom you serve. Provoke yourself by recollection and your affection for God will increase tenfold, your imagination will not be starved any longer, but will be quick and enthusiastic, and your hope will be inexpressibly bright.
- 16 As long as there is a human being who does not know Jesus Christ, I am his debtor until he does. The mainspring of Paul's service is not love for men but love for Jesus Christ.
- 17 We impoverish God's ministry to us the moment we forget He is Almighty; the impoverishment is in us, not in Him. We will come to Jesus as Comforter or as Sympathiser, but we will not come to Him as Almighty.
- 18 Undaunted radiance is not built on anything passing, but on the love of God that nothing can alter. The experiences of life, terrible or monotonous, are impotent to touch "the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."
- 19 I claim the fulfilment of God's promises, and rightly, but that is only the human side; the Divine side is God's claim on me, which I recognise through the promises.
- 20 There is never any fear for the life that is "hid with Christ in God," but there is not only fear, but terrible danger, for the life unguarded by God. He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High"—once there, and although God's

- providence should take you to hell itself, you are as safe and secure as Almighty God can make you.
- 21 We must realise the frontiers of death, that there is no more chance of our entering the life of God than a mineral has of entering the vegetable kingdom, we can only enter into the Kingdom of God if God will stoop down and lift us up. That is exactly what Jesus Christ promises to do.
- 22 The miracle of the grace of God is that He can make the past as though it had never been, He can "restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpiller, and the palmerworm" (Joel 2:25).
- 23 As long as the devil can keep us terrified of thinking, he will always limit the work of God in our souls.
- 24 Never run away with the idea that it doesn't matter much what we believe or think; it does. What we believe and think, we are; not what we say we believe and think, but what we really do believe and think, we are; there is no divorce at all.
- 25 Don't be disturbed today by thoughts about tomorrow; leave tomorrow alone, and bank in confidence on God's organising of what you do not see.
- 26 God and love are synonymous. Love is not an attribute of God, it is God. Whatever God is, love is. If your conception of love does not agree with justice and judgement, purity and holiness, then your idea of love is wrong.
- 27 The springs of love are in God, that means they cannot be found anywhere else. It is absurd for us to try and find the love of God in our hearts naturally, it is not there any more than the life of Jesus Christ is there. Love and life are in God and in Jesus Christ and in the Holy Spirit whom God gives us, not because we merit Him, but according to His own particular graciousness.
- 28 Just as the disposition of sin entered into the human race by one man, so the Holy Spirit entered the race by another Man, and Redemption means that I can be delivered from the heredity of sin, and through Jesus Christ can receive an unsullied heredity, viz.; the Holy Spirit.
- 29 Obedience to Jesus Christ is essential, but never compulsory. In the early stages we have the notion that the Christian life is one of freedom, and so it is, but freedom for one thing only—freedom to obey our Master.
- 30 Faith is more than an attitude of mind, faith is the complete, passionate, earnest trust of our whole nature in the Gospel of God's grace as it is presented in the Life and Death and Resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ.

May

- 1 Faith is not intelligent understanding; faith is deliberate commitment to a Person where I see no way.
- You can never measure what God will do through you if you are rightly related to Jesus Christ.
- 3 My worth to God in public is what I am in private. Is my master ambition to please Him and be acceptable to Him, or is it something else, no matter how noble?
- 4 "If we walk in the light as He is in the light." Walking in the light means walking according to His standard, which is now ours.
- 5 God never gives strength for tomorrow, or for the next hour, but only for the strain of the moment. . . . The saint is hilarious when he is crushed with difficulties because the thing is so ludicrously impossible to anyone but God.
- 6 For those who have no engineered place of holiday, God Himself becomes the mountain calm and the limitless sea spaces. By prayer and Bible reading and meditation, the drab life (drab externally) has glorious holiday hours with God in which the soul is restored even in the valley of deep darkness.
- 7 The stronghold of the Christian faith is the joy of God, not my joy in God. . . . God reigns and rules and rejoices, and His joy is our strength.
- 8 When we say "Thy will be done," do we say it with a sigh? If so, we have never realised that the character of God is holy love; nothing can ever happen outside His purposeful will.
- 9 Everything that Satan and sin have marred, God holds in an unimpaired state for every son of man who will come to Him by the way back which Jesus Christ has made (Romans 16:20).
- 10 Remember, whatever happens, God is there.
 - ... You never get at God by blinking facts, but only by naming Him in the facts; whether they are devilish or not, say, "Lord, I thank Thee that Thou are here."
- 11 I have no right to say that I believe in forgiveness as an attribute of God if in my own heart I cherish an unforgiving temper. The forgiveness of God is the test by which I myself am judged.

- 12 How many of us get into a panic when we are faced by physical desolation, by death, or war, injustice, poverty, disease? All these in all their force will never turn to panic the one who believes in the absolute sovereignty of his Lord.
- 13 There are saints who are being rattled out of holiness by fussy work for God, whereas one five minutes of brooding on God's truth would do more good than all their work and fuss.
- 14 Everything the devil does, God over-reaches to serve His own purpose.
- 15 Naturally, a man regards his right to himself as the finest thing he has, yet it is the last bridge that prevents Jesus Christ having His way in that life.
- 16 Christianity is not service for Jesus Christ, not winning souls; it is nothing less than the life of Jesus being manifested more and more in my mortal flesh.
- 17 The very powers of darkness are paralysed by prayer. No wonder Satan tries to keep our minds fussy in active work till we cannot think to pray.
- 18 Beware of making God's truth simpler than He has made it Himself.
- 19 Don't shut up any avenue of your nature, let God come into every avenue, every relationship, and you will find the nightmare curse of "secular and sacred" will go.
- 20 If we have faith at all it must be faith in Almighty God; when He has said a thing, He will perform it; we have to remain steadfastly obedient to Him.
- 21 There are disasters to be faced by the one who is in real fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ. God has never promised to keep us immune from trouble; He says "I will be with him in trouble," which is a very different thing.
- 22 A self indwelt by Jesus becomes like Him. "Walk in love, even as Christ also loved you." Jesus has loved me to the end of all my meanness and self-ishness and sin; now, He says, show that same love to others.
- 23 "Why does God bring thunderclouds and disasters when we want green pastures and still waters?" Bit by bit we find, behind the clouds, the Father's feet; behind the lightning, an abiding day that has no night; behind the thunder, "a still small voice" that comforts with a comfort that is unspeakable.
- 24 Anywhere the man who is devoted to Jesus Christ goes, Jesus Christ is there with him.

- 25 Through the Redemption, God undertakes to deal with a man's past, and He does it in two ways: by forgiving him, and by making the past a wonderful culture for the future.
- 26 The thing that preserves a man from panic is his relationship to God; if he is only related to himself and to his own courage, there may come a moment when his courage gives out.
- 27 Christianity means staking ourselves on the honour of Jesus; His honour means that He will see us through time, death and eternity.
- 28 The great need is not to do things, but to believe things. The Redemption of Christ is not an experience, it is the great act of God which He has performed through Christ, and I have to build my faith upon it.
- 29 One man or woman called of God is worth a hundred who have elected to work for God.
- 30 Beware of interpreting Scripture in order to make it suit a pre-arranged doctrine of your own.
- 31 Bible facts are either revelation facts or nonsense. It depends on me which they are to me.

June

- 1 We must strenuously cast our ways and our burdens on Him and wait for Him in all haphazard and topsy-turvy moments.
- 2 The more complete our sense of need, the more satisfactory is our dependence on God.
- 3 Beware of paddling in the ocean of God's truth, when you should be out in it, swimming.
- 4 The Holy Ghost destroys my personal private life and turns it into a thoroughfare for God.
- 5 Be carefully careless about everything saving your relationship to God. Refuse to be swamped by the cares of this life.
- 6 Whenever there is the tiniest element of doubt, quit. Never say: "Why shouldn't I? There's no harm in it."
- 7 The pure man or woman, not the innocent, is the safeguarded man or woman. God demands that they be pure and virtuous. Innocence is the characteristic of a child, it is a blameworthy thing for a man or woman not to be reconciled to the fact of sin.
- 8 It is never "Do, do" with the Lord, but "Be, be" and He will "do" through you.

- 9 On the top of those very billows, which look as if they would overwhelm us, walks the Son of God.
- 10 The New Testament view of a Christian is that he is one in whom the Son of God has been revealed, and prayer deals with the nourishment of that life.
- 11 Prayer is not a question of altering things externally, but of working wonders in a man's disposition. When you pray, things remain the same, but you begin to be different.
- 12 In order to be able to wield the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, we must obey, and it takes a courageous heart to obey.
- 13 The habit of ejaculatory prayer ought to be the persistent habit of each one of us.
- 14 We have to form the mind of Christ until we are absorbed with Him and take no account of the evil done to us. No love on earth can do this but only the love of God.
- 15 Unbelief is the most active thing on earth; it is a fretful, worrying, questioning, annoying, self-centred spirit. To believe is to stop all this and let God work.
- 16 If God is first, you know you can never think of anything He will forget.
- 17 Our Lord is not the great Teacher of the world, He is the Saviour of the world and the Teacher of those who believe in Him, which is a radically different matter.
- 18 The suffering which springs from being "a meddler in other men's matters" (a busy-body) is humiliating to the last degree. A free translation of 1 Thessalonians 4:11 might well read, "Study to shut up and mind your own business" and among all the texts we hang on our wall let this be one.
- 19 God continually introduces us to people for whom we have no affinity, and unless we are worshipping God, the most natural thing to do is to treat them heartlessly, to give them a text like the jab of a spear, or leave them with a rapped-out counsel of God and go. A heartless Christian must be a terrible grief to God.
- 20 Let memory have its way. It is a minister of God with its rebuke and chastisement and sorrow. God will turn the "might have been" into a wonderful culture for the future.
- 21 "If we walk in the light" God will give us communion with people for whom we have no natural affinity.

- 22 "For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ." We are enwheeled with the odour of Jesus, and wherever we go we are a wonderful refreshment to God.
- 23 Jesus did not say "dream about your Father in secret," but "pray to thy Father in secret." Prayer is an effort of will. After we have entered our secret place and have shut the door, the most difficult thing to do is to pray. The great battle in private prayer is the overcoming of mental woolgathering.
- Are we detached enough from our own spiritual hysterics to wait on God? To wait is not to sit with folded hands, but to learn to do what we are told. These are phases of His ways we rarely recognise.
- 25 God has loved me to the end of all my sinfulness, of all my self-will, all my stiff-neckedness, all my pride, all my self-interest; now He says—"love one another, as I have loved you." I am to show to my fellow men the same love that God showed me. That is Christianity in practical working order.
- 26 The Bible talks plentifully about joy, but it nowhere talks about a "happy Christian." Happiness depends on what happens; joy does not. Remember, Jesus Christ had joy, and He prays "that they might have My joy fulfilled in themselves."
- 27 The Bible characters fell on their strong points, never on their weak ones. "Kept by the power of God"—that is the only safeguard.
- 28 God engineers everything; wherever He puts us, our one great aim is to pour out a whole-hearted devotion to Him in that particular work. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."
- 29 Jesus said, "Go . . . and make disciples" (RV), not converts to your opinions.
- 30 If you want to be of use to God, get rightly related to Jesus Christ and He will make you of use unconsciously every minute you live.

July

- I have no right to ask God for miracles when my next duty stands neglected.
- 2 "I will give you rest"—not a reasonable explanation, but the staying power of knowing that I am unperplexed.
- 3 It requires the Almighty grace of God to take the next step when there is no vision and no spectator.

- 4 Don't let the sense of failure corrupt your new action.
- 5 God's order comes in the haphazard, and never according to our scheming and planning. God takes a great delight in breaking up our programmes.
- Zeal to serve God may be, and very often is, an insistence on God's proving that I am right.
- 7 God's permissive will is the means whereby His sons and daughters are to be manifested. We are not to be like jelly-fish saying—"It's the Lord's will." We have not to put up a fight before God, not to wrestle with God, but to wrestle before God with things.
- 8 God holds us responsible for what we won't look at. We are nowhere judged by the light we have, but by the light we have refused (John 3:19).
- 9 If God has made your cup sweet, drink it with grace; if He has made it bitter, drink it in communion with Him.
- 10 When I only do what God wants me to do, He will recuperate me all the time. Watch the things that exhaust you.
- 11 Wherever you make the Most High your habitation, just there you will have victory.
- 12 Prayer imparts the power to walk and not faint.
- 13 Satan has no power to dispossess God of me.
- 14 We must distinguish between the burden-bearing that is right and the burden-bearing that is wrong. We ought never to bear the burden of sin or doubt, but there are burdens placed on us by God which He does not intend to lift off. He wants us to roll them back on Him. "Cast what He hath given thee [mg] upon the LORD" (Psalm 55:22 RV).
- 15 The basis of panic is always cowardice. The clearest evidence that God's grace is at work in our hearts is that we do not get into panics.
- 16 To bridle the tongue does not mean to hold your tongue, that might mean "If I speak, I would say something!" It means to have the tongue under the control of a disciplined heart; that tongue need never apologise.
- 17 Nothing that happens can upset God or the almighty reality of Redemption.
- 18 The new life will manifest itself in conscious repentance and unconscious holiness, never the other way about. The bedrock of Christianity is

- repentance. If ever you cease to know the virtue of repentance, you are in darkness.
- 19 The best is always yet to be with God. Everything you have ever dreamed or longed for, will be.
- 20 Lack of hospitality and disbelief in holiness go together. God's Home is so sacred that He gave His only begotten Son to make it hospitable to us.
- 21 It is one thing to go through a crisis grandly, and another thing to go through every day glorifying God when nobody is paying any attention to you.
- 22 Be simply and directly and unmistakably His today.
- 23 Looking for opportunities to serve God is an impertinence; every time and all the time is our opportunity of serving God.
- 24 Never misunderstand the shadow of God's Hand; when He leaves you alone it is assuredly to lead you into the inner meaning of Philippians 3:10.
- 25 When I want to debate about doing what I know to be supremely right I am not in touch with God.
- 26 If you once allow the victory of a wrong thing in you, it is a long way back again to get readjusted.
- 27 The centre of salvation is the Cross, and why it is so easy to be saved is because it cost God so much.
- 28 Beware of the pious fraud in you which says—
 "I have no misgivings about Jesus, only about myself." No one ever had misgivings about himself!
- 29 Measure your growth in grace by your sensitiveness to sin.
- 30 Don't put things down to the devil, but to your own undisciplined nervous system.
- 31 God never answers prayer to prove His own might.

August

In our own spiritual experience some terror comes down the road to meet us and our hearts are seized with a tremendous fear; then we hear our own name called, and the voice of Jesus saying, "It is I; be not afraid," and the peace of God which passeth all understanding takes possession of our hearts.

- 2 Jesus Christ has destroyed the dominion of death, and He can make us fit to face every problem of life, more than conqueror all along the line.
- 3 Jesus Christ can make the weakest man into a Divine dreadnought, fearing nothing. He can plant within him the life that Time cannot touch.
- 4 Never be deluded into making this statement: "I am here because I am so useful," say rather "I am here because God wants me here." The one lodestar of the saint is God Himself, not estimated usefulness.
- 5 Thank God for His safeguarding, for His salvation which keeps us, waking and sleeping, conscious and unconscious, in danger and out of it.
- 6 The love of God in Christ Jesus is such that He can take the most unfit man—unfit to survive, unfit to fight, unfit to face moral issues—and make him not only fit to survive and to fight, but fit to face the biggest moral issues and the strongest power of Satan, and come off more than conqueror.
- 7 The devil is a bully, but when we stand in the armour of God, he cannot harm us; if we tackle him in our own strength we are soon done for; but if we stand with the strength and courage of God, he cannot gain one inch of way at all.
- 8 One strong moral man will form a nucleus around which others will gather; and spiritually, if we put on the armour of God and stand true to Him, a whole army of weak-kneed Christians will be strengthened.
- 9 We have to love where we cannot respect and where we must not respect, and this can only be done on the basis of God's love for us. "This is My commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you."
- 10 The self-expenditure of the love of God exhibited in the life and death of our Lord becomes a bridge over the gulf of sin; human love can be imbued by Divine love, the love that never fails.
- 11 Whenever we begin to worship our habit of prayer or of Bible reading, God will break up that time. We say—"I cannot do this, I am praying; it is my hour with God." No, it is our hour with our habit; we pray to a habit of prayer.
- 12 Conscience is the faculty of the spirit that fits itself on to the highest a man knows, whether he be an agnostic or a Christian; every man has a conscience, although every man does not know God.

- 13 God engineers our circumstances and He brings across our paths some extraordinary people, viz., embodiments of ourselves in so many forms, and it is part of the humour of the situation that we recognise ourselves.
- 14 Where did Jesus place His feet? He placed them by the sick and the sorrowful, by the dead, by the bad, by the twisted and by the good. He placed His feet exactly where we have to place ours, either with or without Him, in the ordinary rough and tumble of human life as it is. "I will make the place of My feet glorious."
- 15 No matter what our circumstances are, we can be as sure of abiding in Him in them as in a prayer meeting.
- 16 There is something in human pride that can stand big troubles, but we need the supernatural grace and power of God to stand by us in the little things.
- 17 The need is not to do things, but to believe. "What must I do to be saved?" Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."
- 18 Do we come to the Bible to be spoken to by God, to be made "wise unto salvation," or simply to hunt for texts on which to build addresses? There are people who vagabond through the Bible, taking out of it only sufficient for the making of sermons; they never let the word of God walk out of the Bible and talk to them.
- 19 It is never wise to under-estimate an enemy. We look upon the enemy of our souls as a conquered foe; so he is, but only to God, not to us.
- 20 There is nothing so secure as the salvation of God; it is as eternal as the mountains, and it is our trust in God that brings us the conscious realisation of this.
- 21 God is never away off somewhere else; He is always there.
- 22 Things go by threes in the Bible: Father, Son and Holy Ghost; God, Church, converts; Husband, wife, children. It is God's order, not man's. Whenever one of the three is missing, there is something wrong.
- 23 The remarkable thing about fearing God is that when you fear God you fear nothing else, whereas if you do not fear God you fear everything else. "Blessed is every one that feareth the LORD."
- 24 "Except your righteousness shall exceed"—not be different from but "exceed," that is, we have to be all they are and infinitely more! We have to be

- right in our external behaviour, but we have to be as right, and "righter" in our internal behaviour. We have to be right in our words and actions but we have to be right in our thoughts and feelings.
- 25 It is easy for me to talk about what I could do with a thousand pounds if I had it; the test is what I do with the 2¹/2 d⁵ I have got. It may be hard for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven, but it is just as hard for a poor man to seek first the kingdom of God.
- 26 Work is often taken up with the absurd deification of pluck—"this thing has got to be done, and I must do it," and men damage their souls in doing it because God is not there to protect them. But when a man or a woman is called of God, the facts he or she has to face never upset the equilibrium of the life garrisoned by the presence of God.
- 27 Jesus Christ never says that a man is damned because he is a sinner; the condemnation is when a man sees what Jesus Christ came to do and will not let Him do it.
- 28 There is a purpose in every life that is in God's keeping of which we know little, but which He will fulfil if we let Him rightly relate us to Himself
- 29 The whole claim of the Redemption of Jesus is that He can satisfy the last aching abyss of the human soul, not only hereafter, but here and now.
- 30 Thousands of people are happy without God in this world, but that kind of happiness and peace is on a wrong level. Jesus Christ came to send a sword through every peace that is not based on a personal relationship to Himself.
- 31 It does not matter where a man may get to in the way of tribulation or anguish, none of it can wedge in between and separate him from the love of God in Christ Jesus.

September

- 1 If you only know what God has done for you, you have not a big enough God; but if you have had a vision of Jesus as He is, experiences can come and go, you will endure, "as seeing Him Who is invisible."
- 2 "Perfect love casteth out fear," but to say "therefore will we not fear, though the earth be

- removed," is only possible when the love of God is having its way.
- 3 "Be strong in the Lord"—we much prefer to be strong for the Lord. The only way to be strong in the Lord is to be "weak in Him."
- 4 Undisciplined imagination is the greatest disturber not only of growth in grace, but of spiritual sanity.
- 5 Sin is not weakness, it is not a disease; it is redhanded rebellion against God, and the magnitude of that rebellion is expressed by Calvary.
- 6 "I suppose it's God's will"—where is the joy of the Lord about that? The conception Jesus had of the will of God was that of glad, leaping obedience to it as the most glorious thing conceivable.
- 7 The reason we know so little about God's wisdom is that we will only trust Him as far as we can work things out according to our own reasonable common sense.
- 8 How much of our security and peace is the outcome of the civilised life we live, and how much of it is built up in faith in God?
- 9 We impoverish God in our minds when we say there must be answers to our prayers on the material plane; the biggest answers to our prayers are in the realm of the unseen (Ephesians 6:12–13).
- 10 Worry is nothing in the world but personal irritation with God because I cannot see what He is after—only I don't call it that, I talk about "an overwhelming burden of care."
- 11 Never take your obedience as the reason God blesses you; obedience is the outcome of being rightly related to God.
- 12 The Christian life is stamped by "moral spontaneous originality," consequently the disciple is open to the same charge that Jesus Christ was, viz.: that of inconsistency. But Jesus Christ was always consistent to God.
- 13 The heredity of the Son of God is put into me at regeneration, a life neither time nor death can touch.
- 14 God does not do anything with us, only through us.

 $^{5. \ 2^{1/2}}d$: two pence and a half penny, 1 percent of a British pound prior to 1971; "tuppence ha'penny": colloquial expression meaning next to nothing; nothing at all.

- 15 The devil would like us to believe that we are in a losing battle; nothing of the sort! We are "more than conquerors," hilariously more than victors, "through Him that loved us."
- 16 No power on earth or in hell can conquer the Spirit of God in a human spirit, it is an inner unconquerableness. If you have the whine in you kick it out ruthlessly. It is a positive crime to be weak in God's strength.
- 17 When God forgives, He never casts up at us the mean, miserable things we have done. "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins." A cloud cannot be seen when it is gone.
- 18 When we are standing face to face with Jesus and He says "Believest thou this?" our faith is as natural as breathing, and we say—"Yes Lord," and are staggered and amazed that we were so stupid as not to trust Him before.
- 19 It is a tremendous thing to know that God reigns and rules and rejoices, and that His joy is our strength. The confidence of a Christian is that God is never in the sulks ". . . the Father of lights, with Whom can be no variation, neither shadow that is cast by turning" (RV).
- 20 Mental wool-gathering can be stopped immediately the will is roused. Prayer is an effort of will, and the great battle in prayer is the overcoming of mental wool-gathering. We put things down to our own inability to concentrate. "My soul, wait thou only upon God," i.e. pull yourself together and be silent unto God.
- 21 "The LORD is my rock," my encircling guard. Where did the Psalmist learn this truth? In the school of silent waiting upon God. The Rock of Ages is the great sheltering encirclement; we are watched over by the Mother-guardianship of God.
- 22 When the point of entire reliance on the resurrection life of Jesus is reached, and we are brought into perfect contact with the purpose of God, we find all our questions have gone. Are we living that life now? If not why shouldn't we?
- 23 The secret of sacramental discipleship is to be so abandoned to the disposition of God in us that He can use us as broken bread and poured-out wine for His purpose in the world, even as He broke the life of His own Son to redeem us.
- 24 Buck up and face the music, get related to things. It is a great thing to see physical pluck, and greater still to see moral pluck, but the greatest

- to see of all is spiritual pluck, to see a man who will stand true to the integrity of Jesus Christ no matter what he is going through.
- 25 "Love never faileth"! (RV). What a wonderful phrase that is! but what a still more wonderful thing the reality of that love must be; greater than prophecy—that vast forth-telling of the mind and purpose of God; greater than the practical faith that can remove mountains; greater than philanthropic self-sacrifice; greater than the extraordinary gifts of emotions and ecstasies and all eloquence; and it is this love that is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.
- 26 A great point is reached spiritually when we stop worrying God over personal matters or over any matter. God expects of us the one thing that glorifies Him—and that is to remain absolutely confident in Him, remembering what He has said beforehand, and sure that His purpose will be fulfilled.
- 27 Every time you venture out in the life of faith you will find something in your common sense cares that flatly contradicts your faith. Can you trust Jesus Christ where your common sense cannot trust Him?
- 28 "Abide in Me," says Jesus, in spiritual matters, in money matters, in every one of the matters that make life what it is.
- 29 The next best thing to do is to ask, if you have not received; to seek, if you have not found; to knock if the door is not opened to you.
- 30 We can choke God's word with a yawn; we can hinder the time that should be spent with God by remembering we have other things to do. "I haven't time!" Of course you have time! Take time, strangle some other interests and make time to realise that the centre of power in your life is the Lord Jesus Christ and His Atonement.

October

- 1 Forgetting in the Divine mind is an attribute, in the human mind it is a defect, consequently God never illustrates His Divine forgetfulness by human pictures, but by pictures taken from His own creation—"As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us" (Psalm 103:12). "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions" (Isaiah 44:22).
- We have to keep in the light as God is in the light and the grace of God will supply supernatural life all the time. Thank God there is no end to His grace if we will keep in the humble place.

- The overflowing grace of God has no limits, and we have to set no limits to it, but "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."
- 3 Beware of the thing of which you say—"O that doesn't matter much." The fact that it does not matter to you may mean that it matters a very great deal to God. Nothing is a light matter with a child of God. How much longer are some of us going to keep God trying to teach us one thing? He never loses patience.
- 4 The people who are always desperately active are a nuisance; it is through the saints who are one with Him that God is doing things all the time.
- 5 The essence of Christianity is that we give the Son of God a chance to live and move and have His being in us.
- 6 The need is never the call; God's redemption is the call, the need is the opportunity.
- 7 You have no right to say, because you realise a need "I must go"; if you are sanctified you cannot go unless you are sent.
- 8 I have to get to the implicit relationship that takes everything as it comes from God. He never guides presently, but always now. Realise that the Lord is here now, and the emancipation is immediate.
- 9 When you are thinking of the grudge you owe someone, let the Spirit of God bring back to your mind how you have treated God.
- 10 Beware of blaspheming the Creator by calling the natural sinful. The natural is not sinful, but un-moral and un-spiritual. It is the home of all the vagrant vices and virtues, and must be disciplined with the utmost severity until it learns its true position in the providence of God.
- 11 If a man will resign himself in implicit trust to the Lord Jesus, he will find that He leads the wayfaring soul into the green pastures and beside the still waters, so that even when he goes through the dark valley of the shadow of some staggering episode, he will fear no evil. Nothing in life or death, time or eternity, can stagger a soul from the certainty of the Way, for one moment.
- 12 By the "dimensions of effective Redemption" understand the Redemption of God expressing itself in the individual experience; but beware of limiting the Redemption to our individual experience of it.

- 13 That a Christian can smilingly do a smart trick is a staggering thing. Destruction of conscientiousness means we have lost the fierce purity of the Holy Ghost and taken on the pattern and print of the age.
- 14 If you are ignored because of faddy notions of your own, you are not on the right line, but if, because you stand true to your Lord and what He represents, you awaken antipathy, you are on the right line.
- 15 "Won't you yield to Jesus? He has done so much for you"—to talk in that way is an insult to God and a crime against human nature. It is the presentation of an overplus of human sentiment smeared over with religious jargon.
- 16 Don't put prayer and obedience in the place of the Cross of Christ—"Because I have obeyed, Christ will do this, or that"; He won't. The only way we are saved and sanctified is by the free grace of God.
- 17 Anything that obtrudes itself into my consciousness can very easily shut God out. It is not the big things that keep us from being settled in God, but the tiny things.
- 18 Just as Jesus Christ and His Gospel are inseparable, so the disciples were inseparable from their message. When the Holy Spirit came at Pentecost, He made these men the living epistles of the teachings of Jesus, not human gramophones, recording the facts of His life; they became part and parcel of their message.
- 19 An appalling thing to-day is that the man of the world has his eyes open in a way many a preacher of the Gospel has not. Ibsen, for example, saw things clearly; he saw the inexorable inevitableness of God's pronouncements—no forgiveness, no deliverance, no emancipation, because he ignored Jesus Christ and His Redemption and saw facts as they are.
- 20 God rarely rebukes us for our impulsive plans because those plans work their own distress.
- 21 The bedrock permanent thing in Christianity is forgiveness not sanctification and personal holiness; the great abiding thing underneath is infinitely more rugged than that, it is all that the New Testament means by that terrific word "forgiveness."
- 22 If you allow anything to hide the face of Jesus Christ from you, you are either disturbed or you have a false security. "My peace I give unto you"

- is a peace which comes from looking into His face and realising His undisturbedness.
- 23 Because a thing is impossible in a man's present moral imperfection it does not mean he is exonerated from it. God's law has nothing to do with possibility or impossibility.
- 24 Whenever you come in contact with the great destructive sins in other lives, be reverent with what you don't understand. There are facts in each life you know nothing about and God says: "Leave him to Me."
- 25 It is easier to stand true to a testimony which is mouldy with age because it has the dogmatic ring about it that people agree with, than to talk from your last moment of contact with God.
- 26 It is impossible to get exhausted in work for God; we get exhausted because we try to do God's work in our own way and refuse to do it in dependence on Him.
- 27 Beware of the sentiment that we consecrate natural gifts to God; we cannot, we can only consecrate to God the holy disposition He gives us (Romans 12:1).
- 28 Never try to explain God until you have obeyed Him. The only bit of God we understand is the bit we have obeyed.
- 29 It is the most natural thing to be like the person you live with most, therefore live most with Jesus Christ; be absorbingly taken up with Him.
- 30 If I am a Christian, to whom is my appeal? To none but to those God sends you to. You can't get men to come; nobody could get you to come till you came. "The wind bloweth where it listeth: . . . so is every one that is born of the Spirit."
- 31 To trust in the Lord is to be foolish enough to know that if we fulfil God's commands, He will look after everything.

November

- 1 If there is to be another revival, it will be through the readjustment of those of us on the inside who call ourselves Christians.
- 2 The Cross did not "happen" to Jesus. He came on purpose for it. The whole of the purpose of the incarnation is the Cross; the manifestation of it in the crucifixion is the historic revelation of the true nature of God (Revelation 13:8).
- 3 For one man who can introduce another to Jesus Christ by the way he lives and by the atmosphere

- of his life, there are a thousand who can only talk jargon about Him.
- 4 Nothing has any power to alter a man save the incoming of the life of Jesus, and that is the only sign that he is born again.
- 5 "Labour." It is the one thing we will not do. We will take open-air meetings, we will preach—but labour at prayer! There is nothing thrilling about a labouring man's work, but it is the labouring man who makes the conceptions of the genius possible; and it is the labouring saint who makes the conceptions of his Master possible.
- 6 The difference between a man with the Spirit of God and a man without, is that the one does the will of God by deliberate, delighted choice; the other does the will of God without knowing what he is doing, kicking and rebelling.
- 7 God will never begin to teach me His will in other matters until I do what I know. Theoretic knowledge becomes our condemnation—"If ye know these things blessed are ye if ye do them" (RV).
- 8 A man can never be the same again, I don't care who he is, after having heard Jesus Christ preached. He may say he pays no attention to it; he may appear to have forgotten all about it, but he is never quite the same, and at any moment truths may spring up into his consciousness that will destroy all his peace and happiness.
- 9 Am I going to live a sequestered life on the mount and never come down into the demonpossessed valley, never prove that what I saw on the mount is sufficient to enable me to face what I find in the valley?
- 10 It is one of the most flattering things to go and rescue the degraded, one of the social passions of mankind, but it is not the most Christian. It is quite another thing to proclaim to men who are among the best, that they have to give up their right to themselves to Jesus Christ.
- 11 Have you never met the person whose religious life is so exact that you are terrified to come near him? Never have an exercise of religion which blots God clean out.
- 12 To understand the tiniest bit of truth about God is to love it with all our heart and soul and mind; all that lies dark and obscure just now, is one day going to be as clear, as radiantly and joyously clear, as the bit we have seen.
- 13 Experiences of what God has done for me are only stepping-stones; the one great note is—I - trust in the Lord Jesus, God's providence can do with me what it likes, make the heavens like brass, earth like hell, my body loathsome (as Job's was), but the soul that is trusting in Jesus gets where Job got, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him."

- 14 If we do only what we are inclined to do, some of us would do nothing for ever and ever! There are unemployables in the spiritual domain, spiritually decrepit people, who refuse to do anything unless they are supernaturally inspired. The proof that we are rightly related to God is that we do our best whether we feel inspired or not.
- 15 A great many Christian workers worship their work. The one concern of the workers should be concentration on God, and this will mean that all other margins of life are free with the freedom of a child—a worshipping child, not a wayward child.
- 16 God will put you through many mills that are not meant for you, mills you would not be put through but that He wants to make you good bread for His little ones to eat. You can see now the meaning of that hard place you have been in.
- 17 We say, "Seeing is believing," but it isn't true. Belief is necessary before we can interpret what we see; we will explain things away if we don't believe them possible. "... because thou hast seen Me, hast thou believed?" (John 20:29 RV mg).
- 18 A good way to measure our spiritual life is to ask ourselves—What is it that produces the greatest perturbation in me? Is it the sins of men against men, or is it the sins of spiritual pride against God?
- 19 Our attitude to the Bible is a stupid one, we come to the Bible for proof of God's existence: the Bible has no meaning for us unless we know that God does exist. The Bible states and affirms facts for the benefit of those who believe in God, those who don't believe in God can tear it to bits if they like.
- 20 Always remain alert to the fact that where one man has gone back is exactly where anyone may go back (1 Corinthians 10:13). You have gone through the big crisis, now be alert over the least things.... Do not forecast where the temptation will come; it is the least likely thing that is the peril.
- 21 By surrendering ourselves to quiet communion with God, by resting for a while from all our thinking and acting and serving, by leaving all things for once in our Heavenly father's hands,

- secret wounds are healed, gathering unbelief is dispelled, and displaced armour refixed.
- 22 Jesus Christ can put into the man, whose energy has been sapped by sin and wrong until he is all but in hell, a life so strong and full that Satan has to flee whenever he meets him. Jesus Christ can make any life more than conqueror as they draw on His Resurrection life.
- 23 God does not give us overcoming life: He gives life to the man who overcomes. In every case of tribulation, from gnats to the cruelty of the sword, we take the step as though there were no God to assist us, and we find He is there.
- 24 The afflictions after sanctification are not meant to purify us, but to make us broken bread in the Hands of our Lord to nourish others. Many Christian workers are like Ephraim, "a cake not turned"; they are faddists and cranks, and when they are given out for distribution they produce indigestion instead of giving nourishment.
- 25 If you sow vows, resolutions, aspirations, emotions, you will reap nothing but exhaustion ("... and ye shall sow your seed in vain, for your enemies shall eat it," Leviticus 26:16) but sow the Word of God, and, as sure as God is God, it will bring forth fruit.
- 26 The greatest note of triumph that ever sounded in the ears of a startled universe was that sounded on the Cross of Christ—"It is finished." That is the last word in the Redemption of man.
- 27 The springs of love are in God, not in us. It is absurd to look for the love of God in our hearts naturally, it is only there when it has been shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit.
- 28 The first thing to do in examining the power that dominates me is to take hold of the unwelcome fact that I am responsible for being thus dominated because I have yielded. If I am a slave to myself, I am to blame for it because at a point, away back, I yielded myself to myself. Likewise, if I obey God, I do so because I have yielded myself to Him.
- 29 "What I tell you in darkness"—watch where God puts you into darkness, and when you are there, keep your mouth shut. When you are in the dark, listen, and God will give you a very precious message for someone else when you get into the light.
- 30 "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." How much evil has begun to threaten you today? What kind of mean little imps have been looking in and saying; "Now what are you going to do next month—this summer?" "Be anxious for nothing," Jesus says. Look again and think. Keep your mind on the "Much more" of your Heavenly Father.

December

- 1 Our Lord took words that were despised and transfigured their meaning; He did things that were commonplace and sordid and ordinary and transfigured them. Our Lord was the unconscious light in the midst of the most ordinary circumstances conceivable.
- 2 In the New Testament, "world" means the system of things which has been built on God's earth, the system of religion or of society or of civilisation that never takes Jesus Christ into account.
- 3 "Ye are the light of the world." We have the idea that we are going to shine in heaven, but we are to shine down here, "In the midst of a crooked and perverse nation" (Philippians 2:15). We are to shine as lights in the world in the squalid places, and it cannot be done by putting on a brazen smile, the light must be there all the time.
- 4 It is an easy business to preach, an appallingly easy thing to tell other people what to do; it is another thing to have God's message turned into a boomerang—"You have been teaching these people that they should be full of peace and joy, but what about yourself? Are you full of peace and joy?"
- 5 Do we "follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth"? He will take us through the strange dark things—we must follow Him "whithersoever He goeth." "For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" (Revelation 7:17).
- When we have a certain belief, we kill God in our lives, because we do not believe Him, we believe our beliefs about Him and do what Job's friends did—bring God and human life to the standard of our beliefs and not to the standard of God.
- 7 Jesus Christ says, "Except ye . . . become as little children . . ." A little child is certain of its parents, but uncertain about everything else, therefore it lives a perfectly delightful healthy life.
- When we know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, it means we are free from anxiety, free from carefulness, so that, during the - twenty-four hours of the day, we do what we ought to do all the time, with the strength of life bubbling up with real spontaneous joy.

- Our Lord was never impatient. He simply planted seed thoughts in the disciples' minds and surrounded them with the atmosphere of His own life. We get impatient and take men by the scruff of the neck and say: "You must believe this and that." You cannot make a man see moral truth by persuading his intellect. "When He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He shall guide you into all the truth."
- 10 Nothing has any power to alter a man save the incoming of the life of Jesus and that is the only sign that he is born again.
- 11 The man who has seen Jesus can never be daunted; the man who has only a personal testimony as to what Jesus has done for him may be daunted, but nothing can turn the man who has seen Him; he endures "as seeing Him Who is invisible."
- 12 Can God keep me from stumbling this second? Yes. Can He keep me from sin this second? Yes. Well, that is the whole of life. You cannot live more than a second at a time. If God can keep you blameless this second, He can do it the next. No wonder Jesus Christ said "Let not your heart be troubled"! We do get troubled when we do not remember the amazing power of God.
- 13 When a so-called rationalist points out sin and iniquity and disease and death, and he says "How does God answer that?" you have always a fathomless answer—the Cross of Christ.
- 14 If you only take your own ideas, you will never know the truth. The whole truth is the only truth, and the whole truth is Jesus Christ—"I am . . . the Truth." Any bit of truth is an error if taken alone.
- 15 The majority of present day preachers understand only the blessings that come to us from the Cross, they are apt to be devoted to certain doctrines which flow from the Cross. Paul preached one thing only: the crucified Christ, "Who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."
- 16 Who of us can see, behind chance and in chance, God? Who of us can see the finger of God in the weather? When we are in living touch with God we begin to discern that nothing happens by chance.
- 17 If you put your faith in your experience anything that happens—toothache, indigestion, an

- east wind, incongenial work—is likely to upset the experience, but nothing that happens can ever upset God or the almighty reality of the Redemption; once based on that, you are as eternally sure as God Himself.
- 18 In the Cross we may see the dimensions of Divine love. The Cross is not the cross of a man, but an exhibition of the heart of God. At the back of the wall of the world stands God with His arms outstretched, and every man driven there is driven into the arms of God. The Cross of Jesus is the supreme evidence of the love of God (Romans 8:35–39).
- 19 "... He only is my rock and my salvation" (Psalm 62:6). A rock conveys the idea of an encircling guard, as that of a mother watching her child who is learning to walk; should the child fall, he falls into the encircling love and watchfulness of the mother's care. "The LORD is my rock," my encircling guard. Where did the Psalmist learn this truth? In the school of silent waiting upon God
- 20 "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow" (Matthew 6:28). A lily is not always in the sunshine; for the greater part of the year it is hidden in the earth. "How they grow"—in the dark, only for a short time are they radiantly beautiful and sweet. . . . We can never be lilies in the garden unless we have spent time as bulbs in the dark, totally ignored. That is how to grow.
- 21 When it is a question of God's Almighty Spirit, never say "I can't." Never let the limitation of natural ability come in. If we have received the Holy Spirit, God expects the work of the Holy Spirit to be manifested in us.
- 22 Never forget that our capacity in spiritual matters is measured by the promises of God. Is God able to fulfil His promises? Our answer depends on whether we have received the Holy Spirit.
- 23 "Add to your faith virtue . . ." (2 Peter 1:5). "Add" means there is something we have to do. We are in danger of forgetting that we cannot do what God does, and that God will not do what we can do. We cannot save ourselves nor sanctify ourselves, God does that; and God will not give us good habits, He will not give us character, He will not make us walk aright. We have to do all that ourselves, we have to work out the salvation God has worked in.

- 24 Have you ever noticed what Jesus said would choke the word He puts in? The devil? No, the cares of this world. It is the little worries always. I will not trust where I cannot see, that is where infidelity begins. The only cure for infidelity is obedience to the Spirit.
- 25 Jesus Christ is God incarnate coming into human flesh from the outside, His Life is the Highest and the Holiest entering in at the low-liest door. Have I allowed my personal life to become a "Bethlehem" for the Son of God?
- 26 If I put my trust in human beings first, I will end in despairing of everyone; I will become bitter, because I have insisted on man being what no man ever can be—absolutely right. Never trust anything but the grace of God in yourself or in anyone else.
- 27 There are many things that are perfectly legitimate, but if you are going to concentrate on God you cannot do them. Your right hand is one of the best things you have, but Jesus says if it hinders you in following His precepts, cut it off. This line of discipline is the sternest one that ever struck mankind.
- 28 Put all "supposing" on one side and dwell in the shadow of the Almighty. Deliberately tell God that you will not fret about that thing. All our fret and worry is caused by calculating without God.
- A river touches places of which its source knows nothing, and Jesus says if we have received of His fullness, however small the visible measure of our lives, out of us will flow the rivers that will bless to the uttermost parts of the earth. We have nothing to do with the out-flow—This is the work of God that ye believe. . . ." God rarely allows a soul to see how great a blessing he is.
- 30 In tribulation, misunderstanding, slander, in the midst of all these things, if our life is hid with Christ in God, He will keep us at ease. We rob ourselves of the marvellous revelation of this abiding companionship of God. God is our refuge"—nothing can come through that shelter.
- 31 The ideal is not that we do work for God, but that we are so loyal to Him that He can do His work through us—"I reckon on you for extreme service, with no complaining on your part and no explanation on Mine." God wants to use us as He used His own Son.

The Shadow of an Agony

Through the Shadow of an Agony Cometh Redemption

INTRODUCTION

Source

The Shadow of an Agony is from talks on redemption given by Oswald Chambers to soldiers at the YMCA camp, Zeitoun, Egypt, August 14 through 27, 1917.

Publication History

As a book: The Shadow of an Agony was first published in 1918; the date of the second edition is unknown, but there was a third edition in 1933 and a fourth edition in 1942.

The title comes from the words of Ugo Bassi, central character in Harriet Eleanor Hamilton King's² The Disciples (1873), an epic poem much loved and quoted by Chambers.

And Ugo answered, still as in a dream:
"Yea, through the Shadow of an Agony
Cometh Redemption—if we may but pass
In the same footprints where our master went,
With Him beside us;—and for me, I fear
No evil, since He has not failed me yet,
Nor will for ever!"

The Disciples

During the sweltering Egyptian summer of 1918, Mrs. Chambers divided her time between caring for five-year-old Kathleen,³ serving soldiers in the canteen at Zeitoun, and writing letters and typing sermons of her late husband in the underground dugout designed by Oswald as a refuge from the heat. On August 31, she wrote to her sister in England:

I feel as if I will never come to an end of my wealth of notes. The Sermon on the Mount [1915] is in hand being reprinted, and I have got the calendar of sayings [Seed Thoughts Calendar] all ready, and shall send Gertrude [Oswald's sister] a copy of it next week so that she can have them printed in England also. I feel as if that is going to mean a lot to many, I know you will like the idea. Then the next book will be Shadow of an Agony that is in the process of retyping just now. I find how much benefit I have got still from my old legal days, I mean getting into the habit of perfecting a thing by typing and retyping it, and I am glad to have had all the experience of those other days.

Nine months after her husband's death, the pattern of Biddy Chambers' life's work was beginning to emerge.

PREFACE (TO THE FIRST EDITION)

Two classes of readers will take up this little book of Bible studies on vital questions relating to Christian character and conduct and the mystery of suffering. The one class will find in it, as did even Peter in Paul's epistles, things hard to be understood, and sentences that lull the stolid mind to sleep; the other class will read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest its contents because they challenge mind and conscience, and will do their "utmost for the Highest." The author is a lover of men's souls: he sees into the heart of things, rises above the commonplace, and goes below the surface. "The war," he says, "has upset every man's nest; we are face to face with a terrific upheaval in life; there is no civilised security anywhere on the globe. We have seen that there is no such thing as a Christian nation, we have seen the unutterable futility of the organised Christian Church, and many a man who has had no tension in his life has been suddenly obliged to face things he never intended to look at." These very things Oswald Chambers shows us in the light of the Cross. He points out that because Jesus Christ is so like unto His brethren we can face this turmoil and stress, and stand with Him in the shadow of a great agony, undiscouraged and unafraid. There is really only one mystery in the universe; it is the mystery of Redemption. The way we approach this holy ground is nearly always through suffering. Those that carry the cross after Jesus best understand why and how He first carried it, and how the nails pierced not His hands only but His heart.

To the careless and superficial this book will only appeal when they gird up the loins of their minds and are sober. Once they put on the girdle which Paul calls "sincerity" and Peter "humility," its message will grip, convince, and appeal, as it did when first delivered to the men of all ranks in the Y.M.C.A. camps and huts of Egypt.

Great truths are greatly won,
Not found by chance,
Nor wafted on the breath of summer dream,
But buffeting with adverse winds and tides.

COMMENT BY P. T. FORSYTH

From the BTC Monthly Journal, ⁶ September 1933, page 47:

In the Shadow of an Agony (Third Edition, ready in October)

Dr. P. T. Forsyth⁷ wrote of this book:

The writer has no pi-talk, nor is he but a rouser. Not only is his manner direct and searching, but he has a real educated grasp of the moral nature of the spiritual soul and its psychology. He has a happy combination of the familiar style and the competent stuff. His is the kind of address of which we have too little—the union of moral incision and spiritual power. I am glad to commend such teaching, and I hope the stringency of the times will develop more preachers who have this gift—not of talking about the spiritual life but of penetrating the conscience of it with some moral psychology in the name of a positive gospel. It is the kind of evangelism we deeply need, the sound modernising of Redemption. We are too familiar with ways of bringing peace to a man's mind which are not true to the fundament of things.

FOREWORD TO FOURTH EDITION

It is some years ago since a copy of "The Shadow of an Agony" came into my hands. How it did so I do not now remember. I know, however, that I started to read it with no great expectation of profit. But I soon found I had made a real discovery. The little book was a truly great book; its author a truly great man. Since then I have read and pondered every published utterance by the Rev. Oswald Chambers, and am grateful for the intellectual stimulus and spiritual quickening that have come to me from his writings. His "passing hence" was a great loss to the Christian Church.

For the times in which we live I know of no work more fitting for re-publication than "The Shadow of an Agony." It deals with root or rock principles. It comes, not from the surface, but "out of the depths." It is the work of a great brain and a great heart. It does not shirk the problems of life, but looks them straight in the face. Over against the tragedy of sin and suffering it brings us to the tragedy of the Cross of Christ.

In the hope that the book will prove to be as great a discovery and as great an inspiration to others as it has been to me, I write this Foreword.

THE AGONY OF REDEMPTION

Oh, to have watched Thee through the vineyards wander,
Pluck the ripe ears and into evening roam,
Followed and known that in the twilight yonder
Legions of angels shone about Thy home.

Ah, with what bitter triumph had I seen them,
Drops of Redemption bleeding from Thy brow,
Thieves and a culprit crucified between them,
All men forsaking Him, and that was Thou.

 Approaching the Holy Ground (Exodus 3:5; Joshua 5:15; Psalm 119:67, 71, 75; Jeremiah 31:15–19; Hebrews 12:5–11)

The truth of Christianity cannot be proved to the man in the street till he comes off the street owning its power.

2. Apprehending the Holy Grace (Romans 5:7–9; Hebrews 5:7–9)

Christianity is concerned with God's holiness before all else, which issues to men as love, acts upon sin as grace, and exercises grace through judgement.

3. Atonement by the Holy God (Matthew 1:21; Acts 20:28; 2 Corinthians 5:14–21)

By centrality is meant finality for human history and destiny. . . . It is meant, first, that in the atonement we have primarily an act of God and an act of God's holiness; second, that it alone makes any repentance or expiation of ours satisfactory to God; third, that as regards man it is—a revolutionary act and not a mere stage in evolution.

Dr. Forsyth

If we estimate things from the standpoint of a man's life, Redemption will seem "much ado about nothing." But when we come to a big Judgement Day like a European war, when individual lives apparently amount to nothing, and human lives are being swept away by the thousand, the "bottom board" is knocked out of our ignorance, and we begin to see that the basis of things is not rational, but wild and tragic. It is through these glimpses that we understand why the New Testament was written, and why there needed to be a Redemption made by Jesus Christ, and how it is that the basis of life is redemptive. If Jesus Christ were only a martyr, His cross would be of no significance; but if the cross of Jesus Christ is the expression of the secret heart of God, the lever by which God lifts back the human race to what it was designed to be, then there is a new attitude to things.

1. Approaching the Holy Ground

And he said, Draw not nigh hither; put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground. (Exodus 3:5)

There is a moral preparation necessary to face the truth of God. These words of God to Moses mean literally, "Stand further off and you will see better." Sometimes our moods are mean and ignoble; at other times they are lofty and good. To a large extent a man's moods are not in his own power.

We cannot kindle when we will
The fire that in the heart resides;
The spirit bloweth and is still,
In mystery our soul abides.
But tasks in hours of insight will'd
Can be through hours of gloom fulfilled.

Matthew Arnold

"Strip off your commonplace moods," God says; "if you are going to see into this thing, you must put on the right mood for discerning it." The agony of a man's affliction is often necessary to put him into the right mood to face the fundamental things of life. The Psalmist says, "Before I was afflicted I went astray: but now have I kept Thy word." The Bible is full of the fact that there has to be an approach to the holy ground. If I am not willing to be lifted up, it is no use talking about the higher heights. In putting John the Baptist to death, Herod committed moral suicide. He ordered the voice of God to be silent in his life, and when Jesus Christ stood before him, "he questioned with Him in many words," for "he hoped to have seen some miracle done by Him"; but we read that Jesus "answered him nothing." It is quite possible for any man amongst us to get to a place where there is no such thing as truth or purity, and no man gets there without himself being to blame. Every man ought to be intellectually sceptical, but that is different from moral doubt which springs from a moral twist. No man can do wrong in his heart and see right afterwards. If I am going to approach the holy ground, I must get into the right frame of mind—the excellency of a broken heart.

The war has upset every man's nest, and we are face to face with a terrific upheaval in life; there is no civilised security anywhere on the globe. We have seen that there is no such thing as a Christian nation, and we have seen the unutterable futility of the organised Christian Church: and many a man who has had no tension in his life has been suddenly dumped "into the soup" and been obliged to face things that he never intended to look at. Consequently, there are any number of amateur sceptics, and men who are seeing the difference between "believing their beliefs," and "believing God," men, who, through the turmoil and the stress, are seeing that rationalism is not the basis of things. According to the Bible, the basis of things is tragedy, and the way out is the way made by God in Redemption. The New Testament does not say that the human race is evolving, but that the human race is a magnificent ruin of what it was designed to be. God Himself has taken the responsibility of sin, and the proof that He did so is the Cross; God holds me responsible if I refuse to let Him deliver me from sin. No man can redeem the world; God has done it; Redemption is complete. That is a revelation, not something we get at by thinking; and unless we grant that Redemption is the basis of human life, we will come up against problems for which we can find no way out. The thing that will need to be restated after the war, theologically, is Redemption; at present "Redemption" is not in the vocabulary of the average earnest man.

Through the turmoil and agony that nations and men are in, men who think are beginning to see that rationalism is not the basis of things. The basis of things is not reasonable; reason is our guide among things as they are, but it never can account for things as they are. No man ever chose his own father and mother, or his own heredity; such things go clean through the "bottom board" of rationalism; they are illogical; there is a deep, real problem at the basis of them. The basis of things, according to the Bible, is tragic, and the way out is the way made by God in Redemption, not by intellect or by reason. The revelation of New Testament Christianity deals with the basis of human life. Every one of us is shaken into the turmoil of things, caught by the last eddy, and we have to get some kind of foothold. In the meantime, don't be distressed at what men say, or at the tags they wear. "Talk to my meaning, not to my words." Don't be a debating logician and make a man mean what you mean; try and get at his mind behind the thing; and when you hear a man talk in agony, remember he is hurt. Be patient and reverent with what you don't understand.

2. Apprehending the Holy Grace (Romans 5:7-9; Hebrews 5:7-9)

"Grace"—the overflowing favour of God. The way of approach to the holy ground of God is nearly always through suffering; we are not always in the natural mood for it, but when we have been ploughed into by suffering or sorrow, we are able to approach the moral frontiers where God works. To apprehend the holy grace of God, I must remember that according to the New Testament, Jesus Christ is God manifest in the flesh. This fundamental revelation of the Christian faith seems to be overlooked among Christians. There is only one God for the Christian, and He is Jesus Christ. The Bible only mentions two men—Adam and Jesus Christ, and it is the last Adam Who rehabilitates the human race.

During the war the stab has come to every one of us, and we are in an attitude to understand what the New Testament is talking about. Before the war it did not matter to the majority of us whether Jesus Christ lived or died, because our thinking was only within the circumference of our own lives. Now, through the war, we are seeing the need for Redemption. The grace of God which comes through Jesus Christ is revealed in that God laid down His life for His enemies. The statement that a man who gives his life for his king and country thereby redeems his soul, is a misapprehension of New Testament revelation. Redemption is not a man's bit. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends," has nothing to do with Christianity; an atheist will do this, or a blackguard, or a Christian; there is nothing divine about it, it is the great stuff that human nature is made of. The love of God is manifested in that He laid down His life for His enemies, something no man can do. Paul says the fundamental revelation of the New Testament is that God redeemed the whole human race when they were spitting in His face, as it were.

If you have had no tension in your life, never been screwed up by problems, your morality well within your own grasp, and someone tells you that God so loved you that He gave His Son to die for you, nothing but good manners will keep you from being amused. The majority of people who have never been touched by affliction see Jesus Christ's death as a thing beside the mark. When a man gets to his wits' end and things go hard with him, his thick hide is pierced and he is stabbed wide awake, then for the first time he begins to see something else—"At last I see; I thought that He was stricken, smitten of God and afflicted; but now I see He was wounded for my transgressions."

The great fundamental revelation regarding the human race is that God has redeemed us; and Redemption enters into our lives when we are upset enough to see we need it. There is too much common sense used, "pills to cure an earthquake" given; and "the gospel of temperament" preached. It is an insult to-day to tell some men and women to cheer up. One of the most shallow petty things that can be said is that "every cloud has a silver lining." There are some clouds that are black all through. At the wall of the world stands God with His arms outstretched; and when a man or woman is driven there, the consolations of Jesus Christ are given. Through the agonies in human life we do not make Redemption, but we see why it was necessary for God to make it. It is not necessary for every man to go through these agonies, but it takes a time of agony to get the shallow scepticism knocked out of us. It is a good thing to be reverent with what we do not understand. A moral agony gives a man "a second wind," and he runs better after it, and is a good deal more likely to win.

3. Atonement by the Holy God (Matthew 1:21; Acts 20:28; 2 Corinthians 5:14-21)

The Church is the new Spirit-baptised Humanity based on the Redemption of Jesus Christ. Intellectual rationalism is based on a volcano, and at any second it may be blown to pieces; but there is nothing below Redemption; it is as eternal as God's throne. Redemption is a moral thing, Jesus Christ does not merely save from hell; "He shall save his people from their sins," i.e., make totally new moral men. Jesus Christ did not come to give us pretty ideas of God, or sympathy with ourselves; He came from a holy God to enable men, by the sheer power of His Redemption, to become holy.

In the Christian faith the basis of human life is Redemption, and on that basis God can perform His miracles in any man.

So long as we live in the "tenth story" we remain indifferent to the fact of forgiveness; but when we "strike bottom" morally, we begin to realise the New Testament meaning of forgiveness. Immediately a man turns to God, Redemption is such that his forgiveness is complete. Forgiveness means not merely that I am saved from sin and made right for heaven (no man would accept forgiveness on such a level); forgiveness means that I am forgiven into a recreated relationship, into identification with God in Christ.

The background of God's forgiveness is holiness. If God were not holy there would be nothing in His forgiveness. There is no such thing as God overlooking sin; therefore if God does forgive there must be a reason that justifies His doing so. If I am forgiven without being altered by the forgiveness, forgiveness is a damage to me and a sign of the unmitigated weakness of God. When a man is convicted of sin he knows God dare not forgive him; if He did it would mean that man has a bigger sense of justice than God. God, in forgiving a man, gives him the heredity of His own Son, i.e., He turns him into the standard of the Forgiver. Forgiveness is a revelation—hope for the hopeless; that is the message of the Gospel.

A man may say, "I don't deny that God will forgive me, but what about the folks I have put wrong? Can God give me a clearing-house for my conscience?" (Hebrews 9:14). It is because these things are neglected in the presentation of Redemption that men are kept away from Jesus Christ. Men are kept away by honesty more than by dishonesty.

Jesus Christ's revelation is the forgiveness of God, and the tremendous miracle of Redemption is that God turns me, the unholy one, into the standard of Himself, the Forgiver, by the miracle of putting into me a new disposition. The question up to me is—"Do I want Him to do it?" God's forgiveness is a bigger miracle than we are apt to think. He will not only restore to us the years the cankerworm hath eaten; not only deliver us from hell; not only make a clearinghouse for conscience; but He will give a totally new heredity; and many a man who has shut himself down in despair need not despair any more. God can forgive a man anything but despair that He can forgive him.

These are the fundamentals of human life. We have not been taught to think as Christians, and when an agony reaches us we are knocked to pieces, and only hang on by the skin of our teeth. We may have faith enough to keep us going, but we do not know where to put our feet or to tell anyone else where to put theirs. We have been taught to think as pagans, and in a crisis we act as pagans. It is a great thing to have a spiritual experience, but another thing to think on the basis of it. The great fundamental point of view in the Bible is neither rationalism nor common sense. Either it is a revelation, or it is unmitigated blether. The basis of life is not mathematical or rational; if it were we could calculate our ends, and make absolutely sure of certain things on clear, rational, logical lines. We have to take into account the fact that there is an incalculable element in every child and in every man. There is always "one fact more," and we get at it by agony.

THE CONSCIENCE OF GOD

Hebrews 6:13

Thou with strong prayer and very much entreating Willest be asked, and Thou shalt answer then, Show the hid heart beneath creation beating, Smile with kind eyes and be a man with men.

Were it not thus, O King of my salvation, Many would curse to Thee and I for one; Fling Thee Thy bliss and snatch at Thy damnation, Scorn and abhor the shining of the sun.

F. W. H. Myers

- The Creator Aspect (Genesis 1:27; Psalm 132:6; John 10:34–35; Luke 3:38)
 GOD (Intellectual): Because God is Creator and we are His creatures, nothing else matters
- The Cosmic Aspect (Genesis 1:1; Job 38:4–7; Isaiah 42:5; Acts 17:24)
 GOD (Emotional): The emotions produced by natural actualities are no end-all.
- The Culture Aspect (Psalm 1:21; Isaiah 44:14–17; Colossians 2:18–23)
 GOD (Educational): The refined findings of intellect and emotions; all else to be disdained.
- The Christian Aspect (John 3:16;
 Corinthians 5:18–21)
 GOD (Evangelical): Complete forgiveness and final Redemption.

It is not necessary for a man to understand things before he can be a Christian. The understanding of the mystery of life is a secondary thing; the main thing is to be alive. Science is an understanding of life and the universe. If a man said he had no use for science. we should reckon him to be a fool. It is the same with regard to the Christian religion. The important thing is to be a born-again man. Theology is the science of religion, an intellectual attempt to systematise the consciousness of God. Intellect systematises things to a man's mind, but we do not reach reality through intellect. Theology comes second, not first, and ought always to be open to dispute. Because science and theology have been put in the wrong place, it is foolish to say we will have nothing to do with them. Redemption is not a thing we are consciously experiencing, it is a revelation given by the Christian religion of the basis of human life, and it takes some thinking about. We don't think on Christian lines at all.

"For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swear by himself" (Hebrews 6:13). Conscience is not the voice of God; conscience is that faculty in me which appeals to the highest I know; it may or may not be religious. God has a conscience towards man and towards Himself, i.e., He has a standard to keep, and the problem He is up against is not to wipe the muddle off the slate, but to resolve it back again, and Redemption is His way of doing it. To try and explain Redemption in the span of a man's life is nonsense. Men may not feel the need of Redemption, but that does not mean it is not there. The Christian revelation is the revelation of why Redemption was necessary. God's standard is to make of man the counterpart of Himself; man has to be brought into perfect communion with God. At present there is an enormous hiatus between God and man, and God's conscience in Redemption puts man back again into the purpose for which He designed him, instead of wiping him out and saying it is all a muddle. The highest standard God has is Himself, and it is up to God to make a man as good as He is Himself; and it is up to me to let Him do it. If God is not just, the only honourable thing for a man to be is a blatant atheist.

Agony means severe suffering in which something dies—either the base thing, or the good. No man is the same after an agony; he is either better or worse, and the agony of a man's experience is nearly always the first thing that opens his mind to understand the need of Redemption worked out by Jesus Christ.

1. The Creator Aspect (Genesis 1:27)

God created man, the Federal Head of the human race, in His own image; we are procreated through generations of the human race; Adam was created in the image of God. The male and female together, as they were created, were in the image of God, in perfect union with God, "Adam and Eve" are both needed before the image of God can be perfectly presented.

The Creator aspect appeals to a man's intellect as long as he has no memory of the Fall and the ruin that followed when the connecting link with Deity was snapped. If you develop yourself in your brain, and say "That is 'myself," you have to shut yourself off from life as it actually is, and on that line you can manipulate anything, and construct the most extraordinary things. An intellectual God does not amount to "a row of old beans." The Creator aspect of God ignores everything else; it forgets that the Bible gives revelations of God on other lines. The Bible says that God created the Federal Head of the race in His own image; that means that God accepts the responsibility for the human race being put on the wrong track, and the Cross is the proof that He does so. I seal myself with damnation when I see the Light, Jesus Christ, and prefer my own standpoint. The Creator aspect of God does not amount to much. If the only aspect of God is that of Creator, to talk about a moral or spiritual life is nonsense; but the Creator aspect is not the complete Christian aspect; it is only one ingredient in it.

2. The Cosmic Aspect (Genesis 1:1)

Cosmic means the order of the material universe produced by actualities. The Creator aspect is a fact; the Cosmic aspect is also a fact; but there are other aspects. If I build my thinking on the Creator or the Cosmic aspect only, I have to miss some factors out. If I take an intellectual view of life only, I shall come to the conclusion that Thomas Carlyle⁸ came to; he judged men by brains, and came to the conclusion that half the human race were fools. If the intellectual valuation of man be the right one, when he is insane he should be killed. The brain is the thing that makes a man express himself; but a man is more than his consciousness. The intellect says "I will have nothing to do with what I cannot explain intellectually." A man's intellect is his instrument, his guide among things as they are; but it never gave him things as they are. There is more to be taken into consideration before you get the right view of God and man.

3. The Culture Aspect (Isaiah 44:14–17)

This aspect says that God is the result of an educated mind, and that we get at God by abnormal means—by education, by mysticism, and aestheticism; if so, then atheism is saner. Isaiah says that a man takes a tree and cuts it in two, uses part to cook his food, and the other part he carves into an idol to worship. "None of us do that!" we say; but we do. There are other things which are wooden besides trees, viz., our heads! We use one half of our heads to earn our living, and the other half to worship God.

These three aspects of God amount to nothing more than a man produces by his own nature, and have not nearly so much power over him as he has over himself. If I want to get at reality my conscience must witness as well as my emotions. I may talk like an archangel and live like a pig; I may write magnificent stuff and have fine conceptions, and people may be thrilled, but that does not prove that I have touched reality. A man's intellect may give him noble ideas, and power to express them through his soul in language, but it gives him no power to carry them out in action. When a man has touched reality, he is changed into its image. Intellect has never changed a man as yet; it may have made him look different, but it will not have altered him. If intellect is the way to get to God, what about the men who have no intellect! There would be whole streaks of man's life and experience to blot out. Or if I can get at God by a fine sense of beauty only what about the men who have no sense of beauty? Some men have a magnificent heredity, while others are practically damned into existence. Rationalism is not the basis; my reason and my intellect are instruments, but there is something deeper about every human life than can be fathomed by intellect. The God constructed out of the Culture aspect does not amount to anything. Thinking is an abstraction whereby man locates the things he sees. The laws of nature have no existence outside the intellect of the scientist, and to talk about Jesus Christ transcending the laws of nature is nonsense. A law is a method of explaining things in an ordered intellect. You can dispute a man's reasoning, but you cannot dispute facts; they must be accepted. If you deal only with these three aspects, you remain out of touch with reality, because each aspect does only for the view it presents. If the aspect of God is to be coloured by refined intellect, some of us will never get there. If everybody were refined it would be all right, but everybody is not, and the Culture aspect treats the rest of the human race with disdain.

4. The Christian Aspect (2 Corinthians 5:18-21)

In the Christian aspect we have these three other aspects worked in with another view, viz., the Conscience of God, and the New Testament insistence on the Cross of Jesus Christ. The attitude of the Bible to the human race is not a common-sense one. The Christian aspect deals with man as a specimen of a human race which is a magnificent ruin of what it was designed to be. Supposing the view of the Bible to be right, to whom is it "up to" to right the wrong? The Creator. Has He done it? He has, and He has done it absolutely single-handed. The tremendous revelation of Christianity is not the Fatherhood of God, but the Babyhood of God—God became the weakest thing in His own creation, and in flesh and blood He levered it back to where it was intended to be. No one helped Him; it was done absolutely by God manifest in human flesh. God has undertaken not only to repair the damage, but in Jesus Christ the human race is put in a better condition than when it was originally designed. It is necessary to understand these things if you are to be able to battle for your faith. "The deity of the Christian religion is evidenced by the variety of fools who tackle it." To-day we are erecting a man of straw, and then taking it for granted that the Author of salvation was a fool. Jesus Christ's view is that the Christian religion has been tried and abandoned, but never been tried and failed. It is not a question of whether we agree with the Bible revelation or not, but of whether we take it for what it reveals before we tackle it.

God's conscience means He has to forgive completely and finally redeem the human race. The point about Christian forgiveness is not that God puts snow over a dungheap, but that He turns a man into the standard of the Forgiver. The great thing up to God is that in forgiving me He has to give me the heredity of His Son. God Himself has answered the problem of sin and there is no man on earth but can be presented "perfect in Christ Jesus."

Redemption does not amount to anything to a man until he meets an agony; until that time he may have been indifferent; but knock the bottom board out of his wits, bring him to the limit of his moral life, produce the supreme suffering worthy of the name of agony, and he will begin to realise that there is more in Redemption than he had ever dreamed, and it is at that phase that he is prepared to hear Jesus Christ say, "Come unto Me." Our Lord said, "I did not come to call the man who is all right; I came to call the man who is at his wits' end, the man who has reached the moral frontier."

Oh could I tell, ye surely would believe it!
Oh could I only say what I have seen!
How should I tell or how can ye receive it,
How, till He bringeth you where I have been?

Frederick W. Myers

A man will know sooner or later; it will depend upon the pride of his intellect or the crass obstinacy of his nature how soon he gets there; but when he does he will have reached the frontier where God works. Never keep your moral nature sceptical. Never doubt that justice and truth and love and honour are at the back of everything, and that God must be all these or nothing. The Christian aspect is that God will make a man as holy as He is Himself, and this He has undertaken to do. If a man is terrified by the vastness of creation, he has never been touched by the moral problem. When he has, he knows that God created the universe for him. God created man to be master of the life in the earth and sea and sky, and the reason he is not is because he took the law into his own hands, and became master of himself, but of nothing else. Man is a remnant of a former design. In the Conscience of God that design is restored. The "Creator" and the "Cosmic" and the "Culture" aspects are all etceteras to the main thing, we enter into touch with God on the frail, human experience, moral line. The Christian aspect of God represents the one Who has been in the very thick of it; and whenever a man through Nature or through conviction of sin touches the moral frontiers, then the work of Jesus Christ begins.

"If any man is in Christ, there is a new creation" (2 Corinthians 5:17 RV mg). I see the universe as a mirror of my ruling disposition. I see in sunsets and sunrises and in the whole cosmic force an exaggerated expression of the ruling disposition in myself; I do not see God, I see myself. When I am born from above (RV mg), I see the reflection of God. The disposition ruling within me determines the way I interpret outside things. A man convicted of sin and a man in love may live in the same external world, but in totally different creations. Both may be in the desert, but the disposition of the one makes him interpret the desert as a desolating piece of God's territory; while to the other the desert literally blossoms as the rose. The disposition of the one is mad; there is no light in the sun, no sweetness in anything, his ruling disposition is one of misery; while to the other:

Heaven above is brighter blue,
Earth around is sweeter green;
Something lives in every hue
Christless eyes have never seen;
Birds with gladder songs o'erflow,
Flowers with deeper beauties shine
Since I know, as now I know,
I am His and He is mine.

George Wade Robinson

When you are identified with Jesus Christ you become a new creation in the same surroundings. You see life differently because of the moral transfiguration of the regeneration of the Son of God. The Conscience of God means that it is up to Him to make this possible, and any man can go through the transfiguration the second he realises his need. There are moments when you see the way you should go; don't dally with yourself then. The moments come and go, but always with a further space between. If you play the fool with yourself when they come, they get fainter; but if you heed them, they are intimations that you are stepping over into another frontier, and beginning to experience a relationship to God based on the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ.

THE CONSCIENCE OF CHRIST

Christ! I am Christ's! and let the name suffice you, Ay, for me too He greatly hath sufficed; Lo! with no winning words I would entice you— Paul has no honour and no friend but Christ.

Yea thro' life, death, thro' sorrow and thro' sinning He shall suffice me, for He hath sufficed: Christ is the end, for Christ was the beginning, Christ the beginning, for the end is Christ.

3. The Cross of Christ (Matthew 16:24; 20:22; 26:12–13, 26–28; Romans 5:11)

The Christ that we trust all to is One in whom God died for His own witness and His own work in us. God was in Christ reconciling. The prime doer in Christ's Cross was God; He was God doing the very best for man, and not man doing his very best for God.

Dr. Forsyth

It is in times of intense suffering that we begin to see the reason for Redemption, and realise that Redemption is worth what it cost the original Designer. According to the New Testament, Redemption cost God everything, and that is the reason why salvation is so easy for us. The same thing happens in an agony as happens when you suddenly open your door and window during a hurricane: the wind disarranges everything. It plays havoc, and knocks things into confusion, but also brings a totally new circulation of air; and very often the man who has been knocked around by an agony begins to form a new mind, and is better able to appreciate the New Testament view of the Cross of Jesus Christ.

The basis of God's action is that it is up to Him to turn out men like Himself, and the Conscience of Christ also means just that. To say that reason is the basis of human life is absurd, but to say that the basis of human life is tragedy and that the main purpose of it as far as Jesus Christ is concerned, is holiness, is much nearer the point of view given in the Bible.

1. The Character of Christ (Matthew 11:19; Acts 2:22-24)

These verses portray the character of Jesus Christ as recorded in the New Testament. The New Testament is not written to prove that Jesus Christ is God Incarnate; the New Testament does not prove anything; it simply confirms the faith of those who believe beforehand. Christian evidences don't amount to anything; you can't convince a man against his will.

The New Testament never thinks that the place which Jesus had in its faith is anything else than the place which belongs to Him and truly was His.

Dr. Denney

The New Testament does not say of Jesus Christ, "This man was God Incarnate, and if you don't believe it you will be damned." The New Testament was written for the confirmation of those who believed He was God Incarnate. The man who does not believe is apt at any minute to discover by the swinging open of the door of agony, that the thing he ignored may be the way into a life he has never seen. It is quite likely that a trick of disease or war or bereavement may suddenly open the possibility of there being other things in a man's story than those he saw when he was a common-sense, robust man.

"The Son of Man came eating and drinking." One of the most staggering things in the New Testament is just this commonplace aspect. The curious difference between Jesus Christ's idea of holiness and that of other religions lies here. The one says holiness is not compatible with ordinary food and married life, but Jesus Christ represents a character lived straight down in the ordinary amalgam of human life, and His claim is that the character He manifested is possible for any man, if he will come in by the door provided for him.

There are religions in which holiness involves unusual conditions and special diet. Some forms of mysticism seem to be incompatible with married life. But the type of holiness which Jesus teaches can be achieved with an ordinary diet and a wife and five children.

The Jesus of History

T. R. Glover¹⁰

We must estimate the character of Jesus Christ by the New Testament, and not by our standards. Look at the ordinary commonplace things of His life—from twelve to thirty years of age He lived with brothers and sisters who did not believe in Him (John 7:5). If you had lived in His day and someone had pointed Him out and said to you, "That carpenter is God manifest in the flesh," you would have thought him mad. The New Testament is either unmitigated blether or it conveys a revelation. The majority of us make the character of God out of our own heads; therefore He does not amount to anything at all. That God is called an omnipresent, omniscient, omnipotent Being who rules the universe does not matter one iota to me. But the New Testament reveals the essential nature of God to be not omnipotence, omnipresence and omniscience, but holiness. God became the weakest thing in His own creation, viz., a Baby; He entered human history on that line. He was so ordinary that the folks of His day paid no attention to Him, and the religious people said He was making a farce of religion.

Jesus Christ is, beyond all reasonable question, the greatest Man who ever lived. The greatness of a man is to be estimated by two things; first, by the extent of his influence upon mankind, and secondly—for no one is altogether great who is not also good—by the purity and dignity of his character. Tried by both these tests, Jesus is supreme among men. He is at once the most influential and the best of Mankind.

The Fact of Christ P. Carnegie Simpson

To refuse to try a line Jesus Christ points out because I do not like it, shuts my mouth as an honest doubter. I must try it and see if it works. As long as I am unwilling to act by any way of getting at the truth, I can say nothing.

The basis of Christ's character appeals to us all. One of the dangers of denominational teaching is that we are told that before we can be Christians we must believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that the Bible is the Word of God from Genesis to Revelation. Creeds are the effect of our belief, not the cause of it. I do not have to believe all that before I can be a Christian; but after I have become a Christian I begin to try and expound to myself Who Jesus Christ is, and to do that I must first of all take into consideration the New Testament explanation. "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar Jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven." The character of Jesus Christ was lived on an ordinary plane, and exhibits one side only. To ten men who talk about the character of Jesus there is only one who will talk about His Cross. "I like the story of Jesus Christ's life, I like the things He said. The Sermon on the Mount is beautiful, and I like to read of the things Jesus did; but immediately you begin to talk about the Cross, about forgiveness of sins, about being born from above (RV mg), it is out of it." The New Testament reveals that Jesus Christ is God manifest in the flesh, not a Being with two personalities; He is Son of God (the exact expression of Almighty God) and Son of Man (the presentation of God's normal man). As Son of God He reveals what God is like (John 14:9); as Son of Man He mirrors what the human race will be like on the basis of Redemption—a perfect oneness between God and man (Ephesians 4:13). But when we come to the Cross of Jesus Christ, that is outside our domain. If Jesus Christ was only a martyr, the New Testament teaching is stupid.

2. The Consciousness of Christ (Matthew 5:21–22, 27–28, 38–39, 43–44; 11:27; John 8:46; 14:6–9)

These verses express what Jesus Christ thought about Himself. He deliberately said "Before I came, Moses said: now I have come I say: up till now it has been so-and-so; but I interpret in a new way." If He was not God manifest in the flesh, to speak like that would have been an intoxication of conceit. Let Plato or Socrates, for instance, say, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life," and we see what it involves. Jesus Christ is either mad or what He claims to be, viz.: the only revelation of God Almighty that there is. Our Lord did not say, "No man cometh unto God, but by Me," but, "No man cometh unto the Father, but by Me." Fatherhood and Creatorship are two different things. Fatherhood refers to the moral likeness of a man's disposition.

In the Conscience of God and in the Conscience of Christ we see God accepting the responsibility for sin; He never asks man to accept it. No man is damned because he is a sinner. Jesus said, "This is the judgement" (i.e., the critical moment) "that the Light is come into the world, and men loved the darkness rather than the Light; because [KIV] their works were evil" (John 3:19 RV). If I see better than I act on, I am sealing my soul with damnation. The consciousness of Jesus Christ in the New Testament is that He and the Father are one; He did not say that the human race and God were one. The doctrine of the Trinity is not a revelation, it is an attempt to put into scientific language the fact of God. There is only one God to the Christian, and His name is Jesus Christ; any other idea of God is a matter of temperament or of refinement. The Christian is an avowed agnostic; all he knows about God has been accepted through the revelation of Jesus Christ, and to him there is only one name for the God he worships, viz., Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ manifests, on the scale we see and know, the life that makes Him say—"Almighty God is nothing that contradicts what I am; if you have seen Me you have seen the Father." Have we seen Him? We may look at a person for a long time without "seeing" him. How long did it take the men who knew Jesus Christ to perceive Who He was? (See Luke 24:16, 31.)

Both these themes, the Character and the Consciousness of Christ, are in the nature of speculation—interesting, but they do not amount to anything when a man is in agony. When we were plunged into the agony of the war modern Christianity was dealing with speculations, or else proclaiming a pseudo-evangelism which made salvation a moral "lavatory." Jesus Christ did not come primarily to teach; He came to make it possible for us to receive His heredity, to have put into us a new disposition whereby we can live totally new lives. Any man who uses his reason in the things he sees, and who has taken a cross section of himself, and had the conceit knocked out of him, knows he is not a strayed angel nor a noble hero; he is neither angel nor devil; he is a mixture of dust and Deity. The Sermon on the Mount is impossible to man, and yet it is what our Lord taught. Jesus Christ did not come to teach man to be what he cannot be, but to reveal that He can put into him a totally new heredity; and all He requires a man to say is—"I need it"—no shibboleth, but a recognition of his need. Jesus Christ cannot begin to do anything for a man until he knows his need; but immediately he is at his wits' end through sin or limitation or agony and cannot go any further, Jesus Christ says to him, Blessed are you; if you ask God for the Holy Spirit, He will give Him to you. God does not give us the Holy Spirit until we come to the place of seeing that we cannot do without Him (Luke 11:13).

3. The Cross of Christ (Matthew 16:24; 20:22; 26:12–13, 26–28; Romans 5:11)

There are two views of Jesus Christ's death. One is that He was a martyr—that is not the New Testament view: the other is that the Cross of Iesus Christ was the Cross of God, not of a man at all—not a man doing his level best for God, but "God doing the very best for man." The Cross of Jesus Christ is the point where God and sinful man merge with a crash, and the way to life is opened; but the crash is on the heart of God. The Cross is the presentation of God having done His "bit," that which man could never do. The New Testament reveals that the basis of human life is not Rationalism, but Redemption. Just as Rationalism does not depend on individual people but on a conception of the fundament of human life, so the New Testament represents that the basis of human life is Redemption, and Christian faith and Christian thinking are to be based on that. There is much teaching abroad to-day that is veneered over as Christianity. Men preach, and undermine the very ground they stand on while they preach. The foundation of the Christian faith is that the basis of human life is Redemptive, and on that basis God performs His miracles. Jesus Christ told His disciples that He came here on purpose to die. The death of Jesus Christ is God's verdict on self-realisation and every form of sin there is. If self-realisation is to be the goal and end of the human race, then damned be God; if Jesus Christ was to be God, then damned be selfrealisation—the two cannot exist together. "If you would be My disciple, give up your right to yourself."

Why should we play at being Christians? We are told that to be an experimental Christian means we understand the plan of salvation; the devil understands that, but he is not a saint. A saint is one who, on the basis of the Redemption of Jesus Christ, has had the centre of his life radically altered, and has deliberately given up his right to himself. This is the point where the moral issue comes, the frontier whereby we get in contact with God. Intellect will not bring us there, but moral obedience only, and an agony opens the door to it. To those who have had no agony Jesus says, "I have nothing for you; stand on your own feet, square your own shoulders. I have come for the man who knows he has a bigger handful than he can cope with, who knows there are forces he cannot touch; I will do everything for him if he will let Me. Only let a man grant he needs it, and I will do it for him."

This is the basis of what Jesus Christ did in Redemption, and we enter into the life of Christ by His death, not by His birth. When Jesus Christ taught His disciples these things, and when He talked about His Cross, they misunderstood Him, just as natural minded Christians do to-day; consequently we are up against the problem already mentioned. The teaching of Jesus Christ is very fine and delightful, but it is all up in the clouds; how are we to come up to it with our heredity, with what we are with our past, with our present and with the outlook we have? How are we going to begin to do it, if all He came to do was to teach? All attempts at imitation will end in despair, in fanaticism, and in all kinds of religious nonsense. But when once we see that the New Testament emphasises Jesus Christ's death, not His life, that it is by virtue of His death we enter into His life, then we find that His teaching is for the life He puts in.

"We also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement" (Romans 5:11). As long as we are intellectualists and forget that we are men, our intellect tells us that God and man ought to be one, that there should be no gap between. Exactly so! But they are not one, and there is a gap, and a tragedy. Our intellect tells us that the universe ought to be the "garment of God." It ought to be, but it is not. We may hold any number of deistic and monistic theories, and theories about being one with God, but every man knows he is not God. Jesus Christ says we can only receive the atone-ment with God on His basis, viz.: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:3). We can enter into His Kingdom whenever the time comes for us to see it. We cannot see a thing until we do see it, but we must not be blind and say we don't see it when we do, and if we are enthusiastic saints we must not be too much disturbed about the fellow who does not see. At any second he may turn the corner of an agony and say, "I thought those other fellows were mad, but now I am prepared to see as they do."

We have been taken up with creeds and doctrines, and when a man is hit we do not know what to give him; we have no Jesus Christ, we have only theology. For one man who can introduce another to Jesus Christ by the way he lives and by the atmosphere of his life, there are a thousand who can only talk jargon about Him. Whenever you come across a man or woman who in your time of distress introduces you to Jesus Christ, you know you have struck the best friend you ever had, one who has opened up the way of life to you.

The basis of human life according to Jesus Christ is His Cross, and it is by His Cross that His conscience is manifested. He has undertaken to take the vilest piece of stuff that humanity and the devil have put together, and to transform this into a son of God. If I receive forgiveness and continue to be bad, I prove that God is immoral in forgiving me, and make a travesty of Redemption. When I accept Jesus Christ's way He transfigures me from within. "Jesus did it all," refers to Redemption; the thing is done; and if I step into it I will find the moral magic of the Redemption at work in me.

Personal relation with God is to be maintained in actual experience by the spontaneous originality of the indwelling Spirit of God, interpreting the words of Christ as we obey.

"Intuition" means perception at sight; it is implicit, something I cannot express, and conscience is of the implicit order of things. "Conscience is the innate law in human nature whereby man knows he is known." Conscience is that faculty in me which fixes on what I regard as the highest; consequently conscience records differently in different people. I may be a Christian and a conscientious man, or I may be an atheist and a conscientious man. So it never can be true to call conscience the voice of God; if it were, it would be the most contradictory voice man ever heard.

Conscience is best thought of as the eye of the soul recording what it looks at; it will always record exactly what it is turned towards. We soon lose what Ruskin called "the innocence of sight." An artist does not use his logical faculties in recording what he sees; he records from the innocence of sight. A beginner sketches not what he sees, but what he knows he sees, while the artist gives the presentation of what he sees. Conscience is the eye of the soul, and how my conscience records will depend on the light that is thrown on God. Saul of Tarsus was conscientious in putting to death the followers of Jesus Christ (Acts 26:9); when he became a Christian, his conscience was not altered, but it recorded differently (Acts 24:16). When a man gets rightly adjusted to God his conscience staggers him, and his reason condemns him from all standpoints. The phrase "Conscience can be educated" is a truth that is half an error. Strictly speaking, conscience cannot be educated; what is altered and educated is a man's reasoning on what his conscience records. A man reasons not only on what his senses bring him, but on what his conscience brings him; and immediately he is faced by the white light of Jesus Christ, his conscience recording exactly, his reason is startled and amazed.

1. Conscience before the Racial Degeneration (Genesis 2:7–17)

In this aspect we have to consider the three facts of a man's personal life, viz., consciousness of self, consciousness of the world, and consciousness of God; they are all brought out in the way God constituted the human race. Adam had no affinity with the brutes, and this instantly distinguished him from the brute creation around him, "but for Adam there was not found an help meet for him." There is no evidence that a brute is conscious of itself, but man is ostensibly conscious of himself.

We are conscious of ourselves and conscious of outside things only by means of a nervous system. When a man is altered inwardly by the grace of God, his nervous system is altered, and he instantly begins to see things differently. The external world around him begins to take on a new guise because he has a new disposition. "If any man is in Christ Jesus," his nervous system will prove that he is "a new creature," and the material world will appear to him as a new creation because he is now seeing it as the mirror of God's thought.

The God-consciousness in Adam was quite different from our natural consciousness; it was just like the God-consciousness shown by our Lord. In us the consciousness of God is obliterated, because that consciousness became most conspicuously blurred by the Fall; consequently, men miscall all kinds of things "God." A man is apt to call any system of things he considers highest "God."

There are three facts of our personal life that are restored by Jesus Christ to their pristine vigour. We get into real definite communion with God through Jesus Christ; we get to right relationship with our fellow-men and with the world outside; and we get into a right relationship with ourselves. We become Christ-centred instead of self-centred.

If Adam had not sinned and thereby introduced the heredity of sin into the human race, there is every reason to suppose that the human race would have been transfigured into the real presence of God; but Adam disobeyed, and sin entered in. Sin is a relationship between two of God's creations. God did not create sin; but He took the responsibility for it; and that He did so is proved in the Cross of Jesus Christ. The essential nature of sin is my right to myself. Jesus Christ, the second Adam, the second Federal Head of the race, entered into this order of things as Adam did, straight from the hand of God; and He took part in His own development until it reached its climax, and He was transfigured. Earth lost its hold on Him, and He was back in the glory which He had with the Father before the world was. But He did not go to heaven from the Mount of Transfiguration because He had Redemption to fulfil. He emptied Himself (RV) of His glory a second time, and came down into the world again to identify Himself with the sin of man (2 Corinthians 5:21).

Adam was intended by God to take part in his own development by a series of moral choices, to sacrifice his natural life to God by moral obedience and thus transform it into a spiritual thing. Instead, he took dominion over himself, and instantly lost control over the earth and air and sea, and lost also this peculiar consciousness of himself and the world and God. Poetic and intellectual types of mind recognise these factors in Adam's creation, but they ignore the fact that we have degenerated. A poet or an artist has vision and insight, but he does not see the actual. It is delightful to talk about man being in perfect accord with God and with the world about him; but we are not in that accord, and the guidance God gave to Adam is of no use to us.

We can change the world without when we change the recording instrument within. Commit sin, and I defy you to see anything beautiful without; fall in love, and you will see beauty in everything. We only know the world by a nervous system, and we infer that everyone else knows it in the same way as we do. The man who accepts things on the evidence of his senses is as wise as I am when I accept the revelation of the Bible. To accept the evidence of your senses is wise, but to say it is infallible is nonsense. It is never wise to be cocksure.

2. Conscience after the Racial Degeneration (Romans 1:18-27)

"Everyone is to blame but me; I am a strayed babe in the wood!" This attitude indicates the twist in man's nature that has come in through the Fall. A moral squint always leads to a wrong intellectual view.

(a) Standard of the Ordinary Person (Romans 2:14–16)

Every man has, implicit within himself, a standard of conduct which he accepts for life. There is an intuitive certainty in every man that there are some things that he ought not to do, and the talk about innocence is nonsense. The Bible says that a man is born with this knowledge, and that he will be judged according to his obedience to, or rejection of, the ordinance of God which is written in his spirit. The natural idea of virtue is to make a man quits with the Day of Judgement.

(b) Standard of the Ordinary Pagan (Matthew 25:31–46)

The standard for the nations is conscience, i.e., conscience attaching itself to the system of things which man regards as highest, no matter how degraded he may be. Conscience is the standard for men and women to be judged by until they have been brought into contact with the Lord Jesus Christ. The standard for Christians is not the 25th Chapter of Matthew; the standard for Christians is our Lord Jesus Christ. It is not sufficient for a Christian to walk in the light of his conscience; he must walk in a sterner light, in the light of the Lord.

(c) Standard of the Ordinary Piety (John 16:2; Acts 26:9)

Paul says, "I verily thought within myself"—i.e., according to his conscience—"I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." This is the length an ordinary pious conscience may take a man. Saul was the acme of conscientiousness. It is extraordinary to what an extent men may corrupt themselves if they have no real light on what they regard as the highest. There needs to be a standard for the guidance of conscience. It does not matter whether a person is religious or not, conscience attaches itself to the highest he or she knows, and reasoning according to that standard is the guide for life. Conscience will always record God whenever it has been faced by God.

3. Conscience in the Racial Regeneration (John 3:16-21)

I am not judged by the light I have, but by the light I have refused to accept. There is no man but can have the knowledge, perfectly clearly obtainable, of the standard of Jesus Christ. Whether I am a Christian or not, or whether I am conscientious or not, is not the question; it is whether I have refused the light of the finest moral character who ever lived, Jesus Christ. This is the condemnation, that the Light, Jesus Christ, has come into the world, and I prefer darkness, i.e., my own point of view. The characteristic of a man who begins to walk in the light is that he drags himself into the light all the time. He does not make excuses for things done in the dark, he brings everything to the light, and says, "This is to be condemned; this does not belong to Jesus Christ," and so keeps in the light. The popular view of a saint is an anaemic young man with one foot in the grave, or an old woman, or an innocent, sweet young lady-anyone who has not enough original sin to be bad. The New Testament view of a saint is a more rugged type. You and I are a mixture of dust and Deity, and God takes that sordid human stuff and turns it into a saint by Regeneration. A saint does not mean a man who has not enough sin to be bad, but a man who has received from Jesus Christ a new heredity that turns him into another man.

(a) Character of the Saint (John 17:22; Romans 9:1) The Christian disposition keeps its balance with the law of God, which is holiness. A man's character is what he habitually is. What "glory" did Jesus Christ have? A glory that everyone could see and admit that He was a marvellous Being? No, He was so ordinary that they said He was a glutton and a winebibber; so ordinary that fishermen walked with Him, and the common people asked Him to dinner. There was no glory externally; He was not manifestly God walking in the flesh. Jesus Christ effaced the God-head in Himself so effectually that men without the Spirit of God despised Him. The glory our Lord had here on earth was the glory of a holy disposition; that is, He worked out His life in accordance with the highest He knew—His Father; and He said "I can give men that faculty in regeneration; I can put My Holy Spirit in them, and He will keep them in contact with God as I have revealed Him." Conscience and character in the saint, then, means the disposition of Jesus Christ persistently manifested.

(b) Conduct of the Saint (2 Corinthians 1:12)

Paul always riddled himself like that; he did not talk to people who did not know him. He said, "The evidence of my life proves that what Jesus Christ said He could do, He has done" (see Galatians 2:20).

"Our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity . . . we have had our conversation in the world." The point there is a very important one, viz., that the knowledge of evil that came through the Fall gives a man a broad mind, but paralyses his action. The restoration of a man by our Lord gives him simplicity. Paul says, "I fear, lest by any means . . . your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." There are men and women of the world who know evil, whose minds are poisoned by all kinds of things; they are marvellously generous in regard to their notions of other people, but they can do nothing, their broad-sightedness paralyses their action. There are some things a man is a criminal for knowing; he has no right to know them. The knowledge of evil, instead of instigating to action, paralyses; whereas the essence of the Gospel of Jesus Christ working in conscience and conduct is that it shows itself at once in action. God can turn cunning, crafty people into simple, guileless people. The marvel of His grace is such that He can take out the strands of evil and twistedness from a person's mind and imagination, and make him single-minded and simple towards God so that his life becomes radiantly beautiful by the miracle of His grace.

(c) Communion of the Saints (1 John 1:7)

"But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light ..."—that is, don't have anything folded up, don't juggle things, don't pretend you have not done anything shady. John says, if you have committed sin, confess it; walk in the light, and you will have fellowship with everyone else who is there. Natural affinity does not count here at all. Watch how God has altered your affinities since you were filled with the Spirit; you have fellowship with people you have no natural affinity for at all; you have fellowship with everybody who is in the light. Light is the description of clear, beautiful, moral character from God's standpoint, and if we walk in the light, "the blood of Jesus Christ . . . cleanses us from all sin"; God Almighty can find nothing to censure.

We usually think of conscience as an individual thing; the individual aspect has to be recognised, but it is not the only aspect. The individual exercise of conscience is never the Christian standard. The Christian standard is the personal relationship of the conscience in direct accord with God on the basis of the revelation given by Jesus Christ. I do not live the Christian life by adherence to principles; I live the Christian life as a child lives its life. You never can calculate what a child will do, neither can you calculate what the Spirit of God will do in you. When you are born from above (RV mg), the Spirit of God in you works in spontaneous moral originality. Our Lord said, "the Holy Ghost . . . shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." I do not rake around and discover some word; the Holy Spirit brings back with the greatest of ease the word I need in a particular circumstance. Am I going to obey that word? If we keep our individual consciences open towards God as He is revealed in Jesus Christ, God will bring hundreds of other souls into oneness with Himself through us.

This is the way the new racial regenerated conscience is to come about. Racial conscience is not the conscience of the individual person, but the conscience of a whole community of people who are in touch with God.

IN THOUGHT

Be near me when my light is low When the blood creeps, and the nerves prick And tingle; and the heart is sick, And all the wheels of Being slow.

Be near me when the sensuous frame Is rack'd with pangs that conquer trust; And Time, a maniac scattering dust, And Life, a Fury slinging flame.

Amid the quarrels of nations is it not wonderful that many minds, untutored either in history or in ethic, should seek to find it in some form like socialism which is indifferent to Nationality, and which overrides the concrete divisions of mankind by abstract ideas and artificial associations, while others, only too historic, find it in a Church unity over their heads.

Dr. Forsyth

If we are faced with a problem, we cannot be indifferent. The greatest help we can give to another is not a positive line of things, but this warning: Don't seal up your mind too quickly.

1. In the Whirlwind of Things That Are

And ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars; see that ye be not troubled. (Matthew 24:6)

That is either the statement of a madman or of a Being who has power to put something into a man and keep him free from panic, even in the midst of the awful terror of war. The basis of panic is always cowardice. Our Lord teaches us to look things full in the face. He says—"When you hear of wars, don't be scared." It is the most natural thing in the world to be scared, and the clearest evidence that God's grace is at work in our hearts is when we do not get into panics. Our Lord insists on the inevitableness of peril. He says "You must lay your account with war, with hatred, and with death." Men may have lived undisturbed over a volcano for a long while, when suddenly an eruption occurs. Jesus Christ did not say—"You will understand why war has come," but—"Don't be scared when it does come, do not be in a panic." It is astonishing how we ignore Jesus Christ's words. He said that nations would end in war and bloodshed and havoc. We ignore His warnings; and when war comes we lose our wits and exhibit panic.

(a) Quarrels of Nations (Luke 21:10-11)

This question is on the lips of people to-day: "Is war of the devil or of God?" It is of neither. It is of man, though both God and the devil are behind it. War is a conflict of wills, either of individuals or of nations. National quarrels are everywhere to-day and it is these quarrels which make men say—"Well, blot out nations altogether; the only thing to do is to ignore the fact that there are nations; let us look forward to a time when there will be none." This attitude is a revolt which is a mere safety valve. The vision of a time when there will be no nations is right, but ignoring the fact that there are nations just now is not the way to establish the vision.

After the war the elemental will take its place again, and we shall recover what we had lost in overcivilisation. Civilised life will be all the better for the clearing out of some things, and there are some things we shall regret losing. We shall be driven back to the elemental; we shall be a good deal less refined, more rugged; more like our own country five hundred years ago. In the final issue some things belonging to civilisation will be found to be fine, and some disastrous. The preaching of the "gospel of temperament" and all such shallow optimism has been hit on the head by the war; there are some clouds with no "silver lining," and the injunction to "cheer up" is an insult.

(b) Quarrels of Churches (1 Corinthians 3:1-5)

It is easy to see the defects in churches. I may criticise my own church, but let me remember that her defects are those of immaturity. A person may be full of defects, but we must remember that there is a difference between the vices of a man and the failings of a boy. When we see the powerlessness and ineffectiveness of the churches, we are apt to revolt to sacerdotalism, which is priestcraft being used as an exotic over human nature. Frequently, religious peace has been brought about in this way, but it has not been a desirable peace. When men are compelled to submit to superstition, they are apt to say, "Let us have no churches at all, or else let us have a democratic church."

(c) Questions of the Way On (Matthew 24:23–26) "If any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not." To-day we have all kinds of Christs in our midst, the Christ of Labour and of Socialism; the Mind-cure Christ and the Christ of Christian Science and of Theosophy; but they are all abstract Christs. The one great sign of Christ is not with them—there are no marks of the Atonement about these Christs. Jesus Christ is the only one with the marks of atonement on Him, the wounded hands and feet, a symbol of the Redeemer Who is to come again. There will be signs and wonders wrought by these other Christs, and great problems may be solved, but the greatest problem of all, the problem of sin, will not be touched.

The majority of us are blind on certain lines, we see only in the light of our prejudices. A searchlight lights up only what it does and no more, but the daylight reveals a hundred and one facts that the searchlight had not taken into account. An idea acts like a searchlight and becomes tyrannous. Take a man with an idea of evolution; as you listen to him the way seems perfectly clear, life is not difficult at all; but let the daylight of actual experience come across his path, and there are a thousand and one facts which the idea cannot account for, because they do not come into the simple line laid down by the evolutionist. When I am up against problems, I am apt to shut myself up in my own mind and refuse to pay any attention to what anyone says. There are many things which are neither black nor white, but grey. There is nothing simple under heaven saving a man's relationship to God on the ground of the Redemption of Jesus Christ. When Jesus Christ came on the scene, His disciples became impatient and said, "Why don't You tell us plainly who You are?" Jesus Christ could not, because He could only be discerned through moral obedience. A man who talks like a shell makes the path of a shell, that is, he makes the way straight, but destroys a good deal in doing it. There is another way of reaching the solution of a problem the long, patient way of solving things. Jesus Christ deliberately took the "long, long trail." The temptation of Satan was that He should take the "short cut." The temptations of Satan centre round this point: "You are the Son of God, then do God's work in Your own way"; and at the heart of all our Lord's answers was this: "I came to do My Father's work in His way, not in My own way, although I am the Son of God."

A fanatic sees God's point of view but not man's. He says God ought not to allow the devil, or war, or sin. We are in the whirlwind of things that are, what is the use of wasting time and saying things ought not to be? They are! In the midst of the problems, what is the way out? The line of solution is not to apply the plaster of a philosophical statement or the principles of teetotalism, or of vegetarianism, but something more fundamental than these, viz., a personal relationship to God and Man as one—Jesus Christ. "Don't make principles your aim, but get rightly related to Me," Jesus Christ says.

The revelation of Christianity is that God, in order to be of use in human affairs, had to become a typical Man. That is the great revelation of Christianity, that God Himself became human; became incarnate in the weakest side of His own creation. If one can put it reverently, unless God Almighty can become concrete and actual, He is nothing to me but a mental abstraction, because an ideal has no power unless it can be realised. The doctrine of the Incarnation is that God did become actual, and that He manifested Himself on the plane of human flesh. Jesus Christ is not only the name of the personal Saviour Who made the way for every man to get back into that personal relationship, but He is the name for God and Man one. "Son of Man" means the whole human race centred in one personality. Jesus Christ declares He is the exclusive way to the Father (Matthew 11:27; John 14:6).

A religious fanatic says: "I will work from the Divine standpoint and ignore the human." You cannot do it; God Himself could not do it. He had to take upon Himself "the likeness of sinful flesh." There must be the right alloy. You cannot use pure gold as coin, it is too soft to be serviceable, and the pure gold of the Divine is no good in human affairs; there must be the alloy mixed with it, and the alloy is not sin. Sin, according to the Bible, is something that has no right in human nature at all, it is abnormal and wrong. Human nature is earthly, it is sordid, but it is not bad. The thing in human nature that is bad is the result of a wrong relationship set up between the man God created and the being God created who became the devil, and the wrong relationship whereby a man becomes absolute "boss" over himself is called sin. Sin is a wrong element, an element that has to be dealt with by God in Redemption through man's conscience.

The fanatical person is certain that human beings can live a pure Divine life on earth. But we are not so constituted, we are constituted to live the human life presenced with Divinity on earth, on the ground of Redemption. We are to have the right alloy—God and humanity one, as in our Lord Jesus Christ. That is the miracle of the Redemption when it works actually in human flesh. The way out is to remember that the alloy must be discovered in you and me, viz., the pure Divine working on the basis of my pure human. I may have the most beautiful sentiments in prayer and visions in preaching, but unless I have learned how God can mix the human and the Divine and make them a flesh and blood epistle of His grace, I have missed the point of Jesus Christ's revelation.

2. Internationals of Socialism, Sacerdotalism and Spirituality

Socialism at present is immensely vague, it is the name for something which is all right in vision, but the point is how is the vision to get legs and walk? How are we going to establish the peace of the world so that nations will not go to war any more, or grab at each other? How are we going to arrive at an equality that will work? How is it to be done? These are the last days of a dispensation from God's standpoint. (The Bible dispensations are not things we note, they are marked off by the Spirit of God. To-day militarism has gone into hell before the eyes of the whole world.) "And it shall come to pass in the last days," saith God, "I will pour out of My Spirit upon all flesh" (irrespective of goodness or badness) ". . . and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit." What is the difference between "your sons and your daughters" and "my servants and my handmaidens?" "Your sons and your daughters" refer to the men and women who have no concern about the Redemptive point of view: "We have the vision and we are going to do the thing in our own way." Peter says God is longsuffering, and He is giving us ample opportunity to try what ever line we like in both individual and national life. God is leaving us to prove to the hilt that it cannot be done in any other than Jesus Christ's way, or the human race will not be satisfied.

The atheist, or socialist, or Christian—all who look to the future and express a view of what ought to be, see the same vision. They see the brotherhood of man, a time of peace on earth when there will be no more war, but a state of goodwill and perfect liberty, at present inconceivable. There is nothing wrong with the vision, and there is no difference in the vision because its source is the Spirit of God; the difference is in the way it is to be reached. The vision is of the nature of a castle in the air. That is where a castle should be; who ever heard of a castle underground! The problem is how to put the foundation under your castle in the air so that it can stand upon the earth. The New Testament says that the only foundation is not Rationalism but the absolute efficacy of the Redemption of Jesus Christ. We are not prepared to see that yet; there may be individuals who are, but no nation under heaven is. It is a long process for an individual to centralise his mind on Jesus Christ's standpoint, and it must take nations a long while too. The socialist in his domain is like the fanatic in the Christian domain; he is apt to see the vision and forget the problem—forget that in the meantime we are not there! After the war we shall have to be down among the demon-possessed, and then will be the time to prove whether we can give legs to our vision. Locusts, in their flight, will tumble down in the streams and drown by the million, but others keep coming on until they bank the stream right up, and the live ones crawl over the piled-up dead. Hundreds of men in the past twenty centuries have had the vision, and given their lives for it. No one thinks anything about them now, but it is over the lives of these men that the rest of us are beginning to crawl and find a footing.

Sacerdotalism has proved a quick way out of a good many difficulties. It says: "Put the incubus of a Church rule on the nations and say, You shall do this'; unite temporal and Divine power under an infallible head." It is one way of holding peace for a time, but it is a peace that does not grow from the inside of solving the problems of men; it comes from the outside, like an extinguisher, on to the problems and says, "I am the infallible Church in the line of the Apostolic Succession; you shall not doubt, I will solve all your problems." In every period when the nations have been held in peace, it has been by an external authority, such as a Church, acting like an exotic, spreading its roots over the mass of humanity and holding it together. The Roman Catholic Church is a proof of this. There is only one thing as futile as the Roman Catholic Church and that is Protestantism. In Roman Catholicism the great dominating authority is Churchianity, the Church is vested with all authority. In Protestantism it is what the Book says that is the supreme authority, and a man gets rest when he decides for either. "I am going to give up all the turmoil and let my Church do my thinking for me." If you put your faith in a Church, it will solve your problems for you. Or you may stake your faith in Bibliolatry with the same result. "Ye search the scriptures, because ye think in them ye have eternal life; and these are they which bear witness of Me, and ye will not come to Me that ye may have life" (John 5:39-40 RV). Jesus Christ says neither the Church nor the Bible is the authority, but "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life"; the Church and the Bible are secondary. The context of the Bible is Jesus Christ, and a personal relationship with Him interprets the Bible in a man's life. There are ways of bringing peace to a man's mind which are not true to the fundament of things, and one of the most significant things during the war is the change of mental front on the part of men as they face these things.

3. Federations Most Hopeful

Another man says, "Federation is the most hopeful solution there is; not necessarily denominational union, but federations in spirit; let us look forward to the time when nations and denominations will be federated out of independent existence." This is, again, only a mental safety valve.

Another man may say: "I believe in quiet mysticism, cutting myself off from everything around and getting at things by a spiritual life of my own." The monks in the Middle Ages refused to take the responsibilities of life by shutting themselves away from the world, and people to-day seek to do the same by cutting themselves off from this and that relationship.

Paul says: "Beware of those who ignore the basis of human life." If I refuse to accept nations or churches or human beings as facts, I shall find I have nothing to help solve the problems that arise. We have to make the first footing clear. Is it possible, on the basis of Redemption, to regenerate commerce? for Jesus Christ not to ignore the fact of men and women, but to regenerate them? for nations not to be ignored, but regenerated? Jesus Christ's claim is that it is possible. Jesus Christ was not deluded, nor was He a deceiver. He is the Way, the Truth, and the Life; and the only way out is by a personal relationship to Him. We are never exonerated from thinking on the basis on which Jesus Christ has put things by Redemption.

THE DANCE OF CIRCUMSTANCES

Nay but Thou knewest us, Lord Christ, Thou knowest

Well Thou rememberest our feeble frame, Thou canst conceive our highest and our lowest, Pulses of nobleness and aches of shame.

Therefore have pity! not that we accuse Thee, Curse Thee and die and charge Thee with our woe; Not thro' Thy fault, O Holy One, we lose Thee, Nay, but our own—yet hast Thou made us so!

Mazzini

"Through the shadow of an agony cometh Redemption." In a supreme agony something dies, no man is the same after it. The majority of us live our lives untouched by an agony; but in war, the chances are that all are hit somewhere, and it is through a personal agony that a man is likely to begin to understand what the New Testament reveals. As long as we have our morality well within our own grasp, to talk about Jesus Christ and His Redemption is "much ado about nothing"; but when a man's thick hide is pierced, or he comes to his wits' end and enters the confines of an agony, he is apt to find that there is a great deal from which he has been shut away, and in his condition of suffering he discovers there is more in the Cross of Christ than intellectually he had thought possible.

Beware of believing that the human soul is simple; look at yourself, or read the 139th Psalm, and you will soon find the human soul is much too complex to touch. When an intellectualist says that life is simple, you may be sure he is sufficiently removed from facts to have no attention paid to him. Things look simple as he writes about them, but let him get "into the soup," and he will find they are complicated. The only simple thing in human life is our relationship to God in Christ.

Circumstances are the things that twist a man's thinking into contortions.

1. Personal Decisions for Christians

One of the first things we discover in dealing with the big universal problem is that it is mirrored in each individual life. When we are young we are all metaphysicians, we don't deal with physical things, but with things behind the physical. The young mind seems more competent than the middle-aged mind, because the latter has come the length of dealing with facts. The metaphysician and the philosopher deal only with abstractions which are supposed to explain facts. It is always the young mind that attempts to deal with the big universal problems; but when the young mind has had a dose of the plague of its own heart, the problem of the universe is obliterated by another, viz., that of its own personal life, and if a solution can be found for that, it has a solution for the problems which lie further afield. The problem of the universe is not mine but the Almighty's; the problem I am up against is the muddle inside. Can I see a way out there? Is the God I have only an abstraction? If so, don't let me treat Him as anything else. Or is He one with whom I can get into a personal relationship, one who will enable me to solve my problems?

A Christian is a disciple of Jesus Christ's by the possession of a new heredity (John 3:3), one who has been brought into personal relationship with Jesus Christ by the indwelling Spirit of God, not one with certain forms of creed or doctrine; these are the effects of his relationship, not the ground of it.

The man who brings with him any conception of God (especially if he is a Scotsman), will bring a conception based on Calvinism, a God described by the "Omnis." That God does not amount to anything to me. If I start out and say that the essential nature of God can be defined as omnipotence, omniscience and omnipresence, I shall end by proving that Jesus Christ is a liar, for He was not omnipotent and omniscient and omnipresent when He was on earth; yet He claimed to be the complete revelation of God— "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Either my theology is wrong or Jesus Christ is. If Jesus Christ is right, I must be prepared to revise my theology and say that those terms simply express certain manifestations which I called God. But if the essential nature of God is holiness, then I can see how it is possible for Jesus Christ to be God manifest in the flesh. The doctrine of the Incarnation means that God became the weakest thing in His own creation, a Baby. The doctrine of the Trinity is not a Christian revelation, it is an attempt on the part of the mind of man to expound the Christian revelation, which is that there is only one God to the Christian, and His name is Jesus Christ.

A Christian is an avowed agnostic because he has accepted what he knows about God on the ground of revelation; he has not found it out for himself.

(a) Sin (1 John 3:8)

According to Jesus Christ, the first decision is that sin has to be destroyed. The first great moral effect of Jesus Christ's coming into the world is that He saves His people from their sins; not simply that He saves them from hell and puts them right for heaven; that is the finding of a Protestant evangel, not the New Testament view, and is only one phase of salvation. The great purpose of Jesus Christ's coming is that He might put man on a line where sin in him can be destroyed (1 John 2:1). The test of a Christian, according to the New Testament, is not that a man believes aright, but that he lives as he believes, i.e., he is able to manifest that he has a power which, apart from his personal relationship to Jesus Christ, he would not have. We all know about the power that spoils our sin, but does not take away our appetite for it. The first great decision to be made is that the only thing to do with sin is to destroy it, and the incoming of Jesus Christ enables a man to destroy the wrong relationship in himself.

(b) Sensuality (Romans 8:13; Colossians 3:3-6)

Sensuality is not sin, it is the way my body works in connection with external circumstances whereby I begin to satisfy myself. Sensuality will work in a man who is delivered from sin by Jesus Christ as well as in a man who is not. I do not care what your experience may be as a Christian, you may be trapped by sensuality at any time. Paul says, "Mortify the deeds of the body," mortify means to destroy by neglect. One of the first big moral lessons a man has to learn is that he cannot destroy sin by neglect; sin has to be handled by the Redemption of Jesus Christ, it cannot be handled by me. Heredity is a bigger problem than I can cope with; but if I will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit on the basis of Christ's Redemption, He enables me to work out that Redemption in my experience. With regard to sensuality, that is my business; I have to mortify it, and if I don't, it will never be mortified. If I take any part of my natural life and use it to satisfy myself, that is sensuality. A Christian has to learn that his body is not his own. "What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost . . . and ye are not your own?" Watch that you learn to mortify.

If I have an intellectual puzzle, I must see that I run it correspondingly with moral obedience. If I am perplexed about God's real universe, have I begun to make personal decisions about sin and sensuality? Every religious sentiment that is not worked out in obedience, carries with it a secret immorality; it is the way human nature is constituted. Whenever I utilise myself for my own ends, I am giving way to sensuality, and it is done not only physically, but mentally also, and one of the most humiliating things for a Christian is to realise how he does it. The impertinence of mental sensuality lies in the refusal to deny the right of an undisciplined intelligence that is contrary to Jesus Christ.

If I am going to find out a thing scientifically, I must find it out by curiosity; but if I want to find out anything on the moral line, I can only do it by obedience. God put man in a garden with the tree of knowledge of good and evil, and said, "Thou shalt not eat of it." God did not say they were not to know good and evil, but that they were not to know good and evil by eating of the tree. They were intended to know evil in the way Jesus Christ knew it, viz., by contrast with good. They did eat of the tree, consequently the human race knows good by contrast with evil. Adam knew evil positively and good negatively, and none of us knows the order God intended. No man who has eaten of the fruit of the tree knows evil by contrast with good. The curiosity of the human heart finds out the bad things first. The fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil gives the bias of insatiable curiosity on the bad line, and it is only by the readjustment through Jesus Christ that the bias on the other line enters in—a tremendous thirst after God. Jesus Christ knew evil negatively by positively knowing good; He never ate of the tree, and when a man is reborn of the Spirit of God that is the order.

(c) Sentimentality (Luke 6:46)

Sentimentality is produced by watching things we are not in. We are all capable of being sentimental, i.e., of living in a state of mind which produces emotions we do not intend to carry out. A hundred and one things will produce sentimentality—a cup of tea, a concert; a letter or a novel will do it. "I like to have my emotions stirred, but don't ask me to carry them out on their own level." If I allow an emotion and refuse to act it out on its right level, it will react on a lower level. The higher the emotion, the deeper the reaction; consequently, the higher the religious emotion, unless worked out on its own level, the more debased and appalling the reaction. That is why Paul connects sanctification with immorality, and why religious men fall much more bestially. Our guide as to what emotions we are going to allow is this—What will be the logical outcome of this emotion? If it has to do with sin and Satan, then grip it on the threshold of your mind and allow it no more way. You have no business to harbour an emotion the outcome of which you can see to be bad; if it is an emotion to be generous, then be generous, or the emotion will react and make you a selfish brute.

Sentimentality has to be ignored. Jesus Christ said—"You call Me Master and Lord, but you don't do what I say." That is the gist of the failure of Christianity; it has been tried and abandoned because it has been found difficult; but it has never failed when it has been tried and gone on with honourably. There is no problem or difficulty that stretches before a man for which adherence to Jesus Christ will not give him the line of solution.

(d) Sensibilities (John 17:15; Romans 14:20-23)

"Sensibilities" means the things at the basis of life, the way we are naturally related to life. The three main sensibilities in a man's life are sex, money and food. What has he to do with them? They are not sinful, they are plain facts which can be either devilish or sublime. Whenever Jesus Christ brought His teaching to a focus it was on two points, viz., Marriage and Money. In ordaining sex God took the bigger risk and made either the most gigantic blunder or the most sublime thing. Sex has to be controlled, so have money and food. By what? By the highest. When God created the Federal Head of the race He required him to take part in his own development by a series of moral choices, whereby he was to sacrifice his natural sensibilities to the will of God and transform them.

Our Lord says He does not pray that His disciples shall be taken out of the world, but that they shall be kept from the evil one, kept from being overwhelmed. Paul, in Romans 14, beats out into gold foil what Jesus Christ gives in nugget form. He warns all through—Beware of those who teach abstinence from marriage and from meats, they are true neither to God nor man as God made him. A false religion grew up in the Middle Ages which taught, "You must get out of the world, deny sex, and cut yourself off from everything around." The stamp of false religion is that it denies that these sensibilities have any nobility in them. It is spiritual cowardice to deny these things because they have been made sordid and bestial; if they cannot be controlled for the glory of God, Jesus Christ has misled us. Remember that we have to live a Christian life in these bodies, to get the right alloy which will produce the thing Jesus Christ stood for. The Incarnation reveals the amalgam of the Divine and the human, the right alloy, i.e., that which makes the Divine serviceable for current use.

One of the first ingredients for a man's thinking is that the Incarnation is a picture of what takes place in every man who is touched by the Spirit of God, i.e., the Son of God is formed in him by regeneration. Jesus Christ's holiness has to do with human life as it is. It is not a mystical, aesthetic thing that cannot work in the ordinary things of life, it is a holiness which "can be achieved with an ordinary diet and a wife and five children."

2. Provident Discretions for Christians

The great danger of Socialism is that it is vague, it has the right vision, but it ignores the margins and expects to come to a bigger understanding of things whilst ignoring the facts that are. Or take Sacerdotalism, which says the only way to build a governing peace over the human race is by an ecclesiastical system, such as the domination of the Pope. We can see to-day how much mischief and uselessness underlies this teaching.

These things do not seem to be a way out, but remember they are. They give rest and sustaining and peace, but not on the best line. They crush instead of developing. Another "way out" is the ultra-holiness line. There are those who go to the opposite extreme and say we must live a pure Divine life, ignoring all the claims of the natural. Jesus Christ taught that the natural must be sacrificed through obedience, and turned into the spiritual. If it is not, it will produce a tremendous divorce in the life.

(a) The Mischief of Absorption (Galatians 4:16–20) This teaching says: There are defects in the churches, but they are not to be swept away on that account, the defects must be corrected; form the churches into an imperial Church which will dominate everything. That is what happened when Paul began to plant the Christian faith, the Judaisers came after him and said—"Now we must absorb this," and the same spirit is at work in ecclesiastical minds to-day. The only way to get peace, they say, is by a big Church that will absorb everything; an imperial power to dominate. If you do, divisions will be quieted and a peace produced such as was produced by the Roman Empire, a peace that dominates by absorption.

The divisions of the churches are to be deplored, and denominationalism is to be deplored, but we must not forget that denominations have reared up the best men we know. The defects are clear and they have to be remedied; something will have to be done, and one suggested way out is this idea of absorption which has been proved in history to be a way out.

(b) The Mistiness of Abstractions (1 Corinthians 5:9–13)

Socialism and false Christianity are both misty, they deal with the idea of absorption, that you have to run the purist line where it cannot be run, denying the fact of nations and of families as they really are. Paul says—In your own spiritual relationships you have to be "dead nuts" against sensuality, but don't be fanatical. You have to maintain your personal relationship in purity amongst those who are not pure, and see that no intermixture of impurity gets in. In your own spiritual community these things must not be. Our Lord takes the same line in Matthew 18:15–17.

Never attempt to solve outside problems first. If sin is to be destroyed in my personal life on the basis of Redemption, it is to be destroyed outside me also; if sensuality is to be mortified in my personal life, it is to be mortified outside me also. The majority of us begin with the bigger problems outside and forget the one inside. A man has to learn the "plague of his own heart" before his own problems can be solved, then he will be free to help solve the problems outside.

The mistake is that we want to take the path of a shell. Jesus Christ says—No, I have taken the long trail, and "in your patience possess ye your souls," i.e., acquire the new way of looking at things. There are problems not easy of solution, they need patient dealing with day in and day out. Take, for instance, the way some missionaries train converts with regard to marriage laws; they have tried the "hustling" dodge, and found it to be no good. It takes a long time to lift people to a cleaner "sty"; it is absurd to rush in a fine ethic of Christianity on people who have been living in polygamy, their education takes time. The danger of the visionaries is that they do not seem to know how to get their visions to walk, and they never will unless they remember and take into account these big facts of sex and money and food. Are you going to judge with the same standards, a well brought up man with generations of good, clean blood in his veins, and a man who has generations of wrong and evil in his heredity? How are you going to judge the man who boils up with bestiality? It is with him not a matter of escaping from conventions, or of taking on the colour of those he is with; there is the great fact underneath. You cannot judge him, you have to be immensely patient with him.

(c) The Meaning of Affiliation (1 Peter 2:13–17)

In the present crisis another "way out" is not to ignore facts as they are, but to affiliate them; the ultimate end is that demarcations must go. It is the affiliation of churches, not the absorption of them, that will solve the problems, and the same with nations. But, remember, we are on crutches just now and there are things to be taken into account.

Every man is up against these things to-day—socialist or imperialist, he cannot think without being touched by problems. It is not that we can offer solutions for these problems, but that the line on which personal problems are solved by Jesus Christ is the line on which the bigger problems will be solved also. But it will take a long time, and we have need of patience. Answer the problem in yourself first: How long did it take you to get your ideals actual? to stand where you are now?

There are those in the national life who are visionaries and are apt to forget that at present we are not there, just as there are visionaries in the Christian life who are apt to forget the facts of human life—I like the vision, but don't ask me how I am to make it real. I like orchids, but don't ask me to look at the miasmic swamp in which they grow; I like the fine flower of virtue, but don't show me how it was produced. No man is born virtuous, virtue and purity are the outcome of fight; innocence is natural. Man has to have enough moral muscle in him to fight against the thing that wants to make him immoral; immediately he fights, he becomes virtuous in that particular. It is a difficult thing to fight for virtue. Virtue for a man, purity for a woman, and innocence for a child, is God's order.

In all our views we must get back to facts as they are. Keep your vision, but take facts as they are; make a clean sweep of the old rubbish, the creeds and notions, and then begin to build bit by bit. You will find that the personal problems are the ones that call first for solution, and when you have solved those, you can begin to help solve the others. If the men who get back after this war will remain true to what they saw in the agonies, they ought to begin to make the new impression felt along every line.

THE PRESSURE OF THE PRESENT

The index to moral failure is to care more for a religious society than for the Church, more for a trade union than for the nation.

Don't throw on God the dirty work you are called to do

A point of view is tyrannous, consequently when a man gets knocked about by circumstances and acquires other points of view, his findings are confused for a time.

We mean by "The pressure of the present" the things that crowd a man out from thinking on his own line. If he could only cut out the fact that he is a man, or that things are as they are, he could get on all right. We all have the trick of saying—If only I were not where I am!—If only I had not got the kind of people I have to live with! If our faith or our religion does not help us in the conditions we are in, we have either a further struggle to go through, or we had better abandon that faith and religion.

We have seen that there are ways out—the visionary way, the socialist way, or the mystical Christian way, each tending towards the brotherhood of man. The vision is all right, but how is it going to be made actual? It is easy to talk about God and holiness; humanity and love for one another; but present things must be taken into account. Jesus Christ's vision was unmistakable, and His demands from human beings were terrific, but He always took "things as they are" into account, and He insisted that in order to carry out His demands men must have the right "alloy." The Incarnation means the right alloy. For God to be of any use to human beings He must become incarnate; that means dust and Deity mixed in one. If you have merely an abstraction, the vision without the dust of the actual, you will never make the vision real. As Dr. Forsyth points out, if in dealing with religious societies, you ignore the barriers and simply look forward to the time when there will be no barriers, you are making a mistake and you will end in failure. The vision is right, but you must take things as they are into account. Our life as disciples is not a dream, but a discipline which calls for the use of all our powers.

There are two worlds—the Actual and the Real. My personal consciousness is at home in the actual world, but not in the real; it just touches the real, it touches God. There is an inference that there is a world other than the actual, but I am not at home in it; all I can get at by my personal consciousness is a fictitious reality. Neither the actual nor the ideal is the real; according to Jesus Christ the real can only be worked out on the line of personal experience. Our Lord was at home in the ideal as well as in the actual, and consequently everything in His personal life was real. We are apt to forget that in order to get at reality we have not only to use our heads, but our consciences. No man as yet has ever reached reality by his intellect. A man may have sublime views of life and at the same time be a moral tadpole in regard to actual life. The same with emotions; a man may have any number of aesthetic susceptibilities, the finest appreciation of colour and feeling and sound, but in actual life prove that none of it touches the sordid actualities of life. There is only one thing in a man that brings him to reality, and that is his conscience. Conscience is the faculty in me that fixes on the highest I know; and it is through conscience that man touches the reality of things and becomes transformed. It is then the intellect and the emotions can come together.

1. Findings from the Historic Christ (Luke 11:17–26)

Christianity is not adherence to a set of principles—righteousness, goodness, uprightness—all these things are secondary. The first great fundamental thing about Christianity is a personal relationship to Jesus Christ which enables a man to work out the ideal and actual as one in his own personal life.

No man thinks so clearly at any time or is ever so thrilled as in his "teens." The tragedy begins when he finds his actual life cannot be brought up to the standard of the ideal, and he closes with an agony of his own. Then he goes to preachers who talk about the ideal, or to books, thinking he will find the real thing; but too often he does not. He finds the vision there, but not working out in actual practice; and his agony deepens. The ideal presented by Jesus Christ fascinates some men right away; there is something enthralling about Him; but inevitably, sooner or later, they come to the experience of the early disciples recorded in Mark 14:50: "They all forsook him and fled." "I gave all I had to the ideal presented by Jesus Christ, I honestly tried my best to serve Him, but I cannot go on; the New Testament presents ideals beyond my attainment. I won't lower my ideals, although I realise that I can never hope to make them actual." No man is so laboured or crushed as the man who, with the religion of ideals, finds he cannot carry them out. There are many more men in that attitude than is supposed. Men are kept away from Jesus Christ by a sense of honesty as much as by dishonesty. "I don't deny that Jesus Christ saves—but if you only knew me!—the mistakes I have made, the wrong things I have done, the blundering things—I should be a perfect disgrace to Him." Our Lord says to such a one, "Come unto Me . . . , and I will give you rest." When a man comes, he will realise that Jesus Christ does not tell him to do his best, but-Surrender to Me, and I will put into you that which will make the ideal and the actual one, and you will be able to work out in actual life what you see by the power of vision. Without Jesus Christ there is an unbridgeable gap between the ideal and the actual. The only way out is through a personal relationship to Him, a relationship with Himself whereby a man can transform the ideal and the actual into one and slowly work it out in his own experience, and then help other folks.

The thing you find to be the solution in your personal life is also the line of solution for other things. If Jesus Christ is the way for a man to make things real in his own life, He is also the way for things outside a man's personal life to be made real. It is easy to keep our intellects busy with the ideal, but the problem is how to bring the ideal and the actual together, how to make our actual life in accordance with our ideal. Jesus Christ says, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." He is not talking about deliverance from hell, but about being born into a new realm. The religion of Jesus Christ means that a man is delivered from sin into something which makes him forget all about himself. The trick of pseudoevangelism is that it drives a man into concentrated interest in himself. The curse of much modern religion is that it makes us desperately interested in ourselves, overweeningly concerned about our own whiteness.

These findings are not part and parcel of the average Christian conception of Jesus Christ, because we do not take our findings from the New Testament, we take them from what we have been taught about Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ said, "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloke for their sin" (John 15:22). Then why did He come? Why should He come with an ideal that knocks the bottom out of my self-realisation? Why tell me to love my enemies when I hate them? Why tell me to be pure in heart when I am impure? Why should He taunt me with ideals? If Jesus Christ is only a Teacher, then all He can do is to tantalise us, to erect a standard we cannot attain to; but when we are born again of the Spirit of God, we know that He did not come only to teach us, He came to make us what He teaches we should be. These are some of the things which ought to be deduced from reading the New Testament.

(a) The Kingdom of God (Luke 11:20)

We know about the kingdom of man, but not about the other two kingdoms which belong to the domain Jesus Christ lived in.

The "strong man" is Satan; the stronger than he," Jesus Christ. The result of Jesus Christ's coming is disturbance. "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matthew 10:34). When Satan rules, his goods, i.e., the souls of men, are in peace; there is no breaking out into sin and wrongdoing, and before God can rule man's kingdom He must first overthrow this false rule. The coming of Jesus Christ is not a peaceful thing; it is overwhelming and frantically disturbing, because the first thing He does is to destroy every peace that is not based on a personal relationship to Himself. Am I willing to be born into the realm Jesus Christ is in? If I am, I must be prepared for chaos straight away in the realm I am in. The rule which has come in between God and man has to be eclipsed. Jesus Christ's entering into me means absolute chaos in the way I have been looking at things, a turning of everything upside down.

Just as Jesus Christ produces havoc in personal lives, so He will produce it all through on every line. For instance, if Jesus Christ had not obeyed the call of His Father, His own nation would not have blasphemed against the Holy Ghost. He ruined the career of a handful of fishermen, He disappointed and crushed the hopes of many and perturbed their peace. He continually produced havoc in people's lives.

(b) The Kingdom of Satan (Luke 11:18)

There is a difference between the Devil and Satan. The Bible holds man responsible for the introduction of Satan. Adam started a communication with another of God's creations, and the result was Satan. Jesus Christ calls the self-realisation point of view, "Satan," anti-Christ (Matthew 16:23). When our Lord comes face to face with Satan, He deals with him as representing the attitude man takes up in organising his life apart from any consideration of God. For a thing to be satanic does not mean that it is an abominable and immoral thing. The satanically managed man is moral, upright, proud, and individual; he is absolutely self-governed and has no need of God. Jesus Christ says "that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God" (Luke 16:15).

(c) The Kingdom of Man (Luke 11:21-26)

Jesus Christ always said, "If any man will be My disciple"—He did not clamour for him, or button-hole him. He never took a man off his guard, or used a revivalistic meeting to get a man out of his wits and then say, "Believe in Me," but, "Take time and consider what you are doing; if you would be My disciple, you must lose your 'soul,' i.e., your way of reasoning about things." When I am born from above (RV mg), I have to reconstruct another soul, I have to look at things from a different standpoint, viz., the standpoint of Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ taught non-resistance on the physical line in order that men might resist more on the moral line. When He was brought face to face with evil, His attitude was "Get!"—no compromise.

When Jesus Christ comes in with His standards, a man's way of looking at things is upset, and he begins to see the point of view of Jesus Christ when he strikes his own personal agony. He is brought face to face with the possibility that after all Jesus Christ knows what He is talking about, and that Rationalism may be a fools' paradise, and he himself an intellectual ostrich. We never blame our fundamental conception until we get deep enough down. Rationalism at the basis is wrong; it goes to pieces just where we expect it to prove right.

2. Findings from Hysteric Christianity (Mark 9)

That is, Christianity based on sentimentality.

(a) The Vision of God (Mark 9:5)

We are not built for mountains and dawns and artistic affinities; they are for moments of inspiration, that is all. We are built for the valley, for the ordinary stuff of life, and this is where we have to prove our mettle. A false Christianity takes us up on the mount and we want to stay there. But what about the devilpossessed world? Oh, let it go to hell! We are having a great time up here.

(b) The Valley of Godlessness (Mark 9:17–19)

The intellectualist or dreamer who by his dreams or isolation is not made fitter to deal with actual life, proves that his dreams are mere hysterical drivel. If his dreams only succeed in making him hold aloof from his fellow-men, a visionary who deals only with things belonging to the mountaintop, he is self-indulgent to a degree. No man has any right to be a spectator of his fellow-men; he ceases to be in touch with reality.

It is a great thing to be on the mount with God, and the mountains are meant for inspiration and meditation; but a man is taken there only in order that he may go down afterwards among the devilpossessed and lift them up. Our Christianity has been as powerless as dish-water with regard to things as they are; consequently the net result of Christianity is judged to be a failure. But Christianity, according to Jesus Christ, has never been tried and failed; it has been tried and abandoned in individual cases because it has been found a bit too hard, too definite and emphatic, and for the same reason it has been abandoned in nations and in Churches; but Christianity has never been tried and gone through with honourably and found to fail.

The same thing with regard to the socialistic vision; it is a great thing to have the vision, but those who have it are apt to forget the limitation of actual things as they are. Jesus Christ gives the vision of God, God's order; but He also gives us God's permissive will. God's order, according to Jesus Christ, is no sin, no sickness, no limitation, no evil, and no wrong: His permissive will allows these things, and I have to get at God's order through His permissive will by an effort of my own.

(c) The Verity of Gumption (Mark 9:29)

The disciples had the stamp of all false hysteric religion. "You work a miracle; we don't want to accept the moral responsibility." Jesus Christ said: "You cannot do these things by magic, it must be done by concentration." Peter thought it would be a fine thing to remain on the Mount, but Jesus Christ took them down from the mount and put them into the valley, i.e., the place that explains the meaning of the vision. There are times when my false religion makes me want to throw my dirty work on God. Supposing I am a slovenly workman and get saved, and I say-"Well, I will ask God to make my work fine and clean"; He won't do it, it is not His job. God's job is to alter my heredity, I cannot alter that; but when my heredity is altered, I have to manifest my altered heredity in actual circumstances. This is not only true in personal life, but in every domain. For instance, God won't clear up our social conditions; Jesus Christ is not a social Reformer, He came to alter us first, and if there is any social reform done on earth, we will have to do it. We are not to ask God to do what He has created us to do, any more than we are to attempt to do what He alone can do. Prayer is often a temptation to bank on a miracle of God instead of on a moral issue, i.e., it is much easier to ask God to do my work than it is to do it myself. Until we are disciplined properly, we will always be inclined to bank on God's miracles and refuse to do the moral thing ourselves. It is our job, and it will never be done unless we do it.

Visions are great things, but it is useless to tell a man about the vision of God on earth unless you can get down into the mire he is in and lift him up; and the marvel is that if you have got hold of the vision of God and are working it out by moral obedience in your own life, you can do the lifting. Moral insight is gained only by obedience. The second I disobey in personal bodily chastity, I hinder everyone with whom I come in contact; if in moral integrity I disobey for one second, I hinder everyone; and if as a Christian I disobey in spiritual integrity, others will suffer too.

The vision must be worked out or there is no grip in it. The majority of us who are called Christians could do nothing when the war struck us. We had our visions of God, our notions of prayer, etc., but we had no grip, we could not touch the demon-possessed. We have to deal with men who actually have done the wrong thing; can we lift them up into the place where they will become changed men? or can we only preach in a way that is equivalent to putting a snowdrift over a dung-heap? If we cannot live in the demon-possessed valley, with the hold of God on us, lifting up those who are down, by the power of the thing that is in us, our Christianity is only an abstraction.

We need to remember that the vision must be worked out in our own personal experience first. If the vision is real, the biggest test of it is that it makes God easier to believe in. Think of the men and women you know who have made it easier for you to believe in God. You go to them with your problems, and things get different, the atmosphere of your mind alters; you have come in contact with a man or woman who in his actual life is working out his vision. The best way you and I can help our fellow-men is to work out the thing in our own lives first. Unless it is backed up by our life, talking is of no use. We may talk a donkey's hind leg off, but we are powerless to do any lifting. If we look after the vision in our own life, we shall be a benediction to other people.

THE PSYCHOLOGICAL PHASE—I

But I, amid the torture and the taunting, I have had Thee!

Thy hand was holding my hand fast and faster,
Thy voice was close to me;

And glorious eyes said, "Follow Me, thy Master, Smile as I smile thy faithfulness to see."

DIVERGENT FUNDAMENTAL POINTS

1. Health

A perfect balance between our organism and the outer world (Psalm 73:3–14)

- (a) Socialism (Revelation 13:11-18)
- (b) Spirituality (2 Corinthians 4:16–18)

2. Happiness

A perfect balance between our inclination and environment (Philippians 3:17–20)

- (a) Superman (2 Thessalonians 2:3–12)
- (b) Sanctification (1 Thessalonians 4:3; 5:23–24; 1 John 3:3)

3. Holiness

A perfect balance between our disposition and the law of God (John 14:27)

- (a) Sin (1 John 3:8)
- (b) Sacrament

The rationalist says—"I can explain the conscious by reason, therefore all the rest is reasonable." There are chaotic elements which burst up into a man's conscious life and make him know that there are things beyond reason; not that they contradict reason, but that they are different from it. The basis of things in a man's personal life is tragedy; at any second there may come a terrific upheaval from underneath that may knock all his calculations to smithereens. Men may be good at dealing with problems on the outside but never have faced one inside their own breastbone. The thing that knocks the conceit out of a man is to get what Solomon talked about, a dose of "the plague of his own heart," he becomes a little less certain that he can rule himself. When I receive the Spirit of God, I am lifted not out of reason, but into touch with the infinite Reason of God.

Health, Happiness, and Holiness are all divergent views as to what is the main aim of a man's life.

1. Health (Psalm 73:3-14)

Health means the balance between my physical life and external nature, and is maintained purely by a sufficient fighting vitality within against things outside. Health is equilibrium maintained through a terrific power of fight. Disease means that the harmony of health is gone, and a sign that the fighting corpuscles are getting weak. The things which keep you going when you are alive, disintegrate you when you are dead. Everything that is not my physical life is designed to put me to death, but if I have enough fighting power I produce the balance of health.

The same is true in my moral life; everything that does not partake of the nature of virtue is the enemy of virtue in me, and it depends on what moral calibre I have as to whether I overcome and produce virtue. I am only moral if I have sufficient moral power in me to fight; immediately I fight, I am moral in that particular. Disinclination to sin is not virtue, any more than innocence is purity. Innocence has always to be shielded, purity is something that has been tested and tried and has triumphed, something that has character at the back of it, that can overcome, and has overcome. Virtue is acquired, and so is purity. Everything that is not virtuous tries to make me immoral. Always do something you don't need to do for the sake of doing it—it keeps you in moral fighting trim.

The same thing spiritually, everything that is not my spiritual life makes for its undoing. Holiness is the balance between my disposition and the laws of God as expressed in Jesus Christ, and if I have enough spiritual fighting capacity I shall produce a character that is like Jesus Christ's. Character must be attained, it is never given to us.

The basis of physical, moral, and spiritual life is antagonism.

"A healthy mind in a healthy body," is not always true, for some of the finest minds are in diseased bodies. On the other hand the Psalmist talks about the "wicked"—"there are no bands in their death. . . . They are not in trouble as other men; neither are they plagued like other men. . . . Their eyes stand out with fatness: they have more than heart could wish." The healthy-minded cult evades anything that would be likely to upset the health of the body.

A man can make certain forms of vice or drugs necessary to himself, and the moralist who ignores the fact that a man will suffer for a time by giving them up, is nothing short of a fool. Every appetite I create demands its satisfaction; and the harmony of my body depends on its being satisfied; but not the health of my moral life. If the moral life is allowed its way, the man who has maintained his bodily health by other means has to go to rack and ruin before he gets another balance. No wonder men will do anything to avoid conviction of sin! No man can have his state of mind altered without suffering for it in his body, and that is why men will do anything rather than be upset. "I like to listen to this talk about Jesus Christ, but don't put your finger on the thing that upsets my mind. Why should I bother with a standard of things that upsets me?"

The healthy-minded cult runs through everything. If certain types of health are to be maintained, all social life will have to be re-faced, marriage will go by the board, and all the higher amenities of friend-ship—all the best and noblest moral relationships.

Sin is a thing that puts man's self out of centre altogether, making it ex-centric; and when the Spirit of God convicts him, the man knows he is wrongly related to God, to his own body, and to everything around him, and he is in a state of abject misery. The health of the body is upset, the balance pushed right out, by conviction of sin. Conviction of sin makes a man's beauty "to consume away like a moth." "Beauty" means the perfectly ordered completeness of man's whole nature. When once a man's mind is upset, that beauty begins to go, the equilibrium is upset. This accounts for the characteristic tendency abroad to-day: ignore sin, deny it ever was; if you make mistakes, forget them, live the healthy minded, open-hearted, sunshiny life, don't allow yourself to be convicted of sin.

To say "Camp life has made men worse" is not true; nothing can! Camp life strips the veneer of civilised life from a man, and he comes out with what he is, he has to reveal himself, but nothing can make a man either better or worse than he is. In producing a splendid soldier you produce a splendid animal; then to be horrified because the animal gets its way is absurd. Is it our idea of a man's life, that he should be a splendid healthy animal? If so, there are several things you will have to cut out; you will have to cut out Jesus Christ, never read the New Testament, don't let the standards of Jesus Christ—never hate, never lust, always do more than your duty—come in, or you will upset your health.

Health seems to be the basis of people's outlook, but it can never account for the problems.

(a) Socialism (Revelation 13:11–18)

Numbers are used as symbols for great big generalities, and the Book of Revelation takes the number 666 to be the symbol of humanity sufficient for itself, it does not need God. The description given is of a great system in which humanity is its own god. (See Genesis 3:5, 22.) When the Bible talks of Man, it refers to the Federal Head of the race. The remarkable point of the vision is that it says the beast (in the spiritual, the self-realising, sense) looks like a lamb, but talks like a dragon; that is, he looks like Jesus Christ, but when he talks, he talks like the old imperial dragon; when the crisis comes, he has tooth and claw exactly like the beast. The vision of Socialism is magnificent; there are benedictions and blessings for mankind on the line of Socialism which have never been yet; but if once the root is cut from Redemption, it will be one of the most frantic forms of despotic tyranny the human race has ever known. It looks like the lamb, but when the big crisis comes, it gives life to the beast. It is in the wake of Socialism that the resuscitation of Plato's ideas will come. Trace your ideas back to their roots, and you will find the root of Socialism is in Plato's teaching. You will produce healthy organisms, but will you produce noble-minded men and women after the stamp of Jesus Christ?

2. Happiness (Philippians 3:17-21)

There is a difference between environment and circumstances. Every man has his own environment; it is that element in his circumstances which fits his disposition. We each make our own environment, our personality does it for us. Happiness means we select only those things out of our circumstances that will keep us happy. It is the great basis of false Christianity. The Bible nowhere speaks about a "happy" Christian; it talks plentifully of joy. Happiness depends on things that happen, and may sometimes be an insult; joyfulness is never touched by external conditions, and a joyful heart is never an insult. Who could be happy these days? It would be the outcome of the most miserable selfishness to be happy under such conditions as are everywhere to-day, the sign of a shallow-minded, selfish individual. Happiness is the characteristic of a child's life, and God condemns us for taking happiness out of a child's life; but we should have done with happiness long ago, we should be men and women facing the stern issues of life, knowing that the grace of God is sufficient for every problem the devil can present.

We start with the idea that prosperity or happiness or morality is the end of a man's existence; according to God, it is something other than any of these, viz., "to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever." Happiness would be all right if things were reasonable; it would be ideal if there were no self-interest, but everyone of us is cunning enough to take advantage somewhere, and after a while my inclination is to get my happiness at your cost.

(a) Superman (2 Thessalonians 2:3-12)

In Socialism there are things which look like Jesus Christ, but in the end they are more dragon-like than anything else, because one thing is evaded. The same with happiness, when once happiness and self-indulgence are allowed to rule and have their way, the end is the "Superman." If I believe I have the finest idea of happiness for my child, my child will have to come my way, and "damn the consequences." The same thing is true with a class or a nation or a state if it believes it is God. Each one of us in his own domain exhibits the tendency: in the state it is on a gigantic scale because the state is bigger than a man's individual life. The standard of happiness ends in the upset of happiness, in a tyranny and despotism of the most appalling order.

3. Holiness (John 14:27)

Holiness is the balance between our disposition and the law of God as expressed in Jesus Christ, and it is such a stern thing that the majority of us have either not begun it, or we have begun it and left it alone.

What kind of peace had Jesus Christ? A peace that kept Him for thirty years at home with brothers and sisters who did not believe in Him; a peace that kept Him through three years of popularity, hatred, and scandal; and He says, "My peace I give unto you"; "let not your heart be troubled," i.e., see that your heart does not get disturbed out of its relationship to Me.

But remember Jesus Christ has to upset the old equilibrium first. When a man is probed into by the Spirit of God, the waters of his conscious life get troubled and other ideas emerge. If I am going to follow the dictates of the Spirit of God and take up the attitude of Jesus Christ to things, it will produce an earthquake in my outlook. It will begin with the bodily life—"Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?"

If you would be My disciple, says Jesus, that is the cost. No man can shift the centre of his life without being upset. "Men of good taste are averse to the teaching of Jesus Christ," because if He is right, they are wrong. Take up any attitude of Jesus Christ's and let it work, and the first thing that happens is that the old order and the old peace go. You cannot get back peace on the same level. If once you have allowed Jesus Christ to upset the equilibrium, holiness is the inevitable result, or no peace for ever (Matthew 10:34).

If happiness or health is a man's main idea, let him keep away from Jesus Christ's, for if he has any conscience at all, he will lose that health and happiness. Jesus Christ stands for holiness. At all costs a man must be rightly related to God. Redemption is the basis. When you take a point of view, watch the things it does not cover, and if you are going to think, think clean through, playing the man on every line.

THE PSYCHOLOGICAL PHASE—II

Man Becomes What He Is

For the glory and the passion of this midnight I praise Thy name—I give Thee thanks, O Christ! Thou that hast neither failed me nor forsaken Through these hard hours with victory overpriced; Now that I too of Thy passion have partaken, For the world's sake—called—elected—sacrificed!

N.B.—On Personality and Individuality; Disposition and Character

- 1. Bias of Degeneration (Romans 5:12)
 - (a) Disposition of Defiance (Romans 8:7)
 - (b) Destiny of Death (Romans 6:23; 7:24; 8:6; 2 Corinthians 4:4)
 - (c) Battle of the Margins (Hebrews 12:14-17)
- 2. Bent of Regeneration (Galatians 1:15–16; 2:20)(a) Donation of Deity (1 Corinthians 1:30;
 - Ephesians 2:5–6)
 (b) Disposition of Divinity (John 17:22; Philippians 2:5–8)
 - (c) Borderland of the Mastery (Galatians 5:16–22)

Circumstances make a man reveal what spirit he is of. Crises reveal character more quickly than anything else.

Personality is of the nature of light, it can be merged; individuality is like a lamp which cannot merge. There may be many lamps, but only one light. Individuality cannot mix; it is all "elbows," it separates and isolates; it is the thing that characterises us naturally, in our elementary condition we are all individual. Individuality is the shell, as it were, holding something more valuable than itself—the kernel, which is personality. The shell of individuality is God's created natural coating for the protection of the personal life. It preserves the personality, and is the characteristic of the child; but if I stick to my individuality and mistake it for the personal life, I shall remain isolated, a disintegrating force ending in destruction. Individuality counterfeits personality as lust counterfeits love. God designed human nature for Himself; individuality debases human nature for itself.

Personality merges, and you only get your real identity when you are merged with another person. A man has his individuality transfigured when he falls in love. When love or the Spirit of God strikes a man or woman, they are transformed, they no longer insist on their separate individuality. Christianity is personal, therefore it is un-individual. Personality is the characteristic of the spiritual man as individuality is the characteristic of the natural man. Our Lord never spoke in terms of individuality, of a man's "elbows" or isolated position, but in terms of personality, "that they all may be one." Our Lord can never be defined in terms of individuality or independence, but only in terms of personality. He was the antipodes of the individual; there was nothing independent or wilful or self-assertive about Him. Jesus Christ emancipates the personality; the individuality is transfigured in the mastership of God's purpose in Christ Jesus, and the transfiguring element is love; personal, passionate devotion to Himself, and to others Disposition is the set of my mind; character is the whole trend of my life, not what I do occasionally. Character is what we make; disposition is what we are born with. We make our characters out of the disposition we have, and when we are born again we get a new disposition, the disposition of the Son of God. We cannot imitate the disposition of Jesus Christ; it is either there or it isn't. Our destiny is determined by our disposition; pre-ordination in regard to individual life depends entirely on the disposition of the individual. If the disposition of the Son of God is in me, then heaven and God are my destination; if the disposition in me is not the disposition of God, my home is as obviously certain with the devil. Our destiny is as eternal and as certain as God's throne; it is an unalterable decree of God; but I am free to choose by what disposition I am to be ruled. I cannot alter my disposition, but I can choose to let God alter it, and Redemption means that in my practical experience Jesus Christ can give me a new heredity, a new disposition. Our destiny is something fixed by God, but determined by our disposition. We are all born with a disposition, i.e., the peculiar bent of our personal life, and it is that which determines our destiny. Praying won't alter it, nor science, nor reasoning; if the destiny of a man is going to be altered it must be altered by the Creator (John 3:3).

We are much more than we are conscious of being. Our Lord said the Holy Spirit would bring back into our conscious mind the things He had said. We never forget a thing although often we cannot recall it; we hear it and it goes into the unconscious mind. Things go on in our unconscious minds that we know nothing about, and at any second they may burst up into our conscious life and perturb us. The Spirit of God enters into a man below the threshold of his consciousness. When He will emerge into the man's conscious mind no one can say; but when He does, there is an earthquake, and the man has to readjust his life in every particular. The Spirit of God entering into the spirit of a man brings a totally new relationship to things.

1. Bias of Degeneration (Romans 5:12)

There are only two men according to the Bible, Adam and Jesus Christ. They are the representatives of the human race. The "image of God" was male and female together in the way God created them (Genesis 5:1-2), and sin entered into the world by that "Man." The Bible does not say that God punished the human race for one man's sin, but that the disposition of sin, i.e., my claim to my right to myself, entered into the human race by one man. The disposition of sin is not morality or wrongdoing, but my claim to my right to myself. When Jesus Christ faced men with all the forces of evil in them and men who were clean living, and moral, and upright, He did not pay any attention to the moral degradation of the one or to the moral attainment of the other; He was looking at something we do not see, viz., at the disposition in both, not at the immorality or the morality, but at the disposition—my claim to my right to myself, self-realisation, and He said: "If you would be My disciple, that must go."

(a) Disposition of Defiance (Romans 8:7)

To say that "sin is nothing but the shadow of good" is not true. Evil, according to the Bible, is the shadow of good, but sin is positive defiance. You can be educated by evil, but not by sin. Sin is the positive disposition in me that has to be removed; evil is the negative thing outside me. There is no such thing as sin outside the Bible; sin is a revelation fact, and it is the one fact that accounts for the curious twist we find in things. We must take into account that there is a bias in human nature, viz., self-interest, self-realisation; it may be refined or low, but it is there. Common sense says, what a wonderful being man is in the making! The New Testament says, what a magnificent ruin of what man was once! Which view covers the biggest number of facts?

The great element in sin is defiance against God. There is a difference between sin and sins; sin is a disposition and is never spoken of as being forgiven; sins are acts for which we are responsible. Sin is a thing we are born with, and we cannot touch sin; God touches sin in Redemption. God never laid the sin of the human race on anybody but Himself, and in Redemption He has dealt with the disposition of sin. A man cannot be forgiven for what he is not to blame, but God holds a man responsible for refusing to receive a new heredity when he sees that Jesus Christ can give it to him. In the Cross of Jesus Christ, God redeemed the whole human race from the possibility of damnation through the heredity of sin. If, when we realise that Jesus Christ came to deliver us from the wrong disposition by putting in a right one, we refuse to allow Him to do it, that is the moment when condemnation begins (John 3:19).

(b) The Destiny of Death

(Romans 6:23; 7:24; 8:6; 2 Corinthians 4:4)

Many a clean-living man is in the condition these verses describe. The domain Jesus Christ represents does not awaken a tremor of sympathy, something has to stab him wide-awake, rouse him to other issues and bring him to his wits' end before the things Jesus Christ stands for are even interesting. You cannot make Jesus Christ mean anything to a man; He may be nothing to him one minute and everything the next; it depends on what happens. A man may go on well contented until something pierces his hide, or brings him up against the things which profoundly alter life; then suddenly he is within another frontier and it begins to be possible for him to see the kingdom in which Jesus Christ moves.

(c) Battle of the Margins (Hebrews 12:14–17)

There is no effort about Esau, he is content with being once born; Jacob could not be satisfied with anything less than God. Jacob tried in a hundred and one ways, cunningly to satisfy himself, but it was of no use. Esau was a man who had no battles at all, or if he had any, he fought them all on the wrong side of the margins. A man is not brought up to the margins in an ordinary way, but only through an agony. We do not come near the margins until we are hit by a form of supreme suffering, and then we see we have been shutting our lives away from a great domain. If Jesus Christ is going to regenerate us, what is the problem He is up against? We have an heredity we had no say in, we are not holy, nor likely to be; Jesus Christ had the disposition of Deity, and He says we have to be fathomlessly pure in heart. If all He can do is to tell me that I must be holy, be what I never can be, present me with an ideal I cannot come anywhere near, His teaching plants despair; He is nothing more than a tantaliser and I wish He had never come. But if He is a Regenerator, one who first of all can put into me His own heredity, then I see what He is driving at in the Sermon on the Mount—that the disposition He puts in is like His own. There is not one characteristic in the Sermon on the Mount that fits in with a man's natural disposition; we may give our mental assent to it, but our actual life won't walk that road; Jesus Christ is the only one who can carry it out. Redemption means that Jesus Christ can put into any man the hereditary disposition that was in Himself, and all the standards He gives are based on that disposition. Jesus Christ teaches that when His Spirit is in us, we shall manifest a likeness to Himself if we allow His disposition to react in us.

2. Bent of Regeneration (Galatians 1:15-16; 2:20)

The heredity of the Son of God is planted in me by God, a moral miracle. Pseudo-evangelism has gone wildly off the track in that it has made salvation a bag of tricks whereby if I believe a certain shibboleth, I am tricked out of hell and made right for heavena travesty of the most tremendous revelation of the Redemption of the human race by Jesus Christ. The New Testament's teaching about Christianity is that the Son of God is formed in me on the basis of His marvellous regeneration until, as Paul says, "the life which I now live in the flesh"—not the life I am going to live when I get to heaven, but the life I now live in this flesh, the life that all see and know—"I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me, and gave Himself for me." What has happened to Paul? He has gone through his battle of the margins, he has gone through a moral decision with Jesus Christ, not an intellectual one; he has said—I agree with God in the things that He condemns in the Cross, self-interest, self-realisation, though these have been dearer to me than my life; "I count all these things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." It may take four minutes or forty years to be identified with Jesus Christ; it depends on whether I am willing to face the music, i.e., forgo my hereditary right to my claim to myself and let Him take His claim to me. "Holy Spirit" is the name of the new disposition, and if Jesus Christ can put that into me (Luke 11:13), I see how things can happen.

(a) Donation of Deity (1 Corinthians 1:30; Ephesians 2:5-6)

"The kingdom of God is within you," Jesus said, i.e., without observation Spirituality is a kingdom within, a new way of looking at things. The moral miracle of Christianity is that when I know my limitations, when I reach the frontiers by weakness not by will, Jesus Christ says, Blessed are you, I will do the rest. But I have to get there; it is not that God will not do anything for me until I do, but that He cannot. God cannot put into me, a moral being, the disposition that is in Jesus Christ unless I am conscious I need it. I cannot receive that which I do not believe I need; but when I am struck by an agony, or the sense of helplessness with regard to Jesus Christ's teaching, I am ready then to receive the donation of Deity.

In the natural world I am born with an heredity for which I am not responsible, and I have a disposition through that heredity; but I have not a character through heredity. God gives disposition, but never character. Habits are not transmitted by heredity, only tendencies and qualities; habits are formed by imitation. Heredity means that the qualities or defects of the parents are manifested in the children. If I receive the Spirit of God and become a son of God by right of regeneration, God does not give me my Christian character, I have to make that. He gives me the disposition of His Son; He puts Holy Spirit into me, then He says—Now, breast and back as they should be, and work it out. My disposition tells through my body on to outward circumstances, and as I obey the Spirit of God and the word of God, I slowly form the Christian character.

(b) Disposition of Divinity (John 17:22; Philippians 2:5–8)

The Spirit of Christ is given us, but not the mind of Christ. Every man is born with a human spirit, but he forms his own mind by the way his human spirit reacts in the circumstances he is in, and education gives power to a man to express his personal spirit better and better. The Spirit of Christ comes into me by regeneration, then I have to begin to form the mind of Christ, begin to look at things from a different standpoint, viz., the standpoint of Jesus Christ, and to do that I must lose my soul. Soul is not a thing I have got, soul is the way a man's personal spirit manifests itself in his body, the way he reasons about things, the rational expression of his personal spirit.

If my soul has been formed on the belief that rationalism is the basis of things, that things are calculable, then when the Spirit of God enters into my spirit and the principles of Jesus burst up into my life, the former foundations quake; I discover that tragedy, and not rationalism, is the basis of things, and I have to readjust my mind. When a man is saved by God's grace, it is the beginning of the end. Some are content to be dragged into salvation by the sheer mercy of God, but Jesus Christ's conception is that a man should become His disciple and begin to mould his thinking on the basis of the Spirit of God that comes into him. That takes time; when the crisis comes, am I going to obey the word the Spirit of God recalls to me?

(c) Borderland of Mastery (Galatians 5:16-22)

The Holy Spirit in a Christian wars against the old heredity; the new heredity and the old war one against another. Is that all God can do for me? destroy unity in my life, make me a divided personality, and make me sick with conviction of sin? If that is all God can do, I would rather be an atheist; but if it is only a stage towards the borderland of mastery, that is a different matter. Paul says if I obey the Spirit of God, I must crucify the other mind. God cannot do that, I must do it myself. Yes, I will agree with the Spirit of God and go to the death of my old disposition (Romans 6:6). If I do not put to death the things in me that are not of God, they will put to death the things that are of God.

There are things in a man's natural life that are fine and beautiful, but when a man comes to Jesus Christ, he has to forgo them, and go to their "white funeral."12 This is a phrase Tennyson uses in speaking of the "white funeral" of the single life; and that aspect is the only one that suits the spiritual life. Think of it in reference to babyhood, there comes a time when that phase dies and child life begins; there is a "white funeral" of the baby; and then a "white funeral" of the child and girlhood begins. Apply that spiritually. There is any amount in paganism that is good and virtuous, but if I am going on with Jesus Christ, I have to give those things a "white funeral," make a termination of them, and we very often get there through disenchantment. It is not true that everything in life apart from Christ is bad; there are many virtues that are good and moral, pride and self-interest are remarkably fine things in some aspects, "highly esteemed among men," but when I see Jesus Christ I have to go to their moral death. Any fool will give up wrongdoing and the devil, if he knows how to do it; but it takes a man in love with Jesus Christ to give up the best he has for Him. Jesus Christ does not demand that I give up the wrong, but the right, the best I have for Him, viz., my right to myself. Will I agree to go through my "white funeral" and say I deliberately cut out my claim to my right to myself, deliberately go to the death of my self-will? If I will, instantly the Spirit of God begins to work, and slowly the new mind is formed.

These crises are reached in personal life, and we find the same thing in the life outside, and the only line of solution is this one. If we find a line of emancipation and solution for ourselves, we have also found a line of solution for problems outside ourselves. Moral problems are only solved by obedience. We cannot see what we see until we see it. Intellectually things can be worked out, but morally the solution is only reached by obedience. One step in obedience is worth years of study, and will take us into the centre of God's will for us. All our darkness comes because we will try to get into the thing head first. We must be born into the kingdom of God, Jesus says, before we can begin to think about it (John 3:3; 7:17), and when the life is there, we begin to form the masteries. We must take into account the bias of degeneration and the bent of regeneration, and our agreement with both is the only line on which we can solve the problems.

HUMANITY AND HOLINESS

PAST ERROR: A CHRISTIANITY THAT UTILISED HUMANITY

PRESENT ERROR: A HUMANITY THAT UTILISES CHRISTIANITY

BIBLE POINT OF VIEW: GOD AND MAN IN UNION.

We are not suffering to-day from dogmatic theologians, but dogmatic scientists, socialists and evolutionists. To-day's cant is the cant of unspirituality.

If your religion injures your intelligence, it is bad. If your religion injures your character, it is bad. If your religion injures your conscience, it is criminal.

In the past the error of the Christian faith was that it paid no attention to a man's actual life; it simply used human beings and made them catspaws for a religious line of things. The present error is that humanity utilises Christianity; if Jesus Christ does not coincide with our line of things, we toss Him overboard;

^{12. &}quot;white funeral": phrase from Tennyson's poem "To H.R.H. Princess Beatrice"; to Chambers, a white funeral meant a passage from one stage of life to another; leaving the past behind and moving into the future; he often used it to mean death to self and a complete surrender to God.

Humanity is on the throne. In the New Testament the point of view is God and Man in union.

1. Body of Man—Solidarity of Sin (2 Thessalonians 2:3-4)

The New Testament way of looking at humanity is not the modern way. In the New Testament men and women exist, there is no such thing as "Humanity," the human race as a whole.

A materialist says—Because my religious beliefs do for me, therefore they are satisfactory. Not in the tiniest degree. The test of a man's religious faith is not that it does for him, but that it will do for the worst wreck he ever knew. If every one were well brought up and had a fine heredity, then there are any number of intellectual forms of belief that would do. The materialistic line works like a searchlight, lighting up that it does and no more, but the daylight of actual experience reveals a hundred and one other facts. It does not show a clear simple path, but brings to light a multitude of facts never seen before. The evolutionist looks at man and says, What a glorious promise of what he is going to be! The New Testament looks at man's body and moral life and intelligence and says, What a ruin of what God designed him to be!

(a) Adam (Genesis 5:1-2)

Adam was created to be the friend and companion of God; he was to have dominion over all the life in the air and earth and sea, but one thing he was not to have dominion over, and that was himself. Sin, according to the Bible, is man taking his right to himself, and thereby he lost his lordship over the air and earth and sea. The only Being who ever walked this earth and was Lord of earth and air and sea as God designed man to be, was Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ and Adam, as he was first created, are the normal men, the representatives of the human race. Jesus Christ mirrors what the human race will be like on the basis of Redemption, a perfect oneness between God and man.

(b) Anarchy (Genesis 11:1-9)

This is the result in civilisation of Adam's sin. Sin is red-handed anarchy against God. Not one in a thousand understands sin; we understand only about sins on the physical line, which are external weaknesses. In the common-sense domain sin does not amount to much; sin belongs to the real domain. The sin the Bible refers to is a terrific and powerful thing, a deliberate and emphatic independence of God and His claim to me, self-realisation. Anarchy is the very nature of sin as the Bible reveals it. Other religions deal with sins; the Bible alone deals with sin. The first thing Jesus Christ faced in men was this heredity of sin, and it is because we have ignored it in our presentation of the Gospel that the message of the Gospel has lost its sting, its blasting power; we have drivelled it into insurance tickets for heaven, and made it deal only with the wastrel element of mankind. The average preaching of Redemption deals mainly with the "scenic" cases. The message of Jesus Christ is different; He went straight to the disposition, and always said, "IF—you need not unless you like, but—IF any man will follow Me, let him give up his right to himself."

The Christian religion founds everything on the radical, positive nature of sin. Sin is self-realisation, self-sufficiency, entire and complete master-ship of myself—gain that, and you lose control of everything over which God intended you to have dominion. Sin is not an act, but an hereditary disposition. Sin must be cleansed, and the revelation of Redemption is that God through Jesus Christ has power to cleanse us from the heredity of sin. The curious thing is that we are blind to the fact of sin, and deal only with the effects of sin.

(c) Antichrist (1 John 4:3)

Every spirit that dissolves Jesus by analysis is antichrist (RV mg). What is the spirit that dissolves Him? My claim to my right to myself does it. Is Jesus Christ "boss" or am I? God's order is that He is to be absolute sovereign over me, and I am to be absolute sovereign over everything that is not God, and sin is the switch off, for the time being, that makes me my own "boss" and consequently "boss" of nothing else. I only gain the absolute control God intended me to have when I am brought back into perfect union with God. If I want to know what the human race will be like on the basis of Redemption, I shall find it mirrored in Jesus Christ, a perfect oneness between God and man, with no gap. In the meantime there is a gap. Sin, suffering, and the Book of God all bring a man to this realisation, that there is something wrong at the basis of life, and that it cannot be put right by reason. If we make Rationalism the basis of things, we shall find some great big tragedy will spit up and knock our theories to the winds. For instance, this war has taken our breath away and given all our findings a severe shaking. Before we seal up our mind on any of these matters, Jesus Christ says, "Believe also in Me."

Anything that puts self-realisation on top is part of the solidarity of sin, which the Bible says will head up until it gets to the terrific and marvellous figure-head Paul refers to in 2 Thessalonians, revered and respected of every race and religion and nationality. The spirit in man, however religious, however sweet and delightful it may appear to men, if it is not the Spirit of God, must be "scattering" away from Jesus. "He that gathereth not with Me scattereth."

Christianity is based on another universe of facts than the universe we get at by our common sense; it is based on the Universe of revelation facts which we only get at by faith born of the Spirit of God. The revelation which Christianity makes is that the essential nature of Deity is holiness, and the might of God is shown in that He became the weakest thing in His own creation. Jesus Christ claims that, on the basis of Redemption, He has put the whole of the human race back to where God designed it to be, and individuals begin to see this when they are awakened by their own agony.

2. Body of Christ—Solidarity of Saints (1 Corinthians 12:12-27)

The Church of Jesus Christ is an organism; we are built up into Him, baptised by one Spirit into one body. Churchianity is an organisation; Christianity is an organism. Organisation is an enormous benefit until it is mistaken for the life. God has no concern about our organisations. When their purpose is finished He allows them to be swept aside, and if we are attached to the organisation, we shall go with it. Organisation is a great necessity, but not an end in itself, and to live for any organisation is a spiritual disaster. To-day we are hearing the crash of civilisation and the crash of organisations everywhere.

Our word "Church" is connected with civilised organisations of religious people; our Lord's attitude to the Church is different. He says it is composed of those who have had a personal revelation from God as to Who Jesus Christ is, and have made a public declaration of the same (Matthew 16:13–20).

The great conception to-day is not our being merged into God, but God being merged into us. The Christian line of things is that we are brought into union with God by love, not that we are absorbed into God. Jesus Christ maintains that this is to be brought about on the basis of His Redemption alone. Mysticism says it can be brought about by a higher refinement of nature. The stupendous difference between the religion of Jesus Christ and every other religion under heaven is that His religion is one which brings help to the bottom of hell, not a religion that can deal only with what is fine and pure.

(a) Reconciliation (2 Corinthians 5:18-21)

Sin is a fundamental relationship underneath: sin is not wrongdoing, it is wrong being, deliberate and emphatic independence of God. God, on the ground of Redemption, has undertaken the responsibility for sin and for the removal of it, and Jesus Christ claims that He can plant in any of us His own heredity, which will re-make us into the new order of humanity. If the human race apart from Jesus Christ is all right, then the Redemption of Jesus Christ is a useless waste.

The revelation is not that Jesus Christ was punished for our sins, but that He was made to be sin. "Him who knew no sin" was made to be sin, that by His identification with it and removal of it, we might become what He was. Jesus Christ became identified not only with the disposition of sin, but with the very "body" of sin. He had not the disposition of sin in Himself, and no connection with the body of sin, but, "Him who knew no sin, He made to be sin." Jesus Christ went straight through identification with sin so that every man and woman on earth might be freed from sin by His atonement. He went through the depths of damnation and came out more than conqueror; consequently every one of us who is willing to be identified with Him is freed from the disposition of sin, freed from the connection with the body of sin, and can come out more than conqueror too because of what Jesus Christ has done. The revelation is not that Jesus Christ took on Him our fleshly sins—a man stands or falls by his own silly weaknesses—but that He took on Him the heredity of sin. God Himself became sin, and removed sin; no man can touch that. God made His own Son to be sin that He might make the sinner a saint. God Almighty took the problem of the sin of the world on His own shoulders, and it made Him stoop; He rehabilitated the whole human race; that is, He put the human race back to where He designed it to be, and any one of us in our actual conditions can enter into union with God on the ground of Jesus Christ's Redemption. God has put the whole human race on the basis of Redemption. A man cannot redeem himself; Redemption is absolutely finished and complete; its reference to individual men is a question of their individual action.

(b) Repentance (Acts 2:37-40)

There is a difference between a man altering his life, and repenting. A man may have lived a bad life and suddenly stop being bad, not because he has repented, but because he is like an exhausted volcano; the fact that he has become good is no sign that he is a Christian. The bed-rock of Christianity is repentance. Repentance means that I estimate exactly what I am in God's sight, and I am sorry for it, and on the basis of Redemption I become the opposite. The only repentant man is the holy man. Any man who knows himself knows that he cannot be holy, therefore if ever he is holy, it will be because God has "shipped" something into him, and he begins to bring forth the fruits of repentance. The disposition of the Son of God can only enter my life by the road of repentance. Strictly speaking, repentance is a gift of God; no man can repent when he chooses. A man can be remorseful when he chooses, but remorse is something less than repentance. When God handles the wrong in a man it makes him turn to God and his life becomes a sacrament of experimental repentance.

(c) Regeneration (1 Corinthians 12:12-27)

When I come to the end of myself and my selfsufficiency, in my destitution I can hear Jesus Christ say, Ask, and I will give you Holy Spirit. "Holy Spirit" is the experimental name for eternal life working in human beings here and now. Jesus Christ said, You have not that life in yourselves, and you cannot have it unless you get it through Me. He is referring to "Holy Spirit" life which by His resurrection He can impart. The Holy Spirit will take my spirit, soul and body and bring them back into communion with God, and lead me into identification with the death of Jesus Christ, until I know experimentally that my old disposition, my right to myself, is crucified with Him, and my human nature is now free to obey the commands of God.

The doctrine of substitution is twofold. Not only is Jesus Christ identified with my sin, but I am identified with Him so that His ruling disposition is in me, and the moral transaction on my part is agreement with God's verdict on sin in the Cross of Jesus Christ. Redemption means that God through Jesus Christ can take the most miserable wreck and turn him into a son of God. As long as a man has his morality well within his own grasp, Jesus Christ does not amount to anything to him, but when a man gets to his wits' end by agony and says involuntarily, "My God, what am I up against? there is something underneath I never knew was there," he begins to pay attention to what Jesus Christ says. A moral preparation is necessary before we can believe; truth is a moral vision, and does not exist for a man until he sees it. There is a frontier outside which Jesus Christ does not tell; but when once we get over that frontier, He becomes all in all. God takes us through circumstances until we enter the moral frontiers where Jesus Christ tells.

When you come to your wits' end, remember there is a way out, viz., personal relationship to God through the Redemption of Jesus Christ.

Oh—we're sunk enough here, God knows!

But not quite so sunk that moments,

Sure, though seldom, are denied us,

When the spirit's true endowments

Stand out plainly from its false ones,

And apprise it if pursuing

Or the right way or the wrong way,

To its triumph or undoing.

There are flashes struck from midnights,
There are fire-flames noondays kindle,
Whereby piled-up honours perish
Whereby swollen ambitions dwindle;
While just this or that poor impulse,
Which for once had play unstifled,
Seems the sole work of a lifetime,
That away the rest had trifled!

Talks on the Book of Ecclesiastes Oswald Chambers

INTRODUCTION

Source

This material is taken from talks on Ecclesiastes given by Oswald Chambers to British Commonwealth soldiers at Zeitoun, Egypt,¹ September 24 through October 17, 1917.

Publication History

• As a book: Shade of His Hand was published in 1924, and a second edition in 1936.

Zeitoun, six miles northeast of Cairo, was the site of the YMCA compound where Chambers spent most of his two years in Egypt. Nearby was a large military camp. For the most part, the soldiers had evenings and weekends free, and many of them regularly frequented the YMCA huts at Zeitoun for rest and recreation. Chambers taught regular classes on spiritual matters for all who were interested.

This book contains the last messages given by Oswald Chambers before his death. For a month during the autumn of 1917, he explored the meaning of life as revealed in Ecclesiastes.

Chambers completed chapters 1 through 11, but he became ill before covering the final chapter of Ecclesiastes. The first edition of Shade of His Hand noted that "chapter 12 was never taken." In the 1936 edition, David Lambert² added his own thoughts on Ecclesiastes 12 to complete the book.

Some of Oswald Chambers' impressions of Ecclesiastes 12 can be found in the last chapter of his book The Place of Help. Chambers' last Sunday sermon at Zeitoun was given on October 14, 1917, titled, "Disabling Shadows on the Soul," based on Ecclesiastes 12:5.

On October 17, Chambers became ill after his evening class for soldiers at Esbekieh Gardens in Cairo. He managed to conduct the evening class at Zeitoun on Thursday, October 18, but was in such pain he had to leave all meetings to others for the next ten days.

On October 29, he underwent an emergency appendectomy at Gizeh Red Cross Hospital in Cairo. After recovering well for a week, he began to hemorrhage from the lungs. His condition fluctuated for a week before he died on the morning of November 15.

Shade of His Hand was the second book published by Mrs. Chambers after her 1919 return to England from Egypt. She compiled the book while supporting herself and her daughter, Kathleen,³ by keeping a boarding house for four university students in Oxford.

^{1.} Zeitoun (zay TOON), Egypt: six miles northeast of Cairo; site of a YMCA camp, the Egypt General Mission compound, and, from 1916 to 1919, the Imperial School of Instruction, training base for British, Australian, and New Zealand troops during World War I.

^{2.} David Lambert (1871–1961): Methodist minister and friend of Oswald and Biddy Chambers; assisted Mrs. Chambers with OC publications from 1917 until his death in 1961.

FOREWORD TO THE FIRST EDITION

These talks on Ecclesiastes were not given with any idea of subsequent publication, and they are compiled from my own verbatim notes. It seemed fitting that the talks, the last message that God would speak through his servant, should be reproduced, outlines and all, as nearly as possible as they were delivered, and this has been done.

May the Spirit of God bring to all who read the book a vision of Our Lord Jesus Christ "in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom."

PREFACE (1936 EDITION)

These talks on Ecclesiastes were given by my friend Oswald Chambers at the Y.M.C.A. Hut, Zeitoun, Egypt, to the Troops in October, 1917. They are a verbatim report of what really were the last lectures he ever delivered, for he was called from the midst of his happy, arduous, fruitful toil among the soldiers into the immediate Presence of his Lord on November 15, 1917. This came before Eccles. 12 had been reached, so notes on the final chapter have been added to make the book complete.⁵

These last expository talks ought to be taken in the light of his former teaching. Those who knew his other books, Biblical Psychology, The Sermon on the Mount, The Discipline Books, The Psychology of Redemption, etc., will profit most by this one. In the earlier books he shows the process of salvation as it works out in the inner life of a man. Here we see it in its relation to the everyday world outside us.

Does Ecclesiastes teach that life is not worth living? That gloomy tale would not be worth telling. Oswald Chambers interprets its message as being—Life is not worth living apart from Redemption. This is a Book of Wisdom for to-day. It shows how it is possible for a redeemed man to glorify God amid all the inter-play of life's forces, in work and play, in study, in recreation, in home life or social intercourse. Life apart from Redeeming Love is full of sin and sorrow, guile and cruelty, callous selfishness and numbing despair. This book takes full account of all that. It anticipates many of the problems facing the young life of today, and brings to their solution the one and only key, the realisation of the Lord Jesus Christ in every relationship of life.

RATIONALISM HARD PRESSED

Ecclesiastes 1

Myself when young did eagerly frequent
Doctor and Saint, and heard great Argument
About it and about, but evermore
Came out by the same Door wherein I went.
With them the Seed of Wisdom did I sow,
And with mine own hand wrought to make it grow,

And this was all the Harvest that I reaped, I came like Water and like Wind I go.

 - (b) Absolute Conundrum of Thinking (verses 14–15)
 - (c) Applied Cultures of Time (verse 16)
 - (d) Ascertained Cruelty of Truth (verses 17–18)

It is important to notice the difference between the Wisdom of the Hebrews and the Wisdom of the Greeks.

The Wisdom of the Hebrews is based on an accepted belief in God; that is, it does not try to find out whether or not God exists, all its beliefs are based on God, and in the actual whirl of things as they are, all its mental energy is bent on practical living. The Wisdom of the Greeks, which is the wisdom of our day, is speculative; that is, it is concerned with the origin of things, with the riddle of the universe, etc., consequently the best of our wits is not given to practical living.

1 Kings 4:29–32. The Book of Job was produced by Solomon and his School of Wisdom, and in it we see worked out, according to Hebrew wisdom, how a man may suffer in the actual condition of things. The sufferings of Job were not in order to perfect him (see Job 1:8). The explanation of Job's sufferings was that God and Satan had made a battleground of his soul, and the honour of God was at stake.

The sneer of Satan was that no man loved God for His own sake, but only for what God gave him. Satan was allowed to destroy all his blessings and yet Job did not curse God; he clung to it that the great desire of his heart was God Himself and not His blessings. Job lost everything he possessed, including his creed; the one thing he did not lose was his hold on God, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him."

The value of the Book of Job is not in what it teaches, but that it expresses suffering, and the inscrutability of suffering.

In the Book of Psalms, Wisdom is applied to things as they are and to prayer. The Book of Proverbs applies Wisdom to the practical relationships of life, and Ecclesiastes applies Wisdom to the enjoyment of things as they actually are; there is no phase of life missed out, and it is shown that enjoyment is only possible by being related to God.

The record of the whirl of things as they are is marvellously stated in these Books of Wisdom: Job—how to suffer; Psalms—how to pray; Proverbs—how to act; Ecclesiastes—how to enjoy; Song of Solomon—how to love.

The Wisdom of the Hebrews (Proverbs 8:22-36)

The Wisdom of the Hebrews does not set out to discover whether God is, nor does it enter into speculating enquiries as to the origin of sin, etc. Belief in God is never questioned, and on that basis Hebrew Wisdom sets out to deal with practical things as they are.

The basis of things is not rational, but tragic. Reason is our guide among facts as they are, but reason cannot account for things being as they are. This does not mean that a man is not to use his reason; reason is the biggest gift he has. The rationalist says that everything in between birth and death is discernible by human reason; but the actual experience of life is that things do not run in a reasonable way, there are irrational elements to be reckoned with.

^{7.} Omar Khayyám (d. 1123): Persian astronomer and poet.

The Old Testament is coming to its own just now; we have been too patronising. We always get out of touch with the Bible attitude to things when we come to it with our own conclusions. For instance, the Bible does not prove the existence of God, nor does it prove that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. The Bible was written to confirm the faith of those who already believe in God. We are apt to come to the conclusion that the Bible is tepid. Why, some of the most heroic and drastic thinking is within the covers of the Bible! St. John and St. Paul reconstructed religious thought, quoting from no one; there are no thinkers like them, yet it has been fashionable to belittle them.

The Wisdom of the Greeks (1 Corinthians 1:19-25)

Our modern wisdom, which is the wisdom of the Greeks, is three removes from actual facts. It is mental; we are busy trying to find out the origin of things. It is a type of wisdom that does not find its home in the Bible. The intellectual order of life does not take things as it finds them, it makes us shut our eyes to actual facts and try to live only in the ideal world. The Wisdom of the Greeks tells us how things should be—there ought to be no sin, no war, no devil, no sickness, no injustice; but these things are! It is no use to turn ourselves into ostriches mentally and ignore them. Solomon is fearless in facing facts as they are. No room is allowed either in the Old or New Testament for mysticism pure and simple, because that will mean sooner or later an aloofness from actual life, a kind of contempt expressed or implied by a superior attitude, by occult relationships and finer sensibilities. That attitude is never countenanced in the Bible. The Mount of Transfiguration may serve for a symbol of mysticism—"and Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master it is good for us to be here, and let us make three tabernacles. . . . " But there quickly followed the transition to the demon-possessed valley. The test of mountain-top experiences, of mysticism, of visions of God and of solitariness is when you are "in the soup" of actual circumstances. It is not a question of living a blind life in the brain away from actuality, not of living in dawns or on mountain tops; but of bringing what you see there straight down to the valley where things are sordid, and living out the vision there.

1. Practical Experiment (Ecclesiastes 1:1–11)

In the Book of Ecclesiastes we deal with the actual condition of the things we are in, which is the arena for manifesting the hold we have on God in the unseen.

(a) Constant Obliteration of Conscious Effort (verses 2–4)

Vanity of Vanities, saith the Preacher, vanity of vanities; all is vanity. What profit hath a man of all his labour which he taketh under the sun? One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: but the earth abideth for ever.

"Vanity," i.e., ephemeral, not conceit, but fleeting, here and gone as a day. Everything man has ever done is constantly being obliterated; everything a man fights for and lives for passes; he has so many years to live and then it is finished. This is neither fiction nor dumps. In true thinking of things as they are, there is always a bedrock of unmitigated sadness. Optimism is either religious or temperamental. No man who thinks and faces life as it actually is, can be other than pessimistic. There is no way out unless he finds it by his religious faith or is blinded by his temperament. The summing up of all practical life is that the basis of things is tragic. Sum up your life as it actually is, and, unless you look at actual things from a religious or a temperamental or an intellectual standpoint, everything is to be said for this philosophy: Eat, drink and be merry, for to-morrow we die. If Rationalism is the basis of things, that is undoubtedly the most reasonable thing to do. But if the basis of things is tragic, then the Bible standpoint comes nearer the solution, and Nietzsche is nearer the truth than any rationalist. Nietzsche declares that the basis of things is tragic, and that the way out is by the merciless Superman; the Bible reveals that the basis of things is tragic, and that the way out is by Redemption. We say that man is in process of evolution—a magnificent promise of what he is going to be! The Wisdom of the Hebrews looks at man's history and attainments and says-What a magnificent ruin of what he was created to be!

Very few of us think unblinded by a religious or a temperamental point of view, we are not capable of it. We are blinded either by religion, or temperament, or by thick-headedness. To look at things as they are, with the superb wisdom and understanding and disillusioned eye of Solomon, takes a Solomon to do it. Another man did it with the knowledge and understanding of Solomon, and he was Ibsen. He saw facts as they are clearly, without losing his head, and without any faith in God he summed it all up no forgiveness, no escape from penalty or retribution, it is absolutely and inexorably certain that the end of things is disaster. In Shakespeare's writings there is an under-current of faith which makes him the peculiarly valuable writer he is, and makes him more at home to those who understand the Bible point of view than to those who do not.

(b) Continual Oblivion of Cosmic Effects (verses 5–6)

The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, and hasteneth to his place where he arose. The wind goeth toward the south, and turneth about unto the north;

it whirleth about continually, and the wind returneth again according to his circuits.

Everything that happens in Nature is continually being obliterated and beginning again. What Solomon says is not merely a poetical statement. A sunset or a sunrise may thrill you for half a minute, so may beautiful music or a song, but the sudden aftermath is a terrific, and almost eternal sadness. Lovers always think of what one would do if the other died; it is more than drivel. Immediately you strike the elemental in war or in Nature or in love, you come to the basis of ineffable sadness and tragedy. You feel that things ought to be full of joy and brightness, but they are not. You will never find the abiding order of joy in the haphazard, and yet the meaning of Christianity is that God's order comes to a man in the haphazard.

There is a difference between God's will and God's order. Take the case of two boys born in the slums, one determines to get out of it, and carves out for himself an honourable career, he gets at God's order in the middle of His permissive will. The other sinks down in despair and remains where he is. God's order is—no sin, no sickness, no devil, no war: His Permissive will is things as they are.

(c) Common Origin of Changing Experiences (verses 7–9)

All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full; unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again. All things are full of labour; man cannot utter it: the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing. The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun.

You may try to rest in any phase of actual existence, says Solomon, but apart from your relationship to God, you are better dead. Unless you bank your faith in God, you will not only be wrongly related in practical life and have your heart broken, but you will break other things you touch. (Cf. Matthew 18:6–7.)

(d) Counterfeit Originality of Casual Expressions (verses 10–11)

Is there anything whereof it may be said, See, this is new? it hath been already of old time, which was before us. There is no remembrance of former things; neither shall there be any remembrance of things that are to come with those that shall come after.

It is only when we are ignorant that we believe in originality. We have such magnificent "forgetteries" that we obliterate the whole of human history for the discovery we have made, and say—This is original.

Solomon says the whole thing is an incessant and appalling weariness.

2. Personal Experience (Ecclesiastes 1:12–18)

These verses are not guesswork, but the conclusion of the wisest man that ever lived. The Bible indicates that a man always falls on his strongest point. Abraham, the man of faith, fell through unbelief; Moses, the meek man, fell through losing his temper; Elijah, the courageous man, fell through losing heart; and Solomon, the most colossally wise, wealthy, luxurious, superb king, fell through grovelling, sensual idolatry.

(a) Actual Condition of Thought (verses 12–13)

I the preacher was king over Israel in Jerusalem. And I gave my heart to seek and search out by wisdom concerning all things that are done under heaven: this sore travail hath God given to the sons of man to be exercised therewith.

These are the words of a man who has tried and experienced the things he speaks of. We say there ought not to be war, 8 there ought to be no devil, no suffering, and we fuss and fume; but these things are! If we lived in the clouds, it would be different; but we are here. "If only I was not where I am!" It is in the present dilemma that practical wisdom is required.

I believe that the atheism of Job and of men to-day is more wholesome than to believe in a God about Whom you have to tell lies to prove He is God. Voltaire tiraded against the God Who was masqueraded before men in his day. In a mental stress of weather it is better not to believe in a Being Who has not the clear sense of justice we have, than to believe in One Who is an outrage to our sense of justice; better to "snatch at the damnation" of such a Being than to accept His salvation.

We are driven back every time to Jesus Christ—"I am the Way, the Truth and the Life." Have I seen Him, or do I see only that which echoes myself? Am I prepared to see in Jesus Christ the outlines of the true character of God, which is holiness? We perceive our friend while we only see the other man, and it is the same with the perception of God. (See John 3:3.)

Jesus Christ is God-Man. God in Essence cannot come anywhere near us. Almighty God does not matter to me, He is in the clouds. To be of any use to me, He must come down to the domain in which I live; and I do not live in the clouds but on the earth. The doctrine of the Incarnation is that God did come down into our domain. The Wisdom of God, the Word of God, the exact expression of God, was manifest in the flesh. That is the great doctrine of the New Testament—dust and Deity made one. The pure gold of Deity is of no use to us unless it is amalgamated in the right alloy, viz., the pure Divine working on the basis of the pure human: God and humanity one, as in Our Lord Jesus Christ. There is only one God to the Christian, and His name is Jesus Christ, and in Him we see mirrored what the human race will be like on the basis of Redemption—a perfect oneness between God and man." Jesus Christ has the power of reproducing Himself by regeneration, the power of introducing into us His own heredity, so that dust and Deity again become one.

Solomon sums up the whole thing as follows: If you try to find enjoyment in this order of things, you will end in vexation and disaster. If you try to find enjoyment in knowledge, you only increase your capacity for sorrow and agony and distress. The only way you can find relief and the right interpretation of things as they are is by basing your faith in God, and by remembering that man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever. Jesus Christ is the One Who can transmute everything we come across.

Ecclesiastes 2

But whoso wants God only and lets life go, Seeks Him with sorrow and pursues Him far, And finds Him weeping, and in no long time Again the High and Unapproachable Evanishing escapeth, and that man Forgets the life and struggle of the soul, Falls from his hope and dreams it was a dream. Yet back again perforce with sorrow and shame Who once hath known him must return, not long Can cease from loving, nor endures alone The dreadful interspace of dreams and day, Once quick with God, nor is content as those Who look into each other's eyes, and seek To find out strong enough to uphold the earth, Or sweet enough to make it heaven: aha, Whom seek they or whom find? For in all the world There is none but thee, my God, there is none but thee. $Myers^{10}$

 - (c) The Centre of Providential Mystery (verse 26)

If a man faces actual things as they are and thinks them right out, he must be a pessimist. Most of us are either too thick-headed, or too prejudiced, or too religious, to think right out to the bottom board of things, until the tension comes and obliges us to face them; then we find out who are the men who point the finest way of thinking.

1. The Culture of Revolt (Ecclesiastes 2:1–11) (a) Revolt in Every Passion (verses 1–2)

I said in mine heart, Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth, therefore enjoy pleasure: and, behold, this also is vanity. I said of laughter, It is mad: and of mirth, What doeth it?

In this chapter Solomon gives himself up to the philosophical line—Why should not a man take life as he finds it? Solomon was sick of trying to find any rationality at the back of things, he revolted from it, and indulged every passion and appetite without restraint. Always distinguish between the man who is naturally given to passion and appetite and the man who goes into these things from revolt. There is an irony and a bitterness and a criminality about the man who does it in revolt. In the same way there is a difference between laughter that is natural and laughter that is a revolt. There is nothing more awful than to hear laughter that is a revolt. The man who discovers that he can find no way out may go into the pigsty and let every passion have its way; but when a man has been gripped by purity and has seen God if only for one minute, he may try and live in a pigsty but he will find he cannot, there is something that produces misery and longing even while he lets loose his passions.

(b) Restraint in Epicurean Appetite (verse 3)

I sought in mine heart to give myself unto wine, yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom; and to lay hold on folly, till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven all the days of their life.

Solomon based all his knowledge of art and education on the desire to satisfy with restraint and wisdom all the natural life of a man. If the basis of life is rational, that should be sufficient. Epicurus was a philosopher of the first order, and he tried to make the basis of life a judicious handling of the pleasures of life, especially the pleasures of the table. "I sought in mine heart to give myself unto wine, yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom," i.e., not living the life of a beast, but trying to find out whether it was possible by judiciously handling the right appetites of life to find satisfaction, but that too was vanity. This was not an experiment a man might think of trying, but an experiment that was tried, and tried by a man who had opportunities such as no one before or since has had of proving it.

(c) Reconstruction in Aestheticism (verses 4–10)

I made me great works; I builded me houses; I planted me vineyards: I made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kinds of fruits: I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees: I got me servants and maidens, and had servants born in my house; also I had great possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me: I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces: I gat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as musical instruments, and that of all sorts. So I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me. And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them, I withheld not my heart from any joy; for my heart rejoiced in all my labour: and this was my portion of all my labour.

Solomon indicates in these verses that he reconstructed his life on the aesthetic basis to try and find joy there. On the aesthetic line a man is apt to think he is of a different order from the generality of men, and that whatever pleases his senses is legitimate for him to have. "Whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them." But we have to remember that the first civilisation was founded by a murderer on murder, and that all aesthetic developments are based on that level. The origin of art and poetry and music was with God, but their development has been on a wrong basis, and consequently they have been prostituted away from their true service in a man's life. Aestheticism is all very well for the kingdom of heaven, but it won't do for the kingdom of earth. This is anti-modern view.

(d) Reaction in Each Affinity (verse 11)

Then I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do: and, behold, all was vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit under the sun.

This is deep, profound pessimism. All the books of Wisdom in the Bible prove that the only result of sheer thinking on the basis of rationalism is pessimism, fathomlessly profound. The reason most of us are not pessimistic is either that we are religious or we have a temperament that is optimistic. The basis of life is tragic, and the only way out is by a personal relationship to God on the ground of Redemption. Solomon deliberately revolted against everything and found there was no satisfaction in anything he tried.

2. The Culture of Restraint (Ecclesiastes 2:12-23)

(a) Nature of Right Estimation (verses 12–14)

And I turned myself to behold wisdom, and madness, and folly: for what can the man do that cometh after the king? even that which hath been already done. Then I saw that wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness. The wise man's eyes are in his head; but the fool walketh in darkness: and I myself perceived also that one event happeneth to them all.

If a man chooses a right path, does that mean he will find joy? No. Job, for instance, found it did not. He believed that God would bless and prosper the man who trusted in Him, but Job's beliefs were flatly contradicted by his actual experience. Solomon says he tried folly, but found it stupid; a man is an idiot to live like a beast; the best thing to do is to make a right estimate of things.

(b) Nemesis of Reasonable Excellence (verses 15–19)

Then I said in my heart, As it happeneth to the fool, so it happeneth even to me; and why was I then more wise? Then I said in my heart, that this also is vanity. For there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; seeing that which now is in the days to come shall all be forgotten. And how dieth the wise man? as the fool. Therefore I hated life; because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: for all is vanity and vexation of spirit. Yea, I hated all my labour which I had taken under the sun: because I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me. And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have shewed myself wise under the sun. This is also vanity.

You may do the right thing, says Solomon, but it will end in disaster; reasonable excellence has the same nemesis as revolt. It is no use trying to find true joy in being either a fool or a wise man. Solomon drives us back every time to the one thing, that a man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever. To-day there is a revolt against the Wisdom of the Hebrews and the wisdom expressed in the New Testament. We don't think on the Bible lines, consequently we talk the most ridiculous platitudes. It is absurd to be an ostrich, Solomon would not allow himself to be one, neither will the man who sees life fair and square as it is to-day.

The only way we can enjoy our "tree of life" is by fulfilling the purpose of our creation. Jesus Christ prayed "that they may have My joy fulfilled in themselves." The thing that kept Jesus Christ all through was not that He held aloof from actual things, but that He had a kingdom within. He so did not hold aloof that when men saw Him they said, "Behold a gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!" Our Lord's whole life was rooted and grounded in God, consequently He was never wearied or cynical.

(c) "Nihilism" of Revolving Experience (verses 20–23)

Therefore I went about to cause my heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun. For there is a man whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity: yet to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he leave it for his portion. This also is vanity and a great evil. For what hath man of all his labour, and of the vexation of his heart, wherein he hath laboured under the sun? For all his days are sorrows, and his travail grief; yea, his heart taketh not rest in the night. This is also vanity.

Everything ends the same way, though I have been good and clean and respectable, my end will be the same as the brute. Though I labour all my days, I shall end the same way as the man who has not laboured. These are not wild statements, they are the statements of a man who knew what he was talking about. If Solomon is blind to the issues of life, then the teaching of Christianity is unmitigated nonsense. Some folks are persuaded that it is, they are still cocksure, and have the notion that the kingdom of God can be brought in without the Redemption—all that is needed is to put certain wise restrictions in vogue. Solomon says he tried to do that, but it all ended the same as if he had lived like a fool.

Emerging out of it all comes one Voice—"I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." The way out is not by intellect nor by aesthetics, but through conscience in contact with Jesus Christ.

3. The Culture of Religion (Ecclesiastes 2:24–26)

To serve God in order to gain heaven, is not the teaching of Christianity. Satisfaction cannot be found in gain, but only in a personal relationship to God. The presentation made by a false evangelism is that Jesus Christ taught a man must have his own soul saved, be delivered from hell and get a pass for heaven, and when one is taken and the other left, he must look out that he is the one taken. Could anything be more diametrically opposed to what Jesus Christ did teach, or more unlike the revelation of God given in the Bible? A man is not to serve God for the sake of gain, but to get to the place where the whole of his life is seen as a personal relationship to God.

(a) "The Cult of the Passing Moment" (verse 24) There is nothing better for a man, than that he should eat and drink, and that he should make his soul enjoy good in his labour. This also I saw, that it was from the hand of God.

One great essential lesson in Christianity is that God's order comes to us in the haphazard. We are men and women, we have appetites, we have to live on this earth, and things do happen by chance; what is the use of saying they do not? "One of the most immutable things on earth is mutability." Your life and mine is a bundle of chance. It is absurd to say it is foreordained for you to have so many buttons on your tunic, and if that is not fore-ordained, then nothing is. If things were fore-ordained, there would be no sense of responsibility at all. A false spirituality makes us look to God to perform a miracle instead of doing our duty. We have to see that we do our duty in faith in God. Jesus Christ undertakes to do everything a man cannot do, but not what a man can do. Things do happen by chance, and if we know God, we recognise that His order comes to us in that way. We live in this haphazard order of things, and we have to maintain the abiding order of God in it. The doctrine of the Sacrament teaches the conveying of God's presence to us through the common elements of bread and wine. We are not to seek success or prosperity. If we can get hold of our relationship to God in eating and drinking, we are on the right basis of things.

(b) The Conception of the Prevailing Master (verse 25)

For who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?

The way I eat and drink will show who I regard as my master. Do I regard the restraining wisdom in me as master, or do I regard God as Master? The note of false Christianity is abstinence from marriage and from meats—Live away up on the mount, that is, do what no human being can do. If a man cannot prove his religion in the valley, it is not worth anything. Beware of a religion which makes you neglect the basis of your ordinary life. If you can be a beast, you can also be a son of God. "The Son of man came eating and drinking. . . . " "Have ye here any meat? . . . And He took it, and did eat before them." When once a man has learned to get at God's order in the passing minute and to know that his prevailing Master is God, then he is on the right track. Every other basis ends in disaster.

(c) The Centre of Providential Mystery (verse 26) For God giveth to a man that is good in his sight wisdom, and knowledge, and joy: but to the sinner He giveth travail, to gather and to heap up, that he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

There is a difference between God's order and God's permissive will. We say that God will see us through if we trust Him—"I prayed for my boy, and he was spared in answer to my prayer." Does that mean that the man who was killed was not prayed for, or that prayers for him were not answered? It is wrong to say that in the one case the man was delivered by prayer but not in the other. It is a misunderstanding of what Jesus Christ reveals. Prayer alters a man on the inside, alters his mind and his attitude to things. The point of praying is not that we get things from God, but that we learn by prayer to detect the difference between God's order and God's permissive will. God's order is-no pain, no sickness, no devil, no war, no sin: His permissive will is all these things, the "soup" we are in just now. What a man needs to do is to get hold of God's order in the kingdom on the inside, and then he will begin to see how to handle the riddle of the universe on the outside.

The problem of the man who deals with practical things is not the problem of the universe, but the problem within his own breast. When I can see where the beast in me will end and where the wise man in me will end; when I have discovered that the only thing that will last is a personal relationship to God; then it will be time for me to solve the problems round about me. When once a man begins to know "the plague of his own heart," it knocks the metaphysics out of him. It is in the actual circumstances of my life that I have to find out whether the wisdom of worshipping God can steer me. Solomon says nothing else can.

IN THE WHIRL

Ecclesiastes 3:1-15

He fixed thee midst this dance
Of plastic circumstance,
This present thou forsooth would'st fain arrest,
Machinery just meant
To give thy soul its bent,
Try thee and turn thee forth, sufficiently impressed.
Then, welcome each rebuff
That turns earth's smoothness rough,
Each sting that bids nor sit nor stand but go!
Be our joys three parts pain!
Strive and hold cheap the strain,
Learn, nor account the pang, dare, never grudge the throe.

When we are hurt we are apt to become cynical; cynicism is a sign that the hurt is recent. A mature mind is never cynical. Solomon is not speaking cynically; he goes right down to the facts of life, and comes to the conclusion that there is no way out. There is no way out through reason or intellect; the only way out is on the Bible line, viz., Redemption.

Robert Browning wrote from the standpoint of Hebrew wisdom, viz., that of unshakeable confidence in God, but he also wrote with the mind of Solomon or Ibsen or Shakespeare for the actual facts of life. He blinks nothing, yet underneath is the confidence that the basis of a right direction of things is not a man's reason but his strong faith that God is not unjust; and that the man who hangs in to the honour of God will come out all right.

1. Dispensational Durations (Ecclesiastes 3:1)

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven.

The dispensations of God are discernible only to the Spirit of God. If we mistake the dispensations of God to mean something we can see, we are off the track. Solomon is strong on the fact that God has made certain unalterable durations, but he does not say, as St. Augustine and Calvin did, that therefore God is tied up by His own laws. There is a most penetrating criticism of Carlyle¹¹ by Barry¹²—he said that Carlyle was the intellectual logical result of hyper-Calvinism. Whenever we put theology or a plan of salvation or any line of explanation before a man's personal relationship to God, we depart from the Bible line, because religion in the Bible is not faith in the rule of God, but faith in the God Who rules. If we put our faith in a credal exposition of God and our creed goes to the winds, as, for instance, Job's creed went, our faith will go too. The only thing to do is to "hang in" in confidence in God. "Then will I go . . . unto God, my exceeding joy." Our joy in God depends on what happens. The thing that really sustains is not that we feel happy in God, but that God's joy is our energy, and that when we get out of this "shell" we shall find an explanation that will justify our faith in Him.

There are certain dispensational things for which God is responsible, e.g., birth and death. Inside the limits of birth and death man has liberty to produce what he likes. We base all our thinking and reasoning on space and time, hence our difficulty when we think about God or the Hereafter, we think at once of limits that will not hold after this order of things. There is no space or time with Almighty God. We cannot think beyond the limits of birth and death; if we are to know anything beyond them, it must be by revelation. Before a man can make us understand the symbols he uses, he must take ideas we already have in our minds and put them into new combinations. It is only when we receive a like apocalyptic spirit of St. John or Ezekiel that we can understand what they are talking about. Jesus Christ did not use figurative language in talking about the Hereafter. He said: "Let not your heart be troubled"—"My business is with the Hereafter." Our business is to live a godly life in the present order of things, and not to push out beyond the durations God has placed as limits.

Within the limits of birth and death I can do as I like; but I cannot make myself un-born, neither can I escape death, those two limits are there. I have nothing to do with placing the limits, but within them I can produce what my disposition chooses. Whether I have a distressful time or a joyful time depends on what I do in between the limits of the durations.

"For by Him were all things created" (Colossians 1:16). Did Jesus Christ then create sin? Sin is not a creation, sin is a relationship set up in time between the creation called man and the being who became the devil, whereby man took the rule over himself. My claim to my right to myself—that is the disposition of sin. The Bible reveals that God holds a man responsible for acts of sin he commits, but not for the disposition of sin that he has inherited (see Romans 5:12). God Himself has deliberately accepted the responsibility for sin, and the proof that He has done so is the Cross of Jesus Christ.

In dealing with practical life we find the fundament of tragedy underlying everything. Fatalism means I am the sport of a force about which I know nothing; faith is trust in a God Whose ways I do not know, but Whose character I do know. The Bible point of view is that God is ruling and reigning, and that His character is holy. Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him"—that is the final heroism of a man's relationship to God.

2. Dispositional Distresses (Ecclesiastes 3:2–8)

These verses point out where distresses are produced in a man's ordinary life and the part his disposition plays in them. Everything to do with a man's personal life, or with agricultural life, or with national life, is summed up in this chapter.

(a) Personality and Ploughing (verse 2)

A time to be born, and a time to die; a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted.

We cannot do anything without our ruling disposition instantly being marked in it. We gain our point of distress or of joy by the way we use or misuse our twenty-four hours.

(b) Precious and Pernicious Healing (verse 3) A time to kill, and a time to heal; a time to break down, and a time to build up.

Every art, every healing, and every good, can be used for an opposite purpose. Every possibility I have of producing a fine character in time, I can use to produce the opposite; I have that liberty from the Creator. God will not prevent my disobeying Him; if He did, my obedience would not be worth anything. Some of us complain that God should have made the universe and human life like a foolproof machine, so simple that there would be no possibility of going wrong. If He had, we would have been like jelly-fish. If there is no possibility of being damned, there is no need for salvation.

In the time between birth and death, most of us are in our "shell." There is something in us which makes us peck, and when the crack comes, instead of its being the gentle light and dawn of a new day, it is like a lightning flash. The universe we awaken to is not one of order, but a great big howling confusion, and it takes time to get adjusted. The distresses we reap in between God's decrees for us, we, together with other human beings, are personally responsible for. If we make our life a muddle, it is to a large extent because we have not discerned the great underlying relationship to God.

(c) Priestesses of Death and Delight (verse 4) A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance.

Solomon runs a contrast between animal nature and human nature. Animals are guided by instinct; human beings are not. I may weave for myself what the Scots mean when they say—"Ye must dree yer weird."¹³ There is always a point where I have the power to choose. I have no power to choose whether or not I will take the consequences of my choice; no power to say whether or not I will be born; no power to choose my "cage"; but within the cage I have power to choose which perch I will sit on. I cannot rule out the fact that between birth and death I have to choose. I have no power to act an act of pure will; to choose whether I will be born or not; but I have power to choose which way I will use the times as they come.

Solomon is indicating the times we make within God's time. This "time," this dispensation, is man's day, and in it we may do and say what we choose. Our talk may sound blatant, but we don't do much.

I can make my domestic life, my bodily life, and my agricultural life a priestess of sorrow or delight if I watch my disposition.

(d) Pleasures and Pains—Domestic and Devotional (verse 5)

A time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together; a time to embrace, and a time to refrain from embracing.

Take Solomon in his profundities, and don't make him out to be a beast where he is an archangel. In the Song of Songs he says an extraordinary thing which comes in like a refrain all through—"I adjure you . . . that ye stir not up, nor awaken love, until it please" (RV mg). Many a man has awakened love before the time, and has reaped hell into the bargain. That "time" is in my power, but if I set myself to awaken love before I should, I may have all hell to live with instead of all heaven.

(e) Profitless and Prosperous Commerce (verse 6) A time to get, and a time to lose; a time to keep, and a time to cast away.

There comes a time when the only way to save what is of enormous value to a life is to cast away all its possessions. "Thy life will I give unto thee for a prey"—you will have nothing else, but you will escape with your life. There is a time when a man may have to lose everything he has got in order to save himself (see Mark 8:35).

(f) Programmes of Speech and Silence (verse 7) A time to rend, and a time to sew; a time to keep silence, and a time to speak.

Sometimes it is cowardly to speak, and sometimes it is cowardly to keep silence. In the Bible the great test of a man's character is his tongue (see James 1:26). The tongue only came to its right place within the lips of the Lord Jesus Christ, because He never spoke from His right to Himself. He Who was the Wisdom of God Incarnate, said "the words that I speak unto you, I speak not of Myself," i.e., from the disposition of my right to Myself, but from My relationship to My Father. We are either too hasty or too slow; either we won't speak at all, or we speak too much, or we speak in the wrong mood. The thing that makes us speak is the lust to vindicate ourselves. "... leaving you an example, ... who did no sin neither was guile found in His mouth." Guile has the ingredient of self-vindication in it—My word, I'll make him smart for saying that about me! That spirit never was in Jesus Christ. The great deliverance for a man in time is to learn the programmes of speech and of silence.

(g) Requited and Unrequited Love (verse 8) A time to love, and a time to hate; a time of war, and

A time to love, and a time to hate; a time of war, and a time of peace.

The most painful and most crushing thing to a man or woman is unrequited love. In summing up the attitude of men to Himself, God says that that is the way men treat Him, they "un-requite" His love. To most of us it is a matter of moonshine 14 whether Jesus Christ lived or died or did anything at all; God has to "recommend" His love to us (see Romans 5:8 RV). It is only when we come to our wits' ends, or reap a distress, or feel the first twinge of damnation and are knocked out of our complacent mental agility over things, that we recognise the love of God.

Not one of these "times" are God's times, they are our times. For example, to call war either diabolical or Divine is nonsense; war is human. War is a conflict of wills, not something that can be solved by law or philosophy. If you take what I want, you may talk till all's blue, 15 either I will hit you or you'll hit me. It is no use to arbitrate when you get below into the elemental. In the time between birth and death this conflict of wills will go on until men by their relationship to God receive the disposition of the Son of God, which is holiness.

This is the Hebrew way of summing up in sentence after sentence all that makes a man's life in time. Unless a man relates his disposition to God in between birth and death, he will reap a heritage of distress for himself and for those who come after him. The man who is banked on a real relationship to a personal God will reap not the distress that works death, but the joy of life.

3. Decrees of Despair (Ecclesiastes 3:9–10)

What profit hath he that worketh in that wherein he laboureth? I have seen the travail, which God hath given to the sons of men to be exercised in it.

"Honesty is the best policy"; but immediately you are honest for that reason, you cease to be an honest man. "To be a good man means I shall be prosperous"; "to be rightly related to God means I shall be saved." All such considerations as these are beside the mark.

To terrorise a man into believing in God is never the work of God, but the work of human expediency. If we want to convince a congregation of a certain thing, we may use terror to frighten them into it; but never say that is God's way, it is our way. If we do not get conversions one way, then we preach hell fire and produce terror; we don't care what we preach as long as we dominate. To call that God's method is a travesty of the character of God. The methods God uses are indicated in Jesus Christ, and He never terrorised anyone. When He lifted the veil, He said, "How can you escape the damnation of hell?" The decrees of despair lie underneath everything a man does when once he rules out his relationship to God and takes rationalism as the basis of life. Solomon sums up the whole matter—unless a man is rightly related in confidence to God, everything he tries to do will end in despair.

4. Discretions of Deity (Ecclesiastes 3:11-15)

Underlying everything we find the discretion and the wisdom of God.

(a) Reasonableness (verses 11–13)

He hath made every thing beautiful in His time: also he hath set the world in their heart, so that no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end. I know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoice, and to do good in his life. And also that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God.

So that a man cannot in time find out the whole purpose of God. We begin by bringing Almighty God to the bar of judgement and saying—"Why did You make me?" "Who am I?" When we have done our jabbering and disputing we find that the implicit relationship of our personal life which we cannot get at, remains. Then we trace every kind of wisdom but find no direction in it, saving in the Wisdom of the Hebrews which reveals that the real fundamental relationship of our life is that of personal union with God. Until we get there, everything we are related to will go wrong.

"He hath made everything beautiful in His time." And when God gets His time in you and in me, things will be beautiful again. The rationalist says that the only thing for a man to do is to live a reasonable life.

^{14.} moonshine: something insignificant or meaningless.

^{15.} till all's blue: until you're exasperated, blue in the face.

A reasonable life and a philosophically rational life are totally different. Jesus Christ taught a reasonable life on the basis of faith in God—Be carefully careless about everything saving your relationship to Me. Don't be disturbed to-day by thoughts about to-morrow, leave to-morrow alone, and bank in confidence on God's organisation of what you do not see. Yesterday is past, there is no road back to it, to-morrow is not; live in the immediate present, and yours is the life of a child. God re-makes things beautiful when He gets His time in us over again. In our "teens" we begin to get into the throes of life and we lose our sense of the beauty of things, and only after the throes when we get into a personal relationship with God do we find again that everything is beautiful. By means of our relationship to God we begin to find out how God works in our lives. In His time it comes, and we begin to spell out the character of God. "This is life eternal, that they should know Thee."

(b) Rehabilitation (verses 14–15)

I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before Him. That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past.

By the incarnate power of the Son of God, God rebuilds by degree the whole relationship of things, bringing everything back into oneness with Himself. That is the meaning of Redemption—God has done His "bit." Sin is man's "bit." God's plan and design is not altered, but in the meantime man is countering it by his own design—We can bring it out in our own way. God is infinitely patient. He says over and over again—Not that way, My son, this is the way for you, a moral relationship to Myself. "He, that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." God will not prevent my breaking my back; if He sees I am determined to go my own way, He won't stop me; but when my neck is broken, He lifts me up and moves me where He wants, no difficulty now. "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit." When my heart is broken, the husk of individual relationship is merged into a personal relationship, and I find that God rehabilitates everything, i.e., He puts things back into their right fittings in me.

"There is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed: and hid, that shall not be known." There is no man but has some spot in his life where there is something dear, something that is a truth to him, a real wonderful possession full of light and liberty and joy, the finest spot in his experience. Jesus Christ says that ultimately through patience and by deliberately going on with God, everything that is now obscure will be as clear as that one spot. Will we "hang in" in patience? If we do, we shall see everything rehabilitated, and shall justify God in everything He has allowed.

Jesus Christ deliberately chose "the long, long trail"; we choose "the short cut," and continually go wrong until we understand the meaning of the 23rd Psalm, "The LORD is my shepherd, He leads me in the right paths." It looked as if the way was leading nowhere but beside still waters and green pastures; but I begin to see that it is all unfolding one thing, viz., a personal relationship to God, which is the meaning of a man's life. The Bible declares that what is true in personal life will be true in material life; there will be "new heavens and a new earth." The Utopian visions of socialists and atheists, dreamers and Christians, are all the same, there is no difference in their vision of a united human race, a perfect order of equity, everything in perfect harmony, But how is it to come about? We are all "in the soup" just now. No nation under heaven believes it is going to be brought about in Jesus Christ's way on the basis of Redemption. We all believe it will be brought about by a line of things that has yet to be tried, viz., Socialism.* We are on the verge of trying it, and it will be the nearest and the finest approach to fulfilling the vision; but at the point where it seems nearest fulfilment, it will make the biggest departure.

Where did the Christ come from historically? From the people called the Jews. The blasphemy of a Gentile like Voltaire is futile; no Gentile can blaspheme, because no Gentile knows God in the way the Jew does. It takes the race that produced Jesus to produce Judas; and it will take the race that produced Christ to produce the anti-Christ. We are on the verge of this discovery. We are insular and closed in, and are looking in the wrong direction for the great big thing to come, instead of taking the Bible revelation. Abide in your relationship to God, and you will see that the "anti" comes on the same line as the positive.

^{* &}quot;The vision of Socialism is magnificent; there are benedictions and blessings for mankind on the line of Socialism which have never been yet; but if once the root is cut from Redemption, it will be one of the most frantic forms of despotic tyranny the human race has ever known. It looks like the lamb, but when the big crisis comes, it gives life to the beast."—The Shadow of an Agony, p. 97. O.C.—Footnote in original text

IN THE DISCIPLINE OF DISCOURAGEMENT

Ecclesiastes 3:16-22

Glory of warrior, glory of orator, glory of song, Paid with a voice flying by to the lost on an endless sea

Glory of virtue, to fight, to struggle, to right the wrong

Nay, but she aim'd not at glory, no lover of glory she:

Give her the glory of going on, and still to he.
The wages of sin is death: if the wages of Virtue he dust.

Would she have heart to endure for the life of the worm and the fly?

She desires no isles of the blest, no quiet seats of the just,

To rest in a golden grove, or to bask in a summer sky:

Give her the wages of going on, and not to die. Tennyson

"Discouragement is disenchanted egotism" (Mazzini), i.e., the heart knocked out of self-love; I expected things to go this way and they have not, so I shall give it all up.

1. The Perversion of Realised Ambition (Ecclesiastes 3:16)

And moreover I saw under the sun the place of judgement, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there.

All through history we find it frequently happen that when a man realises his ambition, he turns it into diabolical perversity right off the reel. In the Bible the conviction is that the basis of human life is in the hand of God, not in the hand of human reason, and that an exalted position, moral, mental or spiritual, makes a man either more Godlike or more devil-like, and that by the decree of God and not by chance. When a man has mounted high and has the satisfaction of having fulfilled his ambition, he is compelled to be either a great humble man or a diabolical fiend.

Solomon is pointing out that when a man realises his ambition, he may pervert it and become tyrannical. Unless kings and rulers are God-fearing men, they may become tyrants of the wildest order.

One of the great stirring truths of the Bible is that the man who looks for justice from others is a fool. In moral and spiritual life if a man has a sense of injustice, he ceases to be of value to his fellow men. Never waste your time looking for justice; if you do you will soon put yourself in bandages and give way to self-pity. Our business is to see that no one suffers from our injustice.

The man who has satisfied his ambition may suddenly become a miserable tyrant and all his joy will go. "These things have I spoken unto you," said Jesus, "that My joy may be in you" (RV). What joy did Jesus have? He failed apparently in everything He came to do; all His disciples forsook Him, He was crucified, and yet He talked of His joy. The joy of Our Lord lay in doing what the Father sent Him to do. His purpose was not to succeed, but to fulfil the design of His coming—"For I am come down from heaven not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me" (RV).

What is the real design of man's creation? Solomon deals with every possible phase of life—metaphysics, philosophy, religion, commercial prosperity, moral integrity not as guesswork, he had been through it all, no one has the wisdom of Solomon, and his verdict is that it all ends in disaster. That is the summing up of it all unless a man sees that his "chief end is to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever," and it takes a long while to get there. To put things on any other basis will end in disaster.

2. The Prevailing of Righteous Authority (Ecclesiastes 3:17)

I said in mine heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked: for there is a time there for every purpose and for every work.

"God shall judge the righteous and the wicked." But Who is God? I have never seen God, or spoken to Him. An omnipresent, omniscient, omnipotent Being does not amount to anything to me; He is an abstract finding of a man's intellect. Can God take on hands and feet and man's ways of doing things, and manifest Himself on the plane on which we live? The Bible says that that is what God did do. Jesus Christ lived a human life on this earth, and He exhibited a disposition not yours and not mine. Any man who does not hoodwink himself knows perfectly well that he has not a disposition like Jesus Christ's. We have only to read the Sermon on the Mount and see God's demand for a fathomlessly pure heart, to know that. What Jesus Christ exhibited was not omnipotence and omniscience and omnipresence, but absolute holiness in human flesh, and He said "he that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Jesus Christ is the Judge. "The Father... hath given all judgement unto the Son" (John 5:22 RV).

Would I be concerned if my "cobber" were handed over to Jesus Christ to be judged, handed over to the Being Who paid the price of Redemption, Who lived the spell of God's dispensation between birth and death on the plane on which we live, and manifested an unsulliedly holy life, the Being Who claims He can put His own disposition into me, the One Who says "I am the first and the last," the One to Whom all judgement has been given? or would I be prepared to trust His honour and stake everything on Him?

We cannot judge ourselves by ourselves or by anyone else, there is always one fact more in everyone's life that we do not know. We cannot put men into types, we are never at the balance of one another's heredity; therefore the judgement cannot lie with us. Solomon says that God's judgement is right and true and that a man can rest his heart there. It is a great thing to notice the things we cannot answer just now, and to waive our judgement about them. Because you cannot explain a thing, don't say there is nothing in it. There are dark and mysterious and perplexing things in life, but the prevailing authority at the back of all is a righteous authority, and a man does not need to be unduly concerned. When we do find out the judgement of God, we shall be absolutely satisfied with it to the last degree, we won't have another word to say—"that Thou mightest be justified when Thou speakest, and be clear when Thou judgest."

In the meantime God has something from which to clear His character when we see Him—"and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." There is no problem, no personal grief, no agony or distress (and God knows there are some fathomless agonies just now—awful injustices and wrongs and evils and nobility all mixed up together) but will have an overwhelming explanation one day. If we will hang in to the fact that God is true and loving and just, every judgement He passes will find us in agreement with it finally.

Solomon is saying from his pre-Incarnation standpoint that every man when he sees the judgement of God untrammelled¹⁶ by bodily limitations, will say that God was perfectly right in all He allowed. Can any one of us say now that God's character is clear? It is ridiculous to pin our faith to a creed about God. The experience of Job is a proof that creeds must go. Every now and again we have to outgrow our creeds. Morally it is better to be an atheist than to believe in a God whom "to be God is not fit."

3. The Parallel of Perishableness (Ecclesiastes 3:18-21)

I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts. For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?

There is a philosophy which says that if a man wills it, he need never die; but he cannot will it! There is a limit to will; no man can will pure will. Solomon is saying you may do what you like, but you will die like a dog. He is dealing with the spell of our actual lives; we all die. It is humiliating for our predications to remember that although the spirit of man is indestructible, the phase of life which we bank on naturally passes. We may have labour in it, and delight and satisfaction in it, but it will all pass. When a beast dies, his body disappears and his soul goes downwards into entire nature; the spirit of a man goes straight back to God Who made it; it is never absorbed into God.

The essence of Christianity is not adherence to principles; but a personal relationship to God through Jesus Christ at work in the whole of my life. The people who influence us are not those who set out to do it, they are prigs; but the folk who have a real relationship to God and who never bother whether they are being of use; these are a continual assistance.

4. The Probation of Reasonable Activity (Ecclesiastes 3:22)

Wherefore I perceive that there is nothing better, than that a man should rejoice in his own works; for that is his portion: for who shall bring him to see what shall be after him?

The basis of things is not rational. Reason is our guide among facts but reason cannot explain facts. Reason and logic and intellect have to do with the time between birth and death, but they can give no explanation of before birth or after death. All we infer of either is speculation; it may be interesting but it is apt to blind us to the facts. Solomon deals with the expression of practical life as it is, and he finds it a sorry mess. He says it is a philosophic plaster to say that when a man gives up a thing he makes it easier for those who come after him; a man does not find his true joy in sacrificing or in sin or in labour. We may be laying the foundations for those who come after us, but "who shall bring him to see what shall be after him?" It sounds all right, but is there any enjoyment in it? True enjoyment is not in what we do but in our relationships. If a man is true to God, everything between birth and death will work out on the line of joy. If we bank on what we do, whether it is good or bad, we are off the track; the one thing that matters is personal relationship.

What, then, are we to do in our ordinary active life? It is not a question of making it easy for those who come after us, but of what a man is to do in the spell between birth and death. According to Our Lord's teaching, a man has to base his life on his relationship to God and live according to that relationship with the simple gaiety of a child. If we apply the Sermon on the Mount to our ideas of individual and national life we shall find how we ignore what Our Lord teaches. Wherever Christianity comes straight home to us, we ignore it; when it gets at others, we preach it for all we are worth. The general history of Christianity is that it has been tried and abandoned because it is found to be difficult; but wherever it has been tried and honourably gone on with, it has never failed.

Our civilisation is based on the foundation of murder—the first civilisation was founded by Cain; and civilised life is a vast, complicated, more or less gilded-over system of murder. This does not mean that civilisation can never be just and right. The Bible speaks of a "holy city," a "new earth," and reveals that it is to be brought about by the man who lives his life based on God in all his relationships and does not worry about what he is going to do later.

When we study Hebrew wisdom we see how terrifically far we have degenerated away from God and from confidence in God. Nowadays the almighty microbe has blotted God out of His heaven. When we come to the "soup" we are in just now, the catastrophic earthquake that is blasting the whole globe to bits, all we can do is to put on plasters and borrow opportunist phrases. According to Hebrew Wisdom, the thing to do is to bank on our faith in God, and where our duty lies do it like a man "and damn the consequences."

When in doubt physically, dare; when in moral doubt, stop; when in spiritual doubt, pray; and when in personal doubt, be guided by your life with God. Base all on God, and slowly and surely the actual life will be educated along the particular line of your relationship to Him.

ON WINKING THE OTHER EYE

Ecclesiastes 4

Why do they prate of the blessings of Peace? we have made them a curse,

Pickpockets, each hand lusting for all that is not

And lust of gain, in the spirit of Cain, is it better or worse

Than the heart of the citizen hissing in war on his own hearthstone?

Sooner or later I too may passively take the print Of the golden age—why not? I have neither hope nor trust;

May make my heart as a millstone, set my face as a flint,

Cheat and be cheated, and die; who knows? we are ashes and dust.

- 6. The Occasion of Sagacity and Stubbornness (Ecclesiastes 4:13–16)

The title of this chapter indicates the treachery that is in you and in me, and consequently in the other fellow! One of the first things to develop in a boy is the realisation that he can "do" someone.

Solomon will not allow us to imagine that life is other than full of cunning and craft and deception. The "babe in the wood" idea does not hold—"I don't know how he could do it!" Not one of us has a single 17 motive; the only One Who had a single motive was Jesus Christ, and the miracle of His Redemption is that He can put a single motive into any man. There is no cunning in the Sermon on the Mount. As long as we deal on the line of craft and cunning, Jesus Christ is no good to us. We can easily make a fool of goodness. The romance of the life of a disciple is not an external fascination but an inner martyrdom.

Tennyson and Browning and Carlyle all write as men who see things without the glamour of temperament or religion or conceit. To look at life as it is, and to think of it as it is, must make a man a pessimist. If we are not pessimistic, it is either because we are generally thick-headed and do not think, or because we have temperaments that are optimistic. If we face things as they are, we shall find that true optimism comes from a source other than temperament. According to Solomon, it comes from applying Hebrew Wisdom. To-day we are bothered over finding out whether there is a God and what is the origin of things. Solomon faces facts as they are.

1. The Oppression of Tyranny (Ecclesiastes 4:1-3)

So I returned, and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun: and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the side of their oppressors there was power; but they had no comforter. Wherefore I praised the dead which are already dead more than the living which are yet alive. Yea, better is he than both they, which hath not yet been, who hath not seen the evil work that is done under the sun.

In this chapter Solomon deals with injustice and tyranny; over-reaching and craftiness. Verses 1–3 are a statement of things as they are. The spell between birth and death is mine, and I along with other human beings make the kind of life I live. I cannot make it independently of other wills, unless I happen to be a Napoleon or a Kaiser and bind my will on everything under my power.

The oppression of tyranny means that I drive my will on other people, and if they do not do what I want, I break them. It is an oppression in which one power crushes another. "The tears of such as were oppressed"—nothing can heal them. Think of the devastations and havoc throughout the world just now. What is going to make up to the people who are broken? To say that "every cloud has a silver lining" is a kind lie. Unless a man can get into a relationship with the God Whom the Bible reveals, life is not worth living. Most of us are mercifully shielded, we are not sensitive enough to feel or to experience the terrific things that Solomon experienced and saw in his lifetime; we see things through coloured, or cynical, glasses, but the cynic's standpoint is not a true one, it distorts things. In human life as it is, the oppression of tyranny has the biggest run. Take the things we experience out of our own circle where they are balanced by domestic affections, into a setting where these things do not count, and see if Solomon is drawing a long bow. 18 Jesus Christ in His day submitted to the providential order of tyranny represented by Pilate (see John 18:36; 19:10–11); He saw that tyranny was inevitable because the nation to which He belonged had fallen from the standard it should have lived up to.

"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." There will come one day a personal and direct touch from God when every tear and perplexity, every oppression and distress, every suffering and pain, and wrong and justice will have a complete and ample and overwhelming explanation. The Christian faith is exhibited by the man who has the spiritual courage to say that that is the God he trusts in, and it takes some moral backbone to do it. It is easier to attempt to judge everything in the span between birth and death.

2. The Oppression of Trade (Ecclesiastes 4:4) Again, I considered all travail, and every right work, that for this a man is envied of his neighbour. This is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

If you go back to the origin of civilisation, you find it was founded by a murderer. Among the good things, the shielding and protecting things, that are the outcome of civilisation, what Solomon mentions is always to be found, viz., the crushing of someone in order to get gain. It may be done kindly or brutally, but the basis of success must be the crushing of something or someone. There is a rivalry between men, and we have made it a good thing; we have made ambition and competition the very essence of civilised life. No wonder there is no room for Jesus Christ, and no room for the Bible. We are all so scientifically orthodox nowadays, so materialistic and certain that rationalism is the basis of things, that we make the Bible out to be the most revolutionary, unorthodox and heretical of books. Jesus Christ echoes Solomon's attitude: "For a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."

^{17.} single: pure; unmixed.

^{18.} drawing a long bow: exaggerating, telling unlikely stories.

At the basis of trade and civilised life lie oppression and tyranny. Whether you are king or subject, says Solomon, you cannot find joy in any system of civilised life, or in trade and commerce; for underneath there is a rivalry that stings and bites, and the kindest man will put his heel on his greatest friend. These are not the blind statements of a disappointed man, but statements of facts discerned by the wisest man that ever lived.

3. The Oppression of Idling (Ecclesiastes 4:5-6)

The fool foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own flesh. Better is an handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit.

"The best thing to do is to be a Bohemian and have nothing to do with civilised life; to live from hand to mouth and not do a hand's turn." This has been a cult in every age of civilised life. We have seen it in our own day in Charles Wagner¹⁹ and his plea for a simple life, and in Walt Whitman and Thoreau, who advocated the simple life on a higher line. When a man is fed up with a certain line of things, he revolts and goes to the opposite extreme. To-day tyranny and oppression have eaten into men's sense of justice, and they have revolted and gone to the other extreme.

Solomon tried first of all to get at the secret of things through philosophy and thinking; then he revolted into a reign of animal passion; then as king he insisted on good laws, but found he was oppressing the life out of the people; then he realised the tyranny of trade and tried idling, but found that that too oppressed.

In all trade and commerce there is oppression, and we try to justify it by saying that the weakest must go to the wall.²⁰ But is that so? Where are the mighty civilisations of other days? Where are the prehistoric animals, those colossal powerful creatures? It is they that have gone to the wall. The great blunder in all kingdoms amongst men is that we will demand strong men, consequently each kingdom in its turn goes to the wall because no chain is stronger than its weakest link. Jesus Christ founded His Kingdom on the weakest link of all—a Baby, "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born anew" (RV). Consequently the gates of hell cannot prevail against His Kingdom.

4. The Obsession of Solitariness (Ecclesiastes 4:7–8)

Then I returned, and I saw vanity under the sun. There is one alone, and there is not a second; yea, he hath neither child nor brother: yet is there no end of all his labour; neither is his eye satisfied with riches; neither saith he, For whom do I labour and bereave my soul of good? This is also vanity, yea, it is a sore travail.

There is such a thing as an obsession of solitariness. Hermits, ascetics and celibates cut themselves off in revolt—"Because I cannot find peace or joy or happiness in the tyranny of civilised life or in commerce, and I cannot be an idle tramp, I become a solitary and live a sequestered life." Solomon points out what history has proved that this is an experiment that ends disastrously, because a man cannot shut out what is inside by cutting himself off from the outside. Jesus Christ was not a solitary man—"The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold, a man gluttonous and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!" John the Baptist was a solitary man—"For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He hath a devil."

"Oh that I had wings like a dove! Then would I fly away, and be at rest" (RV). The desire is to be solitary—"If only I could get away and be quiet; if only I could live in a sunrise or a sunset!" We have to find our true life in things as they are with that on the inside which keeps us right. The true energy of life lies in being rightly related to God, and only there is true joy found.

It is an interesting study in psychology to watch people who are engaged in drastic social and rescue work and find out whether they are doing it for a surcease from their own troubles, to get relief from a broken heart. In a great many cases the worker wants a plaster for his own life. He takes up slum work, not because it is the great passion of his life, but because he must get something to deliver him from the gnawing pain of his own heart. The people he works amongst are often right when they say he is doing it to save his own soul.

5. The Optimism of Society (Ecclesiastes 4:9–12)

Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labour. For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up. Again, if two lie together, then they have heat: but how can one be warm alone? And if one prevail against him, two shall withstand him; and a three-fold cord is not quickly broken.

The conclusion that Solomon comes to is that trade is better than idling; that both solitariness and society as it is are pretty bad, but that society is better than solitariness. Domestic life and married life and comradeship are all advocated by Solomon (cf. 1 Timothy 4:1–3). The Bible always emphasises the facts of life as they are. Whenever Jesus Christ applied His teaching to actual life He focused it round two points—marriage and money. If the religion of Jesus Christ and the indwelling of the Spirit of God cannot deal with these things and keep a man and woman as God wants them to be, His religion is useless.

6. The Occasion of Sagacity and Stubbornness (Ecclesiastes 4:13-16)

Better is a poor and a wise child than an old and foolish king, who will no more be admonished. For out of prison he cometh to reign; whereas also he that is born in his kingdom becometh poor. I considered all the living which walk under the sun, with the second child that shall stand up in his stead. There is no end of all the people, even of all that have been before them: they also that come after shall not rejoice in him. Surely this also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

It is a disastrous thing for a man never to be ragged, an appalling thing to be a privileged young man! A lad who has been his mother's pet and has been brought up like a hothouse plant is totally unprepared for the scathing of life as it is, and when he is flung out into the rugged realities of life, he suffers intolerably. Conceive the suffering of a lad who has been sheltered, never had anything go against him, never been thwarted, when the tension does come. It is better to be a wise youth who can stand being ragged and taken down. One can always recognise the lad who has not been with others, he will not be admonished, consequently you cannot warn him.

Solomon says whether you are wise or foolish, upright or not, a king or tyrannised over by a king, successful or a failure, in society or solitary, stubborn or sagacious, all alike ends the same way. All is passing, and we cannot find our lasting joy in any element we like to touch. It is disastrous for a man to try and find his true joy in any phase of truth, or in the fulfilment of ambition, or in physical or intellectual solitariness, or in society; he will find his joy only in a personal relationship to God. That relationship was expounded by Jesus Christ when He said—"If any man cometh unto Me, and hateth not his own father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple" (RV). Our first concern is to be personally related to God. Jesus Christ is God manifested in human flesh, and we have to ignore to the point of hatred anything that competes with our relationship to Him.

When once a man is there, he receives a hundredfold more of all he gave up to get there, and he never demands an infinite satisfaction from those other relationships. The man or woman who does not know God demands an infinite satisfaction from other human beings which they cannot give, and in the case of the man, he becomes tyrannical and cruel. It springs from this one thing, the human heart must have satisfaction, but there is only one Being Who can satisfy the last abyss of the human heart, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ. When once a man or woman is rightly related to Him, the one never demands the impossible from the other, everything is in its right place. "If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself" (RV), i.e., deny his right to himself. The essence of sin is self-realisation, my prideful right to myself. The disposition that ought to rule is God's right to me, i.e., Christ-realisation.

It takes a long time for any one of us to realise our need of Jesus Christ personally, and it takes a nation a long time to realise that the only way things can be put right is not on the basis of rationalism, but only on the basis of Redemption. The Bible is neither obsolete nonsense nor poetic blether: it is a universe of revelation facts.

"A MAN'S REACH SHOULD EXCEED HIS GRASP"

Ecclesiastes 5:1-7

Glory about thee, without thee; and thou fulfillest thy doom

Making Him broken gleams, and a stifled splendour and gloom,

Speak to him thou for He hears, and Spirit with Spirit can meet

Closer is He than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet.

If we try to find lasting joy in any human relationship it will end in vanity, something that passes like a morning cloud. The true joy of a man's life is in his relationship to God, and the great point of the Hebrew confidence in God is that it does not unfit a man for his actual life. That is always the test of a false religion.

1. The Rectitude of Ritualism v. "Rutualism" (Ecclesiastes 5:1)

Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, than to give the sacrifice of fools: for they consider not that they do evil.

There is a use for ritual in a man's religious life. Because a thing is necessary at one time of life, it does not follow that it is necessary all through. There may be times when ritual is a good thing and other times when it is not. Bear in mind that in the Hebrew religion there is an insistence on ecclesiasticism and ritual. In the New Testament that is finished with (see John 4:21–24); but Ezekiel prophesies that the true worship of God will yet be established on earth as it has never yet been, and there will be ritual then to an extraordinary degree.

In the present day the revolt is against ritual and form; with the average man ritual is at a discount. There is a time in a healthy religious²¹ when the revolt is right. In the history of the salvation of a man's soul it may be better for him to worship in a whitewashed building, with a bare rugged simplicity of service; but while it is true that a man may go through forms and ceremonies and be a downright hypocritical humbug, it is also true that he may despise ritual and be as big a humbug. When a man is in a right relationship to God ritual is an assistance; the place of worship and the atmosphere are both conducive to worship. We are apt to ignore that ritual is essential in a full-orbed religious life, that there is a rectitude in worship only brought about by the right use of ritual. For instance, when Jesus Christ taught His disciples to pray, He gave them a form of prayer which He knew would be repeated through the Christian centuries.

2. The Rashness of Reaction v. Recollectedness of Religion (Ecclesiastes 5:2)

Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God; for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth: therefore let thy words be few. (RV)

When you have been through a bereavement, or have thought you would be found out in a wrong and were not, there is the danger of reacting into a rash spell of devotion. You read your Bible and say things to God, but there is no reality in it. It is like the reaction of a man after a drinking bout, he mistakes his remorse for repentance. Repentance is not a reaction, remorse is. Remorse is—I will never do the thing again. Repentance is that I deliberately become the opposite to what I have been.

Solomon says—Beware of this kind of religiousness; don't be rash with your mouth, hold yourself in. When you go into the presence of God, remember it is not to be in a passing mood; everything a man says to God is recognised by God and held clear in his record. Solomon indicates that it is better to have nothing to do with religious life than to talk religion in rashness only. "These are they who, when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladness; and have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time."

In this war there has been less of the rashness of reaction than might be supposed; it has rather been the opposite way. Many a man when he has had the "bivvers" (i.e., a mixture of fear and cowardice and a determination to go through) has said, "I feel inclined to look at my Bible; but no, I haven't read it before and I won't now." Again, a man may suddenly in the rashness of reaction pretend he is religious; but there is nothing in it. The characteristic of true religion is recollectedness; pull yourself together, stop woolgathering, and remember that you are in the presence of God.

3. The Refrainings of Reverence (Ecclesiastes 5:3)

For a dream cometh through the multitude of business; and a fool's voice is known by the multitude of words.

If you are busy in your daily life, the dreams you have at night may be simply the refractions of the "multitude of business." Any amount of futile religion is based on this line of things—"I have been eating too much, but now Lent has come and I will fast for a time." There is nothing genuine in it, it has not the grip of God about it. When a man comes into the presence of God he refrains himself and remembers that he is not there to suffer from his own reactions, to get comfort for himself, to pray along the line of "O Lord, bless me." He is there to refrain from his own personal needs and to get into the scope of God's outlook.

4. The Repudiation of Responsibility (Ecclesiastes 5:4–6)

When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools: pay that which thou hast vowed. Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay. Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin; neither say thou before the angel, that it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and destroy the work of thine hands?

At the end of the year we hear much about vowing. Solomon's advice is—Don't vow, for if you make a vow even in ordinary matters and do not keep it, you are the worse for it. If you make an engagement to meet a man and don't fulfil it, you suffer for it. It will mean a defect in your general make-up. It is better not to promise, better to be uncertain, than to promise and not fulfil. We are all apt to be like Rip Van Winkle and say—"I won't count this time." We reap terrific damage to our own characters when we vow and do not perform. You may not take account of the fact that you made an engagement and did not keep it; but your nerves do, the record is there. Solomon's counsel in practical life as well as in religious life is—never make a vow unless at all costs you carry it through. Promises are a way of shirking responsibility. We can get over an unpleasant interview by promising to do a thing; but it is an appalling thing to say "Yes, I will," and then not do it. Don't pile up vows before men, and certainly not before God.

Jesus Christ was stern along this line. "No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." When Hezekiah was sick he vowed a vow before God—"I shall go softly [as in a solemn procession, RV mg], all my years"; but when he was out of danger he forgot all about his vow. To face death day in and day out, as men do in war, is a different matter from facing sickness or an accident. If you have had a narrow escape and have come through, don't be rash in reaction; don't promise and make vows, but look to God and bank on the reality of Jesus Christ.

One of the dangers in modern evangelism is that it lays the emphasis on decision for Christ instead of on surrender to Jesus Christ. That to me is a grave blunder. When a man decides for Christ he usually puts his confidence in his own honour, not in Christ at all. No man can keep himself a Christian, it is impossible; it is God Who keeps a man a Christian. Many a man is kept away from Jesus Christ by honesty—"I won't be able to keep it up." If Christianity depends on decisions for Christ, it is better to keep away from it; but Our Lord tells us to come to Him because we are not able to decide—a very different proposition. Jesus Christ came for the weak, for the ungodly and the sinful, and He says, "Blessed are the poor in spirit," not—"Blessed is the man who has the power to decide and to keep his vow." Jesus Christ calls the man who says—"I cannot do it; others may have the strength, but I haven't." Jesus Christ says to such, "Blessed are you." It is not our vows before God that tell, but our coming before God, exactly as we are in all our weakness, and being held and kept by God.

5. Recklessness v. Resoluteness of Righteousness (Ecclesiastes 5:7)

For in the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities: but fear thou God.

There is such a thing as being haunted on the inside of the life. It begins when a man tampers with the borders of spiritualism and communicates with supernatural powers; he opens the unconscious part of his personality to all kinds of powers he cannot control. The only cure is to fear God, to be rightly related to God, and these fears and hauntings will go. "Put on the whole armour of God." When a man is related to God through Jesus Christ, God protects not only the conscious life but the unconscious life as well. Unless a man is guarded by God, there are forces that can find their way into the unconscious domain. There are dreams and influences that tamper with a man's life and leave him a haunted man. No man has any right to make curiosity, which is his guide in intellectual life, his guide in moral life. No man ever does it without falling. It is a terrible thing to be haunted, to have your own conscience laugh at you. When we are related to God, He guards from dangers seen and unseen. The man who fears God has nothing else to fear, he is guarded in his conscious and unconscious life, in his waking and his sleeping moments.

THE TRIUNE-DUST, DRUDGERY, DEITY

Ecclesiastes 5:8-20

Ah, make the most of what we yet may spend,
Before we too into the Dust descend;
Dust into Dust, and under Dust to lie
Sans Wine, sans Song, sans Singer, and—sans End!

Alike for those who for To-day prepare,
And those that after a To-morrow stare,
A Muezzin from the Tower of Darkness cries,
"Fools! your reward is neither Here nor There."

- 2. Profit Ordained of Tillage (Ecclesiastes 5:9)
- 3. Profitless Possession of Treasure (Ecclesiastes 5:10–11)
- 4. Peace Out of Toil (Ecclesiastes 5:12)
- 5. Possessions Outwitting Trust (Ecclesiastes 5:13–14)
- 6. Personality the Only Truth (Ecclesiastes 5:15–17)
- 7. Predominant Obligation in Time (Ecclesiastes 5:18–20)

God made man a mixture of dust and Deity—"And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Genesis 2:7). The dust of a man's body is his glory, not his shame. Jesus Christ manifested Himself in that dust, and He claims that He can presence any man with His own divinity. The New Testament teaches us how to keep the body under and make it a servant. Robert Browning of all the poets is the one who insists that we make headway not in spite of the flesh, but because of the flesh, and in no other way.

Drudgery is the outcome of sin, but it has no right to be the rule of life. It becomes the rule of life because we ignore the fact that the dust of the earth belongs to God, and that man's chief end is to glorify God. Unless we can maintain the presence of Divinity in our dust, life becomes a miserable drudgery. If a man lives in order to hoard up the means of living, he does not live at all, he has no time to, he is taken up with one form of drudgery or another to keep things going.

The wisdom of to-day concerns itself chiefly with the origin of things and not with God, consequently neither the philosopher nor the mystic has time for actual life. The Wisdom of the Hebrews concerns itself with practical life, and recognises that the basis of things is tragic. The Bible attitude to practical life is at a discount with most of us because we are far away from the rooted and grounded confidence in God of the Hebrews. We do not think on Bible lines, we think on pagan lines, and only in our emotional life do we dabble in spirituality; consequently when we are hard hit, our religion finds us dumb; or if we do talk, we talk as pagans. It has been fashionable to have a contempt for anyone who believes in the Book of Genesis. But now the war has hit us a fair blow and we cannot talk so glibly, nor are we so certain that our cocksureness about things is right; we are not so insolent in our attitude to the Bible standpoint. We are beginning to be prepared to think.

The Bible has no sympathy with saying things ought not to be as they are. The practical thing is to look at things as they are. What is the use of saying there ought to be no war, in the meantime there is! There ought to be no injustice, there is! There ought to be no violence, there is! Solomon never wastes his time in that way; he says these things are. We can ignore facing them, or we can face them in a way which will lead us either to despair or to the Cross of Jesus Christ.

1. Providential Order of Tyranny (Ecclesiastes 5:8)

If thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgement and justice in a province, marvel not at the matter: for he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they.

All through the Bible the difference between God's order and God's permissive will is brought out. God's permissive will is the things that are now, whether they are right or wrong. If you are looking for justice, you will come to the conclusion that God is the devil; and if the providential order of things to-day were God's order, then that conclusion would be right. But if the order of things to-day is God's permissive will, that is quite another matter. God's order is no sin, no Satan, no wrong, no suffering, no pain, no death, no sickness and no limitation: God's providential will is every one of these things—sin, sickness, death, the devil, you and me, and things as they are. God's permissive will is the haphazard things that are on just now in which we have to fight and make character in, or else be damned by. We may kick and yell and say God is unjust, but we are all "in the soup." It is no use saying things are not as they are; it is no use being amazed at the providential order of tyranny, it is there. In personal life and in national life God's order is reached through pain, and never in any other way. Why it should be so is another matter, but that it is so is obvious. ". . . though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered."

We have to get hold of God's order in the midst of His permissive will. God is bringing many "sons" to glory. A son is more than a saved soul; a son is one who has been through the fight and stood the test and come out sterlingly worthy. The Bible attitude to things is absolutely robust, there is not the tiniest whine about it; there is no possibility of lying like a limp jellyfish on God's providence, it is never allowed for a second. There is always a sting and a kick all through the Bible.

Solomon says when you see the providential order of tyranny, don't be amazed at it. According to the Bible the explanation is that the basis of things is tragic; things have gone wrong and they can only be put right and brought into God's order by the individual relationship of men and women. We find tyranny everywhere. Take it in a personal way—we all think we are the creatures of injustice. There never was a man who was not! Justice is an abstraction at the back of our heads. It is absurd to make abstractions entities. Justice and righteousness are emanations from a personal God, and it is His presence and ruling that gives these abstractions their meaning. We say that God is just—where is the evidence of it? Jesus Christ taught, "From him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away"—where is the justice in that? The great lasting point is not an abstraction called justice, not a question of right or wrong, of goodness or badness, but a personal relationship to a personal God. If I expect to see everything in the universe good and right and I find it is not, I get fainthearted. Solomon won't have us go off on the limbo of the abstract and say these things ought not to be; they are! Injustice and lust and rapine and murder and crime and bestiality and grabbing are as thick as desert sand, and it is cowardly for a man to say because things are as they are, therefore he must drift. We say we had to take a particular course because the prevailing trend of God's providence was that way. It is a remarkable thing that two boats can sail in opposite directions in the same wind, they can go according to the steering skill of the pilot and not according to the prevailing wind; and in the same way a man can trim his sails and grasp hold of God's order however much it costs him.

We need to be warned against the books that pander to our weak side, and the folks who say—"Poor fellow, he couldn't help it." It may be a kindly thing to say, but some things should not be treated with kindness. There is a tyrannical order which runs all through life, and if we get slopped over with sentiment we are not only unfit for life, but are of no use whatever to lay hold of God's order in the midst of things as they are. If the Incarnation means anything to a man, it means fight, "with breast and back as either should be," indwelt by the Spirit of God. Beware of the things that are apt to lead you to a side eddy—false spirituality or intellectual contempt will do it.

2. Profit Ordained of Tillage (Ecclesiastes 5:9)Moreover, the profit of the earth is for all: the king himself is served by the field.

When God created man He made him of dust and Deity; sin introduced the other element, viz., drudgery. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; . . . thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; . . . in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." The earth is cursed because of man's apostasy, and when that apostasy ceases in actual history, the ground will no longer bring forth the curse. The final redemption includes

"new heavens and a new earth." "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree"; and "the wolf shall dwell with the lamb." Instead of the savage ferocity of the beasts, there will be the strength without the savageness—an inconceivable order of things just now.

In anything like a revolution or a war, we find what Solomon refers to here is true, that to make profit you must go back to the dust you came from. The curious thing about civilisation is that it tends to take men away from the soil, and makes them develop an artificial existence away from the elemental. Civilisation has become an elaborate way of doing without God, and when civilised life is hit a smashing blow by any order of tyranny, most of us have not a leg to stand on. Solomon reminds us that king and peasant alike can only gain their profit by proper tillage of the soil. The laws given in the Bible include a scheme for the treatment of the earth and they insist on proper rest being given to the land, and make it clear that that alone will bring profit in actual existence. Leviticus 25 is the great classic on the rights of the earth.

3. Profitless Possession of Treasure (Ecclesiastes 5:10-11)

He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase: this is also vanity. When goods increase, they are increased that eat them: and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes.

To make treasure is different from making profit. Treasure is the thing that is esteemed for itself, not for what it brings. The Bible tirades against possession for possession's sake. "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, . . . for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." If your treasure is in gold or in land or the possessions of earth, that is where your heart will be, and when wars and rumours of wars arise, your heart will fail you for fear. If a man has his treasure vested in bonds and a war strikes, how can he keep his mind at rest? Panic and devastation and ruin are the result—profitless in every degree.

The manipulation of civilised life has not resulted in the development of the tillage of the land, but in the building up of treasure, and it is not only the miser who grabs. The sense of possession is a snare to true spiritual life. Paul uses the life of a soldier to illustrate a saint's life (2 Timothy 2:3–4). No sense of property or possession can go along with an abiding detachment. In civilised life it is the building up of possessions that is the snare—This is my house, my land; these are my books, and my things—imagine when they are touched! I am consumed with distress. Over and over again Jesus Christ drives this point home—Remember, don't have your heart in your possessions, let them come and go. Solomon warns about the same thing—whatever possessions you have will consume the nobility of the life in an appalling way. In the case of Job, Satan asked permission to play havoc with his possessions and God gave him permission, and every possession Job had, even to his bodily health, went; but Job proved that a man would remain true to his love of God though all his possessions went to rack and ruin.

4. Peace Out of Toil (Ecclesiastes 5:12)

The sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep.

The sleep of a labouring man is sweet, it recreates him. The Bible indicates that sleep is not meant only for the recuperation of a man's body, but that there is a tremendous furtherance of spiritual and moral life during sleep. The conception of sleep that Arnold Bennett or any practical man has is that we need just enough to recuperate the body. According to the Bible, a great deal more than physical recuperation happens in the sleep of any man who has done his daily toil in actual work. "He giveth unto his beloved in sleep" (Psalm 127:2 RV mg). This is a phase that is cut out altogether, because we ignore the deeper issues.

"Whether he eat little or much." Paul's counsel is that "if any would not work, neither should he eat." There are plenty of folks who eat but don't work, and they suffer for it. If we are physically healthy, the benefit of the food we eat corresponds to the work we do, and the same is true in mental, moral and spiritual health. The prayer Our Lord taught us is full of wisdom along this line, "Give us this day our daily bread." That does not mean that if we do not pray we shall not get it. The word "give" has the sense of "receiving." When we become children of God we receive our daily bread from Him, the basis of blessing lies there, otherwise we take it as an animal with no discernment of God.

5. Possessions Outwitting Trust (Ecclesiastes 5:13-14)

There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt. But those riches perish by evil travail: and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.

If you have many possessions, it will ruin your trust and make you suspect everyone, and the better type of life is ruined. Again, you cannot hold your possessions, you may just overreach yourselves in a speculation and "mafeesh" possessions; or you may die and your sons squander all you possessed. You cannot find lasting joy in these things, let them come and go, remain true to your relationship to God and don't put your trust in possessions. Live your life as a labouring man, a man rightly related to mother earth, and to the providential order of tyranny; trust in God whatever happens, and the result will be that in your heart will be the joy that every man is seeking.

6. Personality the Only Truth (Ecclesiastes 5:15–17)

As he came forth of his mother's womb, naked shall he return to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his labour, which he may carry away in his hand. And this also is a sore evil, that in all points as he came, so shall he go: and what profit hath he that hath laboured for the wind? All his days also he eateth in darkness, and he hath much sorrow and wrath with his sickness.

Personal relationship brings us to the truth, and it is truth that relates a man personally to God. Jesus said, "I am . . . the Truth." We have to form the mind of Christ, and it is not done at a leap. It is done by a maintained personal relationship to Jesus Christ, and slowly and surely the new mind is formed. How many of us are working things out from the basis of a personal relationship to Jesus Christ? We work things out on the abstract logic of a sense of justice or of right. It is appalling to find spiritual people when they come into a crisis taking an ordinary commonsense standpoint as if Jesus Christ had never lived or died. It is a man's personal relationship that tells. When he dies he can take nothing he has done or made in his lifetime with him. The only thing he can take with him is what he is. There is no warrant in the Bible for the modern speculation of a second chance after death. There may be a second chance. There may be numbers of interesting things—but it is not taught in the Bible. The stage between birth and death is the probation stage.

We are apt to wrongly relate ourselves to books and to people. We often hear such remarks as—"The parson is talking over the heads of the men"; or, "The Bible is all very well, but I don't understand it." It is never the thing you understand that does you good, but what is behind what is taught. If it is God's truth, you and I are going to meet it again whether we want to or not. The thing we value most in a meeting is not so much what is said, but the release that comes from the different atmosphere that is brought in, and we can begin to think. We benefit most by things over which we cannot be articulate, and if the truths we read or hear are the truths of God, they will crop up again. "A man's reach should exceed his grasp."

^{22.} mafeesh: Arabic expression meaning finished, done with, dead; to mafeesh possessions is to lose everything you own.

The things we listen to and read ought to be beyond our comprehension, they go into our minds like seed thoughts, and slowly and surely bring forth fruit. This is good counsel for boys and girls in their teens. We should always choose our books as God chooses our friends, just a bit beyond us, so that we have to do our level best to keep up with them. If we choose our own friends, we choose those we can lord it over.

7. Predominant Obligation in Time (Ecclesiastes 5:18-20)

Behold that which I have seen: it is good and comely for one to eat and to drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labour that he taketh under the sun all the days of his life, which God giveth him: for it is his portion. Every man also to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice in his labour; this is the gift of God. For he shall not much remember the days of his life; because God answereth him in the joy of his heart.

These verses are an astute summing up of a man's obligations in time. If a man becomes temporarily "magnoon"²³ through anger or lust or false religion, the first thing that happens is that he will stop eating; no man can eat when he is in a rage. If you are in the habit of getting angry, you will soon get physically upset, the connection runs all through. The test that a man is right with God is in eating and drinking. Solomon says, "It is good and comely for men to eat and drink." Paul says, Beware of those who teach abstinence from meats; "Whatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no question for conscience' sake." Remain true to God in your actual life. The right thing to do with riches is to enjoy your portion, and remember that what you lay by is a danger and a snare.

Solomon had everything a man could have in life, he had every means of satisfying himself; he tried the beastly line, the sublime line, the aesthetic line, the intellectual line but, he says, you cannot find your lasting joy in any of them. Joy is only to be found in your relationship to God while you live on this earth, the earth you came from and the earth you return to. Dust is the finest element in man, because in it the glory of God is to be manifested. The Bible makes much of man's body. The teaching of Christianity on this point has been twisted by the influence of Plato's teaching, which says that a man can only further his moral and spiritual life by despising his body. The Bible teaches that the body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, it was moulded by God of the dust of the ground and is man's chief glory, not his shame. When God became Incarnate "He took not on Him the nature of angels," but was made "in the likeness of men," and it is man's body that is yet to manifest the glory of God on earth. Material things are going to be translucent with the light of God.

Jesus Christ "came eating and drinking," and from Genesis to Revelation eating and drinking, and labouring in the ordinary toil of life in the condition of things as they are, are the things in which man will find his right relationship to life and to God.

THE EDGE OF THINGS

Ecclesiastes 6:1-12

When the Soul, growing clearer,
Sees God no nearer;
When the soul, mounting higher,
To God comes no nigher:
But the arch-fiend, Pride,
Mounts at her side.
Foiling her high emprise,
Sealing her eagle eyes,
And, when she fain would soar,
Makes idols to adore—
Changing the pure emotion
Of her high devotion,
To a skin-deep sense

Of her own eloquence Strong to deceive, strong to enslave— Save oh! save.

^{23.} magnoon: Scottish expression: beside himself; out of his mind.

^{24.} Matthew Arnold (1822–1888): English scholar, poet, and critic.

To say that the basis of things is not rational does not mean that a man has not to be reasonable. A rationalist is not simply one who uses his reason, but one who says there is nothing at the basis of life that cannot be solved by ordinary reason and enlightenment. The question of tragedy, of the gap between man and God, on which the Bible bases everything, has nothing to do with the philosophy of a rationalist. To him sin is not a positive thing, it is a mere defect; consequently the need for Redemption is emphatically ruled out. There is a tragedy and an agony at the basis of things that cannot be explained by reason; it must either be explained away, or faced in the way the Bible faces it. There is something wrong, and it can only be put right by Redemption.

Many a man affects his doubts of God, they are purely intellectual. There is a phase when a man gets into tremendous stress of weather mentally, but there is also a phase when his doubts are a mere affectation. The Books of Wisdom are strong on facing facts, and yet there is no touch of despair underneath. In all other books which face things as they are, there is tremendous pessimism and abject despair, no hope whatever; but in Solomon's writings, while he maintains a ruggedness and an intensity and an unswerving truthfulness to facts, there is an extraordinary hopefulness running all through, and that without blinking anything, or getting sentimental and falling back on the kindness of God. The minor prophets also state appalling facts—slaughters and crimes on foot and foretold enough to knock hope out of any man, but the Hebrew writers never seem to despair however bad the facts may be, there is always the indefinable certainty that there is something to hope about.

1. Perils of Inevitable Barriers (Ecclesiastes 6:1-2)

There is an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men: a man to whom God hath given riches, wealth, and honour, so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth, yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it: this is vanity, and it is an evil disease.

A man may have all these things—riches, wealth, honour—and at the same time be the victim of an incurable disease. The Hebrew mind looks upon that as an act of God, something for which the man himself is not responsible. The question of the inevitable barriers comes out very strongly in the records of Bible characters. When the inevitable strikes, there is no whine, but rather an astonishing facing of the situation. These inevitable things are outside a man's control, he is not asked about them, and when they enter as factors into his calculations they present him with a peril. Suppose a man is very ambitious, and rightly so, then just as he has begun to attain his ambitions, he is alarmed over certain symptoms in himself and consults a doctor and the verdict of an incurable disease is passed, it is madness to think he will ever be able to fulfil his ambitions. The danger is lest the man sink into crushing despair, while the courageous thing for him is to hand over to God what belongs to Him and to wait for His solution.

As one of the results of this war men have been ruined in thousands of cases so far as their future life on this planet is concerned. To look at facts as they are and to think them right out to the bottom, makes a man a pessimist, not a despairer, but a pessimist. That means things are as bad as they can be; it is absurd to say they could be worse, it is impossible to conceive things worse. A hopeful attitude does not come by facing facts, or by not facing facts, but only by temperament or religion.

The inevitable barriers are there in every one of our lives. They may not be of an intense order, such as a terrible maining, or blindness, or deafness, or something that knocks a man out of fulfilling his ambitions, they may be hereditary incapabilities; but the peril is lest we lie down and whine and are of no more good. The thing to do is to recognise that the barriers are inscrutable, that they are there not by chance but entirely by God's permission, and they should be faced and not ignored. Was there ever a more severely handicapped life on this earth than Helen Keller's? The peril of the inevitable barriers is that if I have not faced the facts sufficiently, I am apt to blame God for them. There is one fact more that I do not know, and that fact lies entirely with God, not with me. It is no use to spend my time saying, I wish I was not like this, I am just like it. The practical point in Christianity is—Can Jesus Christ and His religion be of any use to me as I am, not as I am not? Can He deal with me where I am, in the condition I am in?

2. Preposterous and Inveterate Brutishness (Ecclesiastes 6:3)

If a man beget an hundred children, and live many years, so that the days of his years be many, and his soul be not filled with good, and also that he have no burial; I say, that an untimely birth is better than he.

In the Hebrew conception it was a disgrace for a man to have no burial (cf. 2 Kings 9:34–35). This conception is remote from us to-day.

Solomon says: a man has no business to be an inveterate brute, to live to breed and eat and pile up goods without the slightest idea of the kind of monument his life is erecting—for himself he lives and for himself he dies. Solomon won't have the brute aspect of human life ignored; but to remember that I am a brute and to be brutish are two different things. It is a preposterous iniquity to be a brutish man, satisfied with being once-born (cf. Psalm 73:3-9). The thing to do is to recognise that I am a brute, but I have the brute well under control. Solomon is talking of the man who will not recognise this. To ignore the fact that I am a man is the action of a fool, or of a mystic. To recognise it and see to it that I am a chaste man is the line the Bible insists on—Don't deny that you have a body, but insist on it that you can live in your body the kind of manhood that God demands. Solomon is speaking of the man who is a brute and brutish-"Yes, I am an animal, and I will glut my appetites as they come, I shall sink and not rise." Solomon says, "an untimely birth is better than he."

There is a difference between doing wicked things and being a wicked man. When Jesus Christ saw the pariahs of His day, He did not say to them, "Ye are of your father the devil"; but He did say that to the Pharisees (John 8:44). The Pharisees were play-actors, putting on what did not belong to them; but remember, too, that some of the best men in Our Lord's day were Pharisees, e.g., Nicodemus, Saul of Tarsus. Jesus said to the Pharisees: "The publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you." It was not the bad people who were guilty of the wicked things. We are apt to tone down the things Our Lord tiraded against—pride, self-realisation, etc. When a man is guilty of wrong things, he recognises instantly that there is a chance of being delivered; but the righteous man sits self-governed in his own right, he is his own god.

3. Place of Invincible Banality (Ecclesiastes 6:4–8)

For he cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness. Moreover he hath not seen the sun, nor known any thing: this hath more rest than the other. Yea, though he live a thousand years twice told, yet hath he seen no good: do not all go to one place? All the labour of man is for his mouth, and yet the appetite is not filled. For what hath the wise more than the fool? what hath the poor, that knoweth to walk before the living?

Solomon is referring to the man who lays up for himself and for others, and he does not commend him. To-day we enthrone insurance and economy, but it is striking to recall that the one thing Jesus Christ commended was extravagance. Our Lord only called one work "good," and that was the act of Mary of Bethany when she broke the alabaster box of ointment. It was neither useful nor her duty, it sprang from her devotion to Jesus, and He said of it—"Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her."

The object of a man's life is not to hoard; he has to get enough for his brute life and no more; the best of his life is to be spent in confidence in God. Man is meant to utilise the earth and its products for food and the nourishment of his body, but he must not live in order to make his existence. If the children of Israel gathered more manna than they needed, it turned into dry rot, and that law still holds good.

When we learn this Wisdom of the Hebrews we shall soon see how far away we are from it and from the teaching of Jesus Christ. Our Lord taught that a man ought to be carefully careless about everything saving his relationship to Himself. We who call ourselves Christians are tremendously far, almost opposingly far, from that central point of Christianity: it is not even intimate to us. Generation after generation of civilised life have been opposed to it, and as long as we are on the line of economy and insurance, Jesus Christ cannot have His innings. In personal life, in Church life and in national life, we try Jesus Christ's teaching, but as soon as it becomes difficult we abandon it, or else we compromise. "Take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" Bank your faith in God, do the duty that lies nearest and "damn the consequences." Who is prepared to do this, prepared to stake his all on Jesus Christ and His word? We do it in preaching and in books, but not in practical life. We put our emphasis on the other line, trusting in our wits, and God is left out of it. When once we are related to Jesus Christ, our relation to actual life is that of a child, perfectly simple and marvellous.

4. Perdition of Individual Burning (Ecclesiastes 6:9)

Better is the sight of the eyes than the wandering of the desire: this is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

Lust applies not only to the bestial side of things; lust means literally—"I must have it at once, and I don't care what the consequences are." It may be a low, animal lust, or it may be a mental lust, or a moral or spiritual lust; but it is a characteristic that does not belong to the life hid with Christ in God. Love is the opposite; love can wait endlessly. "Better is the sight of the eyes, than the wandering of the desire." One of the first things Jesus Christ does is to open a man's eyes and he sees things as they are. Until then he is not satisfied with the seeing of his eyes, he wants more, anything that is hidden he must drag to the light, and the wandering of desire is the burning waste of a man's life until he finds food. His heart lusts, his mind lusts, his eyes lust, everything in him lusts until he is related to God. It is the demand for an infinite satisfaction and it ends in the perdition of a man's life.

Jesus Christ says, "Come unto Me, . . . and I will give you rest," i.e., I will put you in the place where your eyes are open. And notice what Jesus Christ says we will look at—lilies and sparrows and grass. What man in his senses bothers about these things! We consider aeroplanes and tanks and shells, because these demand our attention, the other things do not. The great emancipation in the salvation of God is that it gives a man the sight of his eyes, and he sees for the first time the handiwork of God in a daisy. No longer has he a burning lust that turns everything into a howling wilderness of wrong.

"But their eyes were holden that they should not know him. . . . And their eyes were opened, and they knew Him" (Luke 24:16, 31). We see our friend, the other man sees a fellow in a tunic, we perceive the man inside the tunic. When Jesus Christ asked His disciples "Who do men say that the Son of man is?" He was referring to this perception. To the majority of men Jesus Christ was only a Nazarene carpenter, but He says—"Who say ye that I am?" "Even though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now we know him so no more" (2 Corinthians 5:16 RV). The salvation of Jesus Christ enables a man to see for the first time in his life, and it is a wonderful thing.

Heaven above is brighter blue. Earth around is sweeter green, Something lives in every hue Christless eyes have never seen; Birds with gladder songs o'erflow, Flowers with deeper beauties shine Since I know, as now I know, I am His and He is mine.

5. Predisposition by Inspired Beginnings (Ecclesiastes 6:10–12)

That which hath been is named already, and it is known that it is man: neither may he contend with him that is mightier than he. Seeing there be many things that increase vanity, what is man the better? For who knoweth what is good for man in this life, all the days of his vain life which he spendeth as a shadow? for who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun?

The Hebrew Books of Wisdom are all of a piece with the first three chapters of Genesis. In order to estimate man properly in the "soup" he is in just now, we must remember what he was in the beginning. God created man in His own image, a son of God. Adam was to have control over the life in the air and on the earth and in the sea, on one condition—that he allowed God to rule him absolutely. Man was to develop the earth and his own life until he was transfigured. But instead there came the introduction of sin, man took the rule over himself, he became his own god, and thereby lost control over everything else. It is this that accounts for the condition of things as they are now.

If we are going to have a sympathetic understanding of the Bible, we must rid ourselves of the abominable conceit that we are the wisest people that have ever been on the earth; we must stop our patronage of Jesus Christ and of the Bible, and have a bigger respect for the fundamental conception of life as it is. At the basis of Hebrew wisdom first of all, is confidence in God; and second, a terrific sigh and sob over the human race as a magnificent ruin of what God designed it to be, Modern wisdom says that man is a magnificent promise of what he is going to be. If that point of view is right, then there is no need to talk about sin and Redemption, and the Bible is a cunningly devised fable. But the Bible point of view seems to cover most of the facts.

WHAT PRICE THIS?

Ecclesiastes 7:1-7

Indeed the Idols I have loved so long
Have done my credit in Men's Eye much wrong;
Have drown'd my Honour in a shallow Cup
And sold my Reputation for a Song.
Indeed, indeed, Repentance oft before
I swore—but was I sober when I swore?
And then and then came Spring and Rose-in-hand
My thread-bare Penitence a-pieces tore.

- 5. The Atrophy of Sagacity by Clownishness (Ecclesiastes 7:6)
- 6. The Anachronism of Conscientiousness (Ecclesiastes 7:7)

What a man prizes highly, he prices and praises accordingly. Everything has its price and can be bought. Men and women can be bought. We are bought on the low level of swine, or bribery, or moral compromise, or spiritual insurance; and we are bought with the precious blood of Christ.

Solomon rattles the bottom board out of every piece of deception. The only true joy in life, he says, is based on a personal relationship to God. You cannot find joy in being like animals, or in art, or aestheticism, in ruling or being ruled—the whole thing is passed in survey in a most ruthless examination by a man whose wisdom is profounder than the profoundest and has never been excelled, and in summing it all up he says that joy is only found in any of these things when a man is rightly related to God.

An elemental thing to remember is that we must never read into a man's words what we mean, but just try and find out what the author of the words means. As a rule we read into his words what we mean and consequently miss his meaning altogether. Before we can criticise a man's statements we must find out his meaning, find out what kind of a genius or a fool he was who said it. If we do this with the Bible, it will put the statements made there in quite another light. If the man in the street (i.e., just you and me) is going to prove the truth of Christianity, he must "come off the street owning its power." If we do not intend to go out of our own ways of looking at things, we shall never find out the other man's ways of looking at them.

1. The Attainment of Sagacious Character (Ecclesiastes 7:1)

A good name is better than precious ointment; and the day of death than the day of one's birth.

Solomon is speaking of character, not of reputation. Reputation is what other people think of you; "character is what you are in the dark," where no one sees but yourself. That is where the worth of a man's character lies, and Solomon says that the man who has attained a sagacious character during life is like a most refreshing, soothing, healing ointment. In the New Testament "name" frequently has the meaning of "nature." "Where two or three are gathered together in My name," i.e., My nature (Matthew 18:20). Everyone who comes across a good nature is made better by it, unless he is determined to be bad. To say a man has a good nature does not mean he is a pious individual, always quoting texts. The test of a nature is the atmosphere it produces. When we are in contact with a good nature we are uplifted by it. We do not get anything we can state articulately, but the horizon is enlarged, the pressure is removed from the mind and heart and we see things differently.

2. The Advantage of a Sad Condition (Ecclesiastes 7:2)

It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart.

Solomon is not implying that it is better to grouse around in the luxury of misery than to feast; he is dealing with finding true essential joy, and he says if ever we are going to have a true estimate of life we shall have to face it at its worst. All through the books of Hebrew Wisdom there is this certainty that the basis of actual life is tragedy. Human nature is a ruin of what it once was, and a man is a fool to ignore that. If you want to know the basis of life, it is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of pleasure. Remember, there is death, and there is worse than death—sin and tragedy and the possibility of terrible evil. Solomon does not mean us to live as some folks who seem never to be happy unless they are at a funeral. He means us to keep at the basis of things, to scrape through the veneer and face things, and we learn to do this better in mourning than in feasting. "Appear not unto men to fast." If you have had a sad dose, don't pull a long face, cover it up, don't let anyone imagine you are going through what you are.

If a man builds his life over a volcano, one day there will come terrific havoc. If we ignore the safety valves in mother earth, we will have to pay the penalty. Mount Vesuvius is one of the pumps that keeps the earth in proper order; the Creator has put His danger signals there, and yet people ignore them and plant their vineyards on its slopes, then when an eruption occurs we blame God and say how cruel He is to allow it.

No wise man will build up his life without knowing what the basis of life is, and Solomon indicates that a man can only arrive at a true view of life by brooding on the underlying tragedy.

3. The Appropriateness of Sorrow and Chastisement (Ecclesiastes 7:3)

Sorrow is better than laughter: for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better.

"Countenance" means more than the face; the countenance is the whole aspect of a man's nature (cf. Psalm 42:5, 11). To say "I won't countenance it" does not mean to show disapproval in my face, but that I refuse to give the thing the approval of my personal life. The man who has faced the fact that the basis of life is tragic is the one who begins to see the true relation of things, and he says "I will go softly all my years." We may find that the man who is remarkably cheerful now has gone through a hell that would make us shudder to face. The men and women who have been through things have always plenty of leisure for others, they never obtrude their own experiences. Many a man has found God in the belly of hell during the war. He has come face to face with God through having had things stripped off and having to face the fact that the basis of life is tragedy.

4. The Aspects of Shallowness and Censure (Ecclesiastes 7:4-5)

The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning; but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth. It is better to hear the rebuke of the wise, than for a man to hear the song of fools.

Solomon says that the house of mourning is the place where a man learns wisdom, he won't be so sharp with his tongue, there are things he might have said but he won't. If you will only see your "cobber" laid out, you will shut your mouth and not say what you were going to. No man who faces the ultimate tragedy in another's life can be the cheap and easy cynic we are all apt to be without thinking. Whistler²⁵ wrote a book entitled The Gentle Art of Making Enemies—a miserably spiteful thing to do!

Go to the house of mourning and see your friend dead, and it will alter your attitude to things; don't be shallow. There is a place for the shallow, however, as well as the profound. One of the greatest defects in Christianity is that it is not shallow enough, in this respect it knows a great deal better than Jesus Christ. It is religious enough, supernormally moral, but not able to eat, drink and be merry. Jesus Christ made the shallow and the profound, the give and the take, one. The art of shallow conversation is one that is rarely learned. It is a great gift as well as a real ministration to be able to say nothing cleverly. It is an insult to be everlastingly introducing subjects that make people think on the deepest lines. It takes all the essence of Christianity to be shallow properly.

The shallowness Solomon mentions here is that of refusing to realise that there is a basis of tragedy. A man who tells his chum with a broken heart to go to a picture show is a fool. He ought to know that the house of shallowness is not the place for him, but that Jesus Christ is the only One Who can heal him. It is a question of having a wise heart through facing the reality of things. When a man has "the heart of the wise," he is able to counsel his friend in the dark way.

5. The Atrophy of Sagacity by Clownishness (Ecclesiastes 7:6)

For as the crackling of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of the fool: this also is vanity.

The private history of a professional clown may be one of the saddest. The man who sets himself to make others laugh has often an immensely sad life of his own behind. A man can kill his own wisdom by living apart; he can atrophy his real life by keeping up a certain role. If a man has a name for being smart, he may find it a job to keep up the role. When you take up the clownish line, you kill something that ought not to be killed, you atrophy the wisest part of your nature. It takes a tremendous amount of relationship to God for a man to be what he is.

6. The Anachronism of Conscientiousness (Ecclesiastes 7:7)

Surely oppression [extortion, RV] maketh a wise man mad; and a gift destroyeth the heart.

Anachronism means anything out of keeping with the time. A wise man who has built his life in confidence in God will appear a fool when he is amongst people who are sleek and cunning. "Extortion" makes the wisdom of the wisest appear fools. You can ridicule anyone, even Jesus Christ. The wisdom of God is arrant stupidity to the wisdom of the world, until all of a sudden God makes the wisdom of the world foolish (1 Corinthians 1:23-25). If you stand true to your faith in God, there will be situations in which you will come across extortioners, cunning, crafty people, who use their wits instead of worshipping God, and you will appear a fool. Are you prepared to appear a fool for Christ's sake? Very few of us know anything about suffering for Christ's sake. A man who knows nothing about Christ will suffer for conscience or conviction's sake. To suffer for Christ's sake is to suffer because of being personally related to Him.

If you are going to be true to God, you will appear a fool amongst those who do not believe in God, and you must lay your account with this. Jesus said, "Every one therefore who shall confess Me before men . . ." (RV). and it tests a man for all he is worth to confess Jesus Christ, because the confession has to be made in the set he belongs to and esteems. The "shame" of the gospel. "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ," says Paul.

No man can confess Jesus Christ without realising the cost to others; if he states this, he rebukes them. The Spirit of God may lay hold of one man among a crowd of men to be related to God, but his sense of honour may keep him from going through—^{25.} James McNeill Whistler (1834-1903): American painter; wrote The Gentle Art of Making Enemies, published in 1890.

I don't want to appear different from the others; if I go through with this and relate myself to Jesus Christ, I shall be a speckled bird²⁶ and look superior. Many a man is kept from coming to Jesus because his own crowd is not going that road. It is a standard of honour, but a standard of honour not rightly related. In the life of a disciple it is the honour of Jesus Christ that is at stake, not our own honour. Your crowd matters to you, but your crowd does not matter to me; nor do you need to care what my crowd thinks of you. But take a step aside from your own immediate circle, and you will have to reckon with what they say about you (cf. Hebrews 13:13).

In Christian experience what stands in the way of my obedience to God is not the cost to me, but the cost to my father and mother and others. "If any man cometh unto Me, and hateth not his own father, and mother . . . he cannot be My disciple" (RV). Jesus Christ's penetration comes straight home. Think what it cost Jesus Christ's mother and His friends for Him to be true to God. If He had not been true to what He came to do, His mother would not have had the sword pierce her heart; His own nation would not have blasphemed the Holy Ghost. In going on with God this is where we find the anachronism comes in—according to the astute wisdom of the world we live in, we are made to do or say the thing at the wrong time.

This is brought home to-day by the war. It is not a question of what it costs the individual men to join up, but of the cost to those who belong to them; the strain the wives and mothers and fathers and children have to bear. That is the terrific cost to the man who goes out to fight his country's battles. No man can tell why he enlisted. The watchword "For King and Country" is too shallow. The sacrifice he makes is never intended for man, it is meant for God, and is to be poured out before the Lord, as David poured out the water from the well of Bethlehem (see 2 Samuel 23:14–17).

SOMETHING DOING

Ecclesiastes 7:8-12

And is it that the haze of grief
Makes former gladness loom so great?
The lowness of the present state,
That sets the past in this relief?
Or that the past will always win
A glory from its being far,
An orb into the perfect star
We saw not, when we moved therein.

- 3. The Religion of Reminiscence—and the Present Excels the Past (Ecclesiastes 7:10)
- The Wisdom of the World and the World of Wisdom (Ecclesiastes 7:11–12)

There is a tendency in us all to mourn over something—to say that the past was a great deal better than the present, or that the future will be better; the worst time we ever lived in is the present—forgetting that we never lived in any other time!

Because a thing is good enough for us, or for an age, or for a nation, is not sufficient to make it the truth. It may be a statement that will do for a time, but unless we have been dumped down on to the basis of things, our experience is of no avail as a revelation of the foundation of life. It is the extraordinary thinker, the man with the extreme experience, rather than the average man, who gets at the truth at the basis of things. When we deal with great thinkers like Solomon or Shakespeare we get to the truth of things; we do not get the truth through experience. Most of us do not think; we live healthy ordinary lives and don't bother about thinking at all; but when an upheaval comes from underneath proving that the basis of things is not rational, we find the value of the Bible attitude, which is that the basis of things is tragic and not rational, and the war has proved that the Bible is right. We have to live based on our relationship to God in the actual condition of things as they are.

^{26.} speckled bird: person who stands out as abnormal, odd, or eccentric.

1. The End Explains—and the Patient Excels the Proud (Ecclesiastes 7:8)

Better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof: and the patient in spirit is better than the proud in spirit.

"The end explains," not "The end justifies the means"—that is never right. If you live as an animal, the end will explain that you have made a mess of things. If you live morally, the end will explain that you have lived morally. "End" has the meaning of "issue" (cf. Jeremiah 29:11 RV mg). When death ends the present order, the issue will reveal how you have lived. Only when you live in personal relationship to God does the end explain that you have the right secret of life.

In the Book of Revelation (which is the Apocalypse of the New Testament as the Song of Solomon is the Apocalypse of the Old Testament), Jesus Christ refers to Himself as "the first and the last." It is in the middle that human choices are made; the beginning and the end remain with God. The decrees of God are birth and death, and in between those limits man makes his own distress or joy.

Solomon counsels us not to be staggered when we find oppressors and tyrants around, the end will explain all. It is not enough to say that because my religious beliefs do for me, therefore they are satisfactory. If everyone were well brought up and had a good heredity, any number of intellectual forms of belief would do. The test of a man's religion is not that it does for him, but that it does for the worst man he knows.

2. The Excitement of Exasperation—and Discretion Excels Domineering (Ecclesiastes 7:9) Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry: for anger resteth in the bosom of fools.

All through the Bible, emphasis is laid steadily on patience. A man's patience is tested by three things—God, himself, and other people. An apt illustration is that of a bow and arrow in the hand of an archer. God is not aiming at what we are, nor is He asking our permission. He has us in His hands for His own purpose, and He strains to the last limit; then when He lets fly, the arrow goes straight to His goal. Acquire your soul with patience. Don't get impatient with yourself.

The Bible is a relation of facts, the truth of which must be tested. Life may go on all right for a while, when suddenly a bereavement comes, or some crisis; unrequited love or a new love, a disaster, a business collapse, or a shocking sin, and we turn up our Bibles again and God's word comes straight home, and we say, "Why, I never saw that there before." As long as you live a logical life without realising the deeper depths of your personality, the Bible does not amount to anything; but strike lower down where mathematics and logic are of no account, and you find that Jesus Christ and the Bible tell every time.

Truth is never a matter of intellect first, but of moral obedience. The great secret of intellectual progress is curiosity, but curiosity in moral matters is an abomination. Moral sophistry says-Go and find out for yourself. If I do, I am a fool. I don't care what a man's moral strength is, I defy him to start on the line of moral curiosity without instantly damning some of the finer sensibilities of his life. "But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Genesis 2:17). We are not to know evil by eating of the fruit of the tree; if we do eat of the tree we shall die. If you are pitchforked into moral filth, you will be kept; but if you go in to it from curiosity you will not be kept, no one goes into it without coming out soiled. You may be physically clean, but you have lost something.

The essential element in moral life is obedience and submission. If you want spiritual truth, obey the highest standard you know. "If any man will do His will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it be of God or whether I speak from Myself" (John 7:17). Intellectually, curiosity is the thing; morally, obedience is what is needed. One ounce of chastity is worth fifty years of intellect in moral discernment. Moral truth is never reached by intellect, but only through conscience. When a fine keen intellect and moral obedience go together, we find the mind that is beginning to discover step by step where goodness and truth lie.

"Anger resteth in the bosom of fools." Solomon's warning is that a man who excites himself to exasperation is a fool, because simulated indignation produces the thing itself. For instance, if in the morning you begin to snarl, in less than half an hour you will feel thoroughly bad tempered. The man who can curb his spirit and control himself is a wise man, and is better than the man who can take a city.

Discretion excels domineering. Obstinacy and strength of will are often confounded, but they are very different. An obstinate man is unintelligent; a strong-minded man is one who has made up his mind on a matter but is prepared to listen to your arguments and deal with them, and show to your satisfaction that his decision is right. A stubborn man is always a "small potato." We may make up our minds easily, but to make up a mind of any breadth takes time, there are so many sides to every matter. If you have made up your mind on the line of strength and not of obstinacy, when you are questioned you don't domineer. Domineering is the intellectual side of stubbornness, and is a sign of moral weakness. It is absurd to mistake the expression of physical stubbornness, such as a square jaw, for strength of will; tenacity of will may go with a jaw like a child's top. Will is not a thing I possess; will is the whole man active. Solomon is pointing out that the man who is excited into exasperation is a weak man, a fool, and if he begins to domineer it shows he has no discretion. There are some things that can be answered straight off and others that cannot.

"Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry." Anger nearly always covers up a thing that is wrong. Suppose you have been in the wrong in a certain matter and no one knows it but yourself, and then you are wrongfully accused of something else, you are so thankful that the real thing was not discovered that you make protestations of innocence as if you were spotlessly right all through. It is an indication that there is weakness and foolishness somewhere. Never domineer, and never get exasperated unless you want to be a fool.

3. The Religion of Reminiscence—and the Present Excels the Past (Ecclesiastes 7:10)

Say not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better than these? for thou dost not enquire wisely concerning this.

At the beginning of the war what was called the Christian religion was mainly a cult of reminiscence. Take any denomination you like, and the religious bodies that do not consider themselves denominations—was their main object the establishment of a family likeness to Jesus Christ? No, their main object was to establish the particular creed they upheld, consequently when the crisis struck us, the religious element of the country was powerless to grip the situation. Individual spiritual people were not powerless; in every denomination there were those who were the true salt of earth, but the external phase of religion was not able to grapple with the situation. The passion of reminiscence was ruling everywhere, the old ways of doing things. A revival adds nothing, it simply brings back what had been lost and is a confession of failure. The effects of a revival may be deplorable. "Oh that we had the ancient days of simplicity and sunshine"—days of adversity and humbug! Things are bad and difficult now, but not a tithe as difficult as they used to be. It is of no use to pray for the old days; stand square where you are and make the present better than any past has been. Base all on your relationship to God and go forward, and presently you will find that what is emerging is infinitely better than the past ever was. The present excels the past because we have the wealth of the past to go on. Solomon is not talking evolution, but simple fact.

4. The Wisdom of the World and the World of Wisdom (Ecclesiastes 7:11–12)

Wisdom is good with an inheritance: and by it there is profit to them that see the sun. For wisdom is a defence, and money is a defence: but the excellency of knowledge is, that wisdom giveth life to them that have it.

"Wisdom is good, and so is an inheritance, but it is more excellent that both should go together. It is all very well to talk about wisdom, but the best thing is to be shrewd, to have wisdom and money, to balance things properly."

Solomon says that that compromise will deceive you. If a man is honest because it pays him to be, he ceases to be honest. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." We say we can because we do not see God. If I only see you, I will wink the other eye—you trick me and I'll trick you. Civilisation is based on murder, it is wisdom with an inheritance, keep the two things going. As long as you try the juggling trick you will find the teaching of Jesus Christ is nonsense, but any man who dares to take God at His word will find it work every time. The world of wisdom is to bank all on God and disregard the consequences. Men are told to "decide for Christ"; no man can do it; what a man has to do is deliberately to commit himself to Jesus Christ. We get hold of the size of our dastardly impertinence when we say to God—"No, I can't trust Your word; I can't live the kind of life You require." Are we prepared to stake our all on the honour of Jesus Christ? Immediately a man is driven to distress and he realises that he must sink anyhow, he goes straight to Jesus Christ and finds that instead of sinking, he is lifted up and receives salvation. Stake everything on the honour of Jesus Christ, and you will find you have struck bedrock. Whenever our spiritual life is unsatisfactory it is because we have said to God—"I won't"; "You can't expect me to trust You." Then we must take the consequences. "And He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief." If Jesus Christ has done no mighty works for me it is either because I don't believe He can, or I don't want Him to. I may say—"Oh yes, I believe Jesus Christ will give me the Holy Spirit"; but I am not prepared for Him to do it, I don't want Him to. Will you launch out on what Jesus says? If you will, you will find that God is as good as His word.

Get to the place where you make the thing inevitable, burn your bridges behind you, make retreat impossible, then go ahead. Solomon's counsel is wise—"Trust in the LORD with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding." It is leaning to our own understanding that keeps the bridges behind.

"OVER THE TOP"

- 1. Inevitable and Attainable (Ecclesiastes 7:13)
- 2. Instructive and Aggregate (Ecclesiastes 7:14)
- 3. Irreparable and Anticlimax (Ecclesiastes 7:15)

- 5. Iniquitous and Anarchic (Ecclesiastes 7:17)
- 6. Injunction and Anathema(Ecclesiastes 7:18)
- 7. Intelligent and Animal (Ecclesiastes 7:19)
- 8. Impeccable and Artificial (Ecclesiastes 7:20)
- 9. Invidious and Argumentative (Ecclesiastes 7:21–22)

When the time comes to act, it has to be a going over the top—over the top of everything you have been entrenched in—prejudices, beliefs, etc.

1. Inevitable and Attainable (Ecclesiastes 7:13) Consider the work of God: for who can make that straight, which He hath made crooked?

All the Hebrew prophets and the New Testament apostles make a distinction between the inevitable and the attainable. There are inevitable things for which a man is not responsible. For instance, I cannot say when I will be born or when I will die; birth and death are inevitable. I have to attain within the two on the basis of things as they are. If this distinction between the inevitable and the attainable is not made, it will lead to a muddle in the presentation of evangelical religion.

When a man goes "over the top," he sees things as he never saw them before. He comes across things he cannot diagnose or understand, and he begins to flounder and wonders what he ought to do. The thing for him to do is to base on the inevitable and then find out what is attainable.

No man can redeem his own soul, or give himself a new heredity; that is the work of the sovereign grace of God. Man has nothing to do with Redemption, it is God's "bit"; but God cannot give a man a good character, that is not God's business, nor is it an inevitable thing. God will give us what we cannot give ourselves, a totally new heredity (see Luke 11:13). God will put the disposition of His Son, Holy Spirit, into any man who asks, then on that basis man has to work out a holy character. "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in you...."

"Who can make that straight, which He hath made crooked?" In our talks on the Book of Job we mentioned the refraction of God in the universe. ["Whenever God presents Himself in the present order of the material universe, He appears to go crooked, that is, crooked to our reason; we cannot understand Him. God allows things in the cosmic world which are a refraction; they do not continue in the straight simple line my mind tells me they ought to take. . . . If you try to weave a conception of God out of Jesus Christ's presentation of Him and then look at life as it is, you will find what is meant by the cosmic refraction of God—the God revealed in Jesus Christ is flatly contradicted in the natural world" (cf. Romans 8:20–22). [Baffled to Fight Better, pp. 57–58.—Footnote in original text.]

What man finds it easy to explain actual facts as he sees them to-day in connection with his belief in God? Job is the expression of a man who suffered in this way. In theory God appears to be just and kind, but in actual life things seem to flatly contradict His justice and kindness. It is part of common sense to be atheistic rather than to believe in the refraction of God in the universe. Solomon says that if we try and work things out on the line of intellect, on a theory of goodness or justice, we will always find the refraction. There is something wrong at the basis of things, and it cannot be put right until another inevitable thing happens, viz., the manifestation of the sons of God. The thing to do is to place our faith in God and attain morally in the midst of things, crooked as they appear. Watch the inevitable things, and don't try to work out the riddle of the universe.

2. Instructive and Aggregate (Ecclesiastes 7:14)

In the day of prosperity be joyful, but in the day of adversity consider: God also hath set the one over against the other, to the end that man should find nothing after him.

The test of elemental honesty is the way a man behaves himself in grief and in joy. The natural elemental man expresses his joy or sorrow straight off. To-day in our schools boys are taught stoicism; it produces an admirable type of lad externally, but not so admirable internally. When we are rightly related to God we must let things have their way with us and not pretend things are not as they are. It is difficult not to simulate sorrow or gladness, but to remain natural and stedfastly true to God as things come. Don't deal only with the section that is sad or with the section that is joyful, deal with them together.

When we accept God's purpose for us in Christ Jesus, we know that "all things work together for good."

Stoicism has the effect of making a man hysterical and sentimental, it produces a denseness spiritually. When you are joyful, be joyful; when you are sad, be sad. If God has given you a sweet cup, don't make it bitter; and if He has given you a bitter cup, don't try and make it sweet; take things as they come. One of the last lessons we learn is not to be an amateur providence—"I shall not allow that person to suffer." Suffering, and the inevitable result of suffering, is the only way some of us can learn, and if we are shielded God will ultimately take the one who interferes by the scruff of the neck and remove him. The fingers that caress a child may also hurt its flesh; it is the power of love that makes them hurt.

3. Irreparable and Anticlimax ((Ecclesiastes 7:15)

All things have I seen in the days of my vanity: there is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness, and there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life in his wickedness.

For a man to have doubts is not a sign that he is a bad man. David was up against things in his day—"Surely in vain have I cleansed my heart, and washed my hands in innocency; for all the day long have I been plagued, and chastened every morning" (Psalm 73:13-14 RV). Sum up the life of Jesus Christ by any other standard than God's, and it is an anticlimax of failure. "It is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful"not successful. The anticlimax comes when we look for rewards—"If I am good, I shall be blessed." The logic of mathematics does not amount to anything in the spiritual realm. If a man has had a good beginning of splendid uprightness, and all the advantages of a good education, we may say he is sure to attain. There never was a sunnier beginning than Samson's, and yet he ended in a frantic collapse. There are irreparable things and anticlimaxes in life, and the explanation is not to be found on the rational line, but on the line of personal relationship to God. Remain true to God, and remember that certain things are irreparable. There is no road back to yesterday, it is only God on the basis of Redemption Who can get back to yesterday. Logic and reason have to do with things based on space and time, but they cannot push beyond space and time. We are all agnostic about God, about the Spirit of God, and prayer. It is nonsense to call prayer reasonable; it is the most super-reasonable thing there is.

The war has produced anticlimaxes in hundreds of lives, men are maimed and useless for fighting their ambitions. You rarely hear a man who has been through the real agony of suffering say that he disbelieves in God; it is the one who watches others going through suffering who says he disbelieves in God. In the suffering there is a compensation which cannot be got at in any other way. It is not seen from the outside because the compensation cannot be articulately stated.

4. Introspective and Abnormal (Ecclesiastes 7:16)

Be not righteous over much; neither make thyself over wise: why shouldest thou destroy thyself?

Solomon is dealing with the fact that a man ought not to be either a religious fanatic or a stupid fool. Don't be fanatical, he says, remember you have an actual life to live. A fanatic sees God's order but remains invincibly ignorant about God's permissive will. The spiritual fanatic ignores the actual life and says—"Jesus Christ said there is no making and giving in marriage in heaven, so there must be none on earth." That is being over wise. If you examine yourself too much, you unfit yourself for life. There is a stage in life when introspection is necessary, but if it is pushed too far a man becomes abnormally hypersensitive, either in conceit or grovelling. Introspection is the result of love or of anything elemental. When a man falls in love, he feels he is not worthy to crawl on the earth by the side of his divinity! The same thing spiritually; when once a man sees God he is apt to forget that he has to live on this planet. Solomon's counsel is to live an earthly life on the basis of things as they are, and not to compromise or be over wise.

It is easier to cut ourselves off from actual things and to nourish a life of our own intellectually. An intellectual man sums up other men by their brains, as Carlyle²⁷ did, and he is apt to become contemptuous. A man is more than his brain. A man who lives a mystical life or an intellectual life frequently has an attitude of lofty contempt towards others. No man has any right to maintain such an attitude towards another human being, watching him as a spectator for purposes of his own, as journalistic copy, or as a religious specimen; if he does he ceases to be a human being by pretending to be more.

5. Iniquitous and Anarchic (Ecclesiastes 7:17)

Be not over much wicked, neither be thou foolish: why shouldest thou die before thy time?

Don't go to the opposite extreme and say, I am going to live as I choose. The right attitude is between the two—neither "over wise" nor "over much wicked."

In the Incarnation we see the right amalgam pure Deity and the pure human mixed. The talk about pure Deity is an intellectual conceit, it sounds winning to aesthetic culture, but it has no worth in a man's practical life. An Almighty, Incomprehensible, Incognoscible Being does not amount to anything to me. It is when God becomes Incarnate that we see the right amalgam, dust and Deity made one, human flesh presenced with Divinity. That is the meaning of the Incarnation, and Jesus Christ claims He can do it for any one of us. Man cannot be pure Deity and he cannot be pure dust; he has to have the right alloy—dust and Deity, made one by drudgery, and this produces the type of life with the right balance.

6. Injunction and Anathema (Ecclesiastes 7:18) It is good that thou shouldest take hold of this; yea, also from this withdraw not thine hand: for he that feareth God shall come forth of them all.

Don't be fanatically religious and don't be irreverently blatant. Remember that the two extremes have to be held in the right balance. If your religion does not make you a better man, it is a rotten religion. The test of true religion is when it touches these four thingsfood, money, sex and mother earth. These things are the test of a right sane life with God, and the religion that ignores them or abuses them is not right. God made man of the dust of the ground, and that dust can express either Deity or devilishness. Remember we are to be not numskulls, but holy men, full-blooded and holy to the last degree, not anaemic creatures without enough strength to be bad. The relation to life ordained by Jesus Christ does not unsex men and women, but enables them to be holy men and women. "The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil" (1 Timothy 6:10 RV). Money is a test, another thing which proves a man's religion; and the way a man treats the soil will also prove whether or not he is a son of God. A man needs to hold a right attitude to all these things by means of his personal relationship to God.

7. Intelligent and Animal (Ecclesiastes 7:19)

Wisdom strengtheneth the wise more than ten mighty men which are in the city.

"He that ruleth his spirit (is better) than he that taketh a city" (Proverbs 16:32). An intelligent man in a city, one who is guided by sagacity, is worth ten strong men who guard the city. In the present campaign it is the mobilisation of invention that is telling more and more. The man who is able to make use of sagacious inventions is worth a dozen men with mere strength, because he makes use of the strength of others. Our great commanders and leaders have not always been strong men physically. It is not always true that a sound mind is in a sound body; the finest of minds are often in impaired bodies, and some of the most sordid minds in healthy bodies.

8. Impeccable and Artificial (Ecclesiastes 7:20)

For there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not.

Impeccable—liable not to sin. The idea that because Jesus Christ was without sin therefore He could not be tempted, has become woven into religious belief. If that were so, the record of His temptation is a mere farce. Could Jesus Christ be tempted? Undoubtedly He could, because temptation and sin are not the same thing. "In all points tempted, . . . yet without sin." No good man is impeccable, that is, he never arrives at the place where it is impossible to sin. A man is able not to sin, but it never becomes impossible for him to sin. "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin: for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God" (1 John 3:9). The life of God is born in us, and the life of God cannot sin; that does not mean that we cannot sin; but that if we obey the life of God in us, we need not sin.

The best of men are but the best of men. Don't glory in men; don't say, I am of Paul; I am of Apollos. Bank your confidence in God, not in men. Unless we are damnable, we are not worth saving. If we cannot go to the devil, we cannot go to God. The measure of the depth to which a man can fall is the height to which he can rise. Virtue is the outcome of conflict, not of necessity.

9. Invidious and Argumentative (Ecclesiastes 7:21–22)

Also take no heed unto all words that are spoken; lest thou hear thy servant curse thee: for oftentimes also thine own heart knoweth that thou thyself likewise has cursed others.

"For with what judgement ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." This is an inexorable law. "I am perfectly certain So-and-so has been criticising me." Well, what have you been saying about him? Watch the process. It is as certain as God's throne, the measure you mete will be meted to you, not necessarily by the same person. Tit for tat is the inevitable law in actual life. Don't talk too much, says Solomon; if you talk too much, others will too. Don't be a busybody in other men's matters. A gossip is not always the bad person he is made out to be, those who listen and don't talk are the dangerous folk. The scandalmonger gets the blame, but the others are worse. A lie is not simply "a terminological inexactitude"; a lie is a truth told with bad intent. I may repeat the exact words of someone else and yet tell a lie because I convey a wrong meaning. Be careful, says Solomon, not to talk too much, because what you say will be taken up by others.

IN THE STY

Ecclesiastes 7:23-29

O me, why have they not buried me deep enough? Is it kind to have made me a grave so rough, Me, that was never a quiet sleeper? Maybe still I am but half dead; Then I cannot be wholly dumb; I will cry to the steps above my head And somebody, surely, some kind heart will come To bury me, bury me Deeper, ever so little deeper.

- 5. Perfection and Perversion of Humanity (Ecclesiastes 7:29)

The Bible deals with the worst tragedy that human nature and the devil could concoct. We seem to have forgotten this nowadays. The Atonement has been made a kind of moral "lavatory" wherein a man can wash and go out and get dirty again. But when a man like Solomon or Shakespeare or Ibsen lifts the veil from the basis of things (which most of us know nothing of because we are too dense or too remote from it), we find that the Redemption deals with tragedy of an appalling order.

When the war broke out, the ruling note in religion was being struck not by the men and women who knew the basis of things, but by those who were unfamiliar with the abominable tragedy at the basis of human life, such as is being exhibited now; consequently something feeble and ethereal and totally unlike the Bible was ruling, and being expressed in unrobust prayer meetings and in hymns and poems by anaemic people of both sexes. Our religious life was built up by people who were not dealing with tragedy. When civilised life is burst into we find what Solomon indicates, that the basis of life is tragic. No education, no culture, no sociology or government can touch the fathomless rot at the basis of human life in its deepest down storey. We live in the twenty-second storey up, and the tragedies we touch are only personal tragedies; only one in a million comes to understand the havoc that underlies everything. This line of thinking is absolutely important, not relatively important.

1. Programme and Plague of the Heart (Ecclesiastes 7:23–24)

All this have I proved by wisdom: I said, I will be wise; but it was far from me. That which is far on, and exceeding deep, who can find it out?

Solomon deliberately set himself to find out things and to live according to the highest possible wisdom, but, he says, "it was far from me." He discovered what every lad who has been well brought up and has had a decent amount of natural religion in his life experiences, when he finds that his ideals cannot be realised. A lad sees more clearly, dreams more purely and has higher thoughts in his teens than ever he does afterwards. Then he goes through the severest of struggles—I cannot bring my actual life up to the standard of my ideals; I won't lower my ideals, although I can never hope to make them actual. It cannot be done by prayer or by education; it can only be done in the way Jesus Christ says—"Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," i.e., I will make the ideal and the actual one. The only way in which ideals can be made actual is by a personal relationship to God through Jesus Christ.

Solomon was the wisest and the wealthiest of kings, yet he says that "the plague of his own heart" knocked him out (see 1 Kings 8:38). This is the first lesson everyone of us has to learn. To begin with we are not prepared to accept Jesus Christ's diagnosis of the human heart, we prefer to trust our own ignorant innocence. Jesus Christ says, "Out of the heart proceed fornication, adultery, murder, lasciviousness, thieving, lying," etc. (Mark 7:21-23). No man has ever believed that. We have not the remotest conception that what Jesus says about the human heart is true until we come up against something further on in our lives. We are apt to be indignant and say—"I don't believe those things are in my heart," and we refuse the diagnosis of the only Master there is of the human heart. We need never know the plague of our own heart and the terrible possibilities in human life if we will hand ourselves over to Jesus Christ; but if we stand on our own right and wisdom at any second an eruption may occur in our personal lives, and we may discover to our unutterable horror that we can be murderers, etc. This is one of the most ghastly and humiliating and devastating truths in the whole of human experience. Our convictions are strong on the basis of innocence, and many a man out of havoc and sin and the clanging of the gates of Paradise on the irreparable past, has to come to Jesus Christ with a life exhausted by sin. Why should he? We know what Jesus Christ can do for a man in that condition, but why cannot we see what He can do for the man who is not exhausted by sin? God does rescue the man who is down and out in sin, but there is no reason why any man should get there. Any man can get there, not one of us is immune. We may say-I don't know how he could do it. But we do. It is done by human beings just like you and just like me, without either our cowardice or our refinement. There is no virtue in not being bad on that line. It is because the vileness at the basis of the human heart has been closed over that we hear the talk nowadays of an "impossible chastity." Chastity is undesirable if I want to be a beast; but no holiness or rectitude of character is impossible; it is simply undesirable if I prefer the other way.

Education cannot deal with the plague of the heart, all our vows cannot touch it; the only Being Who can deal with it is God through a personal relationship to Him, by receiving His Spirit after accepting the diagnosis of Jesus Christ.

2. Prospecting in Pursuit of Happiness (Ecclesiastes 7:25)

I applied mine heart to know, and to search, and to seek out wisdom, and the reason of things, and to know the wickedness of folly, even of foolishness and madness.

Solomon prospected to find out where the true essential enjoyment of life lay—was it in being an animal, an intellectualist, an aesthete, a governor, in being educated or uneducated? And he came to the conclusion that a man cannot find the true essential joy of his life anywhere but in his relationship to God.

Rationalism can never be the basis of things. Reason is my guide among things as they are, but reason cannot account for things being as they are. We do not think on the basis of Christianity at all. We are taught to think like pagans for six days a week and to reverse the order for one day, consequently in critical moments we think as pagans and our religion is left in the limbo of the inarticulate. Our thinking is based not on Hebrew Wisdom and confidence in God, but on the Wisdom of the Greeks which is removed from practical life, and on that basis we persuade ourselves that if a man knows a thing is wrong he will not do it. That is not true. The plague with me, apart from the grace of God, is that I know what is right, but I'm hanged if I'll do it! What I want to know is, can anyone tell me of a power that will alter my "want to"? Education will never alter the "want to," neither will high ideals nor vowing; that is where the great fundamental mistake in dealing with human problems has been made. It is only when a man is born from above (RV mg) of the Spirit of God that he finds the "want to" is altered. God does not take away the capacity to go wrong; if He did, we should not be worth anything. It is never impossible to go wrong.

We can only deal with the "sty" on the basis of Redemption, not by thinking or by education, but only by Redemption which is worked out by the Spirit of God.

3. Persecution and Peril of the Hell-Cat (Ecclesiastes 7:26)

And I find more bitter than death the woman, whose heart is snares and nets, and her hands as bands: whoso pleaseth God shall escape from her; but the sinner shall be taken by her.

The relationship of man and woman has been totally misrepresented. The revelation in the Bible is not that it is a question of the one being unequal to the other but of the two being one. "In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made He him; male and female created He them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created" (Genesis 5:1–2). Man, the male being, took the government into his own hands and thereby introduced sin into the human race, and when God spoke He said that the Redeemer should come through the woman (see Genesis 3:15–16). The Mother of Jesus Christ was a virgin. Redemption comes through woman, not through man.

^{* &}quot;In Adam and Eve we are dealing with the primal creations of God. . . . Eve stands for the soul side, the psychic side, of the human creation, all her sympathies and her affinities are with the other creations of God around. Adam stands for the spirit side, the kingly, Godward side. Adam and Eve together are the likeness of God, for God said: 'Let us make man in our own image, male and female created He them.' The revelation made here is that woman stands not as inferior to man, but that she stands in quite a different relation to all things, and both are required to make the complete, rounded creation of God referred to by the big general term Mankind. Eve, having this affinity and sympathy with the creation round about, would naturally listen with much more unsuspecting interest to the suggestions which came through the subtle creature that talked to her. The Bible says that Eve was deceived, the Bible does not say that Adam was deceived; consequently Adam is far more responsible than Eve, for Adam sinned deliberately. There was not the remotest conscious intention in Eve's heart of disobeying. She was deceived by the subtle wisdom of Satan via the Serpent. Adam, however, was not deceived in any shape or form; when Eve came to him he understood it was disobedience, and he sinned with a deliberate understanding of what he was doing, so the Bible associates sin with Adam (Romans 5:12), and transgression with Eve (1 Timothy 2:14). (In this connection it is of importance to note that the Bible reveals that our Redeemer entered into the world by the woman.)"—Biblical Psychology, Ch. III.—Footnote in original text.

A woman can sink lower than a man because she can rise higher; the woman who has not a right relationship to God may become a she devil, e.g., the attitude of a woman in revenge. The tragedies of human life along this line are appalling. Four things—sex, money, food, and mother earth—make a man a king and a woman a queen, or they make a man a beast and a woman a she devil.

Any lad who gets enveigled²⁸ by the kind of woman Solomon is describing will find that the tendrils will remain to the day of his death unless God blasts them out by Redemption. The bands round his soul will never snap otherwise, it is impossible. The terror and iniquity Solomon is speaking of is being repeated over and over again in our day. The moral nemesis runs right through, and Solomon's counsel is right, the only way a man can escape is by pleasing God. If once these relationships are started in a man's life, the only thing he can do is to go to God, to scurry to Him like a rabbit. A man may give up the practices, but he will never escape the moral nemesis, it will haunt him in his unconscious personality. There is no power in vowing or education or forgetting that can release him, but "whoso pleaseth God shall escape," that is, committing himself to Jesus Christ and being delivered.

Solomon is not "slanging" woman, but pointing out that the result of sin in the human race is to have made the feminine part of Man which ought to be directly related to God, demoniacal if not so related. The one who hauls you nearer to God is your mother or wife or sweetheart; but if your woman is not related to God, then the good Lord deliver you! No man is a match for the iniquity that is feminine when it is out of touch with God. When Pope said that "most women have no characters at all," he meant the same thing, that a woman's character comes from the essential relation of her life. If she is essentially related to God, her whole life is a sacrament for God; if not, her life may be a sacrament for the devil. The Bible reveals that the essentially feminine is meant to be the handmaid of God; but if the essentially feminine is prostitute, no man on earth can withstand her. In all Celtic races there is a terrific suspicion of women, the reason being that woman goes right back to the basis of things, which is inarticulate. A man can neither rise so high nor sink so low as a woman.

Any man or woman who falls in love comes right into God's presence, he or she instantly feels religious. Once love—my sovereign preference for another person—is awakened, it always goes direct to God like a homing pigeon. It is not hypocrisy on the part of a lad when he begins to pray, he cannot help it, his love is the finest lodestar in his life. That is the contrast between love and lust. Love can wait and worship endlessly; lust says—I must have it at once. The thing that can be hellishly wrong can be marvellously right.

4. Perfidiousness of Perpetual Relation of Man and Woman (Ecclesiastes 7:27-28)

Behold, this have I found, saith the preacher, counting one by one, to find out the account: which yet my soul seeketh, but I find not: one man among a thousand have I found; but a woman among all those have I not found.

Solomon is not talking as a bitter disenchanted man, he is giving the Hebrew conception of things, that the counterpart of the woman is the man of God, and if she cannot find him she is either brokenhearted or she may become a woman of the devil. "I have looked for the essential wisdom in a man and have not found it; in a woman and have not found it there either." In human life as it is there is something perfidious in the perpetual relationship of man and woman.

Paul's counsel in dealing with marriage has been misrepresented—"Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands," because we have taken the word "submit" to mean the obedience due from a slave to his master. It is not the obedience of an inferior to a superior, but the obedience of the equality of love. In the New Testament the word "obey" is used to express the relationship of equals. "... though He was a Son, yet learned obedience by the things which He suffered" (RV).

"For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church." If Christ is the Head of the husband, he is easily the head of the wife, not by effort, but because of the nature of the essentially feminine. But if Jesus Christ is not the Head of the husband, the husband is not the head of the wife. Our Lord always touches the most sacred human relationships, and He says—You must be right with Me first before those relationships can be right; and if they hinder your getting right with Me, then you must hate them (see Luke 14:26).

5. Perfection and Perversion of Humanity (Ecclesiastes 7:29)

Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions.

The Bible states that God made man, i.e., the Federal Head of the race, in His own image. The only ^{28.} enveigled: to be snared by ingenuity or flattery; hoodwinked; deluded; beguiled.

other Being in the image of God is Jesus Christ, the Second Adam. By eating of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, Adam knew evil positively and good negatively. The Second Adam never ate of the fruit of the tree; He knew evil negatively by positively knowing good, and when a man is reborn of the Spirit of God he finds that that is the order God intended. Until we are born again we know good only by contrast with evil. The bias of the human heart is to find out the bad things first. How many of us are curious concerning the right way of life, concerning purity and nobility, and how many are curious to find out the borderland mysteries? The fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil has given human nature its bias of insatiable curiosity on the "sty" line. It is only after readjustment by Jesus Christ that the bias is on the other line, a tremendous thirst after God. "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee."

SOME PERSPECTIVE

Ecclesiastes 8

... life is not as idle ore,

But iron dug from central gloom,
And heated hot with burning fears,
And dipped in baths of hissing tears.
And batter'd by the shocks of doom
To shape and use.

1. In the Diplomatic Service (Ecclesiastes 8:1-5)

It is easy to despise the man above me because I know nothing about him, but Solomon counsels us to have a wider perspective, to look at things beyond our insular notions. It is a great education to try and put yourself into the circumstances of others before passing judgement on them. Solomon's counsel in these verses lies with these who in this order of things happen to be in the diplomatic service.

(a) Courtiers' Discretion (verse 1)

Who is as the wise man? and who knoweth the interpretation of a thing? A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine, and the boldness of his face shall be changed.

In Old Testament days if a man came before an Eastern monarch with a sad countenance, he was liable to punishment (see Nehemiah 2:2). The discretion of a courtier does not make him a hypocrite, but puts him in the state of mind whereby his face indicates a strength and boldness which does not quaver. If you watch the faces of men who move much in diplomatic circles you will see exactly what Solomon indicates, an uninterpretable expression. The discretion of a courtier is to keep a bold face. Society is based on playacting, it must be. You cannot say what you really think; if you do, other people will too, and if everyone were absolutely frank there would be no room for us!

The Bible point of view about government is that God compels man to govern man for Him, whether he likes it or not. The ordinance of government, whether it is a bad or good government, does not lie with men, but is entirely in God's hands; the king or the government will have to answer to God (cf. 1 Peter 2:13–14). The conservative attitude—My king, right or wrong—is a degeneration from the one great central point of the government of man by man.

God created a certain nation from the loins of one man, to be His own people; they were not to be like the other nations of the world, but to be the bond slaves of Jehovah until every nation came to know God (see Deuteronomy 17:14–15). Israel and Judah said, "Nay, but we will have a king over us (see 1 Samuel 8:19–20). The best kings Israel and Judah ever had were David and Solomon, and yet the most troublesome conditions as well as the most prosperous came during their reigns. Whether a king is of the order of the autocratic kings of the East, or the order of the Kaiser, the explanation of kingship, according to the Bible, is that it is the result of the wrong that entered into the world by the first man taking his rule over himself.

Hell is an eternal and an abiding distress to whatever goes into it. Whatever goes into hell can never again be established as a right thing. We say that militarism is going into hell just now; but militarism will crop up again in some form or another. Something has gone into hell, but it is difficult to say what.

(b) Consistency to Decrees (verse 2)

I counsel thee to keep the king's commandment, and that in regard of the oath of God.

Anything bound before the king is bound as by the oath of God, and the consistency of a courtier is to abide by it. If a man lives in that order of things he must not be a traitor, he cannot take the action of a free individual man. The existence of peace and order depends entirely on this being remembered.

(c) Character and Deportment (verse 3)

Be not hasty to go out of his sight: stand not in an evil thing; for he doeth whatsoever pleaseth him.

Deportment is the way a man conducts himself. See that you neither hurry in nor out, says Solomon; your attitude must be both deliberate and careful. In the higher circles of social life this same thing is necessary.

It is an easy business for the man who deals in black and white to pass judgement on the man who deals in grey. In the diplomatic service a man never deals with black and white, only with grey. For instance, it is easy to condemn British rule in India or in Egypt, but it is another matter to recognise the vast series of complications which the rulers in these countries have to face. In politics also it is difficult to steer a course; there is a complication of forces to be dealt with which most of us know nothing about. We have no affinity for this kind of thing, and it is easy to ignore the condition of the men who have to live there, and to pass condemnation on them.

(d) Commands of Despotism (verse 4)

Where the word of a king is, there is power: and who may say unto him, What doest thou?

If a man is a courtier under a despotic king there is no possibility of replying; he has to obey to the last limit and has no right to a private opinion. The wise man is the one who knows when to speak and when to be silent.

2. In the Democratic Scrum (Ecclesiastes 8:6–10)

All this has nothing to do with us, it is outside our perspective. How a king lives is a matter of moonshine to us; but one day we may have to pass judgement. Before long the democratic scrum may have to pass judgement on men who are not democrats, on courtiers, and on despotic kings, and before we can pass judgement we must have perspective. It is easy to condemn a state of things we know nothing about while we make excuses for the condition of things we ourselves live in.

The state of things resulting in the "democratic scrum" is better than the perfection of a machine. In our own country, rightly or wrongly, we committed regicide; France did the same. The world has never had to pay the price for either Britain or France that it has for Germany. Similarly, if I never correct my child I am making a nice mess for other folks by and by. We have lost sight of these things, but they are elements we have to come in contact with.

(a) Power to Wilfulness (verses 6–7)

Because to every purpose there is time and judgement, therefore the misery of man is great upon him. For he knoweth not that which shall be: for who can tell him when it shall be?

There is a power to wilfulness in man and when it is let loose there is the "wild ass" to account for; no matter what a man chooses, he heads towards evil.

The same problem is found in religion. One of the counterfeits of the rule of God is the Roman Catholic Church. It is a perfect system of government. After the Reformation when the people were delivered from the incubus of Roman Catholic domination, many of them went more to the devil. Whenever a man is freed from a dominance that is ostensibly wrong, he has a power of will which may make for his misery. The same thing happened in connection with the freeing of the slaves; instead of using their freedom, many went back to their masters, while others abused their freedom.

(b) Powerlessness of Willingness (verse 8)

There is no man that hath power over the spirit to retain the spirit; neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no discharge in that war; neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it.

A man belonging to the democratic scrum may make up his mind that he is willingly going to do good, but no man can do it alone. The democratic rule is made up of people just like you and me, and unless we keep together, either by the right of a king or by the sway of some religious or civilised rule, we will kick things to bits, and the most willing amongst us will have the worst of it. "The divine right of kings" is a counterfeit for the true government of human life by man; at the same time it must be reckoned with.

We have to lay our account with the fact that the deepest bias in man is not towards God but away from Him, and if the individual man is allowed a right of way, he has a power of will which will increase the common misery. We have seen the hollow mockery of the diplomatic order of things under the divine right of kings, and to-day, rightly or wrongly, we are all in the democratic scrum as never before; but neither autocracy nor democracy will solve the problem.

(c) Price of Will Power (verse 9)

All this have I seen, and applied my heart unto every work that is done under the sun: there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his own hurt.

The man who has power over another may hurt himself by the exercise of that power unless he himself is ruled by a greater power. If I have had a vivid religious experience and have power over people by means of that experience, the danger is that I usurp the place of God and say, "You must come my way; you must have this experience." This may damage you, but it damages me more, because my spirit is far removed from the spirit of Jesus Christ, it is the spirit of a spiritual prig. Whenever I exercise will power without at the same time being dominated myself, I damage something or someone.

(d) Perversity of Will Worship (verse 10)

And so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy, and they were forgotten in the city where they had so done: this is also vanity.

Paul warns of the things which "have indeed a show of wisdom in will-worship," the idea that you are sufficient to govern yourself. We have got out of conceit with Neitzsche's phrase, "the power to will"—if I have enough will I can do it.

The despotic rule is full of defect, misery and anguish, so is the democratic rule. Men may make all kinds of rules, but they get back again into despotism. Every man has power to go to hell because by nature man's will is towards self-realisation.

We may have no affinity with these things, but in passing judgement (and we never know when the time for passing judgement may come), we will be criminally unjust judges if we have not a true perspective. After the war it will not be a question of judging the autocrat but of judging the democrat, and the one is as bad as the other unless he is ruled by a power greater than himself.

3. In the Dispensational Scheme (Ecclesiastes 8:11-17)

(a) Patience of God and Bad (verse 11)

Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.

We say, Why does God allow these things? Why does He allow a despot to rule? In this dispensation it is the patient long-suffering of God that is being manifested. God allows men to say what they like and do what they like (see 2 Peter 3:14). Peter says that God is long-suffering, and He is giving us ample opportunity to try whatever line we like both in individual and national life. If God were to end this dispensation now, the human race would have a right to say, You should have waited, there is a type of thing You never let us try.

God is leaving us to prove to the hilt that it cannot be done in any other way than Jesus Christ's way, or the human race would not be satisfied.

(b) Patience of God and Good (verses 12–13)

Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before Him: but it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

God allows the good to develop itself in the heart of the bad, and Solomon banks on the fact that the man who is rooted and grounded in confidence in God will come out right in the end. Nowadays we have the preaching of expediency: If you tell people that, they will take advantage of it. If the Almighty leaves His open knives around, it is not our business to put on the sheath. The rugged truths of God seem to give licence to men; but do they? The prig notion makes us say certain things in order to terrorise people from doing wrong. But how much better are they if they don't do it? The reward for doing right is not that I get an insurance ticket for heaven, but that I do the right because it is right. Honesty ceases to be the best policy if I am honest for a reason. If any man will live godly, he shall suffer persecution. If a man wants success and a good time in the actual condition of things as they are, let him keep away from Jesus Christ, let him ignore His claims and the heroism of His holiness, there is no commercial value in it. In the final wind up it is the man who has stuck true to God and damned the consequences who will come out the best; whether he has made the best or the worst of himself in this life is another matter.

(c) Preordination of God and Now (verses 14–15)

There is a vanity which is done upon the earth; that there be just men, unto whom it happeneth according to the work of the wicked; again, there be wicked men, to whom it happeneth according to the work of the righteous: I said that this also is vanity. Then I commended mirth, because a man hath no better thing under the sun than to eat, and to drink, and to be merry: for that shall abide with him of his labour the days of his life, which God giveth him under the sun.

God's programme for a man is Now, not what he is going to do presently but what he is now. Solomon says your attitude to life as it actually is now, is to remember you are a man or woman, and that you have to live on the earth as a human being and not try to be an angel. It is your relationship to God which fits you to live on the earth in the right way, not necessarily the successful way. Sometimes you will have the worst of it for doing right.

(d) Probation of God and Worry (verse 16)

When I applied mine heart to know wisdom, and to see the business that is done upon the earth: (for also there is that neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes).

To-day men's hearts are failing them for fear, not the men in the actual fighting, they are wonderfully sustained; but the business man at home. His relationships involve a great deal more than "now," they involve the presently and his children who are to come after him. How can he have faith in God when he sees the security of the future hauled to bits? Solomon indicates that the wisest thing to do is to build our faith in God and not far-reach so that we have to watch everything and have no room for faith in God, no time to pay attention to how we live in the Now.

(e) Providence of God and Faith (verse 17)

Then I beheld all the work of God, that a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun: because though a man labour to seek it out, yet he shall not find it; yea farther; though a wise man think to know it, yet shall he not be able to find it.

The summing up of the whole matter, says Solomon, is that you cannot locate yourself, you are placed in circumstances over which you have no control. You do not choose your own heredity or your own disposition, these things are beyond your control, and yet these are the things which influence you. You may rake the bottom of the universe, but you cannot explain things; they are wild, there is nothing rational about them. We cannot get to the bottom of things; we cannot get behind the before of birth or the after of death; therefore the wise man is the one who trusts the wisdom of God, not his own wits. The amateur providence trusts his wits, and if he has not been knocked out by the hard problems of life, he can say cheap and nasty things; but when once he is hit by the real tragedy of life he will find it is not in the power of human wits to guide him, and he becomes either a man of faith or a fatalist. Faith is trust in a God Whose ways you cannot trace, but whose character you know, and the man of faith hangs on to the fact that He is a God of honour. Fatalism means "my number's up," I have to bow to the power whether I like it or not; I do not know the character of the power, but it is greater than I am and I must submit. In this dispensation we do know the character of God, although we do not know why His providential will should be as it is. Solomon indicates that the only thing to do in the present condition of things is to remain true to God, and God will not only see us through but will see the whole thing out to a perfect explanation. That is the faith of a Christian, and it takes some sticking to.

TIME, DEATH AND TRIFLES

Ecclesiastes 9

If there be good in that I wrought,
Thy hand compelled it, Master, Thine.
Where I have failed to meet Thy thought
I know, through Thee, the blame is mine.
Take not that vision from my ken;
O, whatso'er may spoil or speed,
Help me to need no aid from men,
That I may help such men as need!

We are apt to imagine that if we cannot state a thing in words it is of no value to us. What counts in talking and in reading is the atmosphere that is produced and what is opened up that would not be otherwise, There is a literature of knowledge and a literature of power. The former gives us informing stuff and we can say—This is what I have got; by the latter you cannot say what you have got but you are the better for it, your mind and heart are enlarged. We need more than information. The domain of things represented by the literature of power is that which comes with a knowledge of God's Book. One of the great secrets of life is that obedience is the key to spiritual life as curiosity is the key to intellectual life. In the spiritual domain curiosity is not only of no use but is a direct hindrance. When once a man learns that spiritual knowledge can only be gained by obedience, the emancipation of his nature is incalculable

1. The Indiscernible Public Power of God (Ecclesiastes 9:1–2)

For all this I considered in my heart even to declare all this, that the righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God: no man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them. All things come alike to all: there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the good and to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: as is the good, so is the sinner; and he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.

Indiscernible—you cannot discern exactly why the power should take the turn it does. The old divines spoke of a miracle as "the public power of God." God emerges suddenly and does something beyond human power. Our Lord's miracles were cinematograph shows to His disciples of what His Father was always doing (see John 2:1–11). Our Lord never worked a miracle in order to show what He could do; He was not a wonder worker, and when people sought Him on that line, He did nothing (cf. Luke 23:8–9). Solomon is referring to the indiscernible power of God in that He completely mystifies any calculations you may make in life. If you go on the mathematical or the rational line, you will come across something you can not calculate, something that can only be described as an act of God. You cannot say that because a man is good and has been well brought up and behaves well that he will reach success and prosperity; you will find that bad men who overreach and tyrannise come to prosperity while good men do not (see Psalm 73:1–18).

It is much easier not to look at the facts of life but to take an intellectual view which acts as a search-light, and has the tyranny of an idea or an intuition. A man's intellectual view reveals what it does and no more, everything looks simple in the light of it; but when we come to the daylight of facts we shall find something that knocks the bottom board out of all our calculations. If you read a book by a philosopher about life it looks as simple as can be, no complications or difficulties; but when you are flung out "into the soup," you find that your simple line of explanation won't work at all. Just when you thought you had found the secret, you find you are off the line.

Fundamentally, not shallowly, life can never be guided by principles. In the Christian domain we make the blunder of trying to guide our life by the principles of Jesus Christ's teaching. The basis of Christianity is not primarily virtue and honesty and goodness, not even holiness, but a personal relationship to God in Jesus Christ which works out all the time by "spontaneous moral originality." Principles are of a lesser order, and if they are applied apart from the life of Jesus Christ they may become anti-Christian. Things cannot be worked out on a logical line, there is always something incalculable. You may think to reach your goal through obedience to a set of principles, but you will find it won't work that road. Solomon says that neither the good man nor the bad man ends where you expect him to. All you can say is that every man has his own setting from a starting-point he knows nothing about. One of the finest and wisest books ever written for young men is Leckie's Map of Life. Leckie was not a genius, but a man of intense moral earnestness and a careful intellectual collator as well.

2. The Interim Probationary Programme of God (Ecclesiastes 9:3-4)

This is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all: yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live, and after that they go to the dead. For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

The Bible always states the obvious, and we find it to be the thing we have never looked at. Very few of us see the obvious, consequently when it is stated it strikes us as being original.

"For a living dog is better than a dead lion." "The Lord spake unto Joshua, saying, Moses My servant is dead"—now therefore go to mourning? No—"now therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them." The Bible never allows us to waste time over the departed. It does not mean that the fact of human grief is ignored, but the worship of reminiscence is never allowed. "We have to remember the departed and live in the light of them"—the Bible won't have it. "While the child was yet alive, I fasted and wept; for I said, Who can tell whether GOD will be gracious to me, that the child may live? But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? can I bring him back again?" In the Garden of Gethsemane the disciples went to sleep when they should have watched with their Lord, and when Jesus came He said, "Sleep on now, and take your rest: . . . Arise, let us be going" (RV). That opportunity is lost for ever, you cannot alter it, but arise and go to the next thing. We find this inevitable vanishing all through the Bible, and a man has to "ring out the grief that saps the mind." One of the most deeply ingrained forms of selfishness in human nature is that of misery. The isolation of misery is far more proud than any other form of conceit.

The interim between birth and death is a school training, a programme of which we have not the laying out. We may calculate and say we are going to do this and that, but "ye know not what shall be on the morrow." It is a haphazard life, and we have to bank on God's wisdom, not on our own. It looks as if Solomon were counselling the Bohemian life, and as if Jesus Christ did the same when He said "Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life." A Bohemian is careless about everything, and neither Jesus Christ nor Solomon teaches that. Jesus Christ taught that a man was to be carefully careless about everything saving his relationship to God. The great care of the life, Jesus says, is to make the relationship to God the one care. Most of us are careful about everything saving that.

The life we are living has a programme which we fulfil but about which we know nothing. We have been put into a programme that we have no say in, and we bungle our part by trying to be our own organisers.

There's a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them how we will.

Shakespeare

3. The Invincible Powerful Portion of Death (Ecclesiastes 9:5-6)

For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten. Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in anything that is done under the sun. There is no further reward in practical existence for a dead man. We must lay our account with the invincible portion of death, it will come every time. Remember that your friend will die and act accordingly, and many a mean thing will wither on your tongue. There is a difference between sensitiveness and impressionableness. A sensitive man never says anything that would sting another, whereas the one we are apt to call sensitive is only impressionable to what stings him. Very few of us are sensitive; we are all impressionable. It is remembering the invincible portion of death that makes things different. Solomon says you cannot bank on insurance, or speculations, or on any kind of calculation; you can bank on only one thing, that your interim of life may at any second be cut short; therefore your only confidence is to remain true to God.

4. The Instructive Practical Prudence of Time (Ecclesiastes 9:7-9)

Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart; for God now accepteth thy works. Let thy garments be always white; and let thy head lack no ointment. Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest all the days of the life of thy vanity, which he hath given thee under the sun, all the days of thy vanity: for that is thy portion in this life. and in thy labour which thou takest under the sun.

"Let thy garments be always white," i.e., live suitably attired to your station in life. Solomon's insistence is on the haphazard. These things—food, sex, money and mother earth, must always have their place in the life of any man of God, and they either make men and women devils or make them what they should be. The man of God uses these things to express his relationship to God; whereas the man who does not know God tries to find his lasting good in the things themselves. Paul in riddling false religion says that it will deny the basis of life, that is, it will teach abstinence from meats and marriage. The practical test of a man's life in Time is how he lives in connection with these things.

The devastations of war are appalling, but there are compensations, and one compensation of this war will be that we shall be driven back to the elemental. Some problems will not be revived again, they are finished; but every man will have a totally new attitude to these things and a new reverence for them. They will have a hold now which the refinement of civilisation had made us lose.

5. The Imperative Performing Practice of Work (Ecclesiastes 9:10)

Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

The Bible nowhere teaches us to work for work's sake. That is one of the great bugbears of the anti-Christian movement in the heart of Christianity to-day. It is Work with a capital W in which the worship of Jesus Christ is lost sight of. People will sacrifice themselves endlessly for the work. Perspiration is mistaken for inspiration. Our guidance with regard to work is to remember that its value is in what it does for us. It is difficult not to let ulterior considerations come in-"What's the good of doing this, we are only here for a short time, why should we do it as if it were to last for ever?" Solomon's counsel is-"Whatsoever thy hand attaineth to do by thy strength that do" (RV mg). He is not recommending work for work's sake, but because through the drudgery of work the man himself is developed. When you deify work, you apostatise from Jesus Christ. In the private spiritual life of many a Christian it is work that has hindered concentration on God. When work is out of its real relation it becomes a means of evading concentration on God. Carlyle pointed out that the weariness and sickness of modern life is shown in the restlessness of work. When a man is not well he is always doing things, an eternal fidget. Intense activity may be the sign of physical weariness. When a man is healthy his work is so much part of himself that you never know he is doing it; he does it with his might, and that makes no fuss. We lose by the way we do our work the very thing it is intended to bring us.

At the back of all is the one thing God is after, what a man is, not what he does, and Solomon keeps that in view all the time. It is what we are in our relation to things that counts, not what we attain to in them. If you put attainment as the end you may reap a broken heart and find that all your outlay ends in disaster, death cuts it short, or disease, or ruin.

6. The Incalculable Precarious Preference of Life (Ecclesiastes 9:11–12)

I returned, and saw under the sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all. For man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

Life is immensely precarious, haphazard. A Christian does not believe that everything that happens is ordained by God; what he believes is that he has to get hold of God's order no matter what happens in the haphazard. "And we know that to them that love God all things work together for good, even to them that are called according to His purpose" (Romans

8:28 RV). All things are permitted by God, but all things are not appointed by God, they appoint themselves; but God's order abides, and if I maintain my relationship to Him He will make everything that happens work for my good. God on the one hand, myself on the other, and the rush of the haphazard in between will work toward the best.

"The race is not to the swift." The lad who is exceptionally clever at school very often becomes nothing afterwards; he attained too early. No boy has any right to attain too early or mature too quickly. By the time he comes to the age of twenty or thirty the power that ought to mature is not there, he has ripened too soon. The boy who gives the grandest promise does not always become what you expect, while the lad who is stodgy to begin with may come out top. One of the finest commentators on the Bible was an ignorant dunce as a lad, with no promise at all to begin with. There is always an incalculable element in everyone, therefore, Solomon argues, you cannot calculate. The crisis reveals what a man is made of. You cannot say what you would do in circumstances you have never been in because of this incalculable element, and when you are put in new circumstances you may suddenly find forces in yourself you never dreamed were there. You have no idea what is in you either for good or bad; you cannot estimate and say what you will do; therefore, says Solomon, don't bank on calculations.

"For man also knoweth not his time." You never know when your opportunity is going to come. Every man has to go out to sea to break from his moorings, whether by a storm or by a big lifting tide. There is a preference in life you cannot get at. Why does God choose one man and not another? "For promotion cometh neither from the east nor from the west, nor from the south. But God is the judge: He putteth down one, and setteth up another" (Psalm 75:6–7).

7. The Invidious Petulant Price for Wisdom (Ecclesiastes 9:13–16)

This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and it seemed great unto me: There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it: now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man. Then said I, Wisdom is better than strength: nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.

We do not put any price at all on wisdom when we have got what wisdom brings. When we attain success we do not remember the one who gave us the right counsel; the wise man who guided things aright is not taken into account. When a thing is done successfully in the Army or the Navy, it is very rarely the men of the regiment or the crew that are mentioned but only the figure head at the top. Any man with wisdom knows that that kind of preference is conceded, and there is no use losing heart over it. The discerning man understands that it is what lies behind the scenes that accounts for success. In the same way there has often been a remarkably good but obscure woman behind a prominent man who has done great things. Solomon's counsel is to take into account the fact that you cannot expect to be recognised. Remember that your lasting relationship is with God, otherwise you will find heartbreak and disappointment and become cynical.

8. The Inveterate Popular Prejudice for Grab (Ecclesiastes 9:17–18)

The words of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools. Wisdom is better than weapons of war: but one sinner destroyeth much good.

It is difficult to maintain a high standard when you are working in a community which has a lower standard. For example, we are told that the natives here do not understand any treatment but kicking and cursing and if they are not treated in that way will take advantage of you. That may be true, but you will also find that when they see you are allowing yourself to be taken advantage of, they themselves will begin to climb. When we are over-reached most of us get sick and give up. The counsel given by Jesus Christ all through is on the line of abandon.

When a life is taken from the shelter of its ignorance it goes through a stage of transition, often worse than the stage of ignorance, before it comes to real emancipation. Witness the Reformation and the freeing of the slaves. In the transition stage we want to grab things for ourselves and ruin all progress in life. Evolution, like Christian Science, is a hasty conclusion. There may be nine facts which seem to make a thing clear and conclusive, and one fact that contradicts. There is always something that swerves away from the explainable. The only explanation lies in a personal knowledge of God through Jesus Christ, not on the basis of philosophy or of thinking, but on the basis of a vital relationship to Him which works in the actual condition of things as they are. "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

DIFFERENTIATIONS

Ecclesiastes 10

Neither mourn if human creeds be lower than the heart's desire!

Thro' the gates that liar the distance comes a gleam of what is higher.

Wait till Death has flung them open, when the man will make the Maker

Dark no more with human hatreds in the glare of deathless fire!

- 5. The Beginnings of Mastery Disposes the Mastered (Ecclesiastes 10:16–17)
- The Bungling of Men Spells the Beggary of Men (Ecclesiastes 10:18–20)

It is one of the sharpest disillusionments to learn that "the best of men are but the best of men," and it takes us some time to learn that it is true. The Apostle Paul brings out the same truth—Don't glory in men; don't think of men more highly than you ought to think. We always know what the other man should be, especially if he is a Christian. We are all lynx-eyed in seeing what other people ought to be. We erect terrific standards, and then criticise men for not reaching them. The standard of Christianity is not that of a man, but of God; and unless God can put His Spirit into a man, that standard can never be reached. According to New Testament wisdom and to Hebrew wisdom, until we are rightly related to God we will always be cruel to other men. Take it in the matter of love: if I am not related to God first my love becomes cruel, because I demand infinite satisfaction from the one I love; I demand from a human being what he or she can never give. There is only one Being Who can satisfy the last aching abyss of the human heart, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ.

1. The Best of Men Are but the Best of Men (Ecclesiastes 10:1–3)

Dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour: so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honour. A wise man's heart is at his right hand; but a fool's heart at his left. Yea also, when he that is a fool walketh by the way, his wisdom faileth him, and he saith to everyone that he is a fool.

How many remember that Solomon ruled Israel magnificently for many years? We remember his supreme acts of folly, and Solomon says that is the way human life is summed up. We remember the bad a man has done but not the good. It is possible to blast a man's reputation by raising your shoulders; but you can never blast a man's character. Character is what a man is; reputation is what other people think he is. "A long and splendid possible friendship has often been ruined by the agile cleverness of some men for labels." You meet a man and sum him up in a phrase. There were possibilities of his becoming a friend, but he will never be that now. This kind of clever business ruins the possibility of friendship.

Again we are apt to lose all distinction of right and wrong and to make excuses and say—Oh yes, there is always one fact more. "There is so much good in the worst of us and so much bad in the best of us, that it ill behoves any of us to talk about the rest of us." Although you know that the best of men are but the best of men, it is part of moral calibre to hold true to the highest you know, and to remember that "there is none good save one, even God."

"A wise man's heart is at his right hand; but a fool's heart is at his left." A wise man's heart guides the decisions of his mind; a fool makes decisions of mind and his heart drags after him.

In laying your account with men, whether it be with a government or with a drill-sergeant, remember there is no such being as a perfect man. You are bound to find shortcomings; and beware of the snare of remembering only the bad things a man does. We are all built that way.

2. The Besetters of Men and the Behaviour of Men (Ecclesiastes 10:4-7)

If the spirit of the ruler rise up against thee, leave not thy place; for yielding pacifieth great offences. There is an evil which I have seen under the sun, as an error which proceedeth from the ruler: folly is set in great dignity, and the rich sit in low place. I have seen servants upon horses, and princes walking as servants upon the earth.

Solomon is stating the obvious; most of us are too clever to be obvious. He is dealing with the man who happens to be placed under a providential order of tyranny. The difficulty of a man's behaviour is the kind of men that beset him as rulers, and Solomon's counsel is amazingly shrewd: Let him say what he likes, it will blow over in time. In practical life it is the providential order of tyranny that embitters men more quickly than anything. We all shirk the counsel of Jesus Christ when He says, in effect, Never look for justice but never cease to give it. If you do look for justice, you will become bitter and cease to be a disciple of Jesus Christ. You are in a providential order of tyranny in which your behaviour is to be determined by your previous relationship to God, that is, your conduct is to be determined by the relationship which reaches furthest back. In the same way if you are the servant of men for their sake you will soon be heartbroken; but if you serve men for the sake of Jesus Christ, nothing can ever discourage you (cf. 2 Corinthians 4:5). Solomon's counsel is to keep your mouth shut if you are under a tyranny where you can gain nothing by expressing yourself. Behave yourself rightly, and if you wait long enough the thing will be put right. After all, the man who loses his temper quickest is the one who finds it quickest. The man you need to beware of is not the man who flares up, but the man who smoulders, who is vindictive and harbours vengeance.

"Folly is set in great dignity, and the rich sit in low place." A ruler who is not a wise man places the fools in dignity through favouritism, and the man who lives at the basis of things and all in between have to be the cat's-paw of the man who has obtained his position through wire-pulling. You can never hold a steady course unless you are rightly related to God first of all.

One of the most difficult things to do is to place men. A man who knows men and can place them rightly is worth his weight in gold, and Solomon points out that such men are rare.

3. The "Before" of Men Determines the "After" of Men (Ecclesiastes 10:8–10)

He that diggeth a pit shall fall into it; and whoso breaketh an hedge, a serpent shall bite him. Whoso removeth stones shall be hurt therewith; and he that cleaveth wood shall be endangered thereby. If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength: but wisdom is profitable to direct.

Many men are determinate, but not deliberate, and sooner or later they have to revise their decisions. The thing that comes after in a man's career is frequently determined by his having gone too hot-headedly into things to begin with. Don't be too earnest in clearing away the hedges. What makes me act determines the result of my action in the record of my life. Earnestness is not everything; I may be an earnest lunatic. We use the phrase "drunk and incapable," but it is just as possible to be sober and incapable. The great thing is to be enthusiastic and capable. Solomon's warning is that earnestness may often cover up an evasion of concentration in a life. John McNeill²⁹ said about the student of Elisha who lost the axe-head—"If he had been of the modern school, Elisha would have said "Whack awa wi' the stump, man; earnestness is everything." "Solomon points out that earnestness may be the characteristic of a fool. Earnestness in prayer is often put in the place of right relationship to God. If you read the New Testament carefully you do not find that Jesus Christ ever counsels earnestness in prayer, except in Luke 11, and there it is earnestness in connection with importunate prayer on behalf of others. The prayer Jesus Christ counsels is that based on simplicity. "But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask Him." Prayer is never heard on the ground of earnestness, but only on the ground of the Redemption (see Hebrews 10:19).

4. The "Beyond" of Men Decides the "Breed" of Men (Ecclesiastes 10:11-15)

Surely the serpent will bite without enchantment; and a babbler is no better. The words of a wise man's mouth are gracious; but the lips of a fool will swallow up himself. The beginning of the words of his mouth is foolishness: and the end of his talk is mischievous madness. A fool also is full of words: a man cannot tell what shall be; and what shall be after him, who can tell him? The labour of the foolish wearieth every one of them, because he knoweth not how to go to the city.

If you are a wise man, you will lay your account with the fact that you cannot calculate. You cannot say that your charmer will charm the snake, it may sting you first. The before of a man's birth determines his breed. That one man is as good as another is a theory that does not work out in practice. Some men are handicapped before they are born; others are perfectly fit before they are born, their heredity is clear. Breeding counts every time, but if you over-breed you produce genius and lunacy. Breeding counts for nothing in the value of a man in God's sight, it is the heart relationship that counts, and one man cannot judge another. When Jesus Christ came He paid no attention to breeding. In matters of practical living, says Solomon, if you are wise you will watch a man's breeding; but when you estimate men in God's sight, you must estimate from another standpoint, that of their relationship to Him.

5. The Beginnings of Mastery Disposes the Mastered (Ecclesiastes 10:16-17)

Woe to thee, O land, when thy king is a child, and thy princes eat in the morning! Blessed art thou, O land, when thy king is the son of nobles, and thy princes eat in due season, for strength, and not for drunkenness!

When rulers eat in the morning they reorganise God's order and are simply shallow Epicureans. The man who masters men merely by his position determines the kind of men he masters. Some men are completely crushed and broken, sulky and taciturn, and their master is to blame. Whereas the influence of one man of integrity over men is incalculable, e.g., Donald Hankey's Beloved Captain; and it is a terrible condemnation if a man's influence is without that characteristic. A man's character tells over his head all the time. The mastership of a man who does not defy the ordinances of God is that of worth-ship, he is worthy; whereas men who are mastered by those given to defying the law of God come to an appalling condition.

6. The Bungling of Men Spells the Beggary of Men (Ecclesiastes 10:18-20)

By much slothfulness the building decayeth; and through idleness of the hands the house droppeth through. A feast is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry: but money answereth all things. Curse not the king, no not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bedchamber: for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter.

"By much slothfulness the building decayeth." Solomon is pointing out that the bungling of men spells the beggary of men. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Our version of that too often is—"There's a thing to be done, but why should I do it?" Or, "Why should it be done properly, it is only for a little while?" That line spells beggary. No man if he is wise will be content with a knock-up job. 30

"Money answereth all things." Although money may cover up defects, yet ultimately it may lead to disaster.

"Curse not the king, no not in thy thought." We cannot think anything without the thought having its consequence. Jesus Christ warns us of this—"With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured unto you" (RV). The basis of life is retribution, but Our Lord allows no room for retaliation.

^{29.} John McNeill: late-nineteenth-century Scottish evangelist brought to faith in Christ through the preaching of D. L. Moody.

^{30.} knock-up job: something done hastily, carelessly, or in a slipshod way.

TIMIDITIES OF RATIONALISM

Ecclesiastes 11

Time was I shrank from what was right From fear of what was wrong, I would not brave the sacred fight Because the foe was strong.

But now I cast that finer sense And surer shame aside; Such dread of sin was indolence, Such aim at Heaven was Pride!

- 2. The Confusion of Economy (Ecclesiastes 11:2–4)
- 3. The Confines of Exposition (Ecclesiastes 11:5–6)
- 4. The Consciousness of Experience (Ecclesiastes 11:7–8)
- 5. The Concentration after Expansion (Ecclesiastes 11:9–10)

The boldness of Rationalism is not in what it does, but in the way it criticises. Rationalism is a method of criticism, but when it comes to action the rationalist is amazingly timid. Nothing bold has ever been done in the name of rationalism. In all the big crises of life the rationalist is at a discount. He is great at writing books, at pointing out the futilities of religion, etc., but no rationalist has ever produced the heroism, the adventure, or the nobility that the people and the things he criticised have produced. The reasonable man is, after all, the timid man, when it comes to certain things he refuses to venture.

We hear it said that Jesus Christ taught nothing contrary to common sense: everything Jesus Christ taught was contrary to common sense. Not one thing in the Sermon on the Mount is common sense. The basis of Christianity is neither common sense nor rationalism, it springs from another centre, viz., a personal relationship to God in Christ Jesus in which everything is ventured on from a basis that is not seen. We are told that God expects us to use our "sanctified common sense"; but if we mean that that is Christianity, we will have to come to the conclusion that Jesus Christ was mad. If you go on the economical basis you get into confusion. Rationalism makes us timid, shrewd in criticising, but nothing else. We never do the things that foolish people do.

1. The Counsels of Extravagance (Ecclesiastes 11:1)

Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days.

Solomon states what Our Lord elaborates in the Sermon on the Mount, viz., that our reason for giving is not to be because men deserve it, but because Christ tells us to give. All through the Old and New Testaments the counsel is on the line of hospitality. As long as we have something to give, we must give. How does civilisation argue? "Does this man deserve that I should give to him?" "If I give that man money, I know what he will do with it." Jesus Christ says, "Give to him that asketh thee," not because he deserves it, but because I tell you to (see Matthew 5:42). Some folks are so hyperconscientious that they are good for nothing. Extravagance is the only line for the religious man. We do not believe this to begin with, we are so completely reasonable and common sense, consequently we base everything on self-realisation instead of on Christ-realisation.

The counsel of extravagance comes out all through the Bible. We are apt to ignore it by the timidity of our reasoning. The one thing Jesus Christ commended was Mary of Bethany's extravagant act. It was not her duty nor was it useful, and yet Our Lord said that wherever His gospel should be preached "that also which this woman hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her" (RV). The disciples, who were perfectly reasonable, said, What a waste! Jesus Christ said, "She hath wrought a good work on Me." The true nature of devotion to Jesus Christ must be extravagance.

2. The Confusion of Economy (Ecclesiastes 11:2-4)

Give a portion to seven, and also to eight; for thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth. If the clouds be full of rain, they empty themselves upon the earth: and if the tree fall toward the south, or toward the north, in the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be.

Death transforms nothing. Every view of death outside the Bible view concludes that death is a great transformer. The Bible says that death is a confirmer. Instead of death being the introduction to a second chance, it is the confirmation of the first chance. In dealing with the Bible, bear in mind this point of view.

"Economy is doing without what you want just now in case a time may come when you will want what you don't want now." It is possible to be so economical that you venture nothing. We have deified economy, placed insurance and economy on the throne, consequently we will do nothing on the line of adventure or extravagance. To use the word "economy" in connection with God is to belittle and misunderstand Him. Where is the economy of God in His sunsets and sunrises, in the grass and flowers and trees? God has made a superabounding number of things that are of no use to anyone. How many of us bother our heads about the sunrises and sunsets? Yet they go on just the same. Lavish extravagance to an extraordinary degree is the characteristic of God, never economy. Grace is the over-flowing favour of God. Imagine a man who is in love being economical! The characteristic of a man when he is awake is never that he is calculating and sensible.

Common sense is all very well in the shallow things, but it can never be made the basis of life, it is marked by timidities. We may say wise and subtle things, but if we bank on common sense and rationalism we shall be too timid to do anything. To-day we are so afraid of poverty that we never dream of doing anything that might involve us in being poor. We are out of the running of the mediaeval monks who took on the vow of poverty. Many of us are poor, but none of us chooses to be. These men chose to be poor, they believed it was the only way they could perfect their own inner life. Our attitude is that if we are extravagant a rainy day will come for which we have not laid up. You cannot lay up for a rainy day and justify it in the light of Jesus Christ's teaching. We are not Christians at heart, we don't believe in the wisdom of God, but only in our own. We go in for insurance and economy and speculation, everything that makes us secure in our own wisdom.

3. The Confines of Exposition (Ecclesiastes 11:5-6)

As thou knowest not what is the way of the spirit, nor how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child: even so thou knowest not the works of God who maketh all. In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.

The rationalist demands an explanation of everything. The reason I won't have anything to do with God is because I cannot define Him. If I can define God, I am greater than the God I define. If I can define love and life, I am greater than they are. Solomon indicates that there is a great deal we do not know and cannot define. We have to go on trust in a number of ways, therefore, he says, be careful that you are not too emphatic and dogmatic in your exposition of things.

A Christian is an avowed agnostic. I cannot find God out by my reason, therefore I have to accept the revelation given of Him by Jesus Christ. I do not know anything about God, things look as if He were not good, and yet the revelation given by Jesus Christ is that He is good, and I have to hang in to that revelation in spite of appearances.

"In the morning sow thy seed," i.e., don't bother about the origin of things. Solomon teaches all through the things that Jesus Christ insists on. Don't be careful whether men receive what you give in the right way or the wrong way, see to it that you don't withhold your hand. As long as you have something to give, give, let the consequences be what they may.

There is no possibility of saying a word in favour of a man after death if he did not do things before his death. The wisest thing is to make friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when you pass from this life they may receive you into everlasting habitations (see Luke 16:9).

4. The Consciousness of Experience (Ecclesiastes 11:7–8)

Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun: Yea, if a man live many years, let him rejoice in them all; but let him remember the days of darkness, for they shall be many. All that cometh is vanity. (RV)

Solomon is stating the practical attitude to things in the midst of the haphazard. You have to live this actual life, he says, with our confidence based on God, and see that you keep your day full of the joy and light of life; enjoy things as they come. When we have a particularly good time, we are apt to say, "Oh well, it can't last long." We expect the worst. When we have one trouble, we expect more. The Bible counsels us to rejoice—"yet let him remember the days of darkness."

The Bible talks about drinking wine when we are glad (see Psalm 104:15); this is different from the modern view. It is bad to drink wine when you are in the dumps. Solomon is amazingly keen that a man should enjoy the pleasant things, remembering that that is why they are here. The universe is meant for enjoyment. "... God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy." "Whatsoever ye do whether ye eat or drink, do all to the glory of God." We argue on the rational line—Don't do this or that because it is wrong. Paul argues in this way: Don't do it, not because it is wrong, but because the man who follows you will stumble if he does it, therefore cut it out, never let him see you do it any more (cf. 1 Corinthians 8:9-13). Solomon's attitude is a safe and sane one, that when a man is rightly related to God he has to see that he enjoys his own life and that others do too.

5. The Concentration after Expansion (Ecclesiastes 11:9–10)

Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgement. Therefore remove sorrow from thy heart, and put away evil from thy flesh: for childhood and youth are vanity.

"For all these things God will bring thee into judgement." "Judgement" means being brought into the arena of your own expansion. It is not that God is an almighty detective hiding round corners to catch and punish you, but that every time you have an expansion of heart or mind in thinking you have to pay for it, and pay for it in an added concentration. There are times when we feel enlarged, we have met someone who has expanded our life; Solomon reminds us that we have to pay for that enlargement, and live up to the limit of the expansion by an added concentration. If we don't, we will come a terrible smash. It is an appalling thing to see a young man with an old head on his shoulders; a young man ought not to be careful but to be full of cheer. "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth." Solomon is not advocating the sowing of wild oats, but that a man should enter into his life fully and remember that he must pay the price in the right way, not the wrong. When you have an opening up of your nature either in love or religion or adventure, you will have to pay for it in an added concentration. That means you have to bring all your life into keeping with the particular expansion; if you don't, you will become an arrant sentimentalist. To get hold of this truth is a big emancipation.

"Remove sorrow from thy heart, and put away evil from thy flesh." Youth is youth and age is age, and we have no business to require the head of age on the shoulders of youth. One of the affectations before the war was that we should never be enthusiastic about anything. That is not the style of a young man. According to Solomon, his life ought to be full to the last degree of expanding ecstasy, and he counsels him to do right things to the limit of his ability. Be enthusiastic and capable, go into things with all the vigour of life. But be prepared to pay for it. To pay for it means you must concentrate your life on a bigger plan; if you don't, you will become a dreamer. When a man has the vision of a poet or an artist, he has to learn to express himself, to become his own medium. There are more artistic people than artists because folks refuse to do this. Artistic people have art like a severe headache, they never work it out; they spurt out artistic ability, which is of no use to anyone. That is artistic disease, not art. Solomon's counsel is robust and strong—"Let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart." The young man who cannot enjoy himself is no good, he has a sinister attitude to life. The man who can enjoy himself is not pretending to be what he is not. The best thing to do is to burn your bridges behind you, make things inevitable, and then go ahead.

THE DISSOLVING TABERNACLE

Ecclesiastes 12

- 1. Lively Youth and Lingering Age (Ecclesiastes 12:1)
- 2. Luminous Skies and Beclouded Vision (Ecclesiastes 12:2)
- 3. Lordly Mansion and Tumbling Dwelling (Ecclesiastes 12:3–5)
- 4. Life's Shapely Instruments and Death's Broken Things (Ecclesiastes 12:6)
- 5. Languishing Dust and Ever-Living Spirit. (Ecclesiastes 12:7)

We have been shown how to enjoy life. Now we are told of the days when such enjoyment abates. The sparkle of youth will depart. The keen sense of things is diminished; sun, moon and stars are beclouded. This is a chapter of contrasts.

1. Lively Youth and Lingering Age (Ecclesiastes 12:1)

Remember also thy Creator in the days of thy youth. (RV)

We need a personal knowledge of God through all our life. The time to discover Him for ourselves is in Life's earliest morning—"that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation," wrote Paul to Timothy (2 Timothy 3:15). "And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but nurture them in the chastening and admonition of the Lord" (Ephesians 6:4 RV).

We are so built that in childhood we can more easily come to a knowledge of God in simplicity than in later years. And in those formative years the personal life can be shaped and fitted to God's standard more surely than later on.

In the flower of your days when life is known in its rich fullness, when the natural powers are in undiluted vigour, then make place for God in personal consciousness. The prodigal remembered his Father when he had spent all. He should have remembered him, gratefully, and with increasing understanding of his love and care, when his Father was bestowing on him his goods. God gives us all things richly to enjoy, and in youth and early manhood heaps rich precious bounties upon us, God must be remembered then, else we shall grievously hurt Him, and defraud ourselves.

"While the evil days come not"—age with its infirmities is part of our human lot. Of Moses it was written, "His eye was not dim, neither was his natural force abated" (Deuteronomy 34:7). But that was something unusual. There is "An Old Man's Parade" in the Bible, and we see decrepitude and frailty and fear showing their marks on bodily life. Isaac was old and his eyes were dim that he could not see. And Jacob too—"one told Joseph, Behold thy father is sick," and the old man, sitting on the bed, stretched out his hands to bless his grandchildren. It is a pleasant sight to see the old man with his worn-out frame passing on the Divine blessing to those in their youth, and praying "The angel which hath redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads" (Genesis 48:16 RV). We catch glimpses of the same thing in the New Testament: old Zechariah, and Simeon; there is "Paul the aged"; and Peter ready to put off his earthly tabernacle. They had remembered their Creator in the days of their youth, and in their old age He was precious to them.

2. Luminous Skies and Beclouded Vision (Ecclesiastes 12:2)

While the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars, be not darkened, nor the clouds return after the rain.

There is a loss of the sparkle of youth; there is not the same power of recovery after strain. How fascinatingly beautiful this earth can be to the keen vision of youth. The great poets wrote their abiding poems in their early years. It is God's order that the world should be a bright place for bairns. They have the capacity for entering into such natural joys; and it should not be denied them. There is a richer vision for mature minds who have been "born anew" (RV) and seen the Kingdom of God. Milton in his blindness saw rarer beauties than through the opened eyes of his youth.

Only the cynic will despise the loveliness and allurement of youthful days; but the saint will learn that even that bears the fatal hall-mark of "vanity." It too must pass. The happy delights of youth slip through our fingers as we hold them.

3. Lordly Mansion and Tumbling Dwelling (Ecclesiastes 12:3-5)

In the day when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and the strong men shall bow themselves, and the grinders cease because they are few, and those that look out of the windows be darkened, and the doors shall be shut in the streets, when the sound of the grinding is low, and he shall rise up at the voice of a bird, and the daughters of music shall be brought low; and when they shall be afraid of that which is high, and fears shall be in the way, and the almond tree shall flourish, and the grasshopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail: because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets.

Man's body is frequently described under the figure of a house. What a lordly house man's body is. We go back to watch its first construction in Genesis 1:27. The artistry of God is upon it all. Our bodies now are damaged by Man's Fall; but even so, how wonderful they are. No wonder we have the injunction, "Glorify God therefore in your body" (1 Corinthians 6:20 RV).

Verses 3–4 is a description of Old Age in its frailty. The keepers of the house (arms) and the strong men (legs) are weak and trembling; the grinders cease (teeth) and the windows are darkened (eyesight dimmed), the doors shut (ears are deaf), the grinding low (slow and tedious mastication), the easily startled nerves, and the loss of voice, the inability to climb, and the fear of highway traffic; the whitened hair like the almond tree in blossom, when any work seems a burden, and the failing natural desire, all portray the old man nearing the end of his earthly journey.

4. Life's Shapely Instruments and Death's Broken Things (Ecclesiastes 12:6)

Or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern.

The figures here used suggest the beauty and serviceableness of the human organs. The spinal cord as a silver chain; the shapely head as a golden bowl, the tireless heart as a household pitcher in constant use, and the circulatory blood system as a wheel in use at the well, all these show us Life's vital ministry.

Until Death invades and begins to destroy the precious things—the silver cord put out of action, the bowl broken, the pitcher broken, the wheel broken. Here is Death in his fearsome aspect as house-breaker and destroyer. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (1 Corinthians 15:26). Our Lord "became obedient even unto death" (Philippians 2:8 RV). "But Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him"—nor us either (Romans 6:9).

5. Languishing Dust and Ever-Living Spirit (Ecclesiastes 12:7)

Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.

Man is dust and divinity. "And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life" (Genesis 2:7).

Man is constituted to have affinity with everything on this earth. This is not his calamity, but his peculiar dignity. We do not further our spiritual life in spite of our bodies, but in, and by means of our bodies. (Biblical Psychology)

The dust shall return to the earth, but resurrection means the restoration of the full-orbed life of a man. What is sown a natural body will be raised a spiritual body. "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality" (1 Corinthians 15:53).

The spirit that returns to God shall find future embodiment. Saints like Paul have had a deep longing to be clothed upon with "our house which is from heaven." Jesus Christ has brought to us His Redemption which affects spirit, soul and body. Already we experience an amazing spiritual renovation through identification with Jesus Christ in His death and resurrection (Romans 6:4). But though we have received "the firstfruits of the Spirit," we are waiting for the "redemption of our body" (Romans 8:23).

We turn to the New Testament for the full word on Man's final form. "The earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God" (Romans 8:19 RV). For that great hour we hope and long, when we shall pass from beneath the Shade of His Hand into the full Shine of His Face.

INTRODUCTION

The Servant as His Lord (1959) combines four booklets previously published individually in the "sixpenny series." Over the years, Mrs. Chambers amalgamated a number of smaller books into combined volumes to keep them in print in the most economical format.

FOREWORD

This book has a message for our time. There is much discernment of the state of our age at its closing period. "What is described in the climax is true in every stage till the climax is reached." Jesus Christ foretold tribulation to His followers. But God gives us a fighting chance of winning through to triumph; and there is much here to nourish and guide His saints in their hours of conflict. There is much also about a saint's inner life—the soul of a Christian. The soul is the same in every age. It can be self pervaded, or influenced by Satanic power, or God possessed. There is also a remarkable exposition of the closing verses of Romans 8. We get a glimpse into the deep things of life. And we learn much about the principalities and powers that encircle us, but are not to conquer us. There is a lovely parable of the making of bread used to illustrate the making of saints. And a word about the patience of the saints in a whirl of tumult. The four sections have appeared as separate booklets, but in this form they fuse into one great message, making clear the truth that the Lord's servant may be, and should be, "as his Lord."

David Lambert⁴

Yet it was well, and Thou hast said in season,
"As is the Master shall the servant be:"
Let me not slide into the treason,
Seeking an honour which they gave not Thee.

Yea, thro' life, death, thro' sorrow and thro' sinning He shall suffice me, for He hath sufficed: Christ is the end, for Christ was the beginning, Christ the beginning, for the end is Christ.

THE FIGHTING CHANCE

Romans 8:35-39

The Mental Field

Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish . . . ? (RV)

During the French Revolution little boys who could not much more than walk carried a banner around with the words, "Tremble, tyrants, we are growing" printed on it. That is the aspect I want us to look at. We are not meant to be "carried to heaven on flow'ry beds of ease," we are given the fighting chance, and it is a glorious fight. Jesus Christ came to fit men to fight, He came to make the lame, the halt, the paralysed, the all but sin-damned, into terrors to the prince of this world.

If there is one thing an unsaved man is incapable of doing, it is fighting against the awful powers of sin. He can fight in the physical realm because he has the spirit of lust; but Paul warns that "our wrestling is not against flesh and blood, but against . . . the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places"

(RV). No man is a match for that warfare unless he is saved by God's grace. "Wherefore take up the whole armour of God. . . . " Fancy telling a man to put on the armour of God while he has a traitor on the inside! A man has to put on the armour of God to fight in when he has had the lustful disposition taken out of him; for what purpose? That he may fight all that comes against him and come off more than conqueror. Have you ever seen Jesus Christ take a man who has been paralysed by sin, paralysed by a wrong past, by a present that makes him say, "I shall never be different"—have you ever seen Jesus Christ take that man and turn him into a fighter, one who can "turn to flight armies of aliens"? That is what Jesus Christ can do by His marvellous salvation; He can put into the man whose energy has been sapped by sin and wrong until he is all but in hell, a life so strong and full that Satan has to flee whenever he meets him. Is there a man here who would not give his right arm, nay, his very life, if God would fit him to fight, and make him more than conqueror over sin and Satan and circumstances? Thank God, He can do it! Oh, let me repeat it, I do not care how defaced you may be morally, how weak and backslidden, I do know that Jesus Christ can make you more than conqueror as you draw on His Resurrection life.

"The fighting chance" exactly describes the way we are made. Take our bodies: we are kept healthy by our capacity to fight, and the stronger the forces within the better is our health. Health simply means a perfect balance between the body and the outer world. The same is true mentally. I continually come across people with rusty "thinkers," they think about their business but about nothing else, and the forces within have become desperately weak; consequently when tribulation comes their minds are confused, and the result is that errors come into the life. If the forces within are strong and healthy they give us warning and enable us to crush in a vice on the threshold of the mind everything that ought not to come there. God can impart to a man the power to select what his mind thinks, the power to think only what is right and pure and true.

If it is a fight in the physical and mental realm is also a fight in the spiritual realm, only tremendously intensified, because when we receive the new life from God, Satan instantly brings all his power to crush it out. But thank God, no matter how the enemy presses He can make us, more than conquerors because the very life of Jesus is imparted to us and we are able to face the devil and sin as He did.

(a) Predicted

In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world. (John 16:33; see John 17:14–16)

Iesus Christ foretold tribulation; He conveyed His message with a clarion voice to the saints in all ages— "In the world ye shall have tribulation," and the Apostle Paul continually warns us that we have no right to settle on our lees. "For verily, when we were with you, we told you plainly [mg] that we are to suffer affliction; even as it came to pass, and ye know" (1 Thessalonians 3:4 RV). Tribulation means being thronged by severe affliction and trouble; that is what the saints are to expect in this dispensation and not be astonished when it comes. God allows tribulation and anguish to come right to the threshold of our lives in order to prove to us that His life in us is more than a match for all that is against us. When we see the awfulness of evil in this world we imagine there is no room for anything but the devil and wrong; but this is not so. God restrains the powers of evil. How does He do it? Through the lives of the saints who are pushing the battle everywhere their feet are placed. The devil tackles on the right hand and on the left but they are more than conquerors, they not only go through the tribulation, but are "exceeding joyful" in it.

(b) Portrayed

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto her! [RV] how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! (Matthew 23:37; see Romans 9:1-3)

Have you ever noticed the examples the New Testament gives of those who go through tribulation? Our Lord Himself and the Apostle Paul. The writer to the Hebrews says, "Consider him. . . ." Have you ever considered Jesus Christ's distress over Jerusalem? Do we know anything about that kind of tribulation? There is a difference between the distress that comes to our human minds and the distress of the Holy Ghost through us. Jesus warned that "because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." Why? Because people are not rooted in the right place. No matter how iniquity may abound, or how crushing may be the afflictions that throng around, Jesus Christ can make us more than conquerors while at the same time we taste the anguish of the Holy Ghost.

A great danger besets Christians, and Satan is at the back of it, viz., the danger which makes men and women think that they are God's favourites. No one can monopolise God; it is easy to say that, and yet we seem to think we can. God has no favourites, but when we let Him have His right of way through us He begins to unveil something more of His purposes in our lives. Has God unfolded to you His purpose in your family? in your business? in Battersea? wherever you are? or is tribulation making you wilt? making you swoon for sympathy? making you stagnate? It is an easy business to want to get away from tribulation, but fighting makes us strong, gloriously strong.

Are you saying—"I wonder if I am ever going to get out of these circumstances? if things are ever going to alter for me?" Let God alter you, let Him put within you the life of His Son, and backed by Almighty God, you will not only get the fighting chance, but you will glory in tribulation—the tramp of the conqueror about you. God grant we may let our hearts talk to our minds, and let our minds follow on to know; and we can only know by means of this tribulation-experience.

^{6.} Battersea: area of southwest London; location of the League of Prayer headquarters.

When you have to go and see some "big" person, remember to take a deep breath and you will be surprised to find how courageous you feel. Apply that spiritually, when there is tribulation and distress thronging round you, take time and draw in a tremendous draught of the grace of God, and you will find it is a delight to meet it because He makes us more than conquerors in the midst of it all.

The Moral Field

Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall... persecution? (Romans 8:35)

Morality is not something with which we are gifted, we make morality; it is another word for character. "Except your righteousness" (i.e., your morality) "shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees," said Jesus, "ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven" (RV). Morality is not only correct conduct on the outside, but correct thinking within where only God can see. No matter how a man may have been tampered with by Satan, God can re-make him so that in every moral battlefield he can come off more than conqueror. Thank God He does give us the fighting chance! In certain moods we are inclined to criticise God for not [having] made the world like a foolproof machine whereby it would be impossible to go wrong. If God had made men and women like that we would have been of no worth to Him. Jesus Christ by His almighty Redemption makes us of the stuff that can stand the strain.

One afternoon I was watching the birds on the lake in Battersea Park and I got a splendid illustration of persecution. There were all kinds of birds—ducks and seagulls and swans, and some birds not native to our shores. Children were feeding them, and one white duck got hold of a crust. Immediately the other ducks tried to grab it from her, but she swam through her own crowd, easily outwitting them. Then the foreign birds swooped down on her, a new style of enemy, but I never saw rabbit or boy chase and turn with such dexterity as that duck, and over and over again the seagulls struck the water instead of the duck. Then along came the cygnets and tried to pull the duck back by main force and take the crust from her, but the more they tackled, the more dextrous she got, until at last she cleared them all and got complete victory. That is exactly the meaning of persecution—systematic vexation.

(a) Place

And he that was sown upon the rocky places, this is he that heareth the word, and straightway with joy receiveth it; yet hath he not root in himself, but endureth for a while; and when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, straightway he stumbleth. (Matthew 13:20–21 RV)

The first place where you meet persecution is after conversion. I am not using the word "conversion" in the sense of regeneration, but of being in the condition to receive something from God (see Acts 26:18). As soon as you turn in the direction of God and receive a word from Him, you will find systematic vexation begin on that particular word—"and when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, straightway he stumbleth." The proof that you have the root of the matter in you is that you easily prevail against persecution. How many of us have turned aside at the very outset, at conversion point, when we first begin to testify, because of persecution? Jesus Christ told us to expect it. I think we are losing sight of the real meaning of testimony; it is not for the sake of others, but for our own sake. It makes us know we have no one to rely on but God.

Persecution is not only met with at the threshold, it increases as we go on in the Christian life. A man may get through persecution from his own crowd, but when it comes to persecution from principalities and powers, that is a domain he knows nothing about. When we are saved and sanctified God does not shield us from any requirement of a son or daughter of His; He lifts His hand off, as it were, and says to the devil "Do your worst": "Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is He that is in you, than he that is in the world" (1 John 4:4); and we find to our delight that we are made more than conquerors. We talk about people being "loved into blessing," but no one is loved into blessing unless he is first lured by that love to a tremendous surgical operation. There must be a radical alteration within before the new life is there which will overcome all that comes against it. Persecution is the thing that tests our Christianity, and it always comes in our own setting; the crowd outside never bothers us. To have brickbats and rotten eggs flung at you is not persecution, it simply makes you feel good and does you no harm at all. But when your own crowd cut you dead and systematically vex you, then says Jesus, "count it all joy." Leap for joy "when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and reproach you, and cast out your name as evil for the Son of man's sake"—not for the sake of some crotchety notion of our own.

(b) Profit

Blessed are ye when men shall reproach you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for My sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven. (Matthew 5:11–12 RV; see 2 Corinthians 12:10)

Jesus Christ not only warned that persecution would come, He went further and said that it was profitable to go through persecution. "Blessed are ye, when men shall . . . persecute you." The way the world treats me is the exhibition of my inner disposition. "Whosoever maketh himself a friend of the world is the enemy of God." The line where the world ends and Christianity begins alters in every generation. What was worldliness in Paul's day is not worldliness in our day; the line is altering all the time. To-day the world has taken on so many things out of the Church, and the Church has taken on so many things out of the world, that it is difficult to know where you are. Immediately you let the disposition God gives you manifest itself, you are going to be a "speckled bird." "Is mine heritage unto me as a speckled bird of prey?" (RV) asked Jeremiah. No matter how sweet and winsome you may be, you will come across something that positively detests you. "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated Me before it hated you." Do we know anything about it?

Is some discouraged soul saying—"If only God would give me different circumstances"? No one understands your circumstances but God, and He has given you the fighting chance to prove you can be more than conqueror in all these things. Let God lift you out of the broken place, out of the bedraggled place. Let Him put within you the Holy Spirit so that you can face the music of life and become more than conqueror in every place where you have been defeated. Carlyle⁸ said of Tennyson that he was always carrying about with him a lump of chaos and turning it into cosmos. That is another way of putting this truth, that we make our own character. God gives us a new disposition, the disposition of His Son; then we have to work out what He has worked in, and the way we react in the circumstances God engineers for us produces character.

Have you ever noticed how God permits the natural virtues to break down? People whose lives have been moral and upright get astounded when these virtues begin to crumble. They have been trying to build up a character on these virtues, and it cannot be done. Natural virtues are not a promise of what we are going to be, but a remnant of what we once were. No natural virtue can come anywhere near the standard Jesus Christ demands. We have to receive the Holy Spirit and let Him bring us to the place where we are so identified with the Death of Jesus that it is "no longer I, but Christ that liveth in me" (RV); and then go on to build up a character on the basis of Jesus Christ's disposition. The Christian life is drawn from first to last, and all in between, from the Resurrection life of the Lord Jesus.

The Material Field

Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall... nakedness, or peril, or sword? (Romans 8:35)

The Material Field, i.e., things that come to a man's life from the outside—famine, nakedness, peril, sword. The Apostle Paul seems to be never tired of comparing the Christian life to a fight, and a fight against tremendous odds, but always a winning fight. In these verses Paul brings before our contemplation every conceivable battlefield; every manoeuvre and strategy of the enemy is embraced, no phase of his tactics is left out, and in it all he says we are "more than conquerors through Him that loved us." We cannot be more than conquerors if there is nothing to fight! Our Lord Himself and the Spirit of God in the Epistles make it very clear that everything that is not of God will try its best to kill His life out of us; yet instead of doing that it makes us all the stronger. The love of God in Christ Jesus is such that He can take the most unfit man—unfit to survive, unfit to fight, unfit to face moral issues—and make him not only fit to survive and to fight, but fit to face the biggest moral issues and the strongest power of Satan, and come off more than conqueror. The love in God in Christ Jesus through the mighty Atonement is such that it can do this for the feeblest, the most sinful man, if he will hand himself over to God.

(a) The Book of Martyrs

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, when thou wast young, thou girdest thyself and walkest whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not. (John 21:18; cf. John 16:2; Luke 10:19)

A martyr is one who is put to death for adherence to principles. Martyrdom is not peculiar to the Christian religion. Men and women who suffer death for adhering to principles are found not only in the Christian religion, but in every religion under heaven, and outside any religion; but the particular type of martyrdom we are referring to is that of those men and women who go to death because of obedience to the principles of the life of Jesus in them.

In 1 Corinthians 4:9, Paul mentions a strange training for the apostles. He says that "God hath set forth us, the apostles, last of all" (i.e., as the last item in the day's play in the theatre) "as men doomed to death, for we are made a spectacle unto the world . . ." (RV); and the writer to the Hebrews, reminding us of the witnesses of old, says the same thing: they were "destitute, afflicted, ill treated" (11:36–37 RV). We are apt to say that we are not called to martyrdom to-day, but I think we shall begin to find that we are, and to a crueller martyrdom than that of the early days, which was intense and fierce and then over.

^{7. &}quot;speckled bird": a person who stands out as abnormal, odd, or eccentric.

^{8.} Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881): Scottish-born literary figure in nineteenth-century England, a writer, biographer, essayist, historian, and critic.

". . . or nakedness?" Nakedness means to be destitute of clothing and shelter, destitute of all sustenance for life. God said to Satan concerning Job—"Behold, all that he hath is in thy hand [RV] mg]." That permission has never been withdrawn, and every now and again Satan gets permission from God to play havoc with all our material possessions. "For a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." If our life is in our material possessions, and nakedness, peril and sword tackle and destroy them, where is our faith? But if we bank on the love of God in Jesus Christ He will make us more than conqueror "in all these things." God grant we may put God first. When Mary of Bethany broke the alabaster box of ointment on the feet of Jesus, the disciples were indignant and said, "To what purpose is this waste, for this ointment might have been sold for much and given to the poor." Have you ever noticed how strangely Jesus answered them? "For ye have the poor always with you, and whensoever ye will ye can do them good; but Me ye have not always." Did Jesus mean that He had no care for the poor? That He did not understand what an awful, stinging, grinding thing it is to be poverty-stricken and destitute? No one on earth felt these things more keenly than Jesus did, but He was pointing out that, as His disciples, the great note for our lives is not sympathy with the poor, not an understanding of the needs of men, but an understanding of His point of view.

(b) The Boycott of Mediocrity

Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake. (Luke 6:22 RV; cf. 1 Peter 4:4)

"All that would live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (RV), says Paul, and our Lord says the same thing. Men will make you destitute of their society, they will cut you dead, and when they do speak of you, they will speak evil. No man knew this better than the Apostle Paul, and what did he do? He despised being despised! Persecution is systematic vexation, it does not leave you alone, it is something that throngs you; but to be boycotted means to be left alone, destitute of the comrades you used to have—

"they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you." But they don't know that you carry a wonderful kingdom within, a kingdom full of light and peace and joy no matter how destitute and alone you may be on the outside. That is the wonderful work of the Lord in a man's soul. "Rejoice in that day, and leap for joy."

One of the things I remember during the Welsh Revival⁹ was the unspeakable presence of God. It was unlike anything I had ever felt before. You could feel the presence of God in the very atmosphere, and tell the districts where it was and where it was not, and I remember coming to the conclusion that if a martyr felt the marvel of that Presence he would not feel the pain. Another thing that struck me was that while many were getting right with God, others were content with the enthusiasm of the presence of God and bringing forth no "fruits meet for repentance." When shall we understand that God's method is repentance first and then the reviving life of God? If revival does not bring forth fruits meet for repentance it will end in riot and ultimately in ruin.

(c) The Big Meaning

Even as it is written, For Thy sake we are killed all the day long; we were accounted as sheep for the slaughter. (Romans 8:36 RV)

Anaesthesis means insensibility to pain, and there is such a thing as spiritual anaesthesis—God put you to sleep while the thing hurts. Some Christians do not seem to know that they are going through things, they are so wonderfully upheld by the life and power of God within, and when you begin to sympathise with them, they look at you in amazement—"Why, what have I been through?" They had never realised that the battle was on. The danger is to get taken up with external tribulations and trials and when we come to the end of the day to say, "Thank God, I have just got through!" Where is "the unsearchable riches of Christ" about that? The grace of God will make us marvellously impervious to all the onslaughts of tribulation and persecution and destitution because we are seated in heavenly places in Christ Jesus and cannot be awakened up to self-pity. God sends His rough weather and His smooth weather, but we pay no attention to either because we are taken up only with the one central thing—the love of God in Christ Jesus.

Where are you placed in your circumstances? Is it tribulation and anguish that are perplexing you? Is it nervous trouble that is overcoming you, the nameless dread that comes from nerves that are all on fire and jangled? I firmly believe there is no type of mental or nervous disease over which Jesus Christ cannot make us more than conqueror as we draw on His Resurrection life. Is your battlefield the moral one? Persecution, systematic vexation, in your home because you have got right with God? Persistent ridicule from those you work with because of your obedience to Jesus Christ? Jesus Christ can make you more than conqueror there. Remember, morality is produced by fight, not by dreaming, not by shutting our eyes to facts, but by being made right with God; then we can make our morality exactly after the stamp of Jesus Christ.

The Natural Manoeuvres

For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life . . . shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. (Romans 8:38–39)

Paul has catalogued the things over which we are more than conquerors—tribulation, anguish, persecution, famine, nakedness, peril, sword; now he seems to strike another note, a note of defiance—"for I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life . . . shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

He conjures; he marshals before him; he names over in all their greatest horror every conceivable trouble which afflicts the soul of man; he calls them up and he passes them in review before him, and he bids them do their worst, and sets them all at defiance. . . . Life is an infinitely worse thing than death, more terrible, more appalling.

Dr. David Smith¹⁰

(a) The Great Dread—Death

Death is a great dread. It is easy to say that God is love until death has snatched away your dearest friend, then I defy you to say that God is love unless God's grace has done a work in your soul. Death means extinction of life as we understand it; our dead are gone and have left an aching void behind them. They do not talk to us, we do not feel their touch, and when the bereaved heart cries out, nothing comes back but the hollow echo of its own cry. The heart is raw, no pious chatter, no scientific cant can touch it. It is the physical calamity of death plus the thing behind which no man can grasp, that makes death so terrible. We have so taken for granted the comfort that Jesus Christ brings in the hour of death that we forget the awful condition of men apart from that revelation. Do strip your mind and imagination of the idea that we have comfort about the departed apart from the Bible; we have not. Every attempt to comfort a bereaved soul apart from the revelation Jesus Christ brings is a vain speculation. We know nothing about the mystery of death apart from what Jesus Christ tells us; but blessed be the Name of God, what He tells us makes us more than conquerors, so that we can shout the victory through the darkest valley of the shadow that ever a human being can go through.

The Bible reveals that death is inevitable—"and so death passed upon all men" (Romans 5:12). "It is appointed unto men once to die" (Hebrews 9:27). Repeat that over to yourself. It is appointed to every one of us that we are going to cease to be as we are now, and the place that knows us now shall know us no more. We may shirk it, we may ignore it, we may be so full of robust health and spirits that the thought of death never enters, but it is inevitable.

Another thing—the Bible says that a certain class of man is totally indifferent to death, "for there are no pangs in their death" (Psalm 73:4 RV). Over and over again the Bible points out that the wicked man, the Esau-type of man who is perfectly satisfied with life as it is, has not the slightest concern about death—because he is so brave and strong? No, because he is incapable of realising what death means. The powers that press from the natural world have one tendency, and one only, to deaden all communication with God.

One other thing—the Bible says there are those who are intimidated by death, ". . . that through death He might bring to nought him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and might deliver all them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Hebrews 2:14-15 RV). The thought of death is never away from them; it terrorises their days, it alarms their nights. Now read very reverently Hebrews 5:7: "Who . . . having offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto Him that was able to save Him from death . . ." Who is that? The Lord Jesus Christ. We cannot begin to fathom this passage; after years of meditation on it we come only to the threshold of realising what Gethsemane represents. Jesus Christ can deliver from the dread of death—"that through death He might bring to nought him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." Death has no terror for the man who is rightly related to God through Jesus Christ. "How blest the righteous when he dies!" Were there any terrors in the passing of the Founder of the League of Prayer?¹¹ It was a marvellous and glorious translation. "O death, where is thy victory?

^{11.} Founder of the League of Prayer: Reader Harris (1847–1909), prominent British barrister, founded the Pentecostal League of Prayer in 1891; friend and mentor of Oswald Chambers.

O death, where is thy sting?"—absolutely nullified, destroyed by the majestic might of the Atonement.

(b) The Greatest Danger—Life

Life is a far greater danger than death. I want to say something, crudely, but very definitely: the Bible nowhere says that men are damned; the Bible says that men are damnable. There is always the possibility of damnation in any life, always the possibility of disobedience; but, thank God, there is also always the possibility of being made "more than conqueror." The possibilities of life are awful. Think—are you absolutely certain that you are not going to topple headlong over a moral precipice before you are three years older? Look back on your life and ask yourself how it was you escaped when you were set on the wrong course—the tiniest turn and you would have been a moral ruin? Disease cut off with a tremendous fell swoop your companions—why did it not cut you off? The men with you in your youth who were so brilliant—where are they now? Out in the gutter some of them, all but damned while they live. Why are you not there? Why am I not there? Oh, it does us good, although it frightens us, to look at the possibilities of life. May God help us to face the issues.

Unless a man's peace and prosperity are based on a right relationship to God, it may end in a sudden and terrible awakening. We never know whether the next moment is going to bring us face to face with green pastures or a hurricane. The Bible reveals that here is a ruling principle at work in this world that hates God, and when we take sides against that principle there is the very devil to face. That is the Apostle Paul's argument here. When we are born again into the heavenly kingdom, then come tribulation and anguish, then come persecution and famine, then come nakedness, peril and sword; then comes life, and then comes death—mocking us with paradoxes and puzzles we cannot explain. The possibilities and perils of life are enormous. It is only when some such considerations get hold of men who are bound up in "a show of things" that they begin to see the need for Jesus Christ's Redemption.

(c) The Greater Deliverance

I have been drawing a very dark picture, you say. I have not. It is not within the power of human tongue or archangel's tongue to state what an awful fact death is, and what a still more awful fact life is. But thank God, there is the greatest deliverance conceivable from all that life may bring and from all that death may bring. Jesus Christ has destroyed the dominion of death, and He can make us fit to face every problem of life, more than conqueror all along the line.

Let God have His way, and He will turn the drama of your life into a doxology, and you will understand why the Psalmist breaks out with the words, "O that men would praise the LORD for His goodness, and for His wonderful works to the children of men!" Jesus Christ can make the weakest man into a Divine dreadnought, fearing nothing. He can plant within him the life that was in Himself, the life Time cannot touch. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth . . . hath everlasting life," that is, the life Jesus had, so that a man can face all the powers of hell with a conqueror's tread. Heroics? No, heroism. Heroics sound all very well on a stage, or on paper, but heroism works in flesh and blood, and Jesus Christ makes us flesh-and-blood dreadnoughts. Not all the power of the enemy can fuss or turn aside the soul that is related to God through the Atonement.

The Supernatural Manoeuvres

For I am persuaded, that neither . . . angels, nor principalities, nor powers . . . shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. (Romans 8:38–39)

By the help of God's Spirit I want, for one moment, to lift the veil from the unseen world as the Bible reveals it that we may understand what a marvellous salvation we have; a salvation that keeps us not only from dangers we see and know, not only from sin and all we understand as the works of the devil, but a salvation that keeps us from dangers we know nothing about. Oh, there are tremendous possibilities around us! The Bible reveals that the unseen world has rulers and majesties and tremendous beings with whom man can get into communication and be possessed by, but God pronounces His curse on the man or woman who dares to communicate with them.

(a) Messengers of the Unseen Universe

"Neither . . . angels . . . "The Bible has a great deal to say about angels: there are Angelic Hosts (see Matthew 26:53; Hebrews 1:7, 14) and Angelic Helpers (see Psalm 91:11–12; Matthew 18:10). When we were taught as children that angels watch around our beds it was not a fairy story we were told, but a revelation fact. The angels are there to guard us, and they watch and guard every blood-bought soul. And there is an Angelic Hell; there is no other place for fallen angels (Matthew 25:41; Jude 6; Revelation 20:10). It is never stated that God has provided a place for men who will not come to Him; it is implied with solemn warning that the only place they can go to is that "prepared for the devil and his angels."

The good angels are a host and the bad angels are a host. To-day spiritualism is having tremendous vogue; men and women are getting into communication with departed spirits and putting themselves in league with the unseen powers. If you have got as far as reading fortunes in tea-cups, stop. If you have gone as far as telling fortunes by cards, stop. I will tell you why—the devil uses these apparently harmless things to create a fearful curiosity in the minds of men and women, especially young men and women, and it may bring them into league with the angelic forces that hate God, into league with the principalities and the rulers of this world's darkness. Never say, "What is the harm in it?" Push it to its logical conclusion and ask—"Where will this end?" You are absolutely safe as long as you remain under the shelter of the Atonement; but if you do not—I don't care what your experiences are—you are absolutely unsafe. At any minute dangers may beset you, terrors and darkness may take hold of you and rack your life with terrific perils.

God grant we may keep as far away from these things as we can. But if in the strange providence of God you find you are near a spiritualist meeting, pray, and keep on your praying, and you will paralyse every power of the medium if he is genuine. No spiritualistic seance can continue if there is a Christian anywhere near who knows how to lay hold of God in prayer; no spirits will communicate. I could tell you wonderful stories of how God's power has worked. Blessed be God; Jesus Christ's salvation makes us more than conqueror over the angelic forces.

(b) Majesties of the Unseen Universe

"nor principalities . . ." A principality is the jurisdiction of a prince. According to the Bible, the kingdoms of this world are under the rule of the prince of this world, viz., Satan (cf. Matthew 4:8–9). A time is coming when they will be taken from him,—"the kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of His Christ" (RV), but at present they are in his power.

Men say—"I can't help committing sin"; "I can't help doing this thing." Are they right? Perfectly right. You may talk to further orders 12 about a weak will; there is nothing more absurd. It is not the man's weak will; he has got into league with a power stronger than he is, and when once a man gets in league with the prince of this world, I defy all his strength of will to stand before the terrific power of this world's darkness for one second. According to the New Testament, there is such a thing as obsession by unclean, malicious, wicked spirits who will damn and ruin body and soul in hell (cf. Luke 11:21-26). A moral empty heart is the resort of these spirits when a man is off his guard. But if a man has been born again of the Spirit of God and is keeping in the light, he cannot help going right because he is backed by the tremendous power of Almighty God. What does the Apostle John say?—"the evil one toucheth him not" (RV). What a marvellous certainty! God grant we may be so filled with the Holy Spirit that we listen to His checks along every line. No power can deceive a child of God who keeps in the light with God. I am perfectly certain that the devil likes to deceive us and limit us in our practical belief as to what Jesus Christ can do. There is no limit to what He can do, absolutely none. "All things are possible to him that believeth." Jesus says that faith in Him is omnipotent. God grant we may get hold of this truth.

(c) Miracles of the Unseen Universe

"nor powers . . . " The word is the same as that translated "miracles." A miracle is a work done by one who has fuller knowledge and authority than we have. Things that were called miracles a hundred years ago are not thought of as miracles to-day because men have come to a fuller knowledge. The miracles of Jesus were an exhibition of the power of God, that is, they were simply mirrors of what God Almighty is doing gradually and everywhere and all the time; but every miracle Jesus performed had a tremendous lesson behind it. It was not merely an exhibition of the power of God, there was always a moral meaning behind for the individual. That is why God does not heal some people. We are apt to confine life to one phase only, the physical: there are three phases physical, psychical and spiritual. Whenever Jesus touched the physical domain a miracle happened in the other phases as well. If a miracle is wrought by any other power in the physical it leaves no corresponding stamp of truth in the other domains of soul and spirit. In this dispensation it is not a question of whether God will sovereignly permit us to be delivered from sin, it is His expressed will that we should be delivered from sin; but when it comes to healing it is not a question of God's will, but of His sovereignty, that is, whether the pre-dispensational efficacy of the Atonement is active on our behalf just now. There is no case of healing in the Bible that did not come from a direct intervention of the sovereign touch of God. We make the mistake of putting an abstract truth deduced from the Word of God in the place of God Himself. When God does not heal it is time we got down to close quarters with God and asked Him why. There is a deep lesson behind; we cannot lay down a general law for everyone, we can only find out the reason by going to God.

Our Lord revealed that the public power of Satan would be greater in the days in which we live than ever before. "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; so as to lead astray, if possible, even the elect" (Matthew 24:24 RV), and the Apostle Paul foretold that there would be "signs and lying wonders . . . according to the working of Satan" (2 Thessalonians 2:9 RV), but we have no need to fear if we are experiencing the salvation of the Lord Jesus. He will banish all the tremendous powers and majesties that have been set against Him: "having put off from Himself the principalities and the powers [RV mg], He made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it." According to the Bible, the One who laughs last is God. "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh" (Psalm 2:4). The Apostle Paul has embraced every possible phase of the enemy's tactics, and he says we are more than conquerors in them all through Him that loved us.

The Frontier Battle Lines

For I am persuaded, that neither . . . things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creation [RV mg], shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. (Romans 8:38–39)

In these verses Paul does not mention the ordinary trials of life; he mentions the imperilling experiences which thousands have gone through these past years, distress and anguish which hold the eyes too much awake to sleep, tribulation that tears and lacerates everything; but, he says, the love of God is untouched by these experiences. That love renders impotent the strength of our most formidable enemy. Any of the elemental ministries, life, death, things present, things to come, may kill the castles built by human love; may remove and shatter them like an incoming tide, their strength is overwhelming, but they are powerless to touch the love of God in Christ Jesus. When one reads the Apostle Paul, language seems completely beggared in the attempt to express his devotion to Jesus Christ. Faith itself, with Paul, seems to be lost sight of and merged altogether in his personal intimacy with Jesus Christ; his is the very faith of the Son of God, which is not conscious of itself. Remember, this is not meant only for the Apostle Paul, it is for everyone of us. God grant that the Holy Spirit may so kindle all our natural powers, so invade us with the power of God, that we may begin to "comprehend . . . what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height" of the love of Christ for our souls.

(a) The Infinitely Great

"nor height..." For generations the telescope has been made the means of terrifying us instead of bringing God nearer to us. Those who deal with the great secrets of the universe imply that our planet is such a tiny spot in the tremendous universe that it is a piece of stupid conceit on our part to think that God watches over us. And to make our planet the centre where God performed the marvellous drama of His own history of the Incarnation and Atonement is absurd, they say. But watch a simple-minded person, one who is right with God and is not terrified by the reasonings of men, as he looks at the stars and exclaims, "when I consider Thy heavens, the work of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which Thou hast ordained; what is man, that Thou are mindful of him?" It is said not in despair, but in adoring wonder. Then watch the man who is not right with God. The sight of the infinitely great to him pushes God right out of it, until God becomes a great first Cause, a remote cold principle. The far-flung battle lines reach beyond the stars to the very throne of God, and deeper down than the deepest depths of hell; they may test and storm, they may spread seas and space, but, says Paul, "I am persuaded that they are not able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

(b) The Infinitely Little

"nor depth" . . . " Look at the world either through a telescope or a microscope and you will be dwarfed into terror by the infinitely great or the infinitely little. Naturalists tell us that there are no two blades of grass alike, and close inspection of a bee's wing under a microscope reveals how marvellously it is made. What do I read in the Bible? I read that the God of heaven counts the hairs of our heads. Jesus says so. I read that the mighty God watches the sparrows so intimately that not one of them falls on the ground without His notice. I read that the God who holds the seas in the hollow of His hand and guides the stars in their courses, clothes the grass of the field. Through the love of God in Christ Jesus we are brought into a wonderful intimacy with the infinitely great and the infinitely little.

(c) The Infinitely Possible

"nor any other creation . . ." The Apostle Paul knew better than most of us that there are principalities and powers and ordinances behind the seen universe that may at any moment flash forth as an uncanny spiritual "airship," or burst up from the deep as a terrific supernatural "submarine," terrifying us out of our wits. But, he says, no matter what the different creations may be, "I am persuaded that neither . . . height, nor depth, nor any other creation, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Paul is not boasting, he is speaking from his own absolute certainty that the Cross of Christ has in it the very secret heart of God. We belittle and misrepresent the love of God when we see it merely on the surface. It is easy to think imperially, easy to think big thoughts and dream big dreams. But Jesus Christ is not big thoughts and big dreams. He is a tremendously big Saviour for little insignificant creatures such as we are. Through the Atonement God Almighty can place you, my poor, weak, timid, sin-tossed brother or sister, where nothing can touch you or harm you. No wonder the Apostle Paul goes down to the lowest depths and climbs to the highest heights, and shouts in triumph—"we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us"!

If this great God is ours, what about our bodies, can He keep them in trim? What about our minds, can He keep our imaginations stayed upon Him so that we are able to say without hysterics—"Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea"? Every now and again an attack from the unseen realm may surprise us and take us off our guard, but if we are right with God, what do we find? We find God on guard, and we are amazed and stand back and say, "Why, this is wonderful!"—"Kept by the power of God."

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" At the end of all trials, and when there is no more trial, the love of God is not finished; it still goes on. "... having loved His own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end." This is the great theme that keeps the soul of the saint undaunted in courage. It does not matter where a man may get to in the way of tribulation or anguish, none of it can wedge in between and separate him from the love of God in Christ Jesus.

Let me close with a simple illustration. Children are sometimes afraid in the dark, fear gets into their hearts and nerves and they get into a tremendous state; then they hear the voice of mother or father, and all is quietened and they go off to sleep. In our own spiritual experience it is the same; some terror comes down the road to meet us and our hearts are seized with a tremendous fear; then we hear our own name called, and the voice of Jesus saying, "It is I, be not afraid," and the peace of God which passeth understanding takes possession of our hearts.

The Soul of a Christian

Foreword (1936)

There is perennial value in these Talks because they deal with abiding things. The soul of man retains its constituent elements and has to face the same sort of problems. Man needs God, and when he would fain find Him, or be found of Him it is well to know progress may be hindered by blocked roads, by blindness or fear, or unbelief or basic enmity against God. Oswald Chambers had well explored that way to God, and God's way to man, and these Talks are the fruit of that knowledge and experience gained by exploring his own heart and in dealing with his fellows. He says, "All this vast complex of 'me,' which we cannot begin to understand, God knows completely." Every man is "lost" who is content i[n] his native estrangement from his God, till the Holy Spirit is allowed to adjust the repentant and believing heart to God through Christ's Redemption. The second Talk is a mighty discourse on "God's scrutiny of man," as the first might be called "How to become a hilarious saint." These Talks come to grips with us, and some things heard from the speaker's lips years ago have lost none of their power to lay hold on heart and mind and will. They will help men who are in earnest, as Jacob Behmen¹³ put it, to become rightly related to eternal righteousness, and God's own wholeness (holiness). It will pay anyone to soak in the message of this book till, by the working of God's Spirit and the surgery of events, he comes to himself, and comes right home to God.

SOUL SATISFACTION

O Lord, Thou hast searched me, and known me. (Psalm 139:1)

None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him: (for the redemption of their soul is costly, and must be let alone for ever). (Psalm 49:7–8 RV)

Beware of believing that the human soul is simple, for it is not true. Read Psalm 139, and look into yourself, and you will soon find you are much too complex to touch. Charles Wagner¹⁴ was the apostle of naturalness, "the gospel of temperament"—Be simple! How can anyone who is wide-awake be simple? We befool ourselves into moral imbecility if we believe those who tell us the human soul is simple. As long as we think we understand ourselves we are in a lamentable state of ignorance. The first dose of conviction of sin, or of the realisation of what the Psalmist states, viz., the unfathomable depths of our own souls, will put an end to that ignorance. The only One who can redeem the human soul is the Lord Jesus Christ and He has done it, and the Holy Spirit brings the realisation of this to us experimentally. All this vast complex "me" which we cannot begin to understand, God knows completely, and through the Atonement He invades every part of our personality with His life.

Soul is the responsible expression of the ruling personal spirit, and when the personal spirit is filled with God's Spirit, we have to see that we obey His Spirit and reconstruct another soul. God's Spirit entering my spirit does not become my spirit, but quickens my spirit, and I begin to express a new soul. It is not the nature of the working of the soul that is altered, that remains the same in a regenerate human spirit as in an unregenerate human spirit, but a different driving power expresses itself. When God's Spirit comes into my personal spirit, instantly I am introduced to a life which manifests itself in contradiction to my old way of reasoning and expressing myself, and the consequence is that the life whereby I have affinity with other people is upset and they wonder what is the matter with me, a disturbing element has come in which cannot be estimated. The incoming of the Spirit of God disturbs the reasoning faculties, and for a while the soul that is born from above (RV mg) is inarticulate, it has no expression; the equilibrium has been upset by the incoming of a totally new spirit into my spirit, and Jesus Christ says, "In your patience ye shall win your souls" (Luke 21:19 RV)—acquire your new soul with patience.

Satisfaction and the demand for satisfaction is a God-given principle in human nature, but it must be satisfaction in the highest. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled."

Naturally

But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. (1 Corinthians 2:14)

We preach to men as if they were conscious they were dying sinners, they are not; they are having a good time, and our talk about being born from above (RV mg) is in a domain they know nothing of. We do not need the Holy Spirit to reveal that immorality is wrong, but we do need the Holy Spirit to reveal that the complacency of the natural life has Satan at its basis. Nowadays we have come to the conclusion that a man must be a down-and-out sinner before he needs Jesus Christ to do anything for him; consequently we debase Jesus Christ's salvation to mean merely that He can save the vile and sensual man and lift him into a better life. We quote our Lord's statement that "the Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost" (RV) and misinterpret His meaning by limiting "the lost" to those who are lost in our eyes.

The natural man does not want to be born again. If a man's morality is well within his own grasp and he has enough religion to give the right tone to his natural life, to talk about being born again seems utterly needless. The natural man is not in distress, he is not conscious of conviction of sin, or of any disharmony, he is quite contented and at peace. Conviction of sin is the realisation that my natural life is based on a disposition that will not have Jesus Christ. The Gospel does not present what the natural man wants but what he needs, and the Gospel awakens an intense resentment as well as an intense craving. We will take God's blessings and loving-kindnesses and prosperities, but when it comes to the need of having our disposition altered, there is opposition at once. When we come down to close quarters and God's Spirit tells us we must give up the right to ourselves to Jesus Christ and let Him rule, then we understand what Paul meant when he said that "the carnal mind," which resides in the heart, is "enmity against God."

No man can have his state of mind altered without suffering for it in his body, and that is why men do anything to avoid conviction of sin. When a worldly man who is happy, moral and upright, comes in contact with Jesus Christ, his "beauty," i.e., the perfectly ordered completeness of his nature, is destroyed and that man must be persuaded that Jesus Christ has a better kind of life for him otherwise he feels he had better not have come across Him. If I knew nothing about sin before the Holy Spirit came, then why did He come? If I am peaceful and happy and contented and living my life with my morality well within my own grasp, why does the Holy Spirit need to come in and upset the balance and make me miserable and unfit for anything? It is time we asked ourselves these questions. God's Book gives us the answer. Thank God, we are coming to the end of the shallow presentation of Christianity that makes out that Jesus Christ came only to give us peace. Thousands of people are happy without God in this world, but that kind of happiness and peace is on a wrong level. Jesus Christ came to send a sword through every peace that is not based on a personal relationship to Himself. He came to put us right with God that His own peace might reign.

Satanically

But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. (2 Corinthians 4:3–4)

Paul did not say "the lost" were the drunkards and social pariahs, but those "in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not"—they see nothing whatever in all that Jesus Christ stands for.

If the natural remains united with itself long enough it will lead to a deadly Satanic satisfaction, a blind happiness. The words "diabolical" and "Satanic" do not mean the same. Judas became diabolical: "the devil having already put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray Him" (John 13:2 RV); Peter became "Satanic": "But He turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind Me, Satan" (Matthew 16:23). The Bible holds man responsible for the introduction of Satan. Satan is the representative of the devil, and the devil is the adversary of God in the rule of man. When our Lord came face to face with Satan He dealt with him as representing the attitude man takes up in organising his life apart from any consideration of God. For a thing to be Satanic does not mean that it is abominable and immoral; the Satanically-managed man is absolutely self-governed and has no need of God.

When Satan rules the hearts of natural men under the inspiration of the devil, they are not troubled, they are at peace, entrenched in clean worldliness (cf. Psalm 73), and before God can rule a man's kingdom He must first overthrow this false rule. In the parable in Luke 11:21 our Lord says that "when the strong man fully armed" (Satan) "guardeth his own court, his goods" (i.e., the souls of men) "are in peace" (RV); there is no breaking out into sin and wrongdoing. The one thing the prince of this world will guard against is the incoming of Jesus Christ, the "stronger than he," because "he taketh from him his whole armour wherein he trusted" (RV), The coming of Jesus Christ is not a peaceful thing, it is a disturbing, an overwhelming thing. Am I willing to be born into the realm Jesus Christ is in? If so, I must be prepared for chaos straight off in the realm I am in. The rule which has come in between God and man has to be eclipsed, and Jesus Christ's entering in means absolute chaos concerning the way I have been looking at things, a turning of everything upside down. "Think not that I am come to send peace on the earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matthew 10:34). The old order and the old peace must go, and we cannot get back peace on the old level. Immediately Jesus Christ comes in that peace is gone, and instead there is the sword of conviction. A man does not need the Holy Spirit to tell him that external sins are wrong, ordinary culture and education will do that; but it does take the Holy Spirit to convict us of sin as our Lord defined it. The Holy Spirit is unmistakable in His working, and our Lord said that, "He, when He is come, will convict the world in respect of sin, . . . because they believe not on Me" (John 16:8-9 RV). That is the very essence of sin. If once we have allowed Jesus Christ to upset the equilibrium, holiness is the inevitable result, or no peace for ever.

One of the most cunning travesties of Satan is to say that he is the instigator of drunkenness and external sins. Man himself is responsible for doing wrong things, and he does wrong things because of the wrong disposition that is in him. The true blame for sin lies in the wrong disposition, and the cunning of our nature makes us blame Satan when we should blame ourselves. When men go into external sins Satan is probably as much upset as the Holy Ghost, but for a different reason. Satan knows perfectly well that when men go into external sin and upset their lives, they will want another Ruler, a Saviour, a Deliverer; but as long as he can keep them in peace and unity and harmony apart from God he will do so. The Bible reveals that there is a solidarity of sin, a bond of union, that keeps men together known as "the body of sin"; it is the mutual inheritance of the human race (see Romans 5:12). The Bible also reveals that Satan is anxious to keep that solidarity intact, because whenever men break out into immoral conduct, it disintegrates his kingdom. The one other force that disintegrates the solidarity of sin is the Spirit of God. Never have the idea that a worldling is unhappy, a worldling is perfectly happy, as thoroughly happy as a Christian. The persons who are unhappy are the worldlings or the Christians if they are not at one with the principle that binds them. When a worldling is not a worldling at heart, he is miserable; and when a Christian is not a Christian at heart, he is miserable, he carries his religion like a headache instead of something that is worth having. Remember then, the two things that disintegrate Satan's kingdom—breaking out into acts of sin, and conviction by the Spirit of God. This is the solution of a number of moral problems.

The beginning of calamities from the natural standpoint is when our Lord comes across people. The thing that upsets our natural complacency is a touch from our Lord. It may come in a personal interview (as in John 4), but when it comes it is all up instantly with the old order, we can never get it back. Before the Spirit of God can bring peace of mind He has to clear out the rubbish, and before He can do that He has to give us an idea of what rubbish there is.

Spiritually

But God... even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. (Ephesians 2:5–6)

If all Jesus Christ came to do was to upset me, make me unfit for my work, upset my friendships and my life, produce disturbance and misery and distress, then I wish He had never come. But that is not all He came to do. He came to lift us up to "the heavenly places" where He is Himself. The whole claim of the Redemption of Jesus is that He can satisfy the last aching abyss of the human soul, not hereafter only, but here and now. Satisfaction does not mean stagnation, it means the knowledge that we have the right type of life for our souls. The hymn has it rightly, "Oh, the peace my Saviour gives!" That peace is the deepest thing a human personality can know, it is almighty. The Apostle Paul emphasises the hilarity of life-"Be not drunk with wine, . . . but be filled with the Spirit." Enthusiasm is the idea, intoxicated with the life of God. The healthy pagan and the healthy saint are the ones described in God's Book as hilarious; all in between are diseased and more or less sick. We have no business to be sick unless it is just a preparatory stage towards something better, when God is nursing us through some spiritual illness; but if it is the main characteristic of the life there is something wrong.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit." The knowledge of our own poverty brings us to the moral frontier where Jesus Christ works; then He says, If you ask God, He will give you the Holy Spirit. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" (Luke 11:13). The Holy Spirit is the One who regenerates us into the kingdom to which Jesus Christ belongs. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." The touch that comes is as mysterious as the wind.

The miracle of the creation of Redemption in our soul is that we suddenly feel an insatiable desire for salvation. Our Lord said, "No man can come to Me, except the Father which hath sent Me draw him," and that is the way He draws him. Redemption is the great Reality that is continually creating within us a longing for God.

GOD'S SEARCHING OF A SINCERE SOUL

Intercessory Introspection

Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts.... (Psalm 139:23-24)

It is far more rare to find a sincere soul than one might suppose. No one but a fool or a sincere soul would ever pray this prayer—"Search me, O God," search me right out to the remotest depths, to the innermost recesses of my thoughts and imaginations; scrutinise me through and through until I know that Thou dost know me utterly, that I may be saved from my own ways and brought into Thy way. Any soul who prays that prayer will be answered.

Psalm 139 states for us the profoundest experience of a soul's life with God. It is a marvellous moment in a man's life when he knows he is explored by God. The introspective tendency in us which makes us want to examine ourselves and know the springs of our thoughts and motives takes the form of prayer with the Psalmist. He speaks of God as the Creator of the vast universe outside him, of His omnipotence and omnipresence, but he does not end there. There is something infinitely more mysterious to the Psalmist than the universe outside him, and that is the mystery of his own soul. "There are mountain-peaks in my soul I cannot climb, ocean depths I cannot fathom; there are possibilities within which terrify me, therefore, O God, search me." That is introspective intercession.

We must live scrutinised by God, and if you want to know what the scrutiny of God is like, listen to Jesus Christ: "for from within, out of the heart of men, evil thoughts proceed . . . ," and then follows a rugged catalogue of things few of us know anything about in conscious life, consequently we are apt to be indignant and resent Jesus Christ's diagnosis—"I have never felt like a murderer, or an adulterer, therefore those things cannot be in me." To talk in that way is proof that we are grossly ignorant of ourselves. If we prefer to trust our ignorant innocence we pass a verdict on the only Master of the human heart there is, we tell Him He does not know what He is talking about. The one right thing to do is to listen to Jesus Christ and then hand our hearts over to God to be searched and guarded, and filled with the Holy Spirit, then the wonderful thing is that we never need know and never shall know in actual experience the truth of Jesus Christ's revelation about the human heart. But if we stand on our own rights and wisdom at any second an eruption may occur in our personal life and we shall discover to our unutterable horror that what Jesus said is appallingly true.

We have no business to be ignorant about ourselves. If any of us have come to manhood or womanhood with the idea that we have a holy innocence on the inside, we are desperately deluded. There is no human being on earth with an innocence which is not based on ignorance, and if we have come to the stage of life we are now in with the belief that innocence and purity are the same thing, it is because we have paid no attention to what Jesus Christ said. Purity is something that has been tested and tried, and triumphed; innocence has always to be shielded. When the Holy Spirit comes in He brings into the centre of our personal life the very Spirit that was manifested in the life of the Lord Jesus, viz., Holy Spirit. Jesus Christ has undertaken through His Redemption to put into us a heart so pure that God Almighty can see nothing to censure in it, and the Holy Spirit searches us not only to make us know the possibilities of iniquity in our heart, but to make us "unblameable in holiness" in His sight.

The great cry to-day is, "Fulfil yourself, work out what is in you." If you do, you will work out your own condemnation. But if you let God deal with what is wrong, let Him "presence you with Divinity," you will be able to work out what He works in, which is a totally different thing. The cry to realise ourselves is the cry to keep God out. If we do not know the tremendous depths of possible iniquity in our hearts, it is because we have never been scrutinised by the Holy Ghost; but let Him turn His searchlight right down to the inmost recesses, and the best of us are shuddering on our faces before God. When the Holy Ghost does scrutinise us (and He will not do it if we do not want Him to, this is the day of our option; a time is coming when He will do it whether we want Him to or not, when we will be only too glad to creep anywhere out of the sight of God whose eyes search as a flame of fire), He reveals not only a depth of possible iniquity that makes us shudder, but a height of holiness of which we never dreamed. The great mystic work of the Holy Spirit is in the dim regions of our personality where we cannot go: "And I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thessalonians 5:23). "But no man can get there!" Then was the Apostle Paul mad when he said we could be presented "holy and without blemish [RV] and unreproveable in His sight"? No, the Apostle Paul had been to the Cross of Christ and had learned there a secret which made him say—"God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ," because it is by means of His Cross that Jesus Christ can present us faultless before the throne of God. "Do you mean to say that God can bring the winnowing fan of His Spirit and search out my thoughts and imaginations and find nothing deserving of blame?" That is the meaning of the Atonement as far as our practical experience is concerned; no soul gets there saving by the sovereign grace of God. If we have not caught the meaning of the tremendous moral aspect of the Atonement it is because we have never prayed this prayer, "Search me, O God." Are we sincere enough to ask God to search us, and sincere enough to abide by what His searching reveals?

Impeccable Integrity

But if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, . . . the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin. (1 John 1:7)

If that means cleansing from all sin in conscious experience only, may God have mercy on us. A man who has been made obtuse by sin will say he is not conscious of sin. Cleansing from all sin by the blood of Jesus is far deeper than we can be conscious of, it is cleansing from all sin in the sight of God because the disposition of His Son is working out in every particular, not to our consciousness, but deeper than our consciousness. We are not cleansed more and more from all sin, if we walk in the light, as God is in the light, we are cleansed from all sin. In our consciousness it works with a keen poignant knowledge of what sin is. The great need to-day amongst those of us who profess sanctification is the patience and ability to work out the holiness of God in every detail of our lives. When we are first adjusted to God the Holy Spirit works on the big general lines, then He begins to educate us down to the scruple, ¹⁵ He makes us sensitive over things we never before thought of. No matter what our experience may be we must beware of the curse of being stationary, we have to go on and on "perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

If you have been making a great profession in your religious life but begin to find that the Holy Spirit is scrutinising you, let His searchlight go straight down, and He will not only search you, He will put everything right that is wrong; He will make the past as though it had never been; He will restore the years the cankerworm hath eaten; He will "blot out the handwriting of ordinances that is against you" (RV); He will put His Spirit within you and cause you to walk in His ways; He will make you pure in the deepest recesses of your personality. Thank God, Jesus Christ's salvation is a flesh-and-blood reality!

Who is going to do all this in us? The Lord Jesus Christ. Let Jesus Christ proclaim His Gospel: we can have the very disposition of Jesus imparted to us, and if we have not got it we will have to tell God the reason why. We have to tell God we don't believe He can do it—there are details of our lives He cannot put right, back tracks He cannot clear up, ramifications of evil He cannot touch. Thank God that is a lie! He can. If God cannot do that we have "followed cunningly devised fables." That is where the fight has to be fought—along the line of what Jesus Christ can do in the human soul. Unless God has searched us and cleansed us and filled us with the Holy Spirit so that we are undeserving of censure in His sight, the Atonement has not been applied to our personal experience.

Are we willing to let God scrutinise us, or are we doing that worst of all things, trying to justify ourselves? People say if they are living up to all the light they have, meaning the light of conscience, they are all right. We may be consciously free of sin, but we are not justified on that account; we may be walking in the light of our conscience, but we are not justified on that account either (cf. 1 Corinthians 4:3–4); we are only justified in the sight of God through the Atonement at work in our inner life. God grant we may let His searching scrutiny go right through us until there is nothing God has not searched. We are far too big for ourselves, infinitely too big. The majority of us try to put ourselves in a bandbox,¹⁶ but we cannot cabin and confine our lives. There is a purpose in every life that is in God's keeping of which we know little, but which He will fulfil if we let Him rightly relate us to Himself.

^{16.} bandbox: in Chambers' day, a small, round box made to hold neckbands or collars for shirts; metaphorically, something small, narrow, cloistered, self-contained.

THE NEED TO BE A CHRISTIAN

Never confuse personality with consciousness. Personality is the perplexing factor of my self which continually changes and vet remains the same. All we can deal with in psychology is consciousness, but God does not limit our salvation by our consciousness. The need to be a Christian is not simply that Jesus Christ's salvation may work in our conscious life, but that the unconscious realm of our personality may be protected from supernatural powers of which we know nothing. When the Holy Spirit enters into us He brings the marvellous revelation that God guards the unfathomable part of our personality; He goes to the springs of our personal life which we cannot touch, and prevents our being tampered with and bewitched out of God's purpose in Redemption. We belittle and misrepresent the Redemption if we refer it merely to our conscious life. Many spiritual testimonies get as far as—"Once I was that in conscious life, and now I am this, and Jesus did it." Well, thank God for that, but we are much more than we are conscious of, and if Jesus Christ only came to alter our conscious life, then the Redemption is "much ado about nothing." But when we come to examine the New Testament we find that Redemption does infinitely more than alter our conscious life; it safeguards the unconscious realm which we cannot touch. Our conscious experience is simply the doorway into the only Reality there is, viz., the Redemption. We are not only "presenced with Divinity," but protected by Deity in the depths of personality below the conscious realm.

Piratical Invasions from the Unconscious

Part of our personal life is conscious, but the greater part is unconscious, and every now and again the unconscious part emerges into the conscious and upsets us because we do not know where it comes from or where it leads to, and we get afraid of ourselves. There is a great deal more of "me" I do not know than that I do know. No man knows the springs of his motives or of his will; when we begin to examine ourselves we come to the threshold of the unconscious and cannot go any further. The Psalmist realised this when he prayed, "Search me, O God"; explore me to the beginning of my motives. Below the threshold of consciousness is the subconscious part of our personality which is full of mystery. There are forces in this realm which may interfere with us and we cannot control them, it is with this realm that the Spirit of God deals.

An island of the sea is easily explored, yet it may prove to be but the top of a mountain the greater part of which is hidden under the sea, going down to deeper depths than we can fathom. So our personality is infinitely more than we can be conscious of; consequently we must never estimate ourselves by the part we are conscious of, or be so stupid as to say we are only what we are conscious of. We are all in danger of doing this until we come across things in ourselves that surprise us. People say, "Oh, I can't understand myself!" Of course you cannot. "No one else understands me!" Of course they don't; if they did, we would not be worth understanding. There is only one Being Who understands us, and that is our Creator. We must beware of estimating God's salvation by our experience of it. Our experience is a mere indication in conscious life of an almighty salvation which goes far beyond anything we ever can experience.

Have we ever awakened to the fact that there are forces of evil around us greater than we can control? Jesus Christ by His Redemption not only saves us completely, but keeps us oblivious of the awful dangers there are outside: "the evil one toucheth him not" (RV). We are kept where we are unconscious of the need to be kept. Thank God for His safeguarding, for His salvation which keeps us waking and sleeping, conscious and unconscious, in danger and out of it.

There are supernatural powers and agencies that can play with us like toys whenever they choose unless we are garrisoned by God. The New Testament continually impresses this upon us: "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in the high places." According to the Bible, spiritualism is not a trick, it is a fact. Man can communicate with beings of a different order from his own; he can put himself into a state of subjectivity in which spirits can appear. A medium commits the great crime psychically because he gives himself over to a force the nature of which he does not know. He does great violence to his own rectitude and tampers with the balance of his sanity by putting himself into league with powers the character of which he does not know. Mediumship, whereby unseen spirits talk to men and women, will destroy the basis of moral sanity because it introduces a man into domains he had better leave alone. Drunkenness and debauchery are child's play compared with the peril of spiritualism. There is something uncannily awful about tampering with these supernatural powers, and in the speeding up of these days the necromantic element is increasing. Be on the look out for the manifestations that are not of God; all have the one sign, they ignore Jesus Christ. Beware of the advice: "Yield, give up your will." No man or woman has any right to yield himself or herself to any impression or any influence; immediately they do they are susceptible to all kinds of supernatural powers. There is only one Being to Whom we must yield, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ. Be sure that it is Jesus Christ to whom you yield, then the whole nature is safeguarded for ever.

Pushing Down God's Barriers

When the Holy Spirit comes in He makes us know that there are things we must remain ignorant of. Beware of entering into competition with the Holy Spirit. When we become curious and pry where we have no business to pry, we are eating of the fruit of the tree of which God said, "Thou shall not eat of it." The spiritualistic trend of to-day is an example of this very thing. Men and women are pushing down God's barriers and coming into contact with forces they cannot control. Unless we hand over the keeping of our personality to God to garrison, there are a hundred and one influences which can come into us which we never can control but which will soon control us. The blight of God rests on a man or woman who dares to take any way of knowing what is hidden other than Jesus Christ's way. He is the only One who is "worthy to open the book." If by intellectual curiosity we push away the barriers God has seen fit to put, we shall experience pain and suffering from which God will not protect us. We cannot play the fool with our bodies and souls and hoodwink God. Certain kinds of moral disobedience produce sicknesses which no physical remedy can touch, the only cure is obedience to Jesus Christ. The barriers are placed by a God who is absolutely holy, and He has told us clearly, "Not that way." If we turn to necromancy even in such seemingly ridiculous ways of telling fortunes in teacups or by cards or planchette, we commit a crime against our own souls, we are probing where we have no right to probe. People say, "There's no harm in it." There is all the harm and the backing up of the devil in it. The only One who can open up the profound mysteries of life is God, and He will do it as He sees we can stand it (cf. Deuteronomy 29:29).

Soul is the expression of the personal spirit in the body, and it is the expression of soul that is either good or bad. What we do tells as much as what we are in the final issue. There are two entrances into the soul, viz., the body and the spirit. The body is within our control, the spirit is not, and if our spirit is not under the control of God there is nothing to prevent other spirits communicating through it to the soul and body. It is impossible to guard our spirit, the only One who can guard its entrances is God. If we hand ourselves over to His keeping we shall be kept not only from what we understand as dangers, but from dangers we have never even imagined. The conscious ring of our life is a mere phase; Jesus Christ did not die to save that only; it is the whole personality that is included in the Redemption. We are safeguarded from dangers we know nothing about. Thank God if the unseen realm does not impinge on you. There are people in whom the walls between the seen and unseen are exceedingly thin and they are constantly being tortured; the salvation of Jesus Christ can save them from it all. We are ill-taught if we look for results only in the earthlies when we pray. A praying saint performs far more havoc among the unseen forces of darkness than we have the slightest notion of.

Perils of Self-Ignorance

Who can understand his errors? cleanse Thou me from secret faults. (Psalm 19:12)

Is there some fault God has been checking you about and you have left it alone? Be careful lest it end in a dominant sin. The errors are silent, they creep in on us, and when we stand in the light of Jesus Christ we are amazed to find the conclusions we have come to. The reason is that we have deluded ourselves. This self-security keeps us entirely ignorant of what we really are, ignorant of the things that make the salvation of Jesus Christ necessary. When we say to ourselves-"Oh well, I am no worse than anyone else," that is the beginning; we shall soon produce blindness to our own defects and entrench ourselves around with a fictitious security. Jesus Christ has no chance whatever with the man who has the silent security of self-ignorance. When he hears anyone speak about deliverance from sin, he is untouched— "I have no need to be delivered." Paul says, "If our gospel be hid, it is hid to those in whom the god of this world hath blinded their minds"—blinded to everything Jesus Christ stands for, and a man is to blame for getting there.

For a man to be at peace in his mind, undisturbed and at unity in himself, is a good thing, because in a united personality there is freedom from selfconsciousness; but if that peace and unity are without any consideration of Jesus Christ, it is a peace of death, a peace altogether apart from God, and when the Holy Spirit comes in He comes not as a Comforter, but as a thorough Disturber, and upsets this natural unity. No wonder men will do anything to avoid conviction of sin, anything to keep the searchlight of God out, anything to keep away from morbid introspection. But thank God for the men and women who have come to the end of themselves and who say, "Search me, O God, I cannot live any longer in a vain show," and He will do it. We are driven back every time to our relationship with God; it is the only safe thing.

If the Spirit of God can come into the unconscious part of our personality, the spirit of the devil can come there also. "The devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot" (the personality of Judas) "to betray Him" (John 13:2); and Jesus said of Judas, "Have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil? He spake of Judas Iscariot the son of Simon" (John 6:70–71). Some people seem to think it is an amazingly clever thing to doubt Jesus Christ; it is an evil thing. Whenever the evil personality of unbelief asked the Lord anything, He never answered; but when the heart cries out, He answers immediately.

"And He, when He is come, will convict . . . of sin"—because men are immoral?—No, "because they believe not on Me" (John 16:8-9 RV). These words reveal the very essence of sin. Sin is not measured by a creed or social order: sin is measured by a Person, Jesus Christ. When the Holy Spirit comes in He is unmistakable in the direction of His work, He goes direct to the thing that keeps us from believing in Jesus Christ. The work of the Holy Spirit is to make us realise the meaning of the Redemption. As long as we believe it on the outside it does not upset our complacency, but we don't want to be perturbed on the inside. Paul says that some people have a "foolish heart"—"When they knew God, they glorified Him not as God" (Romans 1:21). In actual life they were amazingly shrewd and calculating, but their hearts were foolish towards God. Beware of turning your back on what you know is true because you do not want it to be real. Jesus Christ never says that a man is damned because he is a sinner; the condemnation is when a man sees what Jesus Christ came to do and will not let Him do it. That is the critical moment, "the judgement" (John 3:19 RV), in a man's life.

There are possibilities below the threshold of our life which no one knows but God. We cannot understand ourselves or know the spring of our motives, consequently our examination of ourselves can never be unbiased or unprejudiced. We are only safe in taking an estimate of ourselves from our Creator, not from our own introspection. But although introspection cannot profoundly satisfy us, we must not conclude that introspection is wrong. Introspection is right, because it is the only way we shall discover that we need God. Introspection without God leads to insanity. The people who have no tendency to introspect are described as "dead in trespasses and sins," quite happy, quite contented, quite moral, all they want is easily within their own grasp; but they are dead to the world to which Jesus Christ belongs, and it takes His voice and His Spirit to awaken them. If we estimate our life by the abundance of things which we possess consciously, there will come a drastic awakening one day because we shall have to leave it all at death. We shall have to leave this body, which keeps the personal spirit in conscious life, and go clean through the threshold of consciousness to where we do not know. It is a desperate thing to die if we have only been living in the conscious realm.

These aspects reveal the need to be a Christian as an enormous need. Thank God for the amazing security of His salvation! It keeps us not only in conscious life but from dangers of which we know nothing, unseen and hidden dangers, subtle and desperate.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE SOUL

The Soul in Sinful Badness—Working Inwards

(a) Gross Inquisitiveness

And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was a delight to the eyes, and that the tree was to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat. (Genesis 3:6 RV)

There are some things of which we must be ignorant, because knowledge of them comes in no other way than by disobedience to God. In the life originally designed for Adam it was not intended that he should be ignorant of evil, but that he should know evil through understanding good. Instead, he ate of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil and thereby knew evil positively and good negatively; consequently none of us knows the order God intended. The knowledge of evil that comes through the Fall has given human nature a bias of insatiable curiosity about the bad, and only when we have been introduced into the Kingdom of God do we know good and evil in the way God constituted man to know them.

If we want to discover things in the material universe we must be intellectually curious; but for finding things out scientifically it does not matter whether a man is good or bad. It is right to be curious about the natural world; if we are not intellectually curious we shall never learn anything. God never encourages laziness. But when we come to the domain Jesus Christ lives in, curiosity is of no avail. The only way to find out things in the moral universe is by obedience.

The philosophy of life is based on the topsy-turvy reasoning of going into things in order to find out about them, which is like saying you have to go into the mud before you can know what clean water is. "I must know the world"—if you do, you will only know good by contrast with evil. Modern teaching implies that we must be grossly experienced before we are of any use in the world. That is not true. Jesus Christ knew good and evil by the life which was in Him, and God intended that man's knowledge of evil should come in the same way as to our Lord, viz., through the rigorous integrity of obedience to God. When a man is convicted of sin he knows how terrific is the havoc sin has wrought in him and he knows with what a mighty salvation he has been visited by God; but it is only by obedience to the Holy Spirit that he begins to know what an awful thing sin is.

A great deal of our social work to-day is a history of moral house-breaking; men and women have gone into work to which God never sent them, consequently their moral and spiritual integrity has been violated. Work is taken up with the absurd deification of pluck—"This thing has got to be done, and I must do it," and they damage their souls in doing it because God is not there to protect. But when a man or woman is called of God, the facts he or she has to face never upset the equilibrium of the life because they are garrisoned by the presence of God. Too often when merely moral men or women go into bad surroundings they become soiled, no matter what their moral standard is; but the men and women who have been made pure by the Holy Ghost are kept like the light, unsullied.

(b) Growing Iniquity

And he said, . . . Hast thou eaten of the tree, whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldest not eat? . . . (Genesis 3:11–12; see Jude 4, 10)

Every child born of natural generation is innocent, but it is the innocence of ignorance. Naturally we are in an impaired state, and when our innocence is turned into knowledge we find to our humiliation how tremendously impaired it is. It is the ignorant innocence of determinedly being without the knowledge of God (Romans 1:18-23). It is safer to trust God's revelation than our own innocence. Jesus Christ is either the supreme Authority on the human heart or He is not worth listening to, and He said: "For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed ...," and then comes that very ugly catalogue. Jesus did not say, "Into the human heart these things are injected," but, "from within, out of the heart of men all these evil things proceed." If we trust our innocent ignorance to secure us, it is likely that as life goes on there will come a burst-up from underneath into our conscious life which will reveal to us that we are uncommonly like what Jesus Christ said.

Iniquity means turning out of the straight. Whenever anything begins to turn you out of the straight, stop and get it put right, no matter what else suffers. If you don't, you will grow in iniquity, and if you grow in iniquity you will call iniquity integrity; sensuality spirituality, and ultimately the devil, God. The most terrible verdict on the human soul is that it no longer believes in purity, and no man gets there without being himself to blame. There is such a thing as "Paradise Lost." The gates can never again be opened in this life, they are shut as inevitably as God shuts anything.

(c) Great Independence

And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as God, knowing good and evil. (Genesis 3:4–5 RV; see Genesis 3:22)

Adam was intended by God to take part in his own development by a series of moral choices, to sacrifice his natural life to God by obedience and thereby transform it into a spiritual life. Instead, he deliberately ate of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, and thereby became god over himself (Genesis 3:5). The characteristic of sin is independence of God—"I can look after myself; I know exactly how far to go. I intend to develop my life without God—why shouldn't I?" Whenever we say, "Why shouldn't I?" we tell Jesus Christ to retire and we take our life into our own hands, and instead of working from within and manifesting the beauty of holiness, we work inwards and become more and more self-centred, harder, and more indifferent to external things.

The knowledge of evil that came through the Fall gives a man a broad mind, but instead of instigating him to action it paralyses his action. Men and women whose minds are poisoned by gross experience of evil are marvellously generous with regard to other people's sins; they argue in this way—"To know all is to pardon all." Every bit of their broadmindedness paralyses their power to do anything. They know good only by contrast with evil, which is the exact opposite of God's order. When a man knows good and evil in the way God intended he should he becomes intolerant of evil, and this intolerance shows itself in an intense activity against evil. Jesus Christ never tolerated sin for one moment, and when His nature is having its way in us the same intolerance is shown. The marvel of the grace of God is that He can take the strands of evil and twistedness out of a man's mind and imagination and make him simple towards God. Restoration through the Redemption of Jesus Christ makes a man simple, and simplicity always shows itself in action. There is nothing simple in the human soul or in human life. The only simple thing is the relationship of the soul to Jesus Christ, that is why the Apostle Paul says, "I fear, lest by any means, . . . your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ."

The Soul in Spiritual Beauty—Working Outwards

(a) Golden Ignorance

And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. (Genesis 2:7; see Luke 2:40, 52)

The presentation of true Christian experience brings us face to face with spiritual beauty; a beauty which can never be forced or imitated, because it is a manifestation from within of a simple relationship to God that is being worked out all the time. There is nothing simple saving a man's relation to God in Christ, and that relationship must never be allowed to be complicated. Our Lord's Childhood expresses this spiritual beauty, "And the child grew, and waxed strong, becoming [mg] full of wisdom. . . . And Jesus advanced in wisdom and age [mg]" (RV). The great characteristic of our Lord's life was that of "golden ignorance"; there were things He did not know and that He refused to know. Jesus Christ developed in the way God intended human beings to develop, and He exhibited the kind of life we ought to live when we have been born from above (RV mg). "But," you say, "how am I to live a life like Jesus Christ? I have not the 'golden ignorance' He had; I have a heredity I had no say in, I am not holy nor likely to be." The marvel of the Redemption is that Jesus Christ can put into any man His own hereditary disposition of holiness, and all the standards He gives are based on that disposition. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born from above [RV mg]" (John 3:7). The characteristic of a child is innocence, but remember there is a difference between the innocence of an ordinary child and the innocence of the Babe of Bethlehem. Natural innocence is based on ignorance, and as life goes on things awaken and prove that innocence is not purity, it is not based on an unsullied foundation. Profoundly speaking, a child is not pure, and yet the innocence of a child charms us because it makes visible all that we understand by purity.

(b) Growing Integrity

And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die. (Genesis 2:16–17; see 2 Corinthians 11:3)

Integrity means the unimpaired state of anything. The "golden ignorance" manifested in our Lord's Childhood and Boyhood was unimpaired when He reached Manhood and was manifested in a growing integrity. Jesus Christ carried out all that Adam failed to do, and He did it in the simple way of obedience to His Father. It is not the passing of the years that matures the life of the Son of God in us, but obedience. As we obey we find that all the power of God is at our disposal, and we too can grow in spiritual beauty. Are we humble and obedient, learning as Jesus learned, or are we hurrying into experiences we have no right to? If we have to find reasons for doing what we do, we should not do it. The life of a child is one of simple obedience. We grow spiritually by obeying God through the words of Jesus being made spirit and life to us, and by paying attention to where we are, not to whether we are growing or not. We grow spiritually as our Lord grew physically, by a life of simple, unobtrusive obedience. If we do not obey God's Word and pay attention to the circumstances He has engineered for us, we shall not grow in spiritual beauty but will become lop-sided; our integrity will be impaired by something of the nature of inordinate lust. Remember, lust can be spiritual. Lust disputes the throne of God in us—"I have set my mind to this, or that, and I must have it at once." That will lead to gross experience. It means there is some desire, some inordinate affection or imagination we are not bringing into captivity to the obedience of Christ.

The soul in spiritual beauty must be a born-again soul, i.e., something has come into it from without. Luke 1:35 ("wherefore also that which is to be born shall be called holy, the Son of God," RV mg) is the symbol of what happens when the Holy Ghost comes into us, our natural life is made the mother of the Son of God. We have to nourish the life of the Son of God in us, and we do it by bringing our natural life into accordance with His life and transforming it into a spiritual life by obedience.

(c) Grand Invincibility

And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: and he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. (Genesis 3:15 RV; see Romans 16:19–20)

When we begin our life with God, we wish He would make it impossible for us to go wrong. If God did, our obedience would cease to be of value. When God created man, He put into his hands the free choice of good or evil, and that choice is there still, and the very test develops the character. The basis of life is antagonism in every domain, physical, mental, moral and spiritual, we only maintain health by fighting. Naturally we are not virtuous, but innocently ignorant. Disinclination to sin is not virtue, any more than innocence is purity. The danger is to make a virtue of necessity. It is fighting that produces virtue, moral stability on the inside. Virtue has character at the back of it, it has been tested and tried and has triumphed. Spiritual stability within produces holiness. Our Lord was invincible as a Man: "Who is worthy to open the book? . . . Worthy art Thou to take the book, and to open the seals thereof" (Revelation 5:2, 9 RV). Jesus Christ proved Himself worthy, not only in the domain of God which we do not know, but in the domain of man which we do know. By means of His Redemption Jesus Christ makes us the sons and daughters of God, and we have to "put on the new man," in accordance with the life of the Son of God formed in us, and as we do we become invincible— "more than conquerors through Him that loved us."

"I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple unto that which is evil" (RV). The Apostle Paul's counsel fits on exactly with Genesis 3:15. By obeying the life that was in Him, Jesus Christ manifested the wisdom of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove. If we know good only by contrast with evil, we shall have the devilishness of the serpent through gross experience. But when we know good and evil in the way Jesus Christ knew them, all our subtle wisdom is on the side of the good and our dove-like nature is towards evil. When we are born again we have to obey the Spirit of God, and as we draw on the life of Jesus and learn to assimilate and carry out what He speaks to us, we shall grow in ignorance of certain things and be alive and alert only to what is God's will for us.

THE TEMPLE OF GOD

Desecration

And Jesus went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold and them that bought [RV] in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers.... (Mark 11:15; cf. John 2:13–17)

We bring to the New Testament a sentimental conception of our Lord; we think of Him as the "meek and mild and gentle Jesus" and make it mean that He was of no practical account whatever. Our Lord was "meek and lowly in heart," yet watch Him in the Temple, meekness and gentleness were not the striking features there. We see instead a terrible Being with a whip of small cords in His hands, overturning the money-changers' tables and driving out men and cattle. Is He the "meek and gentle Jesus" there? He is absolutely terrifying; no one dare interfere with Him. Why could He not have driven them out in a gentler way? Because passionate zeal had eaten Him up, with a detestation of everything that dared to call His Father's honour into disrepute.

"Make not my Father's house an house of merchandise"—the deification of commercial enterprise. Everything of the nature of wrong must go when Jesus Christ begins to cleanse His Father's house.

If you have been laid hold of by the Spirit of God don't think it strange concerning the spring-cleaning God is giving you, and don't clamour for anything because it will have to go. The setting apart of my body by the Holy Ghost for a temple of God is a terror to everything in me that is not of God. Sensuality and sordidness lurk about the bodily temple until

Jesus Christ cleanses it. Sensuality is that which gratifies my particular senses, it is the working of my body in connection with external circumstances whereby I begin to satisfy myself. Sensuality may be unutterably disgusting or it may be amazingly refined, but it is based on the wrong thing and has to go; it can have nothing to do with the temple of God, i.e., with man as God created him.

My body is designed to be a "temple of the Holy Ghost," and it is up to me to stand for the honour of Jesus Christ in my bodily practices. When the Spirit of God comes in, He cleanses the temple and does not let one darling sin lurk. The one thing Jesus Christ insists on in my bodily life is chastity. As individuals we must not desecrate the temple of God by tampering with anything we ought not to tamper with; if we do, the scourge of God will come. Immediately the Spirit of God comes in we begin to realise what it means—everything that is not of God has to be turned clean out. People are surprised and say, "I was told God would give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him; well, I asked for the Holy Spirit and expected that He would bring me joy and peace, but I have had a terrible time ever since." That is the sign He has come, He is turning out the "money-changers" and the "cattle," i.e., the things that were making the temple into a trafficking place for self-realisation. We soon find why the Gospel can never be welcome. As long as we speak winsomely about the "meek and gentle Jesus," and the beautiful ideas the Holy Spirit produces when He comes in, people are captivated, but that is not the Gospel. The Gospel does away with any other ground to stand on than that of the Atonement. Speak about the peace of heaven and the joy of the Lord, and men will listen to you; but tell them that the Holy Spirit has to come in and turn out their claim to their right to themselves, and instantly there is resentment—"I can do what I like with my body; I can go where I choose." The majority of people are not blackguards and criminals, living in external sin, they are clean-living and respectable, and it is to such that the scourge of God is the most terrible thing because it reveals that the natural virtues may be in idolatrous opposition to God.

". . . and the seats of them that sold doves." I may not be giving way to sensuality and sordidness, but I may be crooning a dirge of self-pity—doves in a cage are always cooing—"Oh it is so hard for me, you don't know what I have to give up; doing the will of God is such an enormous cost." Consecration by the Spirit of God means merciless dealing with that kind of thing, He has no sympathy with it. How can we be of the slightest use to God if we are always whining about our own condition? The compromise arising from self-pity is quite sufficient to extinguish the whole purpose of God in a life.

"... and would not suffer that any men should carry any vessel through the temple." The Spirit of God will not allow me to use my body for my own convenience; the whole limit must be God's. I am not to serve my own ends with my body, I am to serve the ends of Jesus Christ and be a devoted disciple of His. Lust (the spirit of—I must have this thing at once) can have no part or lot in the house of God. So many spend their time in educating themselves for their own convenience—"I want to educate myself, and realise myself." I must not use the temple of God for the convenience of self-love; my body must be preserved from trafficking for myself. One of the hardest scourges of God comes just here.

"And He taught, saying unto them, Is it not written, My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer? but ye have made it a den of thieves." Have I been doing this? What has my soul been busy with during this past year? What have I been thinking in my mind and imagination? I may have been talking about holiness, but what has it meant to me? Is my body the temple of the Holy Ghost and am I taking care to see that it is? Is my imagination, and reasoning, and thinking regarded as the house of God? or am I making it a house of merchandise—making it more for me and mine? wanting to go through this in order to grasp something for myself? God does not use us as an exhibition of what He can do. Jesus Christ said, "I am . . . the Truth"; therefore the temple of my body must be consecrated to Him. The Temple was to be the house of prayer for all the nations, and my personal life is to be the same. God will bring some extraordinary people to traffic through our temple. Think how we have trafficked through Him! Natural affinities do not count for anything in the spiritual life, but only the affinities produced by the Spirit of God (cf. 1 John 1:7).

Desolation

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. (Matthew 23:37–38)

The historic Temple was twice cleansed by our Lord; then when He came again to Jerusalem He no longer spoke of it as "My Father's house," but, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." A terrible pronouncement, and a terrible possibility in our own lives. It is appallingly true that we may get to the place where Jesus can no longer say of us, "My Father's house"; where He can no longer give us the benefit of scourging and cleansing, but can only retire, a weeping Christ, over our wilfulness. "How often would I..., and ye would not!" You have spurned and despised every messenger I sent, and now I say unto you, "Ye shall not see Me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Is yours a desolated life, deserted in soul? Then in plain honesty don't blame your father or mother or anyone in your family; don't blame the fact that you had no education, or that someone thwarted you when you were sixteen, or that you were heartbroken when you were twenty-four, or had a business disaster when you were thirty. These things may be facts, but they are not to the point. Nothing that transpires outside me can make the tiniest difference to me morally unless I choose to let it. The desolation described by Jesus was brought on by the people of God themselves and by them alone. Is God saying to you, "You have spurned and hated and murdered My messengers"? If so, it will be a painful thing for your desolated soul to say—"Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord"—Blessed is the one who stabs and hurts and disillusions me as to where I am.

A sinner who has never been cleansed by the direct act of the Lord may hear the Gospel and receive the Holy Spirit, and He will do all the cleansing. Compare that condition with one who has backslidden, one who had been cleansed by God, but has allowed the traffic to get back, sensuality, self-seeking, self-interest; the "cattle" are all back, the "doves" and the "money-changers' tables," with a deepened and increased element of thieving. It is no longer making more for me and mine, it is a downright thieving of God's time and opportunities, and God's sacredness in other lives. That is what a spiritual thief does. Such a soul has to come back to God in desolation. It is no use to tell the backslider to receive the Holy Spirit, he cannot; the Holy Spirit will not be received by him; he has to come back to God in desolation. In the parable of the two sons some of the elements in the parables of the lost sheep and the lost coin are missed out—the shepherd goes to seek the lost sheep, and the woman searches for the lost coin; but the father does not go to the far country, the son has to leave the pigs and what pigs eat and come back; and if you have backslidden you will have to do the same. "O Israel, return unto the LORD thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity. Take with you words, and return unto the LORD: say unto Him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously [mg]" (RV). Take with you words and say, "By mine iniquity have I fallen"—by lust, by worldliness, by self-interest, you know exactly what it is. You have been trying to find comfort here and there and you will never get it; your soul is night, your heart is steel; you have spurned and trodden under and despised God's messengers, and you will only see God when you say, "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord." Then says God-"I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely; for mine anger is turned away from him" (Hosea 14:4 RV).

Dedication

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. (1 Corinthians 3:16–17)

Am I prepared to recognise that my body is a temple of the Holy Ghost? You say, "I did not know there were so many things in my life unsuited to the temple of God." Then let God turn them out—"I don't know whether He will." You do. Cannot you tell when Jesus Christ lays His scourge on the back of the thing that should not be there? Never for one moment sympathise with anyone who says, "I don't know how to get to God." There is no one in the world more easy to get to than God. Only one thing prevents us from getting there, and that is the refusal to tell ourselves the truth. Am I prepared to receive the Holy Spirit? prepared to recognise that my body and soul and spirit are meant to be "presenced with Divinity"? Jesus Christ did not live and die to be our Example only, but that He might put us in the place where He is by means of His wonderful Atonement. Reverence your own body and soul and spirit for this one purpose, and reverence everyone else's, for the same purpose.

Dedication means setting apart to some sacred purpose. The historic Temple was to be "the house of prayer for all the nations" (RV), and my body and soul and spirit is to be God's house of prayer, preserved for devotion. I have to realise that my body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, the place where the work of intercession is carried on. Prayer based on the Redemption creates what could not be until the prayer is offered. The Spirit needs the nature of a believer as a shrine in which to offer His intercessions. My personality, as far as I am conscious of it, and a great deal more than I am conscious of, is the shrine of the Holy Ghost. Have I recognised that it is? If I have, I shall be amazingly careful to keep it undefiled for Him. I am responsible before God for conducting my body as the temple of the Holy Ghost. Am I doing it, or is my body dictating to God, telling Him what it must do? If I only want God to keep my body healthy, He never will; I have to govern and rule my body as a temple of the Holy Ghost. "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof." When I become a Christian I have exactly the same body as before, but I have to see that my members which were used as "servants of sin" are now used as "servants of righteousness." The Apostle Paul tells us how it is done; he says, "I keep under my body," I "buffet" it (RV), and make it obey, until bodily senses and spiritual intuitions work together smoothly and naturally. Our bodies are not our shame, but our glory, and if we keep them as a temple of the Holy Ghost we shall find that the life of Jesus will be manifested in our mortal flesh.

We have to recognise that our personal life is meant for Jesus Christ; that we have been designed not for ourselves but for our Lord and Master. "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me." How significant is our Lord's insistence on His own Person in relation to human destiny. The modern jargon is all for self-realisation; we educate ourselves for the purpose of self-realisation, we select our friendships for selfrealisation purposes. Jesus says, "Whosoever shall lose his life for My sake"—deliberately fling it away-"shall find it" (RV). The one great dominant recognition is that my personal self belongs to Jesus Christ. The counterfeit is giving ourselves as devotees to a cause. Thousands of people are losing their life for the sake of a cause; this is perilously wrong because it is so nearly right. Anything that rouses us to act on the line of principles instead of a relationship to a person fosters our natural independence and becomes a barrier to yielding to Jesus Christ. Have we recognised that our body is a temple of the Holy Ghost, or are we jabbering busybodies, so taken up with Christian work that we have no time for the Christ whose work it is, no time for Him in the morning, no time for Him at night, because we are so keen on doing the things that are called by His Name? What we have to watch to-day is the competition of Causes against devotion to Jesus Christ. One life yielded to God at all costs is worth thousands only touched by God. "Let him... take up his cross, and follow Me." What is the cross? The cross is the deliberate recognition of what my personal life is for, viz., to be given to Jesus Christ;

I have to take up that cross daily and prove that I am no longer my own. Individual independence has gone, and all that is left is personal passionate devotion to Jesus Christ through identification with His Cross. "And ye are not your own; for ye are [KJV] bought with a price: glorify God therefore in your body" (1 Corinthians 6:19–20 RV).

ARRIVING AT MYSELF

By the Surgery of Providence

But when he came to himself... (Luke 15:17 RV)

It is difficult to realise that it is God who arranges circumstances for the whole mass of human beings; we come to find, however, that in the Providence of God there is, as it were, a surgical knife for each one of us individually, because God wants to get at the things that are wrong and bring us into a right relationship to Himself. At first we trust our ignorance and call it innocence; we trust our innocence and call it purity, until God in His mercy surrounds us with providences which act as an alchemy transmuting things and showing us our real relation to ourselves. To say, "Oh, I'm sick of myself," is a sure sign that we are not. When we really are sick of ourselves we will never say so, but will gladly come to the end of ourselves. So long as we say, "I'm tired of myself," it is a sign that we are profoundly interested in ourselves.

(a) The Sin of Self-Importance

Father, give me the portion of thy substance that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living. (Luke 15:12 RV)

This is a picture of one who has become spiritually independent; the portion of goods from the Father has been received, there has been a real experience of God's grace, but there is the letter "I" about it, a self-assertive determination to carry things out in my own way. The most powerful type of spiritual delusion is produced in this way; it is based on ignorance of what we should do with the substance the Father has given us: we should devote it absolutely to Him. If we forget this we are certainly in danger of the sin of self-importance. It begins with the realisation that God does do His recreating work through us if we are children of His—"Yes, God did use me," you say. God will use anything or anyone (cf. Matthew 7:21–23). Unless there is abandonment to the Lord Jesus self-importance will always be inclined to utilise God's blessing for its own ends. No man can abandon to Jesus Christ without an amazing humiliation to his own self-importance. We are all tremendously important until the Holy Ghost takes us in hand, then we cease to be important and God becomes all-important.

(b) The Sordidness of Self-Indulgence

And not many days after, the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country; and there he wasted his substance with riotous living. . . . (Luke 15:13 RV)

The soul that has claimed its portion and become spiritually independent may ultimately be degraded into feeding pigs and eating with them. More awful things are said about backsliding than about any other sin. If we do not maintain a walk in accordance with the perception given, we shall fall as degradingly low as we were high before. The depth of degradation is measured by the height of attainment. Don't deal with it on the surface and say, "I'm not built that way, I have none of those sordid tastes." The nature of any dominating lust is that it keeps us from arriving at a knowledge of ourselves. For instance, a covetous man will believe he is very generous. Thank God for the surgery of providence by means of which He deals with these absurdities. The way God brings us to know ourselves is by the kind of people He brings round us. What we see to condemn in others is either the discernment of the Holy Ghost or the reflection of what we are capable of ourselves. We always notice how obtuse other people are before we notice how obtuse we ourselves are. If we see meanness in others, it is because we ourselves are mean¹⁸ (Romans 2:1). If we are inclined to be contemptuous over the fraud in others it is because we are frauds ourselves. We have to see ourselves as God sees us, and when we do it keeps us in the right place—"My God, was I ever like that to Thee? so opinionated and conceited, so set on my own ends, so blind to myself?" These things, which are most unpalatable, are true, nevertheless. Beware of any belief which makes you self-indulgent; it comes from the pit however beautiful it sounds. It is an indication of a wrong relationship that does not spring from the attitude of abandon; and we become perverse and remain ignorant of the fact that we need to be guarded by God.

(c) The Sorrow of Self-Introspection

But when he came to himself he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish here with hunger! (Luke 15:17 RV)

There is no pain on earth to equal the pain of wounded self-love. Unrequited love is bad enough, but wounded self-love is the cruellest thing in human life because it shifts the whole foundation of the life. The prodigal son had his self-love wounded; he was full of shame and indignation because he had sunk to such a level. There was remorse, but no repentance yet, no thought of his father.

"I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight: I am no more worthy to be called thy son. . . . And he arose, and came to his father." That is repentance. The surgery of Providence had done its work, he was no longer deluded about himself. A repentant soul is never allowed to remain long without being gripped by the love of God.

Man, what is this, and why art thou despairing? God shall forgive thee all but thy despair.

Let the surgery of providence drive you straight to God. The Spirit of God works from the standpoint of God, i.e., from a standpoint inconceivable to the natural man. The words "miraculous" and "supernatural" are disliked to-day through the influence of modern psychology on spiritual work, i.e., the attempt to define on psychical lines, materialistically psychical lines, how God works in a soul. The surgery of the providence of God will break up all ignorance of ourselves. It is impossible for a human being to guard his unconscious personality, only God can do it. If we have not abandoned to Jesus Christ we are likely to be trapped on every hand by our complete ignorance of ourselves, and panic will result. Panic leads us away from the control of God and leaves us not only beyond our own control but possibly under the control of other forces. The one safeguard is abandonment to the Lord Jesus, receiving His Spirit, and obeying Him.

By the Surprises of Personality

And the glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them; that they may be one, even as We are one. (John 17:22)

(a) My Right to My Individual Self

If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me. (Matthew 16:24 RV)

The natural is not sinful, neither is it spiritual; the ruling disposition of my personality makes it either sinful or spiritual. The natural life and individuality are practically one and the same. Individuality is the characteristic of a child, it is the natural husk of personality and it is there by God's creation to preserve the personal life; but if individuality does not become transfigured by the grace of God, it becomes objectionable, egotistical and conceited, interested only in its own independence. When natural independence merges into independence of God it becomes sin; and sin isolates and destroys and ultimately damns the personal life. Jesus Christ lavs His axe at the root of independence. There is nothing dearer to the heart of the natural man than independence. Wherever there is authority, I go against it in order to show I am independent; I insist on my right to myself, my right to an independent opinion. That spirit does not fit in with Jesus Christ at all. Independence and pride are esteemed by the natural man, but Jesus says, "that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God."

The statements of Jesus about discipleship produce embarrassment in the natural man: "From that time many of His disciples went back, and walked no more with Him" (John 6:66). If we are to be disciples of Jesus Christ, our independent right to our individual self must go, and go altogether. We evade the claims of Jesus by saying they have a mystical meaning and we try to get away from their intensely practical rugged meaning. "If any man would come after Me," said Jesus, "let him deny himself" (RV), i.e., deny his right to his individual self. Our Lord always mentions the most intimate relationships in connection with discipleship, relationships which make our human life what it is by the creation of God, and He implies that any one of these relationships may enter into competition in some form or other with His call, and if they do, He says it must be prompt obedience to Himself. It is not only sin that awakens resentment in the natural heart of man to the claims of Jesus Christ, but individuality which has been abused by the disposition of sin. The Holy Spirit continually urges us to sign away our right to our individual self to Jesus. "Learn of Me," says Jesus, "for I am meek and lowly in heart." How few of us do learn of Him! We cling to our individuality like a drowning man to a straw—"Of course God will recognise my individual peculiarisms and prejudices." Jesus Christ pays attention to one thing only—"If you would be My disciple, deny your right to yourself." Individual peculiarisms are excrescences belonging to the husk of the personality and are the things that produce all the difficulty. When the disposition of sin has been dealt with by identification with the Death of Jesus, the natural individual life still remains. Individuality must be transfigured by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and that means a sword going through the natural. Over and over again the Holy Spirit brings us to the place which in evangelical language is called "full surrender." Remember what full surrender is. It is not giving up this thing and that, but the deliberate giving up of my right to my individual self. As long as we are slaves to our ideas of individuality we distort the presentation of our Lord's teaching about discipleship.

(b) The Recognition of My Personal Self He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for My sake shall find it. (Matthew 10:39)

We have to recognise that our personal life is meant for Jesus Christ. The modern jargon is for self-realisation—"I must save my life": Jesus Christ says, "whosoever shall lose his life for My sake shall find it." The cross is the deliberate recognition of what our personal self is for, viz., to be given to Jesus, and we take up that cross daily and prove we are no longer our own. Whenever the call is given for abandon to Jesus Christ, people say it is offensive and out of taste. The counterfeit of abandon is that misleading phrase "Christian service." I will spend myself for God, I will do anything and everything but the one thing He asks me to do, viz., give up my right to myself to Him. "But surely Christian service is a right thing?" Immediately we begin to say that, we are off the track. It is the right Person, the Lord Jesus Christ, not the right thing: don't stop short of the Lord Himself—"for My sake." The great dominating recognition is that my personal self belongs to Jesus. When I receive the Holy Spirit, I receive not a possible oneness with Jesus Christ, but a real intense oneness with Him. The point is, will I surrender my individual life entirely to Him? It will mean giving up not only bad things, but things which are right and good (cf. Matthew 5:29–30). If you have to calculate what you are willing to give up for Jesus Christ, never say that you love Him. Jesus Christ asks us to give up the best we have got to Him, our right to ourselves. There is only this one crisis, and in the majority of lives it has never been reached, we are brought up to it again and again, and every time we go back. Self-realisation must be renounced in order that Jesus Christ may realise Himself in us.

(c) The Realisation of Christian Self

I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but He that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. (Matthew 3:11)

This is neither the individual self, nor the personal self, but the Christian self. ". . . that they may be one, even as We are one." How is this oneness to come about? By the baptism of the Holy Ghost and in no other way. When the Spirit of Jesus comes into me He comes into my personal spirit and makes me incandescent with God. The individual peculiarisms are seen no longer but only the manifestation of oneness with God. One person can merge with another person without losing his identity; but an individual remains definitely segregated from every other individual. When the disciples were baptised by the Holy Ghost they became witnesses to Jesus (see Acts 1:8; 4:13). When a man falls in love his personality emerges and he enters into relationship with another personality. Love is not anything for me at all; love is the deliberate giving of myself right out to another, the sovereign preference of my person for another person. The idea, I must have this person for myself, is not love, but lust. Lust counterfeits love in the same way that individuality counterfeits personality. The realisation of the Christian self means that Jesus Christ is manifested in my natural life—not Christian sentiment, but Christian self. Individuality is not lost, it is transfigured by identification with the Person of Jesus.

Is there any use in beating about the bush? We call ourselves Christians, what does our Christianity amount to practically? Has it made any difference to my natural individual life? It cannot unless I deliberately give up my right to myself to Jesus, and as His disciple begin to work out the personal salvation He has worked in. Independence must be blasted right out of a saint. God's providence seems to pay no attention whatever to our individual ideas because He is after only one thing—"that they may be one, even as We are one." It may look like a thorough breaking up of the life, but it will end in a manifestation of the Christian self in oneness with God. Sanctification is the work of Christ in me, the sign that I am no longer independent, but completely dependent upon Him. Sin in its essential working is independence of God: personal dependence upon God is the attitude of the Holy Ghost in my soul.

The Saints in the Disaster of Worldliness

Here is the patience of the saints, they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus. (Revelation 14:12 RV)

The language of the Book of Revelation is easily misunderstood. For instance, when we use the word "beast" we mean something particularly offensive to our sensibilities; the "beast" in the Book of Revelation is anything but offensive; he is not an immoral beast, socially understood, but a beast from God's standpoint.

The Patience of the Enshrined Life of God

Here is the patience of the saints.

The revelation of God in the Bible works in a twofold way: first the Incarnate Fact, our Lord Jesus Christ; second, the interpretation of that Fact enshrined in the lives of those who are "called to be saints." A saint is one in whom the life of Jesus Christ is formed.

The description given in Revelation 14:9–11 is the description of prosperous worldliness such as has never been seen before, but from God's standpoint it is a moral disaster, and I should say we are very near the type of civilised life that this refers to. What is described in the climax is true in every stage until the climax is reached. After the War²⁰ this combine of everything, in which it will be impossible to have religion independent of an organisation, or business independent of a federation, will take place.

(a) In the Perversion of Religion

If any man worshippeth the beast and his image, and receiveth a mark on his forehead, or upon his hand...(RV)

This is the description of a man who has given the best he has got to the ruling power that gives him what he wants. If he is consecrated entirely there, he will meet with undoubted prosperity. He receives "a mark on his forehead, or upon his hand" (symbols of thought and grasp), a mark of the time in which he lives, cut off from everything other than the present order of things. The worship that should be given to God is given to "the beast and his image." The saint has to endure, keeping "the word of My patience," maintaining the enshrined life of God in the midst of this perversion of religion. We can always recognise the mark of the beast if we put this one simple test—was it necessary for Jesus Christ to have lived and died to produce that attitude to life?

(b) In the Punishment of Revelation

... he also shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is mingled unmixed in the cup of His anger. (Revelation 14:10 RV)

—intoxicated by the elemental wrath of God. The love of God and the wrath of God are obverse sides of the same thing. If we are morally rightly related to God we see His love side, but if we reverse the order and get out of touch with God, we come to a place where we find everything is based on wrath—not that God is angry, like a Moloch,²¹ but wrath is inevitable; we cannot get out of it. If we give the best we have got to worldliness we shall one day wake up to the revelation of what we have done and shall experience the wrath of God, mingled with ungovernable despair—"I gave the best I had got, not to God, but to the world, and I can't alter now." This is not only true with individuals, but with the whole of civilised life. Take the good, thoroughgoing, prosperous, worldly business men of any country who have worshipped at the shrine of a pagan worldliness, you will find exactly what Jesus says, their hearts fail them—"men fainting for fear, and for expectation of the things which are coming on the world" (RV). Men who have worshipped mammon have the mark of the beast in thought and grasp, and when the realisation of where they are comes, they "faint for fear." Civilisations will get there; and the panic in any country will be beyond all limits. God is the controller of History.

(c) In the Pain of Recession and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever. (Revelation 14:11)

^{19.} Zeitoun (zay TOON), Egypt: six miles northeast of Cairo; site of a YMCA camp, the Egypt General Mission compound, and, from 1916 to 1919, the Imperial School of Instruction, training base for British, Australian, and New Zealand troops during World War I.

^{20.} the War: World War I (1914–18).

^{21.} Moloch: tyrannical power requiring sacrifice to be appeased.

That is the pictorial way of presenting the atmosphere of the wrath in which civilisations will be found when once God is manifested. When mediaeval artists wanted to portray a crime they usually accompanied the scene with bad weather. According to God's Book, this is not merely pictorial, but a representation of what will actually take place. "The smoke of their torment" refers not only to the physical condition of individuals, but to the terrific disturbance in Nature which is connected with it. Satan is "the prince of the power of the air."

Take the popular idea of Christianity and compare it with the patience of the saints, and you will see where we are. Popular Christianity says, "We must succeed." The Book of Revelation says success cannot be marked, it is impossible. The New Testament conception of spirituality in the world is a forlorn hope always, by God's design. Take the parable of the Sower, which is the key to all the parables, only one-fourth of the seed sown brings forth fruit in this dispensation. We are determined to be successful; the Apostle Paul says we are called upon to be faithful (1 Corinthians 4:1–2). In this dispensation it is a day of humiliation in the lives of the saints, as it was in the life of our Lord. We have to remain steadfastly patient to God through the whole thing.

The Practice of the Expressed Love of God

... they that keep the commandments of God.

What are the commandments? "The first of all the commandments is, . . . thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: the second is . . . this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Mark 12:30–31).

(a) Among the Unseemly

"Love . . . doth not behave itself unseemly . . . " (1 Corinthians 13:4-5 RV). In prosperous worldliness there is any amount that is unseemly, not from the social standpoint, but from the saint's standpoint. The way worldly sagacity argues is—Pay men back in their own coin, if you have been deceived, deceive in order to get your rights—"an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." You cannot do that if you are a saint. We must practise the expressed love of God and behave among the unseemly as the children of God. There is no test on earth to equal it. There is unseemly laughter at the saint—"Where is your success? What have you done? what is the good of missionary enterprise? what is the use of talking about spiritual things to soldiers?" If the saints are not practising the expression of the love of God, they will be discouraged and give up. Discouragement is "disenchanted egotism"; "I have not got what I wanted, therefore I am not going on, I give it up. I have lost my conceit."

"Love... taketh not account of evil..." (RV); it does not ignore the fact that there is evil, but it does not take it into calculation. Someone has done us a wrong, and we say, "Now I must be careful...." Our attitude is to be that of the expressed love of God, and if we take the evil into account we cannot express His love. We must deal with that one as God has dealt with us. There is no bigger, stiffer job for a saint than that.

(b) Among the Unspiritual

"Love . . . rejoiceth not in unrighteousness, but rejoiceth with the truth . . . " (1 Corinthians 13:4, 6 RV). Prosperous worldliness is unspiritual and those who do not pray and who are not at all holy get on well. There is so much nervous energy spent in spiritual exercises, in giving time to study, that the temptation is to let these things slip. We have to express the love of God and see that we do not become unspiritual among the unspiritual tendencies around us. If you listen to the talk of the day in which we live you find it is sagacious common sense that rules, the spiritual standpoint is taboo, like a fairy-story. The question is, will we maintain the spiritual standpoint, or say, "oh yes, it is rather too high"? We do not need Jesus Christ and the Bible for the ordinary common-sense standpoint, and if in a crisis we act according to common sense we do not express the love of God.

(c) Among the Unshameable

"... beareth all things, ... endureth all things" (1 Corinthians 13:7). After every phase of a particular type of successful civilised life, we get the anti-conventionalist who tries to develop the unshameable attitude and brags about things. It is called pluck; it is not, it is shamelessness, and it is easy to remain unspiritual before that.

At the basis of every one of these matters, the unseemly, the unspiritual, the unshameable, is something that is right, a strong basis of common sense; but the test for the saint is not common sense, but "Is this what Jesus Christ stood for?" "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel," says the Apostle Paul. If you dare to stand for Jesus Christ and His presentation of things in certain crises, men will separate you from their company, treat you with unutterable contempt. "Blessed are ye," said Jesus, "when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake" (Luke 6:22). We have to express the love of God in the midst of these things.

The Power of the Enshrouded Loyalty to God . . . and the faith of Jesus.

The faith of Jesus is exhibited in temptation and can be summed up in His own words: "I came . . . not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." Jesus remained steadfastly loyal to His Father, and the saint has to keep the faith of Jesus.

(a) Under the Success of Civilisation (Matthew 4:3–4)

In the Temptation the sagacity of Satan is seen from every standpoint—"If Thou art the Son of God, command that these stones become bread" (RV): "Look after men's bodies, feed them and heal them, and you will get men under Your control." Was Satan right? would Jesus Christ have gained the Kingship of men if He had put their needs first? Read John 6:15—"Jesus therefore perceiving that they were about to come and take Him by force, to make Him king, withdrew again into the mountain Himself alone" (RV). It is this temptation which has betaken the Christian Church to-day. We worship Man, and God is looked upon as a blessing machine for humanity. We find it in the most spiritual movements of all. For instance, watch how subtly the missionary call has changed. It is not now the watchword of the Moravian²² call, which saw behind every suffering heathen the Face of Christ: the need has come to be the call. It is not that Jesus Christ said "Go," but that the heathen will not be saved if we do not go. It is a subtle change that is sagacious, but not spiritual. The need is never the call: the need is the opportunity. Jesus Christ's first obedience was to the will of His Father—"Lo, in the volume of the Book it is written of Me, I delight to do Thy will," and, "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (RV). The saint has to remain loyal to God in the midst of the machinery of successful civilisation, in the midst of worldly prosperity, and in the face of crushing defeat.

(b) Under the Success of Ceremonialism (Matthew 4:5-7)

"If Thou art the Son of God, cast Thyself down . . ."
(RV). "Do some supernatural wonder, use apparatus whereby You will paralyse men's wits and stagger them, and the world will be at Your feet." In the midst of the success of worldliness we get an outburst of spiritualism, of supernaturalism, fire called down from heaven by the authority of the devil, and all kinds of signs and wonders whereby people say, "Lo, here is Christ." Jesus said, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation." I believe in the Second Coming, but not always in its advocates. They are apt to ignore altogether what Jesus said.

(c) Under the Success of Compromise (Matthew 4:8–10)

"All these things will I give Thee, if Thou wilt fall down and worship me." "Be diplomatic, be wise, compromise in a wise shrewd way and You will get everything under Your own control." That is the kind of thing the peace of the world is based on, we call it "diplomacy." Jesus maintained His faith in God's methods in spite of the temptations which were so sagacious and wise from every standpoint, saving the standpoint of the Spirit of God. The insinuation of putting men's needs first, success first, has entered into the very domain of evangelism, and has substituted "the passion for souls" for "the passion for Christ," and we experience shame when we realise how completely we have muddled the whole thing by not maintaining steadfast loyalty to Jesus Christ.

You will find the things God uses, not to develop you, but to develop the manifestation of God in you, are just the things we are apt to ignore—successful worldliness, other people, trials of our faith—these are the things that either make a saint un-saintly, or give God the chance to exhibit Himself. The most delightful saint is the one who has been chastened through great sorrows. The type of character produced by great sorrows is different from that produced by the pressure of the "mosquito" order of things. The saints are unnoticed, there is no flourish of trumpets about them, nothing self-advertised, but slowly and surely this characteristic comes out—the stamp of a family likeness to Jesus Christ, and men take knowledge of them, that they have been with Jesus.

ZEITOUN, EGYPT

"OUT OF THE WRECK I RISE"

Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. (Romans 8:37)

God does not do what false Christianity makes out—keep a man immune from trouble, there is no promise of that; God says, "I will be with him in trouble." The moral frontier where Jesus Christ works is the great dominant note in the New Testament, the external manifestation comes later. At present it is the relationship on the inside that is being dealt with—the personal preference of the soul for God, which is the great fruit of Christianity. No matter what actual troubles in the most extreme form get hold of a man's life, not one of them can touch the central citadel, viz., his relationship to God in Christ Jesus.

This is one of the greatest assets of the spiritual aspect of Christianity, and it seems to be coming to the fore just now. Before the War it may have been imaginary to talk about these things in the universal sense but now they are up-to-date in thousands of lives. The "wrecks" are a fact. Mental, moral, physical and spiritual wrecks are all around us to-day. The Apostle Paul is not talking of imaginary sentimental things, but of desperately actual things, and he says we are "more than conquerors" in the midst of them all, super-conquerors, not by our wits or ingenuity, our courage or pluck, or anything other than the fact that not one of them can separate a man from the love of God in Christ Jesus, even though he should go into the "belly of hell." We are inclined to ask God to do the magic business, to perform a miracle which will alter our external circumstances; but if we are ever going to understand what the God whom Jesus Christ presents is like, we have to remember that that is not His first job. The first thing God does is to alter a man's disposition on the inside, and then enable him to deal with the "mess" on the outside. God never coerces a man, he has to take God's way by his own moral choice; we reverse the order and demand of God that He does our work. The tawdry things that have been presented as the findings of Christianity make one impatient.

The Cares of Tribulation

Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation . . . ?

The word "tribulation" has its root in the Latin tribulum—a sledge for rubbing out corn; literally, a thing with teeth that tears. Christianity is not prayer meetings and times of fellowship, these are magnificent and essential in certain conditions for the manifestation of the Christian life, but when tribulation is tearing you to bits, they cannot be. Tribulation describes a section of a man's life. Rightly or wrongly, we are exactly in the condition we are in. I am sorry for the Christian who has not some part of his circumstances he wishes was not there! People with psychological "elbows" bring tribulation. Let the tribulations be what they may—exhausting, galling, fatiguing—they are never noble things, "Beelzebub" miseries that buzz over the windows of a man's soul so that he cannot see out—we can be "more than conquerors" in them if we maintain our belief in the relationship God has to us in Christ Jesus.

"To him that overcometh..." God does not give us the overcoming life: He gives life to the man who overcomes. If in every case of tribulation, from gnats to the cruelty of the sword, we take the step as if there were no God to assist us, we shall find He is there. The idea is not that we get the victory, but that the Victor has got us. "But thanks be unto God, who always leadeth us in triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest through us the savour of His knowledge in every place" (2 Corinthians 2:14 RV).

The Waters of Anguish

or anguish . . . ? (RV)

"Anguish" comes from a word meaning to press tightly, to strangle, and the idea is not a bit too strong for the things people are going through. They are not sentimental things, but real things, where every bit of a man's life is twisted and wrung out to the last ebb. Can the love of God in Christ hold there, when everything says that God is cruel to allow it, and that there is no such thing as justice and goodness? Shall anguish separate us from the love of God? No, we are more than conquerors in it, not by our own effort but by the fact that the love of God in Christ holds. If we look for God in the physical domain we shall see Him nowhere; if we look for Him in the kingdom on the inside, in the moral relationships, we shall find Him all the time. We lose faith in God when we are hurt in the physical domain and God does not do what we want; we forget that He is teaching us to rely on His love. Watch some people and you will wonder how a human being can support such anguish; yet instead of being full of misery, they are the opposite; they seem to be held by a power that baffles all human intelligence, to have a spiritual energy we know nothing of—what accounts for it? "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; ... when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned." The waters are real, and the fire is real, but Paul claims that the relationship to God holds.

"And ve shall hear of wars and rumours of wars: see that ye be not troubled." When men's hearts are fainting for fear, does Jesus Christ expect us to be undisturbed? how is it to be done? have we to become callous and indifferent, or so worn out that we have not enough vitality to feel things? Jesus Christ means that the relationship He can bring us into with Himself can hold us undisturbed in the midst of every disturbance there is. If there is anything supernatural, that is! Human pluck cannot stand these things, there is a limit. No human being can stand calamity and anguish without going under or getting into a panic. Panic is a sudden terror, our whole being gets into a flutter and we don't know where to turn, we can take a forlorn stand, but it barely stills the panic inside. If we are going to be more than conquerors in calamity, it can only be in the marvellous way by which God "ships in" the supernatural and makes it natural.

The Mutinies of Persecution or persecution . . . ?

Immediately we get hold of a particular thing in the spiritual domain we are going to be systematically vexed by those who don't intend us to have it; they are set on gibing it out of us, because if we are right, they are wrong. Mutiny, a rise against authority, comes from persecution. There is any amount of weakness in us all, but deep down there is red-handed rebellion against the authority of Jesus Christ—"I'll be damned before I yield." Don't take a poetical view of things that go beyond science. At bottom, sin is red-handed mutiny that requires to be dealt with by the surgery of God—and He dealt with it on Calvary.

The Spectre of Famine or famine . . . ?

Can a man remain true to the love of God when he is famine-stricken? God does not prevent physical suffering because it is of less moment than what He is after. "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul" (Matthew 10:28). Famine is a most appalling spectre, it means extreme scarcity. Can I not only believe in the love of God, but be more than conqueror while I am being starved? Either the Apostle Paul is deluded, and Jesus Christ is a deceiver, or some extraordinary thing happens to a man who can hold on to the love of God when the odds are all against His character.

The Scare of Poverty or nakedness . . . ?

The scare of poverty is the most effectual onslaught. If we know that obedience to God means absolute poverty, how many of us would go through with it? The scare of poverty will knock the spiritual backbone out of us unless we have the relationship to God that holds. It is easy to fling away what you have, child's play to sell all you have got and have nothing left, the easiest piece of impulse, nothing heroic in it; the thing that is difficult is to remain detached from what you have so that when it goes you do not notice it. That is only possible by the power of the love of God in Christ Jesus.

The Cruelty of the Sword

... or peril, or sword?

In every one of "these things" logic is shut up. A logicmonger can silence the man who is suffering with his facts, but suppose the man who is suffering has got hold of Reality and the logic-monger finds he is only "slinging" actualities? Did you ever try to justify God in what He allows? God is not justified unless He can work things out on the line Paul brings out, and we only get there by a moral revolution. The one who deals with the logical rational side has the best of the argument just now though not the best of the facts, and one of the biggest humiliations is that you cannot say a word, you must let the chattermagging²³ go on. You can shut the mouth of the man who has faith in God, but you cannot get away from the fact that he is being kept by God. That is a domain which logic must shut out resolutely until it is realised that logic is an instrument only. A man can go through tribulations which make you hold your breath as you watch him; he goes through things that would knock the wits out of us and make us give way to blasphemy and whimperings. He is not blind or insensitive, yet he goes through in marvellous triumph—what accounts for it? One thing only, the fact that behind it all is the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Spiritually, morally, and physically the saint is brought clean through, triumphant, out of the wreck wrought by tribulation, anguish, persecution, famine, nakedness, peril and sword. Whatever may be the experiences of life, whether terrible and devastating or monotonous, it makes no difference, they are all rendered impotent, because they cannot separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus Our Lord. "Out of the wreck I rise" every time.

ZEITOUN, EGYPT

THE CONDITIONS OF SPIRITUAL LIFE

Matthew 10:24-42

Religion is a matter of taste, a matter in which a man's religious life and his actual life do not necessarily agree. In spiritual life that could never be; spiritual life means the real life, and it is significant that whenever Jesus talks about discipleship He speaks of it in actual terms.

"It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master." At first sight this looks like an enormous honour: to be "as his Master" is marvellous glory—is it? Look at Jesus as He was when He was here, it was anything but glory. He was easily ignorable, saving to those who knew Him intimately; to the majority of men He was "as a root out of a dry ground." For thirty years He was obscure, then for three years He went through popularity, scandal, and hatred; He succeeded in gathering a handful of fishermen as disciples, one of whom betrayed Him, one denied Him, and all forsook Him; and He says, "It is enough for you to be like that." The idea of evangelical success, Church prosperity, civilised manifestation, does not come into it at all. When we fulfil the conditions of spiritual life we become unobtrusively real.

The Dear Sorrows of Spiritual Difference (Matthew 10:24-26)

When we become spiritual there is a change in us that our former companions feel but cannot locate; they intuitively sense that something is different, there is something that does not agree with their natural outlook. It is a most embarrassing difference in the closest relationships of life (see Matthew 10:22–23). Our affinity with Jesus Christ does make a difference, it produces sorrow and misunderstandings, things that cannot be explained. But Jesus says, when misunderstandings arise, "Don't be afraid, one day it will be understood how it came about." Meantime we have to lay our account with the sorrows of spiritual difference, but our devotion to Jesus is so intense that no matter what those sorrows are, we are prepared to go through with it.

The Defiant Sagacity of Spiritual Discretion (Matthew 10:27–28)

What I tell you in the darkness, speak ye in the light.
(RV)

There are dark nights in the soul; darkness is the time to listen. If we are to be true to the conditions of spiritual life we must speak not what is expedient, we must speak the truth regarding spiritual realities. The Christianity which is not spiritual says we must by no means offend, or do anything that hurts a Christian brother's feelings. Did Jesus ever offend anyone knowingly? He certainly did (see Matthew 12:1-8); but He never put a stumbling-block in anyone's way. The sagacity of spiritual discretion does not mean we have to be obstinate and pig-headed, with a ban of finality²⁴ about our views, or that we preach what is expedient—"Oh yes, I agree with you, but it is not expedient to say that kind of thing in public." If God has given us the revelation it is not our business to hide our light under a bushel (Matthew 5:15-16). In your sagacity be wise. Don't preach out of natural discretion, but out of spiritual discretion which comes from intimacy with God. The prophet is more powerful than the priest or king, and in our Lord the prophet-element is the great one. Jesus never spoke with the sagacity of a human being, but with the discretion of God. Beware of saying what is expedient from your own common-sense standpoint, especially when it comes to the big truths of God.

The Detailed Security of Spiritual Dependence (Matthew 10:28–31)

And be not afraid of them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul. (RV)

"Be not afraid of them which kill the body"—leave that alone, but beware of being disobedient to your own spiritual stand before God, because that will kill both body and soul, i.e., make you reprobate. Watch if in the tiniest degree you begin to be afraid. "Now what is going to happen to me physically, in matters of money, in my social circumstances, if I do obey Jesus?" Jesus distinctly says, "Pay no attention to that, beware only of being destroyed both physically and spiritually by disobedience." Whenever we get out of touch with spiritual reality our body instantly suffers. The source of physical strength in spiritual life is different from what it is in natural life. In natural life we draw our strength direct from without; in spiritual life we draw our physical strength, consciously or unconsciously, from communion with God. When that is broken, physical health begins to be destroyed. Jesus says, Your Father, who looks after the sparrows, will care for you, fear not therefore. It is not to be a life of self-interest at all. When God calls us He never gives security; He gives us a knowledge of Himself. We reveal how much we believe in the things Jesus said when we reason like this—"Is this God's will for me? No, it can't be because there is no security." "It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master." Jesus never had any home of His own, never a pillow on which to lay His head. His poverty was a deliberate choice. We may have to face destitution in order to maintain our spiritual connection with Jesus, and we can only do that if we love Him supremely. Every now and again there is the "last bridge"—"I have gone far enough, I can't go any further." If you are going on with God it is impossible to secure your interests at all. We have to go on in perfect confidence that our Father in heaven knows all about us. Are we prepared to fulfil these conditions when they arise?

The Dreaded Stand of Spiritual Destiny (Matthew 10:32-33)

Every one therefore who shall confess Me before men . . . (RV)

When I am born from above (RV mg) not only is the Holy Spirit in me, but the Son of God is formed in me (Galatians 4:19), and to "confess" Him means that I allow His disposition to have its way through my bodily life. ". . . him will I also confess before My Father who is in heaven." Will He? or will He have to say, "There is not one detail of your life that has manifested Me. I have had no chance of looking through your eyes, of working through your hands, or loving through your heart"? The true evangelist is the one whose life in every detail overflows with the manifested life of Jesus (cf. Matthew 7:22–23). The world has a right to say, "Produce your goods." In actual circumstances we can prevent Jesus Christ being hurt if we take the blow, but if we stand on our rights the blow goes back on Him. It is not aggressive doing on our part that wins, but the manifestation that it is the Lamb who breaks the seals. If we stand for Jesus Christ we have to take care to nourish His life in us, to bear His Name; then He says He will confess us before His Father who is in heaven.

The Suffering of Spiritual Discipleship (Matthew 10:34–39)

I came not to send peace, but a sword. (v. 34)

It never cost a disciple anything to follow Jesus; to talk about cost when you are in love with anyone is an insult. The point of suffering is that it costs other people—fathers, mothers, households; consequently we decline to go on, consideration for others causes us to hold back. If we go on with it, then others will suffer. Have we in effect told Jesus we are not prepared for this? "Obedience to Your call would mean I should get into difficulties with my home, my father, my mother, and I cannot possibly be the means of bringing suffering on them." Jesus says, "If you are going to be My disciples, you must be prepared to." God knows what it costs them, and what it costs you to allow it.

The Solidarity of Spiritual Discipline (Matthew 10:40–42)

He that receiveth you receiveth Me. . . .

Solidarity means a consolidation or a oneness of interests. Here, the solidarity is between ourselves and God; we deliberately identify ourselves with God's interests in other people. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least [KJV] of these My brethren, ye did it unto Me" (RV).

The Sacrament of Saints

Ī

I am the living bread which came down out of heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: yea and the bread which I will give is My flesh, for the life of the world. (John 6:51)

Why should I start at the plough of my Lord, that maketh deep furrows on my soul? I know He is no idle husbandman, He purposeth a crop.

Samuel Rutherford²⁵

Good corn is not bread; if we are compelled to eat corn we will suffer for it. Corn must be ground and mixed and kneaded and baked, and baked sufficiently, before it is fit to be eaten. When the husk is away and the kernel garnered, we are apt to think that all is done; but the process has only just begun. A granary of corn is not bread; people cannot eat handfuls of corn and be nourished, something must be done to the corn first. Apply that illustration to the life of a sanctified saint. The afflictions after sanctification are not meant to purify us, but to make us broken bread in the hands of our Lord to nourish others. Many Christian workers are like Ephraim, "a cake not turned"; they are faddists and cranks, and when they are given out for distribution they produce indigestion instead of giving nourishment.

The Way of the Plough (Matthew 13:18–23)

Hear ye then the parable of the sower. . . . (Matthew 13:18 RV)

It is the plough that prepares the ground for sowing the seed. The hard way through the field is the same soil as the good ground, but it is of no use for growing corn because it has never been ploughed. Apply that to your own soul and to the souls of men. There are lives that are absolutely stupid towards God, they are simply a way for the traffic of their own concerns. We are responsible for the kind of ground we are. No man on earth has any right to be a highroad; every man has the chance of allowing the plough to run through his life. Sorrow or bereavement or conviction of sin, anything that upsets the even, hard way of the life and produces concern, will act as the plough. A man's concern about his eternal welfare witnesses that the plough has begun to go through his self-complacency. The words of our Lord, "Think not that I came to cast [mg] peace on the earth: I came not to cast [mg] peace, but a sword" (RV), are a description of what happens when the Gospel is preached—upset, conviction, concern and confusion.

The Wildness of the Place (Genesis 3:17–19)

And unto Adam He said, . . . cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. . . . (Genesis 3:17)

That is a description of the place where the plough has to go. It was once a holy place, but now it is desecrated and wild. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and it is exceedingly corrupt: who can know it?" (Jeremiah 17:9 RV). The way through the field which has been battered hard by men's feet is an illustration of the human heart. The human heart should be the abode of God's Holy Spirit, but it has been trampled hard by passions until God has no part in it, and the plough has to come into the desecrated place. As workers we must remember this fundamental line. The tendency to-day is to ignore it, to say that men do not need ploughing, they need praising; that the human heart is not bad; that the world is not a wild place. The plough has to come into every place which has been desecrated by the prince of this world, for one purpose—for the seed to be sown.

The Work of Patience

Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. (Galatians 6:7)

Don't sow the human heart with mingled seed: "thou shalt not sow thy field with two kinds of [RV] seed" (Leviticus 19:19). God's seed will always bring forth fruit if it is put in the right conditions. Man cannot order the seasons or make the seed to grow (cf. Jeremiah 33:20); and as preachers and teachers we are powerless to make saints. Our duty is to put the seed into the right place and leave the rest to God. It would be foolish for a farmer to sow his seed and tell his servants to watch it; he must sow his seed in the right place and then trust in God and Nature, and by and by he will reap his harvest. So all we can do is to sow the seed of the Word of God in the hearts of the hearers. The words our Lord uttered in reference to Himself are true of every seed that is sown—"Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." All Christian work, if it is spiritual, must follow that law, because it is the only way God's fruit can be brought forth.

Be endlessly patient. There is nothing more impertinent than our crass infidelity in God. If He does not make us ploughers and sowers and reapers all at once, we lose faith in Him. Modern evangelism makes the mistake of thinking that a worker must plough his field, sow the seed, and reap the harvest in half-an-hour. Our Lord was never in a hurry with the disciples, He kept on sowing the seed and paid no attention to whether they understood Him or not. He spoke the truth of God, and by His own life produced the right atmosphere for it to grow, and then left it alone, because He knew well that the seed had in it all the germinating power of God and would bring forth fruit after its kind once it was put in the right soil. We are never the same after listening to the truth; we may forget it, but we will meet it again. Sow the Word of God, and everyone who listens will get to God. If you sow vows, resolutions, aspirations, emotions, you will reap nothing but exhaustion "... and ve shall sow your seed in vain, for your enemies shall eat it" (Leviticus 26:16); but sow the Word of God, and as sure as God is God, it will bring forth fruit. Human sympathy and human emotions and human hypnotism in preaching are the signs of a spiritual hireling and a thief. Sow emotions, and the human heart will not get beyond vou. There are men and women at work for God who steal hearts from God, not intentionally, but because they do not preach the Word of God. They say, "I don't want anyone to think about me"; that should never need to be said. If the thought of ourselves is lurking anywhere as we preach, we are traitors to Jesus Christ. Our duty is to get people through to God. A man may not grasp all that is said, but something in him is intuitively held by it. If you talk truth that is vital to yourself you will never talk over anyone's head. See that you sow the real seed of the Word of God, and then leave it alone.

IJ

... an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD. (Leviticus 2:2)

This Scripture (Leviticus 2), as in fact all Scripture, testifies that service is self-surrender, self-sacrifice. Christ, to satisfy others, was broken; the bread-corn must still be bruised; and the nearer our ministry approaches the measure of His ministry—immeasurably far as we shall ever be behind Him—the more shall we resemble Him, the bruised, the oppressed, the broken One.

Reaping

Corn that has come to fruition must be watched. The enemy of souls, works most havoc in the standing corn. Our Lord told the disciples to pray "the Lord of the harvest, that He send forth labourers into His harvest" (RV), to cut down the corn, i.e., to disciple men and women. God puts in His sickle by the hand of a disciple and cuts us down where we never thought we would have to be cut down. Every sanctified soul is handed over by God to a disciple to be reaped for Him. What do we say to the people who have come into the experience of sanctification—"Thank God, you are all right now"? That is not discipling them. People come in to reap who have no right to reap. We have to let sanctified souls know that they are there to be cut down, to be reaped, to be made into bread to feed the world. We are apt to shout "Hallelujah" when souls enter into sanctification, but it is then that a time of intense care and anxiety begins until these lives are reaped for God. The need is to watch the standing corn, to watch those who are right with God until they are matured and established. Notice the earnest solicitation Paul had for his converts: "My little children, of whom I am again in travail until Christ be formed in you" (RV). The time after sanctification in every soul under our care is an additional concern to us if we are true servants of God. Times of revival have led the Church to rejoicing instead of watching by earnest prayer until these souls are reaped. Never sympathise with a cut-down soul, but rejoice, and teach them to rejoice.

"For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? . . . For ye are our glory and our joy." This is the dividing of the spoil. How many of us are going to hear Jesus Christ say when we stand before Him, "That soul was reaped by you"? Jean MacLean wrote underneath the only photograph she ever had taken, "Spoilt for this world saving as I can win souls to Jesus." She was an obscure, noble missionary and was used by God in untold numbers of lives, she literally reaped them for God.

Threshing

The first description John the Baptist gives of Jesus is that of a Divine Husbandman at work in His threshing-floor (see Matthew 3:12). When corn is stored in the granary we are apt to think that that is the end, but it is only the beginning. Sanctification is a reaping, an end, but also a beginning. Standing corn has to be cut down and go through the processes of reaping, threshing, grinding, mixing and baking before it is good for food; and sanctified souls must be told that their only use is to be reaped for God and made into bread for others. It is time we got away from all our shallow thinking about sanctification. The majority who are introduced into an experience of sanctification remain at the gateway-"saved and sanctified"; but they do not know how to go on, consequently they begin to stagnate. We need to learn that God has a lot to do with a saint after sanctification; our perplexities come because this is not realised. We have to see that as right dividers of the word of truth, we bring this before people.

Beware of being guided by mental or spiritual affinities, let God mix you as He sees fit. Peter thought he knew better than God, but God had to mix Peter with the Gentiles before he became good bread (see Acts 10:9–16).

Grinding

Jesus said that in the lives of the saints there will be tribulation, not difficulties, but tribulation. The great cry of modern enterprise is success; Jesus says we cannot be successful in this age. This is the age of the humiliation of the saints, that means we have to stand true to Jesus Christ while the odds are crushingly against Him all the time.

"Tribulation worketh patience." In the experience of tribulation we are brought to understand what millstones are. Millstones are used to grind the corn to powder, and typify the sacredness of the discipline of life—"No man shall take the mill or the upper millstone to pledge: for he taketh a man's life to pledge" (Deuteronomy 24:6). You have been having a snug time in the granary, then God brings you out and puts you under the millstones, and the first thing that happens is the grinding separation our Lord spoke of—"Blessed are ye when men shall . . . cast out your name as evil for the Son of man's sake."

The other crowd want to have nothing more to do with you, you are crushed for ever out of any resemblance to them. Very few of us know anything about suffering "For My sake." When God is putting His saints through the experience of the millstones, we are apt to want to interfere. Hands off! No saint dare interfere in the discipline of the suffering of another saint. God brings these things into our lives for the production of the bread that is to feed the world.

In the East the women sing as they grind the corn between the millstones; and "the sound of the millstones," is music in the ears of God. The worldling does not think it music, but the saint who is being made into bread knows that his Father knows best, and that He would never allow the suffering if He had not some purpose. Ill-tempered people, hard circumstances, poverty, wilful misunderstandings and estrangements, are all millstones. Had Jesus any of these things in His own life? He had a devil in His company for three years; He lived at home with brothers and sisters who did not believe in Him; He was continually thwarted and misunderstood by the Pharisees, and He says, "the disciple is not above his Master." If we have the tiniest element of self-pity in us God dare not put us anywhere near the millstones. When these experiences come, remember God has His eyes on every detail.

Baking

There is a spiritual significance in the methods of preparing the meal offering mentioned in the Book of Leviticus (Ch. 2)—the frying pan, seething in pots, or baking in an oven. Why some people suffer is open and clear to everyone; others are placed in a boiling tumult (watch a porridge pot and you will see what this means), and only God knows what is happening. Others again are placed in fierce, silent ovens, no one knows what is going on, but when they are taken out they are precious to God and man alike. God is producing good food for Himself and for His saints. We all have our special functions, never try to do what someone else is doing; let God make you what He wants you to be. He knows your circumstances and He will alter them when He chooses. Be careful of God's honour as a saint.

Ш

He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man; and the field is the world; and the good seed, these are the sons of the kingdom. (Matthew 13:37–38 RV)

Be content, ye are His wheat growing in our Lord's field. And if wheat, ye must go under our Lord's threshing instrument, in His barn-floor, and through His sieve, and through His mill to be bruised, as the Prince of your salvation, Jesus, was (Isaiah 53:10), that ye may be found good bread in your Lord's house.

Samuel Rutherford

God sows His saints in the most useless places, according to the judgement of the world. Where they will glorify Him is where God puts His saints, and we are no judge at all of where that is. When we become rightly related to God the likelihood of our being of use to men seems in the eyes of the world to be pathetically crippled. People say, "Don't be so absurd as to go and bury yourself there." We have to let God sacrifice us as He likes, and go where He sends us. Never be deluded into making this statement: "I am here because I am so useful"; say rather, "I am here because God wants me here." The one lodestar of the saint is God Himself, not estimated usefulness.

Blessed Bread

Sacrificed

And He took the five loaves, and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, He blessed, and brake and gave the loaves to the disciples, and the disciples to the multitude. (Matthew 14:19 RV; cf. Romans 12:1)

God never uses in His service those who are sentimentally devoted to Him; He uses only those who are holy within in heart and holy without in practice. The Book of Leviticus is full of spiritual teaching, and the significance of all the detail is that a servant of God must keep himself unspotted from the world, sternly and guardedly holy, not for his own sake but for the sake of his calling. No man has any right to break the Word of God and feed the people of God unless he is without blemish spiritually through the Atonement. That standard is being blotted out nowadays. "And no man taketh the honour unto himself"-nearly all do, though. Preaching is worthy in God's sight when it costs something, when we are really living out what we preach. The truth of God is to be presented in such a way that it produces saints.

Broken Bread

Suffering

And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it; and He gave to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is My body. (Matthew 26:26 RV; cf. 1 Peter 4:19)

Not only does God waste His saints according to the judgements of men, He seems to bruise them most mercilessly. You say, "But it could never be God's will to bruise me": if it pleased the Lord to bruise His own Son, why should He not bruise you? To choose suffering is a disease; but to choose God's will even though it means suffering is to suffer as Jesus did according to the will of God.

In the Bible it is never the idealising of the sufferer that is brought out, but the glorifying of God. God always serves Himself out of the saint's personal experience of suffering. If suffering is used to idealise the sufferer there is an aftermath of sickly sentimentality—"What I have gone through!" and God is not glorified. In actual life the true sufferers and the affected sufferers are mixed, and the Spirit of God gets His chance only through the one or two who are so completely effaced by means of identification with the Death of Christ that the thought of what they are going through never affects them. The thing that strikes one about such lives is never the sense of restraint but of inspiration, the feeling that there is unfathomably more behind.

If we are self-willed when God tries to break us and will do anything rather than submit, we shall never be of any use to nourish other souls; we shall only be centres of craving self-pity, discrediting the character of God. Jesus called self-pity Satanic (see Matthew 16:22–23). No one understands a saint but the saint who is nearest the Saviour, and if we accept sympathy from any others, we will end in being traitors to Jesus Christ, because the reflex thought is, "Well, God is dealing hardly with me." The people we have to knit to our souls are not those who sympathise with us, they hinder, because sympathy if it is from a wrong source always enervates, but those who bring us into a fuller realisation of the purpose of God.

Jesus Christ represents the Bread of God broken to feed the world, and the saints are to be broken bread in His hands to satisfy Jesus Christ and His saints. When by the sanctifying power of the grace of God we have been made into bread, our lives are to be offered first of all to Jesus Christ. "Give Me to drink." In the Old Testament the first fruits were always offered to God, and that is the symbol for our lives. The saint is meant to satisfy the heart of Jesus first, and then be used to feed His saints. "... and ye shall be My witnesses"—a perfect delight to Me wherever I place you. The saints who satisfy the heart of Jesus make other saints strong and mature for God. The one characteristic of the life is, "In all the world there is none but Thee, my God, there is none but Thee."

The consummation of self-sacrifice is that just as our Lord was made broken bread and poured-out wine for us, so He can make us broken bread and poured-out wine for others; but He cannot do it if there is anything in us that would make us give way to self-pity when He begins to break us. The one mainspring of the life is to be personal, passionate devotion to Jesus Christ.

Beatified Bread

Sovereignty

For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to us-ward. . . . (Romans 8:18 RV; cf. Ephesians 2:6)

The saints who satisfy the heart of Jesus are the imperial people of God for ever, nothing deflects them, they are super-conquerors, and in the future they will be side by side with Jesus. "He that overcometh, I will give to him to sit down with Me in My throne, even as I also overcame, and sat down with My Father, in His throne" (Revelation 3:21 RV). The glorified Lord will take up His abode with the saint who puts God first in reality, not in sentiment. "We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him." The Triune God abiding with the saint! Jesus Christ is made heavenly bread to us now, and there is a glorious day coming—and is even now in the experience of many of His people—when the nourishment of the life is the same for the saint as for his Lord. "I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me" (Revelation 3:20).

Source

These lectures were given at the Bible Training College, London, from February to June 1915.

Publication History

The lectures were originally published as a book in 1930, subtitled "A Series of Missionary Studies."

In January 1915, Oswald Chambers began teaching a new class at the Bible Training College dealing with "Missionary Matters." Guest lecturers included many noted missionaries, among them, the already legendary C. T. Studd.

In the January 1915 edition of Tongues of Fire, the League of Prayer² magazine, Chambers noted:

It is with great thanksgiving we record that eight of our students are now in the foreign field on active service, and that six more will be appointed to active foreign service this year. This is all evidence that as soon as a student is ready, God's corner is opened by God, for we undertake to find no sphere of labour for our students, our duty is to see that this house³ maintains the honour of God and that each student is put into a right spiritual atmosphere and His clearly discerned will always follows.

At the time, Chambers did not know that the College would close in a few months because of World War I and that he and Biddy and Kathleen⁴ would be among those thrust out into a new field of service, ministering to soldiers in Egypt⁵ through the YMCA.

He did, however, firmly believe that "the call of God is the call according to the nature of God; where we go in obedience to that call depends entirely on the providential circumstances which God engineers."

^{1.} The Bible Training College (BTC) was a residential school near Clapham Common in southwest London. It was sponsored by the Pentecostal League of Prayer and operated from 1911 until it closed in July 1915 because of World War I. Oswald Chambers was principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers, his wife, was lady superintendent.

FOREWORD

A preface or foreword is scarcely needed to introduce the reader to this treasure-house of thought on missions. Those who have read other books by our friend, Oswald Chambers, know what to expect. A message not for superficial minds and hearts. Those who love to think on the kingdom and whose heart the King has entered will not be disappointed as they read these pages.

These stirring talks were given to the students at the Bible Training College in London, of which Revelation Oswald Chambers was Principal, before he went out to Egypt. The students that heard him are now scattered in many parts of the world, and proving faithful witnesses of Christ.

The twenty-two short chapters are in a sense

Bible-studies, but they are not mere Bible-readings—strings of texts with a moral. They whisper the secret of the burning heart, of the fully surrendered life, of a love that will not let go. The words pulsate with life and are a clarion-call away from idle daydreams to the stern path of duty. One sentence, among many others, specially riveted my attention and sums up the style, the man, and the message:

"In my study am I a wool-gatherer, or like a man looking for his Lord?"

This book will not find casual readers, but the thoughtful reader will want to read it a second time and God will bless the message.

THE CALL

1. The Voice of the Nature of God

And I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for Us? Then I said, Here an I; send me. (Isaiah 6:8 RV)

When we speak of a call we nearly always leave out one essential feature, viz.: the nature of the one who calls. We speak of the call of the sea, the call of the mountains, the call of the great ice barriers. These calls are heard by a few only because the call is the expression of the nature from which the call comes, and can only be heard by those who are attuned to that nature.

The call of God is essentially expressive of the nature of God, it is His own voice. Paul says that "God commendeth His own love toward us" (RV), the love that is exactly expressive of His nature. Get that thought with regard to the call of God. Very few of us hear the call of God because we are not in the place to answer; the call does not communicate because we have not the nature of the One Who is calling. In the case of Isaiah, his soul was so attuned because of the tremendous crisis he had passed through, that the call of God was recorded to his amazed soul. God did not lay a strong compulsion on Isaiah; Isaiah was in the presence of God and he overheard, as it were, the soliloquy of God: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for Us?" and in conscious freedom he replied, "Here am I; send me."

There is a good deal of instruction to be got by watching the faces of people in certain surroundings—by the sea shore, in an art gallery, during music; you can tell at once if they are listening to the call of the thing or simply reflecting themselves. Most of us have no ear for anything but ourselves, anything that is not "me" we cannot hear. We are dead to, and without interest in the finest music, we can yawn in a picture gallery, and be uninspired by a sunrise or a sunset. That is true not only of the soul's denseness to natural beauties, or to music and art and literature, but true with regard to the awakening of the soul to the call of God. To be brought within the zone of God's voice is to be profoundly altered.

The call of God is not the echo of my nature, but expressive of God's nature. The call of God does not consider my affinities or personality. It is a call that I cannot hear as long as I consider my personality or temperament; but immediately I am brought into the condition Isaiah was in, I am in a relationship to God whereby I can hear His call.

There are strands of the call of God providentially at work that you know and no one else does. It is the threading of God's voice for you on some particular line, and it is no use to consult anyone else about it, or to say that other people are dull because they do not hear it. "Immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." You feel amazed at the sense of God's call, and in your eagerness you talk to someone else about it, and you find that they much prefer to talk about their breakfast. Then comes the danger that you are apt to become contemptuous. Keep that profound relationship between your soul and God.

2. The Vision of the New Life from God

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. (John 3:3)

The power of vision which the new birth gives refers to perception by the personal spirit, and the characteristic of being born from above (RV mg) is that you begin to discern the rule of God. God's rule was there all the time, but true to His nature; now you have received His nature, you can perceive His rule. It is a good thing to mark the times when you feel your personal spirit trembling on the verge of a new vision. It may be during a lecture or in prayer, you nearly see something, then it goes, don't be distressed; it is the evidence of the new life from God. The life given by God is capable of immediately hearing the voice of God's own nature. Unless the nature of God comes into you, said Jesus to Nicodemus, you cannot understand Him; but if His nature comes into you, of course you will hear Him (John 3:3–8). Intuition is the power to sense things without reasoning, and is a better guide than what is stated explicitly; but there is something infinitely more satisfactory—the entrance of the Holy Spirit into a man at new birth enabling him to see the Kingdom of God and to enter into it.

3. The Vocation of the Natural Life for God

But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by His grace, to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him among the Gentiles, [RV]. (Galatians 1:15–16)

The call of God is the call according to the nature of God; where we go in obedience to that call depends entirely on the providential circumstances which God engineers. The call of God is not a call to any particular service, although my interpretation of the call may be; the call to service is the echo of my identification with God. My contact with the nature of God has made me realise what I can do for God. Service is the outcome of what is fitted to my nature; God's call is fitted to His nature, and I never hear His call until I have received His nature. When I have received His nature, then His nature and mine work together; the Son of God reveals Himself in me, and I, the natural man, serve the Son of God in ordinary ways, out of sheer downright devotion to Him.

The call to service is the result of my obedience to the realised call of God. Profoundly speaking there is no call to service for God; it is my own actual "bit," the overflow of superabounding devotion to God. God does not have to come and tell me what I must do for Him, He brings me into a relationship with Himself wherein I hear His call and understand what He wants me to do, and I do it out of sheer love to Him. To serve God is the deliberate love gift of a nature that has heard the call of God. When people say they have had a call to foreign service, or to any particular sphere of work, they mean that their relationship to God has enabled them to realise what they can do for God. Their natural fitting for service and the call of God is identified as one in them.

The vocation of the natural life for God is stated by Paul—"When it pleased God . . . to reveal His Son in me that I might preach Him [sacramentally express Him] among the Gentiles."

THE CALL OF GOD

Unto me... was this grace given, to preach unto the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. (Ephesians 3:8 RV)

1. The Consciousness of the Call (Jeremiah 1:5; Amos 7:14-15)

We are apt to forget the mystic, supernatural touch of God which comes with His call. If a man can tell you how the call of God came to him and all about it, it is questionable whether he ever had the call. The call to be a professional man may come in that explicit way, but the call of God is much more supernatural. The realisation of the call of God in a man's life may come as with a sudden thunder-clap or by a gradual dawning, but in whatever way it comes, it comes with the undercurrent of the supernatural, almost the uncanny; it is always accompanied with a glow—something that cannot be put into words. We need to keep the atmosphere of our mind prepared by the Holy Spirit lest we forget the surprise of the touch of God on our lives.

Before I formed thee . . . I knew thee.

There are pre-natal forces of God at work in a man's life which he may be unconscious of for long enough; but at any moment there may break upon him the sudden consciousness of this incalculable, supernatural surprising power that has got hold of his life before he has got hold of it himself.

Another force at work is the prayers of other people. You are born into this world and will probably never know to whose prayers your life is the answer. It may be your own father and mother who have been used by God to dedicate your life to Him before you were born. The prayers may have remained apparently unanswered, but in reality they are answered; and your life should be the answer in actuality. Our lives are the answers not only to the prayers of other people, but to the prayer the Holy Spirit is making for us, and to the prayer of Our Lord Himself. When once you realise this, you will understand why it is that God does not say "By your leave" when He comes into your life.

If we have been getting hard and metallic, untouched spiritually-not backsliding, but getting out of touch with God, we shall find the reason is because we are allowing things to come in between us and the sense of God's call. At any minute God may bring the wind of His Spirit across our life, and we shall realise with a startled mind that the work we have been doing in the meantime is so much rubbish (cf. 1 Corinthians 3:12-13). There is so much selfchosen service; we say-"I think I will do this, and that for God." Unless we work for God in accordance with His supernatural call, we shall meet havoc and disaster and upset. The moment that the consciousness of the call of God dawns on us, we know that it is not a choice of our own at all; the consciousness is that of being held by a power we do not fully know. "I have chosen him." If we are saved and sanctified, we are called to testify to it; but the call to preach is something infinitely other and belongs to a different category. Paul describes it as a "necessity"—"Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!"

Then answered Amos . . . I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was an herdman, and a dresser of sycomore trees: And the Lord took me from following the flock, and the Lord said unto me, Go, prophesy unto My people Israel. (Amos 7:14–15 RV)

The only way I can begin to fulfil the call of God is by keeping my convictions out of the way, my convictions as to what I imagine I am fitted for. The fitting goes much deeper down than the natural equipment of a man.

Whenever the call of God is realised, there is the feeling—"I am called to be a missionary." It is a universal feeling because the Holy Spirit sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts, and "God so loved the world. ..." We make a blunder when we fix on the particular location for our service and say—"God called me there." When God shifts the location, the battle comes—will I remain consistent to what I have said I am going to do, or be true to the insurgent call of God, and let Him locate me where He likes? The most seemingly untoward circumstances will be used by God for the men and women He has called. How ever much of wrong or of the devil there may seem to be at work, if a man is called of God, every force will be made to tell for God's purpose in the end. God watches all these things when once a man agrees with His purpose for him, and He will bring not only the conscious life, but all the deeper regions of life which we cannot reach, into harmony with His purpose. If the call of God is there, it is not within the power of untoward things to turn you. Your heart remains, not untouched by them, but unbroken, and you are surprised at yourself-"Why didn't I go under here, and there?" "I called thee."

We try to make calls out of our own spiritual consecration, but when we are put right with God, He blights all our sentimental convictions and devotional calls. He brushes them all aside, and rivets us with a passion that is terrific to one thing we had never dreamed of, and in the condition of real communion with God, we overhear Him saying: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for Us?" and for one radiant, flashing moment we see what God wants, and say in conscious freedom—"Here am I; send me."

2. The Character of the Call (1 Corinthians 9:16)

Paul puts out of court the idea that the preaching of the gospel is chosen as the choice of a profession is made. He says it is a necessity laid upon him. He was called to preach, even from his mother's womb, although for years he did not recognise it. Then suddenly the call awakened in him, and he realised that that was what God had been after all the time.

There is no mention of sin in Paul's apprehension, that came after; it was an apprehension of the call of God, a call which "separated" him unto the gospel. I have chosen him, ". . . for I will shew him how many things he must suffer for My name's sake" (RV). God called him in order to use him as broken bread and poured-out wine for others. When once Paul realised God's call and knew the meaning of his life, there was no competitor for his strength. Is there anything competing for our strength in our devotion to the call of God? It is not the devil but the "little foxes, that spoil the vines"—the little annoyances, the little actual things that compete for our strength, and we are not able to pray, things come in between, and our hearts are troubled and our minds disturbed by them. We have forgotten what Jesus said—"As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (RV). Our Lord never allowed anything to disturb Him out of His oneness with the Father; only one thing held Him—"Lo, I am come . . . to do Thy will, O God" (RV). With us, there are things that compete for the strength that should be given to God only. Thank God for such places as this Bible Training College where God gives us time to be shut in quietly. He is letting us see how competitors for our strength will knock the consciousness of His call right out.

Have I been forgetting the character of God's call? Has there been a refusal to be made broken bread and poured-out wine? If so, life is consequently being lived on the threshold of conscious devotion and conscious declension. This always happens when I do not realise that it is God Who engineers my circumstances, when I "despise the day of small things." I refuse to see God's hand in the circumstances of the weather that prevented me on such and such a day, I refuse to see God's hand in the routine of my life, and as a result there is no sense of arrestment by God, no being made broken bread and poured-out wine for others, but a dryness and a deadness all through. Prayer has brought no light, studying God's word has brought no comfort. This has nothing to do with the soul's salvation, but with the obliteration of the character of God's call. Let me take a revision and see how in the little things God has not been first, but my notions, my affinities, consideration of my temperament.

If we are not in full conscious allegiance to Our Lord, it has nothing to do with our personal salvation, but with this "broken bread and poured-out wine" aspect of life. God can never make me wine if I object to the fingers He uses to crush me with. If God would only crush me with His own fingers, and say, "Now, My son, I am going to make you broken bread and poured-out wine in a particular way and everyone will know what I am doing. . . ." But when He uses someone who is not a Christian, or someone I particularly dislike, or some set of circumstances which I said I would never submit to, and begins to make these the crushers, I object. I must never choose the scene of my own martyrdom, nor must I choose the things God will use in order to make me broken bread and poured-out wine. His own Son did not choose. God chose for His Son that He should have a devil in His company for three years. We say—I want angels, I want people better than myself, I want everything to be significantly from God, otherwise I cannot live the life, or do the thing properly; I want to be always gilt-edged. Let God do as He likes. If you are ever going to be wine to drink, you must be crushed. Grapes cannot be drunk, grapes are only wine when they have been crushed. I wonder what kind of coarse finger and thumb God has been using to squeeze you, and you have been like a marble and escaped? You are not ripe yet, and if God had squeezed you, the wine that came out would have been remarkably bitter. Let God go on with His crushing, because it will work His purpose in the end.

3. The Commission of the Call (John 20:21; Luke 4:18–19)

Have we answered God's call in every detail during this Session? Have we really been the "sent" ones of Jesus as He was the sent One of God? We can soon know. What has been competing for our strength?—what kind of things have we objected to? What things have hindered our times of communion, so that we have had to pray about them when we had no business to be in the place where we could notice them? We ought to have been living in John 14:1; but the heart has been troubled, and we have taken account of the evil (RV), consequently we have been less concerned about God's enterprises than about our own. Woe unto me, said Paul, if I do not keep concentrated on this one thing, that I am called of God for His service.

God puts us through discipline, not for our own sake, but for the sake of His purpose and His call. Never debate about anything God is putting you through, and never try to find out why you are going through it. Keep right with God and let Him do what He likes in your circumstances, and you will find He is producing the kind of bread and wine that will be a benefit to others.

THE POINT OF SPIRITUAL HONOUR

I am debtor both to Greeks and to Barbarians. (Romans 1:14 RV)

Do I feel this sense of indebtedness to Christ that Paul felt with regard to every unsaved soul I meet, every unsaved nation? Is it a point of spiritual honour with me that I do not hoard blessings for myself? The point of spiritual honour in my life as a saint is the realisation that I am a debtor to every man on the face of the earth because of the Redemption of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Paul realised that he owed everything to Jesus Christ, and it was in accordance with his sense of spiritual honour that he spent himself to the last ebb to express his indebtedness to Jesus Christ. When a man is indwelt by the Holy Spirit, he never talks in cold logic, he talks in passionate inspiration; and the inspiration behind all Paul's utterances is the fact that he viewed Christ as his Creditor. "For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren. . . . " The great characteristic of Paul's life was that he realised he was not his own; he had been bought with a price, and he never forgot it. His whole life was based on that one thing. Paul sold himself to Christ—"the bondslave of Jesus." For "I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified."

We are apt to have the idea that a man called to the ministry is called to be a different kind of being from other men. According to Jesus Christ, he is called to be the "doormat" of other men; he is their spiritual leader, but never their superior. "Ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake." No matter how men treat me, Paul argues, they will never treat me with the hatred and spite with which I treated Jesus Christ; and as long as there is a human being who does not know Jesus Christ, I am his debtor to serve him until he does. When the realisation comes home that Jesus Christ has served me to the end of all my meanness,8 my selfishness and sin, then nothing I meet with from others can exhaust my determination to serve men for His sake. I am not to come among men as a superior person, I am to come among men as the love-slave of Jesus Christ, realising that if I am worth anything at all, it is through the Redemption. That is the meaning of being made broken bread and poured-out wine in reality.

I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some.

Paul attracted to Jesus all the time, never to himself. He became a sacramental personality, that is, wherever he went Jesus Christ helped Himself to his life (cf. 2 Corinthians 2:14). Many of us are subtly serving our own ends, and Jesus Christ cannot help Himself to our lives; if I am abandoned to Jesus, I have no ends of my own to serve. Paul said, "I know how to be abased" (RV)—I know how to be a "doormat" without resenting it, because the mainspring of his life was devotion to Jesus.

Thank God, when He has saved us, He does give us something to do, some way of expressing our gratitude to Him. He gives us a great noble sense of spiritual honour, the realisation that we are debtors to every man because of the Redemption of Jesus Christ. The sense of our debt to Jesus is so overwhelming that we are passionately concerned for that brother, that friend, those unsaved nations; in relation to them we are the bondslaves of Jesus.

Am I doing anything to enable Jesus Christ to bring His Redemption into actual manifestation in other lives? I can do it only if the Holy Spirit has wrought in me this sense of spiritual honour. When I realise what Jesus Christ has done for me, then I am a debtor to every human being until they know Him too, not for their sake, not because they will otherwise be lost, but because of Jesus Christ's Redemption. Am I willing to sell myself to Jesus, to become simply His bondslave, in order that He may see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied?

The great motive and inspiration of service is not that God has saved and sanctified me, or healed me; all that is a fact, but the great motive of service is the realisation that every bit of my life that is of value I owe to the Redemption; therefore I am a bondslave of Jesus. I realise with joy that I cannot live my own life; I am a debtor to Christ, and as such I can only realise the fulfilment of His purposes in my life. To realise this sense of spiritual honour means I am spoilt for this age, for this life, spoilt from every standpoint but this one, that I can disciple men and women to the Lord Jesus. Paul was a lonely debtor in a world of repudiators. Does your brother repudiate the Redemption of Jesus? Does the net result of your life work appeal to him only on one line, the line of Redemption? Does he take no account of you on any other line? Never let anything deter you from spending for other souls every ounce of spiritual energy God gives you. There will be an actual manifestation of the Redemption in lives presently. Whatever you spend of yourself in the fulfilling of your sense of spiritual honour will come back to you in absolute recreation, physical and moral and spiritual.

If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. (1 John 5:16)

Quit praying about yourself, and be spent in vicarious intercession as the bondslave of Jesus. How many souls have we failed to bring through to God because of our crass unbelief in prayer? Jesus Christ places the emphasis on intercessory prayer—"He that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto the Father. And whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask Me anything in My name, that will I do" (RV). That is reality; that is actuality! The actuality will take place—the almighty interaction of God on other lives in answer to prayer based on Redemption, not to prayer based on human sympathy or human plaintiveness. When we pray on the fundamental basis of the Redemption, our prayers are made efficacious by the personal presence of the Holy Ghost Who makes real in us what Jesus did for us. How God works in answer to prayer is a mystery that logic cannot penetrate, but that He does work in answer to prayer is gloriously true. We all have faith in God, but is our faith pre-eminent when it comes into contact with actualities? Our part in intercessory prayer is not to enter into the agony of intercession, but to utilise the common-sense circumstances God has placed us in, and the common-sense people He has put us amongst by His providence, to bring them before God's throne and give the Holy Spirit a chance to intercede for them. That is how God is going to sweep the whole world with His saints.

Am I banking in unshaken faith on the Redemption of Jesus Christ? Is it my conviction among men that every man can be presented "perfect in Christ Jesus"? Or do I allow men's sins and wrongs so to obliterate the power of the Redemption that I sink under them? Jesus said—he that believeth on Me, out of him "shall flow rivers of living water," i.e., by active belief in Jesus based on the Redemption, and by prayer and service based on that same Redemption.

VISION, VALLEY, VERITY

Tennyson

It is always well to go back to the foundation truths revealed in God's word regarding what He expects of the man or woman who wishes to be what He wants. "Called to be saints," that is what God expects.

Thank God for the sight of all you have never yet been. The vision is not an ecstasy or a dream, but a perfect understanding of what God wants, it is the Divine light making manifest the calling of God. You may call the vision an emotion or a desire, but it is something that absorbs you. Learn to thank God for making known His demands. You have had the vision, but you are not there yet by any means. You have seen what God wants you to be but what you are not yet. Are you prepared to have this "iron dug from central gloom" battered into "shape and use"? "Battering" conveys the idea of a blacksmith putting good metal into right useful shape. The batterings of God come in commonplace days and commonplace ways, God is using the anvil to bring us into the shape of the vision. The length of time it takes God to do it depends upon us. If we prefer to loll on the mount of transfiguration, to live on the memory of the vision, we are of no use to live with the ordinary stuff of which human life is made up. We have not to live always in ecstasy and conscious contemplation of God, but to live in reliance on what we saw in the vision when we are in the midst of actualities. It is when we are going through the valley to prove whether we will be the "choice" ones, that most of us turn tail; we are not prepared for the blows which must come if we are going to be turned into the shape of the vision. It does not matter with what the vision is connected, there is always something that corresponds to the valley of humiliation. God gives us the vision, then He takes us down to the valley to batter us into its shape, and it is in the valley that we faint and give way, while all the time God is wanting to get us through to the veritable reality.

Abraham

In Genesis 15:1, we read "After these things the word of the LORD came unto Abram in a vision, saying, Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." After the vision there followed the valley of humiliation, and Abraham went through thirteen years of silence. Genesis 16 is an illustration of the danger of listening to good advice when it is dark instead of waiting for God to send the light. The act of Abraham and Sarah produced a complexity in God's plan all down the ages. The intervening years brought Abraham through his valley of humiliation. During those years of silence all Abraham's self-sufficiency was destroyed, every strand of selfreliance was broken; there was no possibility left of relying on common-sense ways, and when Abraham had exhausted all human strength and wisdom, then God appeared to him. "And when Abram was ninety years old and nine, the LORD appeared to Abram, and said unto him, I am the Almighty God; walk before Me, and be thou perfect" (Genesis 17:1). No vision this time, but Reality. Abraham, after his humiliation, was in a fit state to stand the reward— God Himself. Abraham became a man more sure of God than of anything else.

The one thing for which we are all being disciplined is to know that God is real. As soon as God becomes real, other people become shadows. Nothing that other saints do or say can ever perturb the one who is built on the real God. "In all the world, my God, there is none but thee, there is none but thee."

The danger is to try to anticipate the actual fulfilment of the real vision. On the mount of transfiguration we saw clearly a vision of what God wanted, and we transacted business with God spiritually; then immediately afterwards there was nothing but blank darkness. Remember Isaiah's word—"Who is among you . . . that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the LORD, and stay upon his God." The temptation is to work up enthusiasm, to kindle a fire of our own and walk in the light of it. God's "nothings" are His most positive answers. We have to stay on God and wait. Never try to help God to fulfil His word.

Moses

And it came to pass in those days, when Moses was grown, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their burdens. (Exodus 2:11)

That is an indication of the vision of God's purpose for Moses, viz., the deliverance of his brethren. It is a great moment in a man's life when he realises that he has to go a solitary way alone. Moses was "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians," a man in a royal setting by the providence of God, and he saw the burden of God's people, and his whole heart and mind was ablaze with the vision that he was the man to deliver them. He was the man to deliver his people, but not yet, there was something in the road, and God sent him into the wilderness to feed sheep for forty years. Imagine what those years must have meant to Moses, realising on the threshold of his manhood the vision of what he was to do; seeing, as no one else could see, the burdens of his people, and feeling in himself the certainty that he was the one to deliver them; how he would ponder over God's ways during those forty years.

Then we read that God appeared to Moses and said—"Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt" (Exodus 3:10). At first, Moses was certain that he was the one to deliver his people; but forty years have passed since he had the vision, and there is a different characteristic in Moses now. It is no longer the big "I am," but the little "I am." When God came with a renewal of the call, Moses had the quaver of the little "I am"—"Who am I, that I should go?" The little "I am" always sulks when God says Do. And the Almighty's reply to Moses is full of stirring indignation—"I AM THAT I AM" hath sent thee. The big "I am" and the little "I am" have to go until there is no "I am" but God, He must dominate. Let the little "I am" be shrivelled up in God's indignation. Is it not illuminating how God knows where we are, and the kennels we crawl into, no matter how much straw we hide under! He will hunt us up like a lightning flash. No human being knows human beings as God does.

"Behold, there is a place by Me, and thou shalt stand upon a rock" (Exodus 33:21). Moses has come to the Reality of all realities, recognition by God. The place in God's mind for Moses was by Him on the rock, recognised by God as His true yoke fellow. Nothing can deflect the life that has once been placed by God on the rock. After the forty years of humiliation Moses was in a fit state to receive the recognition of God without being unduly lifted up.

"There is a place by Me. . . ." No man ever gets beside God who has not first been beside himself and knocked out of his wits with worry and anxiety about the mess he has made of things. That is the meaning of conviction of sin, the realisation—"What a fool I have been! how wicked and vile! and I ought to have been this and that!"

Moses' experience was of the type in which the certainty is brought home that God has been preparing you for something, and you realise that you have the power potentially to do what He wants. You can recall the perfect reality of the vision, the clear understanding of what God said to you then. You say—"I know He said it, I almost saw Him, it was so real. I know God called me to be a missionary—but it was a long time ago, and I suppose I was mistaken, for look at me now, something in an office." You know you were not mistaken. The call was right, but you were not ready for it. God has to season us, there has to be a time of humiliation before the vision is turned into verity. We have to learn not only how useless we are, but how marvellously mighty God is. "Many are called, but few prove the choice ones."

Think of the enormous leisure of God! He never is in a hurry. We are in such a frantic hurry. We get down before God and pray, then we get up and say, "It is all done now," and in the light of the glory of the vision we go forth to do the thing. But it is not real, and God has to take us into the valley and put us through fires and floods to batter us into shape, until we get into the condition in which He can trust us with the reality of His recognition of us.

Isaiah

In the year that King Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and His train filled the temple. (Isaiah 6:1)

Isaiah's vision stands for another type of the call of God. In the profound grief of the greatest bereavement of his life, Isaiah saw the Lord, and right on top of the vision came deep and profound dejection on account of his sin and unworthiness. "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts." The effect of the vision of the holiness of the Lord was to bring home to Isaiah that he was a man of unclean lips; there was deep dejection at his utter unfitness to be anything like what he had seen. Then the live coal from off the altar was laid upon his mouth—the cleansing fire was applied where the sin had been concentrated, and in the communion with God resulting from his intense spiritual cleansing, Isaiah overheard God say, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for Us?" and from heartbreak and disenchantment to simple humble attachment, he said: "Here am I; send me." Isaiah was made the Representative of God.

Each one of us has a counterpart somewhere in the experiences of these three men of God. In the case of Abraham, the valley of humiliation lasted thirteen years; Moses, forty years; Isaiah, a few minutes. No two of us are alike, each one stands alone before God. Your valley may be a darkness where you have nothing but your duty to guide you, no voice, no thrill, but just steady, plodding duty; or it may be a deep agonising dejection at the realisation of your unfitness and uncleanness and insufficiency. Let God put you on His wheel and whirl you as He likes, and as sure as God is God and you are you, you will turn out exactly in accordance with the vision He gave you. Don't lose heart in the process.

If ever we have had the vision—and all of us probably have had, it may have been when we were little children, or when we were very ill, or after a bereavement—we may try as we like to be satisfied on a lower level, but God will not let us. The goads of God are in, and it is hard to kick against them. Ever since we first had the vision, God has been at work getting us through the valley of humiliation, battering us into the shape of the vision, and over and over again we have tried to get out of God's hands and batter ourselves into our own shape—"Now this is the place I must be in; this is what the vision means." Keep paying the price. Let God see that you are willing to live up to the vision.

OUR LORD'S SURPRISE VISITS

Let your loins be girded about, and your lamps burning; and be ye yourselves like unto men looking for their lord.... For in an hour that ye think not the Son of man cometh. (Luke 12:35–36, 40 RV)

The greatest need of the missionary is to be ready to face Jesus Christ at any and every turn, and it is not easy to be ready to do that, whatever our experience of sanctification may be. The great battle all along is not so much against sin, as against being so absorbed in work that we are not ready to face Jesus Christ. The one great need is not to face our beliefs and our creeds, or the question whether we are of any use or not, but to face our Lord. This attitude of being ready to face Him means more and more disentanglement from so-called religious work, and more and more intense spiritual reality in so-called secular work. The whole meaning of the Christian life from Our Lord's standpoint is to be ready for Him.

The element of surprise is always the note of the life of the Holy Ghost in us. We are born again by the great surprise—"The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the voice thereof, but knowest not whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit" (John 3:8 RV). Men cannot tie up the wind, it blows where it lists; neither can the work of the Holy Spirit be tied up in logical methods. Jesus never comes where we expect Him; if He did, He would not have said "Watch." Be ye also ready: for in an hour when ye think not the Son of man cometh" (RV). Jesus appears in the most illogical connections, where we least expect Him, and the only way a worker can keep true to God amidst the difficulties of work either in this country or in heathen lands is to be ready for His surprise visits. We have not to depend on the prayers of other people, not to look for the sympathy of God's children, but to be ready for the Lord. It is this intense reality of expecting Him at every turn that gives life the attitude of child wonder that Jesus wants it to have. When we are rightly related to God, life is full of spontaneous joyful uncertainty and expectancy—we do not know what God is going to do next; and He packs our life with surprises all the time.

That is the line on which Our Lord always comes, and the line we are apt not to look for Him. It comes home in ways like this: You have prepared a sermon or an address very carefully and feel that God gave you a good time in the delivery of it, but nothing happens. At another time you talk without much consideration, and suddenly there comes the certainty—"Why, that is the Lord! that was said by Him, not by me." Beware of the idea that we can tie the Lord Jesus up by spiritual logic: "This is where He will come, and that is where He will not come." If we are going to be ready for Jesus whenever He comes, we must stop being religious—using religion as a kind of higher culture, and become spiritually real, alert and ready for Him.

Let your loins be girded about.

It is impossible to run in the loose Eastern garments unless they are girt up. The writer to the Hebrews counsels us to "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth closely cling to us" (RV mg). He is not speaking of inbred sin, but of the circumambient sin, the spirit of the religious age in which we live, which will entangle the feet of the saint and hinder his running the race. Loose, trailing, uninspired thinking about sin will very soon trip us up. Gird up your thinking about sin, about holiness, about the eternal realities and the call of the unseen things. It is amazing to see the unreadiness of even some of the most spiritual people, they are continually clogged and tripped up by the wrong thing. It we are looking to Jesus and avoiding the spirit of the religious age in which we live, and setting our hearts on thinking along Jesus Christ's lines, we shall be called unpractical and dreamy; but when He appears in the burden and the heat of the day, we alone shall be ready. When you meet a man or woman who puts Jesus Christ first, knit that one to your soul.

And your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men [looking for their lord, RV].

Am I like a man looking for his Lord where no one sees me but God? In my study, am I a woolgatherer or like a man looking for his Lord? Am I like a man looking for his Lord in my home, in my contact with other people—is the lamp of conscience trimmed and burning there? Our Lord does not trim the lamp, we have to, and it is not done once for all, but once and for always, i.e., always now. Conscience in a saint will make him look after his scruples according to the light of God. As servants of God in other lands you will have to go among people whose lives are twisted and perverted by unconscious corruption, but if your conscience is as a lamp trimmed and burning, then the Lord can visit others through you at any second.

Is the lamp of your affections burning clear? If not, you will lose out in that way quicker than in any other. Inordinate affection means that you have allowed convictions to go to the winds. Keep the centre of your heart for Jesus Christ and watch inordinate affection as you would the devil. There is more reason to be found there as to why Christians are not ready for Jesus Christ's surprise visits than anywhere else.

Is the lamp of hope burning bright? "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself." And what a hope it is! "We shall see Him as He is." "Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when He cometh shall find watching."

Do you imagine that there will be crowds to come up to that standard? Jesus said No, it is one here and one there, always a "little flock." Our Lord is not talking of salvation, but about being His servants. Whenever Jesus got down to His truth, the crowds left Him (see John 6:66). To-day the craze is for crowds.

The one great need for the missionary is to be ready for Jesus Christ, and we cannot be ready unless we have seen Him. We must trust no one, not the finest saint who ever walked this earth, if once he hinders our sight of Jesus. It is Jesus Christ we have to be ready to meet; Jesus Christ for whom we must work.

Readiness implies a light relationship to God and a knowledge of where we are at present. We are so busy telling God where we should like to go. Most of us are waiting for some great opportunity, something that is sensational, then we cry—"Here am I; send me." Whenever Jesus is in the ascendant, in revival times, when the exciting moment comes, we are there; but readiness for God and for His work means that we are ready to do the tiniest thing or the great big thing, it makes no difference. We are so built that we must have sympathy or we will never do our best; but this instinct is apt to be prostituted unless we get burned into our hearts an understanding of what Jesus said: "Lo, I am with you all the days" (RV mg). He is the one Who is surrounding us, listening and sympathising and encouraging. Our audience is God, not God's people, but God Himself. The saint who realises that can never be discouraged, no matter where he goes. The audience of the ready saint is God, He is the arena of all his actions. To know that God is the One Who sympathises and understands and watches us will bring the ready soul into touch and sympathy with God. What we lack to-day is sympathy with God's point of view. When once we get into sympathy with God, He will bring us into touch with His purposes and with the real needs of men and women.

"Ye shall be My witnesses" (RV). To be a witness of Jesus means that when any duty presents itself we hear His voice just as He heard His Father's voice, and we are ready for it with all the alertness of our love for Him. The knowledge that Jesus expects to do with us as His Father did with Him becomes the closely imbedded conception of our lives. "I can put you where I like, in pleasant duties or in mean? ones; you will know that I know where you are because the union is that of My Father and Myself"—"one as We are." That is the only simplicity there is, the simplicity of a heart relationship to Jesus. Beware of believing that the human soul is simple, or that human life is simple. Our relationship to God in Christ is the only simple thing there is. If the devil succeeds in making this relationship complicated, then the human soul and human life will appear to be simple; whereas in reality they are far too complex for us to touch. That is why Paul said "I fear, lest . . . your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ Jesus." We have to keep that pristine simplicity free from anything like tarnish.

Be ready for the sudden surprise visits of Our Lord, and remember there is no such thing as prominent service and obscure service; it is all the same with God, and God knows better than ourselves what we are ready to do. Think of the time we waste trying to get ready when God gives the call! A ready person never needs to get ready. The bush that burned with fire and was not consumed is the symbol for everything that surrounds the ready saint. Anyone can see an ordinary bush, the ready soul sees it ablaze with God.

THE "GO" OF PREPARATION

Matthew 5:23-24

Nerve us with patience, Lord, to toil or rest,
Toiling at rest on our allotted level,
Unsnared, unscared by world or flesh or devil,
Fulfilling the good will of Thy behest.
Not careful here to hoard, not here to revel,
But waiting for our treasure and our zest
Beyond the fading splendour of the west,
Beyond this deathstruck life and deadlier evil.
Not with the sparrow building here a house,
But with the swallow tabernacling, so as still to poise alert, to rise and go
On eager wings, with wing outspeeding wills, Beyond earth's gourds and past her almond boughs,— past utmost bound of the everlasting hills.

Christina G. Rosetti

Preparation is not something suddenly accomplished, but a process steadily maintained. It is easy to imagine that we get to a settled state of experience where we are complete and ready; but in work for God it is always preparation and preparation. Moral preparation comes before intellectual preparation, because moral integrity is of more practical value than any amount of mental insight.

1. Moral Preparation

In writing to the Philippians Paul mentions two "perfections": "not as though I . . . were already perfect" (3:12); "Let us therefore, as many as be perfect . . ." (3:15). The first refers to the perfection of attainment; the second to the perfection of adjustment to God. When by the experience of sanctification we are in perfect adjustment to God, we can begin to live the perfect life, that is, we can begin to attain. A child is a perfect human being, so is a man; what is the difference? The one is not yet grown, the other is full grown. When we are sanctified, we are perfectly adjusted to God, but we have done nothing yet, we are simply perfectly fit to begin. The whole life is right, undeserving of censure in the sight of God; now we can begin to attain in our bodily life, to prove that we are perfectly adjusted. Somewhere in the metropolis there exists what is probably a unique museum of broken materials used in engineering works. It is a splendidly organised testing laboratory wherein have been held many practical tests upon materials which have failed. The museum is used not only to discover the cause of the breakdown in the material, but also to test substances which it is proposed to employ in the construction of buildings and machinery. That is the purpose of such places as this Bible Training College—for testing the material to be used in God's service. Remember, nothing and no one can detect us saving God. We are in the quarry now and God is hewing us out. God's Spirit gathers and marks the stones, then they have to be blasted out of their holdings by the dynamite of the Holy Ghost, to be chiselled and shaped, and then lifted into the heavenly places. God grant that many may go through the quarrying and the chiselling and the placing. Think of the scrutiny of Jesus Christ that each one of us has to face! Think of His eyes fastening on us and pointing us out before God as He says—"Father, that is My work; that is the meaning of Gethsemane, that is the meaning of Calvary. I did all that man's work in him, all that woman's work in her; now You can use them."

^{9.} The word mean as used here refers to something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

(a) Heroism and Sacrifice If therefore thou art offering thy gift at the altar . . . (Matthew 5:23 RV)

The Jews were scrupulous over external purity, and if on the way to the Temple to offer his paschal lamb, a man should recollect that he had leaven in his house, he had to hasten back and remove the leaven; and then when he had purged his house, carry his offering to the altar.

The sense of the heroic appeals readily to a young Christian. Take Peter, for instance. Humanly speaking, Peter was attracted to Jesus by his sense of the heroic. When Jesus said "Follow Me," Peter followed at once; it was no cross to him. It would have been a bigger cross not to follow, for the spell of Jesus Christ was on him. We are apt to under-estimate this enthusiastic sense of the heroic. It would be a terrible thing to be incapable of it, a terrible thing to be incapable of making such a declaration as Peter made—"I will lay down my life for Thy sake." Peter meant what he said, but he did not know himself. The scrutiny of our Lord's words brings the tide of enthusiasm suddenly to the test. Many of us have come to the altar for service, but are we willing to bind the sacrifice with cords to the horns of the altar? The altar means fire—burning and purification and insulation for one purpose, to detach us to God. Along with the sense of the heroic, there is a base element of selfishness, a lurking desire to fix the scenery of our own martyrdom. We feel if only we could fix the place and the spectators, we could go all lengths. But God fixes the place.

The illustration Our Lord used in Matthew 5:21–22 is unfamiliar to us, but the application is familiar. He is illustrating the descending scale of wrong tempers of mind. An angry man was in danger of being brought before the rulers for judgement; a contemptuous, disdainful man was regarded in the same way as a blasphemer and was brought before the ruler of the Sanhedrin; the man who gave way to abuse was in danger of being classed with criminals and flung out on the scrap heaps where the fires burned up the rubbish.

(b) Hardship and Sensitiveness and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee . . .

Not—"there you rake up by a morbid sensitiveness," but—"there you remember," the inference is that it is brought to your conscious mind by the Spirit of God. Never object to the intense sensitiveness of the Holy Spirit in you when He is educating you down to the scruple. 10 When we are first put right with God, it is the great general principles that are at work, then God begins to make the conscience sensitive here and there. Don't quench the Spirit. His checks are so tiny that common sense cannot detect them. If there is a sense of being out of touch with God, then at the peril of your soul you go and ask someone else what you have done wrong, you must go direct to God. The other soul is never so keen as the Spirit of God. When He checks, never debate, but obey at once. It is not a question of having had the law of God put in front of our mind: "This is what you must do and that is what you must not do," and then deliberate disobedience on our part. It is more an instinct of the spirit, an instantaneous feeling, a still small voice which we can easily quench; but if we do quench it, we become soiled, and every time the check comes and we do not heed it, the soiling is deepened. "Grieve not the . . . Spirit." He does not come with a voice like thunder, with strong emphatic utterance—that may come ultimately; but at the beginning His voice is as gentle as a zephyr. At the same time it carries an imperative compulsion—we know the voice must be obeyed.

The "go" of preparation is to let the word of God scrutinise. We are full of the sense of heroic sacrifice, and it seems hard to be reminded of things that happened in the past; but the thing that the Holy Spirit is detecting is that disposition in us that will never work in His service.

Over and over again men have gone into work for God in order to evade concentration on God on these lines. The note of false enthusiasm is the condition of the heathen. The need is made the call; but it is an artificial enthusiasm. No enthusiasm for humanity will ever stand the strain that Jesus Christ will put on His workers. Only one thing will stand the strain, and that is the personal relationship to Jesus of a man or woman who has gone through the mill of God's spring-cleaning until there is one purpose only—"I am here for God to use me as He wills."

^{10.} down to the scruple: to the smallest item.

2. Mental Preparation

(a) Direction by First Impulse
Leave there thy gift before the altar...

When God shows you there is something to do, don't be sulky with God; and don't say—"Oh well, I suppose after all God does not want me." Don't affect a heaviness of soul because other missionaries are not what they ought to be; don't criticise the missionary society you belong to. Our Lord's instruction is that you leave your gift and go; take your direction from the conviction He gave you when you first offered yourself to Him. Have nothing to hide from God. If you have, then let God riddle you with His light. If there is sin, confess it, not admit it. Are you willing to obey your Lord and Master in this particular, no matter what the humiliation may be to your right to yourself?

(b) Departure to the Former Condition And go thy way . . .

Our Lord's direction is simple—Go back the way you came, and put that thing right. Never put a thing aside because it is insignificant. If you trace it down, the insignificant thing has at the back of it the disposition of my right to myself. Trace a scruple to its base and you find a pyramid; if you deal with the scruple, God will deal with the pyramid. The thing itself may be a detail, it is the disposition behind that is wrong, the refusal to give up your right to yourself—the thing God intends us to do if we are ever going to be disciples. Never discard a conviction; if it is important enough for the Spirit of God to have brought it to your mind, that is the thing He is detecting. You were looking for a great big thing to do, and God is telling you of some tiny thing; but at the back of the tiny thing is the central citadel of obstinacy. "Do you think I am going to humiliate myself? Besides, if I do this thing, it will cause others to stumble." No one will ever stumble because of us if we do what is right and obey what God indicates. Never remain true to a former confession of faith when God's Spirit indicates there is something else for you to do. Go the way indicated by the conviction given you at the altar. It is marvellous what God detects in us for His spring-cleaning!

3. Spiritual Preparation

(a) The Unblameable Attitude in Human Life first be reconciled to thy brother . . .

"Unblameable" does not mean faultless, but undeserving of censure. Jesus is saying—Have an attitude of mind and temper of spirit to the one who has something against you that makes reconciliation as natural and as easy as breathing. Jesus does not mention the other person. He says—you go. There is no question of rights. The stamp of the saint is that he can waive his own rights and obey the Lord Jesus. That is the temper of soul to be in all through, unblameable in our attitude towards one another. Our Lord demands that there be not a trace of resentment even suppressed. A wrong temper of mind is the most blameworthy thing there is. It is not only what we say but what we think that tells.

(b) The Unblameable Attitude in Divine Life . . . and then come and offer thy gift.

The process is clearly marked by Our Lord: first, the heroic spirit of sacrifice, then the sudden checking by the sensitiveness of the Holy Spirit; the stoppage at the point of conviction, and the going in obedience to God's word; constructing an unblameable attitude of mind and temper to the one with whom we were wrong, and then the glad, simple, unhindered offering of our gift to God.

THE "GO" OF RENUNCIATION

Luke 9:57-62

Braver souls for truth may bleed;
Ask us not of noble deed!
Small our share in Christ's redemption—
From His war we claim exemption.
Not for us the cup was drained;
Not for us the crown of thorn
On His bleeding brow was borne:
Not for us the spear was stained
With the blood from out His side,
Not for us the Crucified.
Let His hands and feet be torn!
On the list we come but low:
Not for us the cross was taken,
Us no bugle call can waken
To the combat, soldier fashion.

Missionary enterprise, to be Christian, must be based on the passion of obedience, not on the pathos of pity. The thing that moves us to-day is pity for the multitude; the thing that makes a missionary is the sight of what Jesus did on the Cross, and to have heard Him say "Go." Jesus Christ pays no attention whatever to our sentiment. In the New Testament the emphasis is not on the needs of men, but on the command of Christ, "Go ye." The only safeguard in Christian work is to go steadily back to first principles.

1. The Rigour of Rejection (Luke 9:57–58) (a) The Declaration of Dignified Devotion

And there came a scribe [mg "one scribe"—implying a scribe of the ruling class] and said unto Him, Master, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest. (Matthew 8:19 RV)

Any remnant of consciousness that position in society, or profession, is of value to Jesus is rigorously rejected by Our Lord. The first thing we think of is just that very thing—"If that man were saved, what a wonderful influence he would be for Jesus Christ." Any sense that the cause of Christ will be benefited if I give myself to it, or any trace of listening to the suggestion of others that I should be of value in my Lord's service, receives no encouragement from Jesus. The ruggedness of Our Lord's presentation of things strikes us as being very harsh. All He said to this man was—"The foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay His head." Our Lord is no respecter of persons. We would have treated this man very differently—"Fancy losing the opportunity of that man!" "Fancy bringing a north wind about him that froze him and turned him away discouraged!" We do respect persons; we do place confidence in the flesh. We need to go back to the centre of the Christian faith, the Cross of Jesus Christ. It is not a question of education nor of personal qualifications, but of understanding Who Jesus is, and knowing what He has done for us.

What is the test we put first for work at home or abroad? Sentimentally, we put the call of God first, but actually we are inclined to fix on the abilities of certain people. Our Lord pays not the remotest attention to natural abilities or natural virtues; He heeds only one thing—Does that man discern Who I am? does he know the meaning of My Cross? The men and women Jesus Christ is going to use in His enterprises are those in whom He has done everything. Our Lord lays down the conditions of discipleship in Luke 14:26–27, 33, and implies that the only men and women He will use in His building enterprises are those who love Him personally, passionately and devotedly, beyond any of the closest relationships on earth.

(b) The Detection of Discernment

But Jesus did not trust Himself unto them, for that He knew all men, . . . for He Himself knew what was in man. (John 2:24–25 RV)

Always take these words of Jesus into account in interpreting His replies, and you will learn never to apologise for your Lord. Our Lord's attitude to this particular scribe was one of severe discouragement, because He knew what was in him. Jesus Christ's answers are never based on caprice, but on a knowledge of what is in man. The answers of Jesus hurt and offend until there is nothing left to hurt or offend (cf. Matthew 11:6). If we have never been hurt by a statement of Jesus, it is questionable whether we have ever really heard Him speak. Jesus Christ has no tenderness whatever towards anything that is ultimately going to ruin a man for the service of God. If the Spirit of God brings to our mind a word of the Lord that hurts, we may be perfectly certain there is something He wants to hurt to death.

The rigour of rejection leaves nothing but my Lord and myself and a forlorn hope. "Let the hundredfold come or go," says Jesus, "your lodestar must be your relationship to Me, and I have nowhere to lay My head."

(c) The Discouragement of Drastic Discipline Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I am about to drink? (Matthew 20:22)

The words of Jesus to the scribe knock the heart out of self-consciousness in service for Jesus, serving Jesus because it pleases one's self. Jesus told him that if he followed Him he would be homeless and possessionless. Do you expect to be a successful worker for Jesus if you are a disciple of His? Then you are doomed to a discouraging disappointment. Our Lord never called us to successful service; He calls us to present Him: "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." God saves men; we are sent out to present Jesus Christ and His Cross, and to disciple the souls He saves. The reason we do not make disciples is that we are not disciples ourselves, we are out for our own ends.

2. The Rally of Reluctance (Luke 9:59–60) (a) The Solicitation of the Lord And He said unto another, Follow Me.

Jesus said "Follow Me" to a man who was straightway awakened into a ferment of sensitive apprehension. When the call of God begins to dawn, we are full of "Why," and "But," and "What will happen if I do?" This man did not want to disappoint Jesus, nor to hurt his father. When Jesus called him, he was staggered into sensitive apprehension.

(b) The Sensitiveness of the Loyal Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father.

When Jesus calls, there is the ordeal of conflicting loyalties. Probably the most intense discipline we have to go through is that of learning loyalty to God by the path of what looks like disloyalty to our friends. This is stated in its profoundest form in Luke 14:26—"If any man cometh unto Me, and hateth not his own father mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple" (RV). Learn to estimate the disproportion in your loyalties. A man will put his Lord to open shame before he will be disloyal to a friend. But when any soul learns how to lay down his life for his Friend, Jesus Christ, other people promptly become shadows until they become realities in Him. When a sense of loyalty to father or mother perplexes you, picture Jesus showing to you His pierced hands and feet, and wounded side, and thorn-crowned head, and hear Him say-"Think, what that must have meant to My mother, and it is I Who call you to follow Me." No one could have had a more sensitive love in human relationship than Jesus; and yet He says there are times when love to father and mother must be hatred in comparison to our love for Him. The sense of loyalty to father or mother or friends may easily slander Jesus because it implies that He does not understand our duty to them. If Jesus had been loyal to His earthly mother, He would have been a traitor to His Father's purpose. Obedience to the call of Christ nearly always costs everything to two people—the one who is called, and the one who loves that one. We put sensitive loyalty to relationships in place of loyalty to Jesus; every other love is put first, and He has to take the last place. We will readily give up sin and worldliness, but God calls us to give up the very closest, noblest and most right tie we have, if it enters into competition with His call. Beware of the inclination to dictate to God as to what you will allow to happen if you obey Him.

(c) The Strenuousness of the Leaving

But He said unto him, leave the dead to bury their own dead; but go thou and publish abroad the kingdom of God. (RV)

These words sound stern, but it must be remembered that Jesus spoke them to only one class of men, to the man who realised his duty to his father. There are only too many who are willing to leave father and mother to preach the gospel in other lands. Always keep our Lord's sayings in their setting, and before taking a word of Jesus for yourself, see that yours is a similar case. In a conflict of loyalties, obey Jesus at all costs, and you will find that He will remember your mother, as He remembered His own mother on the Cross.

3. The Renunciation of Reservations (Luke 9:61–62)

The blind devotion of the first enthusiasm has to be pulled down into discipline.

(a) The Volunteer of Enthusiasm And another also said, Lord, I will follow Thee; but . . .

The one who says "Yes, Lord, but . . ." is always the one who is fiercely ready, but never goes. This man had one or two reservations, and one of them was that he wanted a valedictory service.

(b) The Vacillation of Endearments

First suffer me to bid farewell to them that are at my house. (RV)

Beware of the vacillation that comes through thinking of the "Marys" and "Johns" I love at home—my little mission, my church, my native place; it is apt to develop into wanting to fix the scene of your own martyrdom. The exacting call of Jesus leaves no margins of good-byes, because "Good-bye" as it is often used, is pagan, not Christian.

(c) The Voice of Exactitude

No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

In order to plough a straight furrow, you must look neither at the plough nor behind you, but at the far end of the field ahead. When once the call of God comes, begin to go and never stop going, no matter how many delightful resting places there may be on the way.

Christ's call is "Follow Me." Our attitude ought to be—"Lord, if it be Thou, bid me come unto Thee," and Jesus will say "Come."

THE "GO" OF UNCONDITIONAL IDENTIFICATION

Mark 10:17-24

Then came a slow
And strangling failure...
... Yet felt somehow
A mighty power was brooding, taking shape
Within me; and this lasted till one night
When, as I sat revolving it and more,
A still voice from without said—
"Seest thou not,
Desponding child, whence spring defeat and loss?
Even from thy strength...
... Know, not for knowing's sake,
But to become a star to men forever;
Know, for the gain it gets, the praise it brings,
The wonder it inspires, the love it breeds:
Look one step onward, and secure that step!"

Robert Browing

When the rich young ruler saw Jesus, he wanted to be like Him, he had the master passion to be perfect. Anything less than the desire to be perfect in a profession or calling is humbug, and so in religion. Beware of quibbling over the word "perfection." It does not refer to the full consummation of a man's powers, it simply means perfect fitness for doing the will of God; a perfect adjustment to God until all the powers are perfectly fitted to do His will.

1. The Look and the Loving of the Lord

And Jesus looking upon him . . . (RV)

(a) Who Is the Lord?

This question must be answered by every man—who is ruling me? In our Lord's calling of a disciple He never puts personal holiness in the front, He puts in the front absolute annihilation of my right to myself and unconditional identification with Himself—such a relationship with Him that there is no other relationship on earth in comparison. Luke 14:26 has nothing to do with salvation and sanctification, it has to do with unconditional identification with Jesus. None of us know the absolute "go" of abandon to Jesus until we are in unconditional identification with Him.

Have you ever realised Who the Lord is in your life? The call to service is not the outcome of an experience of salvation and sanctification, there must be the recognition of Jesus Christ as Lord and Master as well as Saviour. "Who say ye that I am?" (RV). That is the abiding test. Jesus Christ makes human destiny depend absolutely on Who men say He is. Membership of His Church is based on that one thing only, a recognition of Who Jesus is and the public confession of it. Any man who knows Who Jesus is has had that revelation from God. "Blessed art thou, Simon-Barjonah: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven. And I also say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build My church" (RV). What rock? The rock of the knowledge of Who Jesus is and the confession of it.

"And as He was going forth on His way [mg], there ran one to Him, . . . and asked Him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life? And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou Me good? none is good save one, even God" (Mark 10:17–18 RV). "If I am only a good man, it is of no more use to come to Me than to anyone else; but if your coming means that you discern Who I am, then comes the first condition: "If thou wouldest enter into life, keep the commandments" (RV). The rich young ruler had to realise that there is only One Who is good, viz., God; and the only "good thing" from Jesus Christ's point of view is union with that One, with nothing in between, and the steady maintenance of that union.

(b) What Is His Look?

"And Jesus looking upon him loved him" (RV). When Jesus saw the sterling worth and uprightness of the rich young ruler, He loved him. Natural virtues are lovely in the sight of Jesus, because He sees in them remnants of His Father's former handiwork.

Has Jesus ever looked at you? Get rid of your experiences as you ask yourself that question. Experiences may be a barrier to our knowing Jesus; we forget Him in being taken up with what He has done for us. The look of Jesus transforms and transfigures. His look means the heart broken for ever from allegiance to any but Himself. Where you are "soft" with God, is where the Lord has looked upon you; where you are hard and vindictive, insistent on your own way, certain that other people are more likely to be wrong than you, is where whole tracts of your nature have never been transformed by His gaze.

(c) What Is His Love?

The love of Jesus spoils us for every other interest in life save as we can disciple men and women to Him. It is woe to every other ambition when once Christ fixes His love on a man or woman consciously. The love Jesus fixed on this man resulted in the biggest sorrow he ever had—"and he went away sorrowful" (RV).

2. The Lack and Longing of the Loved (a) What Lack I Yet?

Our Lord instantly presses another penetrating IF—
"If thou wouldest be perfect . . ." (RV). Entrance into life is the recognition of Who Jesus is, and we only recognise Him by the power of the Holy Spirit. Unless this recognition of Jesus is put first, we shall present a lame type of Christianity that excludes the type of man represented by this young ruler. In the majority of cases recognition of Who Jesus is comes before conviction of sin. This second "If" is far more searching: "If thou wouldest be perfect"—then come the conditions.

Do I really want to be perfect? Do I really desire at all costs to every other interest that God should make me perfect? Can I say with Murray McCheyne¹¹—"Lord, make me as holy as You can make a saved sinner"? Is that really the desire of my heart? When we are right with God, He gives us our desires and aspirations. Our Lord had only one desire, and that was to do the will of His Father, and to have this desire is the characteristic of a disciple.

(b) One Thing Thou Lackest

Go, sell that thou hast, and give to the poor . . . and come, follow Me. (RV)

These words mean a voluntary abandoning of riches and a deliberate, devoted attachment to Jesus Christ. We are so desperately wise in our own conceit that we continually make out that Jesus did not mean what He said, and we spiritualise His meaning into thin air. Jesus saw that this man depended on his riches. If He came to you or to me He might not say that, but He would say something that dealt with whatever He saw we were depending on. "Sell that thou hast," strip yourself of every possession, disengage yourself from all things until you are a naked soul; be a man merely and then give your manhood to God. Reduce yourself until nothing remains but your consciousness of yourself, and then cast that consciousness at the feet of Jesus Christ.

(c) One Right Thing to Do

Our Lord is not talking about salvation, but—If you want to be perfect, those are the conditions; and you need not accept them unless you like, you are at perfect liberty to say—"No, thank you, I am much obliged for being delivered from hell and the abominations of sin, but this is rather too much to expect, I have my own interests in life." Sell all you have, said Jesus, barter it, obliterate it.

Never push an experience you have had into a principle by which to guide others. If you take what Jesus said to this man and make it mean that He taught we were to own nothing, you are evading what He taught, by making it external. Our Lord told the rich young ruler to loosen himself from his property because that was the thing that was holding him. The principle is one of fundamental death to possessions while being careful to use them aright.

Am I prepared to strip myself of what I possess in property, in virtues, in the estimation of others—to count all things to be loss in order to win Christ? I can be so rich in poverty, so rich in the consciousness that I am nobody, that I shall never be a disciple; and I can be so rich in the consciousness that I am somebody that I shall never be a disciple. Am I willing to be destitute even of the sense that I am destitute? It is not a question of giving up outside things, but of making myself destitute to myself, reducing myself to a mere consciousness and giving that to Jesus Christ. I must reduce myself until I am a mere conscious man, fundamentally renounce possessions of all kinds—not to save my soul, only one thing saves a man's soul, absolute reliance on the Lord Jesus—and then give that manhood to Jesus.

"Go thy way, sell . . ." Jesus did not say—Sell all you have and give the proceeds to the deserving poor; nor did He say—Consecrate all you have to My service. Jesus Christ does not claim any of our possessions. One of the most subtle errors is that God wants our possessions. He does not; they are not of any use to Him. He does not want my property, He wants myself. "Sell whatsoever you have and give the proceeds away; but as for you—you come and follow Me."

^{11.} Robert Murray McCheyne (1813-43) was a Scottish minister whose short but intense life left a great impact on Scotland.

3. The Light and Leading of the Life

And thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow Me.

(a) The Reduction and Renunciation

But when the young man heard the saying, he went away sorrowful: for he was one that had great possessions. (RV)

When he "heard the saying. . . ." When we hear a thing is not necessarily when it is spoken, but when we are in a state to listen to it and to understand. Our Lord's statements seem to be so simple and gentle, and they slip unobserved into the subconscious mind.

Then something happens in our circumstances, and up comes one of these words into our consciousness and we hear it for the first time, and it makes us reel with amazement. This man, when he heard what Jesus said, understood what He meant, he did not dispute it, he did not argue, he heard it, and he went away expressionless with sorrow. There was no doubt as to what Jesus said, no debate as to what He meant, and it produced in him a sorrow that had no words. He found he had too big an interest in the other scale, and he drooped away from Jesus in sadness, not in rebellion.

(b) The Revelation and the Riches And thou shalt have treasure in heaven. It is the trial of our faith that makes us wealthy in heaven. We want the treasure on earth all the time. We interpret answers to prayer on the material plane only, and if God does not answer there, we say He does not answer at all. "Treasure in heaven" is faith that has been tried, otherwise it is only possible gold. "Oh yes, I believe God can do everything." But have I proved that He can do one thing? If I have, the next time a trial of faith comes I can go through it smilingly, because of the wealth in my heavenly banking account.

(c) The Regulation and the Road And come, follow Me. (RV)

"Come, follow Me," not, Find out the way, but—Come. You cannot come if there is any remnant of the wrong disposition in you, because you are sure to want to direct God. "Come unto Me"! these words were spoken to men who had felt the appeal of the Highest, the aspiration, the longing, the master passion to be perfect—"Come unto Me," and I will rest you, stay you, poise you; "take My yoke upon you and learn of Me," and you will discover rest all along the way. "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me." The road is the way He went. "I will make the place of My feet glorious." Where is the place of His feet? Among the poor, the sick and sorrowful, among the bad and devil-possessed, among the hypocrites. And He says, "Follow Me—there."

THE "GO" OF SACRAMENTAL SERVICE

Matthew 5:41

Lord, I have fallen again—a human clod!
Selfish I was, and heedless to offend;
Stood on my rights. Thy own child would not send Away his shreds of nothing for the whole God!
Wretched, to thee who savest, low I bend:
Give me the power to let my rag-rights¹² go
In the great wind that from thy gulf doth blow.

Keep me from wrath, let it seem ever so right:
My wrath will never work thy righteousness.
Up, up the hill, to the whiter than snow-shine,
Help me to climb, and dwell in pardon's light.
I must be pure as thou, or ever less
Than thy design of me—therefore incline
My heart to take men's wrongs as thou tak'st mine.

George MacDonald

To go the second mile means always do your duty, and a great deal more than your duty, in a spirit of loving devotion that does not even know you have done it. If you are a saint the Lord will tax your walking capacity to the limit. The supreme difficulty is to go the second mile with God, because no one understands why you are being such a fool.

The summing up of Our Lord's teaching is that it is impossible to carry it out unless He has done a supernatural work in us. The Sermon on the Mount is not an ideal, because an ideal must have as its working power the possibility of its realisation in the disposition obsessed by it. "Love your enemies"; "Give to him that asketh thee"; these things have no place in the natural disposition of a man. Jesus Christ is the only One Who can fulfil the Sermon on the Mount.

^{12.} rag rights: self-righteousness; see Isaiah 64:6.

We have to face ourselves with the teaching of Jesus, and see that we do not wilt it away. The demands Our Lord makes on His disciples are to be measured by His own character. The Sermon on the Mount is the statement of the working out in actuality of the disposition of Jesus Christ in the life of any man.

Have we really come to the conclusion that if we are ever to be disciples it must be by being made disciples supernaturally? As long as we have the endeavour and the strain and the dead-set purpose of being disciples, it is almost certain we are not. Our Lord's making of a disciple is supernatural; He does not build on any natural capacity. "Ye did not choose Me, but I chose you" (RV). That is always the way the grace of God begins to work, it is a constraint we cannot get away from. We can disobey it, but we cannot generate it. The drawing power is the supernatural grace of God, and we can never trace where that work begins. We have to choose to obey, and He does all the rest. To face ourselves with the standards of Jesus produces not delight, but despair to begin with; but immediately we get to despair we are willing to come to Jesus as paupers and to receive from Him. Despair is the initial gateway to delight in faith.

1. The Dangers of Intensity on Alien Ground

In Our Lord's day the class known as Zealots hated the Roman dominance with an intensity of detestation; they would bow their heads and have their necks severed by the Roman sword rather than obey the tyrant. Just as the early disciples of Jesus were on alien ground politically, so as disciples of the Lord we are on alien ground in this world. The intensity of early devotion to Jesus must make for fanaticism to begin with. An intense person sees nothing, feels nothing, and does nothing unless it be violently. There was a difference between the disciples of John the Baptist and the disciples of Jesus. John taught his disciples asceticism, there was no sociability about him. When Jesus came He was not marked by intense religious zeal in the way everyone else was. External intensities marked the religious age in which Jesus lived, but they did not mark Him. Our Lord did not identify Himself with the cause of the Zealots: but He laid down His life as the Servant of Jehovah. We bring an alien atmosphere to the New Testament. Nowadays many would sum up Jesus as an idle man.

(a) The Direction by Impulse

In the training of the early disciples Our Lord persistently checked impulse, and Peter, the most impulsive of them all, got rebuke after rebuke for obeying impulse. Watch how the Spirit of God checks whenever we obey impulse. His checks always bring a rush of self-conscious foolishness, and instantly we want to vindicate ourselves. Impulse must be disciplined into intuition. There was nothing of the nature of impulse about Our Lord, nor of cold-bloodedness, but a calm strength that was never disturbed by panic. Most of us develop our Christianity along the line of our temperament, not along the line of God. To try and develop Christianity along the line of impulse is an impertinence when viewed alongside the strong Son of God. Some of us are like grasshoppers spiritually. Impulse is a natural trait in natural life, but in spiritual things Our Lord absolutely checks it because it always hinders. Discipleship is built not on natural affinities but entirely on the supernatural grace of God. The one characteristic of discipleship is likeness to Jesus Christ.

(b) The Dissipation of Impressions

All human beings have some kind of affinity for everything God has made. Our Lord deliberately reduces the impressions arising from these natural affinities until He gets the heart established in grace. In Luke 14:26 Our Lord mentions the closest affinities, all of which have been created by God, and yet He says there are times when a man must hate them. Notice how your nature reacts when you listen to some of the stern teaching of the Bible. There is a feeling of outrage, and yet at the same time the certainty that it is right. God's original order was that there should be no sin, therefore every natural affinity could be indulged in; but sin entered in, and consequently when we become disciples the first thing we have to do is to cut off many affinities and live a maimed life. In the Sermon on the Mount Our Lord distinctly teaches the necessity of being maimed (see Matthew 5:29-30). If you are going to be spiritual, says Jesus, you must barter the natural, i.e., sacrifice it. If you say—I do not want to sacrifice the natural for the spiritual; then, says Jesus, you must barter the spiritual. It is not a punishment, but an eternal principle. Be prepared to be maimed, to be a one-eyed faddist, until your heart gets established. It is this dissipation of impressions that makes many a would-be disciple a deserter. Our Lord's statements embrace the whole of the spiritual life from beginning to end, and in verse 48 of Matthew 5, He completes the picture He began to give in verses 29–30—"Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect" (RV).

(c) The Disposition of Interests

The interests of the Son of God and of the disciple are to be identical. How long it takes to manifest that identity depends on the private history of the disciple and his Lord. Our Lord warns His disciples not to cast their pearls before swine. He is inculcating the need to examine carefully what we present of God's truth to others. If Our Lord reduces our affinities and makes us live a maimed life in the meantime, it is at the peril of our spiritual life we try to explain it to others. A false idea of confessing makes us tell secrets that should never be told, they are between God and the soul. There are affinities of heart and of life that are dealt with by God in secret and we must never say a word about them to others. Other people seeing the limitations of the life say—What can there be wrong in this and in that? There is nothing wrong in it, but we know that it is at the peril of our life with God that we touch it. The maimed life and the misunderstood life must go on. Be prepared to be a limited fool in the sight of others, says Jesus, in order to further your spiritual character. We value the understanding of those we love most so much that Jesus has to take the last place. A disciple in the making may often tell Jesus that his father or his mother or his friend or other interests must be heeded first, and the Lord administers no rebuke. The inevitable lesson is learned presently in a way in which it ought never to have had to be learned.

2. The Delays in Identification

Passionate genuine affection for Jesus will lead to all sorts of vows and promises which it is impossible to fulfil. It is an attitude of mind and heart that sees only the heroic. We are called to be unobtrusive disciples, not heroes. When we are right with God, the tiniest thing done out of love to Him is more precious to Him than any eloquent preaching of a sermon. We have introduced into our conception of Christianity heroic notions that come from paganism and not from the teaching of Our Lord. Jesus warned His disciples that they would be treated as nobodies; He never said they would be brilliant or marvellous. We all have a lurking desire to be exhibitions for God, to be put, as it were, in His show room. Jesus does not want us to be specimens, He wants us to be so taken up with Him that we never think about ourselves, and the only impression left on others by our life is that Jesus Christ is having unhindered way.

"Peter . . . walked upon the waters, to come to Jesus" (Matthew 14:29 RV). Walking on water is easy to impulsive pluck, but walking on dry land as a disciple of Jesus Christ is different, Peter walked on the water to go to Jesus, but he followed Him afar off on the land. We do not need the grace of God to stand crises; human nature and our pride will do it. We can buck up and face the music of a crisis magnificently, but it does require the supernatural grace of God to live twenty-four hours of the day as a saint, to go through drudgery as a saint, to go through poverty as a saint, to go through an ordinary, unobtrusive, ignored existence as a saint, unnoted and unnoticeable. The "show business," which is so incorporated into our view of Christian work to-day, has caused us to drift far from Our Lord's conception of discipleship. It is instilled in us to think that we have to do exceptional things for God; we have not. We have to be exceptional in ordinary things, to be holy in mean streets, among mean people, surrounded by sordid sinners. That is not learned in five minutes.

Jesus took the early disciples in hand to train them, and at the end of three years of intimate companionship with Him, they all forsook Him and fled. Then they came to the end of themselves and all their self-sufficiency, and realised that if ever they were going to be different, it must be by receiving a new Spirit. After the Resurrection, Jesus "breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost."

Do we really believe we need another Spirit? Are we basing our religious life on our impulses, on our natural affections, on what other people tell us we are? or are we based on what Jesus wants us to be? Jesus guides us by making us His friends.

"Why cannot I follow Thee even now?" (John 13:37 RV). Determination and devotion, protestations and vows are all born of self-consciousness, and must die out of a disciple. A child never makes vows. We have to be so taken up with Jesus that we are never impudent enough to vow anything. All our vows and resolutions end in denial because we have no power to carry them out. Natural devotion will always deny Jesus Christ somewhere or other. Whenever the grace of God takes hold of a man, he never thinks of vowing anything, he is lost in an amazing devotion which is not conscious.

Since mine eyes have looked on Jesus, I've lost sight of all beside.

The domination of self-consciousness has to be put to death—"I have vowed, I have promised, and I have consecrated." It all has to go until there is only one "I," the Lord Jesus Christ.

"What is that to thee?" (John 21:22). A disciple is one who minds neither his own business nor any one else's business, but looks steadfastly to Jesus and goes on following Him. We read books about the consecration of other men, but it is as so much scaffolding, it all has to go, and the time comes when there is only one thing left—following Jesus. One of the severest lessons we get comes from our stubborn refusal to see that we must not interfere in other people's lives. It takes a long time to realise the danger of being an amateur providence, i.e., interfering with God's order for others. We see a certain person suffering and we say, "He shall not suffer; I will see that he does not," and we put our hand straight in front of God's permissive will to prevent it, and He has to say, "What is that to thee?"

All these things are elements in our identification with Jesus. How long it takes Him to get us identified with Him depends upon us. We cause delays to God by persistently doing things in our own way. He never gets impatient, He waits until everything has fallen away and there is nothing left but identification with Him. To be absolutely centred in Jesus means that all things and all people are welcome alike to me, because they are all arranged for in their times and seasons by my heavenly Father.

3. The Discipline by Instruction in Apprehending Growth

Beware of continually wanting to be thrilled. In the natural world the one who is always wanting experiences of ecstasy and excitement is disappointingly unreliable, and the same is true in the spiritual world. There are unemployables in the spiritual domain, spiritually decrepit people who refuse to do anything unless they are supernaturally inspired.

(a) His Cross

Him they compelled to . . . bear His cross. (Matthew 27:32)

Simon the Cyrenian, in unwillingly fulfilling the instruction given in the Sermon on the Mount, unconsciously points out the lesson to us that we must be identified with the cross of Christ before ever we can carry our own cross.

(b) His Cup

My cup indeed ye shall drink. (Matthew 20:23 RV)

This is not the cup of martyrdom, for Our Lord was not a martyr. We must be identified with the atoning Death of Our Lord before we can be disciples. Many of us want to be disciples, but we do not want to come by way of His atoning Death; we do not want to be compelled to be orthodox to the Cross of Christ, to drink the cup that He drank. But there is no other way. We must be regenerated, supernaturally made all over again, before we can be His disciples.

(c) His Confession

Behold, we go up to Jerusalem. (Luke 18:31)

That is the mightiest word on discipleship that Our Lord ever spoke, for Jerusalem was the place where He reached the climax of His Father's will for Him, and He identifies us with Himself in our going up to our Jerusalem.

We have become so taken up with the idea of being prepared for something in the future that that is the conception we have of discipleship. It is true, but it is also untrue. The attitude of the Christian life is that we must be prepared now, this second; this is the time. What we are in relation to Jesus, not what we do or say for Him, gives His heart satisfaction and furthers His Kingdom. "Every one therefore who shall confess Me before men . . . ," said Jesus. The word "confess" means that every particle of our nature says the same thing, not our mouth only, but the very make up of our flesh and blood, confesses that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh (cf. 1 John 4:2). It is easy to talk, easy to have fine thoughts; but none of that means being a disciple. Being a disciple is to be something that is an infinite satisfaction to Jesus every minute, whether in secret or in public.

WHAT IS A MISSIONARY?

Yet it was well, and Thou hast said in season
As is the Master shall the servant be:
Let me not subtly slide into the treason,
Seeking an honour which they gave not Thee:

Never at even, pillowed on a pleasure, Sleep with the wings of aspiration furled, Hide the last mite of the forbidden treasure, Keep for my joys a world within the world.

He as He wills shall solder and shall sunder, Slay in a day and quicken in an hour, Tune Him a chorus from the Sons of Thunder, Forge and transform my passion into power.

Ay, for this Paul, a scorn and a reviling, Weak as you know him and the wretch you see, Even in these eyes shall ye behold His smiling, Strength in infirmities and Christ in me.

F. W. H. Myers

1. The Sure Characteristics (John 17:18; 20:21-23)

The great danger in missionary enterprise is that God's call may be effaced by the needs of the people until human sympathy overwhelms altogether the significance of Jesus Christ's sending. "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (RV). A missionary is a saved and sanctified soul detached to Jesus. The one thing that must not be overlooked is the personal relationship to Jesus Christ and to His point of view; if that is overlooked, the needs are so great, the conditions so perplexing, that every power of mind and heart will fail and falter. We are apt to forget that the great reason for missionary enterprise is not first the elevation of the people; nor first the education of the people; nor even first the salvation of the people, but first and foremost the command of Jesus Christ—"Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations" (RV).

If we are going to remain true to the Bible's conception of a missionary, we must go back to the source—a missionary is one sent by Jesus Christ as He was sent by the Father. The great dominating note is not first the needs of men, but the command of Jesus Christ, consequently the real source of inspiration is always behind, never in front. Today the tendency is to put the inspiration in front; the great ideal is to sweep everything in front of us and bring it all out in accordance with our conception of success. In the New Testament the inspiration is behind, viz., the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. We are called to be true to Him, to be faithful to Him, to carry out His enterprises.

In revising the lives of men and women of God and the history of the Church of God, there is a tendency to say—"How wonderfully astute those men and women were! How perfectly they understood what God wanted of them!" The truth is that the astute mind behind these men and women was not a human mind at all, but the mind of God. We give credit to human wisdom when we should give credit to the Divine guidance of God through childlike people who were foolish enough in the eyes of the world to trust God's wisdom and supernatural equipment, while watching carefully their own steadfast relationship to Him.

The New Testament lays down clearly what the work of the missionary is, it is to disciple all nations according to the command of the Risen Lord. The method of missions is clearly stated in each of the four Gospels. St. Matthew records the farewell command which Jesus gave to His disciples, and that command is to teach, i.e., disciple, all nations; not make converts to our ways of thinking, but make disciples of Jesus. In St. Mark's Gospel the method is defined as preaching the gospel to every creature, accompanied by the power to cast out devils, and to speak with new tongues. In St. Luke's Gospel the method is described as preaching repentance and remission of sins unto all the nations (RV), and in St. John's Gospel the method is described by Our Lord as feeding His sheep and tending His lambs. The methods through which the life-giving truth is to be presented are as varied as the needs and conditions of the nations among whom the missionaries are placed.

Jesus Christ did not say—Go and save souls; the salvation of souls is God's work. Jesus told the disciples to go and teach, disciple, all nations. The salvation of souls comes about through the ministry of God's word and the proclaiming of the Redemption by God's servants; but the command to the missionary is to disciple those who are saved. Every now and again the Church becomes content with seeing people saved. When men get saved, then the disciple's work begins, and the great point about discipling is that you can never make a disciple unless you are one yourself. When the disciples came back from their first mission, they were filled with joy and said—"Lord, even the devils are subject unto us in Thy name," and Jesus said, in effect, "Don't rejoice in successful service, but rejoice that you are rightly related to God through Me." Those who remain true to the call of God are those whose lives are stamped and sealed by God; they have one great purpose underneath, and that is to disciple men and women to Jesus.

2. The Subject Matter (Luke 24:45-48)

The subject matter of missions is the Life and Death and Resurrection of Jesus Christ for one purpose— "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name unto all the nations" (RV). The subject matter of missions remains an unchangeable truth, an historic fact, "the Lamb that hath been slain from the foundation of the world" (RV). The Cross as it is manifested in the life of Our Lord is not the cross of a martyr. He came on purpose to die. When once men get away from the teaching of the New Testament, the first thing that happens is that sin is minimised and the meaning of the Cross of Christ departed from. The Cross of Jesus Christ is the historic manifestation of the inherent nature of the Trinity. Through all the ages the perplexity in the minds of men without the Spirit of God arises because the Bible presents something utterly unlike what the natural heart thinks it wants. The natural mind of man thinks of God in a circle, everything is going to evolve and develop in a plain simple way. According to the Bible, things do not go as we expect them to, either in individual life or in history, but always at cross purposes. The symbol of the nature of God is not a circle, complete and self-centred; the symbol of God's nature is the Cross. The end God has in view is entirely different from that arrived at by man's unaided thinking. For instance, the conception that is working like leaven to-day all through missionary enterprise is that we are going to evolve into a circle of brilliant success, and the great conflict that awaits the missionary to-day is the conflict against the evolutionary idea that everything is growing better. The Bible does not look forward to an evolution of mankind; the Bible talks of a revolution-"Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born anew" (RV). We have to get back to the preaching of the Cross, and the remission of sins through the death of Our Lord.

3. The Scriptural Method (John 21:15-17)

The method here is described by Our Lord as feeding His lambs and tending His sheep. Continually we get to the place where we see no one as sinful because we do not want to become shepherds. The great challenge is made to the missionary himself; not that people are difficult to get saved, not that backsliders are difficult to reclaim, not that there is callous indifference on the part of people to the message; the challenge is to my faith in my Lord—do I believe He is able? Our Lord seems to come steadily to us in every individual case we meet—"Believe ye that I am able to do this?" Whether it be a case of demon possession, bodily upset, mental twist, backsliding, indifference, difference of nationality and thought, the challenge is to me. Do I know my Risen Lord? Do I know the power of His indwelling Spirit? Am I wise enough in God's sight, and foolish enough according to the wisdom of the world, to bank on what Jesus has told me? Or am I abandoning the supernatural position, which is the only one for a missionary, of boundless confidence in Jesus? If we take up any other method, we depart altogether from the scriptural method laid down by Our Lord—"All power is given unto Me. . . . Go ye therefore."

Every time God presents us with a problem in Christian work, He gives us something to match it in our own heart, and if we will let His power work there, we shall go forth with unshakeable confidence in what He can do for any man. If once a man knows in his own life that God can do what Jesus Christ said He could, he can never be put in the place where he will be discouraged. He may be put in the heart of the vilest and most terrible phases of heathenism, but he can never be discouraged, nor can he be defiled, because he has the very nature of God in him and he is kept like the light, unsullied.

4. The Special Persons (Matthew 16:18)

Matthew 16:18 is Our Lord's statement as to what constitutes membership in His church—a revelation of Who He is and the public confession of it. No man knows Who Jesus Christ is but by the Spirit of God, and the fact that he knows Who Jesus is and makes confession of it is the bedrock on which Christ builds His Church, according to His own word. The special person called to do missionary work is every person who is a member of the Church of Christ. The call does not come to a chosen few, it is to everyone of us. The special call is to stay at home. The big call remains—"Go ye"; and if I am staying, I have to give God the reason. According to Our Lord, there is not a home church and a foreign church, it is all one great work, beginning at home and then going elsewhere, "beginning from Jerusalem" (RV). Jerusalem was not the home of the disciples; Jerusalem was the place where Our Lord was rejected. "Begin there," said Jesus. In His first sermon at Nazareth Our Lord said that it was God's way to send His message by strangers before it was accepted, and the history of the Church has proved that it is out of the mouth of strangers that the great awakenings have always come. Take any country that has had the life of God introduced into it, it has never been introduced by those belonging to the country, but always from outside.

In Our Lord's conception all the world is the same to God, and the command to go embraces us all. Missionaries are ordained to preach, trained to teach and to heal, skilled to win savage races for Christ, but every method is to be subordinated to the one great message of the remission of sins through faith in His blood (Romans 3:25-26). Whatever line the missionary takes, whether it be medical or educational, he has only one purpose; one great truth has gripped him and sent him forth and holds him, so that he has nothing else on earth to live for but to proclaim the Death of Christ for the remission of sins. The note of false missionary enterprise leaves out the fundamental purpose of evangelisation and says that civilisation must come first. Robert Moffatt¹³ uttered solemn words when he said he little thought he would live to see the day when earnest missionaries would reverse the order of God, when the watchword would be not to evangelise first, but to civilise. Our Lord illustrates this in His parable (see Matthew 13:32). The birds of civilisation come and lodge in the branches of the spiritual tree and men say "Now this is what is to be!" and they have not seen God's purpose at all. If we do not see God's purpose we shall continually be misled by externals.

The thing to watch in all our enterprise for God is lest we should get swamped out of personal relationship to Jesus Christ, the One Who gives us the command—"Go ye." "I am made all things to all men," says Paul, "that I might by all means save some." The one dominating purpose and passion at the heart of the missionary is his own personal relationship to Jesus Christ. A missionary is a construction made through the Atonement by the God Who made the universe. It is not a sentiment, it is true, that God spoils a man or woman for any other use in the world saving for one thing only, to win souls to Jesus and to disciple them in His Name. The saddest thing is to see a man or woman who gave great promise of being a power for God in the world, fizzle out like an extinct volcano. The reason of it is that a rational common-sense explanation of holy things has ruthlessly torn down the great scriptural idea at the heart of the life, consequently the life has withered and become a negligible quantity from God's standpoint. Thank God for the words of Our Lord—"He that believeth on Me," out of him "shall flow rivers of living water." Always remain true to the Fountainhead.

MISSIONARY MUNITIONS

During the Great War¹⁴ the Minister of Munitions of this country said that everything depended on the workshops of Britain.¹⁵ What was true in the enormous world crisis of war is symbolically true in work for God. But what are the workshops that supply the munitions for God's enterprises? The workshop of missionary munitions is the hidden, personal, worshipping life of the saint.

1. Worshipping as Occasion Serves (John 1:48)

The constant, private habit of the life of the missionary ought to be worshipping as occasion serves, that is the first great essential for fitness. The time will come when no more "fig tree" life is possible; when we are right out in the open and glare of the work, and we shall find ourselves without any value then if we have not been worshipping God as occasion serves. We imagine we should be all right if a big crisis arose; but the crisis only reveals the stuff we are made of, it does not put anything into us. "If God gives the call, of course, I shall rise to the occasion." You will not, unless you have risen to the occasion in the workshop. If you are not the real article before God there, doing the duty that lies nearest, instead of being revealed as fit for God when the crisis comes, you will be revealed as unfit. Crises always reveal character, and we are all ignorant of our true character until it is revealed to us.

If you do not worship as occasion serves at home, you will be of no use in the foreign field; but if you put the worship of God first, and get the revelation of Who God is, then, when the call comes you will be ready for it, because in the unseen life and preparing, and now when the strain comes you are perfectly fit to be relied on by God. Worshipping is greater than work in that it absorbs work.

"And He saith unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye shall see the heaven opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man" (RV). Our Lord is the One in Whom God and man can meet as one. If that has never been learned in our private worshipping life, it will never be realised in active public work. "There is no need for this private worship of God, I cannot be expected to live the sanctified life in the circumstances I am in; there is no time for praying just now, no time for Bible reading; when I get out into the work and the opportunity comes for all that, of course I shall be all right." If you have not been worshipping as occasion serves, you will not only be useless when you get out into service but a tremendous hindrance to those who are associated with you. Imagine a general having ammunition made in a workshop at the back of the trenches! His men would be blown up whilst attempting it. Yet that is what we seem to expect to do in work for God.

2. Ministering as Opportunity Surrounds (John 13:14–15)

Ministering as opportunity surrounds does not mean selecting our surroundings, but being very selectly God's in any haphazard surroundings He may engineer for us. The characteristics we exhibit in our immediate surroundings are an indication of what we shall be like in other circumstances by and by.

"Jesus, knowing that the Father had given all things into His hands, and that He came forth from God and goeth unto God . . ." (RV)—we might have expected the record to go on: "He was transfigured before them"; but we read that the next thing Our Lord did was of the most menial commonplace order—"He took a towel, and girded Himself. . . . Then He . . . began to wash the disciples' feet" (RV). Can we use a towel as Our Lord did? Towels and basins and feet and sandals, all the ordinary sordid things of our lives, reveal more quickly than anything what we are made of. It is not the big occasions that reveal us, but the ^{14.} The Great War: World War I (1914-18).

^{15.} Chambers' actual quote in his lecture was: "The first minister of munitions in this Empire has just said: You have read appeals for the front, appeals to the workshop, I would almost say at the present moment everything depends on the workshops of Britain. Have you read that anxious tale of the struggle which is now going on in Galicia, read it, read it well, read it intelligently and you will find how much the workshops count in this war."

little occasions. It takes God Incarnate to do the most menial commonplace things properly.

"If I then, the Lord and the Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet" (RV). Our Lord did not say: "I have been the means of the salvation of thousands, I have been most successful in My service, now you go and do the same thing"—He said: "I have washed your feet; you go and wash one another's feet." We try to get out of it by washing the feet of those who do not belong to our own set—we will wash the heathen's feet, or feet in the slums, but fancy washing my brother's feet, my wife's, my husband's, the feet of the minister of my church! Our Lord said—"one another's feet."

Watch the humour of our Heavenly Father. It is seen in the way He brings across our path the type of person who exhibits to us what we have been like to Him. "Now," He says, "show that one the same love that I have shown you." If Jesus Christ has lifted us in love and grace, we must show that love to someone else. It is of no use to say—"Oh, I will do all that when I get out to the field." The only way to produce the munitions for God's enterprises is to minister as opportunity surrounds us now, and God will surround us with ample opportunity of doing to others as He has done to us.

The workshop for missionary munitions on which God draws for His work is the private lives of those who are not only saved and sanctified by Him, but who immediately begin to minister where they are. We read of Peter's wife's mother that when Jesus touched her, "she arose, and ministered unto Him" (RV); a perfect and complete deliverance, and immediate service; there was no interesting convalescent stage. Some people do not like to get saved all of a sudden, they do not like to have their problems solved in a lightning flash, they prefer to be spiritual sponges—and mop up all the sympathy they can. Peter's wife's mother is the type of the life in which God has done His work. In the full and amazing strength of God, she arose and did what lay nearest, and went on as if she had never been ill.

3. Graduating as Obligations Separate (Matthew 11:28–29)

Verse 29—"Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me," is the graduating course in the training school of Our Lord. Many of us get as far as verse 28—"Come unto Me," then come the obligations which separate us from all else, and we have to enter into the discipline of fellowship. We have to take upon us His yoke, and see that we bow our neck to no other yoke; then when the strain comes, we can go through anything.

"Learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart." We say readily—"Of course Jesus was meek and lowly," but was He? Read the account of the cleansing of the Temple; where is the meek and mild and gentle Jesus there? He "made Himself of no reputation," but when His Father's honour was touched, all was different. The meekness and lowliness of Our Lord is seen in His relationship to His Father; He never murmured at anything His Father brought, and never gave way to self-pity. That is the meekness and lowliness of heart we need to learn, and we shall never learn it unless the Redemption of Our Lord has been at work in us, completely restoring and emancipating us, and getting us into yoke with Him. If we have taken His yoke upon us, we shall never say when things are difficult—"Why should this happen to me?" We shall be meek toward God's dispensations for us as Jesus was meek towards His Father.

"And ye shall find rest unto your souls," you will make the continual discovery of the undisturbedness of heart which is the delight of those who "follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth."

The workshop of missionary munitions is the temple of the Holy Ghost, our actual bodily lives. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God?"

THE MISSIONARY'S MASTER

To have a master and to be mastered are not the same thing, but diametrically opposed. If I have the idea that I am being mastered, it is a sure proof that I have no master. If I feel I am in subjection to someone, then I may be sure that that someone is not the one I love. To have a master means to have one who is closer than a friend, one whom I know knows me better than I know myself, one who has fathomed the remotest abyss of my heart and satisfied it, one who brings me the secure sense that he has met and solved every perplexity of my mind—that, and nothing less, is to have a master. Jesus Christ is the Master of the missionary. The conception of mastership that we get from human life is totally different from the mastership of Jesus. If I have the idea that I am being mastered by Jesus, then I am far from being in the relationship to Himself He wants me to be in, a relationship where He is easily Master without my conscious knowledge of it, all I am aware of is that I am His to obey.

Our Lord never takes measures to make us obey Him. Our obedience is the outcome of a oneness of spirit with Him through His Redemption. That is why, whenever Our Lord talked about discipleship, He prefaced it with an "IF"—"you do not need to unless you like"; but—"If any man will be My disciple, let him deny himself," i.e., "deny his independence, give up his right to himself to Me." Our Lord is not talking about a man's position hereafter, but about being of value to Him in this order of things. Human authority always insists on obedience; Our Lord never does. He makes His standard very clear, and if the relation of the spirit within me is that of love to Him, then I do all He says without any hesitation. If I begin to hesitate and to debate, it is because I love someone else in competition with Him, viz., myself. The only word by which to describe mastership in experience is love—"If ye love Me, ye will keep My commandments" (RV).

Obedience to Jesus Christ is essential, but not compulsory; He never insists on being Master. We feel that if only He would insist, we should obey Him. But Our Lord never enforces His "thou shalt's" and "thou shalt not's"; He never takes means to force us to do what He says; He never coerces. In certain moods we wish He would make us do the thing, but He will not; and in other moods we wish He would leave us alone altogether, but He will not. If we do not keep His commandments, He does not come and tell us we are wrong, we know it, we cannot get away from it. There is no ambiguity in our mind as to whether what He says is right. Our Lord never says "you must," but if we are to be His disciples we know we must. Christianity is not a "sanctified" anything; it is the life of Jesus manifested in our mortal flesh by the miracle of His Redemption, and that will mean that whenever a crisis comes, Jesus is instantly seen to be Master without a moment's hesitation; there is no debate.

"Ye call Me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am"—But is He? The great consciousness in the mind of Our Lord is that He is our Master, and we, too, have to come into this consciousness. "Master" and "Lord" have very little place in our spiritual vocabulary; we prefer the words "Saviour" and "Sanctifier" and "Healer." In other words, we know very little about love as Jesus revealed it. It is seen in the way we use the word "obey." Our use of the word implies the submission of an inferior to a superior; obedience in Our Lord's use of the word is the relationship of equals, a son and father. ". . . though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered." Our Lord was not a servant of God, He was His Son. The Son's obedience as Redeemer was because He was Son, not in order to be Son.

1. The Master Touch in Sickness— The Master Physician

And He touched her hand, and the fever left her; and she arose, and ministered unto Him. (Matthew 8:15 RV)

These words crystallise for us the revelation of Our Lord as the Master Physician. When He touches, there is no convalescence. Unless the missionary is one who has been touched by the Master Physician, his touch may be one of skill but not of supreme healing. When Our Lord is the Master of a disciple, He conveys His effectual touch through him to others.

Touch has more power than even speech to convey the personality. If some people touch us, we feel the worse for it for days; if others touch us, we live a transfigured life for days. That is an experience recognisable by us all, but we may not have realised that it is because the touch conveys the dominating personality behind. A caress from a bad personality is incarnated hypocrisy. It is at grave peril to our own souls that we ignore these subtle indications of warning. When once the barriers that God creates around His children are broken down and His warnings ignored, we shall find that the enemy will break through at the places we have broken down. If we keep in touch with the Master, He will keep us out of touch with badness.

The Master touch of Our Lord breaks the fever of self, and life is profoundly altered. When Our Lord is the Master of a disciple, no matter where he goes, His touch comes through him all the time. She only "touched the hem of His garment." The missionary is, as it were, the hem of His garment, and virtue goes out through the garment's hem to the needy one who touched.

2. The Master Touch in Sightlessness— The Master Artist

Then touched He their eyes, saying, According to your faith be it done unto you. (Matthew 9:29 RV)

The Master Touch produces sight.

In human sight the thing we soon lose is what Ruskin called "the innocence of the eye." An artist records exactly from this "innocence" of sight, he does not bring in his logical faculties and interfere with what he sees by telling himself what he ought to see. Most of us know what we are looking at, and instead of trusting the "innocence" of sight, we confuse it by trying to tell ourselves what we see. If ever you have been taught by anyone to see, you will know what this means. Drummond¹⁶ says that Ruskin taught him to see. An artist does not tell us what he sees, he enables us to see; he communicates the unutterable identity of what he sees. It is a great thing to see with anyone. Jesus never tells us what to see, but when His touch is upon our eyes, we know that we see what He is seeing, He restores this pristine innocence of sight. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

^{16.} Henry Drummond (1851-97) was a Scottish writer and evangelist.

An artist conveys his personality by means of his medium and creates wonderful things, and if the Master touch has given the missionary his sight, God can do wonderful things through him. Paul was sent by God to "open [men's] eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light."

A skilled artist does not need to use more than two or three colours; an amateur requires all the tubes in his box squirted out like a condensed rainbow. The Master Artist used strange things to open blind eyes, e.g., spittle, clay, and water from a pool—but remember He used them, and He produced the miracle of sight. The missionary may easily be looked on as one of the despised things, but if Jesus uses him, he will produce sight in men.

3. The Master Touch in Hearing— The Master Musician

And He touched his ear, and healed him. (Luke 22:51)

When the Master touch comes on the sick or the sightless or the deaf, the miracle of the personality is conveyed at once. Touch conveys the personality to the flesh and to the sight, and sound conveys the personality to the hearing. It is personality that gives to sound, which is un-moral, its moral or immoral character. There is some music, for instance, that you listen to at the peril of your soul because of the personality behind it. Better by far be unmusical than listen to it. The one who is healed by the Master Musician has the personality of God conveyed to him. When we have been ravished with the wonder of the Master Musician's music, He gives us a badly tuned instrument to put into repair for Him.

4. The Master Touch in Speech— The Master Speaker

And He took him aside from the multitude . . . and touched his tongue. (Mark 7:33)

This incident is one of many that reveal the unique use of speech by Our Lord. "And looking up to heaven, He sighed, and saith unto him, Ephphatha, that is, Be opened." The tongue was in its right place in Our Lord, He only used it to speak the words of God, He never spoke from His right to Himself. "The words that I say unto you I speak not from Myself: but the Father abiding in Me, doeth His works" (RV). The words Jesus spoke were the exact expression of the thought of God. "And the Word was God."

The Master Speaker, after conveying His life to us by means of His words, turns us loose into a tower of Babel and tells us to speak His messages there. The missionary is one whom Jesus Christ has taken aside from the multitude, and, having put His fingers into his ears and touched his tongue, has sent him straight forth from hearing his Master, with his own tongue loosened and his speech plain, to speak "all the words of this life."

THE MISSIONARY'S WAY

I am the way, and the truth, and the life. (John 14:6)

However far we may drift, we must always come back to these words of our Lord: "I am the way" not a road that we leave behind us, but the way itself. Jesus Christ is the way of God, not a way that leads to God; that is why He says—"Come unto Me," "abide in Me." "I am . . . the truth," not the truth about God, not a set of principles, but the truth itself. Jesus Christ is the Truth of God. "No man cometh unto the Father, but by Me." We can get to God as Creator in other ways, but no man can come to God as Father in any other way than by Jesus Christ (cf. Matthew 11:27). "I am . . . the life." Jesus Christ is the Life of God as He is the Way and the Truth of God. Eternal life is not a gift from God, it is the gift of God Himself. The life imparted to me by Jesus is the life of God. "He that hath the Son hath the life"; "I am come that they might have life"; "And this is life eternal, that they should know Thee the only true God" (RV). We have to abide in the way; to be incorporated into the truth; to be infused by the life.

1. The Conditions of the Way

Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus. (Philippians 2:5)

Paul goes on to state the characteristics of the mind which we are to form, viz., the mind which was in Christ Jesus when He was on this earth, utterly self-effaced and self-emptied; not the mind of Christ when He was in glory. We receive the Spirit of Christ as a gift, but we do not receive His mind, we have to construct that, and this is done in the same way that we construct the natural mind, viz., by the way our disposition reacts when we come in contact with external things. Mind, or soul, is the way the personal spirit expresses itself in the body. We have to lose our own way of thinking and form Jesus Christ's way. "Acquire your soul with patience." It takes time and discipline. When we are regenerated and have the life of the Son of God in us, God engineers our circumstances in order that we may form the mind of Christ.

(a) Of Exaltation

Who, being in the form of God, counted it not a thing to be grasped to be on an equality with God. (RV mg)

Our Lord's exaltation was His equality with the Father. In the Christian life there are stages of experience that are exalted; times when we know what it is to live in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, when we seem to be more on the mount than anywhere else. But we are not made for the mountain, we are made for the valley; we are made for the actual world, not for the ideal world; but to be so in communion with the ideal that we can work it out in the actual and make it real. There is no life like the life of a missionary for bringing the ideal and the actual together. "Come unto Me, . . . and I will give you rest," said Jesus; "I will bring the ideal and the actual into one."

(b) Of Subordination But emptied Himself. (RV)

Our Lord annihilated Himself from His former exaltation and took "the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men; . . . He humbled Himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross" (RV). Our Lord by His own choice emptied Himself of all His former glory; and if we are to enter into fellowship with Him, we must deliberately go through the annihilation, not of glory, but of our right to ourselves in every shape and form. Our Lord's former condition was one of absolute equality with God: our former condition is one of absolute independence of God. "Let him deny himself," says Jesus. It is easy to do it in theory, easy to count all things but loss. Paul says he not only counted all things but loss, he "suffered the loss of all things" that he might win Christ. It is a sad thing to only come the length of counting the loss and say, "Oh yes, I see it will cost me my right to myself, it will cost me the world, it will cost me everything; but I do not intend to experience the loss. These things sound all right in the ideal, but they hit a bit too hard in the actual."

(c) Of Sanctification

"And for their sakes I sanctify Myself." The idea of sanctification as Our Lord here uses it is the separation of holiness to God's use and for God's purpose. Our Lord separated His holy Self to God. This idea of sanctification worked out in a missionary's life means more than the fact that he is personally identified with his Lord, it means that he deliberately sets apart his sanctified self for God. The experience of sanctification is usually presented as a personal identification with Jesus Christ by which He is made unto us sanctification; the sanctification Our Lord refers to is the sanctification of that sanctification. Beware of the idea of sanctification that makes a man say—"Now I am sanctified I can do what I like." If he does, he is immoral. Even Christ pleased not Himself. If our experience of sanctification ends in pious sentiment, the reason is that it has never dawned on us that we must deliberately set our sanctified selves apart for God's use as Jesus did.

2. The Commission of the Way

As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you. (John 20:21 RV)

Our Lord's first obedience was not to the needs of men, not to the consideration of where He would be most useful, but to the will of His Father. "Lo, I am come . . . to do Thy will, O God" (RV). And the first obedience of the missionary is to the will of his Lord. "Ye call Me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am"; but does it mean any more to us than the mere saying of it? "If I then, the Lord and the Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet" (RV), and we cannot do it by sentiment. It was in the hour when Jesus knew "that the Father had given all things into His hands, and that He came forth from God, and goeth unto God" (RV) that He began to wash the disciples' feet; and it is when we realise our union with Jesus Christ as our Lord and Master that we shall follow His example. It takes God Incarnate to do the meanest duty as it ought to be done. When Jesus touched things that were sordid and ordinary, He transfigured them.

(a) The Witness (John 8:18-19; 15:27)

Just as Our Lord was a witness Who satisfied His Father; so a Christian witness is one who satisfies his Master. "Ye shall be My witnesses" (RV); "not witnesses to what I can do, but witnesses who satisfy Me in any circumstances I put you in. I reckon on you for extreme service, with no complaining on your part and no explanation on Mine." Being a martyr does not necessarily involve being a witness, but being a witness will involve martyrdom.

(b) The Word (John 14:10; 17:8)

Our Lord says that His word was not His own, but His Father's. Jesus never spoke from His right to Himself. "The words that I say unto you, I speak not from [RV] Myself." Jesus Christ is the Word of God in His own Person; He spoke the words of God with a human tongue, and He has given to His disciples the words the Father gave to Him. The disciple has not only to speak the words of God with his tongue, but to bear the evidence of being a word of the Son, as Jesus was the Word of God. To "confess" Christ means to say, not only with the tongue, but with every bit of our life, that Jesus has come into our flesh. The Son was the exact expression of the Father, and the saint must be an exact expression of the Son.

(c) The Work (John 9:4; 14:12)

"We must work the works of Him that sent Me" (RV). According to Our Lord, the need is never the call. The need is the opportunity; the call is the call of God. The call of God is like the call of the sea, or of the mountains, or of the ice-fields; no one hears those calls who has not the nature of the sea or of the mountains or of the ice-fields in him; and no one hears the call of God who has not the nature of the Almighty in him. If we have received the nature of God then we begin slowly to discern what God wants us to do. Never have the idea that your discernment of the need is the call. The need is the opportunity which will prove whether you are worthy of the call. Because you realise a need you have no right to say—"I must go"; if you are sanctified, you cannot go unless you are sent.

3. The Conflict of the Way

If the world hateth you, ye know that it hath hated Me before it hated you. (John 15:18 RV)

Our Lord told His disciples over and over again that they must lay their account with the hatred of the world.

(a) Of Contrast (Matthew 10:16)

In this verse Our Lord gives the vivid contrast of sheep and wolves, of doves and serpents, and He uses the contrast in a particular connection, viz., that of proclaiming His Gospel.

(b) Of Contumely (Matthew 10:17-20)

If these verses are unfamiliar to us to-day, it is because we are out of the centre of identification with Our Lord's purposes, and are seeking to bring Him into our enterprises; but as surely as we are in fellowship with Him, we shall find the terrible and unpalatable truth expressed in these verses to be a very actual portion.

(c) Of Courage (Matthew 10:22-24)

The courage Our Lord alludes to here is that born in a heart in vivid relationship to Himself, compelling the body to perform the will of God even at the cost of death. Our Lord makes little of physical death, but He makes much of moral and spiritual death.

4. The Consolations of the Way

I will not leave you desolate: I come unto you. (John 14:18 RV)

The consolations of the ways are not the sympathies of human sensibilities, but the great sustainings of the personal Holy Ghost.

(a) Of Love (John 17:26)

The first mighty name for the consolations of the way is love—"that the love wherewith Thou lovedst Me may be in them" (RV). It is the Holy Ghost Who brings this consolation, He sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts, the nature of God as exhibited in Jesus, with its impenetrable reserves. No human being can pump up what is not there. The consolation of love is not that of exquisite human understanding, it is the real nature of God holding the individual life in effectual rectitude and effectual communion in the face of anything that may ever come.

(b) Of Joy (John 15:11)

Joy is not happiness, joy is the result of the perfect fulfilment of the purpose of the life. We never want praise if we have done perfectly what we ought to do; we only want praise if we are not sure whether we have done well. Jesus did not want praise; He did not need it, and He says "that My joy may be in you" (RV). The joy of Jesus Christ was in the absolute self-surrender and self-sacrifice of Himself to His Father, the joy of doing what the Father sent Him to do—"I delight to do Thy will," and that is the joy He prays may be in His disciples. It is not a question of trying to work as Jesus did, but of having the personal presence of the Holy Ghost Who works in us the nature of Jesus. One of the consolations of the way is the fathomless joy of the Holy Ghost manifesting itself in us as it did in the Son of God in the days of His flesh.

(c) Of Peace (John 14:27)

The peace Jesus refers to here is not the peace of a conscience at rest, but the peace that characterised His own life. "My peace I give unto you." His peace is a direct gift through the personal presence of the Holy Ghost.

5. The Consummation of the Way

We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him. (John 14:23)

Jesus says that the relationship between the Father and the Son is to be the relationship between the Father and the Son and the sanctified soul.

(a) Oneness (John 17:22)

"That they may be one, even as We are one." Are we as close to Jesus Christ as that? God will not leave us alone until we are. There is one prayer that God must answer, and that is the prayer of Jesus.

(b) Sovereignty (Matthew 19:28–29)

Peter in his Epistle says that we are to be "a royal priesthood." The sovereignty alluded to by Peter, and by Our Lord in these verses, is ultimately to be a literal sovereignty, as well as a spiritual sovereignty.

(c) Glory (John 17:22)

"The glory which Thou hast given Me I have given unto them" (RV). What was the glory that Jesus had when He was Son of Man? It was not an external glory; Jesus effaced the Godhead in Himself so effectually that men without the Spirit of God despised Him. His glory was the glory of actual holiness, and that is the glory He says He gives to the saint. The glory of the saint is the glory of actual holiness manifested in actual life here and now. There is a glory which the saint is only to behold, "that they may behold My glory, which Thou hast given Me" (John 17:24). What is that glory? "The glory which I had with Thee before the world was." That glory we are not to share, but to behold. The word "glory" here must be understood in the same sense as the word "form" in Philippians 2:6. It refers to the absolute relation of Deity which the Son of God had before He became Incarnate.

The consummation of the missionary's way is centred in John 14:23. "We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him"—the Triune God abiding with the saint.

MISSIONARY PREDESTINATIONS

Isaiah 49:1-2

This passage refers to the whole nation of Israel, to Our Lord Jesus Christ, and to every individual saint.

1. The Election of Perfect Fitness for God

God created the people known as Israel for one purpose, to be the servant of Jehovah until through them every nation came to know Who Jehovah was. The nation created for the service of Jehovah failed to fulfil God's predestination for it; then God called out a remnant, and the remnant failed; then out of the remnant came One Who succeeded, the One Whom we know as the Lord Jesus Christ. The Saviour of the world came of this nation. He is called "the Servant of God" because He expresses exactly the creative purpose of God for the historic people of God. Through that one Man the purpose of God for the individual, for the chosen nation, and for the whole world, is to be fulfilled. It is through Him that we are made "a royal priesthood."

When this election to God in Christ Jesus is realised by us individually, God begins to destroy our prejudices and our parochial notions and to turn us into the servants of His own purpose. The experience of salvation in individual lives means the incoming of this realisation of the election of God. When we are born from above (RV mg), we understand what is incomprehensible to human reason, viz., that the predestinations of God and our infinitesimal lives are made one and the same by Him. From the standpoint of rationalism, that is nonsense; but it is revelation fact. The connection between the election of God and human free will is confusing to our Gentile type of mind, but the connection was an essential element underlying all Hebrew thought. The predestinations of God cannot be experienced by individuals of their own free choice; but when we are born again, the fact that we do choose what has been predestined of God comes to us as a revelation. The rationalist says it is absurd to imagine that the purposes of Almighty God are furthered by an individual life, but it is true. God's predestinations are the voluntary choosing of the sanctified soul. One way in which the realisation works out with us personally is when we say-"The Lord led me here." The detailed guidance of God is a literal truth in the individual lives of saints. Our relation to the election of God is the one thing to be concerned over; consequently the need can never be the call. The call is of God, and the engineering of our circumstances is of God, never on the ground of our usefulness. The call of God relates us to the purpose of God.

The Purpose of the Missionary's Creation He hath made me. . . . (RV)

The first thing God does with us after sanctification is to "force through the channels of a single heart" the interests of the whole world by introducing into us the nature of the Holy Ghost. The nature of the Holy Ghost is the nature of the Son of God; the nature of the Son of God is the nature of Almighty God, and the nature of Almighty God is focused in John 3:16. When we are born from above (RV mg) the realisation dawns that we are built for God, not for ourselves, "He hath made me." We are brought, by means of new birth, into the individual realisation of God's great purpose for the human race, and all our small, miserable, parochial notions disappear.

If we have been living much in the presence of God, the first thing that strikes us is the smallness of the lives of men and women who do not recognise God. It did not occur to us before, their lives seemed to be broad and generous; but now there seems such a fuss of interests that have nothing whatever to do with God's purpose, and are altogether unrelated to the election of God. It is because people live in the things they possess instead of in their relationship to God, that God at times seems to be cruel. There are a thousand and one interests that God's providential hand has to brush aside as hopelessly irrelevant to His purpose, and if we have been living in those interests, we go with them (cf. Luke 12:15).

"The LORD hath called me from the womb." In this rugged phrase Isaiah declares the creative purpose of God for Israel and Judah. Creation has the opposite meaning to selection. The essential pride of Israel and Judah (and of the Pharisees in Our Lord's day) was that God was obliged to select them because of their superiority to other nations. God did not select them: God created them for one purpose, to be His bondslaves.

There were no nations until after the flood. After the flood the human race was split up into nations, and God called off one stream of the human race in Abraham, and created a nation out of that one man (see Genesis 12:2, et seq.). The Old Testament is not a history of the nations of the world, but the history of that one nation. In secular history Israel is disregarded as being merely a miserable horde of slaves, and justly so from the standpoint of the historian. The nations to which the Bible pays little attention are much finer to read about, but they have no importance in the Redemptive purpose of God. His purpose was the creation of a nation to be His bondslave, that through that nation all the other nations should come to know Him. The idea that Israel was a magnificently developed type of nation is a mistaken one. Israel was a despised, and a despisable nation, continually turning away from God into idolatry; but nothing ever altered the purpose of God for the nation. The despised element is always a noticeable element in the purpose of God. When the Saviour of the world came, He came of that despised nation; He Himself was "despised and rejected of men," and in all Christian enterprise there is this same despised element, "things which are despised, hath God chosen."

The realisation by regeneration of the election of God, and of being made thereby perfectly fit for Him, is the most joyful realisation on earth. When we are born from above (RV mg) we realise the election of God, our being regenerated does not create it. When once we realise that through the salvation of Jesus we are made perfectly fit for God, we understand why Jesus is apparently so ruthless in His claims why He demands such absolute rectitude from the saint: He has given him the very nature of God.

The creative purpose of God for the missionary is to make him His servant, one in whom He is glorified. When once we realise this, all our self-conscious limitations will be extinguished in the extraordinary blaze of what the Redemption means. We have to see that we keep the windows of our soul open to God's creative purpose for us, and not confuse that purpose with our own intentions. Every time we do so, God has to crush our intentions and push them on one side, however it may hurt, because they are on the wrong line. We must beware lest we forget God's purpose for our life.

2. The Election of Perfect Finish for God

God elected a certain nation to be His bondslave, and through that nation a knowledge of His salvation is to come to all the world. The history of that nation is a record of awful idolatry and backsliding, they remained true neither to God's prophets nor to God Himself; but in spite of everything the fulfilment of God's purpose for the nation of His choice is certain. The election of the nation by God was not for the salvation of individuals; the elect nation was to be the instrument of salvation to the whole world. The story of their distress is due entirely to their deliberate determination to use themselves for a purpose other than God's. The beginning of their corruption was their desire to have a king and to be like other nations—"Nay; but we will have a king over us; that we also may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles." Whenever Israel sought to use themselves for their own purposes, God smashed those purposes up.

We must be careful not to confuse the predestination of God by making His election include every individual; or to have the idea that because God elected a certain nation through whom His salvation was to come, therefore every individual of that nation is elected to salvation. The history of the elect nation disproves this, but it does not alter God's purpose for the nation. Individuals of the elect nation have to be saved in the same way as individuals of nations that have not been elected. Election refers to the unchangeable purpose of God, not to the salvation of individuals. Each individual has to choose which line of predestination he will take—God's line or the devil's line. Individual position is determined by individual choice, but that is neither here nor there in connection with God's purpose for the human race.

Individuals enter into the realisation of the creative purpose of God for the human race by being born again of the Spirit; but we must not make the predestination of God for the race to include every individual, any more than God's predestination for the elect nation included every individual. Salvation is of universal application, but human responsibility is not done away with.

The purpose of God for man is that he should "glorify God and enjoy Him for ever." Sin has switched the human race off on to another line, but it has not altered God's purpose for the human race in the tiniest degree. The election of the perfect fitness for God of the human race is abiding. It is exhibited in the Man Christ Jesus, and that is the ideal the human race is destined to reach in spite of all that sin and the devil can do—the "measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." As Son of Man, Jesus Christ mirrors what the human race is to be like on the basis of Redemption. Sin and the devil may do their worst, but God's purpose will only be made manifest all the more gloriously (see Romans 5:12–21).

Preparation of the Missionary's Characteristic He hath made my mouth like a sharp sword.

The outstanding characteristic of the ancient people of God, of Our Lord Jesus Christ, and of the missionary is the "prophet," or preaching, characteristic. In the Old Testament the prophet's calling is placed above that of king and of priest. It is the lives of the prophets that prefigure the Lord Jesus Christ. The character of the prophet is essential to his work. The characteristic of God's elective purpose in the finished condition of His servant is that of preaching. "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."

Notice the emphasis that the New Testament places on "confessing," on "preaching," and on "testifying," all expressive of this perfect finish for God. And notice too that it is this characteristic that Satan attacks. He is at the back of the movement abroad to-day which advocates living a holy life, but "don't talk about it." Men never suffer because they live a godly life; they suffer for their speech. Humanly speaking, if Our Lord had held His tongue, He would not have been put to death. "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no cloke for their sin."

A saint is made by God, "He . . . made me." Then do not tell God He is a bungling workman. We do that whenever we say "I can't." To say "I can't" literally means we are too strong in ourselves to depend on God. "I can't pray in public; I can't talk in the open air." Substitute "I won't," and it will be nearer the truth. The thing that makes us say "I can't" is that we forget that we must rely entirely on the creative purpose of God and on this characteristic of perfect finish for God.

Much of our difficulty comes because we choose our own work—"Oh well, this is what I am fitted for." Remember that Jesus took a fisherman and turned him into a shepherd. That is symbolical of what He does all the time. Indoor work has to do with civilisation; we were created for out-of-door work, both naturally and spiritually. The idea that we have to consecrate our gifts to God is a dangerous one. We cannot consecrate what is not ours (1 Corinthians 4:7). We have to consecrate ourselves, and leave our gifts alone. God does not ask us to do the thing that is easy to us naturally; He only asks us to do the thing we are perfectly fitted to do by grace, and the cross will always come along that line.

3. The Election of Perfect Fittedness to God Israel is still in the shadow of God's hand, in spite Israel is still in the shadow of God's hand, in spite of all her wickedness. God's purposes are always fulfilled, no matter how wide a compass He may permit to be taken first.

The Plan of the Missionary's Concentration In the shadow of His hand hath He hid me. (RV)

As applied to the saint, this phrase refers to the experience of knowing, not with a sigh, but with deepest satisfaction, that "in all the world there is none but Thee, my God, there is none but Thee." The shadow of God's hand may seem to be the cruellest, most appalling shadow that ever fell on human life, but we shall find what the disciples found—"they feared as they entered the cloud. And suddenly they saw Jesus only with themselves." Never misunderstand the shadow of God's hand. When He puts us there it is assuredly to lead us into the inner meaning of Philippians 3:10—"that I may know Him." The stern discipline that looks like distress and chastisement turns out to be the biggest benediction; it is the shadow of God's hand that keeps us perfectly fitted in Him.

The kindness and the generosity of God is known when once we come under the shadow of His hand. We may kick if we like or fume, and the fingers hurt; but when we stop kicking, the fingers caress. To say "Through the shadow of bereavement I came to know God better," is different from saying, "God took away my child because I loved him too much." That is a lie, and contrary to the God of love Jesus revealed. If there is a dark line in God's face to us, the solution does not lie in saying what is not true to fact, but in bowing our heads and waiting; the explanation is not yet. All that is dark and obscure just now will one day be as radiantly and joyously clear as the truth about God we already know. No wonder our Lord's counsel is, "Fear not!"

THE MISSIONARY GOAL

In natural life we have ambitions and aims which alter as we develop; in the Christian life the goal is given at the beginning, viz., Our Lord Himself. "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." We do not start with our idea of what the Christian life should be, we start with Christ, and we end with Christ. Our aims in natural life continually alter as we develop, but development in the Christian life is an increasing manifestation of Jesus Christ.

1. Companionship with His Goal (Luke 18:31–34)

Behold, we go up to Jerusalem.

That is not the language of a martyr living beyond His dispensation. Our Lord is not foreseeing with the vision of a highly sensitive nature that His life must end in disaster, He states over and over again that He came on purpose to die. "From that time began Jesus to shew unto His disciples, how that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and the third day be raised up" (Matthew 16:21 RV). The Scriptures leave no room for the idea that Our Lord was a martyr (cf. Luke 24:25–27). Jerusalem stands in the life of our Lord as the place where He reached the climax of His Father's will.

This word of our Lord's is taken as exhibiting the missionary goal, "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem," and unless we go with Him there, we shall have no companionship with Him. The New Testament centres round one Person, the Lord Jesus Christ. We are regenerated into His Kingdom by means of His Cross, and then we go up to our Jerusalem, having His Life as our example. We must be born from above (RV mg) before we can go up to our Jerusalem, and the things He met with on His way will throw a flood of light on the things we shall meet with. Our Jerusalem means the place where we reach the climax of Our Lord's will for us, which is that we may be made one with Him as He is one with the Father. The aim of the missionary is not to win the heathen, not to be useful, but to do God's will. He does win the heathen, and he is useful, but that is not his aim; his aim is to do the will of his Lord.

2. Considering His Facing of the Way (Luke 9:51–55)

He stedfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem.

The set purpose of Our Lord's life was to do the will of His Father; that was His dominating interest all through. He went on His way to Jerusalem unhasting and unresting, not hurrying through the villages where they "did not receive Him, because His face was as though He were going to Jerusalem" (RV); nor loitering in those villages where they welcomed Him. Our danger is to be deflected by the things we meet with on the way to our Jerusalem—"I am so misunderstood and so persecuted here that I must get away; or, this is where I am so useful that I must stay awhile."

Ambition means a set purpose for the attainment of our own ideal, and as such it is excluded from the Kingdom of Our Lord. When the disciples asked "Who then is greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" (RV) Jesus called to Him a little child and said—"Except ye . . . become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven" (RV). The nature of the kingdom of heaven is revealed in the implicit nature of a child, because a child does not work according to a set ambition, he obeys the simple law of his nature. If we are children of God, the simple law of our nature is the Holy Ghost; His one set purpose is the glorification of Jesus, and He pays no attention to our secular or our religious notions.

Are we entering into competition with the purpose of the Holy Ghost by having purposes and ambitions of our own? As we face the way to our Jerusalem, we must adhere to the set purpose of the Holy Ghost, which is to glorify Jesus. We must never be deflected by the pride of those who reject us because of that purpose, nor be deterred by the prejudices of those in the same way with us. We must consider Him, and go up to Jerusalem with Him. The "one thing" in the life of the apostle Paul was not an ambition; it was a set purpose born of the Holy Ghost in him.

3. Comparing His Faring on the Way (Luke 13:22–35)

And He went on His way through cities and villages, teaching, and journeying on unto Jerusalem. (Luke 13:22 RV)

Our Lord was not fanatical. Had He been a fanatic, He would have said—"Because I am going up to Jerusalem there is no need to stay in this village or that; I have only one duty, and that is to go up to Jerusalem." Our Lord took plenty of time to do His duty in the cities and villages that He went through on His way up to Jerusalem. Nothing made Him hurry through the villages where He was persecuted, or linger in those where He was blessed.

Verses 31–33. Our Lord met deceit on His way to Jerusalem, but it did not deter Him from His set purpose.

Verses 34–35. Our Lord also realised desperate distress on His way, but nothing caused Him to swerve one hair's breadth from the set purpose of God.

As workers for God we shall meet with deceit and with distress on our way to Jerusalem, for "the disciple is not above his Master." It is true of the Master that "He shall not fail nor be discouraged." In the intimate circle of Our Lord's own disciples there was one whom He called a devil, but He never allowed that to deter or discourage Him.

Various things will make us forget to do our duty, e.g., excess of joy (see Acts 12:12). In the excitement of a revival we become so taken up with joy that we forget the home duties and everything else.

4. Contemplating His Findings on the Way (Luke 17:11–19)

And it came to pass, as they were on the way to Jerusalem . . . there met Him ten men that were lepers. (RV)

Our Lord met ingratitude on His way to Jerusalem— "Were not the ten cleansed? but where are the nine?" but it did not turn Him from His purpose. We shall meet the same thing on the way to our Jerusalem, there will be people who get blessed and one or two will show gratitude, and the rest gross ingratitude. Never allow this feeling to come in—"Well, I am going to do no more for that one, I did everything I could for him and all I got was gross ingratitude." That sentiment will deflect us from going up to our Jerusalem. We are not here to serve our own purpose; we are here, by the grace of God and by His indwelling Spirit, to glorify our Lord and Master. If He brings us up against callous people, mean, ungrateful, sponging people, we must never turn our faces for one second from our Jerusalem, because that is a temper of mind in which Jesus cannot be glorified.

We have to learn to go the second mile with God. Some of us get played out in the first ten yards because God compels us to go where we cannot see the way, and we think we will wait until we get nearer the big crisis. We can all see the big crisis—"Oh yes, I would like to do that for God"; but what about the obscure duty waiting to be done? If we do not do the walking, steadily and carefully, in the little matters, we shall do nothing when the big crisis comes. We shall flag when there is no vision, no uplift—just the common round, the trivial task; but if we keep our faces steadfastly set towards our Jerusalem, and go there considering Him, it will not be possible for drudgery to damp us.

5. Concerning His Finishing on the Way (Luke 19:11–28)

And He added and spake a parable, because He was nigh to Jerusalem.

As Our Lord drew near to His Cross the disciples became more and more perplexed; until at last, at the end of three years of the most intimate contact with Him, they said "What is it that He saith unto us? . . . We know not what He saith" (RV). After the Resurrection, Our Lord breathed on them and said—"Receive ye the Holy Ghost." "And their eyes were opened, and they knew Him." "Then opened He their mind, that they might understand the scriptures" (RV). If we try to get "head first" into what Our Lord teaches, we shall exhibit the same stupidity as the disciples did, until we have received the Holy Spirit and learnt to rely on Him, and to interpret the words of Jesus as He brings them to our mind.

6. Consummating His Fulfilment at the Goal (Luke 23:33)

There they crucified Him.

That is what happened to Our Lord when He reached Jerusalem, but that "happening" is the gateway to our salvation. By His death on the Cross, Our Lord made the way for every son of man to come into communion with God. The saints do not end in crucifixion; by the Lord's grace, they end in glory. In the meantime the missionary's watchword is—"Behold, I too go up to Jerusalem."

THE MISSIONARY PROBLEM

1. Scheme of Enterprise

Ask of Me, and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. (Psalm 2:8 RV)

The emphasis in this Psalm and all through the Bible is that missionary enterprise is God's thought, not man's. We do not know, apart from the Spirit of God, what God's purpose is. The problems surrounding work in the mission field, and any branch of Christian work, are too big to be coped with by man's intellect alone; yet the humblest saint in communion with God works out God's answer to every problem, for the most part unconsciously to himself. To attempt to understand the problems that are pressing on the shores of Christian work to-day at home and abroad, apart from God, will result in an absolute bewilderment of mind and spirit. It must all come back to one point, a personal relationship to God in Christ Jesus. There is nothing simple in the human soul or in human life; only one thing is simple, and that is the relationship of the individual soul to God, "the simplicity that is in Christ." In work for God it is not sufficient to be awake to the need, to be in earnest, to want to do something; it is necessary to prove from every standpoint, moral, intellectual and spiritual, that the only way to live is in personal relationship to God. It is the individual men and women living a life rooted and grounded in God, who are fulfilling God's purpose in the world.

The great Author and Originator of all missionary enterprise is God, and we must keep in touch with His line. The call to the missionary does not arise out of the discernment of his own mind, or from the sympathy of his own heart, but because behind the face of every distorted, downtrodden heathen, he sees the face of Jesus Christ, and hears His command—"Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations" (RV). The need of the heathen world can only be met by our Risen Lord Who has all power in heaven and in earth, and by our receiving from Him the enduement of power from on high. We have to see that we conserve the energy of regenerating grace planted in us by the Holy Ghost through the Atonement, then wherever we go, the rivers of living water will flow through our lives.

From the very beginning God's work has seemed a forlorn hope, as if He were being worsted; and all the arguments seem to be in favour of working on other lines—the line of education, of healing, and of civilisation. These are the "birds" which come and lodge in the branches, and men are saying that the present manifestation of civilisation is the outcome of Christianity. "This," they say, "is Christianity, this is the thing, these educational forces, these healing and civilising forces. This is what missions ought to be doing, not going off on the line of personal sanctification or of devotion to Jesus; we have grown out of all that. We must devote ourselves to the things we can see; we must educate and train these benighted races and introduce our wider, better views, and in that way the Kingdom of God will come in." This is not God's way. God will bring in His Kingdom in His own way. Jesus says that in this dispensation "the kingdom of God cometh not with observation. . . . Behold, the kingdom of God is within you." All these forces of civilisation have been allowed to lodge in the branches of the spiritual tree of Christianity, whilst the Life that makes them possible is not recognised. They receive shelter from that which they are not themselves, and men's eyes are blinded to the real issue. It is astounding how far away men will get when once they leave the humble stand of a life hid with Christ in God.

2. Spiritual Evangelisation

And the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the LORD God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes. (Ezekiel 36:23)

The first purpose of missionary enterprise is evangelistic, and the evangel is that of personal sanctification. A missionary and a Christian ought to be one and the same, and a Christian is one who is united to his Lord by a living union of character. It is easy to rouse enthusiasm along medical, educational and industrial lines, on the ground that wherever Christianity is made known, social development follows. This is true, but all these things are secondary. The first aim of missionary enterprise is the spiritual evangelisation of the people, and the missionary must be united to Jesus Christ by the spiritual bond of sanctification before he can evangelise others. Wherever a Christian is placed, he must work out the sanctified life. We have to beware of the notion that spirituality is something divorced from contact with sordid realities. The one and only test of a spiritual life is in practical reality. When a missionary's life is taken and placed down under the black night of heathenism, there is only one thing that can stand, and that is the sanctification wrought by God—a personal union with Jesus Christ, and the realisation that he is there for one purpose only, to make disciples of Jesus Christ.

If missionary enthusiasm is awakened without missionary knowledge being given, men go out totally unprepared to face the conditions in heathen lands, and every hour of the day they are faced with moral problems that shock every human sensibility. Unless the call of God has been heard, and the mind and nerves are prepared to face these things from God's standpoint, the whole nature fails under the strain, and the result is, either that the missionary returns home broken, or that he sinks down into oblivion on the mission field itself. We have to call ourselves up short in reading missionary books that sweep us off our feet, and see if they tally with God's purpose. It is extraordinary how few of them do. It is the needs of the heathen that are put first, the awfulness of the conditions that prevail in heathen lands. None of this constitutes the call for a missionary. The appeal is based on the command of our Lord—"Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations" (RV). Not—"Go because the conditions of the heathen will be improved"; they will be, but the great motive of the missionary is the command of Jesus Christ for spiritual evangelisation. We have to guard our motive in work for God as jealously as we would guard anything that God actually put into our hand. It needs more courage to face God with our motive in work for Him than it does to face an audience with our message. We have continually to face our own personal sanctification and our motive for service, with the Lord Himself, to let His searchlight come, and to see that we remain true to Him. We are not sent to develop the races, we are sent to preach the gospel to every creature because Our Lord has commanded it, and for no other reason. God's purpose is at the back of the whole thing, and His purpose is revealed by His Spirit to sanctified souls only.

To-day people are trying to better Jesus Christ's programme, and are saying that they must first of all look after men's bodies, heal them and teach them, and then evangelise them. This reminds one of the legend which says that the birds decided that whichever of them could fly the highest, should be their king; whereupon the wren perched on the back of the eagle, and when the eagle soared up into the sky, the little wren flew up higher still. Many modern books on missionary enterprise are like the wren on the back of the eagle, they think they can go one better than Jesus Christ, "His teaching was all very well for the beginning stages, but now we can go one better."

Missionary enterprise on the line of education, and healing, and social amelioration is magnificent, but it is secondary, and the danger is to give it the first place. The temptation is more subtle to-day than ever it has been, because the countries of the world are being opened up as never before. It sounds so plausible and right to say—Heal the people, teach them, put them in better surroundings, and then evangelise them; but it is fundamentally wrong. The cry "Civilise first, and then evangelise" has honeycombed itself into missionary work in every land; and it takes the Spirit of God to show where it is in direct opposition to God's line. It is putting men's needs first, and that is the very heart and kernel of the temptation Satan brought to Our Lord. Our Lord's first obedience was not to the needs of men, but to the will of His Father. We must beware of putting anything first that Iesus does not put first. The testimony of missionaries over and over again is to the effect that when once evangelistic work is put in the second place, it is the devil who gets his way, not God. Dr. Moffatt said that civilisation drives away the tiger, but breeds the fox. That was the statement of a man after years of work in the mission field, and with ample opportunity of estimating all the forces at work. The introduction of civilisation, without the emphasis on living the life hid with Christ in God, tends to increase the power of evil because it covers it with a veil of refinement.

"The heathen shall know that I am the LORD... when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes." The only reason for a Christian to go out to the mission field is that his own life is hid with Christ in God, and the compulsion of the providence of God outside, working with the imperative call of His Spirit inside, has wedded itself to the command of Jesus—"Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations" (RV). The awakening force spiritually will not come from the civilisation of the West, but from the lives of the lonely, obscure missionaries who have stood true to God, and through whom the rivers of living water have flowed.

3. Supernatural Hope for Missions

Thus saith the LORD, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. (Jeremiah 6:16)

In looking back over centuries of missionary work, the tendency is to say—"This is where that effort failed, and this is where the other failed"; but the real reason for the failure is missed, viz., that God's ideal had been abandoned. If you talk about the need for personal sanctification to an aggressive Christian worker, he will say—"You are a dreamer of dreams, we have to get to work and do something"; whereas it is not a question of doing things, but a question of realising deep down until there is no shadow of doubt about it, that if we are going to do anything, it must be by the supernatural power of God, not by our own ingenuity and wisdom. Holiness people are not unpractical, they are the only ones who are building on the great underlying ideal of God. Our business as workers for God is to find out what God's ideal is, to ask ourselves on what line we are doing our duty; whether we are progressing along the line of God's ideal, and working that out, or being caught up in the drift of modern views and evolving away from God's ideal. The Sermon on the Mount is the perpetual standard of measurement for those at work for God, and yet the statements of Jesus Christ are continually being watered down, and even contradicted by many to-day. There is not the slightest use in going to the foreign field to work for God if we are not true to His ideal at home. We should be a disgrace to Him there.

How many of us really live up to all the light we have? If we examine ourselves before God, we will find that we dare not go one step beyond our own crowd, no matter what the Lord says. If we get any new light on God's word, or on His will for our lives, we take on the cringe of the coward—"I wonder if the others have seen that"; or, "Oh well, if they do not do it, I must not." Very few of us walk up to the light we get unless someone else will go with us. For instance, if we notice how often Jesus Christ talks about being persecuted and cast out for His Name's sake, we shall soon see how far we have fallen away from His ideal. Even the most spiritual among us have little of the genius of the Holy Ghost in our lives. We accept the ordinary commonsense ways of doing things without ever examining them in the light of God. When we do begin to re-relate our lives in accordance with God's ideal, we shall encounter the scorn, or the amazement, or the ridicule, or pity of the crowd we belong to. There are books and teachers that tell us that when God is at work in our lives, it will be manifested in ostensible ways of blessing. Jesus says that the ostensible way in which it will work out is the way of ridicule. "As He is, so are we in this world." What we are insisting on is a right relationship to God first, and then the carrying out of work along God's line. Whether our work is a success or a failure has nothing to do with us. Our call is not to successful service, but to faithfulness. Our Lord demands of us a personal watchful relationship to Himself, and the doing of the duty that lies nearest from that standpoint; and whether men recognise it or not, it will tell for eternity whether we are in the home or the foreign field. It depends on our standpoint which line we emphasise. A personal relationship to Jesus Christ first, then from that basis, as much practical work as possible. Unless the missionary is based on a right relationship to God, he will fizzle out in the passing of the years and become a negligible quantity from God's standpoint. The men and women who stand absolutely true to God's ideal are the ones who are telling for God. God has staked His honour on the work of Jesus Christ in the souls of those whom He has saved, and sanctified, and sent.

THE KEY TO THE MISSIONARY PROBLEM

Matthew 9:38

1. The Key to the Master's Orders

Pray ye therefore . . .

The key to the missionary problem is in the hand of God, not of man, and according to Our Lord, the key is prayer, not work, as that word is popularly understood, because work may mean evading spiritual concentration. Our Lord says—"Pray ye therefore. . . ."

We are not speaking of the lock which the key has to open, viz., the problems of missionary enterprise, but of the key to those problems. That key is put into our hands by Jesus Christ, and it is not a commonsense key. It is not a medical key, nor a civilising key, nor an educational key, not even an evangelical key; the key is prayer. We are challenged straight away by the difference between our view of prayer and Our Lord's view. Prayer to us is not practical, it is stupid, and until we do see that prayer is stupid, that is, stupid from the ordinary natural common-sense point of view, we will never pray. "It is absurd to think that God is going to alter things in answer to prayer!" But that is what Jesus says He will do. It sounds stupid, but it is a stupidity based on His Redemption. The reason that our prayers are not answered is that we are not stupid enough to believe what Jesus says. It is a child, and only a child who has prayer answered; a wise and prudent man does not (cf. Matthew 11:25). We have to be as natural as children in our relationship to Jesus Christ, and He does His work all the time. Jesus Christ is our Master, and He lays down His orders very distinctly—"Pray ye therefore. . . ."

(a) Prayer the Work (John 14:12-14)

We are apt to think of prayer as a common-sense exercise of our higher powers in order to prepare us for work; whereas in the teaching of Jesus, prayer is not to fit us for the "greater works," prayer is the work. Prayer is the outcome of our apprehension of the nature of God, the means whereby we assimilate more and more of His mind, and the means whereby He unveils His purposes to us.

1324 So Send I You

(b) Prayer the Fruit (John 15:16)

The way fruit remains is by prayer. Our Lord puts prayer as the means to fruit-producing and fruit-abiding work; but, remember, it is prayer based on His agony, not on our agony. God is not impressed by our earnestness, He nowhere promises to answer prayer because of our agony in intercession, but only on the ground of Redemption. We have "boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus," and in no other way. We take the crown off Redemption as the ground on which God answers prayer and put it on our own earnestness. Prayer is the miracle of Redemption at work in us, which will produce the miracle of Redemption in the lives of others.

(c) Prayer the Battle (Ephesians 6:11-20)

The armour is for the battle of prayer. "Take up the whole armour of God. . . . Stand therefore, . . ." and then pray. The armour is not to fight in, but to shield us while we pray. Prayer is the battle. The reason we do not pray is that we do not own Jesus Christ as Master, we do not take our orders from Him. The key to the Master's orders is prayer, and where we are when we pray is a matter of absolute indifference. In whatever way God is engineering our circumstances, that is the duty—pray.

2. The Key to the Master's Ownership the Lord of the harvest \dots

According to Our Lord, He owns the harvest, and the harvest is the crisis in innumerable lives all over the world. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest" not pray because we are wrought up over the needs of the heathen, nor pray to procure funds for a society, but pray to the Lord of the harvest. It is appalling how little attention we pay to what Our Lord says. "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (RV) to put in a sickle, to reap. All over the world, there are crises in lives, they are all around us, heathen and Christian, we meet them by the score every day we live; but unless we are set on obeying our Master's orders, we shall never see them. Supposing the crisis comes in my father's life, my brother's life, am I there as a labourer that the harvest may be reaped for Jesus? Jesus said, "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations"; and we cannot disciple others unless we ourselves are disciples. The evangelical emphasis has too often been: "So many souls saved, thank God, now they are all right." the idea being that we have done this thing for God. It is God who saves men; we have to do the discipling after they are saved.

(a) His Position in His Own World (Colossians 1:16–18)

Our Lord's position in His own world is that of Creator. From the remotest star to the last grain of sand, all things were created by Him. His own creatures always recognised Him—"He came unto His own things" (John 1:11 RV mg). They do not recognise our lordship because we have too much of the brute about us; the whole creation is waiting for the revealing of the sons of God (RV).

(b) His Position among His Own People (John 1:11)

"And they that were His own received Him not" (RV). Jesus is never recognised by any man until the personal crisis of conviction of sin is reached. He is the owner of the harvest, not of everyone; they will not have Him until this point of crisis is reached. Jesus Christ owns the harvest which is produced in men by the distress of conviction of sin; and it is this harvest we have to pray that labourers may be thrust out to reap. We may be taken up with the activities of a denomination, or be giving ourselves up to this committee and that, whilst all about us people are ripe unto harvest and we do not reap one of them, but waste our Lord's time in over-energised activities for furthering some cause or denomination.

Jesus Christ is the Lord of the harvest. There are no nations whatever in His outlook, no respect of persons with Him; His outlook is the world. How many of us pray without respect of persons, and with respect to one Person only, Jesus Christ?

(c) His Position over His Own Disciples (John 17:6)

"Thine they were, and Thou gavest them Me." The disciple is Christ's own, and the disciple is not above his Master. He tells us to pray, His Spirit is abroad, and the fields are white already to harvest, but the eyes of all saving His disciples are holden. If for one whole day, quietly and determinedly, we were to give ourselves up to the ownership of Jesus and to obeying His orders, we should be amazed at its close to realise all He had packed into that one day. We say—"Oh, but I have a special work to do." No Christian has a special work to do. A Christian is called to be Jesus Christ's own, one chosen by Him; one who is not above his Master, and who does not dictate to Jesus as to what he intends to do. Our Lord calls to no special work; He calls to Himself. Pray to the Lord of the harvest, and He will engineer your circumstances and thrust you out.

3. The Key to the Master's Option

... that He send forth labourers into His harvest. (RV)

The form the prayer is to take is also dictated by the Master—"that He send forth labourers into His harvest." This leaves no room for the "amateur providence" notion which arises out of our neglect to take our orders from Jesus Christ. We must pray to the Lord of the harvest, and take our orders from Him, and from no one else. The desire to be an amateur providence always arises when Jesus Christ is not recognised as the universal Sovereign.

(a) The Direction of the Work (John 4:35-38)

The "others" who laboured are the prophets and apostles, "and ye are entered into their labours." The great Sower of the seed of the Redemption is the Holy Ghost. The direction of the work is at the option of the Master, not at the choice of the disciple. Mark the significance of the term "labour." We refuse to pray unless we get thrills. May God save us from that counterfeit of true prayer, it is the intensest form of spiritual selfishness. We have to labour, and to labour along the line of His direction. Jesus Christ says—Pray. It looks stupid; but when we labour at prayer results happen all the time from His standpoint, because God creates something in answer to, and by means of prayer, that was not in existence before. "Labour." It is the one thing we will not do. We will take open-air meetings, we will preach—but labour at prayer! There is nothing thrilling about a labouring man's work, but it is the labouring man who makes the conceptions of the genius possible; and it is the labouring saint who makes the conceptions of his Master possible.

(b) The Disposition of the Worker (Matthew 10:24)

Wherever the providence of God may dump us down, in a slum, in a shop, in the desert, ¹⁷ we have to labour along the line of His direction. Never allow this thought—"I am of no use where I am," because you certainly can be of no use where you are not! Wherever He has engineered your circumstances, pray, ejaculate to Him all the time. Impulsive prayer, the prayer that looks so futile, is the thing God heeds more than anything else. Jesus says—"If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you" (RV). Think what an astonishment it will be when the veil is lifted, to find the number of souls that have been reaped for Jesus because our disposition had made Him Master, and we were in the habit of taking our orders from Him. Our Lord in one of His parables reveals that God sows His saints in the places that are most useless according to the judgement of the world; He puts them where He likes. Where God is being glorified is where He puts His saints, and we are no judge of where that is.

(c) The Distinctness of the Way (John 14:6)

The Master says He is the Way; then abide in Him. He says He is the Truth; then believe in Him. He says He is the Life; then live on Him.

Prayer is the answer to every problem there is. How else could Our Lord's command in John 14:1 be fulfilled in our experience? How could we have an untroubled heart if we believed that the heathen who had not heard the Gospel were damned? What would the Redemption of Jesus Christ be worth, of what use would the revelation given in John 3:16 be, if it depended on the laggard laziness of Christians as to whether men are to be saved or not?

We have to live depending on Jesus Christ's wisdom, not on our own. He is the Master, and the problem is His, not ours. We have to use the key He gives us, the key of prayer. Our Lord puts the key into our hands, and we have to learn to pray under His direction. That is the simplicity which He says His Father will bless.

THE KEY TO THE MISSIONARY

Matthew 28:16-20

1. The Universal Sovereignty of Christ

All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth.

The "all things" of Matthew 11:27 is limited to the revelation of the Father; the "all power" of Matthew 28:18 refers to the absolute sovereign universal power of the Risen Lord. "All power is given unto Me. . . . Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." The basis of the missionary appeal is the authority of Jesus Christ. Our Lord puts Himself as the supreme sovereign

Lord over His disciples. He does not say the heathen will be lost if you do not go, but simply—"This is My commandment to you as My disciples—Go and teach all nations." Jesus did not say—"Go into all the world"; or, "Go into the foreign field," but simply—"Go and teach," i.e., "preach and teach out of a living experience of Myself." We are all based on a conception of importance, either our own importance, or the importance of someone else; Jesus tells us to go ^{17.} in the desert: Chambers was speaking to soldiers camped in Egypt.

1326 So Send I You

and teach based on the revelation of His importance. "All power is given unto Me. . . . Go ye therefore. . . ."

(a) The Real Solitude with Christ

"Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain..." The disciples had been in intimate fellowship with Jesus, day and night, for three years; they had seen Him go through the unfathomable agony of Gethsemane; they had seen Him put to death on Calvary; they had seen Him after His Resurrection, and now they stand in solitude with Him. If we want to know the universal sovereignty of Christ, we must get into solitude with Him. It is not sufficient for someone else to tell us about Him; we must perceive with our own eyes Who He is, we must know Him for ourselves. Jesus Christ alone is the key to the missionary.

The danger to-day is to make practical work the driving wheel of our enterprises for God. All the intense social work and aggressive movements of our day are apt to be anti-Christian. They are antagonistic to the sovereignty of the Lord Jesus Christ, because they are based on the conception that human ingenuity is going to bring in the Kingdom of God, and Jesus Christ is made of no account.

(b) The Right Spot to Meet Christ

". . . where Jesus had appointed them." "Come unto Me," that is the right spot to meet Jesus Christ. "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden"—and how many missionaries are! We banish these marvellous words of the universal Sovereign of the world to the threshold of an evangelistic after-meeting. They are the words of Jesus to His disciples. He says "Come," and we have deliberately to take time to come. If we do not take time to come, we shall be inclined to call God's messages the devil. We are so busy in work for Him that when He just touches us, down we go, and in our panic we say—"Oh! that must be the devil." It was God. "Despise not thou the chastening of the Lord."

We must get to the place of real solitude with Christ. He is our mountain-height and our sea-calm; He is the recreating power; He is the universal Sovereign. He tells us to consider the lilies; we say—"No, we must consider life." We mistake the mechanism of life for life itself, and that idea has become incorporated into Christian work. In the active work we do for God we do not really believe that Jesus Christ is sovereign Lord; if we did, we should fuss less and build more in faith in Him. We cannot do the Saviour's work by fuss, but only by knowing Him as the supreme sovereign Lord.

(c) The Rectified Sight of Christ

"And when they saw Him, they worshipped Him: but some doubted." It is not the doubt of unbelief, but the doubt of wonder—"Can it really be so simple as that?" If it is not as simple as that, it is all wrong. When we transacted business with the sovereign Christ, the misgiving in our heart was that it was too simple. The simplicity is the very thing that is of Jesus; anything that is not simple is not of Him. Anything that is complicated is not of His sovereignty, but of our self-interest, our self-will, our self-consideration.

It is a great thing to have our spiritual sight tested by the Celestial Optician, to watch the way in which He rectifies and readjusts our sight. There is one unmistakable witness that Jesus promised us, and that is the gift of His peace. "My peace I give unto you." No matter how complicated the circumstances may be, one moment of contact with Jesus and the fuss is gone, the panic is gone, all the shallow emptiness is gone, and His peace is put in, absolute tranquillity, because of what He says—"All power is given unto Me." Do we look and act as if we believed He had all power in heaven and in earth? What is our actual life like? Is it conducted on the line of John 14:1an undisturbedness of heart arising out of belief in Jesus? We must remember to take time to worship the Being Whose Name we bear.

2. The Unobtrusive Service of the Commission

Go ye therefore.

These words are simply the introduction to a commission. The unobtrusive service of the commission is outlined in the quiet, almost commonplace statement—"Go your way, remembering what I have told you."

(a) How to Go (Acts 1:8)

There is always the danger of starting up false enthusiasm in missionary work—"Oh yes, I will go, where shall I go?" That is like making a false start in a race and having to go back to the starting point. Our Lord's word "go" simply means "live," and Acts 1:8 describes the "going." Jesus did not say to the disciples—"Go into Jerusalem, go into Judaea, go into Samaria, go into the uttermost part of the earth"; but—"Ye shall be My witnesses" (RV) in all these places: He undertakes to establish the goings. So many people are obsessed with this idea—"What are you going to do?" I hope none of us are going to do anything: I hope we are going to be what He wants us to be.

In Matthew 28:19 Our Lord does not say—"Go into all the world," but—"Go ye therefore, and teach." He does the engineering. In Acts 1:8 He does not say "Ye shall receive power, and you shalt go into Jerusalem"—but—"Ye shall be My witnesses . . ." (RV). How the disciples went is described later in the Acts of the Apostles, they went at the point of the sword, persecution arose and scattered them by the providence of God. "How to go" refers to the personal spiritual character of the missionary, not to his feet.

(b) How to Keep Going (John 15:7)

These wonderful words tell us how to keep going in our personal lives, viz., by the words of Jesus. "If ve abide in Me, and My words abide in you." We have continually to pull ourselves up short and recognise the amazing simplicity of Jesus Christ's counsel. The reason we get perplexed is that we do not believe He is Sovereign Lord, we do not believe that He will never forget anything we remember; we conjure up a hundred and one things that we imagine He has forgotten. Instead of praying to the Lord of the harvest to thrust out labourers, we pray—"O Lord, keep my body right; see after this matter and that for me.' Our prayers are taken up with our concerns, our own needs, and only once in a while do we pray for what He tells us to. "Ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you" (RV). We must feed on His word, and that will keep our spiritual life going. Where we are placed is a matter of indifference. God does the engineering, and He sends us out. "Has God given you a special call to this place?" He never does. The place is arranged for by His providence, not by His call.

(c) How to Keep Going till We're Gone (Acts 20:24) This verse tells us how to keep going till we're gone—firstly, by allowing no afflictions to move us from our confidence in the sovereignty of Jesus Christ; and secondly, by not considering our life dear unto ourselves but only to Jesus Christ for the carrying out of His purposes; and thirdly, by fulfilling the ministry we have received of Him to testify the gospel of the grace of God, then we shall go, all together, like Oliver Wendell Holmes' pony chaise, every part worn out at the same time. That is what happens with a wholesome Christian life.

3. The Unique Sacrament of the Charter And teach all nations.

That is the central point of the commission—Teach, "make disciples of all the nations" (RV); disciple everyone, not proselytise everyone. There is nothing more objectionable than the spiritual prig. The type for the missionary is God's own Son, and He did not go about button-holing men. There were plenty of promising men in Our Lord's day, one of them came to Jesus and asked what he might do to inherit eternal life, and the words Jesus spoke to him sent him away in heart-breaking discouragement. Our Lord never pleaded, He never cajoled, He never entrapped; He simply spoke the sternest words mortal ears ever heard, and then left it alone. Our Lord has a perfect understanding that when once His word is heard, it will bear fruit sooner or later.

To-day a number of hysterical and sentimental things are apt to gather round the missionary appeal. The need of the heathen is made the basis of the appeal instead of the authority of Jesus Christ. The need is made the call. It may be good up to a certain point, but it is not the line for the disciples of Jesus Christ. Our Lord did not tell His disciples to gather together and select certain people and send them out. That is what is being done in many places to-day, because we do not take our conception of missionary enterprise from the New Testament. We adapt the New Testament to suit our own ideas; consequently we look on Jesus Christ as One Who assists us in our enterprises. The New Testament idea is that Jesus Christ is the absolute Lord over His disciples.

(a) Administer Your Learning (John 17:17–18)

A disciple must administer to those who are ripe for it what he himself has learned. Jesus Christ is the Lord of the harvest; and the harvest is the critical moment in individual lives that is produced by conviction of sin, and Jesus alone is the judge of when that moment comes.

Many years ago I knew a godly old shepherd in the Highlands, John Cameron. He was so marvellously used by God in his contact with people that whenever he talked to them about their souls they would get saved. One summer John said to me—"If you get permission to talk to my ploughman about his soul, do." Naturally, I said, "Why don't you talk to him yourself?" He replied, "Didn't I say, If you get permission? If you don't know about getting permission, you don't know anything about the Holy Ghost. Do you think I talk to everyone I meet? If I did, I would make God a liar. No, I have to get permission before I talk to a soul."

This ploughman was with John for three years, and they were together every day, bringing the sheep over the hills, and John never once spoke to him about his soul. They would meet people on the hills, and John would talk to them and they would get saved. But he never said a word to the ploughman about spiritual things, until at last one day the ploughman burst out—"For God's sake, talk to me about my soul, or I'll be in hell." So John did talk to him, and the man was wonderfully saved. Then he asked John Cameron why he had not spoken to him before. And John said, "Probably you know why, better than I do—I didn't get permission." Then the ploughman told him this—"When you 'fee'd'¹⁸ me, ^{18.} fee'd: employed; taken on as a worker.

I knew you were a religious man, and I said to some of my mates—'If old John talks to me about my soul, I'll let him know what he is doing."

So the administering of the word is not ministering it where we think it is needed; the word has to be sown in living touch with the Lord of the harvest, sown in touch with Him in solitude and prayer, and He will bring the folks round—black and white, educated and uneducated, rich and poor. They are all there, "white already to harvest," but most of us are so keen on our own notions that we do not recognise that they are ripe for reaping. If we are in touch with Jesus Christ, He says all the time-This is the moment; this one here, that one there, is ready to be reaped. We say-"Oh, but I want to go and get scores of heathen saved, I do not want to be the means of reaping my brother"; but your brother happens to be the one who is white to harvest. The commission is to teach, to disciple—that is, to administer the word.

(b) Abandon Your Life (John 20:23)

These words refer to the sacrament of an abandoned life, filled with the Holy Ghost, through whom the Sovereign Lord makes His words to be spirit and life. "That was exactly the word I needed, how did you know?" You did not know anything about it, you were living in abandoned devotion to Jesus, and He administered the word through you. It is not done by our wits and ingenuity, by our agony and distress, or by our piety, but entirely by our abandon to Jesus Christ.

(c) Apply Your Loyalty (Revelation 2:10)

These words reveal how to apply our loyalty to our Sovereign Lord in every condition and every circumstance. "Be thou faithful unto death."

The key to the missionary is the absolute Sovereignty of the Lord Jesus Christ. We must get into real solitude with Him, feed our soul on His word, and He will engineer our circumstances. "Consider the lilies how they grow"—they live where they are put, and we have to live where God places us. It is not the going of the feet, but the going of the life in real vital relationship to Jesus Christ. God will bring round a stationary life far more than He can ever bring round a "going' missionary, if the "going" missionary is not one whose life is hid with Christ in God. The goings must be of God. There are a hundred and one things in human life that we cannot control; but Jesus says—"All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." Then what are we up to with all our worrying? He says, "Let not your heart be troubled, . . . believe also in Me."

"All power is given unto Me. . . . Go ye therefore." "Go established in Me, and disciple everyone whom I bring around you; I will tell you when they are ripe for it." We shall find that it is not possible to be self-conscious servants of Jesus. We are never of any use to Him in our self-conscious moments; it is in the ordinary times when we are living simply in faith in Him that He gives out the sacrament of His word through us. "He that believeth on Me, . . ." out of him "shall flow rivers of living water."

THE KEY TO THE MISSIONARY MESSAGE

Luke 24:47-49

1. The Remissionary Message of the Missionary

And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name . . . (Luke 24:47)

It is easy to forget that the first duty of the missionary is not to uplift the heathen, not to heal the sick, not to civilise savage races, because all that sounds so rational and so human, and it is easy to arouse interest in it and get funds for it. The primary duty of the missionary is to preach "repentance and remission of sins . . . in His name." The key to the missionary message, whether the missionary is a doctor, a teacher, an industrial worker, or a nurse—the key is the remissionary purpose of Our Lord Jesus Christ's death. The idea of the "missionary" class, the "ministerial" class, the "Christian worker" class has arisen out of our ideas of civilised life, not out of the New Testament faith and order. The New Testament faith and order is that as Christians we do not cease to do our duty as ordinary human beings, but in addition we have been given the key to the missionary message, viz., the proclaiming of the remissionary purpose of the Life and Death of Our Lord. The other work is to be done so instinctively and naturally that it does not interfere with proclaiming the missionary message. We need to remember that Christians must do all that human beings ought to do, and much more, because they are supernaturally endued, but we must never confound that with what Our Lord has entrusted His servants to do, viz., to go and make disciples (RV).

(a) The Limitless Significance of Christ the Lamb of God (1 John 2:2)

It is possible to take any phase of Our Lord's life, the healing phase, the teaching phase, the saving and sanctifying phase, but there is nothing limitless about any of these. But take this: "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." That is limitless. The key to the missionary message is the limitless significance of Jesus as the propitiation for our sins. A missionary is one who is soaked in the revelation that Jesus Christ is "the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." The key to the missionary message is not the kindness of Jesus; not His going about doing good; not His revealing of the Fatherhood of God; but the remissionary aspect of His life and death. This aspect alone has a limitless significance.

(b) The Limitless Significance of Sin Against the Lamb of God (2 Corinthians 5:21)

If the significance of Christ as the propitiation for sins is limitless, the domain to which His propitiation applies is limitless also. Sinfulness against Christ is as limitless as the propitiation. "Therefore, as through one man sin entered into the world, and death through sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all sinned" (Romans 5:12 RV). We are apt to talk sentimental nonsense about the Universal Fatherhood of God; to knock the bottom board out of Redemption by saying that God is love and of course He will forgive sin. When the Holy Spirit comes, He makes us know that God is holy love, and therefore He cannot forgive sin apart from the Atonement; He would contradict His own nature if He did. The only ground on which God can forgive sin and reinstate us in His favour, is through the Cross of Christ, and in no other way.

"Him who knew no sin He made to be sin" (RV). Jesus Christ went through identification with sin, and put away sin on the Cross, so that every man on earth might be freed from sin by the right of His Atonement. God made His own Son to be sin that He might make the sinner a saint—"that we might become the righteousness of God in Him" (RV).

The key to the missionary message is not man's views or predilections regarding Redemption, but the revelation given by Our Lord Himself concerning His life and death, "the Son of man came . . . to give His life a ransom for many." When the Holy Ghost comes in, He brings us into touch with the Lord Jesus Himself, and gives us the key to the missionary message, which is not the proclaiming of any particular view of salvation, but the proclaiming of "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." The Holy Ghost sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts, and the love of God is worldwide; there is no patriotism in the missionary message. This does not mean that patriots do not become missionaries, but it does mean that the missionary message is not patriotic. The missionary message is irrespective of all race conditions, it is for the whole world. "God so loved the world. . . ."

Sin against Christ the Lamb of God is world-wide, the propitiation of Christ is world-wide, and the missionary's message is world-wide; it is a message not of condemnation, but of remission. "That repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name unto all the nations" (RV).

The only final thing in the world is the Redemption of Jesus Christ.

(c) The Limitless Significance of the Sermon on Christ (John 1:29)

The significance of the sermon on Christ the Lamb of God is limitless because He is the Lamb of God, not of man. "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." The Bible reveals all through that Our Lord bore the sin of the world by identification, not by sympathy. He came here for one purpose only—to bear away the sin of the world in His own Person on the Cross. He came to redeem men, not to set them a wonderful example. We have to beware of becoming the advocate of a certain view of the limitless. The Redemption avails for everyone—"The Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," not the sin of those who belong to any particular country, but the sin of the world. The words are worthy only of Almighty God's wisdom, not of man's.

2. The Regenerative Magnitude of the Mission preached in His name among all nations, beginning from [RV] Jerusalem . . .

"These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth" (Revelation 14:4). These words form a magnificent commentary on sacramental preaching, i.e., preaching in His name.

(a) The Personal Possession of the Nature of the Lamb of God

Jesus spoke these words to His disciples, and to no one else. To be a disciple means to be a believer in Jesus—one who has given up his right to himself to the ownership of Christ. "You must possess My nature in yourselves," says Jesus, "then go and preach in My Name"—in My nature.

(b) The Powerful Programme of the Naiveté of the Lamb of God

Naiveté means natural simplicity and unreservedness of thought. The Divine simplicity of the phrase—"preached in His name"! It is entirely free from diplomacy in any shape or form. The amazing simplicity of the nature of God is foolish judged by human wisdom; but "the foolishness of God is wiser than men."

The key to the missionary message is the proclamation of this gospel of propitiation for the sins of the whole world. We must be careful lest we become too wise for Jesus and say—"Oh but the people will never understand." We should say—"God knows how to make them understand, therefore we will do what He tells us." If we have got hold of the truth of God for ourselves, we have to give it out and not try to explain it. It is our explanations of God's truth that befog men. Let the truth come out in all its rugged force and strength, and it will take effect in its own way. "That repentance and remission of sins should be preached..." We are not to preach the doing of good things; good deeds are not to be preached, they are to be performed.

1330 So Send I You

(c) The Particular Place of the Negotiations of the Lamb of God

"... among all nations, beginning from [RV] Jerusalem." The particular place where Our Lord tells His disciples to begin is where He is not believed in; and we do not need to go to the back of beyond for that. The first place may be inside our own skull, in the intellect that will not believe in Him. If we remain true to Jesus Christ and to His command to preach in His name, it will mean encountering hostility when we come in contact with the culture and wisdom and education that is not devoted to Jesus.

3. The Responsive Martyrdom of the Missionary

... And ye are witnesses of these things. (Luke 24:48)

These imperative words are spoken to Jesus Christ's disciples. A witness is one who has deliberately given up his life to the ownership of another, not to a cause, and death will never make him swerve from his allegiance.

(a) The Wonder of Witnessing

"Behold, I send the promise of My Father upon you," and in Acts 1:8 Jesus tells them what the result of the coming of the promise of the Father will be, "Ye shall be My witnesses" (RV). Many a man is prevented from being a witness to Jesus by over-zealousness for His cause. "What are you being trained for? Are you going to be a minister, a deaconess, a missionary? What is the use of all this training?" Bible training and missionary training is not meant to train men for a purpose for which human nature can train itself. Religious institutions start out on the right line of making witnesses to Jesus, then they get swept off on to the human line and begin to train men for certain things, to train for a cause, or a special enterprise, or for a denomination, and the more these training places are multiplied, the less chance is there of witnesses to Jesus being made. Nowadays we are in danger of reversing Jesus Christ's order. There stands the eternal word of Christ—"As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." (RV). Too often a missionary is sent first by a denomination, and secondly by Christ. We may talk devoutly about Jesus in our meetings, but He has to take the last place.

One way in which Satan comes as an angel of light to Christians to-day is by telling them there is no need to use their minds. We must use our minds; we must keep the full power of our intellect ablaze for God on any subject that awakens us in our study of His word, always keeping the secret of the life hid with Christ in God. Think of the sweat and labour and agony of nerve that a scientific student will go through in order to attain his end; then think of the slipshod, lazy way we go into work for God.

(b) The Woe of Witnessing

A missionary is one who is wedded to the charter of his Lord and Master. "I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." It is easier to belong to a coterie and tell what God has done for us, or to become a devotee to Divine healing, or a special type of sanctification. Paul did not say—"Woe is unto me if I do not preach what Jesus Christ has done for me," but—"Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" Personal experience is a mere illustration that explains the wonderful difference the Gospel has made in us. Our experience is the gateway into the Gospel for us; but it is not the Gospel. This is the Gospel: "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name."

(c) The Worship of Witnessing

Worship is the love offering of our keen sense of the worth-ship of God. True worship springs from the same source as the missionary himself. To worship God truly is to become a missionary, because our worship is a testimony to Him. It is presenting back to God the best He has given to us, publicly not privately. Every act of worship is a public testimony, and is at once the most personally sacred and the most public act that God demands of His faithful ones.

THE LOCK FOR THE MISSIONARY KEY

Romans 10:14-15

1. The Discovered Sense of Responsibility How then shall they call . . . ?

The awakened sense of responsibility to God for the whole world is seen in the rousing up of the Christian community in sympathy towards missionary enterprise. Within recent years missionary organisation from the human standpoint has almost reached the limit of perfection. But if all this perfection of organisation does is to make men discover a new sense of responsibility without an emphatic basing of everything on Redemption, it will end in a gigantic failure. To-day many are interested in the foreign field because of a passionate interest in something other than the Lord Jesus and His command—"Go ye therefore, and make disciples" (RV). All this organisation ought to mean that we can go ahead as never before; but if once the dethronement of Jesus creeps in, the finest organisation will but perfect the lock which cannot open of itself.

There are wonderful things about light, but there are terrible things also. When once the light of God's Spirit breaks into a heart and life that has been perfectly happy and peaceful without God, it is hell for that one. "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin." If we take this aspect of things out of the individual setting and put it into a universal setting, we shall see the reason of the antipathy to foreign missions. It is because light brings confusion and disaster. The light produces hell where before there was peace; it produces pain where before there was death. God's method in the pathway of light is destructive before it is constructive. The missionary is the incarnation of Holy Ghost light, and when he comes all the things of the night tremble. The night of heathenism is being split up, not by the incoming of civilisation, but by the witness of men and women who are true to God.

In this country we know nothing about what Jesus mentions in Matthew 10:34–39, but wherever the missionary brings the evangel of Jesus, he will have to face it. Those who become converts to Jesus have to go through these things literally, they are persecuted and flung out; and unless the missionary knows God and trusts in Him entirely, he will step down to a lower level and compromise, and tell the people they need not do certain things in exactly the way that Jesus indicates. But if he stands true to God, he will preach the truth, at whatever cost to the converts. No nervous system can stand that strain, no sensitiveness of mind can stand that test, nothing but the Holy Ghost can stand it, because He has the mind of God.

2. The Discovered Service of Reasonableness How shall they believe . . . ?

Never before has there been such an educated and reasonable and intense grasp of all the problems, social and international and personal, as there is today. Everything has been laid at the service of the missionary. The opportunity is one that makes us hold our breath with amazement, and at the same moment sink back—But who has the key? All the forces of civilisation and education and healing are in perfect trim; the fulness of time has come as never before; the only thing that is lacking is the key that fits the lock. To-day the emphasis is on the reasonable aspects of missionary work, the healing, civilising, and educational. These are all admirable, and if the key were used, they would facilitate rapidly our Lord's purpose and make it much easier to get into the heart of the problem; but the danger is that we have forgotten the key. The key is the Lordship of Jesus Christ and His supreme authority.

3. The Discovered Scheme of Representatives How shall they hear . . . ?

There is nothing more thrilling than the realisation of what is at the disposal of the Christian church to-day. Every element of science, skill and learning has been taxed to its limit to serve the missionary purpose. It is a magnificent scheme, and all of it in order that the world might hear, but "How shall they hear without a preacher?" The work that is being done cannot be too highly praised, but it is not preaching. "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel," that was the burning message of the apostle Paul. In spite of all the perfection of organisation the magnificent equipment and tremendous resolve, the purpose for which the whole thing was started is frequently not fulfilled, and the scheme ends simply as something to be admired. That accounts for the alternation of exaltation and despair. Just when everything seems ripe for God and our hopes are raised to the highest pitch, we are suddenly chilled, because there is no message, nothing to be believed, nothing for the world to hear. Our organisation has enabled us to re-arrange and systematise the problems, but it cannot solve the problems. It is not that the scheme is wrong. What is wrong is that the key has been lost, the Lordship of So Send I You

Jesus Christ has been forgotten; His supreme authority over the missionary has been ignored, He is not realised as King of kings.

Out of the centre of His own agony in the Garden, Our Lord counsels us to "watch and pray" lest we slip into temptation. Missionary enterprise will reveal more quickly than anything whether we have been caught by the lure of wrong roads to the Kingdom. When we pray "Thy kingdom come," we have to see that we allow the King to have His way in us first, that we ourselves are personally related to Him by sanctification. God's plan is that the truth must die—"Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone . . ." (John 12:24). Christian work, if it is spiritual, has followed that law at home and everywhere, because that is the only way in which it can bring forth God's fruit.

4. The Discovered Source of Reserves How shall they preach . . . ?

A missionary is one sent by Jesus Christ as the Father sent Him. Our Lord's first obedience was not to the needs of men, but to the will of His Father, and the first great duty of the Christian is not to the needs of his fellow men, but to the will of his Lord. To elevate the heathen, to lift up the downtrodden and oppressed, is magnificent, but it is not the reason for missionary enterprise. The teaching of the New Testament is that we ought to be doing all these things to the best of our ability, but missionary enterprise is another thing. A missionary is one who is fitted with the key to the missionary lock while he pursues the ordinary callings of life.

What is needed to-day is Christian sociology, not sociology Christianised. One way in which God will re-introduce the emphasis on the Gospel is by bringing into His service men and women who not only understand the problems, but who have learned that the secret of the whole thing is supernatural regeneration, that is, personal holiness wrought by the grace of God.

Jesus Christ came to do what no human being can do, He came to redeem men, to alter their disposition, to plant in them the Holy Spirit, to make them new creatures. Christianity is not the obliteration of the old, but the transfiguration of the old. Jesus Christ did not come to teach men to be holy: He came to make men holy. His teaching has no meaning for us unless we enter into His life by means of His death. The Cross is the great central point. Jesus Christ is not first a Teacher, He is first a Saviour; and the thing that tells in the long run in the missionary's life is not successful understanding of His teaching, but the realisation in his own personal life of the meaning of the Cross. There is only One Who saves men, and that is God. The missionary is there to proclaim the marvel of that salvation, and what he proclaims becomes a sacrament in himself, he is made the incarnation of what he preaches. The missionary will be put into places where he has to stand alone, because he is being held true to the content of the Gospel as it is in Jesus. There is a loneliness which comes from a defiant heroism which has no element of the Gospel in it.

There is no more wholesome training for the foreign field than doing our duty in the home field. The foreign field is apt to have a glamour over it because it is away somewhere else. There is an inspiration and a sense of the heroic about going to the foreign field—until we get there, and find that the most terrible things we ever touched at home were clean and vigorous compared to the corruption that has to be faced there. Unless the life of a missionary is hid with Christ in God before he begins his work, that life will become exclusive and narrow, it will never become the servant of all men, it will never wash the feet of others. Therefore we come back to the first principle—"The heathen shall know that I am the LORD when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes."

5. The Discovered Supremacy of Redemption How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!

Thank God for the countless numbers of individuals who realise that the only Reality is Redemption; that the only thing to preach is the Gospel; that the only service to be rendered is the sacramental service of identification with Our Lord's Death and Resurrection. To preach the Gospel is to proclaim that God saves from sin and regenerates into His Kingdom anyone and everyone who believes on the Lord Jesus. It means even more—it means to disciple all the nations (RV) not only on the authority of Jesus, but on the flesh and blood evidence of entire sanctification in the life of the missionary. "When it pleased God . . . to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him among the heathen."

Thus we end where we began, with Our Lord Jesus Christ. He is the First and the Last, and laying His hands on the missionary, He says—"Fear not; I...have the keys."

THE KEY TO MISSIONARY DEVOTION

3 John 7

We live in a complex world, amid such a mass of sensibilities and impressionabilities that we are apt to imagine that it is the same with God. It is our complicated rationalism that makes the difficulty. We have to beware of every simplicity saving the simplicity that is in Christ.

The key to missionary devotion is put in our hand at the outset, "For His name's sake they went forth." The key is amazingly simple, as is everything connected with Our Lord. Our difficulties arise when we lose the key, and we lose the key by not being simple.

1. The Domination of the Master Himself (John 21:15–16)

The Master dominates, not domineers over, His disciples. His is the domination of holy love. If once, for one moment, we see the Lord, we may fall and slip away, but we shall never rest until we find Him again. The destiny of every human being depends on his relationship to Jesus Christ, it is not on his relationship to life, or on his service or his usefulness, but simply and solely on his relationship to Jesus Christ.

(a) Love for Him

Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me more than these?

The sovereign preference of the disciple's person must be for the Person of the Lord Jesus over every other preference. This preference for Him is first and last against all competition. Love is difficult to define, although simple to know; life is difficult to define, although simple to have. What we obtain we can to a certain extent define; but all we have as a personal inheritance is indefinable. Intellect and logic are instruments, they are not life. The tyranny of the intellectual Napoleon is that he makes out that the intellect is life. Intellect is the expression of life. In the same way, theology is said to be religion; theology is the instrument of religion.

Love cannot be defined. Try and define your love for Jesus Christ, and you will find you cannot do it. Love is the sovereign preference of my person for another person, and Jesus Christ demands that that other person be Himself. That does not mean we have no preference for anyone else, but that Jesus Christ has the sovereign preference; within that sovereign preference come all other loving preferences, down to flowers and animals. The Bible makes no distinction between Divine love and human love, it speaks only of love.

When a disciple is dominated by his love to Jesus Christ, he is not always conscious of Him. It is absurd to think that we have to be conscious all the time of the one we love most. The one we are conscious of is the one we do not love most. A child is not conscious all the time of his love for his mother; it is the crisis that produces the consciousness. When we are getting into the throes of love, we are conscious of it because we are not in love yet. We imagine that we have to take God into our consciousness, whereas God takes us into His consciousness; consequently we are rarely conscious of Him.

(b) Love to Him

Simon, Son of Jonas, lovest thou Me? He saith unto Him, Yea, Lord; Thou knowest that I love Thee.

In verse 15 Our Lord had made a comparison— "Lovest thou Me more than these?" Here He makes no comparison—"Lovest thou Me?" To demand a declaration of love beyond comparison is to risk losing all. A missionary must be dominated by this love beyond compare to the Lord Jesus Christ, otherwise he will be simply the servant of a denomination or a cause, or a seeker for relief from a crushing sorrow in work. Many go into Christian work not for the sake of His Name, but in order to find surcease from their own sorrow; because of unrequited love; or because of a bereavement or a disappointment. Such workers are not dominated by the Master, and they are likely to strew the mission field with failure and sighs, and to discourage those who work with them. There is only one thing stronger than any of these things, and that is love.

(c) Love in Him

He saith unto him the third time, Simon son of Jonas, lovest thou Me?

Our Lord's question elicits the amazed confession of Peter's deepest heart—"Lord, Thou knowest all things; Thou knowest that I love Thee." Peter did not say—Look at this, and that, to confirm it. Love never professes; love confesses. "Peter was grieved because He said unto him the third time . . ." Our Lord's thrice repeated question revealed to Peter's own soul that there was no one he loved more than Jesus, and in utter amazement as he looks at himself in his grief, he says, "Thou knowest that I love Thee." When once the domination of the Master over the heart of a disciple reaches the depth of that expression, then He entrusts His call to that one—"Feed My sheep."

"Lovest thou Me? . . . Feed My sheep." Our Lord indicated three times over how love to Himself is to be manifested in the life of the lover, viz., in identification with His interests in others. Our Lord does not ask us to die for Him, but to identify ourselves with His interests in other people—not identify Him with our interests in other people. "Feed My sheep," see that they get nourished in their knowledge of Me.

Paul in 1 Corinthians 13:4–8 gives the charter of love. "Love suffereth long, and is kind; . . . taketh not account of evil. . . . Love never faileth" (RV). The love of God is wrought in us by the Holy Ghost. He sheds abroad the love of God, the nature of God, in our hearts, and that love works efficaciously through us as we come in contact with others. The test of love for Jesus Christ is the practical one, all the rest is sentimental jargon.

2. The Denomination of the Master's Name (Matthew 28:18-20)

"Make disciples of all the nations" (RV). That cannot be done unless Jesus Christ is Who He says He is. The apostolic office is not based on faith, but on love. The two working lines for carrying out Jesus Christ's command are, first, the sovereign preference of our person for the Person of Jesus Christ; and second, the willing and deliberate identification of our interests with Jesus Christ's interests in other people. Ardour must never be mistaken for love, nor the sense of the heroic for devotion to Jesus, nor self-sacrifice for fulfilling a spiritual destiny. It is much easier to follow in the track of the heroic than to remain true to Jesus in drab, mean¹⁹ streets. Human nature unaided by God can do the heroic business; human pride unaided by God can do the self-sacrificing (cf. 1 Corinthians 13:1-3); but it takes the supernatural power of God to keep us as saints in the drab commonplace days. The need can never be the call for missionary enterprise. The need is the opportunity. The call is the commission of Jesus Christ and relationship to His Person. "All power is given unto Me. . . . Go ye therefore." Any work for God that has less than a passion for Jesus Christ as its motive will end in crushing heartbreak and discouragement.

(a) Loyalty to His Character All power is given unto Me.

Loyalty to the Master's character means that the missionary believes in his Lord's almightiness on earth as well as in heaven, though every common-sense rational fact should declare loudly that He has no more power than a morning mist. If we are going to be loyal to Jesus Christ's character as it is portrayed in the New Testament, we have a tremendously big task on hand. Loyalty to Jesus is the thing that is stuck at to-day. Folk will be loyal to work, to ideals, to anything, but they are not willing to acknowledge loyalty to Jesus Christ.

Christian workers frequently become intensely impatient of this idea of loyalty to Jesus. Our Lord is dethroned more emphatically by Christian workers than by the world. Loyalty to Jesus is the outcome of the indwelling of the personal Holy Spirit working in us the supernatural Redemption of Christ, and keeping us true to His Name when every commonsense fact gives the lie to it. In Psalm 73 the Psalmist says that he nearly lost his faith in God because every rational fact seemed to prove that he had trusted a fiction. There is no test to equal the test of remaining loyal to Jesus Christ's character when the ungodly man is in the ascendant. We are apt to become cynical, and a cynical view is always a distorted view, a view arising out of pique because some personal object is being thwarted.

(b) Loyalty to His Call

Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations. (RV)

Loyalty to the call of Our Lord means not merely that we keep the letter of His command, but that we keep in contact with His nature, i.e., His Name. "Except ye . . . become as little children." The meaning of new birth is receiving His nature. The call of the sea, the call of the mountains, the call of the wild—all these calls are perfectly in accord with the nature of the caller, not necessarily in accord with the nature of the one who listens. Everyone does not hear the call of the sea, only the one who has the nature of the sea in him hears it. The call of the mountains does not come to everyone, only to the one who has the nature of the mountains in him. Likewise the call of God does not come to everyone, it comes only to those who have the nature of God in them. The call of Jesus Christ does not come to everyone, only to those who have His nature. Our loyalty is not to stand by the letter of what Jesus says, but to keep our soul continually open to the nature of the Lord Jesus Christ.

(c) Loyalty to His Commission

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.

Loyalty to the commission means, first of all, that the missionary sets himself to find out all that his Lord taught. There is not a greater test for loyal concentration than that. Jesus did not say—"Teach salvation," or, "teach sanctification"; or," teach Divine healing," but—"Teach whatsoever I have commanded vou." There is no room for the specialist or the crank or the fanatic in missionary work. A fanatic is one who has forgotten he is a human being. Our Lord never sent out cranks and fanatics, He sent out those who were loyal to His domination. He sent out ordinary men and women, plus dominating devotion to Himself by the indwelling Holy Ghost. A missionary is not sent by Jesus Christ to do medical work, educational work, industrial work; all that is part of the ordinary duty of life, and a missionary ought to be so equipped that he does these things naturally. But Jesus Christ never sends His disciples to do these things; He sends His disciples to teach, to "make disciples of all the nations" (RV).

^{19.} The word mean as used here refers to something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

3. The Detachment for the Master (John 21:18–22)

This detachment to Jesus is rarely referred to, it means personal attachment to no one and to nothing saving Our Lord Himself. Our Lord did not teach detachment from other things: He taught attachment to Himself. Jesus Christ was not a recluse. He did not cut Himself off from society, He was amazingly in and out among the ordinary things of life; but He was disconnected fundamentally from it all. He was not aloof, but He lived in another world. His life was so social that men called Him a glutton and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. His detachments were inside towards God. Our external detachments are often an indication of a secret vital attachment to the thing from which we keep away externally. Before we are rightly detached to Jesus Christ, we spend our time keeping ourselves detached from other things, which is a sure sign of a secret affinity with them. When we are really detached to Jesus, He can entrust us with all other things. "Lo, we have left all, and have followed Thee," said Peter, implying—"What shall we get?" Jesus told him that they would get a hundredfold more of all they had given up, once the detachment to Himself had been formed.

(a) The Life Sacrificed

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdest thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not.

These words are a description of the nature of internal sacrifice and every unspiritual desire will plead against the undesirability of the sacrifice. "God could never expect me to give up my magnificent prospects and devote my life to the missionary cause." But He happens to have done so. The battle is yours. He says no more, but He waits.

(b) The Life Sacramented

Now this He spake, signifying by what manner of death he should glorify God. And when He had spoken this, He saith unto him, Follow Me. (RV)

Three irrational conclusions—"death," "glorifying God," "following Me," and at His Ascension Jesus disappears. Our Lord never talks on the basis of reason, He talks on the basis of Redemption. What is nonsense rationally is Redemptive Reality. The "Follow Me" spoken three years before had nothing mystical in it, it was an external following; now it is a following in internal martyrdom.

"Sacramented" means that the elements of the natural life are presenced by Divinity as they are broken in God's service providentially. We have to be entirely adjusted into Jesus before He can make us a sacrament. The missionary must be a sacramental personality, one through whom the presence of God comes to others.

(c) The Life Sacred

Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou Me.

Not only is the life of the missionary sacred to God, but the lives of others are sacred also, and when one tries to pry into another's concerns, he will receive the rebuke of Our Lord—"What is that to thee? Follow thou Me."

1336 So Send I You

HIS!

Thine they were, and Thou gavest them Me. (John 17:6)

It is this aspect of a disciple's life that is frequently forgotten. We are apt to think of ourselves as our own, of the work as our work. A great point in spiritual nobility has been reached when we can really say, "I am not my own." It is only the noble nature that can be mastered—an unpalatable truth if we are spiritually stiffnecked and stubborn, refusing to be mastered. The Son of God is the Highest of all, yet the characteristic of His life was obedience. We have to learn that God is not meant for us, it is we who are meant for God. Jesus Christ does satisfy the last aching abyss of the human heart, but that must never lead to thinking of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost as an Almighty arrangement for satisfying us. "Know ye not that . . . ye are not your own?" It is this realisation that is wrought in us by the Holy Ghost.

His! Does that apply to us? Have we realised that our body is not our own, but His—"the temple of the Holy Ghost"! Have we realised that our heart and affections are not our own, but His? If so, we shall be careful over inordinate affection. Have we realised that all the ambitions of life are His? We are out for one thing only, for Jesus Christ's enterprises. That is the inner secret of the missionary—I know that I am His, and that He is carrying on His enterprises through me; I am His possession and He can do as He likes with me.

Each one has the setting of his own difficulties and temptations, and so it is with the missionary. If we cannot live at home as His, we shall find it much more difficult to live in the foreign field as His; we shall be more likely to make things ours than to remain loyal to Him. If we have been "wobblers" at home, we shall be "wobblers" out there. If we have learned to face ourselves with God at home, we shall face ourselves with God out there. But we have to learn to do it, and it is not easy at the beginning. Where he is placed is a matter of indifference to the missionary; if he maintains his contact with God, out of him will flow rivers of living water. We have the idea that we engineer missionary enterprise; but it is the genius of the Holy Spirit that makes us go." God does not do anything with us, only through us; consequently the one thing God estimates in His servants is the work of the Holy Spirit.

Jesus Christ is the only One Who has the right to tell us what it means to be His, and in Luke 14:26–33 He is laying down the conditions of discipleship. These conditions are summed up in one astounding word—"hate." "If any man cometh unto Me, and hateth not . . . [i.e., a hatred of every good thing that divides the heart from loyalty to Jesus], he cannot be My disciple" (RV). Every one of the relationships Jesus mentions may be a competitive relationship. We may prefer to be our mother's, or our father's, or our own, and Jesus does not say we cannot be, but He does say—"he cannot be My disciple," he cannot be one over whom Jesus writes the word "Mine."

In verses 28–33 Our Lord is not referring to a cost the disciple has to estimate, but stating that He has estimated the cost. Jesus Christ is not less than a man among men, and He has counted the cost; that is why He makes the conditions so stern. The men who say—"Lord, Lord," are not the ones Jesus takes on His enterprises; He takes only those men in whom He has done everything, they are the ones upon whom He can rely. Many devote themselves to work for God in whom Jesus Christ has done nothing; consequently they bungle His business, run up the white flag to the prince of this world and compromise with him. Jesus says that the only ones He will take on His building and battling enterprises are those who are devoted to Him because He has altered their disposition.

1. The Missionary Watching (Matthew 26:38)

"Watch with Me"—with no private point of view of your own; watch entirely with Me. In the early stages of Christian experience, we do not watch with Jesus, we watch for Him. We do not know how to watch with Jesus in the circumstances of our lives, in the revelation of His word; we have the idea only of His watching with us, answering our problems, helping us. But Jesus says—"Watch with Me." How is it possible to watch with One Whom we do not understand? The early disciples did not understand Jesus in the slightest. They had been with Him for three years, they loved Him to the limit of their natural hearts, but they had no idea what He meant when He talked of His Kingdom or of His Cross. Jesus was inscrutable to them on these main points. They could not watch with Him for the simple reason that they did not know what He was after. They could not watch with Him in His Gethsemane, they did not know why He was suffering, and they slept for their own sorrow. Then Jesus gave Himself up, and they all forsook Him, and fled, and when they saw Him put to death on the cross, their hearts were broken. Then after the Resurrection, Jesus came to them and said—"Receive ye the Holy Ghost," and they learned to watch with Him all the rest of their lives.

The real centre of the disciple's devotion is watching with Jesus. When once we have learned to watch with Him, the thought of self is not kept down because it is not there to keep down; self-effacement is complete. Self has been effaced by the deliberate giving up to another self in sovereign preference, and the manifestation of the life in the actual whirl of things is—"I am not my own, but His."

2. The Missionary Waiting (Revelation 3:10) Because thou hast kept the word of My patience.

This is not the patience of pessimism, nor of exhaustion, but the patience of joyfulness because God reigns. It may be illustrated by likening the saint to a bow and arrow in the hand of God. God is aiming at His mark, and He stretches and strains until the saint says—"I cannot stand any more," but God does not heed. He goes on stretching until His purpose is in sight, then He lets fly, and the arrow reaches His mark.

Moses "endured, as seeing Him who is invisible." The vision of God is the source of the patience of a saint. A man with the vision of God is not devoted simply to a cause or a particular issue, but to God Himself. Our Lord sent no one out on the ground of what He had done for them, but only because they had seen Him, and by the power of His Spirit had perceived Who He was. Nothing can daunt the man who has seen Jesus. The one who has only a personal testimony as to what Jesus can do for him may be daunted; but nothing can turn the man who has seen Him. It takes the endurance which comes from a vision of God to go on without seeing results. We are not here for successful service, but to be faithful. Had Jesus any results? Before we go into work for Him we must learn that the disciple is not above his Master. We cannot be discouraged if we belong to Him, for it was said of Him—"He shall not fail nor be discouraged." Discouragement is "disenchanted egotism." "Things are not happening in the way I expected they would, therefore I am going to give it all up." To talk like that is a sure sign that we are not possessed by love for Him, but only by love for ourselves. Discouragement always comes when we insist on having our own way.

3. The Missionary Worshipping

... worship God in the spirit. (Philippians 3:3)

Circumcision is the Old Testament symbol for New Testament sanctification. To worship God "in the spirit" is not to worship Him sincerely, in the remote part of our nature; but to worship Him by the power of the Spirit He gives to us. The Holy Spirit never becomes our spirit, He quickens our spirit into oneness with God. Worship is the tryst of sacramental identification with God; we deliberately give back to God the best He has given us that we may be identified with Him in it. "I beseech you, . . . present your bodies a living sacrifice, . . . which is your spiritual worship" (RV mg). Worship of God is the sacramental element in a saint's life. We have to give back to God in worship every blessing He has given to us.

4. The Missionary Witnessing (Acts 1:8)

But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be My witnesses. (RV)

The Holy Ghost is the One Who expounds the nature of Jesus to us. When the Holy Ghost comes in, He does infinitely more than deliver us from sin, He makes us one with our Lord. "My witnesses," a satisfaction to Jesus wherever He places us. To be a witness means to live a life of unsullied, uncompromising, and unbribed devotion to Jesus. A true witness is one who lets his light shine in works that exhibit the disposition of Jesus. Our Lord makes the one who is a witness His own possession, He becomes responsible for him. We have to be entirely His, to exhibit His Spirit no matter what circumstances we are in. It is extraordinary to watch God alter things. We have to worship God in the difficult circumstances, and when He chooses, He will alter them in two seconds. If we deliberately sign ourselves as "His," then all that happens is the fulfilment of Our Lord's own words in Matthew 11:28–29: "Come unto Me . . . , and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

Christ! I am Christ's! and let the name suffice you, Ay, for me too He greatly hath sufficed; Lo with no winning words I would entice you, Paul has no honour and no friend but Christ.

Yea, thro' life, death, thro' sorrow and thro' sinning

He shall suffice me, for He hath sufficed: Christ is the end, for Christ was the beginning, Christ the beginning, for the end is Christ.

From November 1907 to July 1915, Oswald Chambers worked full-time with the Pentecostal League of Prayer in Britain. During the first four years, he traveled throughout the United Kingdom speaking at churches and League meetings. Then, from 1911 to 1915 he served as principal of the Bible Training College³ (BTC), London, an arm of the League of Prayer.

During Chambers' first year as principal of the BTC,⁴ he continued a heavy speaking schedule for the League. In the Thursday night Holiness Meetings leading up to Easter 1911, he taught this series, "How to Work for the Cure of Souls."

The phrase "the cure of souls" likely emerged from Chambers' reading of Dr. P. T. Forsyth (1848–1921), a Congregationalist minister and theologian. Chambers read many of Forsyth's books, valued his insights, and often quoted Forsyth in his lectures and sermons.

In 1915, C. Rae Griffin, a student and friend of Chambers at the Bible Training College, persuaded Oswald to print some of his talks as booklets. The Discipline Series were the first, and these messages were published as a booklet in 1915 with the proceeds going toward Chambers' ensuing work as a chaplain among the troops in Egypt.⁵

FOREWORD

Another book by Oswald Chambers! I wonder if his eager readers think of him as a writer of mature old age, giving the stored wisdom of a long life in these searching, virile, helpful messages. If so, they are mistaken. The facts are that his books are records of addresses and lectures that he gave during a decade of wonderful public and private ministry, both to students and congregations who were privileged to listen to him between 1907 and 1917. His wife, with Godgiven wisdom and energy, garnered this precious treasure by taking verbatim reports in shorthand throughout these busy years. Thus, when Oswald Chambers suddenly and unexpectedly died in Egypt in his early forties (during the Great War),6 he left behind him a wealth of spiritual vitamins, which have ever since been enriching us through his books.

And now this latest book goes forth, at a time when soul-sickness is more than ever rampant. The messages are full of spiritual discernment and diagnosis, and they were first given at Speke Hall, Battersea, when Oswald Chambers was Principal of the Bible Training College at Clapham Common. Those of us who listened to him then, and worked with him, will never forget his forceful challenging statements, and we can never be thankful enough for the inspiration of his life and the blessing that resulted from his teaching.

He had a brilliant intellect, a highly trained disciplined mind and body, and an outstanding gift for teaching; but his great power lay in his consuming devotion to his Lord, in his entire reliance on the Holy Spirit, and in his absolute trust in the revelation of God through the Scriptures.

As these messages now go forth to a still wider circle, may they continually cause many to be wise in winning souls.

Chapter I

HOW TO WORK FOR THE CURE OF SOULS

And David said, There is none like that; give it me. (1 Samuel 21:9)

The setting is known to us all. David is talking about Goliath's sword, and he asks for it, "give it me." We read the passage in Deuteronomy where Moses said to the children of Israel, "the cause that is too hard for you, bring it unto me, and I will hear it" (Deuteronomy 1:17). I want to take these two Old Testament mighty men of God as types of what the worker for God must be like to work for the cure of souls.

With regard to the sword that there is none like it, if you will turn to Hebrews 4:12, you will see how I want to take Goliath's sword and spiritualise it in the hands of a worker for God among the children of men: "For the word of God is living, and active, and sharper than any two-edged sword, and piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, of both joints and marrow, and quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart" (RV). Now it is quite obvious that if you are not David and are trying to use Goliath's sword, you will do far more harm to yourself than damage to the enemy. You must be in the direct line of succession to David. David and Moses were mighty giants, but we have to be of the same family connection. What is the same family connection in this dispensation? Why, those who are born again of the Spirit of God, and those who are so identified with the Lord Jesus that they have entered into the experience of entire sanctification. When they use the word of God they do not damage themselves, nor hurt other souls; but they do great damage to the kingdom of the devil and bring benefit to the souls of men.

Before we take up the question of the kind of souls we shall have to deal with, we must deal with the worker. Now there are big difficulties in the way. The first difficulty is that we are not dealing with men's bodies. If we were, we could be taught in special schools and colleges, trained and developed in such a way that we should know fairly well how to apply principles to the various ailments of people, because physical ailments have a wonderful likeness to each other. This has led many Christian workers astray, they think that because men's bodies and bodily ailments are alike, and because one cure, carefully and judiciously prescribed by a physician who diagnosed the case aright was successful and can be applied to other cases with similar results, that men's souls can be treated in the same way. But you cannot deal with the human soul and with the ailments and difficulties of the human soul according to any principle whatever. I think that any of you who have worked for God know this, that immediately you get into the way of using certain verses of Scripture and applying them to those who are seeking new birth, and certain other verses to those seeking sanctification, you will find suddenly that God's Spirit will depart from you and He will not use those verses in your hands any more. The reason is this, that immediately we get wedded to a short-cut in dealing with souls, God leaves us alone.

The first thing I want to lay down for the worker (I am talking about one who really is born again of the Spirit of God and has been entirely sanctified) is that he or she must rely on the Holy Spirit to direct them as to what to say in the case of every soul that comes. Do not rely on your memory, do not remember how you dealt with cases in the past, but recognise and rely on the Holy Spirit that He will bring to your remembrance the particular verse for you to apply at this time. You will find over and over again that God will bring confusion to your methods and will make you apply a text to sanctification which you in your system have said can only be applied to new birth; and He will make you apply a text which you have said can only apply to sanctification to something else, and you will make incessant blunders in work for God if you are not careful and watchful and heedful of the guidance of the Holy Spirit and of His bringing the word of God to your remembrance. Remember, then, that the worker who is rightly related to God must ever rely on the Holy Spirit for guidance in each individual case.

Then I want to apply Moses' statement: "The cause that is too hard for you, bring it unto me." Do you know how to bring your cases to God? We all know how to bring them to one another and how to talk to Christian workers about dealing with souls, but just as there are quack doctors in the medical profession, so there is the same thing in the spiritual domain. Beware of anything that does not fling you straight back in reliance on the Holy Spirit as the most practical factor you know in bringing to your remembrance the word of God and how to apply it.

Then another thing—the worker must live among the facts he has to deal with. Regarding the training of workers, take the highest class we know of, ministers. One of the greatest difficulties in most of our colleges for training ministers, who are supposed to work for the cure of souls, is that they are never taught how to deal with souls. There is hardly a college anywhere for training ministers where the question of dealing with souls is ever mentioned. Ministers will bear me out in this, that everything they have learned they have had to learn out of their own experience. They are trained in everything but how to deal with the facts they have to deal with.

There are two kinds of facts the worker must be amongst—he must go to school among human souls. I mean we must keep ourselves in touch, not with theories, but with people, and never get out of touch with human beings, if we are going to use the word of God skilfully amongst them, and if the Holy Spirit is to apply the word of God through us as workmen needing not to be ashamed. Live among your human facts, and you will find how continually God stirs up your nest. If you are a worker, He will constantly surround you with different kinds of people, with different difficulties, and He will constantly put you to school amongst those facts. He will keep you in contact with human stuff, and human stuff is very sordid; in fact, human stuff is made of just the same stuff as you and I are made of; do not shut yourself away from it. Beware of the tendency to live a life apart and shut away. Get amongst men. Jesus prayed, "I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldest keep them from the evil."

Then there is another series of facts, viz., Bible facts. We have to go to school among human souls, and we have to educate ourselves in Bible facts. A remarkable thing about this Book of God (and I hope, by God's grace, to point this out) is that for every type of human being we come across there is a distinct, clear line laid down here as to the way to apply God's truth to it. The stupid soul, the stubborn soul, the soul that is mentally diseased, the soul that is convicted of sin, the soul with the twisted mind, the sensual soul—everyone of the facts that you meet in your daily walk and business has its counterpart here, and God has a word and a revelation fact with regard to every life you come across.

Let me emphasise these three things again: First, the Christian worker who is right with God must rely every moment on the Holy Spirit when dealing with another soul. Second, the worker must live among human facts, men and women, not theories. Do not let us tell ourselves what men and women are like, let us find out what they are like. One of the greatest mistakes in the world is to tell yourself what a man is like; you do not know what he is like. The only One Who can teach you how to deal with the various specimens around you is the Holy Spirit. The third thing is, ransack this old Book from cover to cover in the most practical way you know—by using a concordance, by re-writing the Psalms, or by any other immediate practical method.

I know it is customary to ridicule certain ways in which some people say God guides them, but I am very chary about ridiculing any methods. For example, it is easy to ridicule this kind of method: "Lord, direct me to a word, I am just going to shut my eyes and open the Book and put my finger on a passage." I say it is easy to ridicule it, yet it is absurd to say that God has not led people in that way; He has. Why I mention these facts is to knock certain theories to pieces. You cannot tie God down to a particular line. You will find that God does use the most extraordinary methods people adopt; only do not take anyone else's way, get to know how God deals with you, and how He deals with others through you in the most practical way.

Keep these three things in mind—reliance on the Holy Spirit of God, keeping in contact with people, and above all, keeping in contact with the revelation facts in God's Book; live amongst them, and ask God how to apply them.

Another thing I want to mention—never believe what people tell you about themselves. There is only one person in a thousand who can actually tell you his or her symptoms; and beware of the people who can tell you where they are spiritually. I mean by that, never be guided by what people tell you; rely on the Spirit of God all the time you are probing them.

Let me read you this in regard to medical treatment—

Recent evidence in the law courts has pointed to a fact which the medical profession holds of great value—the necessity, not only of personal and private interview with a patient, but of the penetrative ability to get at the real facts and symptoms. In other words, successful diagnosis depends on the doctor's acumen in cross-examination. "Cross-examination of a patient is almost always necessary," says an eminent medical man. "They will give me causes, or rather what they think are causes, instead of symptoms. The rich patient is more troublesome in this respect than the poor, for he has had leisure in which to evolve a sort of scheme of his illness, based on 'popular' medical knowledge.

"Patients always colour facts, speaking absolutely instead of relatively. They never tell the truth about the amount of sleep they have had or as to appetite. They frequently say they have had nothing to eat. Casually you find there were two eggs at least for breakfast. A minute or two later they remember stewed steak for dinner. Perhaps the greatest need for cross-examination is that it gives an extended opportunity to the medical man to examine the patient objectively. The most important symptoms are generally those the patient never notices."

If that is true in the medical profession which deals with men's bodies, it is a thousandfold more true about spiritual symptoms when it comes to dealing with a man's soul. Do beware, then, of paying too much attention to the talk of the one that is in trouble, keep your own heart and mind alert on what God is saying to you; get to the place where you will know when the Holy Spirit brings the word of God to your remembrance for that one.

Now there is a wrong use of God's word and a right one. The wrong use is this sort of thing—someone comes to you, and you cast about in your mind what sort of man he is, then hurl a text at him like a projectile, either in prayer or in talking as you deal with him. That is a use of the word of God that kills your own soul and the souls of the people you deal with. The Spirit of God is not in that. Jesus said, "the words I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." "Who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." Do remember to keep your soul in unsullied touch with the directions of the Spirit.

Another thing that is very puzzling is this. Probably all of you have had experiences as I have on this line: you listen to clear Bible teaching, unmistakably clear, almost taking people by the hand and leading them straight into the Kingdom of God, but they never come. Another time a man gets up and twists everything, and to your astonishment people are born again. That frequently happened in Water Street Mission in New York, a man who had been wonderfully saved would get up and tell what he had been and what he was now, then others would do the same, and the Spirit of God got hold of the people before you knew where you were, out they came to the altar, and these rough men knelt down and prayed with them and they "struck something," as they say out there, and something "struck them," and they were wonderfully born again.

Now these are facts we have to look at. You cannot put God down to a prescribed method. These souls were real, living, good specimens of what God had done, and the Spirit of God worked through them. I mention that because it confuses a great amount of our reasoning in Christian work; over and over again you will find that some poor, ignorant servant, or artisan, who seems scarcely to know how to put anything together, is used of God mightily in the salvation of souls, and others who have a clear understanding of the whole thing and put the way of salvation ever so clearly, yet nothing happens. So all we can get at is the main methods laid down in God's Book about the worker. Let us ask ourselves, "Do I experimentally know what the salvation of God is? Do I know what entire sanctification means in my own experience?" The worker for God must be in a healthy, vigorous, spiritual condition himself.

I want to say one word of criticism about the choosing of Sunday-school teachers. The way Sundayschool teachers are chosen is that immediately a person gets introduced into the Kingdom of God, they are given a Sunday-school class to teach. When you come to God's way, you will find something very different; immediately a soul gets introduced into the kingdom of God, it has got to do something, but it is something along the line of the new life it has received, obedience and walking in the light, until it is consolidated in the ways of God. Why is this necessary? Because dealing with souls is tenfold more dangerous than dealing with bodies. Unless you are in a healthy, vigorous condition with God, you will catch the disease of the soul you are dealing with instead of helping to cure it. Unless you are out amongst the tremendous facts of God's revelation in the Bible, unless you know how to take breezy walks through that Book, unless you know how to walk up and down that country and take in the air of God's hills and get thoroughly robust and continually change your walk amongst those facts, you are sure to catch the diseases of the souls you are dealing with. So remember, it is absolutely necessary to be like the cedars of Lebanon. Do you know the characteristic of a Lebanon tree? The cedars of Lebanon have such extraordinary power of life that instead of nourishing parasites it kills them, the life within is so strong and so robust that instead of feeding the parasites it chokes them off. God grant that we may be so filled with His life, may flourish as the cedars of Lebanon, so that He can trust us down in all the dark, difficult places amongst the souls of our brother men and be able to pour His tremendous health and power through us.

How sad it is to see men and women who did begin to work for God, and whose work God honoured, slowly fall off. Why? They have caught the disease of death amongst the people they have been dealing with. In the medical profession, particularly doctors who deal with the insane, have continually to be changed, continually shifted. Why? Because they take the diseases and troubles they live amongst, and you will find that God the Holy Ghost has an amazing power of shifting His workers. Some wonder why God keeps shifting them, why He shifts their circumstances; the reason is not only to keep them in touch with the great sphere of work, but to keep their souls alive.

Do remember, then, that it is necessary for the worker to be healthy, and beware of this mistake, that by working for God amongst men, you develop your own Christian life; you do not unless your Christian life is there first. It is so obvious that it needs to be said over again—you cannot develop your own Christian life unless it is there. The advice given that if you work for God you develop your own life often means that if you work for God you get right yourself; you do not, you have to be right with God first.

The next time you deal with a soul at the penitent form, remember it is one thing to tell him to receive the Spirit of God, to recognise and rely on Him, but quite another thing for you to do the same thing. Unless you recognise the Spirit of God, and rely on Him, and expect Him to bring to your remembrance some word that is going to apply in that case, you will be of very little use as an expert soul-curer and for putting people in the way to get right with God.

Then do live among human facts! Thank God He has given the majority of us the surroundings of real, definite, sordid human beings; there is no pretence about them, the people we live among and come in contact with are not theories, they are facts. That is the kind of thing God wants us to keep among.

Then third, see that you get into this Book. I feel more than hungry to see men and women roused up to get hold of this Book and live among its facts, then the Spirit of God will bring to your remembrance how to apply the truth in each case.

Chapter II

THE WORKER AMONG THE ABNORMAL

For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost. (Luke 19:10)

Abnormal means not normal or according to rule, not upright, not good. God's Book says that the whole of the human race is abnormal.

In our first talk we dealt with the Christian worker, and we found that first of all he must have a definite experience in his own life of the marvellous salvation of God. Then that he must learn how to recognise and rely on the Spirit of God in dealing with souls; he must live in the facts of the Bible, and keep in touch with the facts of human life. Now we deal with some of the facts of human life as God's Book reveals them,

I want to notice a very important distinction, viz., that the "lost" from the Bible standpoint are not doomed. The lost, Jesus Christ is seeking for; the doomed are those who rebel against the seeking Saviour. To Jesus Christ, all men are lost, and the worker who is going to work for the cure of souls must have the same outlook. We have to bear this in mind because workers to-day are not taking the standpoint of the Lord Jesus Christ.

In Luke 19 we find a specimen of a lost man. "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Notice the setting of this statement. Zacchaeus was a chief publican and as such he would be possessed of many ill-gotten gains; he was a man of wealth and position, a dishonourable man, but perfectly content with his dishonour. Zacchaeus was not troubled in the tiniest degree, his whole nature towards God was frozen, no sign of life about him. In the far North the thermometer freezes and can record nothing, and it remains frozen until the temperature alters; immediately the temperature alters, then the thermometer registers. This man Zacchaeus was frozen towards God, his conscience did not bother him, he was "lost," quite contented, quite happy, and quite curious. When Jesus Christ came his way, the man's nature unfroze, something began to work at once.

The first thing the worker has to learn is how to bring the Lord Jesus Christ in contact with frozen souls, those who are dead towards God, whose consciences are not the slightest bit disturbed. How is the worker to bring the Lord Jesus Christ across the life that is dead in trespasses and sins and does not know it? By the Holy Spirit and personal experience alone. By personal experience I mean what we have already insisted on: I must know personally what God has done in my soul through Jesus Christ; and I must have learned how to rely on the Holy Spirit, because the Holy Spirit makes Jesus Christ present to all kinds and conditions of men. The majority of people when they come across a nature like Zacchaeus will say he is simply selfish, sordid and indifferent; he is not convicted of sin, it is no use to try and deal with him. That is the attitude we all maintain to the "Zacchaeus" type of man until we learn how to bring Jesus Christ close to him. Whenever Jesus Christ came across men in His day, they knew where they were, and they either rebelled or followed him. They either went away exceeding sorrowful, or they turned with their whole nature towards Him.

The next thing we have to learn by contact with Jesus Christ is this, that if the whole human race—everybody, good, bad and indifferent—is lost, we must have the boundless confidence of Jesus Christ Himself about us, that is, we must know that He can save anybody and everybody. There is a great deal of importance to be attached to this point. Just reflect in your mind and think of some lives you know that are frozen; there is no conviction of sin; they are dishonourable, and they know it; they are abnormal, off the main track altogether, but they are not a bit troubled about it; talk to them about their wrongdoing and they are totally indifferent to you. You have to learn how to introduce the atmosphere of the Lord Jesus Christ around those souls. As soon as you do, something happens. Look what happened to Zacchaeus—"And Zacchaeus stood, and said unto the Lord, Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have wrongfully exacted aught of any man, I restore fourfold" (RV). Who had been talking to him about his doings? Not a soul. Jesus had never said a word about his evil doings. What awakened him? What suddenly made him know where he was? The presence of Jesus!

Wherever a worker for God goes, the same thing will happen if the Spirit of God is getting His way through that man or woman. If you are right with God in personal experience, saved and sanctified (to use our own technical words), and the Spirit of God is getting His way with you, other people will get to know where they are wrong, and until they learn the reason they will say you are criticising them; but you are perfectly conscious that you have never criticised them. What has happened? This very thing, the Holy Spirit's presence through you has brought the atmosphere that Jesus Christ's presence always brought, and has thawed the ice around their mind and their conscience and they are beginning to be convicted.

Let me insist that the worker must know how to bring every kind and condition of man into contact with Jesus Christ, and the only way that can be done is by reliance on the Holy Spirit and by personal experience. If you are trying to work for God and have no definite experience of your own and do not know how to rely on the Holy Spirit, God grant that you may come to the place where you do know, then wherever you go the atmosphere produced will thaw things around men's consciences and hearts.

Men's minds will always assent that Jesus Christ is right—why? Because Jesus Christ is Incarnate Reason. There is something in Jesus Christ that appeals to every man, no matter what condition he is in. If once Jesus Christ is brought into contact with a man, let that man seem to us dead and indifferent, destitute of anything like goodness—let him come in contact with Jesus Christ by the Holy Spirit, and you will instantly see that he can grasp something about Him in a way we cannot understand unless we know the Holy Spirit.

Jesus Christ always appeals to men's consciences—why? Because He is Incarnate Righteousness. So many people try to explain things about Jesus Christ, but no worker need ever try to do that. You cannot explain things about Jesus Christ, rely on the Holy Spirit and He will explain Jesus to the soul. Let me recommend you to have this boundless confidence in Jesus Christ's power as you go into work for God! If you do not believe practically in your heart that the Lord Jesus Christ can alter and save the man you are talking to, you limit Jesus Christ in that life. You may say, "Oh, yes, Jesus Christ can save you; He can alter the whole thing and can put His new life within you and make you a new man"; but if you do not believe He can do it, you limit God's power in that life, and God holds you responsible. So the first thing the worker must do is to keep his heart always believing in Jesus.

Are you in constant contact with frozen natures in your own family, in your business, in your friendships? You have talked with them, prayed with them, you have done everything you know how, but there is not the slightest sign of conviction of sin, no trouble of conscience or heart. They are not "out-and-out" sinners, but you know that they are "in-and-in" sinners; you know they are wrong and twisted and have things that are not clean, but you cannot make them realise it; they always get away, frozen and untouched. Then bring your own soul face to face with Jesus Christ: "Lord, do I believe that Thou canst thaw that man's nature, that woman's nature, until the Holy Spirit has a chance of saving him or her?" That is the first difficulty to be overcome—what state of faith in Jesus Christ have I? Then next ask yourself, Do I believe that the Lord Jesus Christ can take that selfish, sensual, twisted, self-satisfied nature that is all wrong and out of order—do I believe that He can make it perfect in the sight of God? Oh, do let us get back to this tremendous confidence in the Lord Jesus Christ's power! back to reliance on the Holy Spirit, and to remembering that Jesus came to seek the lost.

In the fifteenth chapter of St. Luke's Gospel, our Lord speaks about the joy of finding lost things, and to me there is always this appeal: the Lord wants my eyes to look through; is He looking through them? The Lord wants my brain to think through; is He thinking through it? The Lord wants my hands to work with; is He working with them? The Lord wants my body to live and walk in for one purpose—to go after the lost from His standpoint; am I letting Him walk and live in me?

The worker must see that Jesus Christ has His right of way in him in each particular. Oh, the number of men and women to-day who are working on the line of self-realisation; seeking the training of the mind and of the body—for what purpose? To help them realise themselves! Jesus Christ wants this body so that He can work through it to find those who are out of the way. Do remember that it is the most practical thing on this earth to be a worker for the cure of souls. You have to rely on the Holy Spirit and to live among human facts and Bible facts. Have you, Christian worker, accepted the verdict of Jesus Christ regarding the human race, viz., that they are all lost, and have you got boundless confidence in Jesus Christ, are you perfectly certain that if a soul can only get in contact with Jesus, He can save him absolutely?

I want to give one word of warning to workers for God, especially Sunday-school teachers and preachers of the Gospel—beware of the snare of putting anything first in your mind but Jesus Christ. If you put the needs of your people first, there is something between you and the power of God. Face Jesus Christ steadily, and allow nothing, no work and no person, to come between you and Him. For what purpose? That the Holy Spirit may flow through you in your preaching to the needs of the people around. You will find that people will always distinguish between that kind of message and the message that is spoken out of sympathy with them. There is only one Being Who understands us all and that is the Holy Spirit, and He understands the Lord Jesus Christ too, and if you keep the avenues of your soul open to Him and get your messages from Him and see that you allow nothing to obscure Him, you will find He will locate the people. For every new message you give, God will give you human beings who have been convicted by it, and you will have to deal with them, whether you like it or not; and you will have not only to deal with them, but you will have to take them on your heart before God. God will make you work for the cure of the souls He has wounded by your message. If the wounding has come along His line, the line of the faithful proclamation of His message, He will let you see Him healing that soul through you as a worker, as you rely on the Holy Spirit. God grant that as we go forth to our varied work we may be filled with the Spirit, and then patiently do the drudgery!

I want to say one other thing that will connect this talk with the next one—the Spirit of God will not work for the cure of some souls without you, and God is going to hold to the account of some of us the souls that have gone un-cured, un-healed, un-touched by Jesus Christ because we have refused to keep our souls open towards Him, and when the sensual, selfish, wrong lives came around we were not ready to present the Lord Jesus Christ to them by the power of the Holy Spirit. Workers for God, let us believe with all our heart these Divine revelations, and never despair of any soul under heaven. If you have a chronic case—I mean by that, someone who is always coming out at every altar call but never getting anywhere, thank God for it. I have found this out, that as far as I am concerned, God uses those chronic seekers as an education to me. It is a tremendous temptation to put them on one side and say, "It is no use dealing with such people." It is! If they keep chronic long enough they will educate you so sufficiently that the Lord will be able to manifest His patience through you as He never could otherwise, and all of a sudden those souls will come into the light.

Chapter III

THE WORKER AMONG THE HARDY ANNUALS

For there are no bands in their death: but their strength is firm. (Psalm 73:4)

By "hardy annuals" I mean the healthy-minded sinners. We pointed out before that from Jesus Christ's point of view all men are lost, but we have so narrowed and so specialised the term "lost" that we have missed its evangelical meaning; we have made it mean that only the people who are down and out in sin are lost.

In the seventeenth chapter of Acts we see Paul the Pharisee, and the sanctified Apostle of God, face to face with healthy-minded, vigorous pagans. Jesus Christ came in contact with such people over and over again, and you will find that you have to come in contact with them too. They are once-born people, and perfectly content with being once-born. They are usually upright, quite sufficient for themselves morally, very bright and happy, and you seem to feel they have not the slightest need of the Lord Jesus Christ in their lives. That class formed a great setting all round our Lord's life. In the days of His flesh our Lord worked almost exclusively amongst Jews, but every now and again a Gentile burst through into the inner circle, and Jesus always dealt with him in a totally different manner. Whenever our Lord dealt with a religious Jew there was a serious solemnity about Him, and a serious solemnity about the Jew; but immediately our Lord came in contact with a Greek, He seemed to read the sharp wit of the Greek straightaway and dealt with him accordingly.

In the fifteenth chapter of St. Matthew we read that our Lord departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, the reason being that He wanted to be alone; He had had too much publicity and was trying to get His disciples away. Then a Syrophoenician woman burst through with a request to which Jesus pays no attention, the reason being quite obvious—He wanted to be quiet, and He knew perfectly well that this woman would blaze abroad more than ever what He could do. But her faith was strong, she knew that if she could get hold of the Lord Jesus He would heal her daughter. Watch how our Lord deals with her; He gives her a proverb and she gives Him back a proverb: "It is not meet to take the children's bread and cast it to the dogs." "Yea, Lord: for even the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their masters' table" (RV). Her type of mind was foreign to the religious Jews, but Jesus understood her at once, and He praised her for her faith. "O woman, great is thy faith: be it done unto thee even as thou wilt."

The healthy-minded tendency is very strong today. It is the explanation of Unitarianism in its shallower aspect; the explanation of the New Thought movement and the Mind Cure movement, of Christian Science; it is the explanation of how people can be quite happy, quite moral, quite upright, without having anything to do with the Lord Jesus Christ. Our Lord describes these people in terms of the once-born, as "lost." The problem for us as workers is, how are we to get these irreligious people who are quite happy and healthy-minded, to the place where they want Jesus?

The Syrophoenician woman came to our Lord at the end of a busy spell, and you will find that these healthy-minded folks will often come across you when you are fagged out and will ask you all kinds of questions. They did of the Apostle Paul—"What would this babbler say? . . . He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods: because he preached Jesus and the resurrection" (RV). In writing to the Corinthians, Paul says, "We preach Christ crucified, . . . unto the Greeks foolishness."

Every worker for God has surely come across the type of man that makes him feel foolish; the external life, and internal life as far as you know is quite sterling and upright, and he puts questions to you that bring you to a complete standstill, you cannot answer them, and he succeeds in making you feel amazingly foolish. For instance, you preach that Jesus Christ lived and died and rose again to save men from their sins and to put them right with God; these people have no sin that they are conscious of, you cannot point to a spot in their whole life, they are healthyminded and happy, but absolutely pagan, and they say, "What was the use of Jesus Christ dying for me? I am all right; I do exactly what I ought to do. I am not a blackguard, I am not a thief, I am not a sinner. Why ever should Jesus Christ die for me?" Unless you are used to it, that line of thing produces a sense of unutterable foolishness in you. How are we to bring the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and our Lord Himself, before a man or woman of that sort?

I want us to look at three types of pagans—Gallio, Herod and Pilate. Gallio was an ordinary pagan, upright and just, and when the Apostle Paul was brought before him he did not care anything about him. "And Gallio cared for none of those things." He said in effect, "I have nothing whatever to do with your religious quarrels, I am not here to decide questions of your law for you." The opponents of Christianity are not weak, they are opponents who are able to ignore us; so the first thing to do is to examine and see what kind of Gospel we are preaching. If you are only preaching before this kind of pagan, upright, righteous and just, but without a spark of religion in him, that Jesus Christ can save sinners, that is not the Jesus Christ he needs. You have to preach the Lord Jesus Christ revealed in God's Word.

The first thing I want to impress on our hearts and minds as workers is this—we must not preach one phase of Christ's work. Jesus said, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Myself" (RV). Have I a pet doctrine I am lifting up? If I have, then these healthy-minded folk will simply heap ridicule on me; but immediately I preach Christ, something happens—the Spirit of God begins to work where I cannot. The first point for us to remember then, is that we must preach Christ, not a pet theory of our own, no matter how right and true it is, no matter how important a doctrine or how really the outcome of our Lord's work; that is not what we have to present, we have to present Jesus Christ. "And Philip... preached unto him Jesus" (Acts 8:35).

Paul was able to stand the ridicule, the cultured ridicule, of the Athenian philosophers because he knew Jesus Christ, he knew Him as the greatest, grandest and most worthy Being that was ever on this earth. See that you present the Lord Jesus Christ Himself to your ordinary pagan. The Spirit of God will guide you as you rely on Him to the presentation that is required for each one. Some people present Jesus Christ in packets, they have one packet of verses marked "Salvation," another marked "Sanctification," another marked "The Baptism with the Holy Ghost." The reason they do this is easy to understand—these particular verses have been used mightily in their experience in saving souls, but as we pointed out at the first, immediately we begin to depend on our special prescription the Spirit of God will depart from us. In every case we have to deal with, whether it be the case of a man with a frozen conscience, or a healthy-minded pagan, we have to learn how to rely on the Holy Spirit straightaway—"Lord, this man is healthy, his sense of justice clear, his record clean, but he cares for none of these things; I cannot deal with him." We have to present Jesus Christ in all His power, and rely on the Holy Spirit to deal with him.

There is another type of pagan and he is represented by Herod. Herod is a rare type of pagan, he is obscene; he was bad, unmentionably bad, and you will find that when he saw Jesus Christ face to face he was not the slightest bit troubled. Why? He had heard the voice of God before through John the Baptist, and he had ordered that voice to be silent. Herod is the presentation of the awful possibility of a fixed character, absolutely fixed in immorality. Jesus Christ did not awaken one tremor of conscience in him, he had signed his own death-warrant. When the voice of God came to him in repeated warnings through John the Baptist about the thing that was wrong in his life, he would not listen, he persisted in his badness until he killed all his affinity for God, and when Jesus Christ stood before him he was not an atom troubled. Did you ever notice what is recorded? "Now when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad" why? For the same reason that people go to a picture show, they want to see things. We read that Herod questioned Jesus in many words; "but He answered him nothing." "There is a sin unto death"—there is a final apostasy from God, there is a sealed doom on an immortal soul while it lives, where God Almighty cannot awaken one echo of response—"I do not say that he shall pray for it," says John (1 John 5:16).

If you have never faced the question yourself, face it now-you are not as bothered now as you once were, if you are bothered at all, about Jesus Christ's line of things, and you are to blame; there will come a time when you will not be bothered even as much as you are now. Once Herod heard John the Baptist gladly (Mark 6:20). If God has ever pointed out to you in the past the one thing that is wrong in your life, you are to blame if you did not listen. A time will come when all the tremendous presentation of the truth of God will become a farce. God forbid that any worker should ever stand face to face with a son of perdition, with a man or woman who has apostatised from God. There is such a thing as fixity of character, and when one's prayers go out for such an one they are arrested by God, not by the devil, and frozen before they get out of the lips. This is a truth, an awful and terrible truth, but one that people will not listen to.

Another type of pagan is Pilate. Pilate represents the type of pagan who always seeks his own interests; that type is known to us all to-day. People belong to certain churches because it is better for their business; or they shift their membership to other churches because it is more convenient for business. A once-born man, who acts from this point of view is an opportunist. "If it is Jesus Christ's Gospel that is in the ascendancy, then I will use it to serve my own ends." You have to bring that man face to face with Christ, not with your experience, but with Jesus Christ Himself.

Gallio is a type of the ordinary pagan, healthy minded, vigorous, strong and happy. Is it right to be healthy-minded? Of course it is. Is it right to be happy? Of course it is. That is why the new phases of thought we have alluded to are spreading and putting down Christianity. If you can teach a man how to ignore sin, you have him. If you can tell him how to ignore pain successfully and disease and trouble, he will listen to you. If you can tell him how to ignore the possibility of judgement coming on him for wrongdoing, he will listen to you. If you can show a man how he can be delivered from the torture of sin, delivered from a pain-stricken body, loosened from a bad past, then you have him. Mark you, every one of these points is right; the prince of this world delivers on that line, and so does the Lord Jesus Christ. Watch Jesus Christ's life—the people would take all His blessings, but they would not get rightly related to Him; and our difficulty is in presenting men with Jesus Christ apart from what He can do. How does Iesus Christ teach a man to forget sin? By forgiving him. How does a pagan teach a man to forget sin? "Ignore it, think no more about it, realise yourself!" Can it be done? Of course it can be done. If you will just sin long enough, you will forget how sinful you have been, and is it likely that a man who has forgotten how wrong he has been is going to be willing to face Jesus Christ, who, as soon as He sees him, will flash through him his past wrong? The first thing Jesus Christ does is to open a man's eyes wide to the wrong and then deliver him from it. If anyone here is getting to the place of forgetting sin by ignoring it, the place of healthymindedness and happiness without facing the past wrong, that is the characteristic of the pagan; but Jesus will open our eyes wide to see the wrong and will deliver us from it by putting us on another platform.

The Syrophoenician woman wanted the Lord Jesus Christ. She did not care one iota about the disciples, what she wanted was the Lord Jesus Christ. Again we read that certain Greeks came to the disciples saying, "Sir, we would see Jesus." What did those disciples do? They went and told Jesus. Christian worker, when anyone belonging to the healthy pagan type comes to your meeting, whose presence there means "We would see Jesus," what do you do? Try and persuade him? You never will. Remember what Philip and Andrew did—they went and told Jesus. Whenever you get the request, either by presence or by word: "We would see Jesus," don't begin with "firstly, secondly and thirdly," go to Jesus and say, "Lord, these people want to see Thee."

Again we come back to our first points—rely on the Holy Ghost as the most practical Being you ever knew, and live among the facts of God's Word and among human facts, and people will recognise Jesus Christ through you. God grant that every worker may ever remember that the only One Who can touch "the hardy annuals" whom no truth seems to upset, who carry bright, cheerful faces, and no adversity turns them aside, is the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. People say that it is so hard to bring Jesus Christ and present Him before the lives of men to-day. Of course it is, it is so hard that it is impossible except by the power of the indwelling Holy Ghost. A crisis comes in every man's life. The 107th Psalm is a record of people who would not come to God until they were at their wits' end. When they were at their wits' end, then they cried to God and He heard them.

If you go and tell men it is better to be good than bad, they will say, "Yes, that is so, but how are you going to make bad men good?" That is the problem. Unless your religion will go to the lowest and the worst and the most desperate case you know of, your religion is of no use. There are a great many forms of belief which cannot begin to touch the worst of mankind, they can only deal with cultured minds and hearts. Jesus Christ's religion goes down to the lowest of the low as well as up to the highest of the high, and to all in between. The marvel of Jesus Christ is that He takes facts as they are. He Himself is the answer to every problem of heart and mind and life. The next time you come across a "hardy annual," see that you lay hold of God for that one until Jesus Christ is presented by the power of the Holy Ghost, and then you will see the altered face, the altered attitude, and the altered life.

Chapter IV

THE WORKER AMONG BACKSLIDERS

And on some have mercy with fear; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh. (Jude 23 RV)

The best example of a backslider in the New Testament (the word "backslider" is never used in the New Testament, it is an Old Testament word) is in 2 Timothy 4:10. "For Demas forsook me, having loved this present world" (RV)—he has gone back to where he prefers. Couple with that Jeremiah 2:13, and you will have a good indication of what a backslider is: "For My people have committed two evils; they have forsaken Me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water." Backsliding is twofold, and the term can only be applied to people in this condition. We use the word very loosely, we apply it to people who are degenerating, to people who have committed sin; but a backslider is neither one nor the other, a backslider is worse than both. He is worse than a person who is degenerating, and worse than a person who has committed sin; he has forsaken God and taken up with something else.

It is customary to talk of Peter as being a backslider when he denied his Lord; what happened to Peter was that he got a revelation of what he was capable of, viz., of denying his Lord with oaths and curses. What were the conditions that led to Peter's fall? He had followed Jesus out of genuine devotion, and in true loyalty of heart to Jesus he had pictured a great many things that might happen, but never in his wildest moment did he imagine that Jesus Christ was tamely going to give Himself up to the powers of the world, and when Peter saw Jesus Christ quietly give Himself right over to the rabble and let them take Him, all Peter's thoughts were turned into confusion, his heart was in despair, and in that condition, he "followed afar off." Then when he was tormented by stinging questions, he suddenly found in himself this awful condition he was totally ignorant of, a condition that made him deny with oaths and curses that he ever knew Jesus. Remember, Peter belonged to a dispensation we cannot begin to imagine, a dispensation before Jesus Christ died and rose again; but if we do not live in the dispensation Peter lived in, we can understand the people he represents. Peter was loyal-hearted and devoted to Jesus, but grossly ignorant of what he was capable of—quite loyal, but quite ignorant, and in the trying crisis suddenly to his amazement he finds that he is capable of evil that horrifies him.

The way God deals with a backslider, and teaches us to deal with a backslider, is clear enough for us to talk about it now.

Let us first of all examine for ourselves and find out whether in using the word "backslider" we are applying it to the right condition of a man. The backslidden condition is twofold: it is forsaking God and taking up with something else; it is not the condition of a man awakening to the presence of the disposition of sin in himself. A backslider is a man who does know what God's grace is, who does know what sin is, and who does know what deliverance is, but who has deliberately forsaken God and gone back because he loved something else better.

The question is often asked, "Can a Christian sin?" He certainly can, but the sin must be confessed immediately and forgiven, for if a Christian allows an act of sin to go on it will lead him steadily on until he will pervert all the ways of God and hew out a way for himself.

The statement is frequently made that in dealing with a backslider, the worker has to bring him to being born again of the Spirit. A backslider has not to be born again, he is in a much worse condition than a man not born again: he has to have his backslidings healed and be restored. The statements in the Bible about backsliding are very solemn. Backsliding is the most awful crime spiritually; it is forsaking God and hewing out for one's self "broken cisterns, that can hold no water." With a backslider it is not the question of a soul needing to be born again, but a much harder case than a man who has never been born again. Do not get confused because when you have to face backsliders you find you cannot deal with them as you deal with any ordinary sinner. Their hearts are frozen, they are not convicted of sin, they are absolutely dull and dead towards all God wants. They will tell you quite mechanically, "Oh yes, I once knew God, I did experience this and that, but I deliberately stepped aside." The process may be gradual, but the backsliding condition is reached by forsaking God and taking up with something else.

In 2 Peter 2:15 you will find a luminous word for workers—"... forsaking the right way, they went astray, having followed the way of Balaam the son of Beor, who loved the hire of wrong-doing" (RV). Who was Balaam? A prophet. What was his way? Making a market of his gift. The New Testament speaks in three different ways about Balaam: "the way of Balaam," "the error of Balaam" (Jude 11) and "the teaching of Balaam" (Revelation 2:14 RV). The "way" of Balaam is to make a market of one's gift, presuming on it, putting yourself in God's show-room. "I am here as a specimen of what God can do." Immediately a Christian begins to put himself into the "show business" that is the way towards backsliding. The "error" of Balaam is seeing only the standard of natural morality and never discerning God's ways behind. Immediately a Christian gets into the way of following his own wise common-sense morality, rather than the dictates of the Spirit of God backing the Word of God, he is on the high road to backsliding. Beware how you guide your Christian life and your Christian experience. Are you simply taking the ordinary high standards of the world in your business? Beware, that is an error that leads to backsliding. "Oh, well, they all do it, I must do the same." That is the ordinary standard; if it conflicts in the tiniest degree with the clear standard of God, beware! It is an error that leads to the false doctrine which is the very heart of backsliding, making a judicious mix-up between corrupt worldliness and godliness. That is the way backsliding will begin, it is fixing your eyes on the wrong thing. The "teaching" of Balaam is the corrupting of God's people. Balaam taught Balak to corrupt the people by enticing them to marry the women of Moab. That is the Old Testament incident, but what does it mean? It means trying to compromise between corrupt worldliness and Christian profession. These are three dangerous characteristics pointed out in the New Testament, and they are fruitful in backsliding.

When you come to deal with backsliders, one of the greatest dangers is that they spread their disease more quickly than any other. The presence of one backslider is a peril to a whole community. His or her influence is tenfold worse than a hundred sinners who have never been saved, and the worker for God who begins to deal with a backslider has to learn, first of all, his unutterable powerlessness to touch him.

Let us face the backslider now. Are you going to begin by asking him to receive the Spirit of God? You will have no answer. He may say, "Yes, Lord, I am sorry, please give me the Holy Spirit," but God won't. You won't find one case anywhere on record in the Old or New Testament in which God deals with a backslider along those lines. Let me take as an illustration the parable in the fifteenth chapter of St. Luke. I know this parable is used in many ways, but I want to use it as a picture of the backslider. It is obvious why it is called "The Parable of the Prodigal Son," but it is not called so in the Bible, it is called "The Parable of the Two Sons." One son went away and spent his substance in riotous living, the other son stayed at home. Both are as bad as each other. The spirit of the stay-at-home was every bit as bad as the wild riot of the younger boy who went away.

Did the father send any message to the far country after the younger boy? There is no record of any message being sent. What did the younger boy have to do? He had to do exactly what is recorded in Hosea long before that picture was painted by our Lord—he had to return. Drawn by God? It does not say so. Read the fourteenth chapter of Hosea: "I will heal their backsliding"; but the backslider has to get up first, leave the pigs and what pigs eat, and go back to where he came from. Help granted him? None whatever. Messages from the home country? Not one. Tender touches of God's grace on his life? No. Can you picture that prodigal son returning, a degraded, sunken, sin-stained man, going back in all the cruel, bald daylight? Oh, it is a hard way to go back out of a backslider's hell; a hard, hard way! Every step of it is cruel, every moment is torture. But what happened? Before that younger son had got very far, the father saw him "and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him"!

Worker for God among backslidden souls, remember God's way, put the sting, if you can, into the backslider's soul that he may get up and come back to God, and what has he to do? Take with him words and say, "By mine iniquity have I fallen." Did the prodigal son take with him words? He did, he rehearsed them over and over again where he was amongst the pigs—"I will say to my father this and that," he had it all by heart. Does Hosea say the same? He does: Take with you words, and return unto the Lord, and say, "By mine iniquity have I fallen." What does iniquity mean? Unequal dealing, turning out of the way.

Is there a backslider listening to this? Then rouse yourself and go back to God. "But I feel no drawing."

You won't feel any. I do not find one instance in the Bible of God drawing a backslider in the same way that He draws a sinner. The word to the backslider is: "Return." "Take with you words, and return unto the LORD: say unto Him, Take away all iniquity" (RV).

Every Christian worker will bear me out in this next statement, that in dealing with a backslider, you are exhausted to the last drop of your energy. When we work with other classes, like those we have been touching on, God seems to supply grace at the very moment; but we need to remember that if in the other cases we need to rely on the Holy Ghost, we need to do so here a thousandfold more.

Intercessory prayer for a backslider is a most instructive but a most trying work for God, and it will teach the worker that prayer is not only making petitions, but that prayer is breathing an atmosphere. The Christian Church nearly always separates those two; when it emphasises the atmosphere of prayer, it forgets the petition; and when it emphasises the petition it is apt to forget the atmosphere, but the two must go together, and you need to be freshly bathed moment by moment in the limpid life of God (if I may use the phrase) as you pray for your backslider. If ever the worker needs wisdom that cometh from above, it is in the moment of dealing with a backslider. How am I going to awaken, how am I going to sting into action, a backslidden soul? How am I going to get that soul to go back?

I said just now that no message was sent to the far country; God sends none, but, worker for God, will you be a message from the Father? Will you so bathe your life in the atmosphere of prayer that when you come in contact with a backslidden soul, it will awaken a remembrance of the Father, awaken a remembrance of what that soul once was? Will you let your life be like a bunch of flowers from the Father's home garden, just awakening for one moment a remembrance of what life once was, and then pass on, and pray and watch, and you will be mightily rewarded by God when you see that poor backslidden soul get up and go back to God, taking with him words and saying, "By mine iniquity have I fallen."

If ever you hear a testimony along this line, "I was a backslider, but, thank God, I am healed now," do call a halt in that soul. Backsliding in the Bible is called by words used for the most shocking immorality. Can you imagine anybody who has been guilty of an awful moral crime talking about it in the glib, off-hand way some people talk about backsliding? When a backslider has been reclaimed by God and brought back, when he has returned and has been met by God, the memory of the past is too tremendously humiliating to be mentioned often, and when it is mentioned the atmosphere of the life is one of deep repentance towards God. Never sympathise with a backslider; do all in your power to goad him to return to God. If you cannot do it in words, do it by living in the atmosphere of God and awakening some remembrance of what he once was.

Another illustration of backsliding is in the twenty-third chapter of Matthew. It is not in reference to a person, but to the city of Jerusalem, but it gives a good picture of the way God deals with backsliders: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto her! how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see Me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord" (RV). "How often would I, . . . and ye would not!"

Oh, if any here should be backsliders, let me counsel you to return to God, and tell Him that you have fallen away from Him by your own unequal doings. Take with you words and tell Him so, let the lash fall, and before you know another thing God will receive you! The prodigal son was all but choked on the bosom of his father before he got half his recital out; but he had to show that he was in earnest, he had to return first, and you must do the same.

Christian worker, if you have someone in your mind who is a backslider, one who did know the grace of God, who did run well but who has compromised, has a name to live but is dead, then God grant you may realise the filling up of "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ" in intercessory prayer. The backsliders are the most dangerous class under Heaven to touch, and no one but a man or woman who knows how to live bathed moment by moment in the love of God, who knows how to prevail in prayer, ought to touch the case of a backslider. It needs the wisdom that cometh from above, and if you have indeed been led by God to face such a life, do it on God's line. Do not try and bring God around by way of your ignorance; go along the clearly discerned lines that are given in His Word. Get that one to understand, either through his own intelligence or by praying that he must return of his own accord.

"Take with you words, and return unto the LORD" (RV), then God says, "I will heal their back-sliding, I will love them freely."

Chapter V

THE WORKER AMONG THE "TWO-FACED"

Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity. (Matthew 23:28)

By "two-faced" I do not mean the kind of character John Bunyan refers to in his "Mr. Facing both-ways," I mean a man guilty of internal hypocrisy. "Two-faced" is simply a figure of speech for double dealing and falsehood. If you never have taken the trouble to go through the Bible to see how much God's Word has to say about the "two-faced," do it, and you will be surprised. Let me give you one or two passages to show you that this subject is not isolated or novel, not something taken because it sounds different from what is usually taken. It is taken because it describes a class of folk that are so difficult to deal with that we rarely hear them mentioned.

Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. (Matthew 7:15)

For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; so as to lead astray, if possible, even the elect. (Matthew 24:24 RV)

Holding a form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof: from these also turn away. For of these are they that creep into houses, and take captive silly women laden with sins, led away by divers lusts. (2 Timothy 3:5–6 RV)

These are simply a few of a number of passages in the Bible where the Spirit of God and our Lord draw the portrait of the "two-faced." Let me repeat it, the "two-faced" are the hardest and most difficult people to work among. When we face the double-dealing, two-faced man of God, our hearts sink, our whole souls are terrified. We must not read the Bible like children. God requires us to read it as men and women, spiritual men and women, I mean. There are things in the Bible that stagger us, things that amaze and terrify; and the worker for God needs to understand not only the terrors of life around, but the terrors of life as God's Book reveals it.

Let us go back to the incident recorded in 2 Samuel 12. For subtlety, for amazing insight and sublime courage, Nathan is unequalled; and what a soul was David to have in his list for God! Would to God there were more preachers and Christian workers after the stamp of Nathan. David did not even begin to realise, after a year of the grossest and most dastardly hypocrisy, that Nathan was brandishing the sword straight into his own conscience, and only when David had made his answer and Nathan had heaved out the strong denunciations of God and thrust the sword straight home with, "Thou art the man," did David say, "I have sinned against the LORD." There was no bungling about Nathan's work.

If you want to know how it was possible for a mighty man of God like David to have sinned the most wicked sin possible—I do not refer to adultery or to murder, but to something infinitely worse, a deep, subtle, inward hypocrisy, tremendous and profound; David lived it for a year and administered justice while all the time he was a "whited sepulchre"—you must first allow God to examine deep down into the possibilities of your own nature.

Mark how Nathan came to David. "And the LORD sent Nathan unto David." Be sure, before you face the hypocrite and the two-faced soul that God has sent you, and then use all the subtlety you have from the knowledge of your own heart. Any worker who has stood before God's all-searching eye for five minutes is not staggered at David's fall. Any heart-sin recorded is possible for any human heart, and why I say that the worker amongst the "two-faced" will find it the hardest work is that he has to get his subtlety, his wisdom, not only from God on High, but from a strange, mighty probing of his own nature. If the worker for God is going to go all lengths for God for the cure of souls, he has to allow God to examine deep down the possibilities of his own nature. That is why it is hard to deal with the "two-faced." That is why, Christian worker, God will take you through disciplines and experiences that are not meant for your particular life; they are meant to make you ready for God to send as He sent Nathan. Then you can use that subtle sword. "Be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves," said our Lord.

One solid year of deep heart-hypocrisy in King David's life, suddenly faced by Nathan, and watch how Nathan dealt with it. He used a parable of such God-given insight that David was blind as to his meaning. The sword went straight into David's conscience. As soon as David said, "The man that hath done this is a son of death" (RV mg), "he is worthy of this and it shall be done," instantly with sublime courage Nathan said, "Thou art the man." Then came the denunciations of God.

Worker for God, before you go among the infirm, the sick, the subtle, the hypocritical, let God deal with you. A child cannot wield the sword of the Spirit; it must be wielded by one fed on strong meat, one who has been deeply dealt with and examined by God's Spirit, in whom the last springs and possibilities of iniquity and wrong in his own nature have been disclosed to him that he may understand the marvel of God's grace.

Notice what the Apostle Paul did in a similar case. Read his epistle to the Galatians, and see how he dealt with "false brethren"—"And that because of the false brethren privily brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, that they might bring us into bondage: to whom we gave place in the way of subjection, no, not for an hour; that the truth of the gospel might continue with you" (2:4–5 RV). "False brethren"—mark the phrase, it is not mine, it is Paul's; they were brethren, though two-faced and untrue. What are we to do with them? "To whom we gave place in the way of subjection, no, not for an hour"—why? That our views might be expounded? No. That they might be detected as hypocrites? No. "That the truth of the gospel might continue with you." "Let brotherly love continue." This is perfect love to God; blazing, fiery zeal for God's honour, and mercilessness against God's enemies. There is a time to smite and a time to smile; a time to slay and thrust straight home when the true, sterling worth of your own repentance and the true, sterling worth of God's work of grace in your heart is put to the test.

When these false brethren crept in unawares, cunningly and craftily working against the honour of the Lord Jesus Christ, how did Paul deal with them? He withstood them; but be careful when you deal with false brethren that you are on the Apostle's line. If you dare to touch a false brother and your life has not been riddled through by God's searchlight, beware! If you are going to face false brethren, if you are going to work for the cure of the two-faced souls, if you are going to work so that the thrust of the sword of the Spirit will go straight home to the conscience, be prepared first to be dealt with by God, or else, if you begin to use your suspicions, your carping criticisms instead of God's insight, you may get a reply like this: "Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?" Set a thief to catch a thief, that is the method of the world; but when God Almighty sends a worker He sends one whom He has literally turned inside out, in a spiritual sense, one whose disposition He has altered and allowed the man or woman to know what He has done. There is no false knowledge in that worker's life. That worker goes straight for one purpose, the condemnation of the sinner, not to show his discernment, but that he may bring the soul out of its duplicity, out of its hypocrisy, into the light of God. Don't begin to work from your carnal suspicions—how many people mistake carnal suspicions for spiritual discernment! If God gives you a spirit of discernment, it is all right, there are times when He does, but I would like to warn you—never ask God to give you discernment. I have heard people ask God to give them the spirit of discernment, and I have felt constrained to say, "Lord, lead that soul not into temptation."

If God is going to give you power, Christian worker, to work for the cure of souls in their worst form, among the "two-faced" and the hypocritical, remember, first He will give you such an insight into the possibilities of your own sinfulness, and then such a comprehension of the marvels of His grace and wonderful salvation that you will have all the subtlety Nathan had. You will not be silent, you will speak out. Oh, for more voices to speak out when false doctrines are being taught! Would there were more to stand on the Nathan line, and wield the sword with all the wisdom of God's Spirit into the consciences of men, so that before men could know what they were driving at, the sword would have gone straight home with a "Thou art the man"! Oh, for more of that kind of wisdom! To be right with God, so examined by God, that God can send the blade of the anecdote, or the blade of the parable, straight to the imagination, and while the imagination is busy the sword has gone straight home. Then comes the application without a moment's delay-"Thou art the man," and the cry goes up, "I have sinned against the LORD." Then listen to Nathan's message to David afterwards: "And Nathan said unto David, The LORD also hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die." What a message!

One more thing, in the multitude of all the talk and all the words nowadays, do not forget the first point—if you are going to work for the cure of souls, you cannot choose the kind of souls you are going to work with, and when God brings you face to face with a two-faced life, an inwardly hypocritical life, then you will understand what the examination of God's Spirit is in you. Then you will understand what it is to be used in God's hands as "a new sharp threshing instrument having teeth." Then you will know what it is for the sword of God to wound and bruise you until you can feel no more, that He may thrust home the sword that will kill the error and save the soul you are driving at. God grant we may understand that working for the cure of souls is not a babe's work; it is a man's work, requiring man's power, grasped and transformed by God Almighty, so that God can get straight through the worker to the man He is waiting for.

The one who stands beside Nathan in the New Testament is John the Baptist. There was no belittling of his message; when he was before Herod there was no trimming down the message to win his favour, no subtle telling a lie against himself for his own vanity. There is more of that done than most people think. Nathan and John the Baptist came straight from God, and if you come straight from God you have to be spotless; there must be nothing between you and God, Christian worker. John the Baptist came straight from God and talked straight for God. Do you talk straight for God? When the message you have to deliver, brother preacher, strikes straight home, don't water it down just a little. Go straight for God if you come from Him. Neither for fear nor favour alter the message. What happened to John the Baptist? He went straight back to God, minus his head. That was the result of his message.

The Spirit of God discerns more incapacity in workers in dealing with the "two-faced" than in any other way. God grant we may so live under His searchlight that we may come straight from God and talk straight for God. It is easier to be silent than to obey God when you are face to face with a hypocrite, and if you are silent, you will get the applause of men. "When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand" (Ezekiel 3:18).

The next time you take a meeting, there may be a man after God's own heart there, but he has got on the line of internal hypocrisy and so may end as a son of perdition: you be faithful! You may have added to your list that day the soul of a David. But if you, seeing him and knowing him, begin to trim your message, God will require that man's blood at your hands. "If thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness. nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul" (Ezekiel 3:19). Obey God at every price! But mark you, Christian worker, if you obey God, He is going to let you be tried to the point of agony. In dealing with souls, it is easy to dabble in shallow water with the abnormal, it is easy to dabble with the lost, it is easy to dabble with the ordinary, easily comprehended sinners, but when we begin to work with the backsliders and when we are face to face with the internal hypocrites, then we need the subtlety which comes through the Spirit of God, and many draw back. God grant many may go forward!

Chapter VI

THE WORKER AMONG SICK SOULS

The destruction that wasteth at noonday. (Psalm 91:6)

I wonder if this has been growing clear to you, that we cannot understand the cases we have to deal with. One of the first things a worker for God has to learn by experience is that strangely obvious lesson, that none of us can understand the cases we meet to work with. Then how can we work for the cure of them? Remember the first principles we laid down: By knowing Jesus Christ for ourselves experimentally, and then by relying on the Holy Spirit.

"And I hated all my labour wherein I laboured under the sun" (Ecclesiastes 2:18 RV). These words were written by Solomon, the wisest man that ever lived, and you will find the last summing up of all he says is the statement of a sick soul, not a healthyminded soul, not a vigorous sunshiny hopeful soul, but exactly the opposite.

We have spoken about the worker for the cure of souls among the "hardy annuals," the hardy sinners, nothing sick about them, they are healthy and happy and wholesome. Now I want to take exactly the opposite kind of people. If our religion is only a religion of cheerfulness for the healthy-minded, it is no good for London, because more than half the people there, a great deal more than half, are not able to be cheerful, their minds and consciences and bodies are so twisted and tortured that exactly the opposite seems to be their portion. All the talking and preaching about healthy-mindedness, about cheering up and living in the sunshine will never touch that crowd. If all Jesus Christ can do is to tell a man he has to cheer up when he is miserable; if all the worker for God can do is to tell a man he has no business to have the "blues"—I say if that is all Jesus Christ's religion can do, then it is a failure. But the wonder of our Lord Jesus Christ is just this, that you can face Him with any kind of men or women you like, and He can cure them and put them into a right relationship with God.

The New Testament mentions quite a few of these sick souls. We will take two just now—Thomas and Mary Magdalene. Thomas was naturally gloomy, not happy and healthy-minded, that was not the way he was made. He was loyal to Jesus Christ, but he took the "sick" view of life; he always thought the worst was going to happen. You remember that when Lazarus died and Jesus said He was going to Bethany, Thomas said, "Let us also go that we may die with Him." It was no use going to Thomas and preaching the gospel of cheerfulness; you cannot alter facts by saying "Cheer up." What did Jesus Christ do for Thomas? He brought him into personal contact with Himself and altered him entirely (see John 20:24–29).

Mary Magdalene was another type of the sick soul, tortured and afflicted. It was no use going to Mary and telling her to believe there was no such thing as the devil, no such thing as sin, she was absolutely incapable of taking the first step. What did Jesus Christ do for Mary Magdalene? Help her to be happy when she was miserable? Help her to realise that there was no such thing as demon-possession? No. He turned out the demons and healed her (Luke 8:2).

In the second chapter of Hebrews we read of a great crowd of sick souls who were subject to bondage through fear of death, and Jesus Christ came to deliver them from their bondage; and in 1 Corinthians 11:30 (RV) we read, "For this cause many among you are weak and sickly, and not a few sleep." I have simply run over these cases to show that there is sufficient indication in the Book of God for us to recognise that there are sick souls naturally.

One word about the physical condition of people. There is a threshold to our nerves, that is, a place where the nerves begin to record. Some people's nerves do not record things as quickly as others. Some people have what is called the "misery" threshold of nerves, the threshold where the nerves begin to record is much lower down than it is in other people. Take it in connection with sound, some people can sleep in a tremendous racket, noise makes not the slightest difference to them. The ear gathers up vibrations, and only when those vibrations are quick enough do we hear. If the threshold of our hearing were lower, we should hear anything that makes waves in the atmosphere, we should hear the flowers grow, everything that grows makes a motion in the atmosphere. The majority of us have a threshold that is high up, and we cannot hear unless there is sufficient vibration in the atmosphere. Get a nervous system where the threshold of nerves is low, and life is an abject torture to that one wherever he goes. What is the good of telling him to cheer up? There is a bigger problem there than we can touch. That one is in contact with forces which the majority of us know nothing about; he is tortured by things we never hear, tortured by things we never feel. Such people take a very gloomy view of life; they cannot help it.

When a worker meets a soul like that, what is he going to do—preach the gospel of temperament, "Cheer up and look on the bright side," or preach Jesus Christ? "The gospel of cheerfulness" is a catchword of the day—it may be all very well among people who are naturally cheerful, but what about the folk who cannot be cheerful, who through no fault of their own have bodies where the threshold of their nerves is so low down that life is a misery? Read the second chapter of Hebrews again, and you will find it says that Jesus Christ took on Him not the nature of angels, but—"since then the children are sharers in flesh and blood, He also Himself in like manner partook of the same" (RV). Jesus Christ took on Him a flesh and blood nature with nerves and He knows exactly how the human frame is tuned and how it is tortured. Every Christian worker ought to know how to bring the sick souls, the souls that take the gloomy view, to Jesus Christ. These people will accept all you say about the need to receive His Spirit, but nothing happens; they do not cheer up. How are we going to bring Jesus Christ into contact with them?

If you read Acts 10:38 (RV) you will find Peter says a wonderful thing about Jesus of Nazareth-"how that God anointed Him with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil." Peter had just awakened to the fact that "God is no respecter of persons," and it is important to notice that he says God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power. Peter had never preached like that before. When he preached to the Jews he had presented Jesus Christ as being first the Son of God. As soon as he came in contact with the outside crowd who were not Jews, who were not religious, the Spirit of God makes him present Him as Jesus of Nazareth. When men are being led of the Spirit of God, they never preach their convictions.

But I want to notice what it was Peter said Jesus of Nazareth did; He healed "all that were oppressed of the devil." There are only two religions that accept gloom as a fact (I mean by gloom, sin, anguish and misery, the things that make people feel that life is not worth living), viz., Buddhism and Christianity. Every other religion ignores it. This is the age of the gospel of cheerfulness. We are told to ignore sin, ignore the gloomy people, and yet more than half the human race is gloomy. Sum up your own circle of acquaintances, and then draw your inference. Go over the list, and before long you will have come across one who is gloomy, he has a "sick" view of things, and you cannot alter that one. How are you going to get that oppression taken off? Tell him to take so many weeks' holiday by the sea? Take iron pills and tonics? No! Living in the peace and joy of God's forgiveness and favour is the only thing that will brighten up and bring cheerfulness to such an one. Only when God takes a life in hand can there come deliverance from the "blues," deliverance from fits of depression, discouragement and all such moods. The Scriptures are full of admonitions to rejoice, to praise God, to sing aloud for joy; but only when one has a cause to rejoice, to praise, and to sing aloud, can these things truly be done from the heart. In the physical realm the average sick man does not take a very bright view of life, and with the sick in soul true brightness and cheer are an impossibility. Until the soul is cured there is always an underlying dread and fear which steals away the gladness and the "joy unspeakable and full of glory" which God wishes to be the portion of all His children.

In dealing with sick souls, we must remember the Master's way, how He went to the root of the matter. Hear Him as He said, time and again when one was brought to Him for physical healing, "thy sins be forgiven thee." Dig out the "root of bitterness," then there can be no fruit to sour the life and set the nerves on edge.

My brother or sister, if you are a worker for Jesus Christ, He will open your eyes wide to the fact that sin and misery and anguish are not imaginary, they are real. Anguish is as real as joy; fired, jangled and tortured nerves are as real as nerves in order. Low threshold nerves, where everything is an exquisite misery, are as real as high threshold nerves where nothing is misery. Listen to this, they are Luther's own words:

"I am utterly weary of life. I pray the Lord will come forthwith and carry me hence. Let Him come above all with His last judgement. I will stretch out my neck, the thunder will burst forth and I shall be at rest." And having a necklace of white agates in his hand at the time, he added: "O God, grant that it may come with out delay. I would readily eat up this necklace to-day for the judgement to come to-morrow."

The Electress Dowager one day, when Luther was dining with her, said to him, "Doctor, I wish you may live forty years to come."

"Madame," replied he, "rather than live forty years more, I would give up my chance of Paradise."

That was Luther speaking at the end of his life. What produced the misery? He saw the havoc the Reformation had wrought, he did not see the good, he was too near it.

There was the same thing in Goethe's writings; in 1824 he writes:

I will say nothing against the course of my existence, but at the bottom it has been nothing but pain and burden, and I can affirm that, during the whole of my seventy-five years, I have not had four weeks of genuine well-being. It has been the perpetual rolling of a rock that must be raised up again.

Robert Louis Stevenson said that three hours out of every five he was insane with misery. John Stuart Mill said that life was not worth living after you were a boy.

This is not fiction, these are human facts. What does Christian Science do—ignores them! New Thought—ignores them! Mind Cure—ignores them! Jesus Christ opens our eyes to these facts, but here comes the difficulty: how am I to get Jesus Christ in contact with these sick souls?

In the first place, will you realise that you do not know how to do it? I want to lay that one principle down very strongly. If you think you know how to present Jesus Christ to a soul, you will never be able to do it. But if you will learn how to rely on the Holy Ghost, believing that Jesus Christ can do it, then I make bold to state that He will do it. If you get your little compartment of texts, and search them out and say, "I know how to deal with this soul," you will never be able to deal with it; but if you realise your absolute helplessness and say, "My God, I cannot touch this life, I do not know where to begin, but I believe that Thou canst do it," then you can do something.

It is wonderful to see Jesus Christ slip His coolness and His balm through fired and jangled nerves, turn out demons, alter the whole outlook and lift the life into a totally new relationship. Have you ever seen Him do that? I have seen Him do it twice in my lifetime, and I will never forget it. While you watch and while you realise the marvellous work of God going on in those gloomy, tortured lives, it is as if you were bathed in the sunlight of the Presence of God in a way you never are until you are face to face with one of these cases that make you realise your own utter helplessness and the power of Jesus Christ.

It was Jesus Christ coming in contact with Thomas that altered his gloom; the disciples' testimony could not do it. "Thomas, we have seen the Lord," and out of the agony of his sick soul, Thomas says, "I cannot, I dare not, believe!" "Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and put my hand into His side, I will not believe." The testimony of the disciples was not the slightest bit of use, but when Jesus Christ came in contact with Him, all was different. "Then saith He to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and see My hands; and reach hither thy hand, and put it into My side; and be not faithless, but believing. Thomas answered and said unto Him, My Lord and my God" (RV).

And Mary Magdalene—what did Jesus Christ do for her? He turned the demons out of her. "Mary that was called Magdalene, from whom seven devils had gone out" (Luke 8:2 RV).

Demon possession means that one body can hold several personalities. Do you believe that? Very few people do nowadays, but it is an awful fact, not only in the New Testament, but outside the New Testament, that one body may be the holder of more than one personality. How much room does thought take up? None. Personality partakes of the nature of thought. How much room does personality take up? None. "And when He was come forth upon the land, there met Him a certain man out of the city, who had demons [ASV].... And Jesus asked him, What is thy name? And he said, Legion; for many demons [ASV] were entered into him" (see Luke 8:27–30 RV). Many devils in one man, the modern man laughs at the idea, but the poor, tortured, demon-possessed man is left alone. Jesus Christ heals him and delivers him of them all.

God grant us the grace so to rely on the Holy Ghost, to so know our ignorance, so to get out of the way with our knowledge, that we will let the Holy Ghost bring the Majestic Christ face to face with the diseased, sick folk we meet. The majority of workers are in the road with their convictions of how God is going to work, there is no real, living, stirring, vital reliance on the Holy Ghost which places straight before the tortured, stricken soul the Mighty Lord Jesus. God grant we may so rely on the Holy Spirit that we may allow Him to introduce through the agony of our intercession—that is the point, through the agony of vicarious intercession—the Living, Mighty Christ! My brother and sister, are you willing to allow Jesus Christ to use every bit of your life to trample on in His way to another soul? Do you know anything about spending one costly drop of blood in vicarious intercession? There is nothing worked in the way of result in answer to prayer that does not cost somebody something. "Who in the days of His flesh, having offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears . . . " (RV). When you meet your sick soul, do you cry awhile and then go home and sleep, instead of taking that soul before God and vicariously interceding until by reliance on the Holy Spirit, Jesus Christ is presented to that darkened, difficult life? Blessed be the Name of God, there is no case too hard for Jesus Christ!

One more thing—what is it produces sick souls? Our emotions are associated with certain things and the value of those things to us lies in the emotion they start. For instance, you have some things in your home that are of no use to anybody on earth, but to you they are enormously valuable. Let something come in and destroy your emotions and associations, and what kind of a world are you in? A world in which suicide is the only outlet. Let some paralysis come and destroy your emotions, all your associated ideas with things, with people, with houses, with friends, with work, and the light is gone out of the sky, the power and the joy out of life, everything is paralysed, and the universe is one black prison-house. What will produce that? Look at the prodigal son. Have you ever dropped the plumbline down into his heart and tried to fathom one phase only of his cry-"I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight"? Oh, the agony of the soul that has been paralysed on the inside—the gloom, the darkness, and the shadow! No preaching of the gospel of good cheer will touch that; it is only the great Life-giving, Lifeimparting Christ Who can touch it. Oh, my brother or sister, you have lately been brought face to face with some case and you have said, "This is conviction of sin," but you know it is not. You have tried all the scriptural teaching you know, with no result. You have tried to advocate this thing and that, but no result, and you have been humiliated to the dust before God. Is not this the reason—you have been trying to find out what is wrong? God will never show you what is wrong; that is not your business. What He wants us to do is to bring the case to Him: "Lord, use my intercession as a channel through which Thou canst reach that soul." God grant that we may be so centred in Him that He can use us in that wonderful way.

Chapter VII

THE WORKER AMONG THE STUPID SOULS

Behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly. (1 Samuel 26:21)

This is a statement made by the prophet of the Most High God, and a King of Israel. Before I read some passages from God's Book to show you that the stupid soul is continually brought before the attention of the reader of God's Word, I would like you to notice what the word "stupid" means. It does not mean ignorant, but anything formed or done without reason or judgement. Ignorance is being without knowledge "and the times of this ignorance God winked at ['overlooked,' RV]" (Acts 17:30). Do distinguish between ignorance and stupidity!

Let us look at one or two passages:

And Moses and Aaron gathered the assembly together before the rock, and he said unto them, Hear now, ye rebels; shall we bring you forth water out of this rock? (Numbers 20:10 RV)

Because they provoked his spirit, so that he spake unadvisedly with his lips. (Psalm 106:33)

When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the evil one, and snatcheth away that which hath been sown in his heart. (Matthew 13:19 RV)

For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish. (Titus 3:3)

For of these are they that creep into houses, and take captive silly women laden with sins, led away by divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. (2 Timothy 3:6–7 RV)

For when by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of solid food. (Hebrews 5:12 RV)

My reason for running over these passages is that the truth may sink into our minds that the Bible lays a tremendous emphasis on the fact that there are stupid souls.

Now let us get back to Saul. I know it is not the usual way of summing up Saul, but I want to take him as an illustration of the stupid soul. Read the description of Saul in 1 Samuel 9:2 (RV)—"And [Kish] had a son, whose name was Saul, a choice young man and a goodly: and there was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he: from his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people." His physique was magnificent, his bodily presence wonderful, but he was amazingly stupid. Samuel was known everywhere, he was such a mighty prophet and man of God, but there were two people who did not know him—a man called Kish and his son Saul; they spent their time breeding asses, and knew nothing whatever about Samuel. Saul actually met Samuel and asked him if he could tell him where the seer was! How did Saul get the first inkling of who Samuel was? Through one of his father's servants. If you are a stupid soul spiritually, do get in touch with a godly servant—in touch with someone who does know the seer! And Samuel said to him, "I am the seer; . . . and in the morning I will let thee go, and will tell thee all that is in thine heart" (RV). Then we read that "God gave him another heart." If Saul had gone on in obedience to God's Word, his life would have fulfilled God's intention; but instead of that, he is a model for all time of a stupid soul.

What are we to do when we come across stupid souls? Ignorant souls we can deal with, they need knowledge; the stupid soul does not need knowledge; the stupid soul needs to have the word of God until it is worried by it. The difficulty is how the worker is to get the word of God into its right place. Jesus Christ says the stupid soul is the one that hears the word and does not understand it. "When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not . . ." (Matthew 13:19). Does God hold a man culpable for being stupid spiritually? He certainly does. Every case of stupidity recorded in the Bible is punished by God. How can I get the word of God into a stupid soul? Read 1 Samuel 15, and see how Samuel dealt with Saul. "The commandment of God, why did you not obey that?" Take the Apostle Paul, the very same thing: "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth . . .?" And our Lord's own words: "O foolish men, and slow of heart to believe after [mg] all that the prophets have spoken!" (RV).

This is the time, Christian worker, when you must use the word until you get it wedged in somehow in that stupid soul, until it rankles and worries its way to the soul's salvation or destruction, and there was never a class that will drive a worker closer to God than the stupid soul, they will tax every bit of patience and endurance you have. They always pretend to want to do something—"ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth"—why? They would not obey the word they heard, that is the beginning. You remember Samuel asked Saul if he had fulfilled the word of God with regard to the Amalekites, and Saul said he had: "Blessed be thou of the LORD: I have performed the commandment of the LORD. And Samuel said, "What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?" Pretending, that is the first characteristic of the stupid soul. Again in his last agony, when Saul went off on the spiritualistic line, Samuel says the same thing: "Because thou obeyedst not the voice of the LORD."

You will come across the stupid soul in connection with the elementary work of grace, the new birth: "I want to be sanctified, I have done this and that and the other." Well, be perfectly certain they have not; if those things had been done, there would be no "bleating of the sheep," no provision for the lusts of the flesh, none of the laying down of careful lines for the development of things that ought not to be in the Christian life. Is any soul beginning to deceive itself? That is the danger of stupidity; when once it begins to disobey God's Word ever so little, it begins to deceive itself. "Well, God is very hard with me, I did fulfil the word of God, I did what I knew how to." How is the worker going to get the word of God driven straight home? As you wait before God, there is no class for which God will give you passages of Scripture more quickly than for this class, and at your peril you lower the standard of the word of God.

The first thing I want to note with regard to the worker is this, never sympathise with a stupid soul. Sympathise with the sick soul; sympathise with the abnormal soul—sympathy is needed for nearly every soul but the stupid soul, but never sympathise with stupidity in the approach of a soul to God. Watch Samuel, watch Paul and watch our Lord—the word of God, the word of God, first second and last; no sympathy, no help, only the word of God.

Have you ever noticed that if a stupid soul hears a word of God too often it may turn again and trample on that word? A man who ultimately became a great power for God, on his own testimony, said that the centre of his life was once full of this kind of stupidity. He was a so-called worker for God for several years, until he came across this verse: "ye are not your own; for ye were bought with a price" (RV), and he said wherever he went that verse kept chiding him; when he read a book he would come across it; when he heard a sermon it would be from that text, until he said, "At last I took my penknife and cut the verse out of every Bible I had." Then the Spirit of God awakened him as to what he had done, and he confessed the whole thing before God and God forgave him his stupidity.

Christian worker, when God gives you a word for a soul who is stupid, keep at it. This is the time when you have to keep using the verse God gives you for a soul: every time you meet him, every time you write to him, every time you talk to him. The only way you will stir up that one out of his stupidity is by driving home the word of God, and presently you will see that stupid soul saved from perdition, if it has not gone as far away from God as Saul, and as far away as many a stupid soul will go for lack of faithful workers. But if you as a worker have one strand of stupidity in you, one characteristic in your life where you are apt to make statements and judgements unreasonably, beware that your message does not become a boomerang. A boomerang is a peculiar weapon so balanced that when you fling it as far from you as you can, it comes back and hits you! God's word is always a boomerang to the worker who uses it if he is not right with Him.

Worker for God, are you quite sure there is no strand of stupidity in you? Are you quite sure you are not in the category of those who are ever learning, but never coming to the knowledge of the truth? Are you facing something about which you are very willing to be stupid? Then the word of God in your hand will come straight back to you when you try to deal with another soul-"Thou art the man." But if you are living rightly yourself, then keep on the line of pressing the word home. Will you just run over in your mind, worker, the stupid souls you have in your Sundayschool class, in your Church services—are you glossing over the word God gave you for them? Hammer at it morning, noon and night; if you cannot get at their ears, get at them by prayer. If it is Luke 11:13, then keep at it until they say, "I wish you would be quiet about Luke 11:13; is there nothing else in the Bible but that verse?" But what about "the bleating of the sheep"? That is what keeps you to your point, and God will never let you get away from it. If a man says he has received the Spirit of God and yet has not gone on with God, there is always a word of God to tell him why, and if you are a worker for God you will be a persistent annoyance and aggravation to that one whenever you meet him, until ultimately he comes to the place where he will praise God for the annoyance. Every worker can give instances of God awakening the stupid soul by persistence on the one point. This is the stern element in Christian work.

How did Jesus Christ deal with the foolishness or the stupidity of the two disciples on the road to Emmaus? These disciples were good, simple souls, honest and true, but they had become stupid, blinded by their own grief, their own point of view. What did Jesus say to them? "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." The word "fool" is often used in the New Testament, but not always in the same way, here it means literally, "My little imbecile children, when will you believe all that the prophets have spoken?" This is stupidity of a totally different order, a stupidity that Jesus deals with very pointedly, but very patiently. It is a stupidity that has obliterated the interpretation of the word of God because of personal grief and perplexity. Is Jesus Christ coming to you by the Spirit and saying, "My little imbecile child, when will you believe what I say?" Is there any particular thing in your life, Christian worker, that you have become slow of heart to believe? Do not let the stupidity grow. Get the word of God for it. Oh, if there ever was a need, it is for people to search and ransack this Book and get at what God says. How much time have you given to finding out what the Bible has to say? An hour a day? "Oh, I cannot give an hour." Half an hour? "Oh no, I cannot give that." Five minutes? "Yes, I could do that." Well, have you done it? Five minutes a day out of twentyfour hours to find out what the word of God says! No wonder God says, "My people doth not consider."

Never water down the word of God to the understanding of your people. Would that God the Holy Ghost would thunder that through you as He has thundered it through me! Never drag down the word of God to anybody's understanding. Hammer at it, keep at it, and drive at it, till the laziness is taken out of people's hearts and brains and bodies, and they are willing to face what this Book has to say about their condition, and face it with the sterling earnestness they use to see what the newspapers have to say when they are on the hunt for a new situation. God grant we may learn the imperativeness of getting at what the word of God has to say about our particular need, then perhaps we will begin to understand why we have that need.

"The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." The word of God is "a lamp" and "a light," but when people get off on the "stupid" lines, it is all instincts, impressions, vague ideas—"ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." Then is the time when men of reprobate mind creep in and lead astray. There are a number of "creepers" stealing in nowadays, religious "creepers," and they will steal into your soul, my brother and sister, just where you are stupid. Has something been said to you recently from the word of God that has awakened you with a startling realisation to the fact that you have not obeyed God on a certain point?

Then may God bring you face to face with a faithful worker who will bring the same thing to you, whatever it is, until you get through. When the word of God has begun its piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, it will have its wonder-working way and heal and re-create and dissipate the stupidity.

Chapter VIII

THE WORKER AND THE PASSION FOR SOULS

To the weak I became weak, that I might gain the weak: I am become all things to all men, that I may by all means save some. (1 Corinthians 9:22 RV)

You hear people say that Paul showed his wonderful breadth of mind, his culture and generosity, his gentleness and patience, by becoming all things to all men. He did nothing of the sort; he said, "I am become all things to all men" for one purpose only—"that I may by all means save some." He did not say, "I became all things to all men that I might show what a wonderful being I am." There is no thought of himself in the whole matter.

The phrase "a passion for souls" is a dangerous one; a passion for souls may be either a diseased lust or a Divine life. Let me give you a specimen of it as a diseased lust—"Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and when he is become so, ye make him twofold more a son of hell than yourselves" (Matthew 23:15 RV). "Proselyte" is a technical word for convert, and our Lord is showing that these Pharisees had a great passion for souls which He stamped as of the devil; and if you read the thirteenth chapter of Acts you will find a remarkable thing occurs—the proselytes became exactly what Jesus Christ said they would, "twofold more a son of hell," far more superstitious and fanatical; the devout women alluded to who persecuted the apostles were proselytes (vv. 43-50). In Revelation 13:11-17, you will find again the passion for souls as a diseased lust. I refer to the beast coming up out of the earth; the consummation of his power was to get the souls of men into one solid mass.

But have we got clearly in our minds what the passion for souls as a Divine life is? Read James 5:19–20 (RV): "My brethren, if any among you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall cover a multitude of sins." The Apostle is talking to those whom we understand as Christians, "If any among you, my brethren, do err from the truth . . ."

Again, our Lord in speaking to His disciples, used some striking phrases, all of which refer to this passion for souls, in Matthew 4:18–22, He speaks about making them "fishers of men"; in John 21:15–17, He says "Feed My sheep," a striking phrase which has a direct bearing on the right passion for souls: and after the Resurrection He said, "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations" (Matthew 28:19 RV). I want to take these three phrases as a guide for the worker in regard to this great passion for souls.

There is a telling pathos about the twenty-first chapter of John; all the disciples had forsaken the Shepherd, and Jesus says, "Now never you forsake the flock, you become broken bread and poured-out wine and feed the flock." God grant we may understand that the passion for souls is not a placid, scientifically worked-out thing, it compresses all the energy of heart and brain and body in one consuming drive, day and night from the beginning of life to the end—a consuming, fiery, living passion. That was the characteristic of our Lord's life, and of the lives of all the disciples after Pentecost, and of the life of the Apostle Paul.

Take first of all the phrase "fishers of men." There are one or two significant things about that figure of speech. The early disciples were fishermen, and the Spirit of God seems to point out that their earthly employment was a parable of their Divine vocation. David was a shepherd, he became the shepherd of Israel. Paul was a tent-maker; he was used by God for making men's bodies into tabernacles of the Holy Ghost. I wonder how many of you know what it is to be out all night at sea fishing? I do. Before the early dawn, about three or four in the morning, you feel so amazingly cold and so amazingly indifferent that you don't know whether you care for anything, and there is an exact counterpart of those nights in work for God. Do you know what it is to have a relationship to God so consuming, a personal, passionate devotion to Jesus Christ so powerful that it will stand you in good stead through every cold night, while you are watching and waiting to land men for God? It is those cold nights of waiting, cold nights of praying and of preaching, when, like Gideon's army over again, many leave and forsake and just the few are left, that are the test[ed].

What a marvellous illustration fishing is, especially fishing with the net, and Jesus Christ told the disciples He would make them "fishers of men," catchers of men. Unless we have this divine passion for souls burning in us because of our personal love for Jesus Christ, we will quit the work before we are much older. It is an easy business to be a fisherman when you have all the enthusiasm of the catch, everybody then wants to be a fisherman. Just as everybody comes in with the shout and the "Hallelujah" when revival signs are abroad; but God is wanting those who through long nights, through difficult days of spiritual toil, have been trying to let down their nets to catch the fish. Oh, the skill, the patience, the gentleness and the endurance that are needed for this passion for souls; a sense that men are perishing won't do it; only one thing will do it, a blazing, passionate devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ, an all-consuming passion. Then there is no night so long, no work so hard and no crowd so difficult, but that love will outlast it all.

God grant that we may see that our passion for souls springs from that on which the Moravian Mission⁸ founded its enterprise—the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah; behind every heathen face, behind every face besotted with sin, they saw the Face of the Son of God; behind every broken piece of earthenware, they saw Jesus Christ; behind every down-trodden mass of human corruption, they saw Calvary. That was the passion that was their motive. God grant we may get it back again. That is the deep, true, evangelical note for the passion for souls, the consuming passion that transfigures a man's self, that transfigures a woman's self, and makes him or her indeed wise and patient and able fishers of men.

Beware of the people who tell you how to fish! I know a good many people who have tried to learn how to fish from books, but they never did learn. The only way to learn how to fish is to fish! An old sea-captain whom I know very well, who has been a fisherman all his days, told me he met a man who had published a book on how to catch fish. The captain took him out in his boat; they stayed out four hours, but he didn't have enough strength to put one piece of line over the boat, he was too seasick. That was the instructor of how to catch fish!

Beware of the books that tell you how to catch men. Go to Calvary, and let God Almighty deal with you until you understand the meaning of the tremendous cost to our Lord Jesus Christ, and then go out to catch men. God grant we may get away from the instructors on how to catch fish and get out into the fishing business!

Mrs. Howard Hooker⁹ pointed out in an address one day that the disciples when Jesus Christ called them were mending their nets, and she made the remark, "The majority of Christian people are always washing and mending their nets; but when Jesus Christ comes along, He tells them to launch out and let them down; it is the only way to catch fish." God grant we may see the aptness of Jesus Christ's words, "I will make you fishers of men." Is there some Sunday-school teacher to whom it has been a cold, cold year in your class, have you gone home every Sunday afternoon with a heart like lead, and have you cried to God, saying, "O God, I have prayed and asked and longed, but not one of these lives can I get for Thee"? God grant if you feel like that, you may go back to Calvary again and again, until the Holy Ghost expounds to you the tremendous, passionate love of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Have you ever noticed one thing about the early disciples, viz., that in every case the choice is the Lord's, not the man's. "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you." Jesus turned away everyone who came to Him and said, "I want to be Your disciple." Jesus Christ knows the men and women He wants. God grant that His choice may fall on everyone of us, and that we may learn with patience and discipline how He is going to teach us to be patient, to be powerful and to be passionate in His service! Never losing heart, never being discouraged, never being excited over a big catch. Many a worker has rendered himself useless to God by his undue hilarity over a big revival for God. "Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you," said Jesus; "but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven." God grant we may understand that the mainspring of our passion for souls must be a personal, passionate devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Then the shepherding of the flock. Read John 21, every one of the disciples had forsaken Jesus; the night had got too cold, too dark, their own grief was too overwhelming, and they all forsook Him and fled. Then Jesus came to them in the upper room and imparted to them His Spirit, and now He gives them this commission—"Feed My lambs"; "Tend My sheep"(RV); "Feed My sheep."

Now both the fisherman's art and the shepherd's art sound poetical until you have tried them! I begin to thank God that in my boyhood and early manhood I had to take so many tries at a good many things. I did not like it at the time, but I am thankful now I had to do shepherding in the highlands of Scotland. When you have to carry across your shoulders a dirty old wether and bring it down the mountain-side, you will soon know whether shepherding is poetry or not; you will soon know whether it is not the most taxing, the most exhausting and the most exasperating work; and Jesus uses the illustration for the passion for souls. Quiet, judicious knowing how to do it won't do it; passion alone will do it. One of the grandest men I ever knew was a sheep-farmer, and he told me of his nephew whom he was trying to train as a sheepfarmer (he is now a minister in Canada)—"The boy cannot learn sheep-farming; it must be born in him." That used to be the old shepherd's great theory, that you could not teach a man how to look after sheep unless it was born in him. Jesus Christ drives home the very same truth to the disciples. To whom did He say, "Feed My lambs"? To Peter. Who was Peter? A very wayward sheep. Peter had not only forsaken Jesus Christ, he denied with oaths and curses he ever knew Him, and now that Peter has received the Holy Spirit and is personally, passionately devoted to Jesus Christ, do you think that anybody could have such patience with young converts as Peter? Who was it that wrote, "Tend the flock of God which is among you, exercising the oversight, not of constraint, but willingly, according unto God" (RV)? Peter. Peter had marvellously learned through his own experience how to be patient, how to be tender, how to be full of grateful watchfulness over all the Lord's sheep.

But there is another aspect. When Jesus said, "Feed My sheep," He gave Peter nothing to feed them with. This is a tremendous point. You cannot nourish the flock of God unless you are rightly related to the Shepherd. You may be the mouthpiece for God's truth to the unsaved, but you cannot nourish the flock of God which is among you unless you are rightly related to the Shepherd, unless you are willing to let God use you as broken bread and poured-out wine to feed His sheep. Much-tried Christian worker, you are not understanding what God is putting you through; perhaps this is what He is fitting you for, to teach you how to feed His sheep, to tend the flock of God. Sunday-school teacher, perhaps Jesus Christ is teaching you how He is going to make you broken bread and poured-out wine. Take some time, Christian worker, over your Bible, and see what God has to say about shepherds, about hireling shepherds. This work of feeding and tending sheep is hard work, arduous work, and love for the sheep alone will not do it, you must have a consuming love for the great Shepherd, the Lord Jesus Christ; that is the point I want to leave impressed. Love for men as men will never stand the strain. In order to catch men for the Lord Jesus Christ, you must love Jesus Christ absolutely, beyond all others. You must have a consuming passion of love, then He will flow through you in a passion of love and yearning and draw men to Himself.

Then, lastly, "make disciples of all the nations" (Matthew 28:19 RV). "Making yourselves ensamples to the flock," says Peter (RV). What does that mean? Be a walking, talking, living example of what you preach, in every silent moment of your life, known and unknown; bear the scrutiny of God, until you prove that you are indeed an example of what He can do, and then "make disciples of all the nations." Now we come to the great, grand idea of the universal and spiritual aspect of the work of a Christian. There is no respect of persons with God, no respect of nations with God—here, there, anywhere and everywhere, wherever God likes to stir up your nest and fling you, disciple all the nations. When souls are born again into the kingdom of God the Church of Christ makes a tremendous rejoicing, as it ought to make, but then what does it do? When God brings souls to you who have been brought into His kingdom by His sovereign work of grace, what have you to do? Disciple them, and the only way you can disciple them is not by making them proselytes of your views, but by teaching them to do what Jesus commanded you to do and you have done. Watch the Apostle Paul's testimony—"who shall bring you into remembrance of my ways which be in Christ." How often the Apostle Paul says, when talking to his converts, "Ye are our glory and joy." Sunday-school teacher, can you say, "God has manifested His grace in me, and if you come to the same place He will manifest it in you"? Or, do you have to say, "Do as I say, but not as I do"? Before we can disciple all the nations, we ourselves must be where we want other people to be. Watch again that matchless Apostle's life, the consuming, passionate agony of his soul was for the converts, not for the crowd outside; discipling is the one stamp of that mature Apostle's life. "My little children, of whom I am again in travail until Christ be formed in you" (Galatians 4:19 RV).

Another thing: Sunday-school worker, and Christian worker, and minister, you must be farther on and higher up than those you are leading, and you must be going on all the time. Now we come to the meaning of God's discipling of various workers, of His removing some workers and of putting others over the heads of others. Beware of being stationary! God grant that we may be going on with Him continually so that we can disciple all we come in contact with. When a young convert asks you a question—"Can God deliver me from the disposition of sin?" what will you say? If you cannot answer, "Thank God, He can deliver you," then beware! God may have to remove your candlestick as a teacher, as a worker. How does the Apostle Paul finish that wonderful chapter, 1 Corinthians 9—"I buffet my body, and bring it into bondage: lest by any means, after that I have preached to others, I myself should be rejected" (RV), cast away as reprobate silver. God grant that no Christian worker may fall from the heaven of his usefulness because he refuses to go on with God!

If you have cooled down in your spiritual life, Christian worker, has it not come about that some weeks ago, or some months ago, you were asked a question and you could not answer it, and you ought to have been able to answer it? It was a practical, pointed question about what God could do for a man's soul, or for his body, and you could not answer it, why? Because the side issue of your own life was not clear; and until you make that issue clear, you are left as reprobate silver. You have preached to others? Yes, and God blessed your preaching, but from the second you begin to neglect the side issues of your life, that moment God begins to leave you alone as a worker for Him. God grant you may get back again, all the avenues clearly open to Him, avenues of heart and head and body and soul, back premises and front premises, underground and overhead, and all around, clear and open to God! Then let the questions come from anywhere, questions that touch the head, questions that touch the back record, questions that touch the underneath record—"Can God restore the years the cankerworm hath eaten?" "Can God alter the build of a man's mind?" "Can God destroy laziness out of a man?" I was talking to an elderly minister the other day, and speaking of ministers and Christian workers generally, he said, "The great defect in all branches of Christian work is laziness." The only cure for laziness is to be filled with the life of God to such an overwhelming extent that He can spend you to the last cell of your body, to the last drop of your blood, for His own glory. God grant that the consuming passion for souls for Jesus Christ's sake may get hold of us as never before!

One other thing I want you to notice with regard to this passion for souls. God will put you through many mills that are never meant for you, mills you never would be put through but that He wants to make you good bread for His little ones to eat. Christian worker, you see the meaning now of that hard place you have been in; God wants to make you bread well enough baked until you are His "standard" bread, and then He can break you for the feeble amongst the flock. What is the consuming passion in the Apostle Paul's life? Devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ. "For I could wish that I myself were anathema from Christ for my brethren's sake, my kinsmen according to the flesh" (RV). "And I will most gladly spend and be spent out [mg] for your souls" (RV). Christian worker, have you lost out in that consuming passion? If you are getting cooled down, visit the Cross of the Lord Jesus Christ and ask the Spirit of God to give you insight into its meaning, ask Him that you may understand it in a new way. Then go forth, and-

Measure my life by loss instead of gain; Not by the wine drunk, but the wine poured forth.

Chapter IX

THE GOD-APPROVED WORKER

Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth. (2 Timothy 2:15 RV)

We have been dealing with the worker for the cure of souls, now I want to deal with the prevention which is better than cure. How can a man or woman become a workman approved unto God? Read 1 Timothy 4:16—"Take heed to thyself, and to thy teaching" (RV). If you forget everything else, do not forget that verse. The word "heed" occurs again in Acts 3:5 and 20:28. It means to concentrate, to screw your mind down, fix it, limit it, curb it, confine it, rivet it on yourself and on your teaching. It is a strong word, a powerful word, a word that grips, a rousing word. That is what we have to do if we are going to be workmen approved unto God.

But I want you to notice first of all who is talking and who he is talking to. It is the Apostle Paul talking to Timothy, or writing to Timothy, or sending a message to Timothy. Paul's method was that of apprenticeship, that is always God's method of training workers. In the old days when artists used to have apprentices, they used to put the boy in charge of mixing paints and in between doing this he would watch the artist paint, and slowly bit by bit, doing the hard work and watching the master work, he would learn to "take heed." That was Paul's method. Timothy had a good mother and a godly grandmother, and he was trained spiritually in this apprentice style. If you are going to be a worker for the cure of souls, God will bring you under masters and teachers. That is the method God always uses. He does not use anyone who is undisciplined. Thank God for every worker who was ever placed under apprenticeship!

"Take heed to thyself" (RV). That is not self-realisation; it is self-preparation, and the first thing I want to notice about self-preparation is in chapter 4:13, "Give attendance to reading." The word "reading" does not mean what we understand by reading—opening a book and looking at it; it means what we understand in Scotland by expository preaching. "Listen to that kind of discourse, Timothy, read that kind of manuscript, and when you open your mouth, follow that specimen." What is expository preaching? It is not taking a text out of its setting and using it as a title; it means that the verse is taken in its setting and applied where it is meant to apply. I wonder how many workers are taking heed to their reading in this expository way. I wonder what kind of preacher you delight to listen to? What kind of book you like to read, what kind of instruction you delight to listen to? Paul tells Timothy to take heed, first of all, to this important thing. "Give attendance to reading."

In order to get this more crystallised in our minds, read Nehemiah 8:4-5: "And Ezra the scribe stood upon a pulpit of wood, which they had made for the purpose. . . . And Ezra opened the book in the sight of all the people; (for he was above all the people;) and when he opened it, all the people stood up." That is the God-ordained method of expounding God's Word, and it is as if Paul said to Timothy, "When you read, when you listen and when you teach, remember God's time-honoured method-get upon your pulpit of wood as an official." There are two kinds of official workerthe one who may become a castaway; that is what the Apostle Paul dreaded—"I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." The other kind of worker is the one who is an example of what he teaches. But the point to notice here is that the person who expounds God's Word has to be seen of all the people; if his sermons are written, let the people see they are written; if he is reading from the Bible, let the people see that he is; if he is reading someone else's sermon, let him say so. These are not trifling things, they are tremendously important things, and the word "reading" covers them all. "Search after that kind of preacher, Timothy, and listen to him."

Worker for God—and I speak this to myself as well as to you—what do you fasten your mind on when you listen to a preacher, when you read a book? When Jesus Christ said "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," He did not stop there, He went on to say, "and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." Oh, I wish I had time, I would kindle you by telling you of some folks I know who have lifted themselves out of the very gutter of ignominy and ignorance by sheer grind in the secular callings of life. Would to God we had the same stick-to-it energy in God's line! Many a lad have I known in Scotland who has worked hard day and night to attain a scholarship in secular callings, and are we to be behind them? This word of the Apostle Paul's is used in that connection—"take heed," concentrate, stick at it, fix the mind on it. Give heed to reading, be careful of your self-preparation. God grant that we may be approved unto God by what we build in. When Paul mentions the matter of conversation, he says, "See that your speech is edifying"—good building-up stuff, not sanctimonious talk, but real solid stuff that makes people stronger in the Word of God, stronger in character, stronger in practical life.

Paul says to Timothy another thing, "of these things put them in remembrance, charging them in the sight of the Lord, that they strive not about words, to no profit, to the subverting of them that hear" (RV). And again, "Shun profane babblings: for they will proceed further in ungodliness, and their word will eat as doth a gangrene" (RV). And again, "But foolish and ignorant questionings refuse, knowing that they gender strifes" (RV). "Don't argue! don't enter into controversy at any price." Paul told Timothy not to enter into controversy at any price, and Paul was the arch-controversialist himself! Paul spent most of his days in controversy, and yet he tells Timothy not to argue! But have you read Paul's method of controversy? Paul put himself with amazing courtesy and amazing insight and amazing tenderness into the place of the man he was disputing with. The reason Paul tells Timothy not to argue, and the reason he tells me not to argue, and the reason he tells you not to argue, is that we argue from our own point of view. We argue not for the truth's sake, we argue to prove we are right. God grant that we may learn to take heed lest we get switched off on arguing. Is there some worker for God likely to be twisted and turned aside by battling for the faith? Let me read you some words I have jotted down in my Bible:

Oh, the unmitigated curse of controversy! Oh, the detestable passions that corrections and contradictions kindle up to fury in the proud heart of man! Eschew controversy, my brethren, as you would eschew the entrance to hell itself. Let them have it their way; let them talk; let them write; let them correct you; let them traduce you; let them judge and condemn you; let them slay you. Rather let the truth of God suffer itself, than that love suffer. You have not enough of the divine nature in you to be a controversialist.

Dr. Alexander Whyte¹⁰

^{10.} Alexander Whyte (1836–1921): Scottish minister who influenced Chambers during Oswald's time at Edinburgh University, 1895–96.

"Heal me," prays St. Augustine, again and again, "of this lust of mine of always vindicating myself."

Take heed, fix your mind, never be wheedled into controversy. Let the Spirit of God controvert. One of my greatest snares ever since I became a Christian is this very thing. I know what it means, I know the galling humiliation and agony in days that have gone by of wanting to argue the point out, and I know, possibly better than any of you, the inwardness of the point that the Apostle Paul is driving at with Timothy—"Don't do it, Timothy; stop, you will damage your own soul, you will hinder the truth of God, you will bruise the souls you talk to." God grant we may fix and concentrate our minds and take heed to this! Take heed to yourself, take heed how you read, and above all don't argue. Have you learned this, Christian worker, that when any soul begins to discuss the baptism with the Holy Spirit, it is time you got out of the way? they have a controversy with the Holy Ghost, not with you. "Sanctification" is not a man's term; it is God's: "the baptism with the Holy Ghost" is not man's conception, it is God's, and when a soul begins to argue on these matters, remember, worker for God, it is the Holy Spirit they are arguing with, the Word of God they are haggling about. God grant we may not hinder those who are battling their way slowly into the light.

One more thing: Paul tells Timothy to "preach the word; be instant in season, out of season" (2 Timothy 4:2). Watch the setting of that. Timothy was fragile in body physically, Paul is frequently telling him how to take care of his body, and yet here is the Apostle telling this young man who is feeble in body to preach the word in season and out of season, what does he mean? To take every opportunity of preaching the word? He does not mean any such thing; he means "preach the word in season or out of season with regard to yourself, never let your bodily condition hinder your preaching." The Apostle Paul is driving at laziness, heart-sloth. God grant we may learn how to be instant in season and out of season, always at it, night and day, whether we feel like it or not. When you come to read deeper down between the lines in the Bible, you will find running all through it the awful curse on laziness and spiritual sloth. Has it come on you mentally, Christian worker? Then may God rouse you up to get to reading, to get to work with your pencil and notebook, in cars and out of cars, behind the counter, anywhere. God grant we may be roused up in the spiritual domain to put energy and vim into our work and never say, "I can't"; "I have no time." Of course you have not, no man worthy of the name ought to have time to give to God, he has to take it from other things until he knows how God values time. Take heed to yourself, and never allow anything to produce laziness and sloth.

And lastly, "Continue in these things; for in doing this thou shalt save both thyself and them that hear thee" (1 Timothy 4:16 RV). There is the charter for the worker, he is to be a pattern. "Let no man despise thy youth" (v. 12). Was Paul telling Timothy to stand up and say, "I know I am only a youngster, but I defy any man to contradict me"? Paul is saying, "Do not let youth be despised in you," and then he tells him to be "an ensample to them that believe, in word, in manner of life, in love, in faith, in purity" (RV). The only way youth can save itself from being despised is by the life being in keeping with the profession, the teaching backed by it, the conversation, the manner of life, the purity, the clean, vigorous, upright manhood; not only a worker sent from God, but an ensample of what God can do. The baptism with the Holy Ghost and fire made the disciples the incarnation of what they taught. God grant that we may be the pattern of what we preach, that we may be workmen approved unto God, rightly dividing the word of truth.

Chapter X

THE HOLY WORKER

But of the rest durst no man join himself to them; . . . and believers were the more added to the Lord. . . . (Acts 5:13–14 RV)

I want to end where I began, with the character of the worker. God grant we may understand the power of a holy worker for God. I don't mean a holiness worker; what we need is holy workers—there is a big difference. "But of the rest durst no man join himself to them; . . . and believers were the more added to the Lord" (RV). Have you caught the contrast?—a holy dread and a holy discipleship, they always go together. The souls who stand true to God are those whom God's Spirit has added.

"And great fear came upon"—the crowd outside? No, "upon the whole church, and upon all that heard these things" (RV). And then a wonderful thing happened—a great benediction fell on the multitude outside, "and believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women."

I want to deal with this holy dread and holy discipleship. "Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men." It is necessary for those of us who are workers for God to allow the Spirit of God to lift the veil sometimes and strike terror through us. We take our salvation and our sanctification too cheaply, without realising that Jesus Christ went through the deep waters of uttermost damnation that we might have it. We read that a great fear came across the members of the early Church: "And great fear came upon the whole church, and upon all that heard these things" (RV)—why? They realised, what we have to realise, that the Pentecostal dispensation produces not only Pentecostal living people, but liars to the Holy Ghost. Look for one moment at Ananias. "But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thy heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land? . . . How is it that thou hast conceived this thing in thy heart?" (RV). Read the last verses of chapter 4, "Barnabas . . . having a field, sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet" (RV). It is probable that indirectly Barnabas was responsible for Ananias. Barnabas had done a wonderful thing and doubtless he was praised for it, and Ananias wanted to equal it. We need to live stedfastly in the presence of God so that when we are praised we don't arouse the spirit of envy, the spirit that makes a man want to do something, not because he loves God, but because he wants to emulate us. Let me ask you who are workers, and let me ask myself, "Why do you work for the salvation of souls? Why do you want to spend and be spent for others?" "Mrs. So-and-so does it and she is my ideal." Beware! "I watched Mr. So-and-so and I want to be like him." Beware! God grant we may see that the great need of every worker is a first-hand acquaintance with Jesus Christ which puts to death the spirit of ambition. Ambition has murder at its heart; our Lord showed His disciples that ambition is impossible in His kingdom, "Except ye . . . become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven" (RV). Our attitude is to be one of steadfast personal devotion to Jesus Christ, not measuring ourselves by ourselves, and comparing ourselves with ourselves. Among the last words Mr. Reader Harris¹¹ wrote was this phrase—"Don't imitate." That means far more than mere external imitation, it means in the deep spiritual sense what I am trying to bring before you now—don't try and do something for God because somebody else is doing it. Oh, the amount of instigation in God's work that comes along that line!

Mark one more thing. Peter said to Ananias, "Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God." Christian worker, how much time are you giving to prayer, to reading your Bible? "Oh, I am giving all the time I can." Be careful that you are not lying to the Holy Ghost. Pentecostal lying begins in this way, dragging down the intense holiness of God which keeps a man right with God in every detail of his life. Let us examine ourselves the next time we say, "I have not time," or, "I give all the time I can to the study of God's Word, I give all the time I can to praying." God grant we may be put on the alert on these lines that we may not be found lying to the Holy Ghost. May these words come with warning and with scrutiny and bring our souls face to face with God.

And now holy discipleship. "But of the rest durst no man join himself to them" (RV). I wonder, Christian worker, if we realise what we are doing when we ask a man to give himself to Jesus Christ, do we know what we are telling him to do? We are telling him to kill for ever his right to himself, we are telling him that he has to be holy, chaste to the last recess of his bodily life. If ever that word needed thundering in Christian work it needs thundering to-day, chastity in bodily life. You cannot have holiness without a chaste physical life. Oh, the sapping of the power of God because of unchaste men and women who preach His Gospel. God grant that the touch of God may startle and amaze any self-indulgent man or woman. May we remember the next time we go forth to speak for God that our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost. Immediately we realise this and bind ourselves to those who realise the same truth, God will begin to do His marvels in saving men unto Himself. So many of us are being caught up by the benedictions that fall on the crowd outside. The crowd outside will magnify the power of God, but none of those who are not right with God dare join them. If any Christian worker wants to get the strong grip of iron into his soul and into his work for God, let him read the Acts of the Apostles. The power of those holy workers checked impostors on the right hand and on the left. A Holy Ghost movement always brings impostors, parasites, by the legion. The only safeguard for the Christian worker is, "Holiness unto the Lord." If we are living rightly with God, living holy lives in secret and in public, God puts a wall of fire round about us. Beware of calling anything holiness that is only winsome and sweet to the world. God grant we may never lose the touch of God that produces the holy dread.

^{11.} Reader Harris (1847–1909): prominent British barrister, founded the Pentecostal League of Prayer in 1891; friend and mentor of Oswald Chambers.

Now we come to our last point. This holy discipleship will result in multitudes being added to the Lord. "And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women." Is not that what we want, multitudes added to the Lord? How is it to be done? By captivating addresses? Mrs. Howard Hooker reminded us the other night when speaking of her father, that his preaching was always on the line of sanctification; a great many people could not stand it and consequently went away. It has always been the same and always will be. When once the holiness of God is manifested in human lives and in preaching (and the two go together), these two things happen: a great number durst not join themselves, and multitudes are added to the Lord. Never think that the blessing and benediction of God on the outside crowd is all. It is a mere fringe. Men and women are blessed, their bodies are healed, devils are turned out; but the point is that multitudes of those who believe are added to the Lord.

God grant that we may stand steadfastly true to Him and live this holy life. As we go forth tonight, let us remember Jesus Christ's commission, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and make disciples of [RV] all the nations." As we examine our hearts before God let us renew our covenant with Him.

Publication History

- As articles: This material was first published as thirteen articles in the Bible Training Course (BTC) Monthly Journal,² between April 1941 and March 1944.
- This material has never been published in book form until now.

In January 1912, Oswald Chambers began teaching Isaiah in his biblical theology class at the Bible Training College, London. During the next three years, he covered the Four Great Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel) as part of his Old Testament survey course.

Mrs. Chambers apparently did not take detailed notes of these lectures as she did with other classes. As lady superintendent of the College, she had a myriad of daily responsibilities for students and the college operation. In later terms, she taught her own class in Scripture memory. In May 1913, she gave birth to their only child, Kathleen,³ making it even more difficult to attend all of Oswald's classes and record the lectures in shorthand.

The fact that Mrs. Chambers' notes were abbreviated most likely led to her decision not to publish them in book form.

^{1.} The Bible Training College (BTC) was a residential school near Clapham Common in southwest London. It was sponsored by the League of Prayer and operated from 1911 until it closed in July 1915 because of World War I. Oswald Chambers was principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers, his wife, was lady superintendent.

^{3.} Kathleen Chambers (1913-97) was the only child of Oswald and Biddy Chambers.

FOREWORD

A Series of Notes on the great evangelical Prophet Isaiah by Oswald Chambers begins in this number of the Journal. They will extend through this new volume. They are in the nature of a first draft following a very close study of the subject and so are not carried to that completed stage which was probably intended. But gems of great beauty abound in them, and truths of deepest significance for us, as for those of Isaiah's time, are made clear. The Outlines sometimes cover more ground than the comments following exhaust. Lovers of the Word of God will value them and find continual help in searching the Scriptures—that we may find Him.

As a groundwork of his own studies O. C. was able to discern and use the rare scholarship behind such Commentators as Dr. George Adam Smith⁴ though he did not accept their "critical" positions, such as the Deutero-Isaiah in chapters 40–66. Here is a note on that very subject. "The Book of Isaiah is the field the Higher Critics have torn up with their hooves; the one reason is an inveterate suspicion of anything to do with belief in the Mind of God. The only mind for the author of the Bible is the Mind of God, and the only Interpreter is the Spirit of God."

Yet he recognised, as I heard him once say, that Dr. G. A. Smith showed a marvellous insight into the moral and spiritual significance of Isaiah's prophecy. Therefore, on occasion, he would quote him and accept some of his illuminating remarks.

We shall find in these Notes deep fundamental things, well worth our careful study and appropriation.

NOTES ON ISAIAH

INTRODUCTORY

And after that with wonder rose in me
Strange speech of early prophets, and a tale
First learnt and last forgotten, song that fell
With worship from the lonely Israelites,
Simeon and Anna; for these twain as one
Fast by the altar and in the courts of God
Led a long age in fair expectancy.
And all these pointed forward, and I knew
That each was prophet and singer and sire and seer.
That each was priest and mother and maid and king,
With longing for the babe of Nazareth,
For that man-child who should be born and reign.

We have to acquire the habit of brooding on what the prophets uttered. Brooding is exalted, excessive attention.

There is a difference between exegetical interpretation and spiritual interpretation. The danger of spiritual interpretation is that we interpret in the light of our own experience, consequently there can be many spiritual interpretations. When we come to these prophetic visions we come to something we have never experienced. The modern mind won't have it that there is anything supernatural in the visions; the reason for that is an inveterate prejudice against the supernatural; an incurable suspicion which will not allow that the Mind of God is other than the mind of a man. The great inspiring Mind behind the prophets and the apostles is not an ingenious human mind, but the Mind of Almighty God. "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter 1:21).

The spirit of a man is his personality, his soul is that personality trying to express itself in rational words and ideas. The Spirit of God coming into the prophets and the apostles takes the ideas they have formed by contact with the world and brings them into a new combination of which God alone is the Author. That is why the expression is not the same; individuality is marked, e.g., Isaiah is different from Ezekiel, John from Paul; there is the same Mind behind, but not the same ideas.

Never imagine that the prophets had a perfectly clear plan as to what they prophesied; the Spirit of God made them prophesy infinitely more than they knew. We know so much from the New Testament that the prophets did not know at all. The prophets speak with all the blood and passion of their natures; they do not stand off like a superior authority, they are wrapped up in their prophecy. Notice the identification of the prophet with the life of his time; we gather our spiritual skirts from touching the life of the time we are in. These men did not, they stood for God in every condition of things. The prophets pre-figure Jesus Christ in an even more marvellous way than the ritual of the Old Testament.

The Bible is a record of facts that actually occurred and the Spirit of God makes them the symbol of something other which we only discern as we rely on Him. Our own lives illustrate this, as we look back we realise that the incidents have been connected by a Hand behind. We imagine that if we could order the history of our lives according to a mathematical system everything would be all right, but the providence of God makes our lives higgledy-piggledy, twisting round anyhow, the reason being that He is bringing out His purpose in His own way. Leave your life alone; you cannot alter history, and you cannot alter life; see that you maintain a right attitude to God, let come what will. What we are apt to call interruptions are God's way of introducing us to a new knowledge of Himself.

God will never have us follow Him blindly, He won't amaze us, He won't dazzle us with sudden floods of light. He breaks His revelation bit by bit as we will accept it. The appeal made by Jesus Christ is His character, His truth and His beauty, every man's conscience when he sees Him says, That Man is right. There is nothing of the nature of the superstitious. The supernatural power of Satan never reasons, it appeals to man's superstition, not to his conscience.

When we begin to work for God there is any amount of crude harsh sternness about us, and we have the word of God for it, but slowly and surely through the discipline of life we begin to come to another aspect of those same statements. When we understand how God is dealing with us, He takes us where we can understand His dealing with the world outside.

THE PROPHETIC VISION

Isaiah 1

The vision of Isaiah the son of Amoz, which he saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem. . . . Isaiah 1:1

Yea, Lord, I know it, teach me yet anew With what a fierce and patient purity I must confront the horror of the world. For very little space on either hand Parts the sane mind from madness;

I would I never may be left of thee,
O God, my God, in whatsoever ill;
Be present while thou strikest, thus shall grow
At least a solemn patience with the pain;—
When thou art gone what is there in the world
Seems not dishonoured, desperate with sin?

1. God Is Nigh

Whenever the people of God disobey God in any particular, God's judgements are severe. There seems to be a peculiar disproportion about God's judgements: "My people doth not consider." God's judgement on wrong is inevitable, but it is not inevitable to the individual; it depends on the individual whether he escapes the judgement. There is no law to make a man go wrong saving himself; there is no law to keep a man right saving himself. There is no such thing as fate; a human being always has the power to do the incalculable thing. There are fatal issues, but not fate. When God's decrees come to pass it is because men will not turn. God's will is supreme, but God never fights against us; it is self-will that fights against God. When the Spirit of God is at work in him a man lets God's will overcome, there is no fight, it is a higher power easily overcoming. If I view anything as inevitable with regard to any human being I am unbeliever. I have no right to have anything less than the hope and the belief of Jesus Christ with regard to the worst and most hopeless of men.

2. God Is Love

When the Bible says "God is love" it means what it says, but remember that the love of God is exhibited on a cruel cross. The love of God cannot make room for sin or self-interest, therefore the appeal of the love of God is not that of kindness and gentleness, but of holiness. If you take the natural view of the love of God you will become atheistic. If God were love according to our natural view of love He ought never to cause us pain, He ought to allow us to be peaceful; but the first thing God does is to cause us pain and to rouse us wide awake. He comes into our lives all along with ideals and truths which annoy and sting us and break up our rest, until He brings us to the one point, that it is only moral and spiritual relationships which last. That is why God looks cruel judged from the human sentimental standpoint; He loves us so much that He will not prevent us being hurt.

God will never allow any of us to rest in a sleep of conscience, He will reason with us and rouse us, and then He will give us a "clearing house" for conscience. The doctrines of salvation that ignore the love of God as revealed to a man's conscience are false because they do not tell us how our guilty conscience is to be cleansed. The "clearing house" which God grants to us through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ is intercession. We enter into a roused relationship with God through the Atonement, and then we are put in the place where we can repair the damage we have done to other lives. No matter what our spiritual experiences may be, if we are in danger of forgetting what we owe in intercession to the lives we damaged before we got right with God, the Holy Spirit will bring it back to us-"Remember that person, that relationship." Many a life is paralysed because this is not realised—"I know God has forgiven me, I know I am right with God, but every now and again I remember the things I did that damaged other lives." If I put the wrong right with my fellow men, have I become right with God? No, get right with God and He will put you on the way to be right with your fellow men. When people are being roused by the Holy Spirit they always want to confess to you; never allow them to. It is not confession to men that is required but the confession of a guilty conscience to God.

Mental repentance means an altered point of view. Have I altered my point of view with regard to service of God? The Almighty is not going to allow His people to be unconscious hypocrites, He is not going to allow them to pray and worship while all the time their moral nature is asleep. "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto Me? saith the LORD." Before any sacrifice or service can be acceptable to God it must be the outcome of a reasoning together with God. Have I ever thought what my salvation and my sanctification mean from God's standpoint?

3. God Is High

Immediately we are born again God puts upon us a condition which was never there before, viz., that of holiness. A born-again soul is condemned to holiness; he is not at liberty to do what he likes but only what God likes, a "bondslave of Jesus"; my relationship to God first, second and third and all the time. The modern note is that we have sinned against this one and that one: every sin we commit against another is a sin against God, and the Bible brings us face to face with God. Can my salvation stand the glaring light of God? Can my relationship with my fellow men stand the light of God? It has got to one day. That is the way the Spirit of God rouses us up to see that there is no refuge in anything or anyone other than Himself. The whole life must be established in God. The one thing that keeps us right is walking in the light of the great High God. We have to be as open and above board in every relationship of our lives as Nature is. The first thing that happens to an artificial religious life is that it wants to be a little out of keeping with the intense purity of Nature.

NOTES ON ISAIAH

THE PAINFUL PATH TO POWER

Isaiah 6

His face is glorious with a beam Unborrowed from our earthly skies, The radiance of a heavenly dream Is on his brow and in his eyes, And in his breast the unconquered heart That fails not when his brethren fail, That sees his earliest friends depart One after one and doth not quail.

One after one they go, the bold Companions of his dwindling band, For under stormy skies and cold Their march is, through a barren land. And some their earlier faith deride (For man is man and seeks his own), Till the last straggler leaves his side, And the worn pilgrim walks alone.

Edward Sydney Tylee

This chapter is a record of the experience Isaiah went through before entering on his prophetical ministry. Isaiah is his own remembrancer. It is easy to forget the love of our espousals, to be so taken up with Christian work that we forget after a while what God has done for us. We have to keep the call of God alive, and continually recall to our minds what we are here for. This process will reveal at once whether the soul has had any personal history with God. There is no danger of spiritual retrogression if we will keep in mind the times, one or more, when the Spirit of God has touched us.

God intends us to be reserved over His revelations, but we are rarely allowed to be reserved about ourselves. God can make a man so one with Himself that he never thinks of being reserved because he does not take himself into account. Here Isaiah is being led by the Spirit of God to give his own experience, proving thereby that he is God's man, spoilt for everything else but loyalty to God. The making of a prophet is along this line. The proof that the Spirit of God is at work in me is that I am willing to testify to what God has done; that is always the evidence of a supernatural element at work.

1. The Price of Vision

In the year that king Uzziah died . . . (see 2 Kings 15:1–4; 2 Chronicles 26:16–23)

God's dates are not man's. God seems to pay no attention to our calendars; He has a calendar of His own in which He suddenly surprises a man in the midst of his days. Leave room for God. We expect God only on special days, in particular meetings; that is not God's way. He comes suddenly, at midnight or at noonday. We learn to trace our history by the rare moments in which we find out who we are and where we are tending. There are moments

Sure, tho' seldom, . . .
When the spirit's true endowments
Stand out plainly from its false ones. . . .

Robert Browning

Isaiah chronicles his time by these moments.

The history of our soul with God is frequently that of the passing of the hero. Over and over again God removes our friends in order to bring Himself in their place, and that is where we faint and fail and get discouraged. Take it personally—"In the year that the one who stood for God to me died"—"I gave up everything?" "I became ill?" or—"I saw also the Lord"?

My vision of God depends upon the state of my character. Character determines revelation. Before I can say "I saw also the Lord" there must be something corresponding to God in my character. Until I am born again and enter into the Kingdom of God I see only along the line of my prejudices; I need the surgical operation of external events and an internal purification. It must be God first, God second and God third, until the life is faced steadily with God and no one else is of any account. "In all the world there is none but thee, my God, there is none but thee." Let God see that you are willing to live up to the vision; keep paying the price. "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision," says the Apostle Paul. Am I obeying the vision, or only beginning to dole out the price of it?

2. The Purging of the Prophet's Perception

I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and His train filled the temple.

The purpose of the vision is to enable me to see "the arm of the LORD" behind all circumstances (see Isaiah 53:1). God never gives a man the power to say "I see" until his character proves itself worthy of its purification. What hinders the purging of our perception is that we will build our faith on our experiences instead of on the God who gave us the experiences. My experience is the evidence of my faith, never the ground of it, and is meant to reveal to me a God who is bigger than any experience. In the case of Isaiah we are dealing with a prophet in the Presence of God (cf. Revelation 1:17–18). Have I seen also the Lord, and do I know that He is holy?

3. The Platform of the Vision

... sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and His train filled the temple.

If my worship is consumed in the glory of the Lord till that is the one thing left in my mind, I have come to the right place of vision. In the Old Testament the idea of God's holiness is that of aloofness and separateness, the sublimity of God. No un-holiness can ever stand before God, therefore if God is going to bring man into fellowship with Himself He has to reinstate him in every particular. Anything that belittles or obliterates the holiness of God by a false view of the love of God is untrue to the revelation given by Jesus Christ.

In this prophet we have a marvellous picture of the Atonement.

4. The Presence and the Perfected Praise

Above it stood the seraphims. . . . And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the LORD of hosts: the whole earth is full of His glory. (Isaiah 6:2–3)

When the veil is lifted, instead of seeing the Ark, Isaiah sees the Lord; instead of the usual Temple ritual, he hears the praise of sinless beings, and with a rush his own sinfulness and the sin of his people heads itself up on one particular point: "Then said I, Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips. . . ." Isaiah went through the crisis of face-to-face contact with God and the effect of the vision of God's holiness was to bring home to him that he was a man of unclean lips, i.e. the expression of his nature was pernicious. He not only confesses his own sin but identities himself with the sin of his people—"and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips."

Our Lord said "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." But remember when it is that our speech reveals what is in our heart, viz., when we are brought to a sudden crisis and the whole nature expresses itself. The majority of us are much too cunning to express what is in our heart until we are brought to a crisis, then the true state of our heart is out instantly. A crisis will always reveal the condition of our heart because it makes us express ourselves. The Spirit of God convicts us by focusing our mind on one particular point, there is never any vague sense of sin, and if we will yield to His conviction He will lead us down to the disposition of sin underneath. That is always the way God deals with us when we are consciously in His presence.

5. The Process of the Vision

Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand, ... and he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged. (Isaiah 6:6–7)

There is nothing between God and Isaiah now. The fire expiates his guilt at the very spot where he is convicted of his personal sin. Second Corinthians 5:21 ("For He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him") states what God makes to transpire in every soul who is identified with Jesus: there is a moral agreement with God's verdict on sin in the Cross and we experience the expiation of our sin through the marvel of His substitution for us on the Cross. All the Old Testament ritual and the presentation of truth by the prophets is blended in one marvellous Personality, the Lord Jesus Christ, and by the "new and living way, which He has consecrated" any one of us can enter into the holiest, with no ceremonial in between, no intermediary—God and my own soul brought face to face in Jesus Christ. The only sacrifice which we as sinners have to bring is a contrite heart, "Nothing in my hands I bring. . . . "What happens then is that the whole life is given over to God for His service. When once the application of the sacrifice of Christ has been made it is the essence of pain to use the life for any other purpose than for Him (see Colossians 1:24). The symbol of the live coal "from off the altar" represents the twofold nature of the substitution of Christ, not only Christ for me, but Christ in me. This is the key to the Apostle Paul's teaching of identification, not the sacrifice of the body of Christ at a distance, but my identification with that sacrifice so that the Atonement is made efficacious in me and God can indwell me as He indwelt His Son.

6. The Programme after the Vision

God did not address the call to Isaiah; Isaiah overheard God saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for Us?" God did not lay a strong compulsion on Isaiah; Isaiah was in the presence of God and realised that there was nothing else for him to do but say, in conscious freedom, "Here am I; send me." If we will let the Spirit of God bring us face to face with God we too shall hear something akin to what Isaiah heard, the still, small voice of God, and in perfect freedom say, "Here am I; send me." We have to get out of our minds the idea of expecting God to come with compulsion and pleadings. When Our Lord called His disciples there was no irresistible compulsion from outside; the quiet, passionate insistence of His "Follow Me" was spoken to men with every power wide awake.

There is one fact more about Isaiah which must always be borne in mind, and that is he not only heard God's call but he understood the nature of God who gave the call. It is not sufficient to say "God reigns" we must know the nature of the God who reigns. Isaiah stood unperturbed because he knew God. Isaiah had been disillusioned about himself and about the people of God, there is not a single prop left; in this respect he comes nearest to the attitude of Jesus Christ who would not commit Himself to men because "He knew what was in man."

What is true of the great prophets is true in our own little world. After we have had the vision of God and have had a time alone with Him we are plunged straight away into appalling affairs, when either all we have learned is absolutely swamped, or else we emerge exactly in accordance with the vision God gave. God only gives us visions of Himself for one purpose, that we may work them out into character. When once you have had the vision of God, or the experience of sanctification, you will be put into places where everything is as unlike God as the world, the flesh and the devil can make it, and you have to be there not to criticise, but to stand true to God in the centre of it all, and be crushed by the things that are not of God. The natural tendency is to withdraw; when God wants to withdraw His children, He does it (see 1 Peter 4:12–13). After God has given us a time of face-to-face contact with Himself and then puts us into tumults, the temptation is to sit down and say "Where is the blessedness I had when first I knew the Lord?" The Spirit of God holds us steady until we learn to know God, and the details of our lives are established before Him, then nothing on the outside can move us. God can rely on the man or woman to whom He has given the vision of Himself. Some of us are rushing on at such a headlong pace in Christian organisation, we want to vindicate God's character in a great revival, but if God did give us a revival we would be the first to forget Him and swing off on some false fire. When once we know Him we can stand wherever He puts us.

THROUGH THE SHADOW OF AN AGONY COMETH REDEMPTION

Isaiah 8-11

Thou! if thou wast He, who at mid-watch came, By the starlight, naming a dubious name! And if, too heavy with sleep—too rash With fear—O Thou, if that martyr-gash Fell on Thee coming to take thine own, And we gave the Cross, when we owed the Throne—Thou art the Judge. We are bruised thus. But, the Judgement over, join sides with us! Thine too is the cause! and not more thine Than ours, is the work of these dogs and swine, Whose life laughs through and spits at their creed! Who maintain Thee in word, and defy Thee in deed!

Robert Browning

It is characteristic of the prophecies of Isaiah that just when he is summing up the sins of the people and you should imagine that God was going to denounce them, there comes a ray of light in the darkness, e.g. Isaiah 9:1–2: "they that dwelt in the land of deep darkness, upon them hath the light shined" (RV mg).

There is a danger in trying to trace out God's way where He has not revealed it. Our experiences of God are simply part of the revelation of God Himself. The great line of God's revelation has never altered, and when individuals and nations leave their experiences and remain true to God, they find the revelation goes on all the time. God did not give a progressive revelation of Himself through the Old Testament: the people progressively grasped the revelation, which is very different. For instance, God knew when He told Abraham to offer up Isaac for a burnt offering that Abraham would interpret it to mean he was to kill his son. God can only reveal His will according to the state of a man's character and his traditional belief. Abraham had to be brought to the last limit of the tradition he held about God before God could give him its right meaning. Abraham had to have his faith purified, i.e., to have it stripped of every tradition he held until he stood face to face with God and understood His mind, and Abraham is the father of the faithful.

Isaiah is speaking as he is "moved by the Holy Ghost," and he portrays a character neither he nor anyone else had ever seen. The Mind of God alone knows the Being Isaiah is portraying. The remarkable thing is that when Jesus Christ comes, every one of the things the prophets have been saying fit in with one Personality, the Being whom we know as the Lord Jesus Christ. Isaiah never saw Jesus Christ, he could not have imagined Him, then what inspired him? the very Mind of God (see 1 Peter 2:20).

"The zeal of the LORD of hosts will perform this" (Isaiah 9:7). The meaning of the word "zeal" is a mixture of hot anger and affection. Jealousy in its good sense comes near the meaning, it is that overflow of love that cannot keep still, when men think God has surely done all He will do and can do for an ungrateful race, He visits them in their distress and carries them forward into His desired haven for them. God Almighty is ever gracious in His promises, He does not only fulfil His promises, He over-fulfils them. In our Lord's parable of the two sons, the love of the father for the elder brother staggers religious calculations about the love of God.

(See 2 Kings 18–19.) According to Isaiah, the rulers of the people are the expression of the life and ambition of the people. We fix on the mountain-peak characters and say they are to blame, but God holds the people themselves responsible also. The people are never exonerated for having bad rulers; the reason they have bad rulers is that they are bad people. Those who rule the people do not autocratically crush them, the people are their inspirers; they are the rulers the people deserve. The man of God has to vicariously take on himself the suffering under the providential order of tyranny. Isaiah was right in the midst of it all, yet he stood like a rock, perfectly confident in God, and let the onslaught of tyranny do its worst (cf. John 19:10–11).

The paralysing effect of brute force was making the people lose their faith in God. Isaiah found King Ahaz wanting, he found the people of God wanting, but he does not have the idea that the nation is going to hell; he gathers together the remnant that stands true, and the hope persistently crops up, born in him by the Spirit of God, that what God has shown him in vision will yet be fulfilled, and the nation be one with God.

The things dominantly in force to-day are the characteristics of Assyria. Fear is apt to make us atheistic and in our outlook we enthrone the devil, not God. God is behind it all, not a thing happens but He knows all about it. When the tyrannizers crow and think they have the right by their own power, suddenly the message of God comes—"Wherefore it shall come to pass, that when the Lord hath performed His whole work upon mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks . . ." (Isaiah 10:12).

Isaiah 11

"And the spirit of the LORD shall rest upon Him, . . . and He shall be of quick understanding [mg] in the fear of the LORD" (RV), literally, "He shall draw His breath in the fear of the LORD" (Isaiah 11:2–3). The only way we can breathe the atmosphere of the fear of the Lord is by being born from above (RV mg) of the Spirit of God, then we find that Jesus Christ is our moral open air. The hymn has the idea—

Prayer is the Christian's vital breath, The Christian's native air. . . .

James Montgomery

The Personality Isaiah is describing has definitely clear characteristics, He produces His own atmosphere. Just as sea and mountain air form the open air to our physical life, so Jesus Christ is the moral atmosphere for our spiritual life, and if we try to draw our breath from any other source we instantly get diseased. By prayer and communion with God we live out in God's moral open air, consequently we can live in the cities and amongst the places of men and maintain the life which is in accordance with the Messiah's life Isaiah is referring to—the only thing is that in the practical domain of Christian ethics we forget to do it! The enemy of our souls goes for all he is worth against our praying, against our solitudes with God, he tries to prevent us drawing our breath in the fear of the Lord. The great need is to bring every thought and imagination into captivity to the obedience of Christ until every bit of our nature is reconstructed, and we manifest the reconstruction as we draw on the same Source as the Messiah drew from, viz., God.

Isaiah 11:6–9. Isaiah is forecasting what is going to be through the Redemption: everything that has been touched by the consequences of man's sin will be put absolutely right by God. The point to note is that the mediator in all this is man himself—"For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." The order is—For God our worship; for man our service; for the creature our providence through the meditation of holiness. Everything that has partaken of the curse is to be absolutely reinstated by Jesus Christ.

"And the wolf shall dwell with the lamb. . . . They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea" (RV). The lower creation was not in antipathy to human beings until they learned to suspect them. This is proved by Darwin's experiments and in isolated experiences such as St. Francis of Assisi.

THE TRIBULATION OF NATIONS

Isaiah 13-23

... the day of the LORD is at hand. Isaiah 13:6

The Day of the Lord is at hand, at hand: The storms roll up the sky; The nations sleep starving on heaps of gold: All dreamers toss and sigh; The night is darkest before the morn, When the pain is the sorest, the child is born, And the Day of the Lord is at hand.

Charles Kingsley⁷

Every day is somebody's day, not a day that we prepare but a day prepared for us. Herod's "convenient day" came. It dawns quietly and ordinarily like any other day, then suddenly something happens and it is marked as either the blackest or the brightest day. If it is the blackest day it is God bringing you to the place where there streams up over your head the trend of your character unseen before. It is these moments we live for, the rest we trifle away; when they come there is no illusion left, we know as clear as a sunbeam whether we are going "or the right way, the wrong way, to our triumph or undoing." It depends on what use we make of the doom days whether we are in a right or wrong relationship at the final doomsday. God does not leave a man with a "ghastly smooth life, dead at heart"; God's convicting days are His mercies preparing us for the final Doomsday. God gives doom days to nations as well as to individuals. This dispensation is man's day when he can do exactly as he likes, and we are doing it; we are allowed absolute liberty for a time. If you want a mirror of how God is dealing with the world at large, watch your own private history with Him.

It is necessary to guard our spirit when we read the Bible. For instance, it is possible to credit God with a personal vindictiveness that belongs to the devil; as if God were saying to the nations through Isaiah, "You have withstood Me and slandered Me, you have done everything you could against My people, but now the time has come when I will grind you to powder and obliterate you from off the face of the earth." Or take Our Lord's words, "How can ye escape the damnation of hell?" Who was it spoke them? The One who died on Calvary. Behind the words is an unfathomable sadness that even God Himself cannot save them from perdition. The idea is not that God in great triumphal power is going to ignore every other nation, but rather that through the first-born people of God all the other nations are to come to know Him. It is perilously possible to credit God with our prejudices, even after we are sanctified. We make hell out to be a place for the venting of our spleen, not for the working of the justice of God. God never justifies our spleen.

Isaiah's message needs to come home to us today, viz., that God is behind the devil, not the devil behind God; all the great world forces are in front of God, and they cannot do a thing without His permission. To-day we are so emphasising the freedom of the human will that we are forgetting the sovereignty of God, consequently when we come up against the forces at work in the world we are paralysed by fear and get into despair, which we need never have done if we had been built up in faith in God. Never minimise what you don't understand, and never knuckle under to the world forces; stand strong in faith in God—"I don't understand this, but I know God is behind it." Weigh the force and stand true to God at all costs. Too often we rush in where angels fear to tread. Let God place you by His providence where He will, the tendency is to "wobble" out of it—"I would rather stand for God somewhere else." We have the idea that we ought to separate ourselves from the world and its enterprises; that is foreign to Isaiah and to Our Lord (see John 17:15). We are to be in the world while not of it, and to denounce by lip and life the things that are wrong.

The world forces referred to in these chapters are not foreign to us, they are at our very doors to-day—civilisation, being pushed under the guise of Christianity; communism, socialistic blether full of all kinds of promise; and commercialism, binding every nation under heaven into one. Isaiah faced these forces fearlessly, and we have to do the same. There is no cowardice about Isaiah or about his message. He never lost his faith in God or got discouraged, and when the things he foretold happened, he did not desert the people.

The LORD hath founded Zion, and in her shall the afflicted of His people take refuge" (Isaiah 14:32 RV). Just as Zion is spoken of as the central place of safety for the nations, so the only safe place for the saint, and it is as safe as God Himself, is the secret place of the Most High, abiding under the shadow of the Almighty (cf. Psalm 125:1-2). The same great majestic note is brought out in Psalm 46-"Therefore will not we fear, though . . ." It is the grand position got from the great God. Behind everything stands God; behind the tumult and the confusion God is bringing out everything according to His will. The great thing about faith in God is that it keeps a man undisturbed in the midst of disturbance. Every now and again God lets loose the hounds of hell all around you, and if you are His child, indwelt by His Spirit, you will experience the truth that Isaiah proclaims, viz., that all the forces outside you are futile because they are less powerful than the indwelling of God (see 1 John 4:4). No matter what may be the clanging of forceful interests all around, the work of God's grace stands true in His servants. Discouragement comes when we say what God will do-that God will always keep me healthy, that He will always be bringing me into the land of Canaan where I will eat honey; well, He won't. God is concerned about only one thing, viz., getting me into a personal relationship with Himself. There is no possibility of discouragement if we will only remember that this is the relationship, not God's blessings, but Himself. Beware of the modern craze for healing, it is Satan's opportunity to switch the saints off the central thing. A thing may have its source in Jesus Christ and yet easily turn traitor to Him once it becomes divorced from Himself. If Satan cannot switch the saints off on false fire, he will switch them off on anything that is less than the central thing. The central thing is the life hid with Christ in God where we can stand by the grace of God where this prophet stood, true to God and to God's aspect of things, letting other things shift as they may. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth" (Luke 12:15); it consists only in what he is. All our judgements of God, and our mis-judgements, are based on our own point of view, not on Jesus Christ's. Am I cultured in the iron tonic of the Bible? Have I really got incorporated into my faith the certainty that God will never allow anything to last that is not godly?

The whole experiment of the human race from God's standpoint is the overthrow of the devil, not by God—the devil is no match for God—but by man. God is going to overthrow the arrogance of the devil by a being less than Himself, viz., by man, that is why God became Incarnate. There is only one expression of God's attitude to the devil and that is Calvary.

The Spirit of Jesus conflicts with the things we esteem highest. It is impossible to carry out the principles of the Sermon on the Mount and have success. The mark of the beast is here already, and it will grow clearer before the man of sin is revealed (see 2 Thessalonians 2). It is slighting no one to say that prosperity in this order of things along with godliness is impossible, and growingly more impossible.

The destruction of every civilisation there has ever been has come about through a force for which the civilisation had a contempt.

We estimate by what a man possesses; God's only concern is what a man is. There is only one thing that will endure and that is personality, no possessions, no pretence, nothing in the way of what men call greatness will last. All the rest is trappings; in their right place, great and good trappings, but Satan wants to keep our minds on them. Holiness in character is the only thing that will remain. Some of us will have a spiritual character so microscopic that it will take the archangels to find it! The majority of us are bound up in the show of things, and when the stern dark lines of God's truth come we say it is harsh. It is the true strain only we cannot hear it aright unless we are where the prophet Isaiah was—standing with God behind the show of things, consequently he is imperturbable, he never got into a panic.

It would be a liberal education to go through the Bible unbiased by convictions. Stop exploiting the Bible to back up a particular doctrine and let the Bible bring you into its own atmosphere and you will find that instruction is clear and emphatic regarding every phase of life there is. If Satan as an angel of light can limit and bind us to our own particular experiences he will succeed in keeping us from an understanding of the Mind of God. The great need for the saint is to get his brains at work on the Word of God, otherwise he will stagnate, no matter how much he may name the Name of God.

NOTES ON ISAIAH

ISAIAH 24–26

1. The Mysterious Inevitableness of Sin (Isaiah 24)

Behold, the LORD maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof. . . . The earth also is polluted under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. (Isaiah 24:1, 5)

The Bible reveals that the material world has been blighted by reason of man's sin. The connection between man's sin and the material universe is indelible, the connection is made by God. The great truth which runs all through God's Book and takes clearer features in the New Testament is that the material universe and the moral universe are from the same Hand. Man was intended by God to govern Nature (see Genesis 1:26); instead, he has infected it with his sin and it has become a partaker of the curse with him, so that "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now."

Men say "We are going to build a holy city on this earth"—you cannot; the earth is infected, it is a diseased chamber, and the holy city will never be on it until God has purged it with fire and taken the epidemic out of it. The Bible says that the holy city is going to come down from above (see Revelation 21:2). God cannot bring in the Millennium by moral renovation, but only by cremation, by burning all the infected rubbish out. Beware of saying that God is too kind and loving to do that; we have to read God's love in the light of His character, and He is absolutely just and holy.

Sin infects matter although it is not in matter, and this has given rise to the old pagan idea that sin is in the flesh. Sin is a disposition which rules human nature, but it is not in human nature. The things Our Lord mentions as proceeding, "from within, out of the heart of men," are all connected with the physical life (see Mark 7:20–23); and when Paul speaks of the outcome of indwelling sin he connects it with the physical life (see Colossians 3:5). We have no standing before God physically, morally or spiritually; the only way we can ever stand before God is through the Atonement. It is truths like this that enable us to understand the meaning of the Cross. Sin has infected the material universe as well as human nature, and both must be cleansed and purged. If I can see how it works in my individual life I will see how it works in the world at large.

We infect all we possess by what we are. This principle is brought out all through. If I indent myself on any place, my study for instance, as being lazy, that place will take its revenge on me every time I enter it by making me feel lazy. The opposite is also true, if I have made my study a place of stern industry it will act upon me as an inspiration every time I go into it. Nearly every man and woman has a blighted place somewhere, blighted not by someone else but by themselves, by their relationship to someone else in that particular place. Where is it you feel most tested physically? You will find it is in the place where you have been peculiarly mean in days gone by. If we are irritable at home it is because we have been in the habit of being mean there, and when we come into the same situation the meanness shows itself in irritability of nerves. There is a great deal said rightly and wrongly about the power of circumstances over a man; circumstances have a stupendous power, but unless we realise that Jesus Christ undertakes for a man's circumstances as well as for the removal of the disposition of sin, we shall never experience all the benefits which come through the Atonement. "Wherefore if any man is in Christ, he is a new creature: the old things are passed away"; not only sin, but the whole old order of things; "behold, they are become new" (RV).

2. The Vision of Resurrection (Isaiah 25–26)

The great note of the Bible revelation is not immortality but Resurrection. The doctrine of the Resurrection is that something comes from God Himself direct into the dust of death. Dust is the symbol of death—"Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust"

(Isaiah 26:19 RV). A dead body retains the look of life, but touch it, and it is gone; God will bring it the "dew of light [mg] and the earth shall cast forth the dead" (RV). The Resurrection is the manifestation of the direct power of God, not the manifestation of inherent life. The Bible always goes back to God; books about "the implicit promise of immortality" go into vague hopes—"Because I have so many hopes that cannot be realised in this life, it would be unjust if there were no life after death." That is not Christianity; Christianity is centred in the power of God, and the resurrection is the direct work of the sovereign God—nothing between God and a dead body. "Thy dead shall live; my dead bodies shall arise." When the Apostle Paul wants to measure the power of God in our lives he uses the illustration of the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead (Romans 8:11; Ephesians 1:19-20, etc.).

To-day people prefer to talk about the implicit promise of immortality rather than the resurrection. Probably the most amazing writer on the theme of immortality was Dr. F. W. H. Myers, he was a poet of the first order and he became a scientist in order to try and prove his intuitions; he wrote a book entitled Human Personality and the Survival of the Body after Death. The whole of his argument ends where it begins, in intuition; you cannot prove an implicit intuition. Men try to make out that the idea of the resurrection is something that occurred naturally to the human mind; it is a revelation, granted by God to His own people. "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead" (1 Corinthians 15:21). "He hath swallowed up death for ever. . . . And it shall be said in that day, Lo this is our God; . . . we have waited for Him, we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation" (Isaiah 25:8-9 RV).

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind [imagination, RV mg] is stayed on Thee: because he trusteth in Thee" (Isaiah 26:3). Undisciplined imagination is the greatest disturber not only of growth in grace, but of spiritual sanity.

NOTES ON ISAIAH

ISAIAH 27-29

1. The Day of Jehovah's Judgements (Isaiah 27)

Let him take hold of My strength, that he may make peace with Me. (Isaiah 27:5)

The judgements of God are for another purpose than the vindictive spirit of man would like to make out. It was this that gave Jonah the sulks with the Almighty, and the same spirit is seen in the elder brother—jealous of God's generosity to others. You never find that spirit in the prophets; if there is destruction and death it is for one purpose only, viz., deliverance. God is on the line of salvation, not of damnation; He only damns the damnable things, and Jesus Christ's presentation is that if you identify yourself with the damnable things even God Himself cannot save you; it is a determined dead set against the good and a determined identification with the wrong (cf. Matthew 23:33). When you come in contact with the great destructive sins in other lives, be reverent with what you don't understand; there are elements you know nothing about, and God says "Leave them to Me." Never make a virtue out of necessity; virtue is the overcoming by moral strength an inclination to go the other way.

2. Reiteration by Conscience and Commonplace (Isaiah 28)

He that believeth shall not make haste. (Isaiah 28:16)

Conscience does not shout in thunderclaps, you can easily drown its record, but it goes on, and if you do not heed it for a while because of sensational sinning, as soon as the sensation exhausts itself, back comes the monotonous tick, tick, that nearly drives a man mad. God will never make us listen to Him; we have to will to listen. In the midst of all the excitement the prophet says "he that believeth shall not make haste"-no wonder they ridiculed him! "We have to get on with the negotiations with Assyria and Egypt." Isaiah says when the judgement comes you will find that all your alliances are like a bed that is too short (Isaiah 28:20), a hopeless commonplace annoyance. The punishment of sensational sinners is never sensational but appallingly commonplace, dull, dreary, desperate drudgery. Prison is not man's order, it is God's order for the man who refuses to listen to what he calls the childish platitudes of God and life; he is determined to get rid of the quiet ordinary ways on which God has built human life, then he has to take the commonplace way of prison to bring him back to his senses. Take it in the religious domain, people who are given over to religious excitement cannot stand a solid godly meeting, they must have sensationalism—crowds, speaking in tongues. God never works like that. Beware of sensationalism in every shape and form.

3. God's Performances (Isaiab 29)

Ye turn things upside down! Shall the potter be counted as clay; that the thing made should say of him that made it, He made me not; or the thing framed say of him that framed it, He hath no understanding? (Isaiah 29:16 RV)

In our own day we seem to have come to the conclusion that God has made a number of blunders and we have to put them right; we have private notions of our own which if put down in black and white would prove that we do not believe God is intelligent in allowing the history of the world to go on as it has, in allowing sin and war. We talk about these things as if they were amazing blunders that nearly take God's breath away and we have to do the best we can. We won't see that behind the whole thing is the wisdom of God, that neither bad men nor the devil himself can do one thing without the direct permission of God. "The foolishness of God is wiser than men." God has chosen "the weak things of the world," and men laugh at them. To the crowd we represent Jesus says, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." A man who has faith in God is easily ridiculed, then when he comes out into the sun people say, What a cunning man he was, look how he worked it all out. We would rather credit man with an intelligence he never possessed than credit God with intelligence. The astuteness behind all is the Mind of God.

"And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book..." (Isaiah 29:18)—"that day"—the day in which God manifests His wisdom and turns man's wisdom to nonsense. The result of God's wisdom is a moral result, it is going to be realised to its full extent in what we call the Millennium, but it is manifested now whenever God's wisdom bursts through. All through Isaiah there is the confidence that God is reigning and ruling; the devil likes to make us believe that we are in a losing battle. Nothing of the sort! we have to overcome all the things that try to obscure God. The rugged truths of Isaiah point out not only the appalling state of the world as it is, but that we have to live a holy life in it by the power of God, not a sequestered life in particular temples or rituals, but real genuine magnificent men and women of God, no matter what the devil or the world or the flesh may do. The only thing God is interested in is life, He is not interested in religious forms, and this is what the people had forgotten, they only recognised God in their moribund religious services. God is going to make us worthy of the best saints we have known if we go on with Him (Isaiah 29:22–24).

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 11 OCTOBER–DECEMBER 1942 NOS. 7–9 NOTES ON ISAIAH

THE CENTRE OF THE CYCLONE

Isaiah 30

The test of true religion is the knowledge of the character of God. As long as you think of God in the quietness of a religious meeting you will never know God—what kind of God have you got when you are in touch with the wrong, bad, evil things? God's Book reveals that it is right in the midst of the very opposite of God that His blessings occur. The very things which seem to be making for destruction become the revealers of God. It is an easy business to preach peace when you are in health and have everything you want, but the Bible preaches peace when things are in a howling tumult of passion and sin and iniquity; it is in the midst of anguish and terror that we realise who God is and the marvel of what He can do.

1. The Buttresses of a Bungled Building

Therefore this iniquity shall be to you as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall, whose breaking cometh suddenly at an instant. (Isaiah 30:13)

The trouble is not that the wall has been badly built, but there is too much on the inside and it will burst through no matter what buttresses there are; the real danger comes from within. The supposed buttresses will prove to be breaches—"and he shall break it as a potter's vessel is broken, breaking it in pieces without sparing" (Isaiah 30:14 RV). Your principles may be all right, but if the personal relationship to God is ignored the whole thing will come to the ground. Belief in God will always manifest itself in right principles, but if you put principles first you will end in disbelief in God. Men quote Our Lord's words: "thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself"; true, but if you build on that you blot God out of His heaven and you end as an atheist where you began as a lover of men. It is the same truth that Jesus enunciated: "... he that gathereth not with Me scattereth." In Luke 14:26-33, where Our Lord is laying down the conditions of discipleship, He implies that He is not less than a man among men—"I know the kind of building I am going to rear, I have counted the cost and only those in whom My work is effective will be taken up into My building and battling enterprises"; consequently there will be no incompleteness, no bursting out from within of what is wrong, in Jesus Christ's building.

2. The Benefit of Building by Belief

And therefore will the LORD wait, that He may be gracious unto you, . . . for the LORD is a God of judgement: blessed are all they that wait for Him. (Isaiah 30:18)

God's purpose is not destruction but the bringing out into light and blessing all the nations as well as His own people. Nowadays we have lost the iron tonic of the belief in God behind everything. The Bible view is that God is allowing the devil and sin to do their worst, but behind all the calamities He is working out His purpose. Learn to relate everything in your own life to God, and remember that if things go wrong it is because they must go wrong, but the must is not necessity, it is God. "Things wrong are needful where wrong things abound." If we had made the world would we have made pain? No, we would have ruled pain out. We all pronounce against God and say that pain comes from the devil. The devil knows far too much to allow pain—when he reigns "his goods," i.e. the souls of men, "are in peace." Pain, physical, moral and spiritual pain is the gateway of life every time. The thing that to us is the ugliest blot on the face of Creation God makes to be the angel of the revelation of Himself.

Belief in God's mercy will always be inclined to wobble between sleepy satisfaction that God is indulgent and fretful impatience that He is indifferent. When we become spiritual the thing that comes out more and more clearly is not so much the fact that we have discerned God, but His amazing patience with us in our absurd bungling ways of talking about Him. God never hurries up no matter what men say about Him, He goes steadily forward, and bit by bit as we follow the light of the Spirit of God we begin to discern His methods.

"For the LORD is a God of judgement: blessed are all they that wait for Him." The only place of confidence is personal trust in God and patient waiting for Him. One of the things we have to unlearn is the idea of judgement which never came from God's Book, viz., the idea that God is vindictive. Our Lord never spoke from personal vindictiveness, He spoke from a knowledge of the eternal principles of God, which are inexorable. To trust in the goodness of God is not enough, it is not eternal and abiding; we have to trust God, who is infinitely more than goodness.

3. The Benign Blessing of the Besieged

For the people shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem: thou shalt weep no more. (Isaiah 30:19)

All through Isaiah is true to his original vision, viz., the survival of the holy remnant. That stands symbolically for the indestructibility of God's purpose, and it will be true historically also, the prevailing of God's purpose notwithstanding all that the devil and sin may do. The danger with us as workers is that we do not stand in the thick of things as the prophets did, we stand aloof from them and are no use in the way God intends us to be. Whatever the circumstances may be we have to stand true for God there.

"Ye shall have a song, as in the night . . . and gladness of heart" (Isaiah 30:29). God makes His people sing where in the eyes of the world it seems ironical to sing—in a besieged city where things are going to ruin, in the suburbs of hell, in the valley of the shadow of death. When you see lives in the midst of turmoil and anguish full of amazing brightness and uncrushable elasticity of faith in God, if you do not know God you will say, "However can they go through it? how is it that they remain undiscouraged and undismayed?" The explanation is the presence of God made real in His promises. Think of the ridiculously legal way we treat the promises; we say to God, "You made this promise now fulfil it." The promise itself is the fulfilment, God's presence is in the promise. No one can fulfil a promise but the one who made it. "For all the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him Amen, unto the glory of God by us" (2 Corinthians 1:20), not "yea and Amen" to faith, but in Christ Iesus.

The Book of God is a revelation of God; that means there is no key to its interpretation other than a knowledge of God. Likewise our lives are a series of puzzles and God alone is the answer to them. Unless we discern God in Bible interpretation and in the interpretation of our lives we will come to disaster. God's Book is merciless on sham and pretence, anything that obscures the one real relationship—"In all the world there is none but Thee, my God there is none but Thee." God first, second and third; not refinement, but holiness—a holy God and a holy people and Isaiah cares for nothing else.

ISAIAH 36-38

1. The Tryst of Faith (Isaiah 36)

... that the trial of your faith, ...

All our beliefs unless they have been made ours through suffering, stand helpless immediately we are faced by a healthy pagan. Rabshakeh stands for rationalism, and rationalism can never understand the "Isaiah" element, viz., the impregnable citadel of faith in God. If we obey the "Isaiah" element we are brought where Isaiah is trying to bring these people—"in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength."

Sennacherib, the Assyrian king, has been subduing the fenced cities of Judah, and now he sends this astute man, Rabshakeh, to Jerusalem with a great army, and he struts before the people with all the assurance imaginable. We are familiar with Isaiah's method of bringing his message to the people and then making them decide, and Rabshakeh does the same thing (see Isaiah 36:4–10). The most formidable enemy to faith in God is rationalism because there is no answer saving on the spiritual line. When people go down spiritually it is because they have begun to heed the earnestness which quotes the words of God without His Spirit. The first thing always that blinds us is that people are in earnest. If the people had heeded Isaiah and learned to depend upon God for themselves they would have seen through the disguise of Rabshakeh's earnestness.

The trial of faith never comes along a fantastic line, it always comes along a line on which we can be tested. Here, Rabshakeh's counsel made it seem the wisest thing to affiliate with Assyria; the facts he hurls at them are facts. Beware of the talk that sympathises with your bias—no one is unbiased; there is nothing captivates you more quickly. In listening to certain people you feel, "That is the only thing that can be said," they bear you down with an overplus of common sense. If in the face of all the appeals of common sense you remain true to God, that is the "proof of your faith" (RV) which will be found to the glory of God. The nature of faith is that it must be tested; and the trial of faith does not come in fits and starts, it goes on all the time. The one thing that keeps us right with God is the great work of His grace in our hearts. All the prophets had to take part in something they did not understand, and the Christian has to do the same. If we were to say "This is the way God is going to work," it would lead to spiritual pride, to the ban of finality⁸ about our views, to imagining that God was on our side. The question for us is, will we so yield to the Spirit of God that we always side with Him? The "trial of your faith" is in order to bring God into the practical details of your life.

2. The Tribulation of Faith (Isaiah 37)

... being much more precious than gold ... (RV)

Faith is the trend of the life all through, and everything that is not "hid with Christ in God" is against it. The trial of faith always comes in such a way that it is a perplexity to know what to do. You get advice that sounds wise, it has your welfare in view; everything seems right, and yet there is the feeling that there is an error at the heart of it.

"And Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up unto the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD" (Isaiah 37:14). If any letter is not important enough to be spread "before the LORD" it is too small to annoy you. If I have not prayed about things so ridiculously small that I almost blush to mention them, I have not learned the first lesson in prayer.

It is not easy to find your way to God in a sudden crisis unless you have been in the habit of going to God about everything. The thing that rationalism ridicules is not a man praying to God when he is in distress, but a man praying to God when he is not in distress. To the rationalist it is ridiculous to pray to God about everything; behind the ridicule is the devil to keep us from knowing the road when the crisis comes. Hezekiah knew the road. In his prayer (Isaiah 37:16–20) Hezekiah tells God what he knows God knows already. That is the meaning of prayer—I tell

God what I know He knows in order that I may get to know it as He does (cf. Matthew 6:8). It is not true to say that a man learns to pray in calamities, he never does; he calls on God to deliver him, but he does not pray (see Psalm 107:6, 13, 19).

A man only learns to pray when there is no calamity.

3. The Triumph of Faith (Isaiah 38)

... might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ. (1 Peter 1:7)

God's Book is like life, it records facts; we try to be consistent to our theories instead of to God's character. God has a way of bringing in facts which upset a man's doctrines if they stand in the way of God getting at his soul. God does not deal with lives in our way, but in His own way. When we get down to the real issues of life we forget to be consistent to doctrine because we are face to face with God, and those who have been teaching us how to do things have to retire.

"What shall I say? He hath both spoken unto me, and Himself hath done it: I shall go softly ["as in solemn procession," mg] all my years because of the bitterness of my soul. O Lord, by these things men live . . ." (Isaiah 38:15–16 RV). If you have studied the faces of men and women you will find you can always tell those who have been face to face with danger, it has brought out a dignity of expression and a stateliness, and it is these lives that set the pace for a society that had been going too quickly. It is a benediction for a young life to have to face danger and death, the character is more likely to tell for good ultimately than if it had gone with a skip and jump into life without any realisation of its tremendous depths.

It is perilously easy to conclude that God's honour is bound up with my deliverance; whereas my deliverance is in order to bring me into touch with Reality and not for God's honour at all. If, like Hezekiah, you go through a crisis you find that all the small mean⁹ things in your nature disappear, you are face to face with the real issues—your back is to life and your face is to death; then when God brings you through the crisis with your back to death and your face to life, be careful that you don't degenerate into a "small potato." We are apt to think that any one who has faced death and has seen the true issues of life will never become small and mean again, but that is a great fallacy. When we forget to walk in the light of the vision the meanness and selfishness will crop up again. Hezekiah forgot the grand stately processional gait and he degenerated into a childish piece of disgraceful conduct (see Isaiah 39). If you have had a spiritual awakening, a time of the sense of God's presence and revelation of His word, a crisis you can only account for by God, remember you have to pay for it, if you are to be worth God's trouble—to pay for it by the determination to keep steadily on that line. The crisis in which God was revealed is to be the light of your life when there is no crisis. Keep paying the price; let God see you are willing to live up to the vision.

^{8.} The "ban of finality" means the limitation or curse of having one's mind made up, to the point of being unwilling to consider new information.

^{9.} The word mean as used here refers to something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

In a crisis leave everything to God, shut out every voice saving the voice of God and the psalm of your own deliverance; make it your duty to remain true to both these voices.

In the life of a saint tribulation does this supernatural thing—it brings back innocence with experience; in the natural world experience brings cunning and craftiness. We sit down under the tyranny of a devil's lie and say, "I can't undo the past": you cannot, but God can. God can make the past, as far as our spiritual life is concerned, as if it had never been and even in its worst features He can make it bring out the "treasures of darkness."

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 12 APRIL–JUNE 1943 NOS.1–3 NOTES ON ISAIAH

THE LORD GOD OMNIPOTENT REIGNETH

Isaiah 40

1. The Voice of Inner Reassurance (Isaiah 40:1-2)

Comfort ye, comfort ye My people, saith your God. (Isaiah 40:1)

A revelation-voice always implies a previous knowledge. God cannot make a revelation to a sinner; He can make a revelation to a backslidden saint, and in order to effect this He sends His Spirit to prepare the way by conviction. This revelation-voice comes to the people of God who are experiencing punishment for their sin; but they have had an experience of God, they have known Him, and in the midst of their tribulation His voice speaks to them.

We cannot imitate God's voice, even when we utter His words. The preacher can never rouse up a backslider; it is only when the Spirit of God has got hold of the preacher and is making the words of God living, that the backslider hears God's voice and awakens. The insistent need in practical Christianity is to rely on the Spirit of God; it is the only way to kill the arrogant impudence of preachers. I look upon a congregation as those whom I have to induce to come to God—and I am made of the same stuff as they are! The only reason for my being in the preacher's place is that I have heard God's voice and He has done something in me which He can for them, and I deliver God's message, knowing that the Spirit will apply it as I rely upon Him. Beware of ignoring the ministry of the Spirit by relying on your sensible knowledge of the people you talk to. The great snare in modern Christian enterprise is this very thing—"Do remember the people you are talking to."

We have to stay true to God and His message, not to our knowledge of the people. We must not consider what the people want but what God wants us to present to them, and as we rely on His Spirit we find God works His marvels in His own way.

"Comfort ye, comfort ye My people, saith your God." Notice the "My," and remember that they were a disobedient people, and yet God is "not ashamed to be called their God." It is not the love of God for a pure saint, but the love of God for a sin-stained people. He might well have been ashamed of them on account of their sin and degradation, but His voice comes in all its amazing wonder—"Speak ye comfortably ["to the heart of," RV mg] to Jerusalem. . . ." It is a wonderful picture of what God does in the Atonement.

2. The Voice of Imminent Reality (Isaiah 40:3-5)

Prepare ye the way of the LORD. . . . And the glory of the LORD shall be revealed. (Isaiah 40:3, 5)

Unless we prepare on the outside in accordance with the inner vision we are not in God's order. John the Baptist prepared the way of the Lord historically, but take it personally—how many valleys have I exalted, and how many mountains have I made low? How many mountains of prejudice have I put out of the way? If we prepare on the outside we enable God to plant His glory there, and the first thing we have to do is to go dead against our ingrained prejudices which put a barrier round about us. If I will do in accordance with what God has made me be, He will reveal His glory.

3. The Voice of Insistent Reminding (Isaiah 40:6-8)

The grass withereth, . . . but the word of our God shall stand for ever. (Isaiah 40:8)

Think of asking these people in their misery and sin to prepare the way of the Lord! No wonder the prophet says, "What shall I cry?" "Cry first," the voice says, "that everything is vanity; don't build your hopes again on anything you can see; don't put your confidence again in men, in alliances with Egypt and Assyria; they all wither as the grass." Then comes the heartening verity—"but the word of our God shall stand for ever." Everything will shift but God and His word. How steadily the Spirit of God warns us not to put our trust in men and women, not even in princes, or in anything or anyone but God and His word. Isaiah is reminding the people of this— "You should by this time have said farewell for ever to confidence in everyone and everything but God." That is what happens in sanctification. It has to be a valediction once and for ever to confidence in anyone but God, then the hundredfold can be given without any fear of deceiving the heart.

4. The Voice of Infinite Redemption (Isaiah 40:9-11)

Behold, the Lord GOD will come with strong hand, and His arm shall rule for Him. (Isaiah 40:10)

Isaiah is not trying to convert the minds of the people, but speaking to their hearts. They have got into despair—"We do not doubt what God can do, but He has wearied of us, and we don't blame Him." Isaiah's message comes to recover to them their lost heritage. What we all need is someone who can make real to us the ideas we had of God but have forgotten; the only

One who can do this for us is the Spirit of God. Isaiah is bringing back to the people first of all the memory of who God is; you cannot have faith in anyone you have forgotten. It is not God's promises we need, it is Himself. "His presence is salvation." Once let that Presence come, and all the inner forces of hope are rallied at once. Isaiah is calling upon them to "hang in" to God-"No matter how challenging facts may be to disprove your faith, remember that you did know God, and that there is good reason for all that has happened." The reason the children of Israel could not see this was that they were not blaming themselves-"We are God's favoured people, the things which have happened are from the devil." No, they are from God. God is using external forces as a scourge to bring back His people to Himself—Holiness as a law; chastisement as a means; a holy remnant as a result. Isaiah calls upon them to exercise unshaken faith in God and in His predicted deliverance of which there seems no likelihood. This profound truth runs all through God's word. It is not faith when you trust in what you see; faith is trusting in what you don't see, hanging in to the God whose character you know though meantime there is no evidence that He is at work on your behalf.

The vision of God's purpose comes from a pure heart, from an acute intellect; the condition is—the inner life right with God. An illiterate old woman with a pure heart has a greater insight into the purposes of God than a prime minister. If the prime minister has a pure heart as well as powerful intellect, then you have a man like Isaiah, a giant for God. The sanctification-metaphysic underlies everything. The opportunity is given to us all to be the choice souls. The God who guides the stars, unhasting and unresting, will as assuredly fulfil what He has promised.

"SERVUS SERVORUM DEI"

Isaiah 42

1. Commission for Service

Behold My servant, whom I uphold.

A servant is one who is at the disposal of another— "a servant of the servants of God." Christianity is the deification of this type of service. Jesus Christ Himself is the servant of all—"I am in the midst of you as He that serveth" (RV), and Paul delights to call himself "a bondservant of Jesus" (RV mg). If you want to know what a servant of God is to be like, read what Isaiah says in this chapter and the following ones about the great Servant, Jesus Christ. The characteristics of the great Servant must be the characteristics of every servant; it is the identification of the servant of God with the immortal characteristics of God Himself.

In service for God we have to be abandoned to Him, let Him put us where He will, whether He blesses us or crushes us with burdens, we have nothing to do with what it costs. God will bring folks round in order to see whether He can put anything on you to bear for them—"I can put the burden of insight on that man, that woman, they have only one interest in life, and that is Myself." Would to God that we would get finished once for all with the experience of being rightly adjusted to God, and let Him begin to send us forth into vicarious service for Him! May God make us understand that if we are in His service He will do exactly what He likes with us. We are not saved and sanctified for ourselves, but for God to crush us with burdens if He chooses. What do we know about filling up that which remains behind of the sufferings of Christ? A servant of Jesus Christ is one who is willing to go to martyrdom for the reality of the Gospel of God.

2. Character of the Servant

He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street. (Isaiah 42:2)

This verse refers to the tone of the servant, self-effaced to such an extent that self is not thought of; nothing sickly or sentimental, but complete self-effacement so that Jesus only is known. The servant is absorbed in Jesus as He was in God. The mark of false service is the self-conscious pride of striving after God's favour. "The Holy Ghost will glorify Me," said Jesus.

"He shall not . . . cause his voice to be heard in the street," i.e., he shall not advertise himself. Nothing is entered into for the sake of self-vindication; just as Our Lord never showed any desire to be found in the right, but only a strong desire that the right of God should have its way. Could we stand the humiliation Jesus stood of having words flung at us without saying "Now I must explain"? Men never heard His voice in the street vindicating Himself, but watch Him in the Temple, with a whip of small cords in His hand driving out the moneychangers; then it was His Father's honour that was at stake.

3. Considerateness of the Service

A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench.

This verse refers to the quality of the service. The accuser of the brethren comes and says to God, "That man is a broken reed, don't build any hope on him whatever, he is a hindrance and an upset to You; break him." But no, the Lord will bind up the broken reed and make it into a wonderful instrument and discourse sweet music through it. Or Satan insinuates—"That woman is a perfect disgrace to You, she has only one spark of grace among all the fibres of her being, the best thing to do is to stamp out that spark." But no, He will raise it to a flame. The whole conception of the work of a servant of God is to lift up the despairing and the hopeless. Immediately you start work on God's line He will bring the weak and infirm round you, the surest sign that God is at work is that that is the class who come—the very class we don't want, with the pain and the distress and limitation. We want the strong and robust, and God gathers round us the feeble-minded, the afflicted and weak. Pain in God's service always leads to glory. We want success, God wants glory. Some of us have the notion, till God shakes it out of us, that we are saved and sanctified to have a holy hilarious time before God and among men. Never! We are saved and sanctified to be the servants of men—"ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake."

4. The Creator's Call to the Servant

Thus saith God..., He that created the heavens and stretched them out; ... I the LORD have called thee in righteousness.... (Isaiah 42:5–6)

Naturally we never look to Nature for illustrations of the spiritual life, we look at the methods of business men, at man's handiwork. Our Lord drew all His illustrations from His Father's handiwork, He spoke of lilies and trees and grass and sparrows. As Christians we have to feast our souls on the things ignored by practical people. A false spirituality blots Nature right out. The way to keep your spiritual life un-panicky, free from hysterics and fuss, free from flagging and breaking, is to consider the bits of God's created universe you can see where you are. Foster your life on God and on His creation and you will find a new use for Nature. Read the life of Jesus—the calm, unhasting, unperturbed majesty of His life is like the majesty of the stars in their courses because both are upheld by the same power. Nothing happens in history or in Nature without God's permission and under His direct control. When the saints say, "God gave us good weather"; "He overruled that disaster for my good"; "He changed the wind"—in the eyes of the world, it is absurd. None of these things happens by chance, they have a distinct permissive purpose behind, and the saint discerns this. Jesus bases everything on what looks ridiculous to the eyes of common sense if God is ignored. Take intercessory prayer how ridiculous it looks for a being like you or me to pray and expect God to answer: is it? It becomes the sublimest truth when we get hold of these principles.

"To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house." That is the "Beulah" of the saints, the land of rest to which the service of men will bring men when it is performed in God's way. The law of God running all through the Bible is that every spiritual nature must be able to reproduce its kind, otherwise it abides alone; not produce the attitude of life, you can do that by your creeds, but produce your own kind. "Go . . . and make disciples" (RV), said

Jesus, and you cannot disciple others unless you are a disciple yourself. God regenerates lives; we disciple those whom He regenerates. "I am the LORD: that is My name." The one test of a saint, which is another name for servant, is that he knows the incommunicable Name.

NOTES ON ISAIAH

GOD THE GOAL

Isaiah 45

I am the LORD, and there is none else; beside Me there is no God. Isaiah 45:5 (RV)

1. "Lo, These Are Parts of His Ways"

Thus saith the LORD to His anointed, to Cyrus . . .

God does not work according to His own precedents. To learn this supreme lesson, that God is not concerned about His own precedents, is to keep your soul in the state of a child, humbly depending on God, who will then guide you everywhere. Israel was looking at God's dealings with them in the light of what He had done in the past, forgetting altogether that what God had done in the past proved Him to be the sovereign Lord. Cyrus, the Persian, is not to be taken as a type of Christ, though God says of him "He is My shepherd, and shall perform all My pleasure." Cyrus is an illustration of the sovereignty of God. Behind all his successful campaigns was no "lucky star," or chance, or fortune, but the great fundamental, unshakeable purpose of God. Remember there is a difference between an instrument and a servant; a servant is one who has given up his right to himself to the God whom he proclaims. The term "servant" in this sense is never applied to Cyrus; he is an instrument in God's hands for the deliverance of His people.

2. Ways Past Finding Out

I will give thee the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places. . . . (Isaiah 45:3)

We often state the character of God in terms of brutal harshness which makes men atheists, while our motive is to glorify Him. Ever remember that "eternal life" is to know God, therefore you cannot expect to know Him in five minutes or forty years. Measure your ultimate delight in God's truth and joy in God by the little bit that is clear to you. There are whole tracts of God's character unrevealed to us as yet, and we have to bow in patience until God is able to reveal the things which look so dark. The danger is lest we make the little bit of truth we do know a pinnacle on which we set ourselves to judge everyone else. It is perilously easy to make our conception of God like molten lead and pour it into our specially designed mould and then when it is cold and hard, fling it at the heads of the religious people who don't agree with us. The stamp of the saint is not the metallic rapping out of a testimony to salvation and sanctification, but the true humility which shows the fierce purity of God in ordinary human flesh. The purity in your soul burns the wrong in other souls because it is the fierce purity of God, and it was the purity of God in Christ that made people either hate Him or turn to Him. We are so certain that we must be right because we have had the experience of salvation and sanctification; the only sign that you are right is that you are a bondslave of Jesus.

There are depths inaccessible in the Divine nature; mysteries unrevealed in the method of God's procedure. God never reveals anything ahead of moral and spiritual progress. The Christian worker who has never walked in the darkness of God's hand with no light, has never walked with God at all. The principle of walking with God is that it is a walk by faith, not by sight; a walk in the light of Christ, not in the light of dogmatic conviction. Jesus as our example was under the shadow of the hand of God. "If it be possible, let this cup pass from Me." He knew He could have called twelve legions of angels to His rescue, but He did not call one; not one fire of His own did He kindle, not one self-generated effort did He ever make. One of the saddest sights is to see Christians who were true go under through the lassitude of some sorrow. This is where it begins-God brought them under the shadow of His hand, and they said, "This is the devil, I have no business to be in darkness," forgetting that there are things God cannot explain. Our Lord taught over and over again that things will never be explained in this life. We have to get rid of the idea that we are going to be vindicated down here; Jesus was not. The millennium age will be the vindication of the saints; this is the age of their humiliation. The triumphant thing for a saint is to stand true to God in spite of all the odds the world, the flesh and the devil can bring. God's Spirit will lead us away from our limitations and teach us to think the thoughts of God behind the things that contradict them, He will give us the "treasures of darkness." This was true in Isaiah's own life, he was undaunted because he was going on with God, events did not affect him. Along this line we get some idea of the amazing courage of these men of God. God never vindicates His saints in their own lifetime. The place of scrutiny for us to keep our lives faced with the Lord; at the back of all is the love of God which will not let a soul go. If you are a servant of God, He will put you through desert experiences without asking your permission.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 12 JANUARY–MARCH 1944 Nos. 10–12 NOTES ON ISAIAH

OUR IMPLICIT DIFFERENCE WITH GOD

Isaiah 53

Surely He . . . : yet we . . . (Isaiah 53:4)

Every heart, saintly or unsaintly, differs from God on the subject of pain. It is an implicit difference, i.e., better felt than expressed. We argue, "Why should there be pain?" "Things have no business to be like this; this is what God means. . . ." Whenever pain is mentioned as being God's plan, the innate heart of man rebels—"Surely God does not mean that we are only perfected through suffering?"

1. Vicarious Inspiration

The 53rd chapter of Isaiah stands alone as a great burst of amazing prophecy. The greatest spiritual exposition of the Lord Jesus Christ is not in the New Testament; it is in this chapter, given by a man who lived hundreds of years before Christ was born. If you want to know the characterisation of the Person of Christ you will find it here, sketched by His Father, through the mouth of Isaiah. The prophet Isaiah, more even than the Apostle Paul, interprets the Person of Christ; his is the power of seeing not with the outward eye, but with the inward vision of the spirit. In these latter chapters an alteration comes over Isaiah's picturing of the Servant of Jehovah; it is no longer a personification, but a Person; the great truth dawns on the prophet that it is God Himself in His Servant who is the vicarious Sufferer. It was no mighty monarch who was to come, no great conqueror, but One in the guise of a sufferer. Vicarious suffering is always voluntary.

2. Vicious Indifference

He is despised and rejected of men. (Isaiah 53:3)

When Our Lord came on this earth how many discerned Him? "We needs must love the Highest when we see it"; but the highest is measured by our inner disposition, and when the Son of God, who was The Highest, appeared, men did not love Him; in fact, He was unheeded, despised and rejected. He could easily be unheeded because He did not resent it; He could be treated like the earth under our feet. If we belong to His crowd we shall be despised. Watch how people treat you who don't love Him.

"He was despised, and we esteemed Him not." This is God's picture of how His Servant will appear, not sometimes, but at all times. We will preach what the Apostle Paul never preached; we will preach an exalted Christ: Paul said, "For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." Modern holiness teachers ignore God's method and present what is called the glory side; we have to present the side represented by the Cross. These are all characteristics of this implicit difference; we say, "Surely God does not mean we have to present a despised and neglected and crucified Jesus?" He does. The Spirit of God presents the glorified, exalted Jesus; but the only way that presentation can be made is through the Cross. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me," said Jesus; He is exalted on the Cross. Where we blunder is in trying to explain the Cross doctrinally while we refuse to do what Jesus told us to do, lift Him up.

We want to present our understanding of how God worked in our own experience, consequently we confuse people. Present Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit will do in them what He has done in you. The preaching of the Cross will produce its miraculous result in lives, not what we preach about the Cross (see 1 Corinthians 1:21).

When the Bible speaks of the Death of Jesus it is not as the crucifixion of a Nazarene Carpenter, but as the point in history which reveals the nature of God—that He is not sitting on the remote circle of the world in omnipotent indifference, but that He is right at the very heart of things. The symbol for God is not a circle, but a cross, symbolic of supreme suffering and distress.

3. Voluntary Identification

Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. (Isaiah 53:4)

The coming of God is always on the line where the devil and sin have ranged themselves—"But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." The majority of people who have never been touched by affliction see Jesus Christ's death as a thing beside the mark; but when a man is convicted of sin, then for the first time he begins to see something else-"At last I see; I thought He was smitten of God; but now I see He was wounded for my transgressions. He was bruised for my iniquities: the chastisement of my peace was upon Him." The hand of God was on Him; the reason for His suffering was sin; but it was our sin, our transgression. "Surely He hath borne our griefs": He bore for all. We cannot bear for anyone, it is impossible. Jesus Christ came weighted with the message of God, but that was not what weighed Him down; the thing that weighed Him down was sin. The only thing that made God's shoulders stoop was sin. He made His own Son to be sin; and the Son "put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself."

Jesus Christ's suffering was unique: He knew why He suffered. The sufferings of Jesus are God's inscrutable plan for the carrying out of His Redemptive purpose—"Ought not Christ to have suffered ...?" There was nothing of the morbid fanatic about Our Lord: He looked beyond the travail to the joy set before Him, consequently He "endured the cross, despising the shame."

Has the Christian anything like this to go through? Peter talks about suffering when you don't deserve it.

"But if, when ye do well, and suffer for it ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God." No man can do that unless the Son of God is born in him. Have you ever accepted an undeserved stripe? Suffering unjustly will either produce sympathy with Satan or similarity to Christ. Sympathy with Satan arises from self-pity—"Why should I have to go through this?"

What do we know about filling up "that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ"? Have we ever taken on our shoulders for one second the consequence of the insight the Holy Spirit gives into the corruption of men and women as they are? or is the recoil so desperately offensive that we turn away from it? Insight is an additional burden God places on us. Be careful not to turn your insight into supercilious criticism. Immediately you become spiritual your body becomes the burden-bearer for sins you never committed, so do your nerves. This is the dispensation of the humiliation of the saints; the more you walk in the light with God the more humiliating is your position on earth. It is true God does keep His saints in health, but remember what He does it for, that they may be crushed with burdens. If you take holiness or health as an exhibition of what God has done for you, you will get dry rot in your soul, but pour it out like water on the ground, spend right out to the last drop, and you will find the supply is always there. You can't reserve anything if you are a servant of Jesus Christ. It is the finest saints who are most easily utilised. Every servant of God suffers in his stand for God because of the upheaval that the stand makes in the natural order. The natural has to be sacrificed, that is what it was made for, in order to make it spiritual.

Forgiveness of sin is the great revelation of God, all the rest is slight. We have belittled the meaning of forgiveness of sin by making it mean the forgiveness of offences. The only way God can forgive sin is because His Servant "poured out His soul unto death." Have I ever realised that the only way I am forgiven is by the panging depth of suffering God's Servant went through? The consciousness of what sin is comes long after the redemptive processes have been at work. The man who comes to for God for the first time convicted of sins knows nothing about sin; it is the ripest saint who knows what sin is. Our salvation is the outcome of what it cost the Son of God. "He shall see of the travail of His soul, and shall be satisfied."

Source

Notes on Jeremiah is from lectures that were part of Oswald Chambers' study of the Four Great Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel) in the biblical theology class at the Bible Training College, London, in 1912 and 1913.

Publishing History

- As articles: The lectures were published as articles in the *Bible Training Course (BTC) Monthly Jour*nal,² from May 1936 through March 1940.
- As a book: This material has never before been published in book form.

This material covers only the first 29 chapters of Jeremiah. Undoubtedly, Chambers lectured on the entire book, but Mrs. Chambers was unable to take her usual verbatim shorthand notes of the entire series.

In reading these notes, it should be remembered that the lectures were delivered to students with open Bibles in a setting where study of the biblical text was an integral part of the educational process. As always, Chambers' goal in teaching was not imparting knowledge but seeing lives changed by the Holy Spirit of God.

2. The Bible Training Course Monthly Journal was published from 1932 to 1952 by Mrs. Chambers, with help from David Lambert (1871–1961), a Methodist minister and friend of Oswald Chambers.

^{1.} The Bible Training College (BTC) was a residential school near Clapham Common in southwest London. It was sponsored by the League of Prayer and operated from 1911 until it closed in July 1915 because of World War I. Oswald Chambers was principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers, his wife, was lady superintendent.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 5 May 1936 No. 2 Notes on Jeremiah

Some valuable comments on the Book of Jeremiah by Oswald Chambers are being prepared for the Journal for the coming year. This is instead of the Notes referred to last month. They will appear later. Meanwhile these Notes on Jeremiah will come with inspiration and enlightenment on that great Prophet of God.

IEREMIAH 1

I was not born
Informed and fearless from the first, but shrank
From aught which marked me out apart from men:
I would have lived their life, and died their death
Lost in their ranks, eluding destiny:
I profess no other share
In this selection of my lot, than this
My ready answer to the will of God
Who summons me to be his organ. All
Whose innate strength supports them shall succeed
No better than the sages.

Browning

There is a difference between a personal experience of sanctification and the call of God to be a worker. The latter involves the very mystery that was exhibited in the life of Our Lord, viz., the sanctification of my holy self to God. "For their sakes I sanctify Myself" (John 17:19). Just as Our Lord was made broken bread and poured-out wine for us, so the worker is to be made broken bread and poured-out wine for others. These great big shadowy prophetic figures are difficult to define, but bring them to the light of Jesus Christ and you will see their meaning. Jesus Christ is the only One Who can throw light on the prophecies of Isaiah, and He is the only One Who throws any kind of light on the acute suffering and amazing misery of this prophet.

We are apt to conceive of a servant of God as being a great strong terrific leader whom nothing ever affects. In Jeremiah the acme of human sensitiveness is sanctified in the service of God. The servant of God is never self-elected, there is always this impelling call of God, and it is always the most unlikely man, the most unlikely woman, God calls.

Jeremiah is not suffering for his own sin, or because he is sensitive; he is suffering because he has seen what Jesus Christ knew better than anyone, that there is a deep moral tragedy at the heart of human beings. Sin is not weakness, it is not disease, it is red-handed rebellion against God, and the magnitude of that rebellion is expressed in the Cross of Christ. If we are going to get near the threshold of what the agony of Our Lord represents, we must get far beyond the individual small mean³ ideas of our own particular troubles and religious experiences; we must be made to understand what the positive vile evil of the world is in God's sight. We know hearthunger and soul-despair for ourselves, but have we ever understood what Jesus Christ wanted His disciples to understand when He took them to watch with Him in the Garden?

Very few of us understand why clouds of darkness come. It is God trying to get us into line with the prophets and apostles. It is the Holy Spirit seeking to bring us into the place of vicarious intercession, and we nearly always misunderstand it and say, "I must have sinned," or "I must get out of this, I have got the blues."

"Ah, Lord God! I cannot speak: for I am a child." That is said not in the sense of weakness but—"I don't comprehend, I don't begin to see what the message means; and God said, "Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee." Jeremiah was not a personality like Elijah or Moses, a great towering leader, he was the exact antipodes. All through his prophecy we shall find that he was a man who would have done anything rather than what God made him do. Every nature brings with it the setting of its own temptation.

In as far as we have ever heard the call of God the recoil of our nature is a staggering from the whole thing. "Who is sufficient for these things?" "But I cannot, I am a child." It is not cowardice or weakness, but the transition moment when the whole life is staggered by the blow of the revelation. Never call it weakness or lack of faith. Jeremiah saw from God's standpoint the positive challenging of God, the Satanic hatred of God, and it meant for him the bathing in sorrows the human frame could scarcely stand, but Jeremiah's courage was superb.

It was not the courage of foolhardiness but the courage of a hypersensitive man being held by God; he sees the terror of the evil and wrong and knows his own sensitiveness, and yet hears God saying, "Be not afraid." There are people who are fearless and we say they are courageous, but there is no moral virtue in their courage, it is born either of physical or moral obtuseness. Spiritual courage is the high heart that sees the difficulty and faces it. That is the courage that is valuable to God.

THE DAWNING OF THE ETERNAL WORD

Give me a voice, a cry and a complaining,— Oh let my sound be stormy in their ears! Throat that would shout but cannot stay for straining.

Eyes that would weep but cannot wait for tears.

Myers⁴

Now the word of the LORD came unto me, saying . . . $(Jeremiah\ 1:4\ RV)$

Beware of separating personal spiritual life from historical facts. Spiritual life is not simply the illumination of the Spirit of God in a man, it is much more; spiritual life is based on historical facts, i.e., on the life and statements of Jesus Christ. The great snare is to go off on new things; Jesus said the Holy Spirit will "bring to your remembrance all that I said unto you" (RV). There is always a witness, the word comes, it comes to us from without. How am I to know what God has ordained me for? By His eternal word. We have to stir up our minds and find out what God's purpose is by obeying His word and relying on His Spirit. "My people doth not consider," says God (Îsaiah 1:3). Will the word of God come to me? Of course it will! Will the Spirit of God see that I fulfil that word? Of course He will! If we will keep in the light with God, our destination is as sure and as established as God, as certain as His throne.

When once you realise the Divine purpose behind your life you will never say again, "I am so weak"; you will know you are, but you will be strong in His strength. The only strength we have is the strength of God, which comes to us from the vision of God and of His power. The time of stress in which there is no vision, no insight, no sensing of the presence of God, is the time to stand firm in faith in God and God will do all the rest. Keep true to God and your development in God's plan is certain.

"Tam with thee to deliver thee" (Jeremiah 1:19). This promise to Jeremiah was a marvellous sustaining that never left him (see 15:20). But what would have been the good of that promise if Jeremiah had not come face to face with the Speaker of those words? What good would it have been for Jesus to say, "Lo, I am with you all the days" (RV mg) before His resurrection and appearing to the disciples? The vision of Jesus Himself is granted to a man's spirit; he sees and knows not only what Jesus has done for him but Who his Lord is; then every time His word is recalled there is an incoming of a courage which never can fail. The "Go" of Mark 16:15 was said after the disciples had seen Jesus. We must not only be saved and sanctified, but we must have seen Jesus and heard Him say, "Go ye."

The prophets had to live through this trial of faith in God's word before they uttered it. Jeremiah experienced this personal trial of faith in God. His statements were not the statements of a gramophone—"God will bring everything out all right, I need not care." Jeremiah was in the grip of a dominating purpose that made him care, and with sublime courage he declared God's word all the time. The spirit of God does not put things simply to the intellect; He puts them simply to the heart.

Jeremiah traces his spiritual awakening to God's use of Nature to him (Jeremiah 1:11–12). A prophet sees more than an ordinary man sees. The budding rod of an almond tree would mean to us, Spring is coming; to Jeremiah it meant, Jehovah is awaking. God made the natural thing that Jeremiah saw a symbol to expound His purpose to him; it was a symbolic portrayal of an inner meaning. Nothing can stand a prophet in good stead but what he sees when God opens his eyes.

^{4.} F. W. H. Myers (1843-1901) was a British poet and educator.

The reason men and women are exhausted in life is because they have not realised God's purpose for them; when once they are awakened by the Spirit of God, regenerated by Him, and fitted on to His purpose for them, they will end where God wants them to end.

We are predestined by God to be His sons, but not in spite of ourselves. God has so constituted things that if we refuse to fulfil our predestination everything will tell in contrast to that predestination (cf. John 8:44). The confusion is to make predestination mean we have no choice at all; we have. Jeremiah had the choice, he nearly made the great refusal and said, No. We have power to disobey; if we had not we should have no power to obey; but we have no power to alter the almighty decrees of God.

Divine sovereignty means that God created man for a Divine purpose. God's destiny for man is by His throne; wrath and confusion is the result for any man who steps aside.

UNREQUITED LOVE

Jeremiah 2-3

Iremember... the love of thine espousals. (Jeremiah 2:2)

God is the "adornment" of His people; but God says, "My people have forgotten Me days without number"; the dead set of their life has been away from God (Jeremiah 2:32). Forgetting as an infirmity of mere consciousness is one thing; but forgetting by steadfastly refusing to recognise is another thing. These people had deliberately turned out of God's way. They were wantoning after some other god than the God Who is holy (2:33).

If we would get used to recognising the anguish and horror in God's heart when His people wanton to worldliness, we should understand better why the prophets of the Old Testament and the apostles of the New Testament use terms of the most disgusting offence known amongst civilised men (see 2:24–25); the words are spoken to those who have forsaken what they know. The thing that shocks us most is not the thing that shocked Jesus most. Social immorality shocks us till we don't know where we are; but what struck the heart of Jesus Christ with horror was immorality against God, pride against Himself (see Luke 16:15).

"They hated Me without a cause." If you are true to God and you come across a man who does not want to be true to God, you will find a growing inveterate hatred and venom that can only end in murder in some way or another. Don't banish the bold, crimson language of the prophets by thinking only of physical murder; anyone who has wronged or tempted or neglected his brother, or has multiplied temptations in the way of God's little ones, is called blood-guilty by the prophets (see 2:34).

"Yet thou saidst, I am innocent." The innocence arising from evil is always like that—"I've done nothing." It is the innocence we are all born with; sooner or later it takes its stand with evil and only knows good by contrast; whereas the innocence arising from the presence of the Spirit of God takes its stand with good and knows evil only by contrast. If we hand our hearts over to God we need never know in experience that what Jesus Christ says of the human heart is true (see Mark 7:20–23). When we have to bolster up our position by reasons and arguments it is a sure sign we are on a rotten foundation, and behind our plausible talk we are at our wits' end working to secure a right position. The instinct that inspires a backslider is on the diplomatic line.

Jeremiah 3:4–5. Jeremiah says these people speak all right but they do evil all the time. The prevailing attitude to-day is the healthy-minded attitude that treats remorse as a disease of the nerves and sin as a mere intellectual nuisance—"Do things; don't give way to absurd self-examination." Jesus Christ stands for the unhindered facing of the world, the flesh and the devil, and an equally unhindered facing of God, and such a facing will always bring a man to the evangelical attitude—"Just as I am." Beware of bracing yourself up to be cheerful when you should be broken up into repentance.

Watch and beware of universal notions that ride rough-shod over intimate things, over suffering, and above all over sin. It is difficult for a spiritually minded person to understand why people are attracted by New Theology, Christian Science, Buddhism. These things attract the semi-cultured people, and it is those people with whom we come in contact; they are removed by position and training from the gross evils of life, and are interested in religious topics and always hunting for some ideal to which they can give their intellectual assent. It is amongst this crowd that most of our work has to be done, and it is where we find the most opposition to God. We do not need a new Gospel; what we need is the old truths re-stated to hit the things that are wrong today. If you use the terms of a bygone age and apply them to the sins of bygone days, you don't hit the things that are wrong to-day. Sin was in existence in Jeremiah's day, and in John Wesley's day, and it is in our existence in our day, but in very different guises. To-day we have to fight the Higher Thought teaching, the Mind Cure teaching, Christian Science; the one great objection of all these is to sin. Sin to them is a mere nuisance. It works out along the line that the miraculous is never going to happen—"God cannot make the past as though it had never been"; "God cannot raise the dead"; "God cannot heal the sick; He cannot forgive sin." We have to be amongst them as those who know that God Almighty does the exceptional and the miraculous. It is comparatively easy to do work amongst the submerged tenth, to present Jesus Christ to them, for they flock into the Kingdom of God before the other class. The one safeguard is in a personal attitude to a personal Lord and Saviour.

NOTES ON JEREMIAH

"LIFE, A FURY SLINGING FLAME"

Jeremiah 4

The great truth underlying calamity is that the truth and the way of God is seen but abandoned because it is too difficult. Unless we understand this we shall misjudge God in His dealings with His people and imagine that He is too stern. In personal life the same truth applies; calamity and disaster always follow when God's way is seen but abandoned because it was difficult. Abandon is not rebellion yet; abandon simply means—"That is a nice vision, but it is not for me." From that moment you begin your chapter of calamities; if you have seen the vision, it is for you. Every now and again, not often, but sometimes, God brings us to a point of climax, either as sinners or saints, and it means the Great Divide in our life; we either abandon into worse sordidness spiritually or we become ablaze for the glory of God.

1. Where the Battle's Lost or Won (Jeremiah 4:1-2)

"If thou wilt put away thine abominations out of My sight..." (Jeremiah 4:1). The battle is lost or won in the secret places of the will with God alone, never first in external circumstances. The battle may take one minute or a year, it depends on you, not on God. The Spirit of God apprehends us till we are obliged to get alone with Him, and until the battle is fought out between ourselves and God we will lose it every time in circumstances. We say, "I will wait until I get into the circumstances and put God to the test," we cannot, we must transact business with God in secret in our own wills. When that is done we can go forth with the smiling certainty that our battle is won, nothing will ever again enthral us on that line. The world, the flesh and the devil have not the slightest power over the man who can rule his own spirit, who has fought the battle out before God and won there. When that is done, the external life is child's play; lose it there, and calamity and disaster and upset are as fatally sure as God's decrees.

2. Where the Bitter Ways Begin (Jeremiah 4:3-4)

"Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns" (4:3). Get rid of all your idols, then plough up the ground and sow without the thorns. If God gives you a clear indication in regard to something in your life and what He wants you to do, and you say, "Yes, Lord, I will do it," but you don't proceed to plough up the fallow ground for that purpose and remove the extraneous thing, you will have a cruel conflict. Spiritually every domain of our personal life that comes under apprehension by the Spirit of God is a call to cultivate it for God. We limit God by reminding ourselves of what we have allowed Him to do in the past, and that is why some people are continually going round in a circle spiritually till they get dizzy; they won't break up the new soil of their life for God.

When the secret places of your will before God are revealed you know exactly what you have to do. Let the word of God bore a hole in your self-complacency about the particular thing He has hauled you up about and then put in another word that He brings to you, and you will soon find His dynamite at work. It will come in and blow the bedrock of your obstinacy to splithereens, and never will it occur again in that particular line. In His parable of the sower and the seed our Lord uses the stony ground as indicative of spiritual feignedness, the bedrock of obstinacy has never been blasted to atoms. We are choked by a little thing that has not its root in God, which God condemned and we pathetically wept over but left there. To compromise with anything God has condemned is to be condemned (see John 3:19). To see a thing must be removed and not remove it is to be scorched and withered, by God's decree.

Unless we have taken in secret before God the territory of our own personal life for Him, when the trumpet is sounded and the standard raised in external circumstances (Jeremiah 4:5–6), we shall be swept like chaff before the wind. Never put a thing off and say, "It does not matter, no one sees." No, but they will see you go down like standing corn before the scythe in external circumstances, because you played the traitor to God in secret. If God has revealed anything to you for the tiniest glimmer of a second and you don't obey Him and cultivate that territory for Him, you will go down when the crisis comes. Other people seem to be kept and yet they were not living in the external life quite as well as you; but the point was in secret between you and God, you had only feigned obedience. The explanation of many a calamity is along that line—one fact more in lives which we never guessed at, and when the storm came and the wind blew and the rain beat, the life was not found established on the rock and down it went, the reason being it had not been true in the place of secret testing. The great danger in the time of secret testing is conferring with flesh and blood. Remember, God does not look at people as we look at them; He looks at us where He alone can see, viz., our hearts.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 5 NOVEMBER 1936 NO. 8 NOTES ON JEREMIAH

"WHEN TIME'S A MANIAC SCATTERING DUST"

Jeremiah 4:11–22

The prophecies of Jeremiah are a powerful and timely reminder that human beings are not pathetic babes in the wood, but mutinous people. Ours is not a pathetic separation from God, but a tragic one. It is difficult to get the modern mind to face the dark line that runs all through the Bible; our mood to-day is healthy minded and pathetic and the things in the Bible don't seem to have anything to do with us, but it is good to have the veil lifted and know what we would be like if Jesus Christ had not died. There is a reason in the justice of God for all the dire calamities that happen. If we drink in the atmosphere of religious life round about us, we shall find any amount that is alien to the Bible, such as the aspect of God as a great loving Father, with no power or holiness about Him, and when we come to the stern statements about the Cross of Jesus and the denunciations of sin, we shall have no affinity with them, but we shall preach "smooth things" (Isaiah 30:10).

Although Jeremiah seems to deal in volcanic destructions, a little spring of the clear pure water of life is always revealed that is a great strengthening to God's children. We do live in times of devastation, war and calamities, but those who know God have this consolation, that in and above all these calamities God is working out His purposes absolutely undistressed, and although clouds and darkness are around, they know that the clouds are but the dust of His feet. "The joy of the LORD is your strength," not our joy in God, but the joy of God; our strength is in the fact that we know God rules and rejoices.

The Divine sovereignty of God allows Satan liberty and human beings liberty, and the margins of that liberty are known only to God. To remember that the devil is not the power behind God, but a power allowed by God, makes a great difference in our attitude to the happenings of life. Jeremiah points out that all the calamities need never have been participated in by the house of Judah if they had only obeyed God.

It is not a question of Jeremiah saying to Jerusalem, Go and ask God to wash you; he says, "O Jerusalem, wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved" (Jeremiah 4:14). We are always caught up with the trick of asking God to do what we have to do. Never give way to reverie, imaginations, or thinking over which you have no control; to do so is the surest way to slip into a relapse.

God brings us to the point where the fortress of the will is stormed by Him. If we yield, the battle is fought and won; but if we don't keep on the fighting line God has drawn, we shall suffer a relapse and be taken by storm by the very powers we ought to have overcome, e.g., vain imaginings about God, empty moonings, spiritual reveries, spiritual ecstasies, spiritual anythings that we have not gripped up. The call comes strongly, "Wash your heart" and don't allow vain thoughts to lodge in you. Few of us realise the power God has given us to grip on the threshold of the mind as in a vice the things that ought not to be there.

Jeremiah says he can hear voices of calamity—"watchers from a far country," and it will be worse for Judah than for Israel because "She hath been rebellious against Me, saith the LORD" (see 4:15–17).

It is quite easy as a disciple to be in agreement with the Lord over everything but His personal authority. Our Lord bases the final destiny of His disciples on their relationship to His personal authority and to nothing else (cf. Matthew 7:23). Beware of exploiting the Lord to suit your temperament. A true servant of God if he sees we are not submitting to the authority of the Lord Jesus, will produce all kinds of alarms—"I can see 'watchers' coming here and there and before you know where you are you will be dragged down." If we say, "You are talking nonsense," we shall go down, caught in the dust and anguish and frantic turmoil of besetting calamity.

Calamities that leave us bitter are deserved somewhere. When disasters choke the heart, and paralyse all goodness, there is one fact more in the past that will explain them. "Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee" (4:18). Infatuation is the affectionate insanity of a wrong relationship allowed. Paul is strong on this line—he calls it "inordinate affection." God never allows the danger of an infatuation without a tremendous warning, and if we persist we shall go headlong to destruction.

I am pained at my very heart; . . . I cannot hold my peace. (4:19)

Desperate tides of the whole great world's anguish Forced thro' the channels of a single heart.

F. W. H. Myers

This is one of the great moments in Jeremiah's life, his identification with God and His point of view is clearly brought out. The same thing is stated in Romans 9:3 and Colossians 1:24. On the human side it seems an utter waste of grief; Jeremiah has agonised over the calamities that are going to overtake God's people because of their rebelliousness, but all his weeping did not alter it; seen from God's standpoint, it is a portrayal of the cost to God in His own heart when His people turn away from Him.

Destruction upon destruction is cried. (4:20)

When calamities are sent for wrongdoing they never stop until they are done. The old superstition that grief never comes single-handed, is based on a great fundamental fact, but the sad thing is that calamities have no business in the life of God's children. If any, knowing better, step aside from God by rebellion, calamities will come exactly like a broken-down mill dam—turmoil after turmoil, destruction after destruction, the only thing to do is to return and get out on to the bank, otherwise destruction is as inevitable as that God is on His throne.

"LO, THERE WAS NO MAN"

Jeremiah 4:23-5:6

Lo, there was no man. . . . Seek . . . , if ye can find a man. (Jeremiah 4:25; 5:1)

As disciples of Jesus Christ, we must learn to brood on the terrible things revealed in the Bible, and made known to us in Christian service, until the Spirit of God exults in and through us because we have discerned God's meaning. Life is tragic, and we must get out of our glib notions. We drift into the line of good taste and civilised preaching and a winsome personality, and when we come to the truth of the Cross of Christ, we are in a totally other world, and if the world revealed in the Bible is a true world, most of us live in a fool's paradise. The views expressed in the Bible are always intense, but never exaggerated. They are the statements of what human life is in the sight of God. It is so much easier to do Christian work than to be concentrated on God's point of view. The reason of discouragement is because we do not brood on God's point of view, or take time to understand what the Cross of Christ means. The Cross of Jesus Christ is not a martyrdom, it does not procure salvation; it is the only salvation.

1. The Vision of the Last Man (Jeremiah 4:23–31)

I beheld, and, lo, there was no man. (Jeremiah 4:25)

In verses 23–31 Jeremiah tells what he sees in the spirit; he is not piling up metaphors to terrify himself and others. He sees bursting over Judah a visitation of God that convulses the whole earth, and in his brooding and insight before God he sees himself as the "last man." When once you have been scrutinised by the Spirit of God you are the "last man" on earth in your experience—there is no comfort in friendship, no beauty in the earth, no confidence anywhere. It is a terrible stripping to stand face to face with Jesus Christ, everything is consumed. No man can stand before God unless God be in him. The final judgement in individual life is at the Cross of Jesus Christ, and through that Cross can go no benefit, no beauty, no blessing, no health. The Cross is God's last word: at the Cross the prince of this world is judged; at the Cross we are born from above (RV mg), and at the Cross we go through our final judgement. That is why so many workers will end in disaster; we do not want the Cross of Christ, we do not want God's judgement, and when we come face to face with crime we are shocked and slander God because we have never brooded on the facts of life as God reveals them in His Book. The Cross of Christ means that sin must die in us or the life of God must die in us, individually and in the world.

"For thus saith the LORD, The whole land shall be a desolation" (4:27 RV). The basis of life on earth apart from God is chaos. When once we see that all the complacencies of life, of Christian service, are built on chaos that will go into corruption, we shall understand why the Cross of Christ figures what it does. It is not a complete evolution, it is a Cross that knocks everything out saving God's purpose for man. Take it in our own spiritual experience, how much gets through to God? Nothing but our life, no health, no wealth, no possessions, no virtues, only our life, and if we are wedded to the other things we shall end in destruction. No whining and no shirking will ever help us to escape the utter confusion that is at the basis of every bit of human life that has ignored God. There is only one thing that will stand—our soul and God. Beware of being misled by strong individual preachers, strong individual work; if they don't lead to God direct, they may lead to perdition. The moments are rare, but they do come, when God wants us to stand alone with Him, and we get terrified. If once God can get us to stand alone with Him, He can trust us anywhere on earth; but until He gets us there we never can be trusted. We are misled by the idiosyncrasies of great preachers; they put before us fine conceptions, but they do not leave us face to face with God.

2. The Valley of the Lost Man (Jeremiah 5:1-6)

Seek..., if ye can find a man, if there be any that doeth justly... (5:1 RV)

Have you found a man or woman of God on whom you can depend? If you have, you are blind. There is none! Don't glory in man, for the best of men are but the best of men; bank on God alone. We are captivated by strong personalities and if they don't leave us with Jesus Christ they take us to hell. You cannot find a man anywhere on this earth whom you can trust; the only thing you can trust in yourself and in other people is what Iesus Christ has been allowed to do. Many of us win to ourselves, not to Jesus Christ. "The people have no Bible but they have us." It is true, but it is a perilous line. In preaching to the world, Jesus says, "Lift Me up." You will never find a man according to God's own heart until you become one yourself, then you can be trusted with the sight, for you won't bank on him.

When you come across these truths you go through the panic of the last Judgement here, but then it won't be in death or the world, the flesh or the devil to turn you. There is nothing to terrify the man who knows Jesus Christ, not only what He can do, but Himself.

NOTES ON JEREMIAH

MASKED PERILS

Jeremiah 5:7-21

The Bible is not so much a revelation about God as a revelation of God who is adequate to deal with the worst. Holiness is the moral power of God, and the Bible manifests that the moral power of God must act and act until it is everywhere.

1. Debasing Religious Ideals (Jeremiah 5:7-9)

These verses are shocking, and are meant to be. This debasing of religious ideals is simply the re-emphasis of the great law of our human nature, viz., that religious emotions die in degradation unless carried out on their own high level. Beware of ever saying to yourself, "God's law is not exactly binding to me, I am under grace." To be under grace should mean that we can fulfil the law of God gracefully.

Loyalty is the outcome of personal devotion to a person, and religious disloyalty grows into us from outside observances that are not the outcome of devotion to God.

2. Disowning Religious Instruction (Jeremiah 5:11–13)

The false prophets comforted the people in their vain belief; such prophets become "wind"; they speak from themselves, and the emptiness of their prophecies falls upon their own heads. Jeremiah states that God's omnipotence will not enforce moral truth upon an unwilling mind; there must be an open mind and heart before the truth of God can be received. A scaled mind refuses to be instructed, and a prejudiced mind can only see along the line of its prejudices. Beware of saying, "I will never be in that state of mind." Any state of mind possible to any human being is possible in every human being.

3. The Prophet's Power (Jeremiah 5:14)

This great verse reveals God's seal on the prophet who speaks from Him and His judgement of the false prophets who speak from themselves. The voice of God reveals that He is an atmosphere of righteous fire, and as in Isaiah, so in Jeremiah, the tumbling and turmoil in human history is caused everywhere by the consuming fire of God rather than by the futile rage of the devil. In reading history the saint sees that the great presence and power is God, not the devil. That God is a consuming fire means that He burns and burns until there is nothing left to burn.

4. The Providence of Peril (Jeremiah 5:15-17)

Hordes of barbarians and powers of worldly dominion are unconscious of God, but God uses them for His own purpose. Nothing happens by chance. When our Lord stood before Pilate He said, "Thou couldest have no power at all against Me, except it were given thee from above" (John 19:11). The tyranny of the Roman Empire over God's people was the providential order of God, and Jesus recognised that this was so, He did not start a revolution, or say, "We must fight against this" (cf. John 18:36). Perils are clear to God's mind alone, but they mean panic to everyone who does not know the mind of God. So here Jeremiah reveals that behind all is God's hand. Never take your participation in the perils of providence unintelligently, but get the mind of God.

5. Purpose in Pain (Jeremiah 5:18)

A great snare arises in history and in personal life when we mistake the effects for the cause. In personal life conscience tells us that the cause of calamity lies in a self-indulgent heart. We say, "I don't know why I lost my temper, or why I spoke so hastily." We do know, or we can know. Never mistake the effect of the physical condition for the cause of why we went wrong. We went wrong because the great atmosphere of the fire of God was consuming in us the things that were wrong. They are unrecognised and unrealised, but when the material circumstances come—the world, the flesh and the devil—down we go, and we say, "If only we had been warned we would have stood." But we would not. It is only when conscience has recognised that God is a consuming fire that we stand unperturbed, sure overcomers for God.

In verse 18 Jeremiah reveals that God is a holy God, Who will not allow His people to remain unholy. There is a lesson in every circumstance for the life that is hid with Christ in God which no one else can understand, and which we can only be instructed about from the inside. We learn the marvellous truth that we may become more than conquerors through our right relationship to God over everything that may come against us.

6. The Price of Petulance (Jeremiah 5:19)

Serving strange gods in God's house—the inevitable result is that we shall be taken out of God's house and made drudges in the lands of our idols. Self-will in the worship of God will mean a slavery to selfishness that must be destroyed.

7. Persistence in Perversity (Jeremiah 5:21)

"Hear now this, O foolish people, and without understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not." In the centre of the retina there is one spot where there are no nerves for conveying waves of light. Perversity means a spiritual blind spot. There is one spot at the background of our lives, which, whenever it is faced by God's truths we do not see.

Isaiah and Jeremiah treat spiritual blindness as culpable. The blindness of ignorance and the blindness of perversity are two different things. The blindness of ignorance says, "I do not see that yet." The attitude of the saint is, "I must wait over that before God"—absolutely free from perversity, he has no other end to serve but God's end, which is a coming into more light. Perversity is always back and if it is persisted in it means that God is blotted out of His heaven for us.

THE CITY OF DREADFUL NIGHT

Jeremiah 5-6

The study of Jeremiah brings us face to face with the great Bible truth that a nation is judged by its ideals rather than by its achievements. This is also true of individual life. "So-and-so is a good man, therefore he is all right"—there are whole areas of pathetic personal sentiment which blot Jesus Christ's standards out of the standards of men.

1. Everybody's Doing It (Jeremiah 5:25–31)

The universality of sinning is one of the great facts revealed in God's Book. Unless we see this, we will never understand the need for the Cross of Christ. If it is possible for there to be sin but no sinning, then the Atonement is unnecessary. The terrible truth that the man of sin is born from the bosom of sanctification is one that is always ignored outside God's Book. The sin of a heathen nation never comes anywhere near the sin of what we call a Christian nation.

(a) The Propagation of Super-Sinners (5:26-27)

Whenever God talks about sin, He always makes its setting His own people. "For among My people are found wicked men." Jeremiah is talking on the line that they, as the people of God, have fostered super-sinners, the like of which have not been seen on the earth before. To-day there are books known and revered by many which are a cultured snare to get Christians away from the one great standing in Christ Jesus. Sin, blasphemy and perditious acts are only possible in a community God has blessed. I am either producing fruit to the glory of God, or I am turning myself into a son or daughter of perdition.

Judas and John are both productions of the Person of the Lord Jesus Christ.

(b) The Prosperity of Sleek Selfishness (5:28-29)

Prosperity that does not spring from a godly motive is the external sign of having forsaken God. That is a charge that touches the very centre of modern philanthropy. We are philanthropic, not because we are godly, but because it is a much more prosperous game; righteousness in God's sight never troubles us. Unless we are rightly related to God, nearly all our works have the sign of the prosperity about them of God having left us alone. God will never allow a child of His to prosper on that line. The one thing that matters is our motive before God.

(c) The Perversity of Successful Sinning (5:30-31)

Perversity is often full of wonder and prosperity before men, but horribly hideous before God. "A wonderful and horrible thing is come to pass in the land; the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means" (RV). The prophets prophesy falsely, they prophesy differently from the men of God, and the priests manipulate their work among the people under the direction of the false prophets, "and My people love to have it so," because no holiness is demanded, and Jeremiah asks, "What will ye do in the end thereof?" The most fruitful stock of anti-Christian heresy starts from the worship of healthy-mindedness. This is emphasised again by Paul. Paul will never have the kind of preaching that does not declare the holy demands of a holy God.

That is the thing we detest—that God is holy. Tell us God is loving, but do not tell us He is a holy God; we hate that, and that is the one thing that makes the heart of man rage against Jesus Christ. It is not with the gross, vile sins that you will find the problem, but with the refined, cultured, intellectual living, religious to the last degree. Put the standard of Jesus Christ before that good taste, that good living, good uprightness, and you will begin to see what the profound hatred of man is like against the Lord Jesus Christ. That is the problem we have to face to-day, and we must not live in a fool's paradise.

2. Everybody's Done by It (Jeremiah 6:1-8)

Sin swindles, riddles and destroys everything and everybody that touches it.

(a) The Summons to Anyone (6:1)

"If any one of the children of Benjamin hear the summons, let him answer." The summons of God seems to come in the most irresponsible ways and is accompanied by these words, "If any man hear My voice." Whenever God's call enters into your life and mine, it is for us to listen. We have nothing to do as to whether other people have heard it or not. We cannot answer God's call collectively (cf. John 6:68–70). Never get disturbed out of hearing God's voice by saying other people have not heard it.

(b) Surrounding by Antagonism (6:2-6)

When anyone is right with God, there is the fascination of the power and Spirit of God through them that is attractive; it is a beautiful, a fascinating, winsome, wonderful thing, and gets hold of men, good, bad and indifferent, and the devil alike; but if once the individual saint forgets the source from whence it comes, God will curse the beauty. Beware that God's beauty which He puts on you His saint, is not prostituted to a flirtation with God's antagonists.

(c) The Stagnation Anathematized (6:7-8)

Cities are the "cisterns" of the modern world and an illustration of Jeremiah's meaning. It is more difficult and creditable to live a godly life in a village than in a city, because in a village you have everything open and in the city you have everything artificial. A city man is narrow-minded, everything is protected for him. The place where God is most ignored and everything goes on with satisfaction is a city. In the city other things beside spirituality will succeed; in the country the only thing that will prosper is the worship of the God Who loves the earth. The black belief is always produced in the city. In order to make proper changes in a nation's life, you must change the people's wants. Our Lord alters the "want," and consequently the whole life is simplified. We are so given up to material prosperity, the things that are of use, but when the primal sacrifice exhibited in a man like Scott is seen, it has the effect of simplifying the wants of the people for a time.

Verses 8–15. Jeremiah realises that the people cannot hear God's Word, therefore it is vain to speak warning to them, for you can never warn a pleased person. Satisfaction in any shape or form is impregnable to warning; personal uprightness is always alert to the voice of warning.

Jeremiah 6

Therefore I am full of the fury of the LORD. (Jeremiah 6:11)

Fury means the fundamental wrath of God against sinners, and that wrath is at the basis of everything that is not right, especially in those men and women who have perverted God's way. Jeremiah was a pent-up channel of the fundamental wrath of God, and he says there is no alternative but to pour it out—"I am weary with holding in." There are certain characteristics in people's lives that must mean hell, and about which we must warn them (cf. Ezekiel 3:17–21). The danger is to mix our personal spite with the fury of the Lord. When his realisation of the fury of the Lord was at its height, Jeremiah let it out; others preferred to preach "peace" symptoms—"saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace" (Jeremiah 6:14). "They treat the healing of the hurt of My people as a trifling, temperamental matter; there is no such thing as the grace of shame amongst them." The majority of people do not see what is wrong, and the talk of a prophet like Jeremiah is nonsense. We never can face the things that are wrong, apart from God, without getting insane. If sin is a trifling thing and we can preach to the healing of people and bring peace on any other line, then the tragedy of the Cross is a huge blunder. To live a life hid with Christ in God means we see at times what men and women are like without God, from God's standpoint, and it also means vicarious intercession for them, while they look upon us with pity.

1. The Fear of the Past

Thus saith the LORD, Stand ye in the ways and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein. (6:16)

The ideas of men are in connection with what is before us, but the ideas of God are always from the past. The fighting quality of ungodly human nature is the frightened attitude of those who refuse to look back. Have you ever noticed the forced gaiety of a bad person, of someone who has something they want to cover up? The audacity of the whole thing is fundamental fright; it is the fear of the past. "I will do anything you like, but don't let me think about the past." We do not want to be forgiven; we want to forget, because we are cowards.

2. The Fruit of Thoughts

Behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts. (6:19)

"For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he." "Our thoughts pilot our lives, our actions follow." Our thoughts are like the power of the engines in a steamer; if the pilot on board is in agreement with the engineer, they go steadily in one direction. If my thoughts are right, I am going steadfastly to God's destination for me. We have to guard our fundamental thoughts and be renewed in the spirit of our mind and fitted in to God's purpose.

3. The Fact of the Broken Heart

Your burnt offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices pleasing unto Me. (6:20 RV)

"The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit" (Psalm 51:17)—that of a spirit God has made glad by a great forgiveness. The sign of this kind of broken heart is that the saint is untroubled by storms, and undismayed by bereavement because he is confident in God.

4. The Fundamental Stumbling-Block

Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will lay stumbling-blocks before this people. (6:21)

If there were no holy God, un-holy people would not stumble. What is the line of my thinking—comfort, prosperity, peace? Then God, the holy God, will be a stumbling-block to me. People are departing, not from religious creeds, but from the moral standard of God. That is what the innate rage is against—that God requires us to be holy as He is holy, perfect as He is perfect, pure as He is pure. To-day the tendency has got hold of people, and they do not know where it started from, to discard the standards Jesus Christ erected. The great stumbling-block in modern spiritual life is our Lord Himself in His character, and in the demands the Spirit of God makes. If God would only stop being holy, stop demanding personal holiness, bodily and mental chastity, we would be happy. Yes, but on the way to hell. It is God who puts the stumbling-blocks; they are not there by accident, and the stumbling over them awakens us; if we go on perpetually stumbling, we shall ultimately break our necks. The truth of God always brings us face to face with the standard revealed in our Lord Jesus Christ.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL Vol. 6 April 1937 No. 1 Notes on Jeremiah

REPROBATE

Jeremiah 6

They are all grievous revolters.... Refuse silver shall men call them, because the LORD hath rejected them. (Jeremiah 6:28, 30)

1. The Problem of Providence (Jeremiah 6:22–23)

Providence is God's oversight and in-ruling of the men on this earth, and men without the Spirit of God alternately disbelieve and hate the providence of God. The natural heart hates God's rule because it is unknown, we do not see what God is driving at, we cannot see why we should be disciplined. When we have the Spirit of God we do not understand what God is doing, but we know God. Faith is the process by which our confidence is built up in a Person Whose character we know, however perplexing the present things may be that He is doing. Fate is superstitious yielding to a person whose character we do not know and have not the slightest confidence in but have succumbed to. A stoic is a fatalist, he succumbs to an unknown ruling; a saint is one who lives amongst earth's troubles and trials with a passionate joy the stoic knows nothing about. In reading the writings of the stoics we are apt to be misled for a time because they say the same things as Christians, but from a different standpoint.

The truth behind the picture which Jeremiah gives in verse 23 is that the cruelty and mercilessness is not only allowed by God, but is actually being used by Him as a means, and that God is not perplexed as we are by the terror of His providence to those who do not know Him. Providence can never be interpreted reasonably; it can only be understood supernaturally.

2. The Perils of Panic (Jeremiah 6:24-26)

The terror of panic is as certain as God's rule to every man who sides with the corruptible things. God's providential terrors recognise no favourites. If a child of His clings to the edge of a volcano, that child will come to grief as surely as those who do not care for God. The child of God must be with the God of terror, then he will be kept till the indignation be overpast, for God can never be shaken (see Hebrews 12:29). If we cling to things that are going to be shaken, then God will not prevent us being shaken with them, until we learn to let go of everything that He has condemned. We must be burned as fiercely pure as God is pure, and God will not leave us alone until we are. There is a difference between looking at God in the light of "love is God," and seeing Him in the light of "God is love." God is holy love, and nothing that is corruptible can come anywhere in His presence, it has to be burned and blazed right out of us. Jeremiah's identification with the people is the most wonderful evidence of his vicarious attitude in God's service (see Jeremiah 6:11). The servants of God have to be careful that they do not introduce any personal vindictiveness into the wrath of God, and here though Jeremiah stands with the people who are being swept away by God, he does not slander God by taking the people's point of view. When standing as God's mouthpiece, we must never do what Dante did, put our pet enemies in the hottest places. And when we stand with the people, we must not accept their slander against God. A prophet stands midway, not as a mediator, but as a director.

Jeremiah states that there is no refuge anywhere (see 6:25–26)—retreat if you must, but you will retreat into deeper terror. How much of our security and peace is the outcome of the civilised life we live, and how much is built up in faith in God? When a soul stands face to face with God, there is no refuge apart from God, it simply prepares for itself another terrible moment later. Let us take a revision of where our faith is built, is it built on our godly surroundings, on the order of things that has gathered round about us? If it is, when God's providence allows the shattering blow of an enemy to come upon all these things, then we shall be full of fear. When we stand face to face with God, we are at our final judgement—no refuge anywhere, no advice from friends, nothing at all can shelter then, there is nothing but ourselves and God (cf. Romans 8:1). The history of this in a human soul is a wonderful way of seeing how God works in the world.

3. The Process of Perfection (Jeremiah 6:27)

If God were to manifest Himself suddenly to us we would be His slaves, witless, fascinated off our balance; but He wants us to come to Him with a perfect understanding of Who we are coming to and why. When we trust God we suffer with joy because we know that every bit of God's truth is going to be as gladsome a delight to us as the little bit of truth we already know is. All the terrors of God's processes in history do not alarm us, because the one bit we do know personally about God is so ineffably full of light and joy; therefore we can wait in patience. If a man does not know God, suffering makes him a revolter.

4. The Position of the Reprobate (Jeremiah 6:29-30)

Every confidence, every love, every devotion that is not based on a personal relationship to God will be reprobate, not only in the experience of the individual, but in the history of the world. God will demonstrate to us in His patient way that if we are building on anything less than Jesus Christ it will prove useless, because we have banked on the wrong thing (see 1 Corinthians 3:10–15; 9:27).

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL Vol. 6 May 1937 No. 2 Notes on Jeremiah

DEGRADED DEVOTION

Jeremiah 7

Therefore will I do unto this house, which is called by My name . . . as I have done to Shiloh. (Jeremiah 7:14)

To seek a place instead of a Person is the first peril in the spiritual life, and to sentimentalise over places where God has met you is the beginning of spiritual twist. Beware of relying on a principle saving you from moral wrong, for it never can. A personal relationship to a personal Saviour is the only power that can shield the soul from moral peril. The golden rule is, my personal Saviour in every place, not that in certain places I meet my Saviour.

1. A Different Standpoint (Jeremiah 7:1-2)

In chapters 4–6 Jeremiah stood in the market-place in Jerusalem and talked moral talk to the people; now he takes his stand at the gates of the temple, and the governing idea of what he says is that reality must be at the back of ritual, or else ritual will land the soul in perdition.

Remember, the temple of God to-day is the human body, and unless its health is based on the worship of God, its very health will prove its perdition. It is not true that bad men get diseased bodies, it is the saints like the Apostle Paul, whose bodies are so frail that they have learned that their physical health is a mere case for God's service through their soul. Consequently when anyone has learned, whether by suffering or by direct intimation from God, that physical health depends on relationship to God, then God can remove them when He likes. A bad man goes on living long after God has departed from him. Self-deception always arises by ignoring the personal relationship to God, a relationship based on the forgiveness of sin and nothing else.

2. A Discriminating Scrutiny (Jeremiah 7:3) Amend your ways and your doings.

Whenever our spiritual insight outstrips our practical doings, we are on dangerous ground, for God never gives genuine illumination apart from practical goodness. The only way to keep right with God is to walk in the light. The pure in heart are the only ones who see God, and no one is pure in heart who has not received absolution from sin through the Atonement. If we are spiritual, God will dry up the fountains of illumination from other sources, and if we seek for illumination elsewhere, as these people did, we shall be led astray. It is quite easy to get insight and illumination and direction elsewhere, there are other forces eager to direct us and to direct us more cheaply, but God's direction can never be bought. When you come up against a spiritual wall, thank God (Isaiah 50:10-11).

3. A Drastic Scathing (Jeremiah 7:4)

When there is moral wrong in a man who is susceptibly religious, he will get more and more religious. The more moral rottenness, the more exciting is the appeal. Beware that the excitement of the flesh does not simulate spiritual earnestness, for sensual excess is never so full as when it is devotional. If you are a preacher, beware of being carried away by emotion, by an unbalanced sensibility about something—an appeal to the senses or affections that is not rightly rooted and established in a personal relationship to God; the more rotten that balance gets, the more passionately inspiring is the appeal. Look into your own soul and ask yourself when you prayed most passionately, when you were nearest to God or farthest from Him? When did your prayers take on the passion that appealed to other people? When you were farthest away, not when you were nearest. When you are nearest to God the flesh has no chance to magnify itself, it is a communion. The stamp of public prayer that Jeremiah condemns and ridicules is the prayer with the impassioned appeal that exactly fits people who want the false prophet. It was because these people had swept away the reality of religion that they had got into this security for sensual sins while they developed ritualistic worship. Our relationship to God is the one thing we have to watch. Beware of fleshly sentiment taking its revenge in making you publicly sincere when you are not profoundly real.

4. A Denouncing Sermon (Jeremiah 7:7-8)

To apply Jeremiah's words in our dispensation, read the Sermon on the Mount. Stealing, murder, immorality may never be performed physically, but a vestige of thinking along that line, Jesus says, is as bad in God's sight. Human nature hates God's message that there is a bad tendency inside that has to be plucked out, and unless it is it will damn us. It is extraordinary that although this truth is insisted on all through the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, it is the one thing we do not believe. It is this underlying thought of God's Redemption that human nature hates.

5. A Degenerate Service (Jeremiah 7:10-11)

Will ye . . . come and stand before Me in this house which is called by My name and say, We are delivered, that ye may do all these abominations? (RV)

We never get to a place where we are not liable to do this. We pray to be delivered from a calamity so that we may do what we like. The miracle of forgiveness means the miracle of a holy life. Self-examination is the only exercise for a soul who would remain true to the light of God. It is not the place, and not sanctimonious drivel, or anything less than a personal relationship to Jesus Christ that holds us right. The hardest thing in a saint's life is to maintain a simple belief in Jesus until he realises the one relationship is—my Lord and I; then His joy will be fulfilled in us.

NOTES ON JEREMIAH

THE CUP OF THE LORD AND OF DEVILS

Jeremiah 7:16-34

Truth is perished. (Jeremiah 7:28)

1. Moral Impossibility (Jeremiah 7:16-20)

It is a moral impossibility for a godly man to commit a sin, for when a man sins in that degree he is a sinner, not a godly man (1 John 3:9). God's forgiveness is a miracle, and it is the Atonement only that makes it possible.

(a) Prohibited Intercession (7:16)

That there is a sin unto death is a fact revealed in God's Word, and its nature is returning persistence to wrong of which one has been convicted (1 John 5:16). Intercession must never spring from pity, but from the perfect Atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ. To pray for a sinner on the ground of Christ's redemption is not intercession, but a prayer that God will in His mercy bring that man to salvation. Intercession is only possible in the Holy Ghost, and God can never forgive a sinner unless he repents the repentance wrought by the Atonement. Intercession can only be in the Holy Ghost, i.e., in accordance with the mind of God. The liberty and the hindrance is only known to the child of God.

(b) Provoking Indecencies (7:17–19)

How can God forgive us if we persist in our sins? If God can save us while we persist in doing those things, He ceases to be a God worth worshipping. Sin must be damned, and if we stand with sin we shall be damned too. Jesus Christ's salvation is the destruction of the sinner in the man, not of the man. A spiritual indecency is a compromise with a being less than God that we may prosper. If God calls us to recklessly trust Him, do we still lay hold of something that keeps us in with another power as well in case God fails? If we are going on with God we must stand alone. A man who does the thing that is lawful as a natural man prospers, but if he becomes spiritual and does it, God will curse everything he possesses. Apply this individually and collectively. God will make known to us clearly the impossible tracks of conduct, that we may avoid them.

2. Mental Iniquities (Jeremiah 7:21-28)

Mental iniquities on the part of God's children arise when a symbol is separated from the reality it is meant to bring near.

(a) God Careless of Sacrifices (7:21)

In Israel sacrifices were of two kinds—first, the burnt offering wholly consumed on the altar, and second, the peace offering of which only a part was burned, while the rest was eaten at a sacrificial meal by the offerer and his friends. Jeremiah says with scorn, "God says you are welcome to them both." When once religious rites cease to be the expression of spiritual realities, they become a curse.

(b) God Calling for Sanctification (7:22-23)

Commentators have said that sacrifices were not ordained by God—God gave the law and the people introduced the sacrifices. God ordained the sacrifices to be the symbolic expression of spiritual reality, and when the people took away the symbol from the reality God cursed it. "Whosoever shall eat the bread or drink the cup of the Lord unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and the blood of the Lord" (1 Corinthians 11:27 RV)—"unworthily," i.e. separating the symbol from the reality. The more inner corruption, the more strict the adherence to sacrificial systems.

(c) God Concerning Stubbornness (7:24-28)

Jeremiah says that God has been sending prophets to exhort and warn them, but they "will not" to hearken; they listen respectfully enough, but have no intention of obeying; it is a farce. All the counsels of their minds are according to the stubbornness of their own outlook (cf. Ezekiel 33:31–32). God is bent on our obedience; we are bent on earnest pretence. The only way to listen to the voice of God is to obey Him. God will never leave us long without the goad. The goads of God are the words of God, probing us into right roads.

3. Mystic Infidelities (Jeremiah 7:29-34)

By mystic infidelities is meant the spiritual sentiments that refuse to wed themselves with God's revealed will. It is the counterpart to spiritualism in spiritual life—communicating with generated sentiments of our own souls instead of bringing every sentiment we have to the bar of the will of God.

(a) Sign of Death (7:29)

The only way to spiritual obedience and reality is the way across the life of nature.

(b) The Sorrows of Degradation (7:30-31)

Every conscious physical possession, mental, moral and spiritual, that has not been disciplined by obedience to God, will drag down the personal life to unfathomable degradations.

(c) Shock of Doom (7:32-34)

Jeremiah says all joy shall be dumb "for the land shall become a waste" (RV). All religion must be spiritual in its essence; bodily beauty, mental beauty, moral or spiritual beauty that has never been brought into subjection to God's law and made spiritual, these very charms will end in a desolation of hell. Immediately we begin to substitute religious ritual for spiritual reality, we will incur in our manner and measure exactly what Jeremiah states here the people of Judah will inherit. Everything has to be turned into spiritual life by a process of obedience. The natural life in a child of God is a lamb for sacrifice, and we have to sacrifice it to the will of God until we turn it into a spiritual thing as Jesus sacrificed His will to the will of His Father.

ETERNAL INSOMNIA

Jeremiah 8

And death shall be chosen. (Jeremiah 8:3)

Our Lord Jesus used these burning words, "Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched," in referring to the condition of people who deprive themselves of right judgement by persistently going wrong. (See 2 Thessalonians 2:11). In the prophecies of Jeremiah we have the same great revelation, that eternal issues are involved in temporal living, put in a different connection. If we are going to remain true disciples of Jesus Christ, we will have to remain alien to the day we live in.

1. "The Mills of God Grind Slowly" (Jeremiah 8:1-3)

Such terrible suggestions as these verses contain serve as a very wholesome awakening, and bring men to the understanding of the need of Redemption. In God's Book there is sufficient to indicate that there is not only a great deal more than we know, but that the only One Who knows about it is God Himself; and our Lord and the prophets occasionally draw the veil from what is behind the scenes of terror and anguish for lives that deliberately and emphatically reject the messages of God's redemption in this life. Along these lines come God's revelation facts about spiritualism. The Bible calls spiritualism devilish reality. As a Christian, beware of putting any human experience down to superstition until you have been careful to find out what God's Book has to say about it. These soul perils begin in our lives in palmistry, telling fortunes in teacups, or by cards. Curiosity is awakened and increased, and people degenerate their relationship to God into a spiritual séance. Once begin to tread that path, and nothing but God Almighty's grace can save you from the unutterable curse of the crime of spiritualism. That is one thing as Christian workers we have to face in these days. Some men can do a thing with impunity, others are blighted for doing it; the reason being that there is a relationship from which the one has turned back and the other has never known. If a man or woman has known God and turned back, then the corresponding riot of calamity is in proportion; that is why comparing ourselves with ourselves, we do always err from the truth. The one relationship to maintain is the simple one towards God. Keeping that, it is life and peace and joy; outside that, it is terror and anguish wherever you may be found. The measure of my misery when I turn from God is proportioned to my knowledge of Him when I walked with Him.

2. "Yet They Grind Exceeding Small" (Jeremiah 8:4-7)

The way of the transgressor is hard—until he persists in turning his will to the transgression, then he revels in it—"Why then is this people of Jerusalem slidden back by a perpetual backsliding?"—and now it is not difficult for them to go dead against everything God has said. As in the days of Noah, so all through the Bible, when the signs of the times point to the coming of a great calamity, the majority are merely amused at the fools who believe it. The subject of the Second Coming is the one the average unholy Christian cannot stand, and the tendency is to listen, as the people did in Jeremiah's day, to the false prophets (2 Peter 3:3–6).

3. "... With Exactness Grinds He All" (Jeremiah 8:8–13)

Jeremiah says the pen of the scribes is false; he accuses them of expounding the Word of God in a lying manner, prophesying falsely. We have an exact counterpart to-day. The modern scholar pretends to be expounding the Word of God, but in reality he is writing with a lying pen, he builds his wisdom out of his own rationalism, and takes out of the law of God only what agrees with it.

"The wise men are ashamed, they are dismayed and taken"—those who hold themselves wise shall be dismally deceived in their hopes when the great calamity comes upon the sin-hardened people. The way we get mystically infidel is when we allow sentiments in our spiritual life to be insubordinate to God's written Word, vague speculations which we refuse to pin down to God's law. These develop a sentimental view of God—"God knows how simple our hearts are, and these calamities will never come to us." But God's Word goes through all those sentiments and points out directly where we went astray—there was one point where we would not obey the truth. Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel all say the same, that it is the prophet and the people together who corrupt one another. Paul says the same to Timothy—"For the time will come when they will not endure the sound doctrine; but, having itching ears, will heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts" (2 Timothy 4:3). It is true to our very doors to-day.

"And they have healed the hurt of the daughter of My people lightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace" (Jeremiah 8:11). That is the perpetual peril at all times, relieving present pain by a temporal fictitious cure, when what is needed for an effectual cure is a surgical operation.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 6 SEPTEMBER 1937 No. 6 NOTES ON JEREMIAH

INFATUATION

Jeremiah 8:14-9:8

Infatuation is something that deprives us of right judgement and swings us right off our balance. Look back on your past history with God and you will see where you have been infatuated. The voice that speaks from God's side is balanced by a thousand that speak on the other side. "And for this cause God sendeth them a working of error, that they should believe a lie" (2 Thessalonians 2:11 RV). That is the result of infatuation. Christians individually and collectively become infatuated when they think not of the Lord Jesus Christ as strange to this order in which we live—either He must be crucified or we must take up the cross. We have to face the world and life from God's standpoint, to look at subjects that strike terror to our inmost souls. All Christians are not Christian workers, but those who are called to be workers need the courage of the Holy Ghost to face life from God's standpoint. We have to keep our hearts and minds faced with the awful condition of human life apart from the Cross of Christ. We must get into our souls the iron of God which makes us strong enough to present Jesus Christ to men. A Christian worker does well to hold judgement in abeyance about themselves and about others when there is no genuine shame and repentance. God cannot forgive sin and remain God on any other footing than the atoning death of Jesus Christ.

1. Unreturning Grace (Jeremiah 8:14-17)

We looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of healing, and behold dismay! (8:15 RV)

A surrender to the inevitable disaster of sin without any shame or self-blame is the first seal of doom. The infatuated mood, in which we think we are not to blame for the calamities that come upon us, is very common. Job was in no wise responsible for the calamities that came upon him; but here Jeremiah is stating that the calamities are because of the people's sins. People bow inevitably to their sorrows, but never find out whether they are to blame. It is easy to drift right away from the Bible standpoint and from the cross of Christ by re-accommodating our faith to a spirit that hates Jesus Christ. The majority of us know nothing about shame and repentance, consequently we drift from the central point because we more easily get into sympathy with men than with God, and this is slander against God. To save the world cost Jesus Christ His life, and if we teach that the world can be saved in any other way we slander God.

These people had generated their infatuated hopes on the preaching of the false prophets. Jesus Christ not only gives us ideals, but He shows us that men are incapable of attaining them, and He came that they might get there by the miracle of His grace. Other teachers never refer to the possibility of our getting there, and it is that kind of teacher we like. Men can never attain the ideal that God demands they shall attain, unless they attain it by regeneration through the cross of Christ; and that never comes in experience but by shame and repentance. Some people seem to be easily morally good, and we say, "Oh, they are all right." If they are all right, the cross of Christ is a farce. If natural virtue and natural goodness are really all right, then the cross is a sham, but immediately we come to see that the characteristics of the new life are based in our experience of shame and repentance we can always recognise these experiences. When we go down amongst men and women, let them be never so bad and degraded, we never can despair because, no matter how bad they may be, we know of a Saviour Who can save them.

2. Unrelieved Grief (Jeremiah 8:18-22)

For the hurt of the daughter of My people am I hurt. (8:21)

The people are not sad, they think the prophet has a dose of dyspepsia. Just before the judgement of God the majority of people are happy; they are infatuated. Standing in the courts of the temple Jeremiah is talking to a people battened in prosperity, but the prophet hears what is coming. Have we ever been through anything of that description? Have we ever been touched once with filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ? or are we caught up by the jargon of the modern spirit which is full of adversity to the cross of Jesus Christ? The idea is that if we are in joy and peace we are all right. "Think not that I came to send peace on the earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword" said Jesus (RV).

Verses 21–22 picture the prophet's distress. He can find no comfort for his heart. The reason we do not suffer over other people is that we do not stand where Jeremiah stood. Some of us have a secret delight when people go down, though we do not say so. It crushed the heart out of Jeremiah because he saw them as the people of God.

Jeremiah in the abandon of his grief wishes that he were nothing but a "fountain of tears" day and night because of the infatuated people (9:1). He had to minister to a people who became worse and worse because he ministered to them. It is incorporated into us, unless we are saturated with the Bible idea, that we succeed for God. In the New Testament there is no such notion, only faithfulness to Jesus Christ; success does not lie along His line. God has His own purposes which we do not know and have not to look for. We have to see that we keep steadfastly faithful to Him. "Their tongue is a deadly arrow; it speaketh deceit" (9:8 RV).

The characteristic of a child of God is that there is no deceit, nothing to hide from God (1 John 1:7). Never trust any man or woman, and never trust yourself, trust only the grace of God. As sure as we put our trust in man, no matter how good, we learn that the human heart is a cunning house of deceit. We all work for our own ends till we get into the light with God; then we have no end to serve, we are without guile. The only way to keep in the light is to remain true to Jesus Christ and not guard ourselves; let Him guard and let Him watch.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 6 NOVEMBER 1937 NO. 8 NOTES ON JEREMIAH

LACHRYMA CHRISTI

Jeremiah 9:9–26

Lachryma Christi is a wine of a sweet taste produced from grapes grown on Mount Vesuvius. The words literally mean "the tears of Christ." The symbolism is perfect to those who understand that the value of human life to God is that it produces the wine that He delights in.

In these studies we are crushing through at all costs the views that have no home whatever in the Bible, and few, as workers, can stand the crushing until they get down to the Bible standpoint, from where they will never be budged again.

1. Desolation (Jeremiah 9:9–11; Matthew 23:38)

Our Lord Jesus Christ and the Old Testament prophets are inseparable from one another, for in the Person and the teaching of our Lord all that the prophets taught is in part fulfilled, and will be completely fulfilled.

Desolation wrought by God is the indelible proof that God is God, and a holy God. If we make our abode on the sides of a volcano, desolation may come at any minute. Keep in mind the continual interference of God in human life; that is the mental atmosphere of the Bible. Outside the Bible, people talk about the immanence of God—everything going on quietly and calmly and in order. It goes on tempestuously and crushingly. That is God's order—revolution, around Himself as the central Being.

2. Discernment (Jeremiah 9:12-16; 1 Corinthians 3:12-15)

Jeremiah states that wisdom and enlightenment are not to be found among the infatuated people, they have been swept away from right judgement by false prophets who taught that everything develops along a natural rational line. That was the infatuation in Jeremiah's day, and in our own day the proclaimers of the truth of God are in the minority; men won't listen to them.

There are those who say there is no such thing as the supernatural incoming of Jesus Christ, either in history or in the human heart. Our Lord Jesus Christ is not Someone Who has sprung from human nature by evolution: He is Someone Who has come crushing into the human nature by the superb miracle of the Incarnation. The supernatural is the only explanation of our lives if we are right with God, and at any moment God may tumble our lives up as He likes. The question is, Are we willing to let Him? We have to maintain our personal relationship to God in Christ Jesus, no matter what happens. The one thing that is of value to God in a human life is a personal relationship of holiness to God, and every part of physical, mental, moral life and of Christian work that is not so related will be desolated and burnt as rubbish.

3. Dirge (Jeremiah 9:17-22; Luke 6:24-26)

The characteristic of life to-day is that the gospel of "Cheer up, look on the bright side," is being preached on all sides. Our Lord says, in effect, that every happiness and peace and well-being that is based on the ignoring of a relationship to God will end in dirges and woes, disasters and terrors. Every now and again God lifts the veil from the eyes of His children and shows us the numbers in our own circle who are absolutely dead to God's standpoint. It is these revelations that bring distress to the soul before God in intercession, and enable us to understand what Paul means when he says, "I . . . fill up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ" (Colossians 1:24 RV). We must stand with one camp or the other, we are either with God and the forlorn hope, or with the crowd who are going on without God, whose happiness and joy and prosperity is all fictitious.

4. Disquisition (Jeremiah 9:23-24; 1 Corinthians 1:20-21)

The righteousness of God embraces the wise man, the mighty man, the rich man, and brings them into a new standpoint. Apart from God, it is man's wisdom and man's power, and man's cunning commercialism that are gloried in. Think of the wise outlook on life that ignores the supernatural incoming of God in Christ, the supernatural Atonement, and the supernatural works of grace in experimental salvation and sanctification; compared with the shrewd wisdom of the world, these are nought. The wisdom of the wise is based on a rational explanation of everything, but "the foolishness of God is wiser than men." "Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of the world?"

5. Discrimination (Jeremiah 9:25-26)

"All the house of Israel are uncircumcised in heart" (RV). They were circumcised by rite, but not in reality, therefore they are classed by Jeremiah with the heathen in this respect that they were devoid of all room for glorying in the sight of God. External religious rites divorced from spiritual reality, all through God's Book, are revealed as the abiding stumbling-block to the real worship of God, whereas they should be a means of grace.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 6 DECEMBER 1937 NO. 9 NOTES ON JEREMIAH

IRRECONCILABLE

Jeremiah 10:1–16

Every man is brutish in his knowledge. (Jeremiah 10:14)

1. The Paralysis of Aspiring to Nirvana (Jeremiah 10:1–5)

Nirvana is a Sanscrit word which means "a blowing out," like a candle. The abiding tendency of the experience in life without a personal knowledge of God is to become more and more convinced that individual life is a delusion. Spiritually it is made to mean that we have to lose ourselves in God. That is never taught in the Bible. Our type of life is the Lord Jesus Christ—a strong, vigorous, intense, separate Personality; He never lost Himself in God; and the one thing that the Holy Spirit does is to develop and increase the value of our personality to God. Verses 1-5 are a warning against idolatry because it leads to nothingness. If once we forget that God is holy, we will be inclined to pay attention to premonitions, to fatalistic notions. Jeremiah says, Have nothing to do with such things (10:2). Beware of every profession of wisdom that takes a line that leads away from the God whom Jesus Christ revealed.

"Be not afraid of them" (10:5). We have to be shaken out of everything that awakens fear till we do not fear anything. "Therefore will we not fear, though..." (RV). A great part of our life is given over to fetishness, to our own ideas and conceptions, and we are terrified out of our wits by things we could name. God's purpose is to get us to the place where Jesus was—unafraid, unafraid of death or of anything that is less than God. "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Unless our hearts are rooted and grounded in God, there are a thousand and one things that will awaken terror. Beware of everything that defaces your faith in God, and learn to welcome the manifestation of God that enables you to efface yourself in devotion to Him.

2. The Progress of Alone to the Alone (Jeremiah 10:6–11)

The "aloneness" of God is a doctrine continually stated in the Bible. The Bible does not say that Nature is God, nor does it state anywhere that all will be absorbed into God. The Bible view of God is not being accepted to-day; we do not think of God as the Being presented in the Bible, our actions prove we do not; the things we are haunted by prove we do not; the way we don't trust Him proves we do not. To have the conception clearly in our souls that God is a transcendent God must be wrought in us by the Holy Ghost. God created everything and upholds all things by the word of His power, and His nature is discerned by His handiwork, but that is a different thing from saying God is all. God breathes into us the Holy Spirit Who energises our spirit, and we become eternally never God, but God's lovers (see Romans 5:5). The Apostle Paul states that men are without excuse when they worship God's work as God (Romans 1:25).

Jeremiah 10:7-9. An idol, says Jeremiah, is itself "a doctrine of vanities." Paul states exactly the same truth for his dispensation, and it is the same to-day. To worship a work of God is blasphemy. "For that they exchanged the truth of God for a lie" (Romans 1:25 RV). The ungodly disposition in a man makes him worship beings or things or ideas in order to render them powerless, and the same idea is apt to creep into the worship of God amongst Christians if not watched—"God will never let this or that come to me; I am a favourite of His." Jesus Christ's life is an illustration as to how God will deal with us, He will not shield us from the world, the flesh or the devil, they are allowed to do their worst because God has staked His all on what He has done in us (see John 16:33; 1 John 4:4). Trials and tribulations are trumpet calls to the witnesses to God. Beware lest Satan steals a march⁵ when the tribulations begin.

Paul emphasises the fact that God is a sovereign Being, not a sentimental blessing. The Bible instils iron into our nature, it leaves none of the weak, sentimental things we hold in such esteem. The Bible is packed full of the most stern truths, yet it is anything but pessimistic. The Hebrew Scriptures know nothing about overwhelming sadness, they are optimistic. The modern Christian mind is not nourished with the Bible, it is nourished with conceptions that ignore Iesus Christ.

3. The Providence of Almighty God

(Jeremiah 10:12–16)
"Almighty God" means that there is no one or thing or force mightier. If you have ever been given the tiniest inkling of the meaning of what God said to Abraham, "I am God Almighty" (RV)—"El Shaddai," that moment will stand out in your experience infinitely more than your experience of sanctification or any other experience. One moment's realisation that Almighty God is your Father through Jesus Christ, and I defy anything to terrify you again for long. If we realise, what these prophets realised, that nothing can happen without God's permission, we are kept in peace. Worrying is wicked in a Christian. "Let not your heart be troubled." How dare we be troubled if Almighty God Who made the world and everything in it, is our Father? Why should we ignore God by worshipping what He has made, and then giving way to intellectual infidelity and sceptically doubting if He is wise and good at all? "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him"-God can do what He likes, I know it is all right, let happen what will.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL Vol. 6 January 1938 No. 10 Notes on Jeremiah

CORRECTION

Jeremiah 10:17–11:8

O LORD, correct me, but with judgement. (Jeremiah 10:24)

The prayer is for chastening. When God seems to let the calamity fall on a good person, it leads to the salvation of a bad person. This is difficult to put in words. Correction is not for the detection of faults, but in order to make perfect. We cannot be made good as dogs are, our wills must share in the making. God does not make us good in spite of ourselves. The terrors of God arise when God puts His finger on a man or a nation to draw them out of darkness into the light. Those who take God's way of coming into the light will find ultimately nothing but unspeakable joy and peace, life and love.

1. Weeping in Woe but Willing (Jeremiah 10:17-25)

The prophecies of Jeremiah, like other truths of God, are addressed to the conscience and the will, not to the intellect or imagination. These verses are Jeremiah's statement about the people coming slowly to understand God's judgements.

^{5.} steal a march: to secretly obtain an advantage over an opponent; military: to move troops without the enemy's knowledge.

(a) Violent Exile (10:17-18)

"Gather up thy bundle from the ground" (RV mg). Whatever in us can be or can make an adversary of God, whatever prevents us doing the will of God, must be got rid of. In Jeremiah's day the people continually reverted to idolatry; after the captivity idolatry never appears again; when our Lord came it was the spirit of Pharisaism that He condemned. If we could get into God's presence with any sin remaining, God would not be holy. There must be nothing to hide. Our difficulties arise because we do not realise this. We receive the light, but we won't do what we ought, and God has to come with His inevitable compulsion—"Behold, I will sling out the inhabitants of the land at this time" (RV). We have got to be holy some day, why not be holy now? God will not leave us until He has burnt everything that can be burnt out of us. We hinder Him, that is why He is so long.

(b) Vicarious Experience (10:19-20)

"Truly this is my grief, and I must bear it" (RV). Jeremiah did not stand aloof, he took on him the position of the people before God. The cause of the calamity was that "the shepherds are become brutish" (10:21 RV), i.e., they did not seek wisdom and guidance from God, so they could not deal wisely. No matter how moral we may be, every domain of our life that is not regulated by the direct application of the wisdom of God is brutish in God's sight. What do we teach in our Sunday School classes, our Bible classes? what do we preach to our congregations? Do we teach and preach "brute" wisdom, or the wisdom of God through Jesus Christ? (cf. 1 Corinthians 1:30).

(c) The Voice of Earnestness (10:23-25)

Verse 23—"O LORD, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps"—is a confession, not of sin, but of realised condition. Have we ever made that confession in our own souls before God? If we have, we know, and delight to know, that it is not within man's power to arrange the course of his life. The test is, have we the childlike attitude towards God, are we always on the look-out for His supernatural working? Most of us are rationalistic infidels, we never think that God is supernatural at all. We rule out the miraculous and the supernatural because it is not according to the outlook of to-day.

2. Warning in Word, but Wilful (Jeremiah 11:1-8)

The greatest obstruction to the working of God comes from those who give themselves to interpreting the words of God rather than doing them. "The word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD . . . "—to proclaim we must have heard the word first. "And say thou unto them, Thus saith the LORD. . . . " The tendency is strong to let down and say, "God won't be stern, He won't expect you to give up all that." He will. "God does not expect you to walk in the light so that you have nothing to hide," but He does. We must see that we remain true to the revelation we have had, otherwise the condemnation will come on us that came on the false prophets of old. We are here for one purpose—to stand for the revelation of God's truth to the people of God and to sinners. The tendency is to water down God's truth in the case of some darling relationship and say God did not mean what we know He did. We must never shield a person from God's truth; if we do, we put them into the dark and deepen their torture instead of their peace. ". . . which I commanded your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt." The first view of God after experiencing His deliverance is the true one, don't modify it. The modification comes in when the testimony partakes of the nature of—"Once I was delivered. . . ." The New Testament bids us walk in the light, not remain in the house of memory and recall. When we were first delivered by God there was no one in the world for us then but Him, is there anybody now? The one great passion of heart and soul and body was for Jesus Christ, is it now? or are we beginning to modify things and make them more plausible and fitting to worldly customs and ideas?

It is one thing to claim a thing, but another thing to enter in on that claim. God wants us to possess. If a man acknowledges God's voice, God will tax the very universe to enable him to obey. To get a glimpse only of what obedience means makes us say it is difficult: obedience is superbly easy because we have Almightiness on our side. Acknowledge God's voice, take the step in the right direction and obey, and you will be backed by omnipotence in every detail.

MISAPPREHENSION

Jeremiah 11:9–12:6

Let me reason the case with Thee. (Jeremiah 12:1 KJV mg)

Misapprehensions of God arise from not understanding that His way for us is obedience until we discern, not waiting to obey until we know. The only way to know God more fully is to obey what we have discerned, then we shall know something more.

1. Conspiracy against God (Jeremiah 11:9–13)

The breach of faith towards the covenant of God is called by God a conspiracy—"the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken My covenant which I made with their fathers" (11:10). The Bible is the only Book that reveals a solidarity of evil, and this historical record is part of that revelation. In Ephesians 6:11–12 the Apostle Paul refers to the same underlying truth, that evil has not its birth in one man's doing, but that it is diabolically easy for all men to do the wrong thing. If we will obey, we are backed by Omnipotence; but if once we begin to be cunning and suspicious and to doubt, we are backed by a diabolical inspiration as compelling on the wrong side as obedience is on the right. At the back of all are those two powers—God and the devil. When men state they cannot help doing wrong, they speak truly. It is as if all men and devils had met together and conspired against the Lord.

Some such revelation is necessary before we discern what it was made the Cross of Jesus Christ necessary, viz., a solidarity of evil which we know nothing about until we are born again of the Spirit of God. Freedom from guile, from reviling, from threatening (see 1 Peter 2:22–23)—never having any connection with the little steps in evil which connect us with the tremendous solidarity of evil which is a conspiracy against God and all God stands for. Watch every encroaching of suspicion, "Never believe the thing that ought not to be true," because if you do, you find you have a diabolical genius for doing it. Once begin to suspect, and you can suspect like the devil himself. Once imagine that people are beginning to overreach you and you will have a diabolical genius for seeing where they overreach you, and then you will begin to have the same view of God.

2. Condensed against Prayer (Jeremiah 11:14)

The Lord will not only not receive any intercession for the covenant-breaking people, but He will not answer their own prayer for deliverance. "For I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto Me for their evil" (RV mg). It is as if God had condensed Himself into adamant. Unless we keep in touch with God by obedience it is possible to pray for a wrong thing. In this case the people have rebelled and do not intend to obey, they only pray because they are suffering, not because they want God's will to be done in them.

3. Contempt for Holiness (Jeremiah 11:15–17)

"What hath My beloved to do in Mine house, seeing she hath wrought lewdness with many?" (11:15). A contempt for holiness is the outcome of preferring to listen in order to intellectually comprehend, combined with a stubborn refusal to obey (see Acts 7:51).

4. Conspiracy against Jeremiah (Jeremiah 11:18-23)

The prophet had not known they had devised devices against him, but he says "the LORD gave me knowledge of it" (RV). Our Lord told His disciples that their oneness with Him would be recognised in the fact that they would be persecuted and hated as He was (John 15:18–20). Fellowship with Jesus Christ means disaster in the eyes of the wisdom of the world.

5. Controversy with God (Jeremiah 12:1-4)

The enmity which Jeremiah experienced from the people of Anathoth, his native place, causes him to expostulate with God and to demand that they be cut off out of the land—"pull them out like sheep for the slaughter." Think how easy it is to get into that mood!

6. Cumulative Adversity (Jeremiah 12:5-6)

The Lord reproves Jeremiah for his outburst of impatience by telling him he must patiently endure worse. The bittersweet drop in the prophet's cup had not yet been tasted, for he was to find that not only his own townsmen, but his own brethren and the house of his father, had dealt treacherously with him. A simple thing to have faith in God, isn't it! It means steadfastly enduring, as seeing Him Who is invisible, and letting God work out His ways through you.

"My Lord and I" is a very beautiful sentiment, but before we know it as a living experience we have to fight our way through all the contradicting things to the un-afraid, simple life that trusts in God.

PROGRESSIVE REALISATION

Jeremiah 12:7–17

I will return, and have compassion on them. (Jeremiah 12:15)

Jeremiah begins to realise his own messages; he has experienced the correcting wounds of God, and it has had a very illuminating effect upon him. Few suffer more seriously in character than the men and women who for one reason or another are exempt from frank, honest criticism. That privileged lot is cruel in the extreme.

Progressive realisation does not mean that God reveals Himself by inches, but that we realise His revelation of Himself by inches as we obey.

1. Not a Divine Rescript but a Human Revolt (Jeremiah 12:7–13)

Jeremiah realises that the sufferings and the judgements that are about to fall on the people of God are not a Divine rescript (i.e., an edict or decree), but the result of that people's revolt.

Mine heritage is become unto me as a lion in the forest: she hath uttered her voice against Me; therefore I have hated her. (12:8 RV)

God is expounding to Jeremiah, and through Jeremiah, and through to all time, if His people disobey and rebel, the result of God's way of ordering things is inevitable. It is not a Divine edict, but the way God has constituted things. When self-realisation is accepted as the law of self, it becomes the enemy of the life of God.

"Is mine heritage unto me as a speckled bird of prey?" (RV). This is not a picture of a saint living a holy life in the world; it is the picture of a saint who is leaving God and going into the world, with the result that the birds of prey, i.e. those who have never recognised God, are tearing that life to bits, and God does not protect it. That is the thing that staggered Jeremiah. God is bringing him to see the reason: the people have rebelled against Him. If I backslide, I take some of the glorious plumage of the heritage of God with me, and as it gets bedraggled I am torn to pieces by the people who never knew Jesus Christ.

"Many shepherds have destroyed My vineyard . . . No man layeth it to heart" (RV). God would have been "a wall of fire round about and . . . the glory in the midst" if they had been obedient. The difference between God as a consuming fire and natural fire is just this, that the further you get away from God the more fiercely you feel His burnings, but when you are close to Him, you will find it is a glorious protection.

2. The Divine Event to Which the Whole World Tends (Jeremiah 12:14-17)

Thus saith the LORD against all mine evil neighbours, . . . Behold, I will pluck them up from off their land. (12:14 RV)

God is behind the devil; He is watching, and sees when the devil begins to gloat and attempt to interfere. An evil man or the devil himself can never hurt a backslider other than by God's permission.

"I will return, and have compassion on them" (12:15). That judgement and mercy are two phases of the same thing is part of the progressive realisation that men and women get as they walk in the light. The house of life has God at the back door and the front, if we bar both doors against Him, He will burst them open in mercy with a hurricane. When havoc is round about, men slander God, but havoc is the great presence of God working His own purposes. Everything is havoc but God and the man.

"If they will diligently learn the ways of My people, . . . then shall they be built up in the midst of My people" (12:16 RV). God created the people known as Israel for one purpose, to be His servants until through them every nation came to know God. Through every period they turned away from that preordained purpose because they wanted to be like other nations. This is the reason of all the judgements that paralysed Jeremiah.

The truth about God is Jesus Christ—light, life and love. Whatever is dark to us will, by means of our obedience, become as clear as the truth which we have made ours by obedience. The bit we do know is the most glorious, unfathomable delight conceivable, and that is going to be true about everything to do with God and us. The process is continual obedience.

This world is for redemption, not for progress, and a Christian is one who has been taken into that secret by the personal experience of Redemption. It is a continual revelation centring round one thing, the Cross of God in Jesus Christ, and the characteristic is that we have to be crucified too, and live only the life "hid with Christ in God."

DEFACEMENT

Jeremiah 13:1–17

... before He cause darkness ... (Jeremiah 13:16)

When a man is afraid of God the only right thing for him to do is to run straight to God and not wait to dress himself. The further we get away from God the more we want to dress ourselves up in prayer, etc., but if we fly, just as we are, God will take us and remove the unclean thing.

1. Outward Perishing and Inward Corrupting (Jeremiah 13:1–11)

Behold, the girdle was marred, it was profitable for nothing. . . . After this manner will I mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem. (13:7, 9)

God created His chosen people for one purpose, not to be like other nations, but to be His servant until through them every nation should come to know Who Jehovah is. Israel continually "backed out" of God's purpose for them.

"And, behold, the girdle was marred." The marring of the girdle has reference to the inward moral state of the people; the captivity has to do with the external state of the people. God did not send Israel into captivity, they put themselves there. They corrupted themselves inwardly first, they became as a dirty girdle—"This evil people . . . shall even be as this girdle, which is profitable for nothing" (RV). The purpose of God in the captivity was to remove those who were evil from His people, preserving the remnant. The physical disappearance of the people is foretold in Leviticus 26; they perished outwardly because they had been corrupted inwardly. The inward corruption did not take place during the exile, but before; and because of the inward corruption they were taken into captivity.

Verse 11 is a wonderful revelation of the heart of God towards His people—"that they might be unto Me for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory [the counterpart of this verse is Deuteronomy 26:18–19, and this purpose is the explanation of the stern indignation of God against the stubbornness that seemed to thwart it]: but they would not hear." The Babylonish captivity put an end to idolatry for ever. When Our Lord came the people were guilty of Pharisaism. The characteristic of Pharisaism in Our Lord's day was an intense hatred of idolatry (cf. Luke 11:24–26).

Spiritually when an individual builds his confidence on anything less than God inevitably there will be a perishing of the ground of confidence. Experience is the door to a life. The wonderful thing about real living experience is that it is never referred to as past, but merely as the entrance into what is now enjoyed. Beware of building your faith on your experience of God's grace instead of on God Who makes the experience possible. "Ye seek Me," said Jesus, "not because ye saw signs, but because ye ate of the loaves and were filled" (RV). "Put men's bodies first, feed them, heal them, educate them, then they will make You King." Perfectly true, but the devil's truth that has gone forth to-day as an angel of light. Instead of God's ways being put first, every other thing is put first.

2. Inward Dissipation and Outward Degeneration (Jeremiah 13:12–17)

Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will fill all the inhabitants of this land . . . with drunkenness. (cf. Psalm 60:3)

There is a difference in the way God deals with a disobedient child of His and the way He deals with a man who is going on his course without realising what he is doing. The prophets always make God take the responsibility for the destructions that come across His disobedient children.

"Give glory to the LORD your God." There are always one or two in the midst of a corrupt people who will listen to God's voice. Repentance is never given to crowds of people, but to individuals in the crowd. "If any man will hear My voice . . ." These prophets while they proclaim the judgements of God always present the pleading of God with individuals. Never succumb to believing in an inevitable fate, but fly to God, then you will never know the darkness or the judgements on sin (cf. John 3:19). Judgement comes because of conscious rejection or conscious neglect. If we see and do not obey, there will be the wandering in the shadows, by God's decree. There is always a way back to God, and that is to fly as you are, not as you want to be.

"But if ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret for your pride" (Jeremiah 13:17 RV). Jeremiah expresses the deep vicarious grief that is always welling up in him and makes him such a type of Our Lord (see Luke 13:34). To realise that it is possible for everyone to be in the light and experiencing the love of God, keeps us close to God's heart in intercession for those who will not heed.

THE SILENT SACRED LAND

Jeremiah 13:18–27

Wherefore come these things upon me? (Jeremiah 13:22)

To some people every day brings fresh causes to disbelieve God and to others new opportunities of praising and knowing God. This is not because the one is in physical health and the other not, but because one has a moral twist and the other has not. Disbelief in God is never only intellectual, it is moral.

1. Ashes of Roses

Sit ye down low [mg]: for your headtires are come down, even your beautiful crown [mg].... Judah is carried away captive all of it. (13:18–19 RV)

We have to be "kings and priests unto God," but when once our bodies or our circumstances slip away from the rule of God in and through us there is "the fading flower of his glorious beauty" (Isaiah 28:1 RV). When we cease to do the will of God and begin to suffer it like stoics, instantly our "country" goes from us—"even the crown of your glory" (RV).

One might almost fill a large flower bed with plants arranged according to their cold-resisting powers, so that on each morning of late autumn and early winter we could see how much frost there had been the night before by the plants that had suffered.

E. K. Robinson

There is no virtue, no holiness, no life apart from the one Life, that can stand the frosted air of the world, the flesh and the devil and be more than conqueror. Jeremiah is revealing that if the life of the Son of God is not in us everything will fade and pass into ashes; when His life is in us there is no fading of any flower or beauty (cf. Isaiah 42:3).

2. Accomplishment of Ruin

The cities of the South are shut up, and there is none to open them. (13:19 RV)

Apart from the manifestation of the life of the Son of God in us all strongholds of natural virtues will sink into ruin. The Spirit of God puts corruption on natural virtues and excellencies because they belong to the man and the life of old. The Spirit of God never patches up our natural virtues, He never takes them and makes them more noble. He reconstructs us by re-creation until we are in the image of Jesus Christ.

3. Aspects of Realisation

Where is the flock that was given thee, thy beautiful flock? (13:20)

Learn to watch what God has put the sentence of death on, first in His Word, and then in personal experience. The life of the Son of God in us is the only thing that has no sentence of death on it. If we remain true to His life in us these disasters will be impossible because His Life is incorruptible.

4. Anguish of Rigour

... shall not sorrows take hold of thee, as of a woman in travail? (13:21 RV)

In stating the bondage of a turncoat from God's ways the Bible applies terms of the greatest ruggedness (cf. 2 Peter 2:22). God reveals the truth that the meanest⁶ elements in personal life exercise tyranny over men who used to be a great power for God.

5. Ashamed in Retreat

... thy heels suffer violence. (Jeremiah 13:22 RV)

^{6.} The word mean as used here refers to something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

Some sorrows leave a stateliness, but this will be a cowering shame and misery; the people will be driven into captivity like the most degraded of slaves, without even sandals on. Such suffering does not teach obedience, it is the result of deliberate transgression. Shame pulls the house of life into despicable ruin (cf. Luke 15:14–16). There is no refuge for the house of life saving in the Lord Jesus Christ; no refuge in natural goodness, in prayer; not only no refuge but no salvation. The only way in which the house of life is made secure, and more than secure, an amazing beauty, is through the salvation of Jesus Christ. When the Spirit of God comes into us and prepares the way for the forming of the life of the Son of God in us, there is every now and again a great aftermath of inexpressible shame as He throws light on the past. It is more than humility, it is humiliation. Humility is a virtue, the outcome of God's indwelling; humiliation is where the Spirit of God strikes down into the things that have been defying God, till there is nothing left to support them.

6. Anathema to Rebels

Can the Ethiopian change his skin . . .?

The condition of the people is hopeless, habit has become second nature; the day for reformation has gone by. Never trust innocence of outlook in yourself or in other people when the statements of God's word are directly opposite (see Mark 7:21 and Jeremiah 17:19). We continually trust in ourselves and other people until we have learned to have absolute confidence in God. It is difficult when convicted to turn to Jesus Christ; we turn to vowing; but unless we turn to Jesus in obedience and let His life enter in, it is hopeless, for we build again on the same old foundation. "I never could be guilty of that." Yes, you could. The only place of safety is under the shadow of the Almighty. See you don't play hide and seek, but keep up the absolute life of "hide." "Your life is hid with Christ in God"; then there will be immunity from all the things spoken of here but if once through curiosity we begin to go out in speculation or in vagaries of our own, we shall find that God is no respecter of persons.

7. Actual Rejection

Therefore will I scatter them, as the stubble that passeth away. . . . This is thy lot, the portion measured unto thee from Me, saith the LORD. (13:24–25 RV)

"We are the people of God, it does not matter what our moral character is like." The prophets talked in this way and the people trusted them (cf. 7:4–8).

"Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem! Thou wilt not be made clean; how long shall it yet be?" (13:27 RV)—a sore, long-lasting purifying judgement time.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 7 JUNE 1938 No. 3 NOTES ON JEREMIAH

DROUGHT

Jeremiah 14

They come to the pits, and find no water. . . . For that no rain hath been in the land, the plowmen are ashamed. (Jeremiah 14:3–4 RV)

While one desire remains unsatisfied, God is not Lord over all. That means we must quit some desires or else quit God. Most of us bring our desires to God and He has to wither them. When we delight in God He gives us our desires because they are in accordance with His will (see Psalm 37:4). A child goes to its mother about its skin and its toys, and we dare not think there are some things about us not for God to behold. A child of God is like a child of nature. Things that trouble a child are taken to its mother, and things that bother the child of God ought to be taken to God at once. Innocence of knowledge is the charm of a mature life and is like the ignorance of a child. Beware of being a spiritual prig, full of knowledge, instead of having the great innocence of knowledge which is the life of faith.

1. The Destruction That Wasteth at Noonday (Jeremiah 14:1–9)

Two things the Bible states are sure for men if they obey God—bread and water (see Isaiah 33:16); that is all God has promised us. Look over the history of civilisations and you will find every disaster has come by taking more. A spiritual application may be made along this line—"a famine . . . of hearing the words of the LORD" strikes every soul that has departed from the living God and dwelt by pleasant spiritual experiences—God's word dead to you, no inspiration about it; prayer dead, spiritual communion dead, you wait and long and pray and nothing happens, everything languishing and dying. You will find if sin has not been the cause, there has been a selfish glutting of your soul on experiences instead of going on to know God Who gave you the experiences. We refuse to eat the old corn of the land, we prefer manna—that God should always do some exceptional thing for us. Spiritual famine and dearth, if it does not start from sin, starts from being a spiritual glutton, dwelling entirely on the experience that God has given us instead of seeing that the experience is but the gateway to the life. Life is the thing we live, experience is the gateway to new phases of life, and if we remain at the gate always we shall die of starvation.

"We have sinned against Thee" (Jeremiah 14:7). There is a difference between a moralist's and a Christian's condemnation of sin. A spiritual Christian always feels the unmitigated horror of the sin of another. A moralist never does, to him it is an occasion to "lambaste" something that is wrong. A Christian knows that the possibilities of every sin ever committed are in him but for the grace of God. The condemnation of sin before we are saved is bitter, intense and proud. After we are saved, the sins of others come upon us with the twofold weight of the possibility of doing the like ourselves, and the possibility of vicarious intercession.

"Why shouldest Thou be . . . as a mighty man that cannot save?" (14:9). Why does not God speak? This is not atheism, but the agony of a human heart getting into the secret of the Cross. The Cross of Jesus Christ is not the cross of a martyr, but the revelation of the essential nature of the Trinity. The most earnest of us deal with the Cross as a thing that is past, it is never past, it is the eternal revelation of Almighty God. Instantly we come face to face with all the possibility of moral development that must come by suffering (cf. Hebrews 5:8).

2. Deceived into the Snare of the Fowler (Jeremiah 14:10-22)

And the LORD said unto me, Pray not for this people for their good. When they fast, I will not hear their cry. . . . (14:11–12 RV)

Jeremiah pleads that the people have been misled by false prophets, but God says—"I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spake I unto them"; they prophesied out of the deceit of their hearts. That does not mean self-deceit, it means deceit which the heart has devised that flattered sinful passions.

"And thou shalt say this word unto them, Let mine eyes run down with tears night and day, and let them not cease" (14:17 RV). God tells Jeremiah to show his own grief to the people.

"Hast Thou utterly rejected Judah? hath Thy soul lothed Zion?... Do not abhor us, ... remember, break not Thy covenant with us" (14:19, 21). In such words the prophet is born again in an agony of grief into a childlike simplicity, pouring out his soul before God. When the mind is born again of grief it loses all reason and becomes like a child, it has nothing to plead, only absolute despair.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 7 JULY 1938 No. 4 NOTES ON JEREMIAH

SCARCELY SAVED

Jeremiah 16

They shall not be lamented. (Jeremiah 16:4)

"And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" (1 Peter 4:18). Heaven must have held its breath several times over the best of us.

1. The Prophet's Vicarious Aloofness (Jeremiah 16:1–9)

Thou shalt not take thee a wife. . . . (16:2)

Vicarious aloofness is all very well in mind, but it is quite another matter to exhibit it in actual life. We must be careful to remember that Jeremiah was a man first and then a prophet, he was not an ascetic. This command to Jeremiah means that every relationship of a man's life, even to the most intimate and Godordained, must be sacrificed at times to God's will. If we take celibacy as a command of God we make God contradict Himself. Whenever celibacy or poverty are enjoined in the Bible they are enjoined because God wants to express in that crisis a particular message in a particular age. This command is not a principle laid down but a command from God to a prophet.

"All things are lawful, . . . but all things are not expedient," says Paul, i.e. all things are lawful to me as a natural man, but not expedient to me as a spiritual man because I am under a superior command, viz.: a relationship to God. "I don't intend to waive my rights, this particular reading and culture is good for me; this particular recreation is a great expansion to my mind, therefore I will do it"—absolutely pagan reasoning from beginning to end. How many of us have begun to realise our privilege of not doing things? The liberty to waive our rights is the great privilege of Christian sanctity. One of the meanest things is to say, "I don't do certain things because it will damage me." Paul's argument is—"I don't do certain things because it will damage someone else" (see 1 Corinthians 8:9–13). "For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh." Paul there expresses this vicarious attitude, which is characteristic alone of the Spirit of Christ (cf. Exodus 32:32).

2. The Prophetic Visualised Amelioration (Jeremiah 16:10–15)

Verse 10 presents the attitude that God is taking unreasonable liberties—"Wherefore hath the LORD pronounced all this great evil against us?" Impregnable self-righteousness will scandalise God ruthlessly. Selfpity is the morbid side of self-righteousness—"Why should this thing fall on me? God is taking liberties with me, I am in the right."

"Therefore will I cast you forth out of this land into the land that ye have not known, . . . and there shall ye serve other gods day and night" (RV), i.e., "you may serve the gods you have longed so much after as long as you will." God restrains and restrains, warns and warns, overlooks and overlooks; then He begins to bring out embarrassments against us. In the days before you knew God you did any number of things which God overlooked, but try and do them now, and if you persist you will realise what is written in Psalm 106:15—"And He gave them their request; but sent leanness into their soul." "He gave them their request"—all restraint gone. The man who has known what God is like, and what His life is like, but still persists in going against it, will come to a time when God will fling him out to do as he chooses.

3. The Prophetic Visitation Approaching (Jeremiah 16:16-21)

For Mine eyes are upon all their ways. . . . (16:17)

The tendency to-day is to put the consequences of sin as the consequences of sin: the consequences of sin have a righteous God behind them. We take the Bible idea out of punishments and say it is the inevitable result. The Bible says that the inevitable result is brought by a personal God, and is not an ordinary moral result. Beware of making punishment the mere result of sin, it arises from the presence of a personal God.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 7 SEPTEMBER 1938 NO. 6 NOTES ON JEREMIAH

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE

Jeremiah 17

The LORD, the fountain of living waters. (Jeremiah 17:13)

The truth of the moment is brought by Jesus into relation with Himself, the Truth. He will not allow us to rest in any detail of truth unless it is rooted in Him, it will turn to a curse instead of blessing. God continually brings us to a willingness for death on every line—death to our wishes, our desires, death to everything that in any degree is going to detach us from the Fountain of Life: we are willing to die to everything, consequently we never die. As long as we side with the thing that is going to be destroyed, we shall be destroyed with it. Every individual has the power to turn the course of life into destruction or into perfection, according to what way he chooses when God reveals the best way.

1. The Eternal Punishment of Sin (Jeremiah 17:1-4)

All sin is unpardonable, every sinner is pardonable. God's punishment of sin is eternal, i.e. ageless. "For ye have kindled a fire in My anger which shall burn for ever" (RV). God cannot alter, and as long as there is sin it must be punished. If punishment for sin ceases, God ceases to be God. God loves where He cannot yet forgive, where forgiveness in its full sense is as yet impossible, there is no contact of heart because that which lies between has not even begun to yield to the "besom" of holy destruction.

(a) The Seat of Sin (17:1-2)

The sin of Judah . . . is graven upon the table of their heart

"The table of their heart" is the inward seat of sin. If sin is graven with a pen of iron upon the human heart, it was also graven with an iron nail in our Lord's hands and feet. Consciousness of sin is the exhaustion of sin, and is as big an alarm to the devil as it is a joy to the Holy Ghost. It is when we are not conscious of sin that condemnation is certain; when it spurts out in wrongs and immoralities, there is a chance for God. "The publicans and the harlots . . ."—the people who explode into all kinds of wrongs and crimes—"go into the kingdom of God before you," said Jesus. The deep condensed pressure of iniquity only shows itself with tremendous force like that when we go on in certain lines of conduct. When Jesus Christ comes on the scene the pressure in the heart bursts out at once (cf. John 15:22).

(b) The Severity of Sanctity (17:3-4)

"I will give thy substance and all thy treasures for a spoil . . . " (RV). We distinguish between sin and the sinner, but the Bible never does. God can never pardon sin, it is impossible: He can forgive the sinner when once the sinner accepts His verdict against sin. If he does not, the punishment of sin is eternal. Eternal life or eternal death is the quality of the particular type of life a man lives. There is no alteration—God cannot pardon sin, but He instantly receives the sinner when the sinner leaves his sin and comes to Him. The Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ does not mean that God forgives the sinner and leaves him in his sin; God forgives a man for being a sinner and puts him in the place where he need never be a sinner any more.

Distinction must be made between punishment and suffering. Punishment is not suffering that makes people better; people who are punished are nearly always hardened, as in this case. God often brings a man down to elemental life by punishment for sin in order to save his soul, and through intense physical suffering, either for his own wrongdoing or the wrongdoing of others, he is brought back to elemental life because God is only after one thing, a right relationship to Himself, and He does not care about our physical comforts. Until we are rightly related to Him, God will play ruthless havoc with every comfort and relationship we have.

2. The Eternal Programme of Sanctity (Jeremiah 17:5–13)

(a) The Barren Heath

The Bible unvarnishedly speaks of fundamental trust in another as wickedness. "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm . . ." Wherever we trust in goodness or nobility instead of in God, we suddenly find ourselves in a howling waste wilderness. The attitude of a godly life is to put no confidence in anything or anyone but God. Not only do we find disillusionment, but we find that God does not allow us teachers or comrades or friends too long. Immediately our teachers or friends begin to wean our trust from Him, there is blighting and upset, followed by separation; until the great secret is learned that when once a man or woman's heart is strong in confidence in God, there is no snare in earthly friendship because the heart is at rest with God, and there are no areas of desert and wilderness such as are frequently seen in lives.

Jesus Christ brings us into a sanctity where God alone lives. The lives that grow stronger are lives in the desert, deep-rooted in God, and they always remind us of God when we come in contact with them; they never sentimentalise our hearts around them. We can never rest in a man or woman of God, there is always something thorny about them that warns us off, until the man or woman becomes a mere indicator to Jesus Christ. In the Bible we never find the close intimacies of friendship that we find everywhere else. Great men and great women are taken up and dropped, and the one Figure left is Jesus Christ. We do not forget the friends who have helped us, but they have merged us into a better knowledge of Jesus Christ. Every friendship that does not lead to a deeper, better knowledge of God and at the same time make us fundamentally independent of that friendship, is a curse.

(b) The Blighting Hideousness

The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it? (17:9)

The Spirit of God corrupts our natural virtues. If we are naturally pure-minded, naturally good-tempered, naturally loving, we shall find that since we became spiritual God's corruption has been put on everything that was of old, because the natural virtues are not promises of what we are going to be, but remnants of what we were created to be, and the new life re-forms its own virtues. It is the most woeful thing to see people in the service of God depending on what the grace of God never gave them, depending on what they have by the accidents of heredity. Intellectually we nearly always sympathise with pagan virtues, while spiritually God is trying to get us into contact with the real life of the Lord Jesus Christ that cannot be described in terms of natural virtues.

And every virtue we possess,

Is His alone.

In the life of Jesus, the perfectly sinless One, the natural was offered by Him as a sacrifice to God. When we are sanctified the perpetual temptation is to do what Jesus did not do—"Now I am sanctified I can do what I like." I cannot. My natural life and natural gifts are to be turned into a spiritual possession by offering them to God.

"They have forsaken the LORD, the fountain of living waters." We face the problems of life with a pagan intellect and say, "How confusing." The Bible is simple—Holiness unto the LORD and no care for any other thing. The whole of life is meant to exhibit that God is making saints, not civilisations or clever able men and women, but saints.

DIZZINESS

Jeremiah 17:14–18

The human body has a "spirit level" in the head, when that spirit level is disturbed, vertigo or dizziness is the result. There is a "spirit level" spiritually, viz., union with God, and unless that is kept right dizziness and confusion of thought will always happen.

1. Dejection and Derision (Jeremiah 17:14–15)

"Reproach hath broken my heart" (cf. Matthew 27:39–44). They reproached Jesus with the truth and He had not a word to say. He died in ignominy and shame, remember. It was not that sinners jeered at Him, but that the people He came to save flung in His teeth the things that He had said. The same thing with Jeremiah—"Behold, they say unto me, Where is the word of the LORD? let it come now," and Jeremiah turned to God in despair. "Oh Lord, bring me not to confusion by leaving these prophecies unfulfilled."

If you stand for God's truth you are sure to experience reproach, and if once you open your mouth to vindicate yourself, you lose everything you were on the point of gaining. Let the ignominy and shame come. "For we also are weak in Him." It is the one thing we won't be—"weak in Him." When Paul said, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me," they were weak things he spoke about, how to be abased, to be hungry, to suffer need. That is the test of a Christian, the power to descend until you are looked upon as absolute refuse and you have not a word to say any more than your Lord had. Only in that condition see that your faith in God does not fail.

2. Devotion and Depression (Jeremiah 17:16-17)

These verses explain why Our Lord said that God's message would only be accepted through strangers (see Luke 4:16–27). A stranger knows nothing whatever about our condition, the consequence is his message goes straight home and conscience says, "That must be the voice of God." A person who knows us dare not say what he knows because immediately he does it is difficult to appear free from personal vindictiveness.

People charged Jeremiah with exhibiting personal spleen—"You have been saying these things and nothing has happened; you simply prophesy because you are vindictive against us." It is easier to be true to conviction than to be true to God. As workers for God we must be identified with God, not with His message.

Another danger of a prophet is the snare the prophet Jonah fell into, and Jeremiah also nearly fell into it. Jonah denounced the people of Nineveh and when God did not carry it out, Jonah was angry with God.

3. Directed Destruction (Jeremiah 17:18)

Bring upon them the day of evil. . . .

This is not the utterance of a spiteful, vindictive temperament; it is the statement of a prophet of God Who knows God's truth, and knows also that the saving of himself as a prophet means the destruction of the people whom he loves better than himself. "Destroy them with double destruction," till everything contrary to God has been broken and demolished. This is where Jeremiah is nearest Jesus Christ and farthest from us. "I only want to see the people who are against me humiliated"—that is the spirit of the devil. The spirit of a prophet is—"God must be vindicated, and as a servant of God I will stand alongside the vindication, although it means standing with God against the ones who are dearer to me than life."

THE POTTER AND THE CLAY

Jeremiah 17:19–18:10

I do with you as this potter. (Jeremiah 18:6)

1. The Re-Statement of the Blessed Health (Jeremiah 17:19-27)

These verses show that the way of safety appointed to the people lies in keeping one of the fundamental precepts of the Decalogue, viz., the observance of the Sabbath. "Thus saith the LORD; take heed for your life's sake [RV mg], and bear no burden on the sabbath day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem" (17:21– 22). Verses 24–26 describe the blessings which will be brought to the people if they hallow the Sabbath day, and verse 27 describes the curse if it is profaned. Being not under the law but under grace means that we fulfil all the old law easily and a good deal more. With regard to the Sabbath, Jesus said "the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath." That means we have to remember that Jesus Christ is the Lord of the one day that is His, though we can rob Him of it. When we recognise that the Sabbath day belongs to God, every other day that we give over to Him is our gift. The same with regard to money and possessions. The giving of the tenth is not a sign that it all belongs to God, but a sign that the tenth belongs to God and the rest is ours, and we are held responsible for what we do with it. Our Lord says, "Think not that I came to destroy the law or the prophets: I came not to destroy, but to fulfil" (Matthew 5:17 RV). If we will heed the spirit of God He will always check when we are in danger of turning liberty into license.

2. The Resource of Boundless Holiness (Jeremiah 18:1–10)

Every prophecy in Jeremiah begins with a reference to the word of the Lord coming to him. "The word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying, Arise, and go down to the potter's house, and there I will cause thee to hear My words" (18:1–2). The word of Jehovah which came to Jeremiah by suggestion in the potter's house was that God is sovereign in history, He will mould and re-mould until He gets the "vessel" to His mind. And yet God's sovereignty has limitations which He Himself has sovereignly placed in man—the mysterious gift of freedom. With man rests the final issue, not with God.

"O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the LORD. Behold, as the clay in the potter's hand, so are ye in Mine hand, O house of Israel" (18:6). The illustration God uses is that of a potter dealing with stubborn clay and remodelling it according to his own purpose. The snare of belief in God's sovereignty is to make that sovereignty a logically consistent thing, whereas the sovereignty of God is the free will of God in which two conditions are plainly placed by God Himself, first the holiness of God and second the freedom of man. The truth of God in application is always moral. Jeremiah is bringing the truth in application to these people that they are not going to obtain anything from God unless they maintain a right relationship to Him, and that even if they should be destroyed on the wheel, God's purpose for His covenant people would still come to pass.

God never gives us an answer, He simply puts us on lines where it is possible for the truth to break more and more as we go on.

EXCELSIOR

Jeremiah 18:11-23

Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon . . . ? (Jeremiah 18:14)

"Excelsior" means higher still. The conception of these studies is that man must look higher for the source of life and salvation than the experience of life, apart from an experimental knowledge of God, would lead him to look. Once fail from looking at the highest and degeneration begins. It is the early desires that are the highest and best.

1. False Direction (Jeremiah 18:11–13)

These people are affecting to be the people of God—"We are the people of God, this is the temple of God; and these prophets' talk is all beside the mark, the prophets we like to listen to are those who prophesy smooth things." Affectation is the attitude of life when there is no life, and the higher the life affected, the deeper the iniquity. Jeremiah is probing straight down to the rottenness at the heart. The early aspirations God stirred in them have gone, and now they simply make God and everything in connection with Him an affectation to go on their own ways. "But they say, . . . we will walk after our own devices, and we will do every one after the stubbornness of his evil heart" (18:12 RV).

2. Forsaken Direction (Jeremiah 18:14-17)

"Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon . . . ?" Will a man forsake the very way of his own life when he knows what it is? It is just that obstinacy that makes the problem of individual and national life. "Knowledge is virtue, if only men knew, they would not go wrong," is not true. It is not sufficient to be persuaded a thing is wrong; there is an obstinacy that deliberately takes the law into its own hand and leaves the source of its life. There needs to be a recognition of where the source of life is and a determination to stay at it. Backsliding is the prevailing of human stubbornness after the experimental knowledge of salvation. Backsliding is never spoken of in the Bible as a degenerate tendency, but as a conscious forsaking. "They have caused them to stumble in their ways, in the ancient paths" (RV)—the ways the patriarchs walked in, of time immemorial, a dateless way, the way of always being in right relationship to God; but they have caused them to stumble out of that way by making sacrifices to vanity. It is no longer "Satisfy us early with Thy mercy" but, "Satisfy us with these other things, we want material prosperity and success." They have forgotten the Source of their life while still maintaining the gesticulations of a life that had been nourished from the mountain-tops of God, but is no longer nourished there. They have found "a way not cast up," a way on which one cannot advance. Once stop looking at the mountain and all prosperity, which is but an effect, vanishes. Never falter by trying to make anything lesser the cause for what is greater; for instance, trying to make health of body the cause for a right spiritual relationship, or material prosperity the cause for worshipping God, and never make obedience the reason that God is blessing you, obedience is the effect of being rightly related to God. Remember our life is maintained from the heights only.

3. Forced Direction (Jeremiah 18:18–23)

Then said they, Come and let us devise devices against Jeremiah. . . . And let us not give heed to any of his words. (18:18)

Beware of seeking out inconsistencies in God's children in order to evade obeying God's message yourself. If there comes to you a message on personal holiness, beware of the tendency that puts you on the watch to see if that person is consistent; the reason you watch is that you want to evade obeying God's message. There is an antipathy to the message of holiness which prides itself on being amazingly shrewd, and whenever a man of God is known to fall, there is a sigh of relief—"Well, that saves me, I have always been suspicious about this holy life," and under the affectation of profound sadness there is a glow of relief on the inside. The trick is as old as the garden of Eden.

Verses 19–23. Jeremiah asks God to bring down His vengeance upon the people, he sees that the people he loves can only be touched by the vengeance of God; and yet Jesus said, "The Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." But we must never forget what is Our Lord's definition of life, "a man's life consisteth not," He says, "in the abundance of the things which he possesseth," and devastation and destruction of these things may mean the salvation of the life as Jesus sees it. One of the hardest lessons to learn is that of "hands off" in certain kinds of suffering, because you may be putting yourself in the way of God saving a life. The only way in which the salvation of that life can come may be the very way you have told God you will never allow it to come. The secret is to maintain life from the highest plane—"hid with Christ in God."

BROKEN POTTERY

Jeremiah 19

A potter's vessel, that cannot be made whole again. (Jeremiah 19:11)

There are two sins of spiritual condition that cannot be forgiven; the first is sin against man—spiritual murder, unforgiving dislike; the second is sin against God-shutting God out from worship and everything. Neither of these sins are acts, they are conditions. When a man holds either, God is outside him in every sense, holding to him only by the Creator relationship, and He keeps that hold against the will of the man. The ordinary occurrences of life reveal to us the condition of our hearts and minds—a dislike that will not forgive, that has not the slightest intention of making any excuse. That is a natural condition that cannot be forgiven until a man wishes to turn from it. The great characteristic of the supernatural grace of God is put by Jesus on the line of forgiveness. Forgiveness is not an act, it is the supernatural manifestation of a miracle within us.

In Jeremiah 18 a picture of muddled clay remodelled; in this chapter we have a picture of a made and used vessel smashed into the scrap-heap. "We have Abraham to our father" (Luke 3:8). "My father and mother were spiritual, therefore I am a child of God." We are only children of God by personal regeneration through the Atonement. Children of God are not made by physical creation, but by moral creation. God created His ancient people for one purpose only, to be His servants until the whole world should know Who He is, that purpose will be fulfilled whether His people are on the scrap-heap or not.

1. Jeremiah and the Judicious Minds (Jeremiah 19:1-2; John 2:13-17)

The attitude of Our Lord to the judicious minds of His day was similar. In the temple precincts judicious minds were without excuse, because they understood what Our Lord was doing. Outside Jerusalem, Our Lord always said, "Don't tell anyone Who I am"; every time He went to Jerusalem He made it clear Who He was.

The presentation of the Gospel of God to sinners is one of love and mercy, but to the house of God one of judgement and truth. When we preach to the crowd outside we lambaste drunkenness and other things, Jesus never did. The stern messages of the Bible are never given to sinners, but to God's people. If we follow the order God gives, we will find John 16:1 is true.

2. Jeremiah and the Judgement Message (Jeremiah 19:3; 1 Corinthians 3:17)

"They have . . . estranged this place. . . ." They have disowned it as the house of God and made it their own place. "If any man destroyeth the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are" (RV). Our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost, we must take care not to estrange "this place."

In the second cleansing of the Temple Our Lord "would not suffer that any man should carry a vessel through the temple," making it a convenience (see Mark 11:15–17). How many of us use our bodily strength as a convenience for ourselves? The appeal nowadays is to rest on Sundays not because it is God's day, but because we shall do our work better in the week. God touches His children's bodies with pain in an extraordinary way (see 1 Peter 4:1); the devil takes care we do not suffer in the flesh as long as we use our bodies for ourselves. We can always escape the purpose of God for our bodily lives. Don't disown your body as a temple of God, but know that whatever happens to your body is under the sovereignty of God.

"... which temple ye are." The abode of God is not the abode of God's blessings, but the abode of the blessing God. "We have this treasure in earthen vessels," and the vessel must be broken before the light appears. When God is making our bodies transparent for Himself to shine through we ask Him to patch us up. "No," says God, "I am making a window." He made His Son a bruised and broken vessel (see Isaiah 53). When we are bruised we say "That is the devil." Don't despise the chastenings of the Lord. We are God's and God is in us for His glory. We must always take our orders from God's sovereignty, not from our ideas of how God should work.

3. Despising the Justice of God (Jeremiah 19:4; 1 Corinthians 4:5)

And have filled this place with the blood of innocents.

In cleansing the temple courts Jesus did not drive out the doves, He asked the owners to take them out. "Judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come." In mind and spirit and heart there are pure affections and ideas born of the Holy Ghost that are being turned into merchandise by us, we use them not for God's glory but for our own ends, and ask God to bless them. The devil will make you judge your sentiments before the Lord appears; don't. The devil will counterfeit a hyperconscientiousness for the detecting voice of the Spirit of God. This motive was wrong, that was wrong, he tries to make us rake up things before God. There are times when we are brought under the scrutiny of God and are marvellously conscious of the Lord's presence, that is the moment to judge, that is the crisis of self-revelation. When those moments come, don't despise them.

4. Desecrating the Worship of God (Jeremiah 19:5; Galatians 5:4)

They have offered burnt-offerings "which I commanded not." The Apostle Paul is dealing with the same sentiment. When once we begin to choose what we are going to dedicate to God, or to what religious creed or conviction we are going to devote our lives, we are desecrating what God has consecrated. God has told us to worship Him by presenting our bodies to Him. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your spiritual worship [RV mg]" (Romans 12:1).

THE FOOLISHNESS OF GOD

O LORD, . . . every one mocketh me. (Jeremiah 20:7)

Jeremiah came back to the city and repeated to all the people the message he gave to the elders (Jeremiah 19:14–15). For the first time Jeremiah is designated by his office—"the prophet" (20:2), and the action of Pashur is against him as a prophet for his public utterance. According to the people Pashur was right and Jeremiah a raving fanatic. How we select things out of the Bible! We have forgotten what Paul wrote—"For He was crucified through weakness. . . . For we also are weak in Him" (RV). A Christian is one who can be weak, an abject failure in the eyes of the world. Jeremiah is getting into the throes of this central revelation of God Almighty—the Cross.

1. The Degradation of Divinity (Jeremiah 20:1-6)

There comes a time with nations or individuals when they may degrade Divinity and never be bothered again (cf. Mark 6:27; Luke 23:8–9). The despite done to Jeremiah is done to God Almighty (cf. Acts 9:4—"Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?"). Our Lord identifies His great name with the feeblest of His disciples.

2. The Discipline of Grace (Jeremiah 20:7–18)

It takes the grace of God to go through disgrace unspoilt. If Jeremiah's distress makes you condemn him, pass it by; but if, according to the reason of this world, you understand that God's ways are foolishness, you will put Jeremiah's grief and staggered amazement within sight of Gethsemane and Calvary and no one else near. Every problem is faced and fathomed in the prophecies of Jeremiah, that is why he stands nearer to the centre of God's heart than any of the prophets.

(a) Deceived (20:7–8)

"O Lord, Thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived." Jeremiah says in heart-breaking sobs before God "I have been deceived in what I hoped Thou wouldest do." His cry is not the theological argument of a man's mind, he is pouring it all out before God; there is no charge brought against God and no reply from God. I spoke because the people were reproaching Thy word, and now I see nothing but "derision all the day" (RV).

(b) Distressed (20:9)

Jeremiah is sensitive to the last degree to all the affinities of the people and he speaks out of perplexity—if I determine to keep silent, "then there is in mine heart as it were a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I am weary with forbearing" (RV).

(c) Defamed (20:10)

"I have heard the defaming of many. . . . Denounce, and we will denounce him, say all my familiar friends, they that watch for my halting" (RV). "The people watch for inconsistencies in my life that they may say on that ground I am not preaching Thy truth." To be defamed means that if you stand for God you will not be able to stand for anything else—"no use since they turned religious."

(d) Devoted (20:11-13)

"But the LORD is with me"—a sudden outburst of the devotion of Jeremiah's heart for God. "For unto Thee have I revealed my cause" (RV). When in communion with God his desires are a delight, he sees and enjoys deliverance. "Sing unto the LORD, praise ye the LORD: for He hath delivered the soul of the needy" (RV).

(e) De Profundis (20:14-17)

It takes the Man of Sorrows to understand where Jeremiah has got to.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 8 APRIL 1939 NO. 1 NOTES ON JEREMIAH

THE FEAR OF GOD

Jeremiah 22

O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the LORD.

A thing that is unknown and yet known to be, is always formidable. "Perfect love casteth out fear"—but not love in its beginning. To say "Therefore will we not fear, though . . ." (RV) is only possible when the love of God is having its way.

1. Oracle to Royal Jurisdiction (Jeremiah 22:1-5; Matthew 21:5)

"Go down to the house of the king. . . ." These verses indicate that every power of human government that can be used by the devil and self-interest can be reclaimed and used by God. On the other hand, everything that is usable by God is abusable by the devil. The sin of the people of God was not that they desired a king, but that they desired a king that they might be "like all the nations" (1 Samuel 8:19–20).

"Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and riding upon an ass" (RV). These words express in emblem as well as in act the whole of Old Testament prophecy along this line—a meek king, a lowly king, "riding upon an ass," which in Scripture stands for mankind. Our Lord is the only One Who can ride on humanity, "loose" (Mark 11:2). The true King is Jesus Christ Who shall reign not only in spiritual reality but in external visible reality.

2. Oracle of Royal Judgement (Jeremiah 22:6–19; Matthew 23:38; 25:41)

"And I will prepare destroyers against thee. . . ." As in the Book of Isaiah, so in Jeremiah, God is revealed as the Controller behind every power of evil; when evil strikes His people it strikes not only by God's permission but under His direct control (cf. Isaiah 37:29; John 19:11). The kings of that time by their godless courses hurried on the threatened destruction. "Weep ye not for the dead, . . . but weep sore for him that goeth away" (Jeremiah 22:10). Jeremiah counsels them not only to bemoan the king being carried away prisoner, but for the forsaken condition of the people.

"Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." Twice before Jesus had said, "My Father's house," the solemn application being that God hands individuals as well as nations over to a desecrated temple which He calls "your house." We need to bear in mind that chaos and wrath are the foundation of the life of every man who does not live in communion with God.

". . . everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." God's holiness never alters its attitude to devilishness; as long as God endures, He endures as "everlasting fire" to the devil. God is "a consuming fire" and if we side with the devil we shall know His burning. Divine fire as opposed to natural fire, burns the fiercer the farther you get away from it; when you get nearer to God, His burning becomes a comfort. Condemnation corresponds to light rejected (John 3:19). God always allows the lash to fall more heavily on His own people if once they pervert their knowledge of Him. Never ignore the fact that God is a holy God.

"Shalt thou reign, because thou strivest to excel in cedar?" (Jeremiah 22:15 RV). Kingship does not consist in the erection of royal palaces, but in the administration of right and justice.

Watch the danger of architectural prominence; whenever money which has been given for missionary enterprise goes for the erection of buildings in the name of the Son of Man Who came "to seek and to save that which was lost," starvation comes to God's people. Paul's irony in 1 Corinthians 4:8 brings to light an abiding truth: we are saved to be "kings and priests," but to become kings and priests without the humility of salvation will produce an oppression that is a disgust to the heart of God.

3. Oracle of Retributive Justice (Jeremiah 22:20-23; John 15:2, 6)

I spake unto thee in thy prosperity; but thou saidst, I will not hear.... (22:21)

Two phases of retributive justice are mentioned in John 15: the quiet removal of a fruitless branch by God (John 15:2); the noisy public removal of a fruitless branch by men (John 15:6). Steadfast maintenance of a relationship to God by private obedience is the only way to bear fruit.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL Vol. 8 May 1939 No. 2 Notes on Jeremiah

PROPHETS WISE AND OTHERWISE

Jeremiah 23

Mine heart within me is broken because of the prophets. (Jeremiah 23:9)

1. The Development of the Prophet

A prophet is one who knows with holy certainty that God's perfect will must eventually overcome all resistance and self-will. In chapter 23 Jeremiah speaks against the accredited leaders of the day and against the professional preachers. All that refers to the prophets of the Old Testament dispensation has a direct application to us, no matter what we think we are. The principles are for all, even the most insignificant of us. A great deal of what we proclaim can never be worked out in experience, but whenever a standard has to be proclaimed we are exonerated or condemned according to the way we carry out those dictates of the Spirit of God. We must be the living incarnation of what we teach or else we are humbugs. Our Lord frequently mentions the prophets. He Himself was a prophet, He came to proclaim the truth of God (cf. Matthew 23:37).

2. The Degeneracy of the Prophet

In chapter 23 Jeremiah points out very clearly how degeneration starts and continues. When an organisation is maintained by pagan methods it becomes aggressive, intolerant and quite unlike anything that takes its standard from Jesus Christ. There may be no trace of this in the individual lives of those belonging to the organisation, they may be truly humble saints. We are apt to say we are battling for God's glory when we are battling for our own organisation; union with Jesus Christ is the one essential.

(a) The Stealer in Messages

"Therefore, behold, I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, that steal My words every one from his neighbour" (23:30). Stealing in this connection does not mean taking what does not belong to us, but persuading ourselves and other people that it never belonged to anyone else. Where did you get your form of testimony from? Have you stolen God's words from your neighbour? The stealer takes the truths from his neighbour and gives them to the people without applying them to himself. The beginning of degeneracy is on that line.

(b) The Strenuous Planner

"Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, that use [take, RV mg] their tongues and say, He saith" (23:31). Spiritual life produces mental energy, but strenuous mental energy may be the counterfeit of spiritual life. The test is—is the life of God manifested in the personal life of the prophet? When people get to know us, do they find that we are amazingly captious and unlike Our Lord. Jesus said, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

(c) The Scathing of the Motive

"Behold, I am against them that prophesy lying dreams, ... and cause My people to err by their lies" (23:32 RV). God scathes the motive at the heart of the false prophet. A lie is not necessarily an inaccuracy of speech. If a prophet says, "Of course God does not mean you to live up to that standard," that is a lie which causes God's people to err. If we are not working out in our private lives the messages we are handing out, we are deepening the damnation of our own souls as messengers of God.

3. The Direction of the Prophet (a) Be Simple and Natural (23:14)

A prophet has no manner or etiquette, he is undecoratedly simple, and must find his own way into the immediate presence of God. You can get at a man in any other calling in life quicker than at a minister, because a minister is apt to be artificial.

(b) Be Sanctified and Natural (23:18)

Jeremiah's personal relationship to God was much more in evidence than the time he gave to prayer. The important direction for right guidance as a worker is to realise the presence of God and your relationship to Him. The majority of us measure our realisation of God's presence by the time we give to prayer—abominable self-righteousness! "They have their reward," said Jesus. Jeremiah lived in relationship to God all the time. The one dominant note of his life was that he was God's man. He stood apart from the Schools of the prophets, and that is why his word came with such a challenge against the prophets.

RULE OR RUIN

Jeremiah 23

The Lord is our righteousness. (Jeremiah 23:6 RV)

A Christian worker is measured by the words he speaks in the name of God. It is perilously easy to do one of two things, viz., to bind burdens on other people by God's word that we do not understand and have no intention of helping them lift (see Luke 11:46), or to placidly explain away the full purport of the word of God. Our Lord did not scathe sin, He came to save from it. The aftermath of a crooked personal disposition works out in scathing sin (see Luke 9:54).

1. Perils of Power (Jeremiah 23:1–3; cf. Luke 22:24–27)

Temporal power is merely the manifestation of a Divine purpose leaving ample room for the prostitution of that power. "But the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart." When once a man is placed in a position of honour under God's providence and does not maintain a right relationship to God, the very position in which God has put him will harden him away from God. Power we must have, whether we like it or not, but power is a terrible peril unless the life is rooted in God's grace.

Bear in mind the distinction between the results of sin and punishment for sin. Verse 2 refers to the latter—". . . behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the LORD." The inevitable result of sin is to destroy the power of knowing it is sin. The punishment of sin is that God banishes the sinner from His presence. What is being forgotten to-day is that there is any punishment—"This is simply the result of having made a mistake." The suffering that comes to the children of bad people is the inevitable result of sin, not its punishment; punishment is meted out here or hereafter to the parents who may never suffer in this present life. In this case God interfered with the punishment because they were His people.

"Ye have scattered My flock, and driven them away . . . " (23:2). Beware of the possibility of being faced by God at some time with the lives you have been the cause of being driven out.

2. Pearl of Price (Jeremiah 23:4–8; Matthew 13:45–46)

These verses are a warning as to the easy way we try to ignore the deep unchangeable purposes of Almighty God. God's purposes are brought about not only by sovereign decrees but by the delightful acquiescence of His people. That is why it takes time. God does not badger us into His will. His will will be done, and the marvel of the grace of God is that the most eager longing we have is for His will.

Any rejoicing before God that is not based on humility is never born of the Spirit of God; rejoicing is made possible by the Atonement only and is wrought by the Holy Spirit. Bit by bit God lets us see what the grace of God covers and atones for. The only attitude a Christian can have is one of absolute humility before God; if we are anything at all in the holy life it is by the grace of God and no other way. The Apostle Paul never forgot what he had been. The deeper we go into the grace of God the more profound is our humility, there is no holiness without humility.

3. Pressure of Pain (Jeremiah 23:9-15)

"Mine heart within me is broken. . . . "This is not the despondent crushing on account of sin alluded to in Psalm 51, but a profound inward emotion that staggered the prophet until he became like a drunken man because of God's wrath at the lives of the people. That is the way God works. He takes one or two and makes them understand the condition of things around them, and they have no comrades. When God is bringing a new manifestation of Himself into the world, He burdens someone, and the burden is not a pious affectation. When God begins to favour you with a burden, never try to find out whether anyone else has the same burden. We have our own little difficulties and suffering, but who among us can God take up into the distress of the Holy Ghost when He is bringing in a new manifestation of His purposes? The characteristic of a saint is not—"There are great dangers and perils, I wonder God does not rouse up His people." He won't; He will rouse you. Don't confer with others (Galatians 1:16). It is a great peril to see things, because the pressure of the pain is the beginning of being made broken bread and pouredout wine. Nothing is more abhorrent to God and man than an affected burden. The child of God is a child, and a child's griefs and joys are tremendous, but you can always tell when grief is affected because it fixes our minds on the person instead of rousing us up to realise what God is doing through that person.

HIDDEN ROCKS

Jeremiah 23:9–12

They . . . caused My people Israel to err. (Jeremiah 23:13)

The phrase "hidden rocks" is used in the Epistle of Jude as illustrating false brethren (see Jude 12 RV). At times these "rocks" present themselves in the guise of moods or sentiments. In this chapter Jeremiah is dealing with the false prophets whose peril to the people of God is that they are as rocks unlighted in the way of warning.

1. Masked Perils of Spiritual Service (Jeremiah 23:9–15)

False brethren, false moods and false prophets always begin right, and only the Spirit of God is capable of unmasking them.

"Their course is evil, and their force is not right" (23:10), literally, "they are valiant in wrong." "Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame," is Jude's description of the same kind of thing in another dispensation. "Yea, in My house have I found their wickedness, saith the LORD" (Jeremiah 23:11). Both prophet and priest who should lead the people the right way, are profane; they desecrate even the house of God by their wickedness.

Every power of personal influence with which God invests a prophet of His, turns into a thronging enticement to evil when that prophet departs from abiding in God. John 15:6 states in the language of Our Lord that lack of fruit means sovereign removal by God. "Wherefore their way shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness" (Jeremiah 23:12). The secure places of sanctification and the slippery places are put close together in the Bible. There is no scope to equal the scope of a Christian community for the grossest immorality out of hell. A man or woman who has been right with God and who lets in immorality will end worse than a heathen, there is a genius for doing wrong. "For I will bring evil upon them, . . . saith the LORD" (23:12). The evil does not happen, it is ordered. Abiding in Christ is the only safety.

2. Mighty Power of Spiritual Fellowship (Jeremiah 23:16–22; cf. Jude 12–13)

Jeremiah is having revealed to him the corruption of the false prophets of God—"they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the LORD" (23:16). If the preaching of a servant of God does not make me brace myself up and watch my feet and my ways, one of two things is the reason—either the preacher is unreal, or I hate being better. At some time or other all of us have had a detestation of being better. The rage produced by being faced with a life which in reality is better than our own, awakens either a desire to be like it, or else hatred without cause against that life. "They hated Me without a cause," said Jesus.

These men are—

"without fear." They prophesy continued peace and well-being to the despisers of God. "Ye shall have peace; . . . No evil shall come upon you."

"without water." "For who hath stood in the counsel of the LORD, and hath perceived and heard His word?" Jeremiah implies that none of the prophets have stood in the counsel of the Lord; he himself is there and he knows the Word of the Lord because of the prophetic vision that comes with it. These prophets are not in the counsel of God, there is no "water" (cf. John 7:37-39), no life or liberty or freedom, no lift into the presence of God, because they are not believing in God, they are expounding a theory. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." "The words I speak . . . "; the devil does the quoting. God makes His Word living by speaking it to you. There is a feeling of deep settled peace when the Holy Ghost brings a word, full of light and illumination, you know better than you can express, "The Lord said that to me." A false worker banks only on the statements of God divorced from communion with God. "God has said that, now stick to it." Never cling to the Word of God in an experience as something separable from God; if you do, the result will be perplexity arising out of a false confidence not rooted in God. The one test is, Am I so abiding in Jesus that every word of His is like the one He did speak? Beware of the obstinacy of belief in a word God spoke once your connection with Him is severed. The obstinacy Jeremiah alludes to is a sensual firmness, "I don't intend to budge." You never find a noble, pure character obstinate; every trace of obstinacy means sensual selfishness somewhere; it is not strength of will, but lack of will.

"without fruit." "I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran." The test that prophets preach from the presence of God is that fruit appears, not in the shape of converts, but in the shape of godly living. "Ye shall know them by their fruits." The test is—How many people stop being mean, being impure, stop committing sin? how many people learn to live rightly? The sign that God is in the word and making it living is the fruit of godliness in the lives of those who speak it and in the lives of their hearers.

The quest of spiritual power while forgetting the uses of such power is an unlighted rock that ends in destruction. Pride submerges itself and becomes piety, but it is just as devilish. Why do I want to be sanctified? Why do I want to understand God's Word? Why do I want to be pure and upright? It is quite possible to covet and put yourself on the quest for high spiritual power and end in "the blackness of darkness." Spiritual power means abiding in the vine until there is nothing but the vine, absolute effacement of myself for Jesus Christ. The false mood will creep in from the submerged part of your life whenever you get the idea that you have to be a written epistle. Of course you have, but you have not to know it! Beware of the idea—"Now I am in God's showroom, I must be careful what to say and do because I am a specimen of His work." The branch knows nothing about the fruit; all the branch knows is that "My Father . . . purgeth it." "I am the Vine," said Jesus, not the root; "I am everything there is; you are the branches."

^{7.} The word mean as used here refers to something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

SUBMERGED ROCKS

Jeremiah 23:23-40

I... will utterly forget you. (Jeremiah 23:39)
The greatest perils of the soul are submerged.

1. What the Spirit Speaketh Expressly

(Jeremiah 23:23–27; cf. 1 Timothy 4:1) We can only detect the express speaking of the Spirit by the same Spirit being in us. We do not naturally rely on the Spirit of God to expound God's word, we use our own intelligence. We think of God as being "somewhere," and we think of the hereafter in terms of space and time. When the Spirit of God expounds the spiritual life He does not deal with locations. "Am I a God at hand, saith the LORD, and not a God afar off?" There is neither "near" nor "far" with God. We have to un-learn our parochial notions about God, viz., the idea that He is interested in our local circumstances; the truth is that God enables us to be interested in Him in our local circumstances.

"I have heard what the prophets have said, that prophesy lies in My name." To "prophesy lies in My name" is to speak a Bible truth about God because it sounds right and then live exactly as if our own common sense were God. All our morality that is not based on a right relationship to God is as "filthy rags" in His sight.

Verse 27—"which think to cause my people to forget My Name . . . "—refers to the fact that the prophets relate their dreams to their fellow-men, not to their fellow-prophets. We hear too much about the "Higher Christian Life,"8 about entire sanctification, and the baptism of the Holy Ghost; they are experiences wrought by God, to be confessed in His Name. These realities of the soul are closely allied to reticence. Jesus did not say, "everyone who shall testify of Me," but, "every one who shall confess Me before men . . ." (RV). The glib way in which we rap out our testimony, "Bless God, I am saved and sanctified," is shallow hypocrisy. Watch the one who makes a glowing testimony of Jesus, his speech is chastened into a confession. The confession of what God has done for me is for my own sake, not for the sake of those who listen—"I know that in this matter I have no one to depend upon but God."

2. While "The Spots Sport Expression" (Jeremiah 23:28–32; cf. 2 Peter 2:13)

A "dream" placed in opposition to "My word," God says, is as "straw" compared with "wheat." The Bible student must be careful to distinguish between the speculations of his own heart and the word of God. The question is not whether we agree with what God's Word says, but, Did God say it? If we agreed with it, we should fathom God. There is a great deal that is obscure in God's Word and it is only revealed as the saint goes on with God.

Verse 29. Jeremiah says that God's word is as fire, and like a hammer that breaks a rock in pieces. There will be nothing left in a man but God's work when He has done with him; He spares not (cf. 1 Corinthians 3:13; Hebrews 4:12).

The practice of these prophets is characterised in three ways: first, stealing the word of God from one another in order to give their utterances the character of Divine oracle, "... that steal My words every one from his neighbour" (Jeremiah 23:30)—giving it out as God's message to me; it is not, it is God's word, and the only proof that it is God's message to me is that it is being worked out in my life. Second, they "use their tongues, and say, He saith" (23:31). The reference is to the secret communications of Jehovah. The snare for us to-day is mistaking intense mental effort for inspiration. Speaking in God's Name never fags the speaker. Give the message God gives you and you are re-created. The source of the inspiration is not mental effort, but concentration on God. Third, they feign revelations by means of dreams (23:32). Beware of brooding on the Word of God in a "hot" atmosphere because out of it you will generate a wrong speculation. Be simple and obedient, and the Word of God will open to you as naturally as breathing.

3. And "The Self-Willed Speaketh Evil" (Jeremiah 23:33-40; cf. 2 Peter 2:14-22)

These terrible words are the New Testament counterpart of what Jeremiah is dealing with in this chapter. ". . . having a heart exercised in covetousness" (2 Peter 2:14 RV). Covetousness means the lust of possessing according to my affinities. In reading God's Word be careful of being guided by affinities instead of by the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit makes us face facts for which we have no affinity.

^{8.} The Higher Christian Life was a concept taught by various groups and organizations that emphasized sanctification and personal holiness.

The adversaries of Jeremiah ask in mockery, "What is the burden of the LORD?" (Jeremiah 23:33), and he is told to say that God will avenge the sneer not only on the person, but on his house as well (cf. Matthew 18:6).

Verse 35 is God's instructions to Jeremiah as to how the prophecy is to be spoken of, viz., they are to inquire with reverence, not with ridicule. Why should not other people have revelations from God as well as you? The notion that others are sure to go wrong springs from a wrong disposition. "For ye have perverted the words of the living God" (23:36). Never ridicule the way in which people say God guides them; all you know is that God does not guide you like that, but never ridicule. Never bring in your natural affinities to put you on a superior platform for judging others. God has a thousand ways of guiding, and His way for you.

Verse 39 pronounces three terrible results of their mockery—"I will utterly forget you." "I will forsake you." "I will . . . cast you out of My presence."

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 8 OCTOBER 1939 No. 7 NOTES ON JEREMIAH

WHAT WORTH TO GOD?

Jeremiah 24

What seest thou, Jeremiah? (Jeremiah 24:3)

The estimate a Christian must hold of his own value is what he is worth to God. You cannot judge whether you are right with God by His blessings because "He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." God is not meant to bless us; the vital question is—What am I worth to God? In times of affliction am I giving way to self-pity? am I badgering the throne of God for Him to bless me, or saying "Though He slay me, yet will I wait for Him" (RV)?

1. Prophetic Inward Vision (Jeremiah 24:1-2)

"The LORD shewed me..."—it was an inward vision, seeing with the eyes of the spirit. In order to understand prophetic language we must have the Spirit which gives the vision, viz., the Spirit of God. The Lord caused Jeremiah to see the vision in the spirit, the place of it is given—"before the temple of the LORD"; and also the time—"after that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jeconiah... to Babylon" (see 2 Kings 24:12).

2. Pictorially Inspired Voice (Jeremiah 24:2-3)

The question, "What seest thou, Jeremiah?" is the call for Jeremiah to state clearly to himself what it is he sees. "Behold, two baskets of figs set before the temple of the LORD" (RV)—these symbolise the people as they appear before God. They had been trying to bring wrong things to the altar, and now God is saying He will destroy the evil and wrong out of the nation.

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service" (Romans 12:1 RV). This verse refers to an abiding law, individually and nationally, viz., we cannot consecrate to God anything that is sinful. We cannot present our bodies "a living sacrifice" to God unless we have been cleansed from sin; He won't have them. The call in this verse is not for sanctification, but for the service of the sanctified. We can never begin to be of worth to God in service until we have been through what is represented in the atoning sacrifice of Our Lord Jesus Christ. That is why the majority of us are of no worth to God. We are of no value to God until we enter into the experience of instantaneous, continuous sanctification, then our "spiritual worship" (RV mg) is the offering of ourselves "a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God," and we no more bother about ourselves. God makes the work we do for Him the means of getting us to the place where we are willing to be purified.

3. Interpretation of the Symbol (Jeremiah 24:4–7)

"And I will build them, . . . and I will plant them." The "building" and "planting" refer to the spiritual regeneration of the people as well as to restoration to former well-being. "And I will give them an heart to know Me, that I am the LORD: and they shall be My people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto Me with their whole heart," so that they may be in truth God's people.

The chastisement of good people comes through their vicarious identification by God with bad people. The prophets Jeremiah and others went into captivity with the people of God. "For whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth." God says, "If you are My children you will stand by and endure the suffering falling on others; remember My eye is upon you, stand true to Me no matter what the providential order of tyranny around you may be."

Many of us are spiritual bastards, we don't endure chastening, we either sulk or we say it is the devil. The time to "follow after peace" (RV) is not when the blessing of God is ostensibly on us, but when the blessing of God is not on us because of the wrongdoing of the crowd we belong to. When the chastisement comes, most of us say, "Well, this is pretty hard lines on me!" Be there in the providence of God as a vicarious sufferer.

THE DAY OF THE LORD

Jeremiah 25-26

For the LORD hath a controversy with the nations. (Jeremiah 25:31)

In the Bible the Day of the LORD is an awful day, a day of the final vindication of goodness and final establishment of righteousness. Judgement is never to be interpreted on the line of personal vindictiveness; from God's standpoint judgement is the grandest fulfilment of His purposes. There is only one triumphant will at the heart of all things, and that will is God's. Every power is under God's control; the devil is not behind God (cf. Isaiah 37:29).

1. The Programme of Calamity (Jeremiah 25:12)

For "three and twenty years" Jeremiah has been speaking to the people the word of the Lord, "rising up early and speaking; but ye have not hearkened"; and now from news from the outside, they begin to see that what Jeremiah said was true. God's judgements are conditional.

(a) The Breath of Deity (25:1–14; cf. 2 Peter 1:21) The word of the LORD hath come unto me. (25:3)

The prophets were holy men, not mechanisms; they were "moved by the Holy Ghost" to say what they did. Each prophet had a distinct characteristic of his own, they were not all "moved" in the same way. We are not meant to be "channels only," we are infinitely more responsible than "channels." Imagination in a prophet is the power to see in the spirit what the Spirit of God wishes him to see.

(b) The Book of Doom (25:15-26)

Take the cup of the wine of this fury at My hand, and cause all the nations, to whom I send thee, to drink it. (25:15)

The figure of a cup is common in Old Testament prophecy and has reference to the Divine chastisement about to be inflicted (cf. Isaiah 51:17-22; Ezekiel 23:31-33; Habakkuk 2:16). Jeremiah 25:16 refers not only to the figure but to its actual fulfilment—"And they shall drink, . . . and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them." War with its horrors so stupefies the people that they are helpless. In the Bible war is always a judgement of God on His own people. Jeremiah performs the duty commanded by the Lord—"Then took I the cup at the LORD's hand, and made all the nations to drink." Then comes the list of the nations on which the judgement is to fall, beginning with Jerusalem. After all the kings on whom the king of Babylon is to execute judgement have been mentioned, he himself must drink the cup of wrath (25:26).

2. The Prophet and the Peril (Jeremiah 26)

Jeremiah continually warned the people that if they did not repent and come up to God's standard for them, He would blight all that they possessed, including Jerusalem and the temple. That was what enraged them against Jeremiah. They said he used his prophetic right to tell an untruth; for, they argued, God would never destroy His own holy city or the Temple in which He was worshipped (26:11). Any position before God based on a foundation other than living in the light of God and depending upon Him, is doomed to destruction. Take it personally, unless we keep in the light with God there is no guarantee that He will not leave us. How much do we depend on God and how much on our surroundings? We continually ask the question, "Hath any of the rulers believed on Him?" (RV) until we see the Lord for ourselves, then we have strength to go "without the camp, bearing His reproach."

Verses 1-2 reveal the underlying secret of Jeremiah—he was under the command of God. "Thus saith the LORD; stand... and speak... all the words that I command thee..; keep not back a word" (RV).

Verses 3–11 reveal the prophet's undeflected obedience. "When Jeremiah had made an end of speaking all that the LORD had commanded him . . . , the people laid hold on him, saying, Thou shalt surely die" (RV).

Verses 12–24 reveal the undeterred courage of the prophet in standing for God—there was no defiance about Jeremiah, only superb self-effacement.

Our Lord said, "If My kingdom were of this world, then would My servants fight." There was no "fight" in Jesus, neither is there to be any in His servants; His courage was superbly moral. The same is true of Jeremiah.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 8 DECEMBER 1939 NO. 9 NOTES ON JEREMIAH

THE BURDEN OF THE YOKE

Jeremiah 27

Make thee bonds and yokes, and put them upon thy neck. (Jeremiah 27:2)

"In the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim . . . came this word unto Jeremiah from the LORD." It was a supernatural command, not a sensational speculation on the prophet's part. It is perilously easy in this present dispensation to receive the inspiration of the Holy Ghost and yet not be true to God. There is an optimism born not of the Holy Ghost but of man's fancies, whereby he deals with the future and refuses to live a spotlessly holy life in the present. The servants of God are faithful overcomers in the present circumstances, no matter what forces of evil may be abroad. Our Lord always uncovered the controlling disposition of men (cf. Matthew 23:25–27); the true prophets of God did the same, and so do the saints to-day.

God does not act according to His own precedents, therefore logic or a vivid past experience can never take the place of personal faith in a personal God. It is easier to be true to a conviction formed in a vivid religious experience and say, "I will never alter that," than to be true to Christ, because if I am true to Christ, my convictions will have to be altered. Unless the personal experience leads to a life, it will turn us into fossils, instead of being "witnesses unto Me." Some of us are no good unless we are kept in the circumstances in which our convictions were formed, but God is constantly stirring up our nests that we may learn that the only simplicity there is is not the simplicity of a logical belief, but "the simplicity that is in Christ," the maintained simplicity of a relationship with Christ that is never altered in any circumstance.

There is no evidence of immediate opposition to Jeremiah for the simple reason that moral power is greater than physical force; Jeremiah's moral integrity paralysed the people's action. When opposition does strike the servant of God, it is by God's permissive will. As long as men count themselves Christians on any other ground than that they are free from themselves and the identified bond slaves of Jesus Christ, so long will they despitefully use the servants of God.

Jeremiah entered into identification with the judgement of God on the crowd; we separate ourselves from the crowd, what we should separate ourselves from is the wrong disposition of heart. If we bear the yoke of Christ we shall render the power of wrong impotent by living under it in the power of right. The moral power of the Spirit of God is "mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds"; it works not like leaven, but like dynamite.

The Spirit of God teaches us to bear the yoke of Christ even under the yoke of a tyrant. "Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls" (Matthew 11:29; cf. Philippians 4:3; 1 Timothy 6:1; Acts 15:10). Wear the yoke of Christ under every other yoke.

NOTES ON JEREMIAH

SEALED ORDERS

Jeremiah 28

And the prophet Jeremiah went his way. (Jeremiah 28:11)

Sealed orders, from Abraham on, are always a sign from God. Abraham "went out, not knowing whither he went." God does not act according to His own precedents, therefore logic, or a vivid past experience, can never take the place of personal faith in a personal God. Never try to explain God until you have obeyed Him, and never accept an explanation of any way of God which involves what, in your best mood, you would scorn as false and unfair in a man. The only bit of God we understand is the bit we have obeyed. To the intellect it is absurd to call God loving and just, but immediately you obey God you begin to discern that God is a God of absolute love and justice. The discernment is a satisfaction not to your intellect but to your life. Never be surprised if there are whole areas of thinking that are not clear, they never will be until you obey (John 7:17).

Jeremiah's words "Amen: The LORD do so" (28:6) are not ironical. Jeremiah was without the lust for self-vindication, he would gladly have been led to see that his prophecy of calamity was wrong. The Apostle Paul exhibits the same marvellous self-effacement as Jeremiah (see Romans 9:3).

We never gain any knowledge by intellectual curiosity, but only as a relationship of simplicity to God is it maintained. In John 9 Our Lord was dealing with religious teachers who had known God's way in the past but they were blind to His ways in the present. Jesus said unto them, "If ye were blind, ye should have no sin: but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth" (John 9:41). Our Lord's phrase "blind leaders of the blind" was used of those who built their teaching as to how God would act in the future on their knowledge of how He had acted in the past, instead of on a personal knowledge of God. Never come to this conclusion—I am not likely to go wrong, but you are and I must warn you. The duty of every Christian (and it is the last lesson we learn) is to make room for God to deal with other people direct as He deals with us; we will limit them and try to make everyone in our mould. We have to keep in unbroken touch with God and give every soul the same freedom and liberty before God as God gives us.

"Nevertheless hear thou now this word that I speak in thine ears, and in the ears of all the people" (Jeremiah 28:7). Hananiah would not listen to God's "darkness" (see Jeremiah 28:10–11). Darkness is the time to listen. No silence is so profound as the silence that falls on a soul that has quenched the Spirit of God by concentration on religious convictions. Many a Christian worker who began as a blazing fire for God has become extinguished because he would not walk in the light of the Lord. "Lest that by any means . . . I myself should be a castaway." If the mighty Apostle spake words like these, it behoves us to remember that it is possible for any one of us to be cast away as a servant of God. Our only safety is in concentration on God with nothing between.

When the call of God first comes it is not devotion to God that appeals to us, but the sense of the heroic, it thrills us to give up everything for Jesus. Then when we are led into the wilderness alone, we learn how rarely we live in the light of honesty before God. We talk too much about heroism because the majority of us are only barely honest. There is only one heroic Figure, the Lord Jesus Christ. We take the pattern and print of the crowd we have been brought up with and persuade ourselves that we are there. We have to get out of the complacency of superiority that is apt to come when the grace of God has done anything for us; the most the grace of God succeeds in doing for us is to make us honest. There is only one holiness, the holiness of God, and unless that holiness is imparted to us by direct identification, we are not even honest.

OTHERWORLDLINESS IN THIS WORLD

Jeremiah 29:1–14

For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the LORD. (Jeremiah 29:11)

When we are worldlings we are tempted to be spiritual, and in devotional surroundings we are tempted to be worldly. It is the relationship on the inside that produces goodness, not external surroundings. God never safeguards from without, He garrisons from within. Unless this principle is understood, we shall build on a wrong foundation.

1. Divine Order of Degradation (Jeremiah 29:4; cf. 1 Thessalonians 1:10)

"... whom I have caused to be carried away captive from Jerusalem unto Babylon" (RV). The great message of the prophets is that evil and tyranny are there by the permissive will of God, there is never any room for thinking that these things happen by chance (cf. Isaiah 45:7). Never tie God up in His own laws; He is never guided by precedence. If a prophet is more concerned with logic than with loyalty to God, he will always mislead.

"and to wait for His Son from heaven." In the early days of Christianity, as well as in our own day, the providential order of tyranny was a most significant thing, and the great word of the Apostle Paul was to endure it with patience. Some people are so impatient and full of criticism of the present order of things that they tell us Jesus Christ is coming again at once; others are cynical and say, "Where is the promise of His coming?" We have no control whatever over external history; God has, and as saints we have to wait in patience wherever we are placed in the providential order of tyranny.

2. Devoted Obedience in Dust (Jeremiah 29:5-7; cf. 1 Thessalonians 4:10-11)

"Build ye houses, and dwell in them; . . . And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captive," Jeremiah commands the people to obey God's order in the dust and dirt of captivity. When we become rightly related to God we are loosened from everything around us, and the danger is to imagine we have to get out of the world. Our Lord did not pray that His disciples should be taken out of the world, but that they should be kept from the evil. It is nothing but unmitigated cowardice to get out of the world; we have to remain unspotted in the midst of it. "Do you mean to tell me I can live a holy life there?" If you cannot, the grace of God is a fiction. External surroundings make no difference to our inner life, but our inner life makes a telling difference on our surroundings. (See Philippians 2:15.) A sunbeam may shine into a hovel, but it can never be soiled. Let God engineer your circumstances where He likes, and you will be kept as the light.

3. Declaration of Divine Plans (Jeremiah 29:8–11; cf. 1 Thessalonians 5:3)

Jeremiah warns the people against listening to prophets who prophesy falsely—"I have not sent them, saith the LORD." Our problem is not one of proportion: how much worldliness can I live in? but of spiritual insight which will enable me to live a holy life in the midst of worldliness, looking for the fulfilment of God's promises. The man who builds a temple on the slopes of a mountain is a fool; the only thing that is not out of place on a mountain is a cottage, because it does not ape the mountain. With the great towering world all around them God's children are as cottages tucked away in safety, and the word of Our Lord comes, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." The great craze to-day is work: God's word is "wait." Patience means standing under and enduring until the strain is past. The Spirit of God never adopts the tactics of the world. Remain uncrushably true to Jesus Christ wherever the providential order of God places you.

FROM THE BIBLE TRAINING COURSE MONTHLY JOURNAL VOL. 8 MARCH 1940 NO. 12 NOTES ON JEREMIAH

HOW LONG?

Jeremiah 29:15–32

I know, and am a witness, saith the LORD. (Jeremiah 29:23)

God is bound to destroy sin. Suffering is not the opposite of sin: good is the opposite of sin. Evil is eternally evil, and suffering can never atone for it. Sorrow and confession and self-abasement alone will make up for the evil. Never apologise for God.

1. The Outlook Is the Background of Life (Jeremiah 29:15-20; 2 Peter 2:15)

The background of personal and of national life determines its outlook. The false prophets had as the background of their life the idea that they were the people of God and He would never punish them.

Verses 15–16. This is the opportunism of temperament, i.e., serving the times in which we live according to our particular temperament and prejudices, upholding those views which are expedient. This danger besets every one of us—"It is expedient not to say certain things"; "preserve your cause by diplomacy." Beware of coming under the curse of Meroz, who came not "to the help of the LORD against the mighty," by judging it expedient to do nothing. We prefer to quote Gamaliel rather than Paul. Gamaliel's advice is not the advice for a Christian; "Who is made to stumble, and I burn not?" (RV) is the Christian attitude.

Verses 17–18. God will make the false prophets a thing to shudder at. The reaction on the sinner of God's destruction of his sin is the realisation of its hideousness; all his complacency goes (cf. Psalm 39:11). Sin must go at all costs. God is ever severe in His handling of His children who will cling to sin through the pride of heredity. The people of Jeremiah's day refused to see this, they did not think God would punish them, and God had to lay His hand upon them until the last possible strand of sin was destroyed.

Verses 19–20. Beware of being misled by affinities for certain aspects of God's truth, it always makes us liable to be deluded. Every movement of the Spirit of God springs from the same source, and the counterfeit is to try and make the effect of one revival the cause of another. To exploit God's word by curiosity instead of relying on the Spirit of God is ever misleading; obedience is the only line of illumination. If you pry into truths before God has engineered the circumstances in which those truths can be obeyed, you will go wrong. A clever exposition is never right, because the Spirit of God is not clever (cf. Matthew 11:25).

2. The Overlook Is the Backing of Life (Jeremiah 29:21-23; 2 Peter 2:17-22)

... which prophesy a lie unto you in My name.

What is overlooked in the programme of a life is at once the measure of its strength and its weakness. These prophets overlooked the fact that Jeremiah was the prophet of God. There were true prophets, but these verses refer to the false ones, and God says that they are growing worse. When God takes His hand off a bad man, He lets the devil do his worst.

2 Peter 2:17–22. These terrible words, rugged and shocking in their intensity, refer to the abiding peril of an official man of God who is not proving himself God's man; he will end in worse corruption than the man who has not an official position. The peril begins whenever I take this attitude—"Remember who I am." There is only one safety, a life hid with Christ. The great need is to be God's servant, not merely His instrument (Matthew 7:21).

3. The Oversight of the Blessed Life (Jeremiah 29:24–32; 2 Peter 3:11)

That God guards His own is true of the least and the greatest of His children (Matthew 18:6). Jeremiah's life and character is a proof of this. Jeremiah stood fearlessly for God; a servant of God must be unbribed. Neither a prophet nor a poet can be paid for their work; if they are, they become time-servers, and the community to which they belong ought to have the right to turn them out. The prophets in Babylon were doing their best to keep up the heart of the people, and one can understand their indignation with Jeremiah's prophecy. He is told to tell the prophet Shemaiah that he shall not share in the blessing which the Lord will yet bestow upon His people—"because he hath taught rebellion against the LORD."

But how many there are among our ministers, and how many there will be, eager on all questions of the day, frank and friendly and fearless, active and kind, but with very little about them that suggests the powers of the world to come. They die and are mourned, but their places are soon filled and they are forgotten. But men return again and again to the few who have mastered the spiritual secret, whose life has been hid with Christ in God. These are of the same religion, whatever differences there may be in their theology, they are of the old time religion hung to the nails of the Cross.

Source

Oswald Chambers' talks on the Sermon on the Mount were given at the League of Prayer's¹ annual summer convention in Perth, Scotland, in July 1911; in lectures at the Bible Training College² from 1911 to 1915; and in talks to soldiers in Egypt in 1916.

Publication History

- As a study outline: Material on Matthew 5–7 was published in the autumn of 1912, for the fourth session of Oswald Chambers' Bible School correspondence classes—part of his outreach to people who wanted to study the Bible but could not attend the Bible Training College in London.
- As articles: The lectures were published as articles in the July 11 through December 12, 1912, issues of God's Revivalist and Bible Advocate magazines, in Cincinnati, Ohio.
- As a book: God's Revivalist Press, Cincinnati, Ohio, published Studies in the Sermon on the Mount in 1915. In the years after Oswald's death in 1917, Mrs. Chambers continued to revise and republish. A fourth edition was issued in 1929.
- As a booklet: Outlines and summaries of nine talks on Matthew 5–7 were included in the booklet A Bible Training Course, published in 1916. An opening note by Oswald Chambers said: "This booklet is comprised of the series of Bible Study subjects taken at Zeitoun, Egypt,³ with the Australian and New Zealand troops 1916, with marked appreciation."

In July 1911, Oswald and Biddy Chambers journeyed to Perth, Scotland, for the annual summer convention of the League of Prayer. Oswald always enjoyed a visit to Perth, where he had spent his formative boyhood years from ages seven through fifteen.

At the League convention,⁴ Oswald spoke at noon for five days (July 17–21) on "God's Making of Christians," from the Sermon on the Mount. Mrs. Chambers took verbatim notes of her husband's messages, as she did on countless occasions during their seven years of marriage. Oswald delivered the same basic material many times, always revised and adapted for each audience.

At a memorial service for Chambers in December 1917, a close friend described Oswald's life as "the finest commentary on the Sermon on the Mount I know."

^{1.} The League of Prayer was founded in London by Reader Harris, a friend and mentor of Oswald Chambers, in 1891.

^{2.} The Bible Training College (BTC) was a residential school near Clapham Common in southwest London. It was sponsored by the Pentecostal League of Prayer and operated from 1911 until it closed in July 1915 because of World War I. Oswald Chambers was principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers, his wife, was lady superintendent.

FOREWORD

In the Fifth Study the author says—"Jesus tells His disciples to test preachers and teachers by their fruit. There are two tests—one is the fruit in the life of the preacher, and the other is the truth of the doctrine." It is a genuine joy to be able to apply these touchstones of character and teaching to the life and words of Oswald Chambers.

It was the writer's rare privilege to be in the same home with him and to sit under his ministry for a number of months; to see him daily, and to find in him a patient counsellor, an exemplary as well as trustworthy teacher, and a Christ-like friend. The following words are none too vividly descriptive of this modern prophet-teacher:

Who never sold the truth to serve the hour, Nor paltered with eternal God for power, Who let the turbid stream of rumour flow Thro' either babbling world high or low; Whose life is work, whose language rife With rugged maxims hewn from life, Who never spoke against a foe.

Tennyson

And as to the second test proposed—the fruit of the doctrine—will there be found in all the Church of Christ of today one whose records are more weighty with spiritual values? "But," says some simple soul, "I don't understand him." The more is the pity. Leave then the evening newspaper, the book of religious wonder-tales, the high-flown writings watered with adjectives, but empty of thought or power, and read these pages again and again until the truth soaks through to your innermost consciousness. There is about us a flood of profession, but a failure in possession; a torrent of criticism for those who "follow not us," but a trickling rivulet of sound advice to ourselves. To heed the words of our Lord's Sermon on the Mount as interpreted by Oswald Chambers will transform holiness people into holy people, and faithless verbosity into Christian humility. Unto which glorious result God speed the day!

Divine Declaration (Matthew 5:17-20)

- (a) His Mission (Matthew 5:17–19)
- (b) His Message (Matthew 5:20)

In order to understand the Sermon on the Mount, it is necessary to have the mind of the Preacher, and this knowledge can be gained by anyone who will receive the Holy Spirit (see Luke 11:13; John 20:22; Acts 19:2). The Holy Ghost alone can expound the teachings of Jesus Christ. The one abiding method of interpretation of the teachings of Jesus is the Spirit of Jesus in the heart of the believer applying His principles to the particular circumstances in which he is placed. "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind," says Paul, "that ye may prove", i.e., make out, "what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God.

Beware of placing our Lord as Teacher first instead of Saviour. That tendency is prevalent today, and it is a dangerous tendency. We must know Him first as Saviour before His teaching can have any meaning for us, or before it can have any meaning other than that of an ideal which leads to despair. Fancy coming to men and women with defective lives and defiled hearts and wrong mainsprings, and telling them to be pure in heart! What is the use of giving us an ideal we cannot possibly attain? We are happier without it. If Jesus is a Teacher only, then all He can do is to tantalise us by erecting a standard we cannot come anywhere near. But if by being born again from above we know Him first as Saviour, we know that He did not come to teach us only: He came to make us what He teaches we should be. The Sermon on the Mount is a statement of the life we will live when the Holy Spirit is having His way with us.

The Sermon on the Mount produces despair in the heart of the natural man, and that is the very thing Jesus means it to do, because immediately we reach the point of despair we are willing to come to Jesus Christ as paupers and receive from Him. "Blessed are the poor in spirit"—that is the first principle of the Kingdom. As long as we have a conceited, self-righteous idea that we can do the thing if God will help us, God has to allow us to go on until we break the neck of our ignorance over some obstacle, then we will be willing to come and receive from Him. The bed-rock of Jesus Christ's Kingdom is poverty, not possession; not decisions for Jesus Christ, but a sense of absolute futility, "I cannot begin to do it." Then, says Jesus, "Blessed are you." That is the entrance, and it takes us a long while to believe we are poor. The knowledge of our own poverty brings us to the moral frontier where Jesus Christ works.

Every mind has two compartments—conscious and subconscious. We say that the things we hear and read slip away from memory; they do not really, they pass into the subconscious mind. It is the work of the Holy Spirit to bring back into the conscious mind the things that are stored in the subconscious. In studying the Bible never think that because you do not understand it, therefore it is of no use. A truth may be of no use to you just now, but when the circumstances arise in which that truth is needed, the Holy Spirit will bring it back to your remembrance. This accounts for the curious emergence of the statements of Jesus; we say, "I wonder where that word came from?" Jesus said that the Holy Spirit would "bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." The point is, will I obey Him when He does bring it to my remembrance? If I discuss the matter with someone else the probability is that I will not obey. "Immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood. . . . " Always trust the originality of the Holy Spirit when He brings a word to your remembrance.

Bear in mind the twofold aspect of the mind; there is nothing supernatural or uncanny about it, it is simply the knowledge of how God has made us. It is foolish therefore to estimate only by what you consciously understand at the time. There may be much of which you do not begin to grasp the meaning, but as you go on storing your mind with Bible truth, the Holy Spirit will bring back to your conscious mind the word you need and will apply it to you in your particular circumstances. These three things always work together—moral intelligence, the spontaneous originality of the Holy Spirit and the setting of a life lived in communion with God.

Divine Disproportion (Matthew 5:1–12)

Our Lord began His discourse by saying, "Blessed are . . . ," and His hearers must have been staggered by what followed. According to Jesus Christ they were to be blessed in every condition which from earliest childhood they had been taught to regard as a curse. Our Lord was speaking to Jews, and they believed that the sign of the blessing of God was material prosperity in every shape and form, and yet Jesus said, Blessed are you for exactly the opposite: "Blessed are the poor in spirit. . . . Blessed are they that mourn," et cetera.

(a) The "Mines" of God (Matthew 5:1-10; cf. Luke 6:20-26)

The first time we read the Beatitudes they appear to be simple and beautiful and un-startling statements, and they go unobserved into the subconscious mind. We are so used to the sayings of Jesus that they slip over us unheeded, they sound sweet and pious and wonderfully simple, but they are in reality like spiritual torpedoes that burst and explode in the subconscious mind, and when the Holy Spirit brings them back to our conscious minds we realise what startling statements they are. For instance, the Beatitudes seem merely mild and beautiful precepts for unworldly people and of very little use for the stern world in which we live. We soon find, however, that they contain the dynamite of the Holy Ghost, they explode like a spiritual "mine" when the circumstances of our lives require them to do so, and rip and tear and revolutionise all our conceptions.

The test of discipleship is obedience to the light when these truths are brought to the conscious mind. We do not hunt through the Bible for some precept to obey—Jesus Christ's teaching never leads to making ourselves moral prigs, but we live so in touch with God that the Holy Spirit can continually bring some word of His and apply it to the circumstances we are in. We are not brought to the test until the Holy Spirit brings the word back.

Neither is it a question of applying the Beatitudes literally, but of allowing the life of God to invade us by regeneration, and then soaking our minds in the teaching of Jesus Christ which slips down into the subconscious mind. By and by a set of circumstances will arise when one of Jesus Christ's statements emerges, and instantly we have to decide whether we will accept the tremendous spiritual revolution that will be produced if we do obey this precept of His. If we do obey it, our actual life will become different, and we shall find we have the power to obey if we will. That is the way the Holy Spirit works in the heart of a disciple. The teaching of Jesus Christ comes with astonishing discomfort to begin with, because it is out of all proportion to our natural way of looking at things; but Jesus puts in a new sense of proportion, and slowly we form our way of walking and our conversation on the line of His precepts: Remember that our Lord's teaching applies only to those who are His disciples.

(b) The Motive of Godliness (Matthew 5:11-12)

The motive at the back of the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount is love of God. Read the Beatitudes with your mind fixed on God, and you will realise their neglected side. Their meaning in relationship to men is so obvious that it scarcely needs stating, but the Godward aspect is not so obvious. "Blessed are the poor in spirit"—towards God. Am I a pauper towards God? Do I know I cannot prevail in prayer; I cannot blot out the sins of the past; I cannot alter my disposition; I cannot lift myself nearer to God? Then I am in the very place where I am able to receive the Holy Spirit. No man can receive the Holy Spirit who is not convinced he is a pauper spiritually. "Blessed are the meek"—towards God's dispensations. "Blessed are the merciful"—to God's reputation. Do I awaken sympathy for myself when I am in trouble? Then I am slandering God because the reflex thought in people's minds is—How hard God is with that man. It is easy to slander God's character because He never attempts to vindicate Himself. "Blessed are the pure in heart"—that is obviously Godward. "Blessed are the peacemakers"—between God and man, the note that was struck at the birth of Jesus.

Is it possible to carry out the Beatitudes? Never! Unless God can do what Jesus Christ says He can, unless He can give us the Holy Spirit Who will remake us and bear us into a new realm. The essential element in the life of a saint is simplicity, and Jesus Christ makes the motive of godliness gloriously simple, viz., be carefully careless about everything saving your relationship to Me. The motive of a disciple is to be well-pleasing to God. The true blessedness of the saint is in determinedly making and keeping God first. Herein lies the disproportion between Jesus Christ's principles and all other moral teaching: Jesus bases everything on God-realisation, while other teachers base everything on self-realisation.

There is a difference between devotion to principles and devotion to a person. Jesus Christ never proclaimed a cause; He proclaimed personal devotion to Himself—"for My sake." Discipleship is based not on devotion to abstract ideals, but on devotion to a Person, the Lord Jesus Christ, consequently the whole of the Christian life is stamped by originality. Whenever the Holy Spirit sees a chance to glorify Jesus Christ, He will take your whole personality and simply make it blaze and glow with personal passionate devotion to the Lord Jesus. You are no longer devoted to a cause, nor the devotee of a principle, you are the devoted love-slave of the Lord Jesus. No man on earth has that love unless the Holy Ghost has imparted it to him. Men may admire Him and respect Him and reverence Him, but no man can love God until the Holy Ghost has shed abroad that love in his heart (see Romans 5:5). The only Lover of the Lord Jesus Christ is the Holy Ghost.

Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for My sake.

Jesus Christ puts all the blessedness of high virtue and rare felicity on the ground of—"for My sake," It is not suffering for conscience's sake, or for convictions' sake, or because of the ordinary troubles of life, but something other than all that—"for My sake."

"Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of Man's sake." Jesus did not say—"Rejoice when men separate you from their company because of your own crotchety notions"—but when they reproach you "for My sake." When you begin to deport yourself amongst men as a saint, they will leave you absolutely alone, you will be reviled and persecuted. No man can stand that unless he is in love with Jesus Christ; he cannot do it for a conviction or a creed, but he can do it for a Being Whom he loves. Devotion to a Person is the only thing that tells; devotion to death to a Person, not devotion to a creed or a doctrine.

Who that one moment has the least descried Him, Dimly and faintly, hidden and afar, Doth not despise all excellence beside Him, Pleasures and powers that are not and that are?—

Ay, amid all men bear himself thereafter Smit with a solemn and a sweet surprise, Dumb to their scorn and turning on their laughter Only the dominance of earnest eyes.

F. W. H. Myers

Divine Disadvantage (Matthew 5:13–16)

The disadvantage of a saint in the present order of things is that his confession of Jesus Christ is not to be in secret, but glaringly public. It would doubtless be to our advantage from the standpoint of self-realisation to keep quiet, and nowadays the tendency to say—"Be a Christian, live a holy life, but don't talk about it"—is growing stronger. Our Lord uses in illustration the most conspicuous things known to men, viz., salt, light, and a city set on a hill, and He says—"Be like that in your home, in your business, in your church; be conspicuously a Christian for ridicule or respect according to the mood of the people you are with." Again, in Matthew 10:26–28, our Lord taught the need to be conspicuous proclaimers of the truth and not to cover it up for fear of wolfish men.

(a) Concentrated Service (Matthew 5:13)

Not consecrated service, but concentrated. Consecration would soon be changed into sanctification if we would only concentrate on what God wants. Concentration means pinning down the four corners of the mind until it is settled on what God wants. The literal interpretation of the Sermon on the Mount is child's play; the interpretation by the Holy Spirit is the stern work of a saint, and it requires spiritual concentration.

"Ye are the salt of the earth." Some modern teachers seem to think our Lord said "Ye are the sugar of the earth," meaning that gentleness and winsomeness without curative-ness is the ideal of the Christian. Our Lord's illustration of a Christian is salt, and salt is the most concentrated thing known. Salt preserves wholesomeness and prevents decay. It is a disadvantage to be salt. Think of the action of salt on a wound, and you will realise this. If you get salt into a wound, it hurts, and when God's children are amongst those who are "raw" towards God, their presence hurts. The man who is wrong with God is like an open wound, and when "salt" gets in it causes annoyance and distress and he is spiteful and bitter. The disciples of Jesus in the present dispensation preserve society from corruption; the "salt" causes excessive irritation which spells persecution for the saint.

How are we to maintain the healthy, salty tang of saintliness? By remaining rightly related to God through Jesus Christ. In the present dispensation, Jesus says, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: . . . for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." Men are called on to live out His teaching in an age that will not recognise Him, and that spells limitation and very often persecution. This is the day of the humiliation of the saints; in the next dispensation it will be the glorification of the saints, and the Kingdom of God will be outside as well as inside men.

(b) Conspicuous Setting (Matthew 5:14-16)

The illustrations our Lord uses are all conspicuous, viz., salt, light, and a city set on a hill. There is no possibility of mistaking them. Salt to preserve from corruption has to be placed in the midst of it, and before it can do its work it causes excessive irritation which spells persecution. Light attracts bats and night-moths, and points out the way for burglars as well as honest people: Jesus would have us remember that men will certainly defraud us. A city is a gathering place for all the human drift-wood that will not work for its own living, and a Christian will have any number of parasites and ungrateful hangers-on. All these considerations form a powerful temptation to make us pretend we are not salt, to make us put our light under a bushel, and cover our city with a fog, but Jesus will have nothing in the nature of covert discipleship.

"Ye are the light of the world." Light cannot be soiled; you may try to grasp a beam of light with the sootiest hand, but you leave no mark on the light. A sunbeam may shine into the filthiest hovel in the slums of a city, but it cannot be soiled. A merely moral man, or an innocent man, may be soiled in spite of his integrity, but the man who is made pure by the Holy Ghost cannot be soiled, he is as light. Thank God for the men and women who are spending their lives in the slums of the earth, not as social reformers to lift their brother men to cleaner sties, but as the light of God, revealing a way back to God. God keeps them as the light, unsullied. If you have been covering your light, uncover it! Walk as children of light. The light always reveals and guides; and men dislike it, and prefer darkness when their deeds are evil (John 3:19–20).

Are we the salt of the earth? Are we the light of the world? Are we allowing God to exhibit in our lives the truth of these startling statements of Jesus Christ?

Divine Declaration (Matthew 5:17–20) (a) His Mission (Matthew 5:17–19) I am come . . . to fulfil.

An amazing word! Our shoes ought to be off our feet and every common-sense mood stripped from our minds when we hear Jesus Christ speak. In Him we deal with God as man, the God-Man, the Representative of the whole human race in one Person. The men of His day traced their religious pedigree back to the constitution of God, and this young Nazarene Carpenter says, "I am the constitution of God"; consequently to them He was a blasphemer.

Our Lord places Himself as the exact meaning and fulfilment of all Old Testament prophecies. His mission, He says, is to fulfil the law and the prophets, and He further says that any man who breaks the old laws because they belong to a former dispensation, and teaches men to break them, shall suffer severe impoverishment. If the old commandments were difficult, our Lord's principles are unfathomably more difficult. Our Lord goes behind the old law to the disposition. Everything He teaches is impossible unless He can put into us His Spirit and remake us from within. The Sermon on the Mount is quite unlike the Ten Commandments in the sense of its being absolutely unworkable unless Jesus Christ can remake us.

There are teachers who argue that the Sermon on the Mount supersedes the Ten Commandments, and that, because "we are not under law, but under grace" (RV), it does not matter whether we honour our father and mother, whether we covet, et cetera. Beware of statements like this: There is no need nowadays to observe giving the tenth either of money or of time; we are in a new dispensation and everything belongs to God. That, in practical application, is sentimental dust-throwing. The giving of the tenth is not a sign that all belongs to God, but a sign that the tenth belongs to God and the rest is ours, and we are held responsible for what we do with it. To be "not under the law, but under grace" does not mean that we can do as we like. It is surprising how easily we can juggle ourselves out of Jesus Christ's principles by one or two pious sayings repeated sufficiently often. The only safeguard is to keep personally related to God. The secret of all spiritual understanding is to walk in the light, not the light of our convictions, or of our theories, but the light of God (1 John 1:7).

(b) His Message (Matthew 5:20)

Think of the most upright man you know, the most moral, sterling, religious man (e.g., Nicodemus was a Pharisee, so was Saul of Tarsus—"blameless" according to the law)—who has never received the Holy Spirit; Jesus says you must exceed him in righteousness. You have to be not only as moral as the most moral man you know, but infinitely more—to be so right in your actions, so pure in your motives, that God Almighty can see nothing to blame in you.

Is it too strong to call this a spiritual torpedo? These statements of Jesus are the most revolutionary statements human ears ever listened to, and it needs the Holy Ghost to interpret them to us; the shallow admiration for Jesus Christ as a Teacher that is taught to-day is of no use.

Who is going to climb that "hill of the LORD"? To stand before God and say—"My hands are clean, my heart is pure"? who can do it? Who can stand in the Eternal light of God and have nothing for God to blame in him? Only the Son of God; and if the Son of God is formed in us by regeneration and sanctification, He will exhibit Himself through our mortal flesh. That is the ideal of Christianity—"that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh."

Jesus says our disposition must be right to its depths, not only our conscious motives but our unconscious motives. Now we are beyond our depth. Can God make me pure in heart? Blessed be the Name of God, He can! Can He alter my disposition so that when circumstances reveal me to myself, I am amazed? He can. Can He impart His nature to me until it is identically the same as His own? He can. That, and nothing less, is the meaning of His Cross and Resurrection.

"Except your righteousness shall exceed..." The righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees was right, not wrong; that they did other than righteousness is obvious, but Jesus is speaking here of their righteousness, which His disciples are to exceed. What exceeds right doing if it be not right being? Right being without right doing is possible if we refuse to enter into relationship with God, but that cannot "exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees." Jesus Christ's message here is that our righteousness must "exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees" in doing—they were nothing in being—or we shall never enter into the kingdom of heaven. The monks in the Middle Ages refused to take the responsibilities of life and they shut themselves away from the world; all they wanted was to be and not do. People to-day want to do the same thing and they cut themselves off from this and that relationship. That does not exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees. If our Lord had meant exceed in being only, He would not have used the word "exceed"; He would have said—"Except your righteousness be otherwise than..." We cannot exceed the righteousness of the most moral man we know on the line of what he does, but only on the line of what he is.

The teaching of the Sermon on the Mount must produce despair in the natural man; if it does not, it is because he has paid no attention to it. Pay attention to Jesus Christ's teaching and you will soon say, "Who is sufficient for these things?" "Blessed are the pure in heart." If Jesus Christ means what He says, where are we in regard to it? "Come unto Me," says Jesus.

A man cannot take in anything he has not begun to think about, consequently until a man is born again what Jesus says does not mean anything to him. The Bible is a universe of revelation facts which have no meaning for us until we are born from above; when we are born again we see in it what we never saw before. We are lifted into the realm where Jesus lives and we begin to see what He sees (John 3:3).

By Actual is meant the things we come in contact with by our senses, and by Real that which lies behind, that which we cannot get at by our senses (cf. 2 Corinthians 4:18). The fanatic sees the real only and ignores the actual; the materialist looks at the actual only and ignores the real. The only sane Being who ever trod this earth was Jesus Christ, because in Him the actual and the real were one. Jesus Christ does not stand first in the actual world, He stands first in the real world; that is why the natural man does not bother his head about Him—"the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him." When we are born from above we begin to see the actual things in the light of the real. We say that prayer alters things, but prayer does not alter actual things nearly so much as it alters the man who sees the actual things. In the Sermon on the Mount our Lord brings the actual and the real together.

The Account with Purity (Matthew 5:21-30)

Our Lord in these verses is laying down the principle that if men are going to follow Him and obey His Spirit, they must lay their account with purity. No man can make himself pure by obeying laws. Purity is not a question of doing things rightly, but of the doer on the inside being right. Purity is difficult to define; it is best thought of as a state of heart just like the heart of our Lord Jesus Christ. Purity is not innocence; innocence is the characteristic of a child, and although, profoundly speaking, a child is not pure, yet his innocence presents us with all that we understand by purity. Innocence in a child's life is a beautiful thing, but men and women ought not to be innocent, they ought to be tested and tried and pure. No man is born pure: purity is the outcome of conflict. The pure man is not the man who has never been tried, but the man who knows what evil is and has overcome it. And so with virtue and morality, no one is born virtuous and moral, we are born unmoral. Morality is always the outcome of conflict, not of necessity. Jesus Christ demands that purity be explicit as well as implicit—that is, my actual conduct, the actual chastity of my bodily life, the actual chastity of my mind, is to be beyond the censure of Almighty God—not beyond the censure of my fellow men, that would produce Pharisaism, I can always deceive the other fellow. Jesus Christ has undertaken by His Redemption to put in me a heart that is so pure that God can see nothing to censure in it. That is the marvel of the Redemption—that Jesus Christ can give me a new heredity, the unsullied heredity of the Holy Spirit, and if it is there, says Jesus, it will work out in actual history.

In Matthew 15, our Lord tells His disciples what the human heart is like—"Out of the heart proceed. ..." and then follows the ugly catalogue. We say, "I never felt any of those things in my heart," and we prefer to trust our innocent ignorance rather than Jesus Christ's penetration. Either Jesus Christ must be the supreme Authority on the human heart, or He is not worth listening to. If I make conscious innocence the test, I am likely to come to a place where I will find with a shuddering awakening that what Jesus said is true, and I will be appalled at the possibility of evil in me. If I have never been a blackguard, the reason is a mixture of cowardice and the protection of civilised life; but when I am undressed before God I find that Jesus Christ is right in His diagnosis. As long as I remain under the refuge of innocence, I am living in a fool's paradise. There is always a reason to be found in myself when I try to disprove what Jesus says.

Jesus Christ demands that the heart of a disciple be fathomlessly pure, and unless He can give me His disposition, His teaching is tantalising. If all He came to do was to mock me by telling me to be what I know I never can be, I can afford to ignore Him, but if He can give me His own disposition of holiness, then I begin to see how I can lay my account with purity. Jesus Christ is the sternest and the gentlest of Saviours.

The Gospel of God is not that Jesus died for my sins only, but that He gave Himself for me that I might give myself to Him. God cannot accept goodness from me. He can only accept my badness, and He will give me the solid goodness of the Lord Jesus in exchange for it (see 2 Corinthians 5:21).

(a) Disposition and Deeds (Matthew 5:21-22)

Our Lord is using an illustration that was familiar to the disciples. If a man disregarded the common judgement, he was in danger of being brought into an inner court, and if he was contemptuous with that court, he was in danger of the final judgement. Jesus uses this illustration of the ordinary exercise of judgement to show what the disposition of a disciple must be like, viz., that my motive, the place I cannot get at myself, must be right—the disposition behind the deed, the motive behind the actual occurrence. I may never be angry in deed, but Jesus Christ demands the impossibility of anger in disposition. The motive of my motives, the spring of my dreams, must be so right that right deeds will follow naturally.

In Psalm 139 the Psalmist is realising that he is too big for himself, and he prays "O Lord, explore me, search me out, and see if there be any way of grief in me, trace out the dreams of my dreams, the motives of my motives, make these right, and lead me in the way everlasting." Deliverance from sin is not deliverance from conscious sin only, it is deliverance from sin in God's sight, and He can see down into a region I know nothing about. By the marvellous Atonement of Jesus Christ applied to me by the Holy Spirit, God can purify the springs of my unconscious life until the temper of my mind is unblameable in His sight.

Beware of refining away the radical aspect of our Lord's teaching by saying that God puts something in to counteract the wrong disposition—that is a compromise. Jesus never teaches us to curb and suppress the wrong disposition; He gives us a totally new disposition, He alters the mainspring of action. Our Lord's teaching can be interpreted only by the new Spirit which He puts in; it can never be taken as a series of rules and regulations.

A man cannot imitate the disposition of Jesus Christ: it is either there, or it is not. When the Son of God is formed in me, He is formed in my human nature, and I have to put on the new man in accordance with His life and obey Him; then His disposition will work out all the time. We make character out of our disposition. Character is what we make, disposition is what we are born with; and when we are born again we are given a new disposition. A man must make his own character, but he cannot make his disposition; that is a gift. Our natural disposition is gifted to us by heredity; by regeneration God gives us the disposition of His Son. Jesus Christ is pure to the depths of His motives, and if His disposition can be formed in me, then I begin to see how I can lay my account with purity. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, ye must be born again." If I let God alter my heredity, I will become devoted to Him, and Jesus Christ will have gained a disciple. Many of us who call ourselves Christians are not devoted to Jesus Christ.

Our Lord goes behind the old law to the disposition. Everything He says is impossible unless He can put His Spirit into me and remake me from within, then I begin to see how it can be done. When a man is born from above, he does not need to pretend to be a saint, he cannot help being one. Am I going to be a spiritually real man or a whitewashed humbug? Am I a pauper in spirit or conceited over my own earnestness? We are so tremendously in earnest that we are blinded by our earnestness and never see that God is more in earnest than we are. Thank God for the absolute poverty of spirit that receives from Him all the time.

There is only one way in which as a disciple you will know that Jesus has altered your disposition, and that is by trying circumstances. When circumstances put you to the test, instead of feeling resentment you experience a most amazing change within, and you say, "Praise God, this is an amazing alteration! I know now that God has altered me, because if that had happened to me before I should have been sour and irritable and sarcastic and spiteful, but now there is a well of sweetness in me which I know never came from myself." The proof that God has altered our disposition is not that we persuade ourselves He has, but that we prove He has when circumstances put us to the test. The criticism of Christians is not wrong, it is absolutely right. When a man says he is born again, he is put under scrutiny, and rightly so. If we are born again of the Holy Ghost and have the life of Jesus in us by means of His Cross, we must show it in the way we walk and talk and transact all our business.

(b) Temper of Mind and Truth of Manner (Matthew 5:23–26)

Our Lord in these verses uses another illustration familiar in His day. If a man taking a paschal lamb to the priest as an offering, remembered he had leaven in his house, he had to go back and take out the leaven before he brought his offering. We do not carry lambs to sacrifice nowadays, but the spiritual meaning of the illustration is tremendous, it emphasises the difference between reality and sincerity.

"If when you come to the altar," says Jesus, "there you remember your brother has ought against you, don't say another word to Me, but go and be reconciled to your brother, and then come and offer your gift." Jesus does not mention the other person, He says "You go." He does not say, "Go half-way," but "first go." There is no question of your rights.

Talk about practical home-coming truth! This hits us where we live. A man cannot stand as a humbug before Jesus Christ for one second. The Holy Spirit makes us sensitive to things we never thought of before. Never object to the intense sensitiveness of the Holy Spirit in you when He is educating you down to the scruple; and never discard a conviction. If it is important enough for the Holy Spirit to have brought it to your mind, that is the thing He is detecting.

The test Jesus gives is not the truth of our manner but the temper of our mind. Many of us are wonderfully truthful in manner but our temper of mind is rotten in God's sight. The thing Jesus alters is the temper of mind. Jesus says, "If when you come to the altar, there you remember"—not, "there you rake up something by a morbid sensitiveness," (that is where Satan gets hold of embryo Christians and makes them hyperconscientious), but "there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee"; the inference is that the Holy Spirit brings it to your memory, never check it, say "Yes, Lord, I recognise it" and obey Him at once, however humiliating it may be.

It is impossible to do this unless God has altered your temper of mind; but if you are a saint you will find you have no difficulty in doing what otherwise would be an impossible humiliation. The disposition which will not allow the Son of God to rule is the disposition of my claim to my right to myself; that, and not immorality, is the essence of sin: "I will exercise my right to myself in this particular matter," but if my disposition has been altered, I will obey Jesus at all costs.

Watch the thing that makes you snort morally. If you have not had the temper of your mind altered by Jesus Christ, then the Holy Spirit brings something to your remembrance to be put right you will say, "No, indeed, I am not going to make that up when I was in the right and they were in the wrong; they will say, "We knew we would make you say you were sorry!" Unless you are willing to yield your right to yourself on that point absolutely, you need not pray any more, there is a barrier higher than Calvary between you and God. That is the temper of mind in us all until it has been altered. When it has been altered, the other temper of mind is there that makes reconciliation as natural as breathing, and to our astonishment we find we can do what we could not do before. The instant you obey, you find the temper of your mind is real. Jesus Christ makes us real, not merely sincere. The people who are sincere without being real are not hypocrites, they are perfectly earnest and honest, and desirous of fulfilling what Jesus wants, but they really cannot do it, the reason being that they have not received the One Who makes them real, viz., the Holy Spirit.

Jesus Christ brings men to the practical test. It is not that I say I am pure in heart, but that I prove I am by my deeds; I am sincere not only in manner but in the attitude of my mind. All through the Sermon on the Mount the same truth is brought out. "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees . . ." We have to fulfil all the old law and much more, and the only way it can be done is by letting Jesus alter us within, and by remembering that everything He tells us to do we can do. The whole point of our Lord's teaching is, "Obey Me, and you will find you have a wealth of power within."

^{6.} down to the scruple: to the smallest item.

(c) Lust and License (Matthew 5:27-28)

Our Lord goes to the root of the matter every time with no apology. Sordid? Frantically sordid, but sin is frantically sordid, and there is no excuse in false modesty, or in refusing to face the music of the devil's work in this life. Jesus Christ faced it and He makes us face it too.

Our natural idea of purity is that it means according obedience to certain laws and regulations, but that is apt to be prudery. There is nothing prudish in the Bible. The Bible insists on purity, not prudery. There are bald shocking statements in the Bible, but from cover to cover the Bible will do nothing in the shape of harm to the pure in heart, it is to the impure in heart that these things are corrupting. If Jesus Christ can only make us prudish, we should be horrified if we had to go and work amongst the moral abominations of heathendom; but with the purity Jesus Christ puts in He can take us where He went Himself, and make us capable of facing the vilest moral corruption unspotted, He will keep us as pure as He is Himself. We are scandalised at social immoralities because our social sense of honour is upset, but are we cut to the heart when we see a man living in pride against God? When the Holy Ghost is at work He puts in new standards of judgement and proportion.

Remember that every religious sentiment that is not carried out on its right level carries with it a secret immorality. That is the way human nature is constituted; whenever you allow an emotion and do not carry it out on its legitimate level, it will react on an illegitimate level. You have no business to harbour an emotion the conclusion of which you see to be wrong. Grip it on the threshold of your mind in a vice of blood and allow it no more way.

God does not give a man a new body when he is saved: his body is the same, but he is given a new disposition. God alters the mainspring; He puts love in the place of lust. What is lust? The impatience of desire—I must have it at once. Love can wait seven years; lust cannot wait two seconds. Esau and his mess of pottage is a picture of lust; Jacob serving for Rachel is a picture of love. In these verses lust is put on the lowest level, but remember that lust runs from the lowest basis of immorality right up to the very height of spiritual life. Jesus Christ penetrates right straight down to the basis of our desires. If ever a man is going to stand where lust never strikes him, it can only be because Jesus has altered his disposition; it is impossible unless Jesus Christ can do what He says He can. A disciple has to be free from the degradation of lust, and the marvel of the Redemption is that Jesus can free him from it. Jesus Christ's claim is that He can do for a man what he cannot do for himself. Jesus does not alter our human nature, it does not need altering: He alters the mainspring. The great marvel of the salvation of Jesus is that He alters heredity. License is the rebellion against all law—"I will do what I like and care for no one"; liberty is the ability to perform the law, there is no independence of God in my make-up.

Do you see how we are growing? The disciples were being taught by Jesus Christ to lay their account with purity. Purity is too deep down for us to get to naturally. The only exhibition of purity is the purity in the heart of our Lord, and that is the purity He implants in us, and He says we will know whether we have that purity by the temper of mind we exhibit when we come up against things which before would have awakened in us lust and self-desire. It is not only a question of possibility on the inside, but of a possibility that shows itself in performance. That is the only test there is—"he that doeth righteousness is righteous" (1 John 3:7).

(d) Direction of Discipline (Matthew 5:29-30)

If God has altered the disposition, where is the need of discipline? and yet in these verses our Lord speaks of very stern discipline, to the parting with the right hand and the eye. The reason for the need of discipline is that our bodies have been used by the wrong disposition, and when the new disposition is put in the old physical case is not taken away, it is left there for us to discipline and turn into an obedient servant to the new disposition (see Romans 6:19).

And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

What does that mean? It means absolute unflinching sternness in dealing with the right things in yourself that are not the best. "The good is the enemy of the best" in every man, not the bad, but the good that is not good enough. Your right hand is not a bad thing, it is one of the best things you have, but Jesus says if it offends you in developing your spiritual life, and hinders you in following His precepts, cut it off and cast it from you. Jesus Christ spoke rugged truth, He was never ambiguous, and He says it is better to be maimed than damned, better to enter into life lame in man's sight and lovely in God's than to be lovely in man's sight and lame in God's. It is a maimed life to begin with, such as Jesus describes in these verses; otherwise we may look all right in the sight of our fellow men, but be remarkably twisted and wrong in the sight of God.

One of the principles of our Lord's teaching which we are slow to grasp is that the only basis of the spiritual is the sacrifice of the natural. The natural life is neither moral nor immoral, I make it moral or immoral by my ruling disposition. Jesus teaches that the natural life is meant for sacrifice, we can give it as a gift to God, which is the only way to make it spiritual (see Romans 12:1–2). That is where Adam failed: he refused to sacrifice the natural life and make it spiritual by obeying God's voice, consequently he sinned, the sin of taking his right to himself. Why did God make it necessary for the natural to be sacrificed to the spiritual by me? God did not. God's order was that the natural should be transformed into the spiritual by obedience; it was sin that made it necessary for the natural to be sacrificed, which is a very different thing. If you are going to be spiritual, you must barter the natural, sacrifice it. If you saydo not want to sacrifice the natural for the spiritual," then, Jesus says, you must barter the spiritual. It is not a punishment, but an eternal principle.

This line of discipline is the sternest that ever struck mankind, there is nothing more heroic or more grand than the Christian life. Spirituality is not a sweet tendency towards piety in people who have not enough life in them to be bad; spirituality is the possession of the life of God which is masculine in its strength, and He will make spiritual the most corrupt, twisted, sin-stained life if He be obeyed. Chastity is strong and fierce, and the man who is going to be chaste for Jesus Christ's sake has a gloriously sterling job in front of him.

When Jesus Christ has altered our disposition, we have to bring our body into harmony with the new disposition, and cause it to exercise the new disposition, and this can only be done by stern discipline, discipline which will mean cutting off a great many things for the sake of our spiritual life. There are some things that to us are as our right hand and eye, yet we dare not use them, and the world that knows us says—"How absurd you are to cut off that, whatever is wrong in a right hand?" and they will call us fanatics and cranks. If a man has never been a crank or a fanatic, it is a pretty sure sign that he has never begun seriously to consider life. In the beginning the Holy Spirit will check us in doing a great many things that may be perfectly right for everyone else but not right for us. No one can decide for another what is to be cut off, and we have no right to use our present limitations to criticise others.

Jesus says we must be prepared to be limited fools in the sight of others, in order to further our spiritual character. If we are willing to give up wrong things only for Jesus Christ, never let us talk about being in love with Him. We say—"Why shouldn't I? there is no harm in it." For pity's sake, go and do it, but remember that the construction of a spiritual character is doomed when once we take that line. Anyone will give up wrong things if he knows how, but are we prepared to give up the best we have for Jesus Christ? The only right a Christian has is the right to give up his rights.

The Account with Practise (Matthew 5:31–37)

Practise means continually doing that which no one sees or knows but ourselves. Habit is the result of practice, by continually doing a thing it becomes second nature. The difference between men is not a difference of personal power, but that some men are disciplined and others are not. The difference is not the degree of mental power but the degree of mental discipline. If we have taught ourselves how to think, we will have mental power plus the discipline of having it under control. Beware of impulse. Impulsiveness is the characteristic of a child, but it ought not to be the characteristic of a man, it means he has not disciplined himself. Undeterred impulse is undisciplined power.

Every habit is purely mechanical, and whenever we form a habit it makes a material difference in the brain. The material of the brain alters very slowly, but it does alter, and by repeatedly doing a thing a groove is formed in the material of the brain so that it becomes easier to do it again, until at last we become unconscious of doing it. When we are regenerated we can re-form by the power and the presence of God every habit that is not in accordance with His life. Never form a habit gradually; do it at once, do it sharply and definitely, and never allow a break. We have to learn to form habits according to the dictates of the Spirit of God. The power and the practise must go together. When we fail it is because we have not practised, we have not brought the mechanical part of our nature into line. If we keep practising, what we practise becomes our second nature, and in a crisis we will find that not only does God's grace stand by us, but our own nature also. The practising is ours not God's and the crisis reveals whether or not we have been practising. The reason we fail is not because of the devil, but because of inattention on our part arising from the fact that we have not disciplined ourselves.

Verses 31–32—marriage and money form the elemental constitution of personal and social life. They are the touchstones of reality, and around these two things the Holy Spirit works all the time. Marriage is one of the mountain peaks on which God's thunder blasts souls to hell, or on which His light transfigures human lives in the eternal heavens. Jesus Christ faces fearlessly the question of sin and wrong, and He teaches us to face it fearlessly also. There is no circumstance so dark and complicated, no life so twisted, that He cannot put right. The Bible was not written for babes and fools, it was written for men and women who have to face hell's facts in this life as well as heaven's facts. If Jesus Christ cannot touch those lives that present a smooth face but have a hideous tragedy behind them, what is the good of His salvation? but, bless God, He can. He can alter our disposition, and He can alter the dreams of our dreams until lust no longer dwells in them.

(a) Speech and Sincerity (Matthew 5:33)

Sincerity means that the appearance and the reality are exactly the same. "Remember," says Jesus, "that you stand before the tribunal of God, not of men; practise the right kind of speech and your Father in heaven will back up all that is true. If you have to back it up yourself, it is of the evil one." We ought not to have to call on anyone to back up our word; our word ought to be sufficient; whether men believe us or not is a matter of indifference. We all know men whose word is their bond; there is no need for anyone to back up their word, their character and life are quite sufficient. Refrain your speech until you can convey the sincerity of your mind through it. Until the Son of God is formed in us we are not sincere, not even honest, but when His life comes into us, He makes us honest with ourselves and generous and kind towards others.

There is a snare in being able to talk about God's truth easily because frequently that is where it ends. If we can express the truth well, the danger is that we do not go on to know more. Most of us can talk piously, we have the practise but not the power. Jesus is saying that our conversation should spring from such a basis of His Spirit in us that everyone who listens is built up by it. Unaffected sincerity always builds up; corrupt communication makes us feel mean and narrow. There are men who never say a bad word, yet their influence is devilish. Don't pay attention to the outside of the platter, pay attention to that which is within the platter. Practise the speech that is in accordance with the life of the Son of God in you, and slowly and surely your speech and your sincerity will be in accord.

(b) Irreverent Reverence (Matthew 5:34–36)

In our Lord's day the habit was common, as it is today, of backing up ordinary assertions with an appeal to the name of God. Jesus checks that, He says never call on anything in the nature of God to attest what you say, speak simply and truly, realising that truth in a man is the same as truth in God. To call God in as a witness to back up what you say is nearly always a sign that what you are saying is not true. Similarly if you can find reasons for the truth of what you say, it is proof that what you say is not strictly true; if it were, you would never have to find reasons to prove it. Jesus Christ puts in a truthfulness that never takes knowledge of itself.

Irreverent reverence is something our Lord checks, talking flippantly about those things which ought only to be mentioned with the greatest reverence. I remember an Indian woman who was wonderfully saved, she was an ugly woman but at the pronouncement of the name of Jesus Christ, her face was transfigured, the whole soul of the woman was in reverent adoration of her Lord and Master.

(c) Integrity (Matthew 5:37)

Integrity means unimpaired purity of heart. God can make our words the exact expression of the disposition He has put in. Jesus taught by example and by precept that no man should stand up for his own honour but only for the honour of another. Our Lord was never careful of His own honour, He "made Himself of no reputation." Men called Him a glutton and a winebibber, a madman, devil-possessed, and He never opened His mouth; but immediately they said a word against His Father's honour, He not only opened His mouth, but He said some terrible things (see Mark 11:15–18). Jesus Christ by His Spirit alters our standard of honour, and a disciple will never care what people say of him, but he will care tremendously what people say of Jesus Christ; he realises that his Lord's honour is at stake in his life, not his own honour. What is the thing that rouses you? That is an indication of where you live.

Scandal should be treated as you treat mud on your clothes. If you try and deal with it while it is wet, you rub the mud into the texture, but if you leave it till it is dry you can flick it off with a touch, it is gone without a trace. Leave scandal alone, never touch it.

Let people do what they like with your truth, but never explain it. Jesus never explained anything; we are always explaining, and we get into tangles by not leaving things alone. We need to pray St. Augustine's prayer, "O Lord, deliver me from this lust of always vindicating myself." Our Lord never told His disciples when they made mistakes; they made any number of blunders, but He went on quietly planting the truth and let mistakes correct themselves.

In the matter of praise, when we are not sure of having done well we always like to find out what people think; when we are certain we have done well, we do not care an atom whether folk praise us or not. It is the same with regard to fear, we all know men who say they are not afraid, but the very fact that they say it, proves they are. We have to learn to live on the line of integrity all through.

Another truth we do not sufficiently realise is the influence of what we think over what we say. A man may say wonderfully truthful things, but his thinking is what tells. It is possible to say truthful things in a truthful manner and to tell a lie in thinking. I can repeat to another what I heard you say, word for word, every detail scientifically accurate, and yet convey a lie in saying it, because the temper of my mind is different from the temper of your mind when you said it. A lie is not an inexactitude of speech, a lie is in the motive. I may be actually truthful and an incarnate liar. It is not the literal words that count but their influence on others.

Suspicion is always of the devil, and is the cause of people saying more than they need say, and in that aspect it "cometh of evil." If we submit children to a sceptical atmosphere and call in question all they say, it will instil the habit of backing up what is said, "Well, ask him if you don't believe me." Such a thought would never occur to a child naturally, it only occurs when the child has to talk to suspicious people who continually say, "Now I don't know whether what you are saying is true." The child gets the idea that it does not speak the truth unless some one backs it up. It never occurs to a pure honest heart to back up what it says; it is a wounding insult to be met with suspicion, and that is why from the first a child ought never to be submitted to suspicion.

The Account with Persecution (Matthew 5:38-42)

(a) Insult (Matthew 5:38-39)

If a disciple is going to follow Jesus Christ, he must lay his account not only with purity and with practice, but also with persecution. The picture our Lord gives is not familiar to us. In the East, a slap on the cheek is the greatest form of insult, its equivalent with us would be spitting in the face. Epictetus, a Roman slave, said that a slave would rather be thrashed to death than flicked on the cheek. Jesus says, "If any man shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." The Sermon on the Mount indicates that when we are on Jesus Christ's errands, no time is to be taken in standing up for ourselves. Personal insult will be an occasion in the saint for revealing the incredible sweetness of the Lord Jesus.

The Sermon on the Mount hits where it is meant to hit, and it hits every time. Jesus says, "Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, as My representative, pay no attention," i.e., show a disposition equivalent to turning the other cheek also. Either Jesus Christ was mad to say such things, or He was the Son of God. Naturally, if a man does not hit back it is because he is a coward; supernaturally, it is the manifestation of the Son of God in him: both have the same appearance outwardly. The hypocrite and the saint are alike in the public eye; the saint exhibits a meekness which is contemptible in the eyes of the world; that is the immense humiliation of being a Christian. Our strength has to be the strength of the Son of God, and "He was crucified through weakness." Do the impossible, and immediately you do, you know that God alone has made it possible.

These things apply to a disciple of Jesus and to no one else. The only way to interpret the words of God is to let the Holy Spirit interpret them for us. Jesus said that the Holy Spirit would bring back to our remembrance what He has said, and His counsel is: when you come across personal insult you must not only not resent it, but make it an occasion of exhibiting the Son of God.

The secret of a disciple is personal devotion to a Personal Lord, and a man is open to the same charge as Jesus was, viz., that of inconsistency, but Jesus Christ was never inconsistent to God. There is more than one consistency. There is the consistency of a little child, a child is never the same, always changing and developing, a consistent child; and there is the consistency of a brick wall, a petrified consistency. A Christian is to be consistent only to the life of the Son of God in him, not consistent to hard and fast creeds. Men pour themselves into creeds, and God Almighty has to blast them out of their prejudices before they become devoted to Jesus Christ. "The expulsive power of a new affection" is what Christianity supplies. The reality of the life of the Son of God in us must show itself in the appearance of our lives.

The miracle of regeneration is necessary before we can live the Sermon on the Mount. The Son of God alone can live it, and if God can form in us the life of the Son of God as He introduced him into human history, then we can see how we can live it too, and that is Jesus Christ's message—"Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." (Cf. Luke 1:35.)

(b) Extortion (Matthew 5:40)

Another unfamiliar picture to us, but one that had tremendous meaning in our Lord's day. If a man's cloak and coat were taken from him as the result of a lawsuit, he could get back the loan of the coat to sleep in at night. Jesus uses the illustration to point out what we are going to meet with as His disciples. If they extort anything from you while you are in My service, let them have it, but go on with your work. If you are My disciple, says Jesus, you will have no time to stand up for yourself. Never insist on your rights. The Sermon on the Mount is not, Do your duty; but, Do what is not your duty. It is never your duty to "resist not evil," that is only possible to the Son of God in you.

(c) Tyranny (Matthew 5:41–42)

Under the Roman dominance soldiers could compel any one to be a baggage-carrier for a mile. Simon the Cyrenian is a case in point, the Roman soldier compelled him to be baggage-carrier for Jesus Christ. Jesus says, "If you are My disciple, you will always go the second mile, you will always do more than your duty"; there will be none of this spirit—"Oh well, I can't do any more, they have always misunderstood and misrepresented me"; you will go the second mile, not for their sakes, but for Jesus Christ's sake. It would have been a sorry look-out for us if God had not gone the second mile with us. The first thing God requires of a man is to be born from above, then when he goes the second mile for men it is the Son of God in him Who does it. The only right a Christian has is the right not to insist upon his rights. Every time I insist upon my rights I hurt the Son of God. I can prevent the Son of God being hurt if I take the blow myself, but if I refuse to take it, it will go back on Him (cf. Colossians 1:24).

Verse 42 is an arena for theological acrobats, "Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." That is the statement either of a madman, or of God Incarnate. We always say we do not know what Jesus Christ means when we know perfectly well He means something which is a blunt impossibility unless He can remake us and make it possible. Jesus brings us with terrific force straight up against the impossible, and until we get to the place of despair we will never receive from Him the grace that enables us to do the impossible and manifest His Spirit.

These statements of Jesus revolutionise all our conceptions of charity. Much of our modern philanthropy is based on the motive of giving to the poor man because he deserves it, or because we are distressed at seeing him poor. Jesus never taught charity from those motives: He said, "Give to him that asketh thee, not because he deserves it, but because I tell you to." The great motive in all giving is Jesus Christ's command. We can always find a hundred and one reasons for not obeying our Lord's commands, because we will trust our reasoning rather than His reason, and our reason does not take God into calculation. How does civilisation argue? "Does this man deserve what I am giving him?" Immediately you talk like that, the Spirit of God says, "Who are you? Do you deserve more than other men the blessings you have?"

"Give to him that asketh thee." Why do we always make this mean money? Our Lord makes no mention of money. The blood of most of us seems to run in gold. The reason we make it mean money is because that is where our heart is. Peter said "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee." God grant we may understand that the spring of giving is not impulse nor inclination, but the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, I give because Jesus tells me to.

The way Christians wriggle and twist and compromise over this verse springs from infidelity in the ruling providence of our Heavenly Father. We enthrone commonsense as God and say, "It is absurd; if I give to every one that asks, every beggar in the place will be at my door." Try it. I have yet to find the man who obeyed Jesus Christ's command and did not realise that God restrains those who beg. If we try to apply these principles of Jesus Christ's literally, without the indwelling Spirit, there will be no proof that God is with us, but when once we are rightly related to God and are letting the Holy Spirit apply the words to our circumstances, we shall find the restraining hand of God, for if ever God's ruling is seen, it is seen when once a disciple obeys Jesus Christ's commands.

We live in two universes: the universe of commonsense in which we come in contact with things by our senses and the universe of revelation with which we come in contact by faith. The wisdom of God fits the two universes exactly, the one interprets the other. Jesus Christ is the expression of the Wisdom of God. If we take the common-sense universe and discard the revelation of Jesus Christ we make what He says foolishness, because He talks from the universe of revelation all the time. Jesus Christ lived in the revelation world which we do not see, and until we get into His world we do not understand His teaching at all. In Him we find that the universe of revelation and the universe of common-sense were made one, and if ever they are to be one in us it can only be by receiving the heredity of Jesus, viz., Holy Spirit.

In the common-sense universe the faculty required is intellectual curiosity, but when we enter into the domain from which Jesus Christ talks, intellectual curiosity is ruled out and moral obedience takes the absolute place. "If any man will do His will, he shall know. . . . " If we are going to find out the secrets of the world we live in, we must work at it. God does not encourage laziness. He has given us instruments whereby we are able to explore this universe and we do it entirely by intellectual curiosity; but when we come to the domain which Jesus Christ reveals, no amount of studying or curiosity will avail an atom, our ordinary common-sense faculties are of no use, we cannot see God or taste God, we can dispute with Him, but we cannot get at Him by our senses at all, and common-sense is apt to say there is nothing other than this universe. How are we to get into contact with this other universe to which Jesus Christ belonged and from which He speaks? We come in contact with the revelation facts of God's universe by faith wrought in us by the Spirit of God, then as we develop in understanding, the two universes are slowly made one in us. They never agree outside Jesus Christ.

An understanding of Redemption is not necessary to salvation any more than an understanding of life is necessary before we can be born into it. Jesus Christ did not come to found religion, nor did He come to found civilisation, they were both here before He came; He came to make us spiritually real in every domain. In Jesus Christ there was nothing secular and sacred, it was all real, and He makes His disciples like Himself.

Divine Rule of Life (Matthew 5:43-48)

In these verses our Lord lays down a Divine rule which we by His Spirit have to apply to every circumstance and condition of our lives. Our Lord does not make statements which we have to follow literally; if He did we should not grow in grace. In the realm of God it is a spiritual following, and we have to rely upon His Spirit to teach us to apply His statements to the various circumstances in which we find ourselves.

(a) Exhortation (Matthew 5:43-44)

Our Lord's exhortation here is to be generous in our behaviour to all men whether they be good or bad. The marvel of the Divine love is that God exhibits His love not only to good people but to bad people. In our Lord's parable of the two sons we can understand the father loving the prodigal son, but he also exhibits his love to the elder brother, to whom we feel a strong antipathy. Beware of walking in the spiritual life according to your natural affinities. We all have natural affinities—some people we like and others we do not; some people we get on well with and others we do not. Never let those likes and dislikes be the rule of your Christian life. "If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another," i.e., God gives us fellowship with people for whom we have no natural affinity.

(b) Example (Matthew 5:45)

Woven into our Lord's Divine rule of life is His reference to our Example. Our Example is not a good man, not even a good Christian man, but God Himself. We do not allow the big surprise of this to lay hold of us sufficiently. Jesus nowhere says, "Follow the best example you have, follow Christians, watch those who love Me and follow them"; He says, "Follow your Father which is in heaven—that you may be good men? That you may be loveable to all men?" No, "that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven," and that implies a strong family likeness to Jesus Christ. The Example of a disciple is God Almighty and no one less; not the best man you know, nor the finest saint you ever read about, but God Himself.

That ye may be the children of your Father . . . in heaven.

Our Lord's exhortation to us is to love our fellowmen as God has loved us. The love of God is not like the love of a father or a mother, it is the love of God. "God commendeth His own love toward us" (Romans 5:8 RV). The love of God is revealed in that He laid down His life for His enemies, and Jesus tells us to love our fellow-men as God has loved us. As disciples of Jesus, we are to identify ourselves with God's interests in other people, to show to the other man what God has shown us, and God will give us ample opportunity in our actual lives to prove that we are perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect.

"Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies." Again I want to emphasise the fact that the teaching of Jesus Christ does not appear at first to be what it is. At first it appears to be beautiful and pious and lukewarm; but before long it becomes a ripping and tearing torpedo which splits to atoms every preconceived notion a man ever had. It takes a long time to get the full force of our Lord's statements. "I say unto you, Love your enemies"—an easy thing to do when you have no enemies; an impossible thing when you have. "Bless them that curse you"—easy when no one is cursing you, but impossible when someone is. "Do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you." It seems easy to do all this when we have no enemies, when no one is cursing or persecuting us; but if we have an enemy who slanders and annoys and systematically vexes us, and we read Jesus Christ's statement "I say unto you, Love your enemies"—how are we going to do it? Unless Jesus Christ can remake us within, His teaching is the biggest mockery human ears ever listened to. Talk about the Sermon on the Mount being an ideal! Why, it rends a man with despair the very thing Jesus means it to do, for when once we realise that we cannot love our enemies, we cannot bless them that curse us, we cannot come anywhere near the standard revealed in the Sermon on the Mount, then we are in a condition to receive from God the disposition that will enable us to love our enemies, to pray for those that despitefully use us, to do good to those that hate us.

"I say unto you, Love your enemies." Jesus does not say, "Love every one." The Bible never speaks vaguely, it always speaks definitely. People speak about loving "mankind," and loving "the heathen"; Jesus says, "Love your enemies." Our Lord does not say, "Bless your enemies," He says, "Love your enemies." He does not say, "Love them that curse you"; He says, "Bless them that curse you." "Do good to them that hate you"—not bless them. He does not say, "Do good to them that despitefully use you"; He says, "Pray for them that despitefully use you." Each one of these commands is stamped with sheer impossibility to the natural man. If we reverse the order Jesus has given it can be done with strain, but kept in His order I defy any man on earth to be able to do it unless he has been regenerated by God the Holy Ghost. When a man does love his enemies, he knows that God has done a tremendous work in him, and every one else knows it too.

(c) Expression (Matthew 5:46–48)

Christian character is not expressed by good doing, but by God-likeness. It is not sufficient to do good, to do the right thing, we must have our goodness stamped by the image and superscription of God, it is supernatural all through. The secret of a Christian's life is that the supernatural is made natural by the grace of God. The way it is worked out in expression is not in having times of communion with God, but in the practical details of life. The proof that we have been regenerated is that when we come in contact with the things that create a buzz, we find to our astonishment that we have a power to keep wonderfully poised in the centre of it all, a power we did not have before, a power that is only explained by the Cross of Jesus Christ.

Verse 48 is a re-emphasis of verse 20. The perfection of verse 48 refers to the disposition of God in me—"Ye therefore shall be perfect as your heavenly Father is perfect" (RV), not in a future state, but—"You shall be perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect if you let Me work that perfection in you." If the Holy Spirit has transformed us within, we will not exhibit good human characteristics, but Divine characteristics in our human nature. There is only one type of holiness and that is the holiness of God, and Jesus gives God Almighty as our Example. How many of us have measured ourselves by that standard, the standard of a purity of heart in which God can see nothing to blame?

May this Divine rule of our Lord's bring us to the bar of the standard of Jesus Christ. His claim is measured by these tremendous statements of His. He can take the vilest piece of "broken earthenware," He can take you and me, and can fit us exactly to the expression of the Divine life in us. It is not a question of putting the statements of our Lord in front of us and trying to live up to them, but of receiving His Spirit and finding that we can live up to them as He brings them to our remembrance and applies them to our circumstances.

God grant we may have the courageous range of faith that is required. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect"—and men will take knowledge of me that I am a good man? Never! If ever it is recorded of me—"What a good man that is," I have been a betrayer somewhere. If we fix our eyes on our own whiteness we shall soon get dry rot in our spiritual life. All our righteousness is "as filthy rags" unless it is the blazing holiness of Jesus in us uniting us with Him until we see nothing but Jesus first, Jesus second, and Jesus third. Then when men take knowledge of us, they will not say that we are good men, that we have a wonderful whiteness, but that Jesus Christ has done something wonderful in us. Always keep at the Source of spiritual blessings—Jesus Christ Himself.

Our Lord says in verse 30, "For it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell," i.e., He is referring to a maimed life. In verse 48 He says, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Is our Father in heaven maimed? Has He a right arm cut off, a right eye plucked out? In verse 48 Jesus completes the picture He began to give in verse 30. Our Lord's statements embrace the whole of the spiritual life from the beginning to the end. In verses 29-30, He pictures a maimed life: in verse 48 He pictures a full-orbed life of holiness. Holiness means a perfect balance between our disposition and the laws of God. The maimed life is the characteristic at the beginning, and if we have not had that characteristic it is questionable whether we have ever received the Holy Spirit. What the world calls fanaticism is the entrance into Life. We have to begin the life with God as maimed souls; the swing of the pendulum makes us go to the opposite extreme of what we were in the life of the world. We are so afraid of being fanatical; would to God we were as afraid of being "fushionless." We should a thousand times rather be fanatical in the beginning than poor "fushionless" creatures all our lives, limp and useless. May we get to the place where we are willing to cut off the right arm, to pluck out the right eye, to enter into Life hirplers, 9 maimed, having cut off whatever there was need to, however beautiful; and, blessed be the name of God, we shall find that He will bring every life that obeys Him to a full-orbed unity.

Always make allowances for people when they first enter into Life, they have to enter on the fanatical line. The danger is lest they stay too long in the stage of fanaticism. When fanaticism steps over the bounds, it becomes spiritual lunacy. In the beginning of the life in grace we have to limit ourselves all round, in right things as well as wrong; but if when God begins to bring us out of the light of our convictions into the light of the Lord, we prefer to remain true to our convictions, we become spiritual lunatics. Walking in the light of convictions is a necessary stage, but there is a grander, purer, sterner light to walk in, viz., the light of the Lord.

How impatient we are! When we see a life born from above of the Spirit and the necessary limitations and severances and maimings taking place, we will try and do God's work for Him, and God has to rap us sharply over the knuckles and say—"Leave that soul in My care." Always allow for the swing of the pendulum in yourself and in others. A pendulum does not swing evenly at first, it begins with a tremendous swing to one extreme and only gets back to the right balance gradually, and that is how the Holy Spirit brings the grace of God to bear upon our lives. "I do not frustrate the grace of God," says Paul.

Divine Region of Religion (Matthew 6:1–18)

In chapter 5, our Lord demands that our disposition be right with Him in our ordinary natural life lived to men; in chapter 6, He deals with the domain of our life lived to God before men. The main idea in the region of religion is, Your eyes on God, not on men.

(a) Philanthropy (Matthew 6:1-4)

It was inculcated, as it were, into the very blood of the Jew to look after the stranger (see Deuteronomy 15:7–8, Leviticus 19:8, 10), and in our Lord's day the Pharisees made a tremendous show of giving; they gave from a play-acting motive, that they might "have glory of men." They would put their money in the boxes in the women's court of the Temple with a great clang which sounded like a trumpet. Jesus tells us not to give in that way, with the motive to be seen of men, to be known as a generous giver, for "Verily I say unto you, They have their reward," that is all there is to it.

Briefly summed up these verses mean: Have no other motive in giving than to please God. In modern philanthropy we are "egged on" with other motives— It will do them good; they need the help; they deserve it. Jesus Christ never brings out that aspect in His teaching; He allows no other motive in giving than to please God. In chapter 5, He says—"Give because I tell you to,—and here, He teaches us not to have mixed motives. It is very penetrating to ask ourselves this question—"What was my motive in doing that kind act?" We will be astounded at how rarely the Holy Spirit gets a chance to fit our motives on to being right with God, we mix our motives with a hundred and one other considerations. Jesus Christ makes it steadily simple—one motive only, your eyes on God; "if you are My disciple, you will never give with any other motive than to please God." The characteristic of Jesus in a disciple is much deeper down than doing good things, it is goodness in motive because the disciple has been made loved by the supernatural grace of God.

"But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth," i.e., do good until it is an unconscious habit of the life and you do not know you are doing it, you will be covered with confusion when Jesus Christ detects it. "Lord, when saw we Thee an hungered, and fed Thee? . . . Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." That is our Lord's magnanimous interpretation of kind acts that people have never allowed themselves to think anything of. Get into the habit of having such a relationship to God that you do good without knowing you do it, then you will no longer trust your own impulse, or your own judgement, you will trust only the inspiration of the Spirit of God. The mainspring of your motives will be the Father's heart, not your own; the ^{8.} fushionless: insipid; lacking energy; mentally or spiritually dull.

^{9.} hirpler: one who walks with a limp or hobble.

Father's understanding, not your own. When once you are rightly related to God, He will use you as a channel through which His disposition will flow.

(b) Prayer (Matthew 6:5-15)

Prayer, says Jesus, is to be looked at in the same way as philanthropy, viz., your eyes on God, not on men. Watch your motive before God; have no other motive in prayer than to know Him. The statements of Jesus about prayer which are so familiar to us are revolutionary. Call a halt one moment and ask yourself—"Why do I pray? What is my motive? Is it because I have a personal secret relationship to God known to no one but myself?"

The Pharisees were obliged to pray so many times a day, and they took care that they happened to be in the midst of the city when the hour for prayer came, and then in an ostentatious manner they would give themselves to prayer. Jesus says, "Thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are, their motive is to be known as praying men, and, verily, they have their reward." Our Lord did not say it was wrong to pray in the corners of the streets, but He did say that the motive "to be seen of men" was wrong. "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret," i.e., get a place for prayer where no one imagines that that is what you are doing, shut the door and talk to God in secret. It is impossible to live the life of a disciple without definite times of secret prayer. You will find that the place to enter in is in your business, as you walk along the streets, in the ordinary ways of life, when no one dreams you are praying, and the reward comes openly, a revival here, a blessing there. The Scots have a proverb, "Aye keep a bittie to yersel," and as you go on with God you learn more and more to maintain this secret relationship with God in prayer.

When we pray we give God a chance to work in the unconscious realm of the lives of those for whom we pray, when we come into the secret place it is the Holy Ghost's passion for souls that is at work, not our passion, and He can work through us as He likes. Sects produce a passion for souls; the Holy Spirit produces a passion for Christ. The great dominating passion all through the New Testament is for our Lord Jesus Christ.

Jesus also taught the disciples the prayer of patience. If you are right with God and God delays the manifested answer to your prayer, don't misjudge Him, don't think of Him as an unkind friend an unnatural father, or an unjust judge, but keep at it, your prayer will certainly be answered, for "every one that asketh receiveth." "Men ought always to pray, and not to faint," i.e., not to cave in. "Your heavenly Father will explain it all one day," Jesus says, "He cannot just now because He is developing your character."

In verse 8 Jesus goes to the root of all prayer—"Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him." Common-sense says, "Then why ask Him?" Prayer is not getting things from God, that is a most initial stage; prayer is getting into perfect communion with God; I tell Him what I know He knows in order that I may get to know it as He does. Jesus says, "Pray because you have a Father, not because it quietens you, and give Him time to answer." If the life of Jesus is formed in me by regeneration and I am drawing my breath in the fear of the Lord, the Son of God will press forward in front of my common-sense and change my attitude to things.

Most of us make the blunder of depending upon our own earnestness and not on God at all, it is confidence in Jesus that tells (see 1 John 5:14). All our fuss and earnestness, all our gifts of prayer, are not of the slightest use to Jesus Christ, He pays no attention to them. If you have a gift of prayer, may God wither it up until you learn how to get your prayers inspired by God the Holy Ghost. Do we rely on God, or on our own earnestness when we pray? God is never impressed by our earnestness; we are not heard because we are in earnest, but on the ground of Redemption only. We have "boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus," and by no other way.

"Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of."
"Remember," says Jesus, "your Father is keenly and divinely interested in you, and prayer becomes the 'blether' of a child to his father." We are inclined to take everything and every one seriously saving God; our Lord took nothing and no one seriously but His Father, and He teaches us to be as children before men, but in earnest before our Father in heaven. Notice the essential simplicity of our Lord's teaching all through—right towards God, right towards God.

(c) Penance (Matthew 6:16-18)

Penance means putting ourselves into a strait-jacket for the sake of disciplining our spiritual character. Physical sloth will upset spiritual devotion quicker than anything else. If the devil cannot get at us by enticing to sin, he will get at us by sleeping-sickness spiritually— "Now you cannot possibly get up in the morning to pray, you are working hard all day and you cannot give that time to prayer, God does not expect it of you." Jesus says God does expect it of us. Penance means doing a hardship to the body for the sake of developing the spiritual life. Put your life through discipline but do not say a word about it—"appear not unto men to fast." Jeremy Taylor said that men hang out the sign of the devil to prove there is an angel within, i.e., they wear sad countenances and look tremendously severe in order to prove they are holy. Jesus taught His disciples to be hypocrites, "but thou, when thou fastest, ... wash thy face," i.e., never allow anyone to imagine you are putting yourself through discipline. If ever we can tell to others the discipline we put ourselves through in order to further our life with God, from that moment the discipline becomes useless. Our Lord counsels us to have a relationship between ourselves and God that our dearest friend on earth never guesses. When you fast, fast to your Father in secret, not before men. Do not make a cheap martyr of yourself, and never ask for pity. If you are going through a time of discipline, pretend you are not going through it—"appear not unto men to fast." The Holy Spirit will apply this to each one of us. There are lines of discipline, lines of limitation, physical and mental and spiritual, and the Holy Spirit will say—"You must not allow yourself this and that." Ostensible external fasts are of no use, it is the internal fasting that counts. Fasting from food may be difficult for some, but it is child's play compared with fasting for the development of God's purpose in your life. Fasting means concentration. Five minutes' heed to what Jesus says and solid concentration on it would bring about transactions with God that would end in sanctification.

Be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast.

May God destroy for ever "the grief that saps the mind," and the luxury of misery and morbid introspection that men indulge in in order to develop holiness, and may we bear the shining faces that belong to the sons of God. "They looked unto Him, and were radiant" (Psalm 34:5 American Version).

Divine Reasonings of Mind (Matthew 6:19-24)

It is a fruitful study to find out what the New Testament says about the mind. The Spirit of God comes through the different writers with the one steady insistence to stir up our minds (e.g., Philippians 2:5; 2 Peter 1:12–13). Satan comes as an "angel of light" to those Christians only whose hearts are right but whose minds are not stirred up. Our Lord in these verses deals with the mind and tells us how we are to think and to reason about things. Unless we learn to think in obedience to the Holy Spirit's teaching, we will drift in our spiritual experience without any thinking at all. The confusion arises when we try to think and to reason things out without the Spirit of God.

(a) Doctrine of Deposit (Matthew 6:19–21)

The Holy Spirit teaches us to fasten our thinking upon God; then when we come to deal with property and money and everything to do with the matters of earth, He reminds us that our real treasure is in heaven. Every effort to persuade myself that my treasure is in heaven is a sure sign that it is not. When my motive has been put right, it will put my thinking right.

"But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven," i.e., have your banking account in heaven, not on earth; lay up your confidence in God, not in your common-sense. It is the trial of your faith that makes you wealthy, and it works in this way: every time you venture out on the life of faith, you will come across something in your actual life which seems to contradict absolutely what your faith in God says you should believe. Go through the trial of faith and lay up your confidence in God, not in your common-sense, and you will gain so much wealth in your heavenly banking account, and the more you go through the trial of faith the wealthier you will become in the heavenly regions, until you go through difficulties smilingly and men wonder where your wealth of trust comes from.

It is a trial of faith all through. The conflict for the Christian is not a conflict with sin, but a conflict over the natural life being turned into the spiritual life. The natural life is not sinful, the disposition that rules the natural life is sinful, and when God alters that disposition, we have to turn the natural life into the spiritual by a steady process of obedience to God, and it takes spiritual concentration on God to do it. If you are going to succeed in anything in this world, you must concentrate on it, practise it, and the same is true spiritually. There are many things you will find you cannot do if you are going to be concentrated on God, things that may be perfectly legitimate and right for others, but not for you if you are going to concentrate on God. Never let the narrowness of your conscience condemn the other man. Maintain the personal relationship, see that you yourself are concentrated on God, not on your convictions or your point of view, but on God. Whenever you are in doubt about a thing, push it to its logical conclusion—"Is this the kind of thing that Jesus Christ is after or the kind of thing Satan is after?" Immediately your decision is made, act on it.

(b) Doctrine of Division (Matthew 6:22–23)

In verse 22, our Lord is using the eye as the symbol of conscience in a man who has been put right by the Holy Spirit. A single¹⁰ eye is essential to correct understanding. One idea runs all through our Lord's teaching—Right with God, first, second and third. If we are born again of the Holy Ghost we do not persuade ourselves that we are right with God, we are right with Him because we have been put right by the Holy Spirit. Then if we walk in the light as ^{10.} single: pure; unmixed.

God is in the light, that will keep our eye single, and slowly and surely all our actions begin to be put into the right relationship, and everything becomes full of harmony and simplicity and peace.

No one has a single motive unless he has been born from above; we have single ambitions, but not single motives. Jesus Christ is the only One with a single motive, and when His Spirit comes into us the first thing He does is to make us men with a single motive, a single eye to the glory of God. The one motive of Jesus is to turn men into sons of God, and the one motive of a disciple is to glorify Jesus Christ.

If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!

Darkness is my point of view, my right to myself; light is God's point of view. Jesus Christ made the line of demarcation between light and darkness very definite, the danger is lest this division gets blurred. "Men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil," said Jesus.

(c) Doctrine of Detachment (Matthew 6:24) Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

A man of the world says we can; with a little subtlety and wisdom and compromise (it is called diplomacy, or tact), we can serve both. The devil's temptation to our Lord to fall down and worship him, i.e., to compromise, is repeated over and over again in Christian experience. We have to realise that there is a division as high as heaven and as deep as hell between the Christian and the world. "Whosoever therefore would be a friend of the world maketh himself an enemy of God" (RV).

This doctrine of detachment is a fundamental theme of our Lord's and runs all through His teaching. You cannot be good and bad at the same time; you cannot serve God and make your own out of the service; you cannot make "honesty is the best policy" a motive, because immediately you do, you cease to be honest. The riddling the Spirit of God puts a man through is the sternest on earth—"Why are you a student for the ministry, a missionary, a preacher of the Gospel?" There should be one consideration only to stand right with God, to see that that relationship is the one thing that is never dimmed, then all other things will right themselves. Immediately that relationship is lost sight of, a multitude of motives begin to work and you soon become worn out. Never compromise with the spirit of mammon. When you are right with God, you become contemptible in the eyes of the world. Put into practice any of the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount and you will be treated with amusement at first; then if you persist, the world will get annoyed and will detest you. What will happen, for instance, if you carry out Jesus Christ's teaching in business? Not quite so much success as you bargained for. This is not the age of the glorification of the saints, but the age of their humiliation. Are you prepared to follow Jesus Christ outside the camp, the special camp to which you belong?

"Ye cannot serve God and mammon. What is mammon? The system of civilised life which organises itself without considering God. We have to stand absolutely true to God's line of things. Thank God for every one who has learned that the dearest friend on earth is a mere shadow compared with Jesus Christ. There must be a dominant, personal, passionate devotion to Him, and only then are all other relationships right (cf. Luke 14:26). Jesus Christ is not teaching ordinary integrity, but supernormal integrity, a likeness to our Father in heaven. In the beginning of our spiritual life we must make allowance for the swing of the pendulum. It is not by accident but by the set purpose of God that in the reaction we go to the opposite extreme of all we were before. God breaks us from the old life violently, not gradually, and only when we are right with Him does He bring us back into the domain of men; we are to be in the world, but not of it. When we become mature in godliness God trusts His own honour to us by placing us where the world, the flesh, and the devil may try us, knowing that "greater is He that is in you, than he that is in the world."

Divine Reasonings of Faith (Matthew 6:25-34)

Faith is our personal confidence in a Being Whose character we know, but Whose ways we cannot trace by common-sense. By the reasonings of faith is meant the practical out-working in our life of implicit, determined confidence in God. Common-sense is mathematical; faith is not mathematical, faith works on illogical lines. Jesus Christ places the strongest emphasis on faith, and especially on the faith that has been tried. To have faith tests a man for all he is worth, he has to stand in the common-sense universe in the midst of things which conflict with his faith, and place his confidence in the God Whose character is revealed in Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ's statements reveal that God is a Being of love and justice and truth; the actual happenings in our immediate circumstances seem to prove He is not; are we going to remain true to the revelation that God is good? Are we going to be true to His honour, whatever may happen in the actual domain? If we are, we shall find that God in His providence makes the two universes, the universe of revelation and the universe of common-sense, work together in perfect harmony. Most of us are pagans in a crisis; we think and act like pagans, only one out of a hundred is daring enough to bank his faith in the character of God.

The golden rule for understanding in spiritual matters is not intellect, but obedience. Discernment in the spiritual world is never gained by intellect; in the commonsense world it is. If a man wants scientific knowledge, intellectual curiosity is his guide; but if he wants insight into what Jesus Christ teaches, he can only get it by obedience. If things are dark to us spiritually, it is because there is something we will not do. Intellectual darkness comes because of ignorance; spiritual darkness comes because of something I do not intend to obey.

(a) Careful Carelessness (Matthew 6:25)

Jesus does not say, "Blessed is the man who does not think about anything"; that man is a fool; He says, "Be carefully careless about everything saving one thing, viz., your relationship to God." That means we have to be studiously careful that we are careless about how we stand to self-interest, to food, to clothes, for the one reason only, that we are set on minding our relationship to God. Many people are careless about what they eat and drink, and they suffer for it; they are careless about what they put on, and they look as they have no right to look; they are careless over property, and God holds them responsible for it. Jesus is saying that the great care of the life is to put the relationship to God first and everything else second. Our Lord teaches a complete reversal of all our practical sensible reasonings. Do not make the ruling factor of your life what you shall eat, or what you shall drink, but make zealous concentration on God the one point of your life. The one dominating abandon of the life is concentration on God, consequently every other carelessness is careless in comparison. In Luke 14:26, our Lord lays down the conditions of discipleship, and He says that the first condition is personal, passionate devotion to Himself until every other devotion is hatred in comparison.

"Take no thought for your life. . . ." Immediately we look at these words of our Lord, we find them the most revolutionary of statements. We argue in exactly the opposite way, even the most spiritual of us—"I must live, I must make so much money, I must be clothed and fed." That is how it begins; the great concern of the life is not God, but how we are going to fit ourselves to live. Jesus Christ says, "Reverse the order, get rightly related to Me first, see that you maintain that as the great care of your life, and never put the concentration of your care on the other things." It is a severe discipline to allow the Holy Spirit to bring us into harmony with the teaching of Jesus in these verses.

(b) Careful Unreasonableness (Matthew 6:26–29) Jesus declares it to be unreasonable for a disciple to Jesus declares it to be unreasonable for a disciple to be careful of all that the natural man says we must be careful over. "Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? . . . Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and vet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Jesus does not use the illustration of the birds and the flowers by accident, He uses it purposely in order to show the utter unreasonableness from His standpoint of being so anxious about the means of living. Imagine the sparrows and blackbirds and thrushes worrying about their feathers! Jesus says they do not trouble about themselves at all, the thing that makes them what they are is not their thought for themselves, but the thought of the Father in heaven. A bird is a hard-working little creature, but it does not work for its feathers, it obeys the law of its life and becomes what it is. Jesus Christ's argument is that if we concentrate on the life He gives us, we will be perfectly free for all other things because our Father is watching the inner life. We have to maintain obedience to the Holy Spirit, Who is the real principle of our life, and God will supply the "feathers," for are we not "much better than they"?

It is useless to mistake careful consideration of circumstances for that which produces character. We cannot produce an inner life by watching the outer all the time. The lily obeys the law of its life in the surroundings in which it is placed, and Jesus says, as a disciple, consider your hidden life with God; pay attention to the Source and God will look after the outflow. Imagine a lily hauling itself out of its pot and saying, "I don't think I look exactly right here." The lily's duty is to obey the law of its life where it is placed by the gardener. "Watch your life with God," says Jesus, "see that that is right and you will grow as the lily." We are all inclined to say, "I should be all right if only I were somewhere else." There is only one way to develop spiritually, and that is by concentrating on God. Don't bother about whether you are growing in grace or whether you are being of use to others, but believe on Jesus and out of you will flow rivers of living water.

"Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow"—they simply are. Take the sea and the air, the sun, the stars and the moon, they all are, and what a ministration they exert! So often we mar God's designed influence through us by our self-conscious effort to be consistent and useful. It seems unreasonable to expect a man to consider the lilies, yet that is the only way he can grow in grace. Jesus Christ's argument is that the men and women who are concentrated on their Father in heaven are those who are the fittest to do the work of the world. They have no ulterior motive in arranging their circumstances in order to produce a fine character. They know it cannot be done in that way. How are you to grow in the knowledge of God? By remaining where you are, and by remembering that your Father knows where you are and the circumstances you are in. Keep concentrated on Him and you will grow spiritually as the lily.

"Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?" Jesus is speaking from the implicit domain. How many people are born into the world by taking thought? The springs of natural life cannot be got at by the reasoning of common-sense, and when you deal with the life of God in your soul, Jesus says, "Remember that your growth in grace does not depend on your watching it, but on your concentration on your Father in heaven."

Notice the difference between the illustrations we use in talking of spiritual growth and the illustrations Jesus uses. We take our illustrations from engineering enterprises, from motor-cars and aeroplanes, et cetera, things that compel our attention. Jesus Christ took His illustrations from His Father's handiwork, from sparrows and flowers, things that none of us dream of noticing; we are all breathless and passionate and in a hurry. We may think till all is blue, ¹¹ but Jesus says you cannot add one inch to your height in that way. We cannot possibly develop spiritually in any way other than the way He tells us, viz., by concentration on God.

Our Lord's counsel to His disciples is, "Be as the lily and the star." When a man is born from above he is inclined to become a moral policeman, one who unconsciously presents himself as better than other men, an intolerable spiritual prig. Which are the men who influence us most? The men who "buttonhole" us, or the men who live their lives as the stars in the heaven and the lily of the field, perfectly simple and unaffected? These are the lives that mould us, our mothers and wives and friends who are of that order, and that is the order the Holy Ghost produces. If you want to be of use, get rightly related to Jesus Christ and He will make you of use unconsciously every moment you live; the condition is believing on Him.

(c) Careful Infidelity (Matthew 6:30–32)

Suppose Jesus tells you to do something that is an enormous challenge to your common sense, what are you going to do—hang back? If once your nerves are in the habit of doing a thing physically, you will do it every time, until you break the habit deliberately; and the same is true spiritually. Over and over again you will get up to what Jesus wants and turn back every time when it comes to the point, like a man balking a hurdle, until you break the habit and abandon resolutely. Jesus Christ demands of the man who trusts in Him the same reckless sporting spirit that the natural man exhibits in his life. If a man is going to do anything worthwhile, there are times when he has to risk everything on a leap, and in the spiritual world Jesus Christ demands that we risk everything we hold by our common-sense and leap into what He says. Immediately we do, we find that what He says fits on as solidly as our common-sense.

Following Jesus Christ is a risk absolutely; we must yield right over to Him, and that is where our infidelity comes in, we will not trust what we cannot see, we will not believe what we cannot trace, then it is all up with our discipleship. The great word of Jesus to His disciples is Abandon. When God has brought us into the relationship of disciples, we have to venture on His word; trust entirely to Him and watch that when He brings us to the venture, we take it.

Jesus sums up common-sense carefulness in a man indwelt by the Spirit of God as infidelity. If after you have received the Holy Spirit, you try and put other things first instead of God, you will find confusion. The Holy Spirit presses through and says— "Where does God come in in this new relationship? in this mapped-out holiday? in these new books you are buying?" The Holy Spirit always presses that point until we learn to make concentration on God our first consideration. It is not only wrong to worry, it is real infidelity because it means we do not believe God can look after the little practical details of our lives, it is never anything else that worries us. Notice what Jesus said would choke the word He puts inthe devil? No, the cares of this world. That is how infidelity begins. It is "the little foxes, that spoil the vines," the little worries always. The great cure for infidelity is obedience to the Spirit of God. Refuse to be swamped by the cares of this world, cut out nonessentials and continually revise your relationship to God and see that you are concentrated absolutely on Him. The man who trusts Jesus Christ in a definite practical way is freer than anyone else to do his work in the world. Free from fret and worry, he can go with absolute certainty into the daily life because the responsibility of his life is not on him but on God. If once we accept the revelation of Jesus Christ that God is our Father and that we can never think of anything He will forget, worry becomes impossible.

(d) Concentrated Consecration (Matthew 6:33–34) Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God"—"But suppose I do, what about this thing and that? who is going to look after me? I would like to obey God, but don't ask me to take a step in the dark." We enthrone commonsense as almighty God and treat Jesus Christ as a spiritual appendage to it. Jesus Christ hits desperately hard at every one of the institutions we bank all our faith on naturally. The sense of property and of insurance is one of the greatest hindrances to development in the spiritual life. You cannot lay up for a rainy day if you are trusting Jesus Christ.

Our Lord teaches that the one great secret of the spiritual life is concentration on God and His purposes. We talk a lot about consecration, but it ends in sentimentalism because there is nothing definite about it. Consecration ought to mean the definite yielding of ourselves over as saved souls to Jesus and concentrating on that. There are things in actual life that lead to perplexity, and we say—"I am in a quandary and I don't know which way to take." "Be renewed in the spirit of your mind," says Paul, concentrate on God, so that you may "make out" what is His will. Concentration on God is of more value than personal holiness. God can do what He likes with the man who is abandoned to Him. God saves us and sanctifies us, then He expects us to concentrate on Him in every circumstance we are in. "Immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." When in doubt, haul yourself up short and concentrate on God and every time you do, you will find that God will engineer your circumstances and open the way perfectly securely, the condition on your part being that you concentrate on God.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." At the bar of common-sense Jesus Christ's statements are those of a fool; but bring them to the bar of faith and the Word of God, and you begin to find with awe-struck spirit that they are the words of God.

Christian Comprehensiveness (Matthew 7:12)

- (a) The Positive Margin of Righteousness
- (b) The Proverbial Maxim of Reasonableness
- (c) The Principal Meaning of Revelation

"And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue. . . ." Peter is writing to those who are the children of God, those who have been born from above, and he says, Add, give diligence, concentrate. "Add" means all that character means. No man is born with character; we make our own character. When a man is born from above a new disposition is given to him, but not a new character; neither naturally nor supernaturally are we born with character. Character is what a man makes out of his disposition as it comes in contact with external things. A man's character cannot be summed up by what he does in spots, but only by what he is in the main trend of his existence. When we describe a man we fix on the exceptional things, but it is the steady trend of a man's life that tells. Character is that which steadily prevails, not something that occasionally manifests itself. Character is made by things done steadily and persistently, not by the exceptional or spasmodic, that is something God mourns over—"your goodness is as a morning cloud," He says (Hosea 6:4). In Matthew 7 our Lord is dealing with the need to make character.

Christian Characteristics (Matthew 7:1–5) (a) The Uncritical Temper (Matthew 7:1) Judge not, that ye be not judged.

Criticism is part of the ordinary faculty of a man, he has a sense of humour, i.e., a sense of proportion, he sees where things are wrong and pulls the other fellow to bits; but Jesus says, "As a disciple, cultivate the uncritical temper." In the spiritual domain, criticism is love turned sour. In a wholesome spiritual life there is no room for criticism. The critical faculty is an intellectual one, not a moral one. If criticism becomes a habit it will destroy the moral energy of the life and paralyse spiritual force. The only person who can criticise human beings is the Holy Spirit. No human being dare criticise another human being, because immediately he does he puts himself in a superior position to the one he criticises. A critic must be removed from what he criticises. Before a man can criticise a work of art or a piece of music, his information must be complete, he must stand away from what he criticises as superior to it. No human being can ever take that attitude to another human being; if he does he puts himself in the wrong position and grieves the Holy Spirit. A man who is continually criticised becomes good for nothing, the effect of criticism knocks all the gumption and power out of him. Criticism is deadly in its effect because it divides a man's powers and prevents his being a force for anything. That is never the work of the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost alone is in the true position of a critic; He is able to show what is wrong without wounding and hurting.

The temper of mind that makes us lynx-eyed in seeing where others are wrong does not do them any good, because the effect of our criticism is to paralyse their powers, which proves that the criticism was not of the Holy Ghost; we have put ourselves into the position of a superior person. Jesus says a disciple can never stand away from another life and criticise it, therefore He advocates an uncritical temper, "Judge not." Beware of anything that puts you in the place of the superior person.

The counsel of Jesus is to abstain from judging. This sounds strange at first because the characteristic of the Holy Spirit in a Christian is to reveal the things that are wrong, but the strangeness is only on the surface. The Holy Spirit does reveal what is wrong in others, but His discernment is never for purposes of criticism, but for purposes of intercession. When the Holy Spirit reveals something of the nature of sin and unbelief in another, His purpose is not to make us feel the smug satisfaction of a critical spectator, "Well, thank God, I am not like that"; but to make us so lay hold of God for that one that God enables him to turn away from the wrong thing. Never ask God for discernment, because discernment increases your responsibility terrifically; and you cannot get out of it by talking, but only by bearing up the life in intercession before God until God puts him right. "If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and He shall give him life for them that sin not unto death" (1 John 5:16). Our Lord allows no room for criticism in the spiritual life, but He does allow room for discernment and discrimination.

If we let these search-lights go straight down to the root of our spiritual life we will see why Jesus says, "Don't judge"; we won't have time to. Our whole life is to be lived so in the power of God that He can pour through us the rivers of living water to others. Some of us are so concerned about the outflow that it dries up. We continually ask, "Am I of any use?" Jesus tells us how to be of use: "Believe in Me, and out of you will flow rivers of living water."

"Judge not, that ye be not judged." If we let that maxim of our Lord's sink into our hearts we will find how it hauls us up. "Judge not"—why, we are always at it! The average Christian is the most penetratingly critical individual, there is nothing of the likeness of Jesus Christ about him. A critical temper is a contradiction to all our Lord's teaching. Jesus says of criticism, "Apply it to yourself, never to anyone else." "Why dost thou judge thy brother? . . . for we shall all stand before the judgement seat of Christ." Whenever you are in a critical temper, it is impossible to enter into communion with God. Criticism makes you hard and vindictive and cruel, and leaves you with the flattering unction that you are a superior person. It is impossible to develop the characteristics of a saint and maintain a critical attitude. The first thing the Holy Spirit does is to give us a spring-cleaning, and there is no possibility of pride being left in a man after that. I never met a man I could despair of after having discerned all that lies in me apart from the grace of God. Stop having a measuring rod for others. Jesus says regarding judging, "Don't; be uncritical in your temper, because in the spiritual domain you can accomplish nothing by criticism." One of the severest lessons to learn to is leave the cases we do not understand to God. There is always one fact more in every life of which we know nothing, therefore Jesus says, "Judge not." We cannot do it once and for all, we have to remember always that this is our Lord's rule of conduct.

(b) The Undeviating Test (Matthew 7:2)

For with what judgement ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

This statement of our Lord's is not a haphazard guess, it is an eternal law which works from God's throne right down (see Psalm 18:25-26). The measure you mete is measured to you again. Jesus speaks of it here in connection with criticism. If you have been shrewd in finding out the defects of others, that will be exactly the measure meted out to you, people will judge you in the same way. "I am perfectly certain that man has been criticising me." Well, what have you been doing? Life serves back in the coin you pay; you are paid back not necessarily by the same person, but the law holds good—"with what judgement ye judge, ye shall be judged." And it is so with regard to good as well as evil. If you have been generous, you will meet with generosity again; if you mete out criticism and suspicion to others, that is the way you will be treated. There is a difference between retaliation and retribution. According to our Lord, the basis of life is retribution, but He allows no room for retaliation.

In Romans 2, this principle is applied still more definitely, viz., I am guilty myself of what I criticise in another. Every wrong I see in you, God locates in me; every time I judge you, I condemn myself. "Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things." God does not look at the act, He looks at the possibility. We do not believe the statements of the Bible to begin with. For instance, do we believe that what we criticise in another we are guilty of ourselves? We can always see sin in another because we are sinners. The reason we see hypocrisy and fraud and unreality in others is because they are all in our own hearts. The great danger is lest we call carnal suspicion the conviction of the Holy Ghost. When the Holy Ghost convicts men, He convicts for conversion, that men might be converted and manifest other characteristics. We have no right to put ourselves in the place of the superior person and tell others what we see is wrong; that is the work of the Holy Ghost.

The great characteristic of the saint is humility. We realise to the full that all these sins and others would have been manifested in ourselves but for the grace of God, therefore we have no right to judge. Jesus says, "Judge not, because if you do judge, it will be measured to you again exactly as you have judged." Which of us would dare stand before God and say, "My God, judge me as I have judged my fellow men"? We have judged our fellow-men as sinners; if God had judged us like that we would be in hell. God judges us through the marvellous Atonement of Jesus Christ.

(c) The Undesirable Truth-Teller (Matthew 7:3–5) The kind impudence of the average truth-teller is inspired of the devil when it comes to pointing out the defects of others. The devil is lynx-eyed over the things he can criticise, and we are all shrewd in pointing out the mote in our brother's eye. It puts us in a superior position, we are finer spiritual characters than they. Where do we find that characteristic? In the Lord Jesus? Never! The Holy Ghost works through the saints unbeknown to them, He works through them as light. If this is not understood, you will think the preacher is criticising you all the time. He is not; it is the Holy Spirit in the preacher discerning the wrong in you.

The last curse in our lives as Christians is the person who becomes a providence to us; he is quite certain we cannot do anything without his advice, and if we do not heed it, we are sure to go wrong. Jesus Christ ridiculed that notion with terrific power, "Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." "Thou hypocrite," literally, "play-actor," one whose reality is not in keeping with his sincerity. A hypocrite is one who plays two parts consciously for his own ends. When we find fault with other people we may be quite sincere, and yet Jesus says in reality we are frauds.

We cannot get away from the penetration of Jesus Christ. If I see the mote in my brother's eye, it is because I have a beam in my own. It is a most homecoming statement. If I have let God remove the beam from my own outlook by His mighty grace, I will carry with me the implicit sunlight confidence that what God has done for me He can easily do for you, because you have only a splinter, I had a log of wood! This is the confidence God's salvation gives us, we are so amazed at the way God has altered us that we can despair of no one; "I know God can undertake for you, you are only a little wrong, I was wrong to the remotest depths of my mind; I was a mean, ¹² prejudiced, self-interested, self-seeking person and God has altered me, therefore I can never despair of you, or of anyone."

These statements of our Lord's save us from the fearful peril of spiritual conceit, "Thank God I am not as other men"; and also make us realise why such a man as Daniel bowed his head in vicarious humiliation and intercession, "I have sinned with Thy people." That call comes every now and again to individuals and to nations.

Christian Considerateness (Matthew 7:6–11) Consider how God has dealt with you and then consider that it is for you to do likewise.

(a) The Need to Discriminate (Matthew 7:6) Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you.

Jesus Christ is inculcating the need to examine carefully what we present in the way of God's truth to others. If we present the pearls of God's revelation to unspiritual people, God says they will trample the pearls under their feet; not trample us under their feet, that would not matter so much, but they will trample the truth of God under their feet. These words are not human words, but the words of Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit alone can teach us what they mean. There are some truths that God will not make simple. The only thing God makes plain in the Bible is the way of salvation and sanctification, after that our understanding depends entirely on our walking in the light. Over and over again men water down the word of God to suit those who are not spiritual, and consequently the word of God is trampled under the feet of "swine." Ask yourself, "Am I in any way flinging God's truth to unspiritual swine?" "Be careful," Jesus says, "not to give God's holy things to 'dogs,' i.e., a symbol of the folk outside. Don't cast your holy things before them, nor give the pearls of God's truth to men who are 'swine." Paul mentions the possibility of the pearl of sanctification being dragged in the mire of fornication; it comes through not respecting this mighty caution of our Lord. We have no right to talk about some points in our experience. There are times of fellowship between Christians when these pearls of precious rarity get turned over and looked at, but if we flaunt them without the permission of God for the means of converting people, we will find that what Jesus says is true—that they will trample them under their feet.

Our Lord never tells us to confess anything but Himself, "Whosoever . . . shall confess ME before men . . ." (Matthew 10:32). Testimonies to the world on the subjective line are always wrong, they are for saints, for those who are spiritual and who understand; but our testimony to the world is our Lord Himself, confess Him, "He saved me, He sanctified me, He put me right with God." It is always easier to be true to our experience than to Jesus Christ. Many a man spurns Jesus Christ in any other phase than that of his particular religious idea. The central truth is not Salvation, nor Sanctification, nor the Second Coming; the central truth is nothing less than Jesus Christ Himself. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." Error always comes in when we take something Jesus Christ does and preach it as the truth. It is part of the truth, but if we take it to be the whole truth we become advocates of an idea instead of a Person, the Lord Himself. The characteristic of an idea is that it has the ban of finality. 13 If we are only true to a doctrine of Christianity instead of to Jesus Christ, we drive our ideas home with sledge-hammer blows, and the people who listen to us say, "Well, that may be true"; but they resent the way it is presented. When we follow Jesus Christ the domineering attitude and the dictatorial attitude go and concentration on Jesus comes in.

(b) The Notion of Divine Control (Matthew 7:7–10)

By the simple argument of these verses our Lord urges us to keep our minds filled with the notion of God's control behind everything and to maintain an attitude of perfect trust. Always distinguish between being possessed of the Spirit and forming the mind of Christ. Jesus is laying down rules of conduct for those who have the Spirit. Notion your mind with the idea that God is there. If once the mind is notioned on that line, when we are in difficulties it is as easy as breathing to remember, "Why, my Father knows all about it!" It is not an effort, it comes naturally. Before, when perplexities were pressing we would go and ask this one and that, now the notion of the Divine control is forming so powerfully in us that we simply go to God about it. We will always know whether the notion is working by the way we act in difficult circumstances. Who is the first one we go to? what is the first thing we do? the first power we rely on? It is the working out of the principle indicated in Matthew 6:25-34, God is my Father, He loves me, I can never think of anything He will forget, why should I worry? Keep the notion strong and growing of the control of God behind all things. Nothing happens in any particular unless God's mind is behind it, so we can rest in perfect confidence. There are times when God cannot lift the darkness, but trust Him. Jesus said God will appear at times like an unkind friend, but He is not; He will appear like an unnatural father, but He is not; He will appear like an unjust judge, but He is not. The time will come when everything will be explained. Prayer is not only asking, it is an attitude of heart that produces an atmosphere in which asking is perfectly natural, and Jesus says, "every one that asketh receiveth."

A man will get from life everything he asks for, because he does not ask for that which his will is not in. If a man asks wealth from life, he will get wealth, or he was playing the fool when he asked. "If ye abide in Me," says Jesus, "and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." We pray pious blether, our will is not in it, and then we say God does not answer; we never asked Him for anything. Asking means that our wills are in what we ask.

You say, "But I asked God to turn my life into a garden of the Lord, and there came the ploughshare of sorrow, and instead of a garden I have been given a wilderness." God never gives a wrong answer. The garden of your natural life had to be turned into ploughed soil before God could turn it into a garden of the Lord. He will put the seed in now. Let God's seasons come over your soul, and before long your life will be a garden of the Lord.

We need to discern that God controls our asking. We bring in what Paul calls "will worship" (Colossians 2:23). Will is the whole man active; there are terrific forces in the will. The man who gains a moral victory by sheer force of will is the most difficult man to deal with afterwards. The profound thing in man is his will, not sin. Will is the essential element in God's creation of man; sin is a perverse disposition which entered into man. At the basis, the human will is one with God; it is covered up with all kinds of desires and motives, and when we preach Jesus Christ the Holy Spirit excavates down to the basis of the will and the will turns to God every time. We try to attack men's wills; if we lift up Jesus He will push straight to the will. When Jesus talked about prayer He never said, "If the human will turns in that direction . . ." He put it with the grand simplicity of a child—Ask. We bring in our reasoning faculties and say, "Yes, but . . ." Jesus says, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

(c) The Necessity for Discernment (Matthew 7:11) If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him?

But remember that we have to ask things that are in keeping with the God Whom Jesus Christ reveals, things in keeping with His domain. God is not a necromancer, He wants to develop the character of a son of God. We can know "the things of a man" by "the spirit of man which is in him," but "the things of God" can only be spiritually discerned (see 1 Corinthians 2:9–14).

The discernment referred to here is the habitual realisation that every good thing we have has been given to us by the sheer sovereign grace of God. Jesus says, "Have this reasoning incorporated into you: how much have you deserved?" Nothing, everything has been given to us by God. Then may God save us from the mean, ¹⁴ accursed, economical notion that we must only help the people who deserve it. One can almost hear the Holy Ghost shout in the heart, "Who are you that talk like that? Did you deserve the salvation God has given you? Did you deserve to be filled with the Holy Spirit?" All that is done by the sheer sovereign mercy of God. "Then be like your Father in heaven," says Jesus; "be perfect even as He is perfect." "This is My commandment, That ye love one another; as I have loved you." It is not done once and for all, it is a continual steadfast growing habit of the life.

Humility and holiness always go together. Whenever hardness and harshness begin to creep into the personal attitude towards another, we may be certain we are swerving from the light. The preaching must be as stern and true as God's word, never water down God's truth; but when you deal with others never forget that you are a sinner saved by grace, wherever you stand now. If you stand in the fullness of the blessing of God, you stand there by no other right than the sheer sovereign grace of God.

Over and over again we blame God for His neglect of people by our sympathy with them, we may not put it into words but by our attitude we imply that we are filling up what God has forgotten to do. Never allow that idea, never allow it to come into your mind. In all probability the Spirit of God will begin to show us that people are where they are because we have neglected to do what we ought. To-day the great craze is socialism, and men are saying that Jesus Christ came as a social reformer. Nonsense! We are the social reformers; Jesus Christ came to alter us, and we try to shirk our responsibility by putting our work on Him. Jesus alters us and puts us right; then these principles of His instantly make us social reformers. They begin to work straightway where we live, in our relationship to our fathers and mothers, to our brothers and sisters, our friends, our employers, or employees. "Consider how God has dealt with you," says Jesus, "and then consider that you do likewise to others."

Christian Comprehensiveness (Matthew 7:12)

Christian grace comprehends the whole man. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." Salvation means not only a pure heart, an enlightened mind, a spirit right with God, but that the whole man is comprehended in the manifestation of the marvellous power and grace of God, body, soul, and spirit are brought into fascinating captivity to the Lord Jesus Christ. An incandescent mantle illustrates the meaning. If the mantle is not rightly adjusted only one bit of it glows, but when the mantle is adjusted exactly and the light shines, the whole thing is comprehended in a blaze of light, and every bit of our being is to be absorbed until we are aglow with the comprehensive goodness of God. "The fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth." Some of us have goodness only in spots.

(a) The Positive Margin of Righteousness

The limit to the manifestation of the grace of God in us is our body, and the whole of our body. We can understand the need of a pure heart, of a mind rightly adjusted to God and a spirit indwelt by the Holy Spirit, but what about the body? That is the margin of righteousness in us. We make a divorce between a clear intellectual understanding of truth and its practical outcome. Jesus Christ never made such a divorce; He takes no notice of our fine intellectual conceptions unless their practical outcome is shown in reality.

There is a great snare in the capacity to understand a thing clearly and to exhaust its power by stating it. Overmuch earnestness blinds the life to reality, earnestness becomes our god. We bank on the earnestness and zeal with which things are said and done, and after a while we find that the reality is not there, the power and presence of God are not being manifested, there are relationships at home, or in business, or in private, that show when the veneer is scratched that we are not real. To say things well is apt to exhaust the power to do them, so that a man has often to curb the expression of a thing with his tongue and turn it into action, otherwise his gift of facile utterance may prevent his doing the things he says.

^{14.} The word mean as used here refers to something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

(b) The Proverbial Maxim of Reasonableness

Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.

Our Lord's use of this maxim is positive, not negative. Do to others whatsoever ye would that they should do to you—a very different thing from not doing to others what you do not want them to do to you. What would we like other people to do to us? "Well" says Jesus, "do that to them; don't wait for them to do it to you." The Holy Ghost will kindle your imagination to picture many things you would like others to do to you, and this is His way of telling you what to do to them—"I would like people to give me credit for the generous motives I have." Well, give them credit for having generous motives. "I would like people never to pass harsh judgements on me." Well, don't pass harsh judgements on them. "I would like other people to pray for me." Well, pray for them. The measure of our growth in grace is our attitude towards other people. "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," says Jesus. Satan comes in as an angel of light and says, "But you must not think about yourself." The Holy Spirit will make you think about yourself, because that is His way of educating you so that you may be able to deal with others. He makes you picture what you would like other people to do to you, and then He says, "Now go and do those things to them." This verse is our Lord's standard for practical ethical conduct. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Never look for right in the other man, but never cease to be right yourself. We always look for justice in this world, but there is no such thing as justice. Jesus says, "Never look for justice, but never cease to give it." The stamp all through our Lord's teaching is that of the impossible unless He can make us all over again, and that is what He came to do. He came to give to man a new heredity to which His teaching applies.

(c) The Principal Meaning of Revelation

Jesus Christ came to make the great laws of God incarnate in human life; that is the miracle of God's grace. We are to be written epistles, "known and read of all men." There is no allowance whatever in the New Testament for the man who says he is saved by grace but who does not produce the graceful goods. Jesus Christ by His Redemption can make our actual life in keeping with our religious profession.

In our study of the Sermon on the Mount it would be like a baptism of light to allow the principles of Jesus Christ to soak right down to our very make-up. His statements are not put up as standards for us to attain; God remakes us, puts His Holy Spirit in us, then the Holy Spirit applies the principles to us and enables us to work them out by His guidance.

An idea reveals what it does and no more. When you read a book about life, life looks simple; but when you actually face the facts of life you find they do not come into the simple lines laid down in the book. An idea is like a search-light, it lights up what it does and no more, while daylight reveals a hundred and one facts the search-light had not taken into account. An idea is apt to have a ban of finality about it, we speak of the tyranny of an idea.

An ideal embodies our highest conceptions, but it contains no moral inspiration. To treat the Sermon on the Mount merely as an ideal is misleading. It is not an ideal, it is a statement of the working out of Jesus Christ's disposition in actuality in the life of any man. A man grows ashamed of not being able to fulfil his ideals, and the more upright he is, the more agonising is his conflict; "I won't lower my ideals," he says, "although I can never hope to make them actual." No man is so laboured as the man who has ideals which he cannot carry out. Jesus Christ says to such, "Come unto Me, . . . and I will give you rest," i.e., "I will 'stay' you, put something into you which will make the ideal and the actual one." Without Jesus Christ there is an unbridgeable gap between the ideal and the actual; the only way out is a personal relationship to Him. The salvation of God not only saves a man from hell, but alters his actual life.

Two Gates, Two Ways (Matthew 7:13-14)

Our Lord continually used proverbs and sayings that were familiar to His hearers, but He put an altogether new meaning to them. Here He uses an allegory that was familiar in His day, and He lifted it by His inspiration to embody His patient warnings.

Always distinguish between warning and threatening. God never threatens; the devil never warns. A warning is a great arresting statement of God's, inspired by His love and patience. This throws a flood of light on the vivid statements of Jesus Christ, such as those in Matthew 23. Jesus is stating the inexorable consequence, "How can ye escape the damnation of hell?" There is no element of personal vindictiveness. Be careful how you picture our Lord when you read His terrible utterances. Read His denunciations with Calvary in your mind.

It is the great patient love of God that gives the warning. "The way of transgressors is hard." Go behind that statement in your imagination and see the love of God. God is amazingly tender, but the way of transgressors cannot be made easy. God has made it difficult to go wrong, especially for His children.

"Enter ye in at the strait gate. . . . "If a man tries to enter into salvation in any other way than Jesus Christ's way, he will find it a broad way, but the end is distress. Erasmus said it took the sharp sword of sorrow, difficulties of every description, heart-breaks and disenchantments, to bring him to the place where he saw Jesus Christ as the altogether lovely One, and, he says, "When I got there I found there was no need to have gone the way I went." There is the broad way of reasonable self-realisation; but the only way to a personal knowledge of eternal redemption is straight and narrow. Jesus says, "I am the Way."

There is a difference between salvation and discipleship. A man can be saved by God's grace without becoming a disciple of Jesus Christ. Discipleship means a personal dedication of the life to Jesus Christ. Men are "saved; yet so as by fire" who have not been worth anything to God in their actual lives. "Go ye therefore, and make disciples" (Matthew 28:19 RV), said Jesus. The teaching of the Sermon on the Mount produces despair only in a man who is not born again. If Jesus came to be a teacher only, He had better have stayed away. What is the use of teaching a human being to be what no human being can be—to be continually self-effaced, to do more than his duty, to be completely disinterested, to be perfectly devoted to God? If all Jesus Christ came to do was to teach men to be that, He is the greatest taunter that ever presented any ideal to the human race. But Jesus Christ came primarily and fundamentally to regenerate men. He came to put into any man the disposition that ruled His own life, and immediately that is given to a man, the teaching of Jesus begins to be possible. All the standards our Lord gives are based on His disposition.

Notice the apparent unsatisfactoriness of the answers of Jesus Christ. He never once answered a question that sprang from a man's head, because those questions are never original, they always have the captious note about them. The man with that type of question wants to get the best of it logically. In Luke 13:23-24, a certain devout man asked Jesus a question, "Lord, are there few that be saved?" and Jesus replied, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate," i.e., "see that your own feet are on the right path." Our Lord's answers seem at first to evade the issue, but He goes underneath the question and solves the real problem. He never answers our shallow questions, He deals with the great unconscious need that makes them arise. When a man asks an original question out of his own personal life, Jesus answers him every time.

(a) All Noble Things Are Difficult

Our Lord warns that the devout life of a disciple is not a dream, but a decided discipline which calls for the use of all our powers. No amount of determination can give me the new life of God, that is a gift; where the determination comes in is in letting that new life work itself out according to Christ's standard. We are always in danger of confounding what we can do with what we cannot do. We cannot save ourselves, or sanctify ourselves, or give ourselves the Holy Spirit; only God can do that. Confusion continually occurs when we try to do what God alone can do, and try to persuade ourselves that God will do what we alone can do. We imagine that God is going to make us walk in the light; God will not; it is we who must walk in the light. God gives us the power to do it, but we have to see that we use the power. God puts the power and the life into us and fills us with His Spirit, but we have to work it out. "Work out your own salvation," says Paul, not, "work for your salvation," but "work it out"; and as we do, we realise that the noble life of a disciple is gloriously difficult and the difficulty of it rouses us up to overcome, not faint and cave in. It is always necessary to make an effort to be noble.

Jesus Christ never shields a disciple from fulfilling all the requirements of a child of God. Things that are worth doing are never easy. On the ground of Redemption the life of the Son of God is formed in our human nature and we have to put on the new man in accordance with His life, and that takes time and discipline. "Acquire your soul with patience" (see Luke 21:19). Soul is my personal spirit manifesting itself in my body, the way I reason and think and look at things. Jesus says that a man must lose his soul in order to find it.

We deal with the great massive phases of Redemption—that God saves men by sheer grace through the Atonement, but we are apt to forget that it has to be worked out in practical living amongst men. "Ye are My friends," says Jesus, "therefore lay down your life for Me; not go through the crisis of death, but lay out your life deliberately for Me, take time over it." It is a noble life and a difficult life. God works in us to do His will, only we must do the doing; and if once we start to do what He commands we find we can do it, because we work on the basis of the noble thing God has done for us in Redemption.

(b) My Utmost for His Highest

God demands of us our utmost in working out what He has worked in. We can do nothing towards our redemption, but we must do everything to work it out in actual experience on the basis of regeneration. Salvation is God's "bit," it is complete, we can add nothing to it; but we have to bend all our powers to work out His salvation. It requires discipline to live the life of a disciple in actual things. "Jesus knowing... that He was come from God, and went to God, ... took a towel, ... and began to wash the disciples' feet." It took God Incarnate to do the ordinary menial things of life rightly, and it takes the life of God in us to use a towel properly. This is Redemption being actually worked out in experience, and we can do it every time because of the marvel of God's grace.

"If ye love Me, ye will keep My commandments" (John 14:15 RV). Jesus makes this the test of discipleship. The motto over our side of the gate of life is—"All God's commands I can obey." We have to do our utmost as disciples to prove that we appreciate God's utmost for us, and never allow "I can't" to creep in. "Oh, I am not a saint, I can't do that." If that thought comes in, we are a disgrace to Jesus Christ. God's salvation is a glad thing, but it is a holy, difficult thing that tests us for all we are worth. Jesus Christ is bringing many sons to glory, and He will not shield us from any of the requirements of sonship. He will say at certain times to the world, the flesh, and the devil, "Do your worst, I know that 'greater is He that is in you, than he that is in the world." God's grace does not turn out milksops, but men and women with a strong family likeness to Jesus Christ. Thank God He does give us difficult things to do! A man's heart would burst if there were no way to show his gratitude. "I beseech you therefore, brethren," says Paul, "by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice."

(c) A Stoot Hairt tae a Stae Brae

A stoot hairt tae a stae brae (i.e., a strong heart to a difficult hill). The Christian life is a holy life; never substitute the word "happy" for "holy." We certainly will have happiness, but as a consequence of holiness. Beware of the idea so prevalent to-day that a Christian must always be happy and bright, "keep smiling." That is preaching merely the gospel of temperament. If you make the determination to be happy the basis of your Christian life, your happiness will go from you; happiness is not a cause but an effect that follows without striving after it. Our Lord insists that we keep to one point, our eyes fixed on the strait gate and the narrow way, which means pure and holy living.

"Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me." It seems amazingly difficult to put on the yoke of Christ, but immediately we do put it on, everything becomes easy. In the beginning of the Christian life it seems easier to drift and to say "I can't," but when once we do put on His yoke, we find, blessed be the Name of God, that we have chosen the easiest way after all. Happiness and joy attend, but they are not our aim, our aim is the Lord Jesus Christ, and God showers the hundredfold more on us all the way along.

In order to keep a stout heart to the difficult braes of life, watch continually against worry coming in. "Let not your heart be troubled," is a command, and it means that worrying is sinful. It is not the devil who switches folk off Christ's way, but the ordinary steep difficulties of daily life, difficulties connected with food, and clothing, and situations. The "cares of this world, . . . choke the word," said our Lord. We all have had times when the little worries of life have choked God's word and blotted out His face from us, enfeebled our spirits, and made us sorry and humiliated before Him, even more so than the times when we have been tempted to sin. There is something in us that makes us face temptation to sin with vigour and earnestness, but it requires the stout heart that God gives to meet the cares of this life. I would not give much for the man who had nothing in his life to make him say, "I wish I was not in the circumstances I am in." "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world"—"and you will overcome it too, you will win every time if you bank on your relationship to Me." Spiritual grit is what we need.

"Enter ye in at the strait gate." We can only get to heaven through Jesus Christ and by no other way; we can only get to the Father through Jesus Christ, and we can only get into the life of a saint in the same way.

Test Your Teachers (Matthew 7:15-20)

In these verses Jesus tells His disciples to test preachers and teachers by their fruit. There are two tests—one is the fruit in the life of the preacher, and the other is the fruit of the doctrine. The fruit of a man's own life may be perfectly beautiful, and at the same time he may be teaching a doctrine which, if logically worked out, would produce the devil's fruit in other lives. It is easy to be captivated by a beautiful life and to argue that therefore what that he teaches must be right. Jesus says, "Be careful, test your teacher by his fruit." The other side is just as true, a man may be teaching beautiful truths and have magnificent doctrine while the fruit in his own life is rotten. We say that if a man lives a beautiful life, his doctrine must be right; not necessarily so, says Jesus. Then again we say because a man teaches the right thing, therefore his life must be right; not necessarily so, says Jesus. Test the doctrine by its fruit, and test the teacher by his fruit. "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed," the freedom of the nature will work out.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." You do not gather the vindictive mood from the Holy Ghost; you do not gather the passionately irritable mood from the patience of God; you do not gather the self-indulgent mood and the lust of the flesh in private life from the Spirit of God. God never allows room for any of these moods.

As we study the Sermon on the Mount we find that we are badgered by the Spirit of God from every standpoint in order to bring us into a simplicity of relationship to Jesus Christ. The standard is that of a child depending upon God.

(a) Possibility of Pretence (Matthew 7:15)

Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

Our Lord here is describing dangerous teachers, and He warns us of those who come clothed in right doctrine, but inwardly their spirit is that of Satan.

It is appallingly easy to pretend. If once our eyes are off Jesus Christ, pious pretence is sure to follow.

First John 1:7 is the essential condition of the life of the saint, "If we walk in the light, as He is in the light," i.e., with nothing folded up, nothing to hide. Immediately we depend upon anything other than our relationship to God, the possibility of pretence comes in, pious pretence, not hypocrisy (a hypocrite is one who tries to live a twofold life for his own ends and succeeds), but a desperately sincere effort to be right when we know we are not.

We have to beware of pretence in ourselves. It is an easy business to appear to be what we are not. It is easy to talk and to preach, and to preach our actual life to damnation. It was realising this that made Paul say—"I keep under my body, . . . lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." The more facile the expression in words, the less likely is the truth to be carried out in life. There is a peril for the preacher that the listener has not, the peril of expressing a thing and letting the expression react in the exhaustion of never doing it. That is where fasting has to be exercised fasting from eloquence, from fine literary finish, from all that natural culture makes us esteem, if it is going to lead us into a hirpling walk with God. "This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting." Fasting is much more than doing without food, that is the least part, it is fasting from everything that manifests self-indulgence. There is a certain mood in us all which delights in frank speaking, but we never intend to do what we say, we are "enchanted but unchanged." The frank man is the unreliable man, much more so than the subtle, crafty man, because he has the power of expressing a thing right out and there is nothing more to it.

(b) Place of Patience (Matthew 7:16)

Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

This warning is against over-zealousness on the part of heresy-hunters. Our Lord would have us bide our time. Luke 9:53–55 is a case in point. Take heed that you do not allow carnal suspicion to take the place of the discernment of the Spirit. Fruit and fruit alone is the test. If you see the fruit in a life showing itself in thistles, Jesus says you will know the wrong root is there, for you do not gather thistles from any root but a thistle root; but remember that it is quite possible in winter time to mistake a rose tree for something else, unless you are expert in judging. So there is a place for patience, and our Lord would have us heed this. Wait for the fruit to manifest itself and do not be guided by your own fancy. It is easy to get alarmed and to persuade ourselves that our particular convictions are the standards of Christ, and to condemn every one to perdition who does not agree with us; we are obliged to do it because our convictions have taken the place of God in us. God's Book never tells us to walk in the light of convictions, but in the light of the Lord.

Always distinguish between those who object to your way of presenting the Gospel and those who object to the Gospel itself. There may be many who object to your way of presenting the truth, but that does not necessarily mean that they object to God making them holy. Make a place for patience. Wait before passing your verdict. "Ye shall know them by their fruits." Wrong teaching produces its fruit just as right teaching does if it is given time.

(c) Principle of Performance (Matthew 7:17–18) Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

If we say we are right with God, the world has a perfect right to watch our private life and see if we are so. If we say we are born again, we are put under scrutiny, and rightly so. If the performance of our life is to be steadily holy, the principle of our life must be holy, i.e., if we are going to bring forth good fruit, we must have a good root. It is possible for an aeroplane to imitate a bird, and it is possible for a human being to imitate the fruit of the Spirit. The vital difference is the same in each: there is no principle of life behind. The aeroplane cannot persist, it can only fly spasmodically; and our imitation of the Spirit requires certain conditions that keep us from the public gaze, then we can get on fairly well. Before we can have the right performance in our life, the inside principle must be right—we must know what it is to be born from above, to be sanctified and filled with the Holy Ghost, then our lives will bring forth the fruit. Fruit is clearly expounded in the Epistles, and it is quite different from the gifts of the Spirit, or from the manifest seal of God on His own word, it is "the fruit of the Spirit." Fruit-bearing is always mentioned as the manifestation of an intimate union with Jesus Christ (John 15:1–5).

(d) Power of Publicity (Matthew 7:19-20)

Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.

Jesus Christ makes publicity the test; He lived His own life most publicly (John 18:20). The thing that enraged our Lord's enemies was the public manner in which He did things; His miracles were the public manifestation of His power. To-day people are annoyed at public testimony. It is no use saying, "Oh yes, I live a holy life, but I don't say anything about it," for you certainly do not, the two go together. If a thing has its root in the heart of God, it will want to be public, to get out, it must do things in the external and the open, and Jesus not only encouraged this publicity. He insisted upon it. For good or bad, things must be dragged out. "There is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known." It is God's law that men cannot hide what they really are. If they are His disciples it will be publicly portrayed. In Matthew 10 Jesus warned His disciples of what would happen when they publicly testified, but, He said, "Don't hide your light under a bushel for fear of wolfish men; be careful only that you don't go contrary to your duty and have your soul destroyed in hell as well as your body. Be wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." Our Lord warns that the man who will not be conspicuous as His disciple will be made to be conspicuous as His enemy. As surely as God is on His throne, the inevitable principle must work, the revealing of what men really are. One of the dangers of the Higher Christian Life movement¹⁵ is this hole-and-corner aspect—secret times alone with God. God drags everything out in the sun. Paul couples sanctification and fornication, meaning that every type of high spiritual emotion that is not worked out on its legitimate level will react on a wrong level. To be in contact with external facts is necessary to health in the natural world, and the same thing is true spiritually. God's spiritual open air is the Bible. The Bible is the universe of revelation facts; if we live there our roots will be healthy and our lives right. It is of no use to say, "I once had an experience"; the point is, where is it now? Pay attention to the Source, and out of you will flow rivers of living water. It is possible to be so taken up with conscious experience in religious life that we are of no use at all.

Appearance and Reality (Matthew 7:21–23)

Our Lord makes the test of goodness not only goodness in intention, but the active carrying out of God's will. Beware of confounding appearance and reality, of judging only by external evidence. God honours His word no matter who preaches it. The men Jesus Christ refers to in verse 21 were instruments, but an instrument is not a servant. A servant is one who has given up his right to himself to the God Whom he proclaims, a witness to Jesus, i.e., a satisfaction to Jesus Christ wherever he goes. The baptism of the Holy Ghost turns men into the incarnation of what they preach until the appearance and the reality are one and the same. The test of discipleship as Jesus is dealing with it in this chapter is fruit-bearing in godly character, and the disciple is warned not to be blinded by the fact that God honours His word even when it is preached from the wrong motive (cf. Philippians 1:15).

The Holy Spirit is the One Who brings the appearance and the reality into one in us; He does in us what Jesus did for us. The mighty redemption of God is made actual in our experience by the living efficacy of the Holy Ghost. The New Testament never asks us to believe the Holy Spirit, it asks us to receive Him; He makes the appearance and the reality one and the same thing. He works in our salvation and we have to work it out, with fear and trembling lest we forget to. Thank God, He does give us the sporting chance, the glorious risk. If we could not disobey God, our obedience would not be worth anything. The sinless-perfection heresy says that when we are saved we cannot sin; that is a devil's lie. When we are saved by God's grace, God puts into us the possibility of not sinning, and our character from that moment is of value to God. Before we were saved we had not the power to obey, but now He has planted in us on the ground of Redemption the heredity of the Son of God, we have the power to obey, and consequently the power to disobey. The walk of a disciple is gloriously difficult, but gloriously certain. On the ground of the perfect Redemption of Jesus Christ, we find that we can begin now to walk worthily, i.e., with balance. John the Baptist "looking upon Jesus as He walked, ... saith, Behold the Lamb of God!" Walking is the symbol of the ordinary character of a man, no show to keep up, no veneer. "I perceive that is an holy man of God, which passeth by us continually" (2 Kings 4:9).

(a) Recognition of Men (Matthew 7:21)

Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

Human nature is fond of labels, but a label may be the counterfeit of confession. It is so easy to be branded with labels, much easier in certain stages to wear a ribbon or a badge than to confess. Jesus never used the word testify; He used a much more searching word—confess. "Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men,..." The test of goodness is confession by doing the will of God. "If you do not confess Me before men" says Jesus, "neither will your heavenly Father confess you." Immediately we confess, we must have a badge, if we do not put one on, other people will. Our Lord is warning that it is possible to wear the label without having the goods; possible for a man to wear the badge of being His disciple when he is not. Labels are all right, but if we mistake the label for the goods we get confused. If the disciple is to discern between the man with the label and the man with the goods, he must have the spirit of discernment, viz., the Holy Spirit. We start out with the honest belief that the label and the goods must go together, they should do, but Jesus warns that sometimes they get severed, and we find cases where God honours His word although those who preach it are not living a right life. In judging the preacher, He says, judge him by his fruit.

(b) Remedy Mongers (Matthew 7:22)

Many will say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? And in Thy name have cast out devils? And in Thy name done many wonderful works?

If we are able to cast out devils and to do wonderful works, surely we are the servants of God? Not at all, says Jesus, our lives must bear evidence in every detail. Our Lord warns here against those who utilise His words and His ways to remedy the evils of men whilst they are disloyal to Himself. "Have we not prophesied in Thy name . . . cast out devils . . . done many wonderful works?"—not one word of confessing Jesus Christ, one thing only, they have preached Him as a remedy. In Luke 10:20 our Lord told the disciples not to rejoice because the devils were subject to them, but to rejoice because they were rightly related to Himself. We are brought back to the one point all the time—an unsullied relationship to Jesus Christ in every detail, private and public.

(c) Retributive Measures (Matthew 7:23) And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from Me, ye that work iniquity.

In these solemn words Jesus says He will have to say to some Bible expositors, some prophetic students, some workers of miracles—"Depart from Me, ye that work iniquity." To work iniquity is to twist out of the straight; these men have twisted the ways of God and made them unequal. "I never knew you"—you never had My Spirit, you spoke the truth and God honoured it, but you were never of the truth. "Depart from Me," the most appallingly isolating and condemning words that could be said to a human soul.

Only as we rely upon and recognise the Holy Spirit do we discern how this warning of our Lord's works. We are perplexed because men preach the right thing and God blesses the preaching, and yet all the time the Spirit warns—No, no, no. Never trust the best man or woman you ever met; trust the Lord Jesus only. "Lean not unto thine own understanding"; "put not your trust in princes"; put your trust in no one but Jesus Christ. This warning holds good all the way along. Every character will lead away from God if taken as a guide. We are never told to follow in all the footsteps of the saints, but only in so far as they have obeyed God, "... who shall bring you into remembrance of my ways which be in Christ" (1 Corinthians 4:17). Keep right with God; keep in the light. All our panics, moral, intellectual and spiritual, come on that line. Whenever we take our eyes off Jesus Christ we get startled, "There is another man gone down, I did think he would have stood right." "Look unto Me," says Jesus.

The Two Builders (Matthew 7:24-29)

The emphasis in these verses is laid by our Lord on hearing and doing. He has given us His disposition, and He demands that we live as His disciples: how are we going to do it? "By hearing My words and doing them," says Jesus. We hear only what we listen for. Have we listened to what Jesus has to say? Have we paid any attention to finding out what He did say? Most of us do not know what He said. If we have only a smattering of religion, we talk a lot about the devil; but what hinders us spiritually is not the devil nearly so much as inattention. We may hear the sayings of Jesus Christ, but our wills are left untouched, we never do them. The understanding of the Bible only comes from the indwelling of the Holy Spirit making the universe of the Bible real to us.

(a) Spiritual Castles (Matthew 7:24)

We speak of building castles in the air; that is where a castle should be-whoever heard of a castle underground! The problem is how to get the foundation under your castle in the air so that it can stand upon the earth. The way to put foundations under our castles is by paying attention to the words of Jesus Christ. We may read and listen and not make much of it at the time, but by and by we come into circumstances when the Holy Spirit will bring back to us what Jesus said—are we going to obey? Jesus says that the way to put foundations under spiritual castles is by hearing and doing "these sayings of Mine." Pay attention to His words, and give time to doing it. Try five minutes a day with your Bible. The thing that influences us most is not the thing we give most time to, but the thing that springs from our own personal relationship, that is the prime motive that dominates us.

"Ye call Me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am"—but is He? Think of the way we back out of what He says! "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." We say it is all very well up to a certain point, and then we abandon it. If we do obey the words of Jesus Christ, we are sure to be called fanatics. The New Testament associates shame with the gospel (see Romans 1:16; 1 Peter 4:12–13).

(b) Stern Crisis (Matthew 7:25)

Our spiritual castles must be conspicuous, and the test of a building is not its fair beauty but its foundations. There are beautiful spiritual fabrics raised in the shape of books and of lives, full of the finest diction and activities, but when the test comes, down they go. They have not been built on the sayings of Jesus Christ, but built altogether in the air with no foundations under them.

"Build up your character bit by bit by attention to My words," says Jesus, then when the supreme crisis comes, you will stand like a rock. The crisis does not come always, but when it does come, it is all up in about two seconds, there is no possibility of pretence, you are unearthed immediately. If a man has built himself up in private by listening to the words of Jesus and obeying them, when the crisis comes it is not his strength of will that keeps him, but the tremendous power of God—"kept by the power of God." Go on building yourself up in the word of God when no one is watching you, and when the crisis comes you will find you will stand like a rock; but if you have not been building yourself up on the word of God, you will go down, however strong your will. All you build will end in disaster unless it is built on the sayings of Jesus Christ; but if you are doing what Jesus told you to do, nourishing your soul on His word, you need not fear the crisis whatever it is.

(c) Supreme Catastrophe (Matthew 7:26-27)

Every spiritual castle will be tested by a threefold storm—rain, floods and winds: the world, the flesh and the devil, and it will only stand if it is founded on the sayings of Jesus. Every spiritual fabric that is built with the sayings of Jesus instead of being founded on them, Jesus calls the building of a foolish man. There is a tendency in all of us to appreciate the sayings of Jesus Christ with our intellects while we refuse to do them; then everything we build will go by the board when the test comes. Paul applies this in 1 Corinthians 3:12-13, "Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." All has to be tested by the supreme test.

All that we build will be tested supremely, and it will tumble in a fearful disaster unless it is built on the sayings of Jesus Christ. It is easy to build with the sayings of Jesus, to sling texts of Scripture together and build them into any kind of fabric. But Jesus brings the disciple to the test, "You hear My sayings and quote them, but do you do them—in your office, in your home life, in your private life?" Notice the repulsion you feel towards anyone who tries to build with the sayings of Jesus. Our Lord allows no room for having some compartments holy and others unholy, everything must be radically built on the foundation.

(d) Scriptural Concentration (Matthew 7:28–29) This summing up is a descriptive note by the Holy Spirit of the way in which the people who heard Jesus Christ were impressed by His doctrine. Its application for us is not, "What would Jesus do?" but, "What did Jesus say?" As we concentrate on what He said, we can stake our immortal souls upon His words. It is a question of scriptural concentration, not of sentimental consecration. When Jesus brings something home by His word, don't shirk it, e.g., something your brother has against you (see Matthew 5:23-24), some debt, something that presses—if you shirk that point, you become a religious humbug. The Holy Spirit's voice is as gentle as a zephyr, the merest check; when you hear it do you say, "But that is only a tiny detail, the Holy Spirit cannot mean that, it is much too trivial a thing"? The Holy Spirit does mean that, and at the risk of being thought fanatical you must obey.

When we are beginning to walk in the right way with God, we shall find the spirit of self-vindication will be unearthed; trying to fulfil what Jesus says will bring it to the light. What does it matter what any one thinks of us as long as Jesus Christ thinks we are doing the right thing, as long as we can hear Him say, "Well done, good and faithful servant"?

Source

The material in Notes on Ezekiel is taken from lectures by Oswald Chambers at the Bible Training College, London, between January and June 1914.

Publication History

- As articles: These notes on the book of Ezekiel were published as articles in the Bible Training Course (BTC) Monthly Journal,² from April 1948 to September 1949.
- As a book: This material was never published in book form.

These lectures were given as part of Oswald Chambers' series on the four great Old Testament prophets—Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel. The classes on Ezekiel consisted of fifty-four lectures covering all forty-eight chapters of the book.

For unknown reasons, Mrs. Chambers' usually thorough verbatim shorthand notes are incomplete for this series of lectures. The notes published as articles in the B.T.C. Journal covered only chapters 1 through 34. Perhaps for that reason, she never published them in book form.

^{1.} Bible Training College (BTC): a residential school near Clapham Common in southwest London; sponsored by the League of Prayer; operated from 1911 until it closed in July 1915 because of World War I. Oswald Chambers was principal and main teacher; Biddy Chambers, his wife, was lady superintendent.

AS THEY WERE SPOKEN

The Journal Notes on the Prophets have preserved for the present-day the very matter and method of Oswald Chambers' messages as they were given at the Bible Training College. They have about them a spontaneous and explosive quality. Much concentrated thought was given to pondering the Bible words. Then was poured out some intensive teaching based on some portion of that vital Word of God. It was not an analytical treatment of a chapter or a Book but a discernment, given by the Spirit of God, to a child-like mind, of the piercing message of God to His people in every age. That is what makes them so valuable to us who receive them today. They are as fresh and as living as when they were spoken. They reach the nerve-centre of a responsive soul. They stir us to obedience and appropriation and realisation of the truth. We remember them, by this means, those who have had the rule over us, who spake unto us the Word of God; and considering the issue of their life we imitate their faith. Hebrews 13:7.

The Journal will continue its ways, as the Lord permits. The Notes on Ezekiel will still appear. Also the striking Sermon Class Notes and other articles.

EZEKIEL 1-2

I would choose to see
The brightness of the heavenly things, although Their lightning-glory leave me blind henceforth
To any earthly glow; and I would hear
But once the voice of God Almighty sweep
In thunder from His throne, although from hence
Mine ear be deaf to the sweet trembling chime
Of this world's music. I had rather stand
A Prophet of my God, with all the thrills
Of trembling, which must shake the heart of one
Who in earth's garments, in the vesture frail
Of flesh and blood, is called to minister
As Seraphs do with fire—than bear the palm
Of any other triumph.

B. M.

In attempting to interpret a Book like Ezekiel we have to bear in mind that it can never be fully interpreted, only the fullness of time and God Himself can interpret it, but we ought not to misunderstand the clear lines on which the interpretation runs.

When we describe the isolation and loneliness of the prophets we are apt to imagine that that is what God expects of us today, but it is not; the isolation of those lonely mighty men of God of Old Testament days belongs to a different order. We are not called upon to live the life of the prophet in this dispensation; the life of the prophet is descriptive of the Church, not of individual Christians. Just as the Old Testament prophets stood alone for God, so the Church of Christ in this dispensation is to stand alone for God. There is no room for the idea that I am a peculiarly isolated individual—"I . . . only am left." Nothing could be more foreign to the New Testament conception. If only every one else were hypocrites it would exalt the sense that I am a lonely servant of God, but it is most humiliating to find there are "seven thousand . . . which have not bowed unto Baal." If you imagine you are called on to be isolated and aloof, the first thing you will do is to get under a juniper tree, refuse to eat or do anything natural, and you will be as free from sanity as from the Spirit of God.

Ezekiel's age at the time of his initiation into the prophetic office would probably be about thirty. Up to the age of thirty life is full of promise, of expectation and ambition; after that age, or what is represented by it, life is now a challenge to you to prove your mettle, the world, the flesh and the devil will test the stuff you are made of.

Prophetic Perception

The heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God. (Ezekiel 1:1)

"And I saw visions of God." Ezekiel saw what God caused him to see; there was nothing in the nature of hallucination or fairy story about the vision. The full meaning of what Ezekiel is passing through dawns on him when he realises that he is in the presence of God, and he recognises his own insignificance. When the vision came to Isaiah he expressed himself subjectively—"Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips." There was nothing of this about Ezekiel, he was altogether taken up with the vision of God.

Have you ever seen God in all His power and majesty? The vision of God and the realisation of who He is, for even a moment, is worth all the experiences of God's grace you ever had. Nothing can turn the soul that has seen God, it is a sheet-anchor for ever, like Moses he endures, "as seeing Him who is invisible." Every other thing may fail, but one thing will last, and that is the vision of God by the illumination of the Holy Spirit.

It was in the fifth year of the captivity that "the word of the LORD came expressly unto Ezekiel the priest . . . and the hand of the LORD was there upon him." The arresting apprehension of God came to Ezekiel in the fifth year of captivity—five years "rusting" in agony of soul before God, aloof and useless. We have to beware lest our impatience makes us infidel; impatience means unbelief in God's providence, and is due to lack of right relationship of the personal life to God. In the first flush of salvation and sanctification there were months, maybe years, of real service and real results, now you are "shut up," and in all probability you are of more use to God because in the early days you estimated by what you could see. Take the majority of Christian workers, what is the one thing they rebel against? Being trained for God-"Let us get into practical work" is the cry, and how much discipline is there? how much do I know of my own soul! how much of God's Book? how much have I learned to live the life "hid with Christ in God"? how much do I know about heart-break? how much about other people being turned into shadows? how much, beyond mere pathetic sentiment, about being made broken bread and poured-out wine in God's hands? What is called practical work is the greatest hindrance in God's dealing with souls. We rush through life and call ourselves practical, we mistake bustle for business, activity for real life, and when the activities stop we go out like vapour, our work is not based on the fundamental energy of God.

"The word of the LORD came expressly unto Ezekiel the priest," i.e., enthrallingly and exclusively. There was no thought of Ezekiel saying, "I would like to devote myself to the service of God"; neither did he become a servant of God for surcease from his own sorrow (see Ezekiel 24:18). God used Ezekiel's bereavement, not to develop him, but that he might represent His purposes to the people. We look upon the disciplines of life as though God were trying to emancipate us through them; if we would come into right relationship with God we would hear His call isolated expressly for one purpose. When God puts a special call on a special person it always means isolation for a time. (Cf. Galatians 1:15-16.) Aloneness must be made an opportunity for God in the life, or Satan gets the victory.

"And when I saw it, I fell upon my face, and I heard a voice of one that spake. And He said unto me, Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak with thee" (Ezekiel 1:28-2:1) On your face is never the position in which God can speak with you; only when you stand on your feet at God's command, after having been on your face before Him, can God speak with you. The counterfeit of spiritual power does not put a man on his feet, it does not turn him into a son of God, it is merely a vague fanatical influence. To stand on your feet before God is expressive of the realisation that I know what I was created for, viz., for God. We are not here to serve God, but for God; the self-consciousness of being a saint never enters in; "Oh, to be nothing, nothing" means that God made a great blunder in making me.

Commission of the Prophet (Ezekiel 2:3-5)

—And it was a terrible commission. "And He said unto me, Son of man, I send thee to the children of Israel, to nations that are rebellious . . . " (RV). A rebellious people can never be thought of as "babes in the wood"—poor distracted people, no vice in them, just been cruelly misled: it is the revelation of anarchy and rebellion. God placed Ezekiel among people who long ago had taken the first wrong step and now they are in captivity, and Ezekiel has to suffer with them that God may press home His message through the bruising of His servant. There is no call of God to be prosperous, but there is a call to be a proclaimer of God's truth to the gates of death. It is the winsome note that men want today—"I don't mind listening as long as you talk about the kindness of God, but don't tell me God damns sin, don't tell me He allows no quarter for lying or for lust." The Gospel awakens an intense craving and an equally intense resentment. The snare of the devil, through God's own servants, comes when they say "Now remember the people." Never water down God's word to suit men's experience. We palliate the truth of God because it offends, while in personal dealing our tendency is to be vindictive and hard. Be possessed with unflinching courage in preaching the truth of God, but when you deal with sinners, remember who you are. God tells Ezekiel to be concentrated on the message He gives him, no matter with what result. The preacher must never be guided by his own natural affinities, that will make him a traitor to the cause of God. God must make His prophets vitally one with His voice—holy man and holy message, one.

EZEKIEL 3-4

And He said unto me, Son of man, eat that thou findest; eat this roll. . . . (Ezekiel 3:1 RV)

The word of God to Ezekiel was to be a living power in his inmost being. The application of the command to us is that we must appropriate the words of God, and we do it by eating the "Living Bread" ("Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink His blood, ye have not life in yourselves," John 6:53 RV), and by assimilating the truths that the Word of God abiding in us speaks to us. Fanaticism comes in when we say, "I won't appropriate the words of God, I don't want to be limited to what Jesus Christ says, I must get other messages." We have to put ourselves in the place where we can appropriate the words of God, that is why we are here—in this College—to appropriate the words of God.

"Then did I eat it" (Ezekiel 3:3). Ezekiel states the simple, stupendous fact that he did what God told him to do. The conception of "swallowing" a word of God has in it the essence of obedience. There is no room for debate when God speaks. Obedience is never the outcome of intellectual discernment, it springs from moral simplicity, keeping in the light of God. "Eat this roll"—an unpalatable thing to do, but Ezekiel obeyed, "and it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness." Obedience to a word of God always brings an amazing sweetness to the life of the obeyer. Over and over again God brings us up to a word of His, e.g., the conditions of discipleship (Luke 14:26) and we say, "Oh, I couldn't possibly 'swallow' that," and we nibble at it and run away from it, and God brings us back to it again and again until we are willing to obey; immediately we obey and appropriate the word it becomes "as honey for sweetness."

"And He said unto me, Son of man, go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak with My words unto them. . . . But the house of Israel will not hearken unto thee; for they will not hearken unto Me" (Ezekiel 3:4, 7). The reason Israel so dislike the truths Ezekiel brings to them is because they rebel against the One who sent him-"for all the house of Israel are of an hard forehead and of a stiff heart" (RV). Ezekiel is told to go where God's permissive will seems contrary to His order. This problem runs through the whole Bible. Satan and sin and suffering are plainly and clearly not in God's order, but they are here just as plainly and clearly by His permissive will. An abiding peril in Christian service is the inspiration of sympathy for men springing from the devil, with one object—to slander God's permissive will.

Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel all base their message on the fact that God is holy and that He demands a holy people. The sins of Israel and Judah can be packed into one phrase—pride of independence, which makes out that God was obliged to select them because of their superiority to other nations. God did not select them: He created them for one purpose, that they should be His bondslaves until the whole world comes to know Him. The message of the prophets is that although they have forsaken God, it has not altered God. The Apostle Paul emphasises the same truth, that God remains God even when we are unfaithful (see 2 Timothy 2:13). Never interpret God as changing with our changes. He never does; there is no variableness in Him.

"Moreover He said unto me, Son of man, all My words that I shall speak unto thee receive in thine heart, and hear with thine ears" (Ezekiel 3:10). Ezekiel had to receive what he heard before he repeated it; this is imperative in all spiritual development. Reception of God's word implies personal devotion to the One who speaks it. "And go, get thee to them of the captivity. . . ." The insulation of a prophet means internal detachment from everyone saving God, while the life experimentally is in touch with everyone and everything but God. Ezekiel was in captivity in Babylon, among the renegade people of God.

"So the Spirit lifted me up, and took me away, and I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit, and the hand of the LORD was strong upon me" (v. 14).

Ezekiel was inspired of God, God's message was blazing in him, and the anger in his spirit against the people was hot and intense—"Wait till I get to the people, I'll tell them what God says"; but when he did get there, God kept him quiet for seven days, all his message gone from him. "Then I came to them of the captivity . . . , and I sat where they sat, and remained there astonished among them seven days" (v. 15) Then his attitude was—"Have I still to give Your message?" God restores him from all possibility of personal resentment, and then repeats the message. There was no fanaticism in Ezekiel. When we begin to work for God we have any number of crude, harsh sternnesses, we have the word of God for the people, but slowly and surely through the discipline of life we begin to be related to a different aspect of the message and can give it free from individual spleen.

"And it came to pass at the end of seven days, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel. . . ." Ezekiel, in common with all the Old Testament prophets, had not to generate his message out of his own individuality, he had simply to obey God. The obedient life is stated for us in Matthew 11:25 and 1 John 1:7, simplicity and single unfoldedness before God. Do I believe in God, or in a wise and understanding way of doing God's work? The message God laid on Ezekiel to deliver found no natural affinity for itself in him; the message was built on a supernatural affinity with God. God mortifies our affinities that limit Him. Like the Apostle Paul, Ezekiel has a "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel"; he had a commission to warn the people of God, not win them, and he was to speak according to God's discretion, not according to his own judgement.

"Thou also, son of man, take thee a tile, and lay it before thee, and pourtray upon it a city, even Jerusalem. ..." (Ezekiel 4:1 RV). This taking of a tile and drawing on it to portray a city is indicative of what the apostle refers to in 1 Corinthians—"the foolishness of God" (1 Corinthians 1:25). The Church of Jesus Christ has her commission, and just as Ezekiel must have seemed stupid to the people of his day, so the Church of Christ seems ridiculous in the eyes of the wisdom of the world. The Church is commissioned to preach the Gospel, to use no carnal weapons, but to see that her members are otherworldly while in this world. Our Lord came to do His Father's will, that was His first great obedience, and the first great obedience of the Church is to Jesus Christ, our exalted Lord; the temptation is to put man's needs first. The Church is to have affinity with God and with no one else. Salvation is always of God's almighty grace, our work is with individuals, we are to preach the gospel to every creature; the danger is to neglect the individuals God has placed us amongst for other individuals He has not Notes on Ezekiel placed us amongst. The desire for revivals may mean shirking our individual responsibility.

"... so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel" (Ezekiel 4:5). Verses 4 through 8 indicate a deeper aspect of Ezekiel's commission, the vicarious aspect. Ezekiel is to personify identification with the justice of God in His punishment of Israel and Judah. The Old Testament prophets never stood aloof from the judgements of God; they identified themselves with the life of their time and vicariously underwent the judgements. We gather our spiritual skirts around us from touching the life of the time we are in; the prophets did not, they stood firm for God in actual conditions. They are a marvellous prefiguring of Our Lord whom it pleased God to bruise. The Son of God became vicariously identified with sin, and through that identification with sin the Church of God is born in order that she might bear the burden of God's purpose for the whole world. It takes evil to destroy evil; it takes sin to destroy sin—"Him who knew no sin He made to be sin" (2 Corinthians 5:21 RV). "He hath . . . put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself" (Hebrews 9:26).

Ezekiel 4:13–17 portrays the unclean condition of the people religiously. Remember what ceremonial uncleanness meant to a prophet—"Then said I, Ah Lord GoD! Behold, my soul hath not been polluted. . . ." Our Lord's death on the Cross is the exact fulfilment of this, and the depth and profundity of the horror is indicated for us in the Garden of Gethsemane and on the Cross of Calvary.

Only brief scattered notes are available on these chapters and to the end of the Book. [Mrs. Chambers' footnote in the original text.]

EZEKIEL 5-9

As soon as Ezekiel is laid hold of by the Spirit he is told to repeat the message of the other prophets, viz., that judgement is to fall on Jerusalem. Remember, the Temple with its laws and ordinances had been instituted by God and built according to His plan; this explains the antipathy of the people to the message of the prophets—"We are God's chosen people, we have 'chapter and verse' to prove that God established Jerusalem as His own, it is nonsense to say, as the prophets do, that God is going to depart from the Temple and blight and lay low His own people." The people maintain that the judgements of God are not abroad among them; they bank on the notion that they are God's favourites. They had to learn that God champions no man or nation. The people of God were cast off by God because they refused to be His people.

This is Jerusalem: ... Behold, I, even I, am against thee; and I will execute judgements in the midst of thee in the sight of the nations. ... Thus shall mine anger be accomplished, and I will satisfy my fury upon them. (Ezekiel 5:5, 8, 13 RV)

The terrible finality of these verses appals us. Whenever in the prophets or in the New Testament we come to statements of the justice of God at work it is always the same—inescapably terrible and full of doom. Viewed apart from the interpretation of the Spirit of God, God's dealings with men and with nations are perplexing. There are certain dark lines in God's face, but the modern man has spectacles so skilfully arranged that those dark lines are not seen—"Narrow-minded people in other dispensations believed these things, but we know better now." The terrible side of God's character is only realised by us when the truth dawns on us individually that God is no respecter of persons. Beware of tying God up in His own laws and saying He can't do what He says He is going to do. The greatest ingredient in the sovereignty of God is the measure of free will He has given man; but be careful you don't make the sovereignty of God the binding of Almighty God by human logic.

"... and your idols may be broken and cease" (Ezekiel 6:6). Idolatry is the outcome not of ignorance, but of perversity. Compare the attitude of the prophets with regard to idolatry with the amazing respect Paul showed to the Athenians who were not idolaters, but men who were feeling after God. Idolatry is never a dumb feeling after God. No nation under heaven ever became idolatrous in order to feel after God; they become idolatrous because they refuse to recognise the Creator. (See Romans 1.) The evolutionary idea that men develop from worshipping idols to worshipping God is absurd; it was the opposite with the people of God—they began with God and ended with idols. That accounts for the mercilessly scathing denunciation of idolatry by all the prophets.

"Yet will I leave a remnant . . ." (Ezekiel 6:8). The destructive power of God's judgements is to lead a remnant to the experience of repentance. The Apostle Paul says it is the goodness of God that leads men to repentance—unfortunately it is apt to be only God's destructions that lead to repentance. The goodness of God does lead some men to repentance, but not all, because the effect of wrongdoing is to destroy the power of knowing the wrong and men become selfcomplacent in their wrong. The signs of repentance are a broken and a contrite heart and weeping eyes before God. The "godly sorrow" which rends the unity of a man's life is one of the rarest treasures of human experience because it brings me, through selfloathing, to recognise the tears God shed over me, in the blood of His Son.

". . . and they shall profane My secret place" (Ezekiel 7:22 RV). Ezekiel is the prophet who points out the nearness of idolatry to the worship of God. Anything that detracts from the holiness of God or from holy human life is an abominable "image of jealousy" in the temple of God. God is there seeing it all; that is the reason He departs. In our day Satan as angel of light is not prevented from placing that image in the bodily temple of the Holy Ghost whenever imaginative or spiritual or intellectual thoughts are not being brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. That truth applied to us individually means this—once realise that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, and you can never again do with success what you once did, the slightest attempt to do so brings a painful realisation of Paul's words in 1 Corinthians 3:17—"If any man destroyeth the temple of God, him shall God destroy" (RV). I have no jurisdiction over my body, there is only one honour at stake, the honour of God. Defiling the temple of the Holy Ghost is the result of my exercising my right to myself; realising this made Paul say, "I buffet my body, and bring it into bondage: lest by any means, after that I have preached to others, I myself should be rejected" (RV).

 \H . . . as I sat in mine house, . . . the hand of the Lord GOD fell there upon me" (Ezekiel 8:1). Ezekiel's abstraction is typical of spiritual concentration—shut out from external things for concentration on the purpose of God. The great need for Christians today is occasional fasting from intellectual and religious and social activities in order to give ourselves wholly to the realisation of some purpose of God. Acts of consecration and devotional exercises leave us much the same; concentration on God never leaves us the same. This place⁴ is for concentration on God and on nothing else.

"And it came to pass, while they were smiting, and I was left, that I fell upon my face, and cried, and said, Ah Lord GOD! wilt Thou destroy all the residue of Israel in Thy pouring out of Thy fury upon Jerusalem?" (Ezekiel 9:8 RV). The severity of judgement is not only on men, but enters into the very house of God itself, and Ezekiel finds there is no room for intercession (cf. 1 John 5:16). Intercession must neither spring from blind, compromising human pity, or we shall be in danger of trampling the blood of the Son of God under foot and saying God is vindictive. The wrath of God is never manifested because God is being thwarted. Wrath is the eternal basis of the moral life of fallen man as chaos is the basis of his material life. Wrath and love are both eternal; they are, so to speak, the obverse sides of the revelation of Almighty God. It is the inherent nature of sin to bring condemnation, and the point to be remembered is that God cannot save one man from the consequence of his sin unless there is an Atonement to build him back into relationship with God. When man sinned he fell into wrath and chaos; it is not that God visited it personally on him, it is the way God has constituted things. The love of God is the only inexorable thing there is, it will blaze and burn till He has made everyone as pure as He is Himself, saving the one who determines to side with sin and Satan and abide for ever on the obverse side of the love of God, viz., His wrath. The Bible reveals the power man has to choose to do this.

"For our God is a consuming fire"—an unspeakable comfort to the saint; unmitigated terror to the sinner. God will have nothing in His Presence but holiness. The Incarnation is the very heart of God manifested on the plane of chaos and wrath: God in the Person of His Son came right down to the very last depth of that chaos and wrath, and clothed Himself in the humanity of the race that was powerless to lift itself, and in His own Person He annihilated the wrath till now there is no more condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus, no more touch of the wrath of God. The Atonement means that Jesus Christ creates us anew into a right relationship with God, not like the former creation, but like the relationship He Himself exhibited—"conformed to the image of His Son."

EZEKIEL 10-13

God's Awesomeness (Ezekiel 10)

... and the court was full of the brightness of the LORD's glory. (Ezekiel 10:4)

We are too shallow to be afraid of God. All the Hebrew prophets reveal this truth, that there is only one Cause and no "second causes." It requires a miracle of grace before we believe this, consequently we are foolishly fearless, but when the grace of God lifts us into the life of God we fear nothing and no one saving God alone. The "no second causes" truth was ever apparent to Our Lord, e.g., "Thou couldest have no power at all against Me, except it were given thee from above" (John 19:11).

Much discipline of mind and heart is necessary to enable us to believe that one day we shall hear and see the very sounds and sights of war and wrong blending inconceivably in praise. In the final restitution of all things by God hell and the devil himself have a distinct place. Confusion arises when we do not see God as Almighty: "God is not the greatest power, the devil seems to have much more power than God" to talk like that is proof that I have not come into right relationship with God. To imagine that because I see God is going finally to restore all things to His original purpose therefore I myself am sure to be all right, is a persistent and recurring blunder; and I had better beware lest I suffer from delusion. If my first step has not been one of penitential repentance I will at one time meet the "artillery" of God and down I go, no matter how earnestly I pray and mouth my testimony, for this reason—God will have nothing in His presence but holiness and uprightness and integrity. "Those things will never happen to me, there are circumstances in my case which exonerate," there are not. God's demands are inexorable, only one thing will satisfy Him, and that is speckless, spotless holiness, and He will never let us go until He has brought us there—unless we wrest ourselves out of His hand.

and the glory of the LORD went up from the midst of the city. . . . (Ezekiel 11:23)

Left desolate means that the heart of God is stabbed afresh by the pride of His people; the glory of the Lord departing from the city is evidence that God is a holy God. "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate," said our Lord (Matthew 23:38).

It must be borne in mind that the wisdom of the world is foolish only to God, it is not foolish to any other wisdom (see 1 Corinthians 1:20–25). You may often find yourself forced into a box of humiliated silence not because you are being overborne or censoriously sat on, but because the wisdom that is presented to you is so wise and understanding that you have not a word to say against it, and yet you know it is not the view of God. The demand to put the needs of man before the will of God is the outcome of the reasoning of human wisdom—and the wisdom of man is really wisdom, it can give the most satisfactory, sensible, judicious explanation for the course advocated, no human logic can stand against it. The temptation of our Lord centred round one point—"Do God's will in Your own way." The striking thing about our Lord is that He did not do God's will by the findings of His own will, consequently for thirty years He did nothing—nothing but being. Had He been a fanatic He would have found a hundred things to do. It is a crucial point in practical spiritual experience when we learn not to be more eager to do God's will than He is for us to do it. Our zeal to serve God may be and often is our insistence on God proving that our way is right; we see what God's will is as we wait before Him, and then we hurry up circumstances in order to do it, and we receive a severe punishment at the hand of God (cf. Genesis 15–16). God will put us in circumstances where we have to take steps of which we do not see the meaning, only on looking back do we discern that it was God's will for us.

Disillusionment (Ezekiel 12)

Nothing is so disastrously enervating as disillusionment, we much prefer our fictions and fairy stories about ourselves, to the stern realisation of what we really are in God's sight. In spiritual life disillusionment generally comes in relation to other people, that is why Paul says, "Wherefore let no one glory in men" (1 Corinthians 3:21 RV) and "... not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think" (Romans 12:3). In Ezekiel 12 the disillusionment comes in connection with national life and is in relation to God: the people begin to realise that God is not what they had vainly hoped He was. Ezekiel 12:1–6 forms God's answer to their expectation that He would reinstate the permanence of Jerusalem.

"The word of the LORD also came unto me, saying, Son of man, thou dwellest in the midst of the rebellious house, . . . for they are a rebellious house" (v. 2 RV).

The underlying fact of the antagonism of man's heart with the heart of God must be borne in mind when we consider the sweeping judgements of God symbolised in Ezekiel's conduct. If the antagonism of the heart of man to the holiness of God is not removed, man's imagination will not only picture God wrongly but he will come to know the wrath of God instead of the love of God. "My net also will I spread upon him, and he shall be taken in My snare" (v. 13). It is a terrible truth that many of us go astray until we are afflicted (see Psalm 119:67); we conceive in our pride that "we shall not be moved" and in this stage we dislike and radically disagree with the sterner presentations of God in the Bible, and it is only by the sharp sword of affliction and the profound conviction of the meanness⁵ of our pride that we are brought to see God for ourselves and are ready to turn and obey His commands.

Prophetic Opportunism (Ezekiel 13)

Because, even because, they have seduced My people, saying, Peace; and there is no peace. (Ezekiel 13:10 RV)

Prophetic opportunism means preaching the truth of God, but without regard to being consistent with His holiness.

"Because ye have spoken vanity, and seen lies, therefore, behold, I am against you, saith the Lord God" (Ezekiel 13:8). The hostility of the false prophets against God and of God against them is an appalling revelation: God compels the man who will not come into agreement with Him to become His enemy-"Behold, I am against you." The warning in our individual lives comes in this way: in a personal crisis never lean to your own understanding, or as surely as you do, God is silent first, and then comes destruction. If I am spiritual what I have to prove in a crisis is that God is sufficient to guide me in His own way; if I trust to my wits it is all the god I have got, and God will hold me responsible for my fanaticism and delusion. Watch yourself in a wrong mood, a mood when "the bastard self seems in the right," you are as blind as a bat towards God; no moral relationship on earth will touch you as long as you are in that mood-"This thing will I do and hang the consequences." The explanation of that mood is that your mind is blinded by the god of this world.

Ezekiel 13:6–11 states the familiar truth that the revelation of God to me is determined by the state of my character toward God. "With the merciful Thou wilt shew Thyself merciful," says the Psalmist, "and with the perverse Thou wilt shew Thyself froward" (Psalm 18:25–26 RV). If we persist in being stiffnecked toward God, we will find He is stiffnecked toward us; if we show ourselves meek toward God, He will reveal Himself as gentle toward us. Here, God is showing Himself froward with the froward (KJV).

For wholesome holiness remember that God exempts no saint from the law of retribution, viz.: "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured unto you" (Matthew 7:2 RV). One of the most chastening experiences is to watch how God pays back on our own heads our un-Christian judgement of others. The last possibility of indignation on our part is dead when we realise that we have been paid back in our own coin by the decree of God. Jesus Christ puts it this way—"But if ye forgive not men their trespasses"—and they really are wrongs—"neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

"And if the prophet be deceived and speaketh a word, I the LORD have deceived that prophet" (Ezekiel 14:9 RV). This verse states that if a prophet gives a response that is not true it confirms the people in their delusion. A true prophet would never answer a disloyal request. In dealing with other people be careful to keep in such touch with God that you are not disloyal in heart yourself; if you are, you will talk to people you have no business to; whereas if you are loyal to God you can't answer some people and they go away with the peculiar certainty that you are a fool. None of us is free from disloyalty unless we are absolutely loyal. We are always on the wrong line when we come to God with a preoccupied mind because a preoccupied mind springs from a disloyal heart: "I don't want to do God's will, what I want is for God to give me permission to do what I want to do." That is disloyalty, and the experience of Psalm 106:15 is the inevitable result—"And He gave them their request; but sent leanness into their soul." In every particular that the heart is disloyal to God, God has to play havoc with our petitions; we are passionately in earnest over them, but God won't answer them because if He does it will ruin us. Loyalty to God means the continual carrying of the cross, the cross which comes from being a disciple whereby we deliberately and emphatically sign away our right to ourselves, our right to be loyal to anything and anyone but God.

^{5.} meanness: mean, as used here, something or someone ordinary, common, low, or ignoble, rather than cruel or spiteful.

EZEKIEL 14-37

Son of man, when a land sinneth against Me by committing a trespass, . . . though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness, saith the Lord GOD. (Ezekiel 14:13–14 RV)

—prerogative wrath. The intense anguish of the godly is that in the final issue they are decreed by God to stand with Him instead of with those who are going the wrong way. It is not, "No matter what happens to the crowd, we will be all right"; the point is that the saint longs, would go through condemnation itself, if only men might be saved. "Yet now, if Thou wilt forgive their sin—; and if not, blot me, I pray Thee, out of Thy book which Thou hast written" (Exodus 32:32). "For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren" (Romans 9:3).

We only see these great truths bit by bit, the peril is to shut up our minds and say there is nothing in them.

For Fruit or Fire (Ezekiel 15)

What is the vine tree more than any tree . . . ? (Ezekiel 15:2)

The vine is of no value if it is not fruitful; trees which are not fruit-bearing are excellent for other purposes, but not so the vine which is fit only for fruit or for fire. "If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and they gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned" (John 15:6 RV). What God burns is not weakness, not imperfection, but perverted goodness. Fruit is the manifestation of the essential nature of the tree, and our human lives are meant to bring forth the fruit of the Spirit, which is, literally, the life of God in me, invading me, producing fruit for His glory. "Herein is My Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit" (John 15:8).

Leaves of a tree are a fruit, but not the fruit; they are for the nourishment of the tree itself, that is why in the autumn they push off and sink into the ground where they become disintegrated and are taken into the root again. The fruit proper is never for the tree itself, it is for the husbandman. Woe be to the man who mistakes leaves for fruit! The reason Our Lord cursed the barren fig tree was because it stood as a symbol of leaves being proudly mistaken for fruit. (See Matthew 21:31.) When we mistake what we do for the fruit, we are deluded; what tells is not what we do, but what is produced by what we do.

The election of God by creation is an illustration of, though not the same as, "the election of grace." Election by creation means that God created the people known as Israel for one purpose—to be His servants until through them every nation should come to know Him. The "election of grace" is that anyone, Jew or Gentile, can, by God's free grace, enter into relationship with Him in and through our Lord Jesus Christ. The realisation of the election of grace by regeneration, and of being thereby perfectly fitted for glorifying God, is the most joyful realisation.

God's Love Unrequited (Ezekiel 16)

When God speaks of man's turning away from Him, He always uses terms which awaken disgust in us. Abstract terms for sin are never used in the Bible. A remarkable thing about Bible statements is that the language used is always in keeping with the facts—when an ugly fact is dealt with, an ugly word is used. The good taste that glosses over sin is ignored by Jesus (e.g. Mark 7:21–23). The Bible teaches "the morality of truth"; today we reverse the order and talk about that veneered humbug, "the truth of morality," viz., anything that is true is moral. The Bible always speaks in the final analysis.

The terrible picture given in this Chapter, and the ghastly humiliation of it to Ezekiel, has its counterpart in our personal experience when we really see our condition by our first birth as viewed in the sight of God. This is a rare type of conviction of sin—the distress of an "un-refuged" life. When a man gets there, there is only one of two places for him—either suicide or the Cross of Christ. No man can stand before God when once the law of God is made clear to his conscience. Only the Redemption of Jesus can enable a man to stand before God.

Every part of our human nature which is not brought into subjection to the Holy Spirit after experiencing deliverance from sin will prove a corrupting influence. We are not delivered from human nature; human nature was created by God, not by the devil; it is impaired, and enfeebled, but it is not sinful. The first creation retains the remnants of God's handiwork; recreation is the building of a spiritual habitation, "an habitation of God," and all our effort is to be spent in disciplining the natural life in obedience to the new creation (RV mg) wrought in us through the Spirit. If I refuse to make my natural life spiritual by the slow process of obedience, my religious profession becomes a disgusting hypocrisy. Any attempt to build on the natural virtues will ultimately outrage the grace of God, whereas dependence on God means the successful working of God's grace in me. "I do not make void the grace of God," said Paul (RV).

Heredity v. Humbug (Ezekiel 18)

... the soul that sinneth, it shall die. (Ezekiel 18:4)

These words refer to acts of sin. The principle is inevitable: the wrong things we do, we are whipped for, whether we are sinners or saints. We all have the sneaking idea that we are the favourites of God—"It's all right for me to do this, God will understand." If I as a child of God commit sin, I will be as sternly dealt with as if I were not His child. If a Christian commits a sin he must confess it and accept propitiation, and the degree in which he does not accept propitiation shows itself in a determined, settled gloom which is mistaken for penitence. If I have never been struck through with repentance I am scarcely on the first rung of Christian experience. The luxury of gloom is one of the most spiteful sins against God—I have humiliated myself to myself, and instead of getting right with God on the ground of the Atonement I deny that Jesus Christ does anything, and rummage down to the depths of myself in order to justify myself. Repentance means I accept the absolute forgiveness of God on the ground of the Atonement.

It Is God (Ezekiel 20)

Beware of two things—first, denying free will to God by stating to yourself as Israel and Judah did in their day, that God will only work according to His own precedents; and, second, thinking that God is bound to see you through irrespective of what you are or do. Don't tie God up in your own conceptions, or say too surely you know what God will do. For instance, never say because the devil rules in a certain place that God won't come into it: God will come where He likes. The sovereign purposes of God work out slowly and inexorably, but ever be careful to note where God's sovereignty is at work among men in matters of history and Time, and where it is at work in matters of eternal destiny. Beware of allowing your memory of how God has worked to take the place of present vital moral relationship to Him.

"Then said I, Ah Lord GOD: they say of me, Is he not a speaker of parables?" (v. 49 RV). Ezekiel's words are an indication of the way we always find it difficult to understand what we don't like. Remember, the human heart does not like what God likes until it is made God-like. Re-examine for yourself the teaching in the Bible which you say you don't understand, and see if the reason is not your dislike of what is taught. Beware of an escape of mind that is not true to Bible revelation. The destruction and terrors of God's punishment are as much God's decree as are the peace and joy and prosperity of God. Damnation and salvation are not natural results, they are Divine results. We can choose the way we take, but we have no control over where that way ends.

The Song of the Sword (Ezekiel 21)

Thus saith the LORD: Say, A sword, a sword, it is sharpened, and also furbished. (Ezekiel 21:9 RV)

"And take . . . the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." When I have been using "the sword of the Spirit" in a spirit of indignation against another, it is a terrible experience to find the sword suddenly wrested out of my hand and laid about me personally by God. Let your personal experience of the work of God's Spirit instruct you at the foot of Calvary; let the light of God riddle you through, then you will never use the word of God to another, never turn the light of God on him, without fear and trembling. "For the word of God is living, and active, and sharper than any two-edged sword . . . " (RV). The word of God is the sword that cuts first in me and then in others. The truth of God can never be escaped from by those who utter it—"Thou therefore that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal?"

Liberty v. Licence (Ezekiel 23)

... they took both one way. (Ezekiel 23:13)

Liberty is the ability to obey the law of God, with the power to live according to its demands; license is the unrestrained impulse to traffic against the law of God. I know nothing about being made "free from the law" until I cease from unintelligently doing what I am told to do because I am told, and do it because there is no need to be told; only then do I do it rightly. Freedom from the law means that there is no independence of God in my make-up. No one is free who does what he likes. "For Christ also pleased not Himself" (RV). The seal of immorality is that I do what I like; the seal of freedom is that I do what God likes. No natural man can keep the law of God, it is only when the Holy Spirit is in him that the ability is there, then he keeps the law of God easily.

If you try and define Divine omnipotence and human free will in intellectual terms, you find language fails because they contradict each other. Every choice a saint makes is a free, untrammelled⁶ choice of a human will, and yet in the final analysis it will be found to be in accord with the foreknowledge of God. We say, "I'll do what I like," but the strange thing is we never do, there is always a nemesis, always an incalculable factor to be estimated. To say, "I let God have His way" is a snare, because when I say that I never do, what happens is that in saying it I slip out of my moral responsibility. I am not asked whether or not I will exercise my will, I am obliged to, and when I am born again the regenerating power of God increases my moral responsibility.

^{6.} untrammelled: free, unhindered, not entangled.

Notes on Ezekiel

Ezekiel 24

I the LORD have spoken it: it shall come to pass, and I will do it; I will not go back, neither will I spare, neither will I repent; according to thy ways, and according to thy doings, shall they judge thee, saith the LORD GOD. (Ezekiel 24:14)

The house of Israel remains for all time God's terrible object lesson of the determined spiritual obstinacy that refuses to be enlightened along any line but that of personal prejudice—"the rebellious house," God calls them (Ezekiel 12:2 RV). In national life and in personal life delusion always arises when a word has been spoken by God and been perverted by prejudice. Beware what you are for and what you are against. Whatever produces obstinacy is never of God. Immediately you are brought into a closeness of relationship to God you will know what obstinacy means. Every time, not sometimes, after the experience of sanctification comes the battle royal, and until the battle is fought out on the plane of holiness we will know nothing about the purpose of God for our life. We have accepted God's blessings, accepted deliverance from what we call sin, but we have never yielded to God, we prefer to stick to our own obstinate way of looking at things. It is possible to step into the dark any time we like, and darkness always comes along the line of obstinacy. If the Holy Spirit is obeyed the stubbornness is blown out, the dynamite of the Holy Ghost blows it out.

Sorrow (Ezekiel 24)

Also the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, Son of man, behold I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke: yet neither shalt thou mourn nor weep, neither shall thy tears run down. Sigh, be silent [RV mg]; make no mourning for the dead. . . . (vv. 15–17)

Sorrow is cruel, and must work either delight or death; "godly sorrow" worketh delight via repentance; "the sorrow of the world worketh death" via sullenness. The sorrow that can be expressed is scarcely worthy of the name, but the sorrow that has one end in God and the other in the inarticulate depths of human experience is worthy of the name. Ezekiel's sorrow sprang from the fact that God took his flesh and blood, his nerves, his affections, to write a sign of warning for His rebellious people. "Thus shall Ezekiel be unto you a sign" (Ezekiel 24:24 RV). How many lives has God got to make a "sign" to me before I believe Him?

"So I spake unto the people in the morning; and at even my wife died; and I did in the morning as I was commanded" (RV). Verse 18 is unequalled for condensed human interests, Divine strength, and superb control. Nowhere in the Bible do we find any of the modern tendency to yelp, or any of the sentimental stuff we get written today. The deep sorrows of human hearts ought never to be touched, never dragged out into poetry and literature, because if the sorrow is real it can never be expressed. The Bible remains on the basis of reality all through; there is nothing enervating in its griefs or in its joys, and it is because we have got so far away from the robust iron tonic of the Bible that we strew the road with sentimentality. We are meant to be men and women of God, not sentimentalists.

There is no honourable escape from the way of sorrow. The Via Dolorosa is the way of God; the way of shallow happiness is the way of Satan. Our individual sympathies, whether we realise it or not, either centre around the way of Satan or the way of the Saviour. (Cf. Matthew 16:23.) The last lesson we learn is "hands off" other lives; our hands off that God's hands may be on.

Ezekiel 28

Thus saith the Lord God: Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a god . . . (Ezekiel 28:2 RV)

Pride in its most estimable as well as its most debased form is self-deification; it is not a yielding to temptation from without, but a distinct alteration of relationships within. Watch where you are not willing to give up your self-confident obstinacy in little things, and you will know how much pride there is in your heart, how much you will set your moral teeth against God's providential order—"I won't yield"; "I won't for a second allow anyone to usurp my rights." To that life will come the revelation of God as an enemy. If we have had detected in us any lurking of pride, when are we going to break from it? we will have to break some day, why not now?

"... and thou hast sinned" (v.16). The committing of sin destroys the power of knowing it is sin, and a man can be perfectly happy on that level. It is possible for a man to sink to the level of being a bad, happy man. The Bible reveals that a man kills himself according to the measure of his sinning, "the soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezekiel 18:4). I may suffer because of the sins of my progenitors—I am never punished for them; but I shall certainly be punished for my own sins. Before sin is imputed it must be personal. Sin is not a theoretical question, but a practical one. No man is punished because he has an heredity of sin, God deals with that entirely through the death of His Son on the Cross; what He holds me responsible for is refusing to let Him deliver me. Immediately I see that Jesus Christ can deliver me from the heredity of sin—not acts of sin, but the heredity of sin, which is the inheritance of the whole human race through Adam—and I refuse to let Him, that is the seal of condemnation. But remember I must have seen that that is what He came to do; I must have seen the Light, Jesus Christ (John 3:19). It must be a terrible thing to meet a man who deliberately by his own choice has become a disbeliever in Jesus. Dis-belief and un-belief are not the same; dis-belief implies moral perversion. The standard of condemnation is what a man consciously sees and knows. "If I had not come," said Jesus, "and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no excuse for their sin" (RV).

"... and they shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall have executed judgements in her" (Ezekiel 28:22). There is something purely punitive in God's government of the world; the law has not only to punish the evil-doer, but to vindicate itself. The law must be justified, and it is this aspect of punishment with regard to God and His holy law that men do not like to think about. When God's judgements are abroad they have the most appalling power of isolation about them, every man feels himself isolated before God. God's judgements shake all the shakeable things till there is nothing left as a separate consciousness but identity with God.

Ezekiel 29-30

It shall be the basest of the kingdoms. (Ezekiel 29:15)

Ezekiel uses the same image as Isaiah for the untrustworthiness of Egypt—"because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel" ("Behold, thou trustest upon the staff of this bruised reed, even upon Egypt," Isaiah 36:6 RV) Egypt was to become a crippled, second-rate power, nothing illuminating or inspiriting, only degradation and humiliation. After supreme prosperity, to be punished, not magnificently but by dreary commonplace monotony, is itself the most terrible punishment. When I have done wrong I expect that God must give me a tremendous punishment, instead of that He quietly ignores me. I try to rouse Him by my protestations and prayers, but He pays no attention, then after a while He lifts me up in the most ordinary way and lets me understand my utter insignificance. It is the only way I realise that He is God.

"Thus saith the Lord GOD: I will also destroy the idols" (Ezekiel 30:13 RV). The difference, and it is a fundamental one, in the way the prophets of God treat idolatry and the way natural thoughtful men treat it is that the latter speak of it as a reversion to type; the Bible always speaks of idolatry as a perversion from type, a distinct backsliding. The prophets never deal pitifully with idolatry; the natural man never deals sternly with it. The distinction is vital.

Ezekiel 33-34

So thou, son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore hear the word at My mouth, and give them warning from Me. (Ezekiel 33:7 RV)

The false prophets stood for the exoneration of the people; the true prophets stood for their condemnation. Today there are those who side with men against God instead of proclaiming the Gospel of God and putting the responsibility of choice on men themselves. The loyalty is to be to God's word. Not, "If you don't do what I tell you, you will be wrong," but, "These are the words of God, and you will meet them again." The peril in preaching does not lie with the hearers, but with the preacher. It is appallingly easy to preach. Every word I have spoken in this place in the name of God, if I have not been living up to its standard myself, will increase and deepen my condemnation before God. A man may be used as the mouthpiece of God, but he must remember he has a personal destiny to fulfil before God. Ezekiel went through his prophetic career unscathed because he fulfilled his own spiritual destiny.

"He heard the sound of the trumpet, and took not warning . . ." (Ezekiel 33:5). God never coerces, and we are not children of God when we do; but God never accommodates His demands to human compromise, and we are disloyal to God's truth if we do. The great point in a man's personal life with God is to agree with God's verdict with no remnant of a desire to vindicate himself. We cannot make God's issue for our life plain when we like, but when it is found out, that is the moment of choice. Watch the moments when the still small voice of God makes an issue regarding God's will clear to your mindchoose what He says and you will enter on a new plane of discipline and delight; don't choose, and you will enter on a plane of amused happy compromise. Moments are not denied us

When the spirit's true endowments Stand out plainly from its false ones, And apprise it if pursuing Or the right way or the wrong way To its triumph or undoing.

Robert Browning

"Should not the shepherds feed the sheep?" (Ezekiel 34:2 RV). In the New Testament the terms "shepherd" and "sheep" are applied not to kings and nations, but to the disciples of Jesus. When Our Lord commissioned Peter He did not tell him to go and save souls, but—"Feed My sheep; tend My lambs"; guard My flock. We have to be careful lest we rebel against the commission to disciple men to Jesus and become energetic proselytisers to our own way of thinking—"but the shepherds fed themselves, and fed not My sheep" (Ezekiel 34:8 RV). When we stand before God will He say, "Well done, good and faithful servant"? or will He say, "You have not been a shepherd of My sheep, you have fed them for your own interest, exploited them for your own creed"? When a soul gets within sight of Jesus Christ, leave him alone.

Ezekiel 37

The hand of the LORD was upon me, and He... set me down in the midst of the valley; and it was full of bones. (Ezekiel 37:1 RV)

The sight of our eyes never gives us realities, only actualities; the vision of the valley of bones was a reality, not an actuality, that is, Ezekiel had it revealed to him in a vision. Our Lord's question to Thomas, "Because thou hast seen Me, hast thou believed?" (John 20:29 RV mg) refers to the abiding difference between actuality and reality. No man ever believes because he sees, every man must believe before he perceives the reality of what he looks at.

"And He said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live?" (Ezekiel 37:3). In dealing with Bible experiences we must ever make allowance for the miraculous, which never contradicts reason, but very often does contradict common sense. The miraculous transcends reason and lifts it into another world than the logical one, consequently spiritual experience is something I have lived through, not thought through. The Bible is based on what makes life, life, i.e., on the implicit.

"Again He said unto me, Prophesy over these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the LORD" (v. 4 RV). The Spirit of God makes us reverent with human wrecks. A man lying beneath the wrath of God is not the victim of His neglect. No man is beyond the pale of God's grace if he is still the object of God's wrath, because wrath is the obverse side of God's love.
